Their Prudence. The first care of these men was to prevent all discord in matters of Divinity; wherefore they testified their mutual agreement by subscribing the Catechism of Heidleberg, and the Belgick Confession of Faith. They resolved that none of them would pass his judgement about any Controversie in Divinity, about the Government of the Church, and in cases of Conscience apart, but by mutual consulting each with other: That no Theses should be publickly disputed of, till all had seen and approved them. That no Book should be printed till all had examined and consented thereto.

Their care to train up youth. The like care they took, to train up young Students to the same unanimity in Religion: For which end they agreed upon one rule and method by which all their studies should be directed: And because these Controversies with the Remonstrants had occasioned the fuller clearing of many points in Divinity, and had taught them to speak more cautiously in many things: Therefore in their Publick Disputations they went over the whole Body of Divinity, out of which they published their Book which they called, Synopsis purioris Theologiæ.

Their adversaries to be answered Having thus setled the affairs of the University in good order: They began to consider what enemies they had abroad, against whom the Truth was to be defended: And they found that they must answer John Arnoldi Corvinus, who had written a great Volume against Peter Du Moulin. They must answer the Remonstrants also, who in a Book called Acta Synodalia Remonstrantium, had inserted such things as might confirm their own opinions, and invalidate the opinions of the Contra-Remonstrants. And this task they all agreed Wallæus should undertake; who afterwards published an answer to both those Books, whereby he gat very great credit, not only amongst his own, but amongst the French, English and Scots, and for a long time silenced the Remonstrants.

Wallæus his part.

His imployment in the University. In the mean time these worthy men neglected not to make their Professors places very famous. The Old Testament was expounded by Rivet and Thysius; the New by Polyander: But Wallæus was imployed in reading Common places, which was accounted the more grateful and more worthy imployment. In these Common places he did not cull out here and there one head; but went over the whole Body of Divinity: handling each head fully, but principally insisting upon those Controversies or difficulties wherewith the Church was most molested: Yet stood he not upon answering all Arguments of the Adversaries; but chose out those which had most weight in them, by answering whereof, the other fell of themselves.

His great Auditory. But he was most copious and acurate in the Modern Controversies; as De Deo against Vorstius, De Sabbatho, De Prædestinatione: of the Authority of Magistrates in Ecclesiastical affairs, and such like: concluding all, not so much by the strength of Humane Reason, as by the clear Word of God: whereupon the greatest confluence of Auditors attended upon VVallæus. And one of his Colleagues, thinking that he had so many Auditors because he read Common places: he also fell upon the same subject; but when he saw that he labored in vain, he gave it over again.

But seeing it was not enough for them thus to instruct their Auditors in the knowledge of Divinity, except also they prepared the Candidates for the Ministry, enabling enabling them rightly to defend the Truth, and to enervate the Adversaries Arguments: This therefore they effected by Disputations, wherein all were very diligent, but especially Wallæus and Polyander. Wallæus would not suffer those things to be propounded for Disputation, wherein the Reformed might freely differ amongst themselves. He would not suffer the Opponents to object vain things, which were unprofitable: He would not suffer them to oppose immodestly, to the scandal of the hearers: But he would have the Defendant clearly repeat the Opponents Argument, and then not only to give a bare answer, but to demonstrate the solidity of it: Truly Wallæus in his Lectures deserved great praise; but in Disputations he deserved a Triumph. His care of Candidates.

Because these Candidates in Divinity could not be sufficiently exercised in publick, he did twice a week in private explain to them his Enchiridion of the Reformed Religion: He examined it, and appointed them to dispute upon it: yea he set up divers private Lectures wherein he confuted the Anabaptists, Socinians and Papists. He caused these Candidates also often to Preach in private, wherein he directed them to the most profitable subjects, and taught them how they should prosecute the same: Neither would he ever take any thing for these his private imployments. His great pains.

This course of training up young Students he continued for twenty years, even till his death, so that innumerable Pastors were sent forth by him into the Church, amongst which, many were admirable Lights, which were a great comfort and rejoycing to him.

In the Government of the University, he neither made nor nourished parties: But when any differences arose, he always sought to compose them: as he did betwixt Polyander and Thysius: between Cunæus and Burgersditius, amongst whom some emulation was sprung up. He is a great Peacemaker.

Wallæus himself had no Enemy but only Daniel Heinsius, who was also a Gantois, and seemed somewhat to emulate him. Yet would not Wallæus do any thing that might offend Heinsius; neither would he mingle himself in the contention between Salmatius and Heinsius about precedency.

Wallæus his next care was that all the Honors of the University (so far as might be) should be equally divided amongst his Colleagues, that so they might live together the more sweetly, and might labor together in their several imployments with the better concord: So that when he should have been chosen Rector of the University, he sought it for his Colleague: But honour followed him whilst he fled from it: so that he was often Deputy of the University, and thrice Rector. His self denial. Honours follow him.

He would never give to Candidates his testimony for their lives, and proficiency in their Studies of Divinity, except they deserved it: Judging it better to offend them and their friends, then to deceive the Church by advancing unworthy persons to the Ministry: which faithfulness of his was taken notice of, so that many were rejected till they could get the testimony of Wallæus. His care in giving testimonials.

He with his Colleagues would never prefer any to the title of Doctors, except they were conspicuous for their Piety, and eminent for Learning.

He had more Books brought to him to License than he could possibly read over: for which cause he sent many of them to the Classes of Pastors to be read over by them, reserving to himself only such as handled Controversies of greater moment.

These Professors would meddle with no cases of Conscience, but such as concerned Matrimony; as for all others that came to them, they sent them to their own Pastors, whereby they much eased themselves, and took off people from under valuing their own Ministers. And in cases of Matrimony, they always determined them with such sound judgement, that so long as Wallæus lived, there was never any Church or Magistrate that had cause to alter what they had determined.

He was dayly sought to for advice in cases of Conscience: In Controversies of Religion, and about Church Government, by Churches, Classes, Synods, Cities, States, and He is much sought to for advice.

and Princes, to all whom he freely imparted his counsel. The States General and the States of Holland would never suffer any Divinity Book to be Dedicated to them till Wallæus had perused, and set his Imprimatur to it. They would never suffer any Petitions about Controversies in Religion, or about reforming the peoples lives to be presented to them, till he had approved of them.

Frederick King of Bohemia would give no answer to the great Turk, who proffered him assistance against the Emperour, till he had consulted with Wallæus. The Prince of Orange in giving Laws to Cities conquered by him, would always consult with these men. He called Polyander and Wallæus to compose a difference between the Magistrates and Ministers of Roterdam, that had tired three Synods, and fifteen Classes.

The Acts of the Synod of Dort.

Wallæus with his Colleagues, were appointed to publish the Acts of the Synod of Dort: because it was very necessary for all the Reformed Churches, yea for all the World to know in what way and order the cause of the Remonstrants had been examined, and what seemed good to any, and what was concluded by all the Fathers in that assembly: and herein they were much holpen by Festus Hommius, who was the Scribe of the Synod.

The Remonstrants Acts.

Wallæus swers them.

Presently after the Publication of these Synodal Acts, the Remonstrants set forth another, wherein in some particulars they sought to invalidate those Acts: But their chief design was, to confirm their own opinion by Arguments; the confuting whereof was committed to Wallæus, who presently answered their Acts, and Corvinus, though he pretended a Reply, yet quickly gave over and was silent.

The Remonstrants divided.

But presently a quarrel sprang up between the Remonstrants themselves: For Utenbogard, Corvinus, and the greatest part of the Remonstrants adhered to Arminius, and would depart no further from the Orthodox. Episcopius and his followers joined with the Socinians: Error is fruitful, and is ever declining from bad to worse.

An attempt for peace.

Shortly after this, some rose up that endeavoured a Union between the Contra-Remonstrants and the Remonstrants: On the Contra-Remonstrants side were Cornelius Dunganus of Utrich, Godschalcus Arlius of Arnheim, and James Testardus Pastor of Blesa: On the Remonstrants side was only Anthony Hornhovius, who yet lurked amongst the Orthodox Pastors: But it was impossible to unite those that held such contrary opinions.

Another attempt.

There was more hope of an attempt made between Wallæus and Utenbogardus, which was, to consider how the Remonstrants might be admitted into the Reformed Churches, and how far forth they might be tolerated therein. And it was concluded, that such of them might be admitted as members, as were free from the Socinian Errors, and would acknowledge that all spiritual and saving gifts were of the free Grace of God through Christ, if they would promise that in other things they would not disturb the Peace of the Church.

The greatest difficulty was about their Pastors, who would not be quiet, except they might exercise their Ministry, and enjoy their stipends: neither would they be tyed to silence in Controversies: But the Remonstrants setting forth a Confession of their Faith brake all in sunder: For thereby it appeared that they differed from the Reformed, not only in five Articles, but in many other things.

The Remonstrants. Confession of Faith.

He published his Ethicks.

Whilst Wallæus was at Middleborough, he had read Ethicks in the Schools, and had begun to make a Compendium of it for the use of his Scholars, but finished it not by reason of his remove to Leiden: wherefore now the Curators of the School prevailed with him to compleat that Work, and to publish it for the use of that School: And it found such acceptance abroad, that it was often printed, and by Theod. Schrevelius, Master of the School of Leiden, it was turned into Iambick verse.

He reforms the Schooles

Assoon as Wallæus came to Leiden, the Magistrates chose him for one of the Curators of their School: in which office he continued all his life, and by his advice the School was turned into another order, whereby it became far more famous than before.

The

The States of Holland, obſerving that in their Cities there were ſome Maſters of Schools which either wanted ability or prudence in regulating their Schools for the beſt advantage of the boys: they therefore made choice of Anthony Wallæus, Anthony Thyſius, Peter Cunæus, Daniel Heinſius, Gerrard Voſſius, Francis Burgerſdicius, all of them Profeſſors in Leiden, to frame Laws whereby all the School-maſters in Holland ſhould be regulated in teaching both the Tongues and Liberal Arts, which accordingly were finiſhed and printed Anno Chriſti 1625.

The States of Zeland obſerving that their young Students began to fall into ſome looſe courſes, made choice of Wallæus for Overſeer of all in Zeland, with a command that all their youth ſhould be wholly guided in their ſtudies by him: whereby there was a great Reformation, not one of an hundred proving wicked in his life. And the ſcholars in Zeland.

The East-India-Company alſo growing ſolicitous for the ſalvation of the poor Indians, and obſerving that they could get no Miniſters go thither but ſuch as could get no places in the Low-Countries, and which many times were either inſufficient, or ſcandalous: They reſolved therefore to erect a Seminary, from whence at their pleaſures they might draw forth Paſtors for thoſe parts: For which end they conſulted with the Profeſſors at Leiden, and obſerving that Wallæus was more zealous than the reſt in promoting it, they choſe him to be Overſeer of that Seminarie: But he, judging himſelf unable to undergo ſo many Offices, refuſed it; yet at the importunity of the Curators of the Univerſity of Leiden, and by the perſwaſion of his Colleagues, he was at laſt prevailed with, and undertook it. A Seminary for India. Wallæus promotes it.

Whereupon the ſtudents for India were brought into his Family, where they were dieted, and directed in their ſtudies, and found ſo much content that they never complained, either of their Diet or Government. And beſides their other ſtudies, he cauſed them every day to conſtrue to him a Chapter out of the Hebrew Bible, and another out of the Greek Teſtament, whereby they became skilfull in the Languages, and familiarly acquainted with the ſacred Scriptures. Twice alſo in the week he cauſed them to read in and diſpute of his Enchirdion of the Reformed Religion, and directed them in the making of their Sermons: and the forwardeſt of them he directed how they might infuſe the Principles of the Reformed Chriſtian Religion into the Heathens, by reaſons drawn from Nature, how they ſhould inſtruct them, gather a Church, and govern the ſame.

Out of this Seminary in a few years were ſent forth twelve Miniſters famous for Learning and Piety, to whom India oweth almoſt all her knowledge which ſhe hath in the Reformed Religion.

Then did the Magiſtrates of Leiden by their Conſul, importune Wallæus to give them leave to choſe him into their Eccleſiaſtical Conſiſtory; But his wife and children diſſwaded him from it, perceiving that he would ſink under the burthen of ſo many imployments.

About this time there brake forth a great contention in Zeland between Telingius and Burſius. Telingius was very careful to promote Piety, whereupon he ſharply reproved the ſins of the times: and obſerving much prophanation of the Sabbath, by a Book which he publiſhed, he endeavoured the Reformation of the ſame. Upon this occaſion Burſius his ſon wrote a complaint in verſe, wherein the Church bemoaned her ſelf, as if ſhe had loſt her liberty, and therein he endeavoured to confute Telingius about the Inſtitution of the Lords Day: Gomarus alſo, who was very intimate with Burſius, ſupplyed him with Arguments. Telingius his friends were much offended at this, ſo that there was great danger leaſt the Church ſhould be divided into parties and factions. Voetius alſo publiſhed a youthly writing, wherein he ſought more to jerk his Adverſaries, than to edifie the Church. Contention about the Sabbath.

Hereupon VVallæus reſumed thoſe things which he had formerly read over, and drew them into a larger Treatiſe about the Sabbath, which alſo he printed, to the great joy of the Churches: who as they highly prized his Learning, ſo now Wallæus puts an end to it.

had cauſe to admire his wiſdom. And this work of his was ſo approved of, that by Silvius, Paſtor of Amſterdam, it was turned into Dutch, their Native Language: And it pleaſed God by this means to put and end to the aforenamed contentions. Only Gomarus thinking it diſhonorable to be ſilent, publiſhed a little Book, De Inveſtigatione Sabbathi: which Rivet anſwered: and when Gomarus replyed, Rivet anſwered again. And though Gomarus found few or no followers, yet to prevent the worſt, Wallæus in his publick Lectures anſwered ſuch things as ſeemed to be new in Gomarus.

The tranſlation of the Bible.

At the firſt Reformation of Religion in the Low-Countries, there was a certain Elder of the Church of Embden, a godly man that turned Luthers Tranſlation of the Bible into Low-Dutch: But being skilfull neither in the Hebrew nor Greek, nor well acquainted with the High-Dutch, there were many Errors in it: whereupon the Miniſters of the Low-Countries, ſo ſoon as they were ſetled in their Liberties from under the Spaniſh yoak, began to think upon Tranſlating the Bible out of the Originals: and the States to promote ſo good a work, made choice of Philip Marnixius of Saint Aldegund, to go to Leiden, and there wholly to employ himſelf in this work, which he willingly undertook, and proſecuted to the year 1602 at which time he dyed, having begun many Books of the Old Teſtament but had only finiſhed Job, Pſalms, and Proverbs: Hereupon Arnold Cornelius, Paſtor of Delph, and Warner Helmichius Paſtor of Amſterdam, were appointed to finiſh what Marnixius had begun; They accordingly proſecuted that work, but being much hindered by their Paſtoral Office, they dyed before they could finiſh it: And preſently after, the Controverſies of the Remonſtrants ſprinking up, cauſed that work to ceaſe till the Synod at Dort.

The Bible begun.

The Synod carries it on.

At which time the Remonſtrants being cited to appear before the Synod at a certain day, they appeared not: whereupon the Moderator, conſidering what the Synod ſhould fall upon till they appeared, propounded the verſion of the Bible into the Belgick Tongue; And ſo they unanimouſly agreed to carry on that work, and ſet down rules which the Tranſlators were to follow. The Tranſlators alſo were choſen, and leaſt by the death of any of them the work ſhould be impeded, they ſubſtituted ſome to ſucceed ſuch as ſhould die.

Anno Chriſti 1627. (the Synod being before diſſolved) the Deputies of the Provincial Synods requeſted the States General that the verſion of the Bible might now be carryed on, which they eaſily, aſſented to, and appointed Wallæus and Feſtus Hommius to deal with the Magiſtrates and Churches, that the Tranſlators might (during the continuance of that work) be freed from their Paſtoral employments.

The tranſlators.

By the authority and perſwaſions of theſe two men the thing was granted, ſo that Anno Chriſti 1628. the Interpreters of the Old Teſtament repaired to Leiden, who were John Bogerman, William Baudartius, and Gerſon Bucer.

The year after they alſo met together who were to Tranſlate the New Teſtament and the Apochrypha, and theſe were Anthony Wallæus, Feſtus Hommius, and James Rolandus.

Theſe men ſet upon the work with unwearyed labor: And that which they aimed at was, to make a new and accurate verſion out of the Originals, and as much as the Genius of the Language would permit, to tranſlate it word for word: and whereas in the Original any word might admit of a various Interpretation, they endeavoured to finde out ſome Dutch word that might anſwer to it: And where any thing ſeemed obſcure, they labored to explain it by Marginal Notes; and where any thing was doubtful, to reſolve it: whereby they often gave a reaſon of their verſion; they added alſo Parallel Scriptures.

When the Tranſlators of the New Teſtament had proceeded to the end of the Acts of the Apoſtles, James Rowland dyed, in whoſe room Jodicus Hoingius ſucceeded: and when the Tranſlators of the Old Teſtament had proceeded to the beginning of Ezekiel, Bucer dyed, in whoſe room Anthony Thyſius was ſubſtituted.

Aſſoon as they had finiſhed any Book, and imparted it each to other, they printed it, it, and ſent it to certain ſupervisors in every Province appointed thereunto, to be by them again examined.

When the whole verſion was thus finiſhed, An. Chr. 1634. by the order of the States General all the Supervisors met together at Leiden, who were Anthony Thyſius, John Polyander, Abdias Witmarius, Jodocus Larenus, Arnoldus Teeckmannus, Bernard Fulleenius, James Revius, and Francis Gomarus. The ſupervisors.

Not long after alſo, the Supervisors of the New-Teſtament met there, who were Sebaſtian Dammannus, John Arnoldi, Lindanus, William Nieuhuſius, Charles Demaet, Lodowick Gerhardus, Bernard Fullenius, Gaſper Sibelius, and Henry Altingius.

Theſe Supervisors being met together, choſe their Moderators, Aſſeſſors, and Scribes, and then at their daily meetings, (having firſt implored the preſence and aſſiſtance of Almighty God) they were demanded whether they had found any thing in the Tranſlation that needed change: and what the Tranſlators & Supervisors agreed upon, that was concluded. And ſo this great Work was compleated, Anno Chriſti 1635. And this was very obſervable: That the ſame year a great Plague raged in the Low-Countries, and eſpecially in Leiden, wherein there dyed twenty thouſand perſons, and yet through Gods mercy, not one of the Tranſlators or Supervisors was touched with it, no nor was ever ſick all that while. The tranſlation finiſhed. A ſpecial providence.

All being thus finiſhed, the Supervisors returned to their ſeveral imployments, but the Tranſlators committed the Work to the Preſs, and themſelves were the Overſeers, to ſee to the correcting of it: At the ſame time printing it with, & without Notes, in Folio, which was finiſhed, Anno Chriſti 1637. At which time they preſented it to the States, who liked it excellent well, and preſently gave order, that no other Bible ſhould be uſed, either in Churches or Schools, which was accordingly followed. The Bible printed.

The Remonſtrants appointed four of their greateſt Scholars to examine this Tranſlation, for fear of partiality: But when they found how candidly and faithfully the Tranſlators had dealt, they alſo accepted of it, and it is judged the moſt exquiſite Tranſlation that is extant. In the verſion of Luther there is not ſo much skill ſhewed in the Language; In the French they do not ſo much tye themſelves to the words as to the ſence: And the Engliſh ſeems to favour Epiſcopacy too much, whereas no Remarkable Defect can be obſerved in this; and indeed the Tranſlators did by their exceſſive and indefatigable pains ſo wear out themſelves, that all of them dyed within three years after. Its excellency.

After he had concluded this great and tireſome Work, he attended his Profeſſorſhip, thinking to eaſe his minde, and repair his decayed ſtrength: But he ſcarce had reſted two Moneths, when he fell upon his Caſes of Conſcience: For he found that the Pontificians in their Books, whilſt they pretended to reprove ſin, did but teach it: And the Reformed Divines, in many things filled the minds of the Readers with too many Scruples: whereas that only ought to be Condemned which the Scripture accounts a Sin, and that therein alſo ſome Cautions were neceſſary: For we ought not ſo much to reprove thoſe that are bad, as to ſeek their amendment. Wallæus his further imploymen s.

But before he had well begun this work, he was again made Magnifique Rector of the Univerſity; which place, as it was of the greateſt dignity in the City of Leiden, ſo of the greateſt care.

In the midſts of theſe imployments, he found his Memory to begin to decay, and his ſtrength to fail, ſo that he was forced to write his Lectures more largely, than he was wont to do, which he carryed on till he came to the Head concerning the Holy Ghoſt, at which time death prevented his further progreſs. His ſtrength decayes.

Thus much for his Publick Life: Now for his Private. He was not ſplendid abroad, and ſordid at home; but always equall like himſelf. He ſtudyed no delights, and was far from all Laſciviouſneſs: His only recreation was to adorn his Orchard. He was free from Covetouſneſs, ſeldom looking after his outward Eſtate, and at length wholly divolved that burthen upon his Eldeſt Son, called John. He affected His character.

not vain-glory: His habit was not coſtly, yet therein he was rather negligent than ſordid.

He had always a large houſe, which was rather commodious than ſumptuous. In Converſe he was no boaſter, either of his Learning, Judgement, or Wit: He never either extolled himſelf, or debaſed others, no not his Adverſaries. He never inſerted reproaches into his Publick Writings. He never choſe any Subject to write on for Oſtentation, but onely ſuch as might be moſt profitable to the Church. He never ſought for, nor took great titles: It was always his glory rather to be, than to ſeem.

His humility.

He never affected Eaſe. He was always much grieved for the Afflictions of the Church: And endeavoured in all things, to keep a good and a clear Conſcience. He would never, to gratifie Friends, give any other Counſel, than ſuch as beſeemed him, either of the Church or Magiſtrate: Neither did he ever requeſt any for his Children or kindred of which they were not worthy, or might any way tend to the detriment of others.

When as the Magiſtrates of Leiden, had often proffered him the houſe wherein Arminius dwelt, and wherein now his Widdow and Children remained, he would never accept of it, till as, when they ſaw that they could ſtay in it no longer, themſelves came to him, and requeſted him to take it, thanking him that he had deferred it ſo long.

His modeſty.

He never hunted after the favour of great men, thereby to enrich himſelf: He only deſired their favour ſo far as might be fit for him, and advantagious to the Church: If any thing was ſpoken in his preſence which he judged prejudicial to the Church, he always ſtrongly oppoſed himſelf againſt it, not fearing therein the diſpleaſure of great men: Yea in the Court amongſt the Prince of Orange his Servants, he would not ſuffer the Name of God to be taken in vain.

His zeal.

In his carriage he was affable to all: To every one he willingly imparted counſel: He was ſo ſollicitous for the good of the Church, that upon occaſion he would declare which perſons in the Univerſity were moſt deſerving, themſelves being ignorant of it. He admitted but few into his Familiarity, judging that thereby their friendſhip would be the ſtronger, by how much the more united.

His friends.

He loved his Colleagues as his own Brethren: Next them his kindred: and after them his fellow Students and fellow Travellers. He would never diſſemble, no not amongſt his Friends. And to thoſe his Friends, his houſe and table was always open: which liberality ſome taking notice of, often abuſed it.

His meekneſs.

He was not eaſily provoked by injuries to caſt off his Friends: as this inſtance will ſhew; When Rivet was called to live in the Court of the Prince of Orange, Wallæus commended his old Maſter Gomarus to the Curators of the Univerſity for to ſucceed in the Profeſſorſhip; whereupon Gomarus acknowledged in the preſence of many, that Wallæus had overcome him in kindeneſs, and withal asked him forgiveneſs, for that he had oppoſed his Profeſſorſhip at Middleborough, which (ſaith he) I did at the inſtigation of Giles Burſius.

His love to his wife and children.

He lived moſt lovingly with his Wife; they never brake forth into anger, or Mutuall brawling: Their Mutual care was to pleaſe each other, and by deeds to prevent each others deſires: Neither did Wallæus fear any thing more, than that his dear Wife ſhould dye before him: For he uſed her, not only for the Government of his Family, but for his conſtant Companion. Whatſoever befell him in the Common-Wealth, Church, or Civill Converſe, he acquainted her with it, asked, and often followed her advice, for ſhe was a Modeſt and Prudent Woman.

They were both carefull in the Education of their Children, and their firſt care was, to train them up in Piety and good Manners: For which end he daily read ſome Chapters, and made ſome Application thereof unto them: His next care was, that they might be brought up in Learning: neither would he wholly truſt their Maſters therein, but many times examined them himſelf to ſee their proficiency. Neither would he train them up to Science, but alſo to Prudence: for which cauſe, when they were come to years of diſcretion, he uſed to impart to them the affairs and condition of the Church and State, asking their judgments about each of them.

they

He ſought not to advance his Children to high places, knowing the danger thereof, but rather deſired a middle and competent eſtate for them, wherein they might live honeſtly and more comfortably, and according to his deſire, he lived to ſee his eldeſt ſon, John, a Doctor of Phyſick, and Profeſſor thereof: and imployed by the States into France, to fetch that miracle of the World of Learning, Claudius Salmaſius to Leiden. His daughter Margaret marryed to John of Breda, Doctor of both Laws: His daughter Katherine marryed to Anthony Clement, a Learned and Godly Divine: His ſon Anthony a Lawyer: His ſon Baldwin a Student of Divinity: Only his youngeſt daughter Suſanna remained at home to be a ſolace to her aged Mother. His children well diſpoſed of.

Wallæus enjoyed better health at Leiden, than he had done at Middleborough; only that Tormentor of Students ſeized upon him there [the Stone] in the Kidneys: which grievouſly tormented him, yet not often: once in four or five years: He was much troubled with Hypochondriacal winde, which was occaſioned by his ſtudying ſo ſoon after meals, yet would he not be diſſwaded from that courſe. He is troubled with the Stone.

One of theſe fits brought him to his end. For June the 29. Anno Chriſti 1639. he found his appetite to decay, & his ſtomach would not bare food: He was grievouſly alſo tormented with winde: yet would he not intermit his labors in his Profeſſorſhip, in Governing the Univerſity, and aſſiſting in the Synod of South Holland, which was then met at Leiden. His ſickneſs.

July the third, being Sabbath, he went to Church and gave thanks to God for all his mercies, to himſelf, to his Family, and to the Church by his means, praying for Gods Bleſſing upon them for the time to come; This being the laſt Sermon that he intended to make. His laſt Sermon.

In reference to his Diſeaſe, ſuch remedies as he he had wont to find eaſe by, would now do no good: His diſeaſe encreaſed, and his ſtrength decreaſed: yet did John Bogard, and ſome other Miniſters from the Synod, continually importune him to come to their Meeting on Munday after, for the great good of the Church.

Some chief Miniſters had endeavoured of late years, to renew the Controverſie about the power of the Magiſtrate in Eccleſiaſtical matters, whereupon they drew up a writing which they would have confirmed by all the Synods: and thoſe which ſought to impede it, could not procure this Synod to reject it, becauſe of the Authority of the Author: This was like to breed a great fraction in the Synod: And this Munday was appointed for the debate about this buſineſs, which made them ſo importunate to have Wallæus preſent that day: And accordingly he came to them: At his preſence all kept ſilence: and he perſwaded them that in things which were not clearly determined by Scripture, and were in ſome tolerable manner ſetled, there ſhould be no queſtions moved: and told them that it was dangerous to contend with thoſe men who could ſuppreſs them. This was Wallæus his laſt publick action, which if it had been written in ſome mens mindes, the Church had enjoyed more peace, and the Magiſtrates had been more favourable to it. He ſettles Peace in a Synod. His Prudent advice.

The next day the Paſtors flocked to him to give him thanks, for that he had freed them from trouble; and the Church from diſturbance. All whom he exhorted to bear with thoſe which differed in judgment from them, and ſtill to love them: both parties being equally neceſſary for the good of the Church. For the moderate would ſuffer all things to fall into confuſion, were it not for the more zealous; and the more zealous would diſturb all things, were they not reſtrained by the moderate.

The three next days his pain was tolerable, ſo long as he eat nothing, whereupon he converſed ſweetly with his wife, children, and friends that came to viſit him: and attended his other buſineſſes, till at laſt (at the importunity of his ſon John) he deſiſted: Yet his ſtrength ſenſibly decayed: and on Thurſday night he fell into a ſleep, out of which he could not be awaked till Fryday in the Evening, when they ſet a Cupping-glaſs to his Neck: At which time his ſon John called his Mother, Brothers, and Siſters, fearing leſt he ſhould preſently fall aſleep again: withal telling his Father, that his life was near an end, and therefore if he had any thing to ſay to them, he deſired ſired him to ſpeak it: whereupon Wallæus exhorted them to fear God, and to reverence their Mother, ſo God would bleſs and provide for them: That every one ſhould take care of all the reſt, but eſpecially, that every one ſhould take care of himſelf; Then he bade his Son John to have a ſpeciall care of his Mother, and ſo kiſſing them, took his leave of them all: and then turning his face from them, he again fell aſleep, out of which he never awaked; onely ſometimes, when his pains came upon him, he ſtirred alittle: and ſo on the Sabbath about Eleven a Clock, he quietly reſigned up his Spirit unto God that gaveit, Anno Chriſti 1639. and of his Age ſixty ſix.

His farewel to his family.

His death.

How excellent a Divine he was, his Common places teſtifie: How Orthodox and ſolid a Diſputer he was, his Fourteen Diſputations ſhew in the Synopſis purioris Theologiæ. How ſtrong a defender of the Truth againſt Error, will appear by his Anſwer to Corvinus in Defence of Du Mollines Anatomy of Arminianiſm. As alſo his Cenſura confeſſionis Remonſtrantium. How carefull he was of Order both Civil and Sacred, is manifeſt by his Tractate De Authoritate Magiſtratus in rebus Eccleſiaſticis. How a Religious an obſerver of the Sabbath, his Diſſertation De Sabbatho declares. How deſirous he was to Reform the Ethnick practical Philoſophy, appears by his Compendium Ethicæ Ariſtotelicæ ad normam veritatis Chriſtianæ revocatum.

His works.

His Countenance was mixed with Gravity: His Pronunciation was modeſt and maſculine: free from Diſſimulation: not without Elegancy: neither by Brevity did he procure obſcurity, nor by Prolixity tediouſneſs. Sometimes he was more vehement, when the zeal of Gods Glory, the Love of the Truth, or the heat of the Diſputation, excited him.

Againſt the Adverſaries of the Truth he contended not by Reproaches or Railings, but by ſtrong Arguments drawn out of the Sacred Scriptures. As oft as he was called by the Prince of Orange, or the States, to compoſe Eccleſiaſtical Differences, he never ſpared his pains therein.

As oft as he was ſent, either by the Magiſtrates, or Presbytery, to the Camp, or about any other difficult Buſineſſes, no trouble nor danger made him decline the work. His converſation both at home and abroad was holy and blameleſs. He was Hoſpitable to his Friends, charitable to the poor, pleaſing to all: Not given to wine, but ſober, juſt, temperate, and free from covetouſneſs.

His induſtry and fidelity.

His Works are named before, and are bound up together in one Volume,

THE

The Life of Henry Alting, who dyed Anno Chriſti 1644.

HEnry Alting was born at Embden in Friſland, Anno Chriſti 1583. of a very antient and honorable Family: His Father, Menſo Alting, was Paſtor of Embden; His Mother was Mary Biſcof, a choice Matron: In his childhood he was very ſickly and weak, ſo that he was four years old before he could go. His birth and Parentage.

His Parents devoted him to the ſervice of God, and his Church from the very Womb, and therefore Anno Chriſti 1590. when he was ſeven years old, they ſet him to School in their own City of Embden, where he quickly diſcovered a prompt and ready wit, ſo that in the ſpace of ſeven years he went through all the forms in that School, and being fitted for it, at fourteen years old his Father ſent him to the Univerſity of Groning, where he ſtudyed the firſt year under Buningius, and three others years under Ubbo Emmius, the firſt Rector of that Univerſity; a man famous through the World for his Learning: By his diligence under ſuch Tutors he profited exceedingly, writing an excellent Latine ſtile, and being well grounded in the knowledge of the Arts. His education. He goes to Groning. His proficiency.

From thence his father ſent him into Germany for the advancement of his Learning; and having ſaluted Marpurg, he went to Herborn, Anno Chriſti 1602. where that famous Divine John Piſcator was Profeſſor, under whom our Henry applyed himſelf to his ſtudyes, and by his great induſtry and excellency of his wit was ſo far approved of, that he was imployed in reading Philoſophical and Theological Lectures: So that after three years abode there, he began to think of entring into the Miniſtry, for which end he reſolved to go into Helvetia and France, to receive Orders in ſome of thoſe Churches: But God for the preſent intended him to another imployment: And upon the commendations of the Profeſſors of Herborn, Piſcator, Zepper, and Martinius, he was appointed by Count John of Naſſau to be Tutor to three young Counts, viz William of Naſſau, Conrade Lodowick of Solmes, and Phil. Erneſt of Iſenburg, who at this time were Students in the Univerſity of Sedan, together with the young Prince Frederick, ſon to Frederick the fourth, Elector Palatine, who afterwards was choſen King of Bohemia. He goes to Herborn. He is made Tutor to three Noble men.

But before our Henry went to Sedan, he went to Heidleberg, to John Albert Count of Solmes, and from thence to Friedelſheim to the Prince Elector himſelf, by whom he was courteouſly entertained; and being furniſhed with Letters and neceſſaries for his journey, he went to Sedan, where he arrived in the beginning of September, Anno Chriſti 1605. and undertook his Office. He goes to Sedan.

He had continued but awhile in that place, before it was requiſite for him to with draw, with his charge from that City, for fear of a ſiege which was theatned by Henry the fourth King of France: and therefore they all went to Heidleberg, and our Henry, in the Princes Court, attended his former imployments, having a fourth added to the former three Noble men, viz. John Conrade the Rheingrave. Yea the very ſame Summer, Prince Frederick himſelf was committed to his tuition, to be by him inſtructed in Hiſtory and Geography. Returns to Heidleberg. Is made Tutor to Prince Frederick.

And at laſt, viz. 1608. he was wholly left to the inſtruction of our Henry and Zachary Collius, who went back with him to Sedan, the ſtorm being now over, where he ſo carefully attended his charge all day, that he was fain to get time out of his ſleep for the ſtudy of Divinity. Returns to Sedan.

The Univerſity of Sedan had at this time famous Divines in it, as Daniel Tilenus, and James Capellus, with whom he entred into a ſtrict bond of familiarity.

Anno Chriſti 1610. the Prince Elector dying, he returned with the young Prince to Heidleberg, where he attended his daily imployment.

Anno

Returns to Heidleberg. Goes for England. Escapes danger.

Anno Christi 1612. the Prince Elector being to go into England to marry the Lady Elizabeth, daughter to King James, would needs have our Henry to go along in his train: In which journey he escaped death very narrowly, himself with Scultetus, and some other of the Princes company being surprized with a storm upon the Lake of Harlem, so that with great difficulty, and half drowned, they gat to the further shore. This was October the seventh in the afternoon, just at which time his Father dyed, leaving this life for a better.

His friends in England.

Alting having escaped this danger, with a better voyage arrived safely in England, where he was kindely entertained, and became familiar with George Abbot Archbishop of Canterbury, John King Bishop of London, and Doctor Hackwell, Tutor to the Prince of Wales: yea, and King James himself conferred familiarly with him.

His return to Heidleberg.

February following Anno Christi 1613. the Prince Elector being married, sent Henry Alting with his Scholars before him into the Palatinate, who in their journey travelled through Zeland, Flanders, Brabant, Limburg, Juliers, and Collen, and so at last arrived at Heidleberg in April: The new married couple being not long behind them.

Is made a Professor:

About four moneths after, our Alting was called to be a Professor of Divinity, to read Common places in the University of Heidleberg: Into which he was admitted August the Sixteenth which was the Princes Birth day: And because, by the Statutes of the University, none could be Moderator of the Disputations but a Doctor, he was solemnly inaugurated into that degree, November the Eighteen by Paræus Dean of the University, and Bartholomew Coppenius Doctor of Divinity. And this was very remarkable, that amongst all the tumults and pleasures of the Court, his minde was never taken off from the study of Divinity. But Gods Providence intended him to some further imployment than a Professors place: For there was in Heidleberg an excellent Seminary of the Church, endowed with large revenues called the Colledge of Wisdom: The Prince therefore chose him Master thereof, October the fifteenth. Anno Christi 1616. together with two Colleagues to instruct and train up young Divines for the work of the Ministry: and how much good he did therein, they are able to relate, who gratefully acknowledge what profit they reaped by his care and culture.

And Doctor In Divinity;

And Master of the Colledge of Wisdom.

His modesty

Whilst he was thus laboring in his double imployment, Coppenius another Professor dyed, whose place was divolved upon our Alting: But by a rare and great example of modesty, he chose rather to continue in his former imployments, and by his favour and authority in the Princes Court, prevailed that Abraham Scultetus should have that Professors place transferred upon him.

The Synod of Dort.

He is sent thither.

About this time a National Synod was called at Dort, for the composing of the differences in the Belgick Churches by reason of the Arminians, and when grave, learned, and godly men were chosen out of all the Reformed Churches to be present at it, (which was Anno Christi 1618 and 1619) our Altingius, with two others, was sent from Heidleberg to assist in that work: where he approved himself to all that were present both for his excellent Learning in Divinity, and his dexterity in explicating cases of greater difficulty.

His return to Heidleberg.

Thus far we have heard the happier and more comfortable part of his life, now follows the more sad and afflicted part of it: For scarcely was the Synod ended, wherein the Arminians were condemned, and the Orthodox Truths established, but Alting with his Colleagues returned to Heidleberg; and at the same time the tumults in Bohemia began: The Prince Elector is chosen King of Bohemia and Crowned: Spinola breaks into the Palatinate: The great battel was fought nere Prague; The Bohemians are beaten, which was Anno Christi 1620. And the year following the University of Heidleberg was dissipated, the Students flying for fear, and the Professors having liberty granted them to go whether they pleased. Yet our Alting sending his family into a place of safety, stays still in the Colledge of Wisdom, keeping the Students in good order; remaining unterrified in the midst of emminent dangers, whilst he was serviceable to the Church, satisfied his own Conscience, and the earnest desire of the King,

He stays in dangers.

who

who from the Hague had written to him desiring him not to depart from Heidleberg.

Anno Christi 1622. in the moneth of August, Heidleberg was besieged by Tilly, and September the Sixth was taken by storm, at which time it suffered whatsoever Military licentiousness could inflict by plunderings, murthers, and ravishing of Matrons and Virgins, all being heightened by the hatred of Religion, and the brutishness of the Croats. Heidleberg taken by storm.

At this time our Alting was in his study, who hearing of the surprize of the City, bolted his door, and betook himself to Prayer, looking every moment when the bloody Souldiers would break in to sacrifice him to God: But the great Arbiter of life and death took care for his safety: For Monsieur Behusius, Rector of the School, and and his dear Friend hiring two souldiers, called him forth, and conveyed him through a back door into the Lord Chancellors House, which Tilly had commanded to be preserved from plundering by reason of the Publick Monuments of the Common-wealth that were kept in that place. This house was commanded to be guarded by a Lieutenant Colonel that was under the Count of Hohenzollern, a man greedy of prey, who lest he should lose his share in the booty by his attendance upon that place, sent forth his Souldiers, as it were, a hunting, commanding them that if they met with any Citizens of note, that under pretence of safe guarding them, they should bring them to him, purposing by their ransom to enrich himself: To this man Alting was brought, who with his naked sword reeking with blood, said to him: This day with this hand I have slain ten men, to whom Dr. Alting shall be added as the Eleventh, if I knew where to find him. But who art thou? Truly such a countenance, & such a speech in such a juncture of time might have affrighted the most constant minde: But our Alting by a witty answer, neither denying himself to be Alting, nor unseasonably discovering himself, answered (as sometimes Athanasius in the like case) I was (saith he) a Schoolmaster in the Colledge of Wisdom: Hereupon the Lieutenant Colonel promised him safety, who if he had known him to be Alting, would surely have slain him. He prepares for death. Yet is preserved. His Prudence.

Oh what a sad time had he that night, which he passed without sleep, hearing the continual shrikes and groans which filled the air, of Women ravished, Virgins defloured, men, some drawn to torments, others immediately slain: But when he saw that many fled to this house as to their only refuge, fearing lest he should be discovered by some of them, either through imprudence or malice, he retired into a Cockloft: where, whilst he hid himself, this Leiutenant Colonel was by the authority of Tilly presently commanded away, not giving him so much time as to seek out his Schoolmaster, that the house might be resigned to the Jesuites for whom it was appointed. Yet under these new inhabitants our Alting should not have been one jot safer, if God had not, by a special providence, provided for his safety. For the kitchin of this house was reserved for Tillies own use, and one of the Palatines Cooks was appointed over it, who closely fed and maintained him, and whilst the Jesuites were providing all things in a readiness in the Church for the Mass, he hired three Bavarian Souldiers that kept guards in the streets, to guard him to his own house. A special providence.

When he came thither he found all things broken, plundred and carryed away, and in his study he found a Captain boasting that all things therein were his own: yet (saith he to Alting) I give thee leave to take any one Book and to carry it away with thee. This proffer our generous Alting refused, sayings, Sir, If all these things be yours, I pray God that you may enjoy them longer than their last Master did: This was with Job, to say, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. His house Plundered.

Fortiter ille facit, qui miser esse potest.

Thus returning to his former refuge, not without very great danger, three days after, Tilly (who had taken up Altings son in Laws house for his Quarters, was prevailed with to grant him a safe conduct to go to Heilbron, to bring back his family from thence. He gets a safe conduct

Thus escaping out of Heidleberg, he passed through a thousand dangers and deaths, till it pleased God at last to bring him safely to Heilbron; from whence, after a short stay, he went to Schomdorf, where he found his Family: In which place he stayed till February following, having obtained leave so to do of the Duke of Wirtemberg, by the mediation of his Dutches, whom otherwise the Lutheran Divines would not have endured; and indeed they fretted exceedingly at it, having no other reason for their Spleen, but only because he was a Professor of Heidleberg.

The Lutherans spleen.

The year following being 1623. the King of Bohemia sent for him into the Low-Countries, and at last (through Gods mercy) after a long, difficult, dangerous, and chargeable journy, both by Water and Land, he arrived safely with his Family at Embden, and after a short stay there, went into Holland, presenting himself to his King, who presently made him Tutor to his Eldest Son Frederick: Neither would the King suffer him to imbrace a frequent call, which he had to a Pastoral charge in Embden.

He goes to Embden.

Yet neither did he pass over that year without great danger; For as he was passing in a Sled upon the Ice neer Purmerend, the Ice breaking, he fell into the Water, and was very neer drowning. But (by Gods mercy) being pulled out, he fell into a dangerous disease, of which, though he recovered, yet he felt a continual pain in his left shoulder all his life after.

A special providence.

A while after, taking all his Family with him, he removed to Leiden to oversee the Kings Sons in their studies.

He goes to Leiden.

Anno Christi 1625. Sibrand Lubbertus dying at Franeker, he was called by the States of Frisland to supply that place, and they sent again and again to the King to desire his consent thereto: But the King not consenting, he modestly excused it.

Anno Christi 1626. he was called to Groning to supply the place of Ravensperg, one of the Professors of Divinity lately dead; And though the King would by no means at first hear of it, yet at the importunity of the Senate and University, he at last consented, and furnishing him with necessaries, dismissed him: So that he removed to Groning, and the Easter following began his work in the University Anno Christi 1627. yet once a year he used to visit the King, who always highly prized him, and used him very familiarly.

He goes to Groning.

He supplyed that Professors place at Groning for the space of eighteen years with admirable fidelity, diligence, and industry, as not only his Hearers but his works testifie; As his Body of Divinity. His Explication of Ursins Catechism, and the Belgick Confession. His Disputations and Lectures against the Manual of Becanus: His Tractates concerning the Plague: Predestination, and the Term of Life. His Vindication and Explication of the Canons of the Synod of Dort: Besides some other of his Works not yet printed.

His works.

He was three times Rector of the Academy in Groning. In the Years 1628. 1636. and 1641. At all which times he brought some great profit or other to the University.

His care of the University.

In his first Rectorship, he procured an encrease of Fellowships: For whereas there were but forty before, he encreased them to sixty. In his second Rectorship he procured a great Augmentation to the University Library. In his third he obtained, that one of the Doctors was sent at the Publick Charge to Leiden to buy the choicest Books out of Gomarus his Library. He was seven years Pastor of the Church of Groning.

At the request of Count Benthemius he visited the County of Steinfurt, purged it from Socinianism, and setled peace in the Churches: He, together with some other Learned men, was imployed in perusing and correcting the new Version of the New-Testament and the Apocrypha Books, wherein he attended it with great diligence and danger at Leiden, the Plague being very rife amongst them at the same time.

His imployments.

He always had a singular care of the Churches of Germany, and especially of the Palatinate, Palatinate, improving his intereſt in procuring Liberal Contributions in all the Reformed Churches for their Maintainance; that they might not periſh through want. His care to provide for Exiles.

The Collections which were made in England, were committed to his diſtribution with two others, by the Elector Charles Lodowick. The contribution of that Noble & Munificent man, Lodowick de Geer was put into his hand for the Training up of young Germane Students in Divinity, which might (when God would reſtore peace) furniſh the Churches of the Palatinate again: which truſt he diſcharged with great diligence and fidelity. Charity. His fidelity.

He refuſed the Cals which he had to Utrick and Leiden: For though he condeſcended to the latter, when it was brought him, Anno Chriſti 1633. by the Syndic of Leiden, yet it was upon condition that the Provincial States of Groning, would give their conſents: But he was too dear to them to be diſmiſſed, though ſeveral requeſts were made to them by the States of Holland for the obtaining thereof. He was once called back by the Adminiſtrator of the Palatinate, Prince Lodowick Philip, to be Profeſſor of Heidleberg, and to reſtore the Churches in the Palatinate: and for that end he went through many dangers as far as Franckfurt: but by reaſon of the overthrow at Norlingen, a new tempeſt hung over the Palatinate, which hindred his proſecution of that work. His Call to Leiden. And into the Palatinate.

How much he watched over the good of the Univerſity of Groning; how careful he was for the choice of able Profeſſors in caſe of vacancy; and how prevalent he was therein by reaſon of his favour and authority with the States, is known to all that were his Contemporaries there. His care of the Univerſity.

He was very carefull for the training up of young Students to the Work of the Miniſtry, that they ſhould not be ſent forth raw and unprovided to ſo great and difficult Imployments: For which end he cauſed Eccleſiaſtes Eucani to be printed for their uſe.

He marryed a wife whilſt he was at Heidleberg An. Chr. 1614. a little before he was called to his Profeſſors place: Not raſhly (as many do) marrying and getting children before they have means to maintain them. She was a very Religious Matron [Suſanna Belieria] the daughter of Charles Belierius, then Conſul of Heidleberg: with whom he lived lovingly without domeſtick quarrels for the ſpace of neer thirty years, and by whom he had ſeven children. His Marriage.

He was tall of ſtature and well ſet: He had quick eyes and lively ſenſes: A loud and pleaſing voice: A ſound conſtitution, only by reaſon of his many occaſions of grief, ſomewhat inclining to Melancholy, ſo as he was prone to ſuch diſeaſes, wherein that humor did abound. His character.

In his old age he was ſomewhat ſlow of gait, not through unwealdineſs of Body, but by reaſon of the ſpeedy growth of old age upon him. He was very pious and learned, and adorned with all graces.

If he ſet himſelf to reprove vice, he performed it with great gravity. If he comforted his Friends, he did it with admirable dexterity. If he admoniſhed any of their duty, he did it with much lenity.

His Miniſtry was full of Majeſty; His ſtile Eloquent; His matter clear and ſolid. He was very ſociable, pleaſant, and loving in his converſe with his Friends. By his Practiſe, Converſe, Experience, and reading both of Ancient and Modern Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtories; he attained to a great meaſure of Wiſdom.

He was very zealous in defending the Orthodox Religion. Very far from buſing himſelf in other mens matters. Could not endure ſtrife and contentions: Shunned thoſe vain diſtinctions and fooleries of Sophiſters whereby they rather darken than explicate the myſteries of Salvation. His Zeal.

He could not endure Novelties in Divinity, holding that of Tertullian, Primum quodq; veriſſimum, That which is moſt ancient is moſt true. His profeſſion was without diſſimulation; His Divinity ſolid and ſubſtantial, not that which is fetched out of the puddle of the Schoolmen (though he was no ſtranger to them) but out of the pure Fountain of the Sacred Scriptures. He was a constant studier of the Peace of the Church, yet always so as not to hazard the loss of truth which he ever preferred before the former. He was of a constant minde, always the same; valiant in adversity, moderate in prosperity, having well learned ἀνέχειν καὶ ἀπέχεσθαι to sustain and abstain. In reproofs he was affectionate without bitterness: In admonishing and counselling prudent without passion: In choosing his Friends of a quick judgement, and constant in retaining them.

He studies the Churches peace.

When he was to deliver his judgement either in the Academical Senate, or in the Ecclesiastical Presbytery, he so went before others with his prudent counsel, as not to neglect to hear others judgements, neither would he take it ill if they dissented from him. If any question of great difficulty happened, he would never rest till he had searched out, and made plain the truth. If any resorted to him in private to ask his advice in Sacred, Civil, Academical, or Oeconomical affairs, his answer was instead of an Oracle to them.

His prudence.

His prudence did further discover it self by the government of his Family, where he kept all in peace, order, and concord; and concerning which this only was known, that no body knew what was done therein.

His family government

Anno Christi 1639. he buryed one of his daughters called Mary, a beautiful and virtuous young maid, which caused so great grief to him that he fell into a Quartane Ague, which Physitians hold to be mortal in old men; and though at last he was cured of it, yet it left ill reliques in his weakened Body, which in the year 1641. brake forth into a far more grievous disease, viz. a Lethargy, which threatned an Apoplexie, and which the Physitians did foretel to be fatal: Yet neither by this sharp affliction could his stedfast minde be cast down: For after a while, contrary to all mens expectations, he began to recover strength, though indeed he was never perfectly cured.

His sickness

A third affliction which befell him, was the death of his dear wife, which fell out the year after upon October the fifteenth, the same day upon which formerly he had been chosen Master of the Colledge of Wisdom.

His wife dies.

From that very time of the loss of his wife he was discerned to decay, his solitude encreasing his melancholy, which afterwards he could never get the mastery over. Yea he often foretold that he should not long survive his wife: And though the Easter after he went as far as Embden to visit his Friends, and recreate himself with their society, yet thereby he did but increase his distempers. For he was detained there for the space of twenty days by reason of a Catharr and Feaver; after which he returned to Groning, but much weakned and troubled with obstructions which Physick could not remove, nor any Medicines cure. Yet it pleased God that he had some lucid intervals, at which times he would attend upon his Professorship, and the affairs of the University and his Friends.

Death foreseen.

His disease encreaseth.

August following, those obstructions so far prevailed that they took away his stomach, and thence ensued a sensible decay of his strength, which afterwards was accompanied with great pains in his Back and Loins, that caused often faintings.

In his sickness Doctor Maretius visiting him, with a firm voice and friendly minde he congratulated him for that he was designed for his successor: For (saith he) it much rejoyceth me that I shall leave to the University and Church one that is studious of peace, Orthodox in judgement, and averse from novelties; and I require you, that as you have ever maintained friendship with me, so do the like with mine whom I shall leave behinde me. The day before his death he sang the 130 Psalm with a sweet voice, and fervent zeal to the Lord, and spent the rest of his time in hearty Prayers and holy meditations.

A good Pastor.

In the Evening he blessed his children, and then commanded his son, Doctor James Alting to pray with him, and in his Prayers to remember the Church and University. The next day which was Sabbath day in the morning he found himself somewhat better, yet presently after he fell into a swound. After the Morning-Exercise, his old Friends, Doctor Camerarius, and Doctor Strasbergerus, Agents for the Crown of Sweden, came to visit him, by whose conference he was somewhat refreshed: But no sooner sooner were they gone, when feeling that his disease had conquered Nature, he told those about him that before Sun-set he should depart to the Lord: And so acting his faith upon the death and merits of Christ, upon the promises of the Gospel, and cheared up with the comforts of the Holy Ghost, he expected death without fear, and presently after with a constant voice he bade them all farewell, as being ready to depart to Christ, which he much longed for: Then causing himself to be somewhat raised up, they perceived that he was ready to depart, wherefore hastily sending for the Reverend Pastor of the Church, Wesselus Emmius, his old Friend; he prayed with him, and as long as he perceived that he understood him, he cheered him up with the sweet promises of the Gospel, valiantly to go through that last combate; and so about three a clock in the afternoon, in the presence of his Friends, and the Professors of the University, without the least strugling, he quietly slept in the Lord August 25. Anno Christi 1644. His faith. His Death.

His Works are mentioned before in his life. His works.

The Life of Frederick Spanhemius, who dyed Anno Christi 1649.

FRederick Spanhemius, was born in January Anno Christi 1600. in Amberg, the Metropolis of the upper Palatinate, which year was famous for many things, especially for that memorable battel of Newport, wherein Prince Maurice overthrew the Spanish Forces: His Father was Wigand Spanhemius, an honorable and most pious man, being Doctor of Divinity, and a Counsellor to Frederick King of Bohemia in Ecclesiastical affairs: For Church businesses in the Palatinate are not ordered by Presbyteries and Consistories, as in other Reformed Churches, but by certain Ecclesiastical and Civil persons chosen by the Prince, to whom the whole care of Ecclesiastical matters is committed. His Birth. His Parentage.

His Mother was Renata Tossana, the Daughter of that famous Divine Daniel Tossanus, sometimes Minister in Orleance, afterwards Pastor and Professor of Divinity in Heidleberg: Our Frederick, so soon as he began to speak, shewed such towardliness and ingenuity, that he gave hopes of excelling when he should come to riper years. His Education.

His Parents therefore, least so fruitfull a field should lie untilled, took care that he should be trained up in Religion and Learning, first under their own wings till he was seven years old; and then they procured him to be admitted into the Electors School in that City, where, as he grew in years, he increased both in Learning and Piety, so that when he was Eleven years old, falling into a Tertian Ague, which held him long, he made a vow unto God, that if he pleased to restore him, he would (so soon as he was fit) apply himself to the study of Divinity, whereby he might be able to do him service in his Church all his life long. His sickness. His vow.

Anno Christi 1613. the Plague brake forth at Amberg, which raging for seven or eight moneths together, dissipated that School, whereby his studies were hindred; yet did his Father endeavor to make up that defect by his private instructing of him at home: So that the year following, his Father judging him fit for the University, sent him to Heidleberg, which at that time was the common Mart of Learning, unto which Students resorted out of all parts. A great Plague. He goes to Heidleberg.

When he came thither, he first sojourned in the house of his Uncle Paul Tossan; by whose converse and example he profited very much: But after a while, being examined by the Ecclesiastical Senate, and judged fit, he was admitted into the Colledge of Sapience, where he spent four years and an half under those famous men, Henry Alting and Conrade Decker, to whom he approved himself both for his wit, diligence and progress in Learning: For indeed he spent no time idly, imposing a task upon himself, His industry.

whereby

whereby he did not only equal, but far exceed all his contemporaries: First, drinking down those more pleasant studies of the Arts: Then betaking himself to the study of Latine and Greek out of the most Classick Authors: After which he proceeded to the Hebrew, which he prosecuted with such fervor, that in four moneths space he read over the whole Hebrew Bible: He made also in that time three publick Orations: First, of the Life and praises of Saint Ambrose; Secondly, Of the authority of the Laws prescribed to him by Altingius; and lastly, of the four honorable Offices belonging to the Electoral family. He also kept a publick Disputation De Mundo under Christophor Fugnitius: After all which in January Anno Christi 1619. by the command of his Superiors, he stood with five Competitors, and underwent a private and publick examination in the Hebrew, Greek, and Latine Tongues: as also in Logick, Physicks, Mathematicks, and Ethicks, and made Theams and Verses in all those three Languages: and disputed concerning Judiciary Astrologie with one o shis Competitors.

His proficiency.

His disputations.

Examination being ended he was made Master of Arts, and so returned with honour to his Parents; with whom after he had staid a while, he was by them sent to Geneva, in regard of the eminency both of the Teachers and City: For indeed that City was famous from the first Reformation in which Calvin and Beza flourished who derived the same excellent Genius wherewith themselves were adorned, to their successors.

He is made Master of Arts.

Goes to Geneva.

At his first coming thither he fell into acquaintance with Vedelius the Professor of Philosophy, and Heidanus, who afterwards made his Funeral Oration: These men found in him such qualifications, as drew their affections to him: For they discerned him to be serious, contemplative, affable towards all, and of Elegant manners: and abounding with profound speculations, which as he did not ambitiously discover, so neither did he conceal them where he might profitably make use of them.

The greatest part of his time he spent in his private studies, and in learning the French Tongues, with the elegancy whereof he was much taken, so that in a few moneths he attained to good skill in it: For the furtherance whereof, they agreed amongst themselves at meals to give an account in French of what they had read that day.

Anno Christi 1620. he publickly disputed with Universal applause under Turretine, concerning the five Articles controverted by the Arminians: wherein he gave an Essay what might afterwards be expected from him in that kinde. The year following things being in a deplorable condition in Bohemia, and in the Palatinate, he went to Gratianople, that he might free his Parents from further charge in his maintenance; and from thence to Ebrodune, an Episcopal City in the upper Dauphaunie; where he was Tutor to a Noble mans sons for three years, during which time he conflicted with many diseases, especially with a dizziness in his head, for which by the advice of a Physitian he had a Fontinel made in his left arm, which wholly freed him from that disease.

His disputations.

He goes to Ebrodune.

Whilst he was in this City, he twice contested with the Pontificians: First, in the Jesuites Colledge with Father Hughes concerning Justification, the authority of the Scriptures, the Church, &c. And afterwards with a Franciscan Fryar in the presence of the Mayor of the City, a Papist, and many Popish Lawyers concerning the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: In both which he found (as he professed) the special assistance of God, so that though he was young, and not much versed in those controversies, yet he in the judgement of his very Adversaries was not overcome.

He disputes with Papists

At the end of the three years, having with much difficulty obtained leave of the Noble man, he returned to Geneva: And after a while went from thence to Paris, where he was most courteously entertained by Samuel Durant, the Pastor of the Reformed Church, his Kinsman, with whom he lived till the death of Mr. Durant, by whose advice, he refused the Professor of Philosophies place at Lausanna, to which he was invited by the Magistrates of Bern.

He goes to Paris.

During his abode at Paris, he grew into familiar acquaintance with the Learned Camero, who was so far affected with his sweet disposition, that though he differed from him him in some points, especially about Universal Redemption; yet did he endeavour to carry him along with him to Montalban, whither he was called to be the Divinity Professor, but prevailed not. He sometimes also visited Tilenus and Grotius, and had acquaintance with them.

He is dear to Camero.

Anno Christi 1625. in April, by the Approbation of Master Durant, he came over into England, where he stayed four Moneths, in which short time he took a survey of the Kingdome, learned the Language, gat acquaintance with the most learned men, and observed many things that were worthy notice: As, The Funeral of King James: The Arrival of Queen Mary: The Parliament: the Convocation of the Clergy: The Act at Oxford, and many other things. But the Plague being at that time hot in Oxford, (according to his former engagement to his Cosen Durant) he left England, and returned to Paris, where he set upon the study of the Chaldee and Syriack Languages, and read over the Chaldee Paraphrase of the Prophets, and the Evangelists and most of the Epistles in Syriack.

He comes to England.

His return to Paris.

These were his Halcyon dayes, which were broken off by the Death of Master Durant, who left unto him his whole Library: After which he retired himself into the Family of the noble Arnold, Counsellor and Secretary of State, who entertained him at his own Table, being much delighted with the variety of his Learning and Piety.

And thus far he lived a Private Life: But in July, Anno Christi 1625. he was called by his Friends to Geneva; and indeed he delighted in that City above all others, wishing that there he might fix his station: whereupon he hasted thither upon this Call, and often spake of the good Providence of God to him therein: For when he came to Lyons, being to pass over the River Araris, he would needs go over in a Boat: But by the violence of the stream, his Boat was split against an Arch of the Bridge, whereby with much difficulty he escaped drowning, and so (through Gods Mercy) coming at length to Geneva, Anno Christi 1626 he found the Professor of Philosophies place to be void by the Death of Gasper Alexius, and so by the Unanimous Vote of all, he was preferred before all his Competitors to it, whereby after all his Travels and Troubles he aimed at a safe and quiet Harbor.

He is called to Geneva.

A special providence. He is chosen Professor.

Hereupon the better to bind himself to continuance in that place, the year after he resolved to marry, and pitching his affections upon Carlot a Portu, the daughter of the Noble Peter a Portu, with the good liking of her Friends, he marryed her, and ever after carryed a tender Affection towards her; and indeed she well deserved it in regard of her Vertues, and innocency of manners, joyned with Dove-like simplicity, free from fraud and guile. For she wholly depended upon her Husband, and was willing to be governed in all things by his advice, which is the chief commendations of a Wife, and so had all things common with him.

His marriage.

A good wife

And herein our Spanheim, admirably shewed his Wisdom, who as he was famous abroad, so he took special care that no Domestick jars should infelicitate his Life: His endeavour also was, not only to preserve, but to encrease his outward Estate; well remembring that speech of the Holy Apostle, whereby he requires, that a Bishop should Govern his house well, and keep his Children in subjection, with all honesty. For (saith he) If a man cannot govern his own Family, how shall he take care of the Church of God.

Family Government.

By this wife he had many children, whereof some dyed in their infancy, but he left seven behind him, all of great towardness, especially his two eldest Sons, who are like to inherit their Fathers Vertues.

His children.

But it was not fit that his excellent parts should be shut up within the Schools, nor his Light put under a Bushell, which ought so to shine that the Church of God might be Illuminated thereby; whereupon the Reverend Presbytery often advised him to apply his minde to the study of Divinity, which also he willingly did, and so to the great Rejoycing of all, he was Ordained a Minister, and indeed so excelled, that he exceeded all mens hopes, both for his Eloquence and Doctrine: And it pleased God to call him forth to the constant exercise of it An. Chr. 1631. at which time Benedict

His Ordination.

He is made Professor of Divinity.

nedict Turretain, one of the Professors, and his dear Friend, dying, he was by the general consent of all, chosen to succeed him, at which time he lay sick in Bed, and dreamed of no such matter.

This place he discharged for eleven years space with great applause: For then he discovered what was afterwards to be expected from him, both by his Lectures and Disputations: so that that Universitywas never in a better condition than when it was illustrated by the Light of Spanhemius.

Anno Christi 1635. he was chosen Rector of the University, at which time he made that Excellent Oration, which was published in the Name of Geneva Reformed, being just an Hundred years after that City first Embraced the Gospel.

He is desired in several places.

Hereupon the Bernates consulted about drawing him to Lausanna, to succeed in the place of James a Portu: They of Groning endeavoured to get him to them: and the Prince Elector Palatine sought also the same: But the miseries which at this time fell upon the Palatinate, put an end to those desires: At last Leiden obtained him, though with much difficulty, the Magistrates and Church of Geneva much opposing it.

Leyden obtains him.

Yet the Curators of Leiden insisted with so much earnestness by their frequent Letters, to which were added the request of the King of Bohemia, of the Illustrious States of Holland and West-Friseland, and lastly of the States General, that with much adoe at length they extorted, rather than obtained his dismission from Geneva.

But it's worth Observation, what means they used to retain him, with what grief and sorrow they parted with him, what a Confluence of People brought him forth of the City, and with what sighs and tears they parted with him, as if in losing him, they had lost a principal member of their Body.

Yet before he left Geneva, he went to Basil to take the Degree of Doctor: For in Geneva they used no such Degree, and therefore whilst he was there he effected it not: But being to goe to Leiden, where it was more necessary, he, that had been for so many years a Teacher of others, now submitted to Examination, and so was Created Doctor: And this profit he gat thereby, that he viewed Helvetia, and became acquainted with many Excellent and Learned Men, especially with Zuingerus and Buxtorfius, whose names were now Famous in the Christian World.

He Commences Doctor.

He comes to Leyden.

Anno Christi 1642. leaving Geneva, he, with his whole Family and Goods arrived safely in the Moneth of October in Leiden, just upon the Festival day, wherein they celebrated the memorial of their deliverance from the Spanish siege, and was most gratefully and heartily welcomed by them: And so soon as he came thither, it was observed that there ensued a great alteration both in his stile, conceptions, Phrases, and manner of life, so that he lived amongst the Hollanders, as if he had been born amongst them.

His great Learning.

In his Orration which he made at his Inauguration, he shewed himself a learned, pious, prudent and peaceable Divine. In his Disputations he was earnest, quick, and altogether insuperable, as one that knew all the lurking holes of Sophisters, and withall knew how to overthrow them in their own Artifices.

He was so Acute, that at the first Word he understood the meaning of his Antagonists, and many times did so happily enucleate it, that expressing it better than themselves could, he taught them thereby: And when any difficulty arose, he could easily, by the Light of Reason, discuss and make it cleer: But when he handled the Cause of God, and was to Assert his Truth, and Honour, against the Impudence of Adversaries, you might have seen him go beyond himself: Rising up with a great Spirit, and unusuall Zeal, to dispell the Objections of his Adversaries.

Many times also in Disputations, lest they should be jejune and frigid, he would furnish the Opponent with Arguments, and arm him against himself, lest an hour should pass without profit to the Hearers.

His

His care was not only to learn the first Grounds of some of the Arts, but he rested not till he had gained the exact knowledge of all the Arts, and had dived into the profundity of Philosophy: For its the sign of an Ignoble and Slothfull minde, to retain and conclude it self within narrow bounds: Yet rested he not in the knowledge of humane Arts, but only made them Handmaids and Servants to Divinity: For that indeed he prized above all other studies, and therein he spent most of his time, endeavouring throughly to understand the Sacred Scriptures, and to vindicate the same from all the false Glosses put upon them by Hereticks: He, if ever any man, was studious of the Truth: to the defence whereof he consecrated all his studies, and indeed was then in his Paradise when he had attained to the knowledge of obscure Truths, or had brought Light to difficult Texts, or had freed them from the Wrestings or Cavils of Hereticks.

His study of the Scriptures.

He was truly a Scribe, Taught to the Kingdom of Heaven, who out of his Treasury brought forth things new and old: And although his minde was estranged from Contentions, yet was he so great a Lover of Truth, that no Bonds of Freindship or Acquaintance, nor fear, could divert him from the defence thereof.

His love to the Truth.

He always preferred the Cause of God before all other relations and respects: And though he often professed that his chiefest desire was to grapple with the open Adversaries of the Church: Yet withall, he declared that he could not be silent towards those Brethren, who through ignorance or infirmity sought to undermine the Truth: For many times, a little Spark neglected at first, proves a dangerous Fire.

The danger of Schism.

When men have once undertaken the Patronage of an Opinion, they begin to cling close unto it, and the Error of it being not timely discovered to them, begins to please them, and at last, shame of retracting what they have published, makes them incorrigible.

A great wit, sound judgment, and strong memory, seldom meet in one man, by reason of the different tempers whence they proceed; but they did all so concur in our Spanheim, that it was hard to say in which he most excelled. He was somewhat cholerick by nature, yet so suppressed the same, that he brake not forth at any time into sinfull Anger.

His excellent parts.

He was a man so addicted to his study and the Schools, that its a wonder how he could understand any thing else: But God had made him a man both for contemplation & action; as may appear by the use which Noblemen and women made of him for advice in Civil Affairs.

His prudence in civil Affairs.

When he wrote of Politicks, you would have thought that he had studyed nothing else in the whole course of his life.

Before he grew old, he was an old man for Wisdom, and intentness upon businesses. His whole life was an Idea of Wisdom, whereby as occasion required, he could accommodate himself to affairs of all sorts. He was a wary estimator of humane affairs: In his friendships he observed this rule, that though he did not admit all promiscuously, yet did he admit not a few into his familiarity. He was very ready to do good to, and to deserve well of all; and whereas many had daily occasion to make use of him, he rather numbred, than weighed the good turns he did them.

His Prudence in chusing Friends.

He had almost so many friends as acquaintance, especially of those that excelled in Learning: In England, Usher, Selden, Prideaux, Morton, and Twisse, who alittle before his death, would trust no body but our Spanheim, with sundry writings which he had prepared for the Press.

His many Friends.

In France, besides many Noblemen who were in great places of Dignity, he had Molinæus, Tronchinus, William Rivet, Garissolius, Beaumontius, Mestrezatius, Drelincourtius, Bouterovius, Muratus, Blondellus, Ferrius, Petitus, Croius, Vincentius, Bochartus, almost all of them famous for their writings.

In Germany, he had Zuingerus, Ulricus, Buxtorfius, Crocius, with some others; yea out of Sweden, the Queen her self, the miracle of her Sex, did lately salute him very kindly by her Bishop, and by her Letters signified how much she esteemed him, and how much she was delighted with his Works.

In Transylvania, Bisterfield a very learned man, kept constant correspondence with him by frequent Letters.

But we must not forget Andrew Rivet, who was inferior to none of the Divines that then lived, with whom he had a most strict bond of Friendship, so that they seemed to have but one soul in two bodies, they willed and nilled the same thing, their opinions and judgments never differing.

His high esteem of Salmatius.

But as he was always an acute observer of Wit and Learning, so he never desired more intimacy with any than with such as by an unusual kind of Learning excelled all others, whereupon, seeing Salmatius, as the bright Sun, obscuring all other Stars, acknowledging the immensity of his Learning, and the magnitude of his Heroick motions, he often professed, that he delighted in nothing more than in his Friendship: and Salmatius also willingly imbraced the same, insomuch as when Spanheim lay sick, hearing that he desired to speak with him, though at that time he lay sick of the Gout, Salmatius hasted to him, where with many tears and sighs they embraced each other, confering of such things as became Christians, and such great men to speak of, to their mutual satisfaction.

He lived also most friendly with his other Colleagues, weighing prudently what each of them deserved: But amongst all, observing Bernard Schot to excel for his skill in the Law, and dexterity in dispatching businesses, as also for his obsequious mind towards him, he made choice of him especially to impart his secrets to, and to rest most upon his advice.

His great Friends.

He always, as he ought, much esteemed the singular good will of the Prince of Orange towards him, as also the Queen of Bohemia, and other of the States, to whom deservedly he was most dear: as they testified by their extraordinary grief at his death.

He always upon every occasion professed how much he was beholding to the Curators & Magistrates of Leiden, for their singular good will towards him, whereby they often anticipated and exceeded his modesty in conferring favours upon him. The most excellent Princess of Orange also, after his death, sent to his widdow and eldest son, professing that the loss of him, was no less a grief to her, than if she had lost another Husband, or dear Son, so highly did she esteem of him.

His great correspondence.

Neither may any man wonder whence it came to pass that he had so many Friends, if withall he do but consider the multitude of Letters that he sent and received, so that his study seemed to be a Compendium of all Europe. But behold the mutability of all Earthly things! The truth is, his labours were so many and great, that if his Body had been of Oak, or Iron, he could not have held out long: so that we may truly say, that the imployment of his Soul destroyed its own Habitation, which was worn out, and dissolved with too much exercise.

His great labours.

For besides the publick labours which he underwent in the Church and University, his private and domestical cares, his conferences with his Friends, his frequent intercourse of Letters, his various writings, and giving counsel to others, took up every moment in his life: And though he was often admonished by his Friends to favour himself and moderate his pains, yet would he by no means be perswaded to it.

His sickness.

Hence it was observed that his strength began sensibly to decay, and he was troubled with great Obstructions, so that himself began to complain of them, yet would he not diminish his daily task: And thus he continued all the Winter, afflicted with weakness, and pains at sundry seasons.

His last Sermon and Lecture.

His last Sermon he Preached at Easter, upon those memorable words of Saint Paul, Phil. 3. 21. Who shall change our vile Body, that it may be like his Glorious Body, &c. Also after his last Lecture, returning home, he complained of the decay of his strength, which was so great, that with much difficulty he went on to the end of his Lecture, as many of his Auditors observed

He goes to Synod.

From thenceforth his Health decayed, and his strength declined more and more, and which was an ill sign, his weakness was greater than his disease: yet notwithstanding he was delegated in the midst of April, by the Church, to a Synod of the French Churches which met at Harlem, whither he went, though the labor was too great for his weak Body.

And

And at his return he ſenſibly diſcerned that he was much worſe, ſo that though no ſigns of death appeared outwardly, yet was his weakneſs ſuch, that being taken off his Legs, he was confined to his Bed.

His preparation for death.

Hereupon he foreſaw the Approach of Death, and wholly gave up himſelf to God, whom he continually invoked by Ardent Prayers, and Sighs, which had been his conſtant Practiſe in the whole courſe of his Life: But yet April the twenty-eight, he thought himſelf better, and that there were ſome hopes of his recovery: whereupon in the afternoon he ſate up at his ſtudy Window: where he had not continued long, before he was ſeized upon by a Violent Feaver, with a great trembling and ſhaking of his whole Body, which at length ended in a Burning, ſo that he lay all night as if he had been in the midſt of a fire: Whereupon ſeeing his end to approach, in the preſence of his Family he poured forth moſt Ardent Prayers to God: Profeſſing that he knew Chriſt to be his Redeemer in whom he belived, and with whom he knew that he ſhould ſhortly be, & that he deſired nothing ſo much as his happy Diſſolution, his Soul ſtill breathing after Chriſt: Only this by earneſt Prayers he begged of God, that he would give him ſtrength to undergoe whatſoever he ſhould pleaſe to lay upon him, and that he would not ſuffer him to be tempted, beyond what he was able to bear, that he might have a quiet and comfortable departure out of this miſerable and ſinful World.

His ardent Prayer.

Preſently the Famous Phyſitian Doctor Stratenus was ſent for from the Hague, who was his ſpecial Friend, to whom was adjoyned Doctor Wallaus, who performed all the Offices of Good Phyſitians, and did what Art could doe: But their Buſineſſe was not ſo much with the Diſeaſe, as with death, which refuſed all Remedies.

The Citizens of Leiden, mourned exceedingly for his ſickneſs; The Queen of Bohemia, and the Princeſs of Orange ſhewed moſt tender Affections towards him.

His Faith, and Hope.

His Wife and Family forſeeing their calamity in his loſs, were diſſolved into Tears: But Heidanus coming to viſit him, he declared to him the inward Peace of his Soul, his hope of Future Glory, and his Faith in Chriſt, together with his earneſt deſire of leaving this miſerable World: He alſo freely forgave all that had wronged him, deſiring the like from others, if he had any way juſtly offended them: Profeſſing that whatſoever he had done, he did it out of his Love to Truth, and his care over the Church.

The Night before his Death, Doctor Triglandius was ſent for to him, whom he always loved and honoured as his Dear Friend, and Colleague, who being come, Prayed with him: And the next day Doctor Maſſius, Paſtor of the French Church did the like: And thus he ſpent all that week in Prayers and Holy Exerciſes.

On Wedneſday Night, he cauſed his ſon to read to him the Eighth Chapter of Ezekiel, and part of the Epiſtle to the Romans: After which he ſpake to his Eldeſt Son [Frederick] exhorting him to the ſtudy of Divinity, requiring him not to be withdrawn from it by any means whatſoever: He thought that he could never ſpeak enough of the tender Love, Care, and Diligence of his Wife ſhewed towards him.

He commends his Wife.

A little before his Death, recollecting his Spirits, in the preſence of Samuel Riverius Paſtor of Delph, with a clear and fervent voice, he prayed with ſuch Ardency of Affections, as cauſed all to wonder.

What he gives thanks for.

In his Prayers he gave Immortal Thanks to God for all his Bleſſings beſtowed ſo plentifully upon him in the whole courſe of his Life: And for that he had bleſſed him ſo much amongſt ſtrangers: Acknowledging himſelf to be leſſe than all thoſe bleſſings, and that he had nothing to return to his Majeſty for them but his grateful Heart: Above other things he eſpecially bleſſed him for bringing him forth in a Reformed and Orthodox Church, and for that he had not ſuffered him to be infected with the Popiſh Religion, whoſe Doctrine he profeſſed to be erroneous and contrary to the Goſpel of Chriſt; and to be the way of Perdition: He prayed heartily to God to continue theſe bleſſings bleſſings to his Family for ever, and that he would never ſuffer any of them to be ſeduced to Popery: He prayed alſo that in the pains of Death he might, with all his Soul, breath after God, and might before hand have ſome taſt of the glory of Heaven.

His death. This Prayer being ended, his ſtrength and voice failed him, and ſo about Sun-ſetting he quietly ſlept in the Lord, An. Chr. 1649. and of his Age, 49.

His works. Genevæ, rogatu regis, Sueciæ, lingua Gallica conſcripſit Militem Suecicum: Huic comitem addidit Mercurium Helveticum: Commentarium vitæ & Mortis Chriſtopheri à Dhona. Leydæ, rogatu Reginæ Bohemiæ edidit Memorias Ludovicæ Juleanæ Electricis Palatinæ. Conciones tres, Thronum Gratiæ, Thronum Judicii, Thronum Gloriæ. Latinæ ſcripſit Genevæ, Genevam Reſtitutam. Primam, Secundam, & Tertiam Dubiorum Evangelicorum partem. Chamierum item contractum. Leydæ, Exercitationes de Gratia univerſali. Epiſtolam ad Buchananum de controverſiis Anglicanis: Item Epiſtolam ad Cottierium de conciliatione Gratiæ Univerſalis. Beſides divers others which he began, but could not finiſh, being prevented by multitude of buſineſſes, and death.

Μόνῳ τῷ Θεῷ δόξα.

FINIS.

A TABLE OF ALL THE Principal things contained in the Lives of the Fathers, and latter Divines.

A

Abstinence, pag. 91.
Afflictions, p. 157. 166. 169, 259. 262. 332. 352. 413. 456.
Afflictions sanctified. p. 425.
Anabaptists rise p. 137.
Anabaptists confuted p. 137. 241. 279. 291. 294. 348.
Anabaptists wickedness p. 151. 169. 278. 279. 288. 323. 348. 419.
Anger: the evils of it, p. 62.
how prevented, p. 63.
Antinomians, p. 142. 294.
Apollogies for the Christians, p. 10. 15. 28. 43.
Apostacy, p. 162. 220. 239. 446. See Falls of the Saints.
Appeals, p. 50. 118. 120. 125. 249. 267. 337.
Arminians, p. 302. 473.
Astrologers confuted, p. 297.
Atheism, p. 418.

B.

Backsliding repented of, p. 128.
Bible translated, p. 136. 165. 174. 182. 206. 254. 358. 420. 456. 486.
Blasphemy plagued by God, p. 87. 472.

C

A Cain, p. 180.
Censures rash, p. 252.
Charity to souls, p. 97, 98. 162. 219. 236. 363.
Charity, p. 25, 26, 28. 51, 52, 54. 63, 65. 77. 84. 89. 91, 95, 96, 98. 104. 107. 144. 163, 166. 217. 222. 225. 228, 229, 230, 233, 236. 244. 280. 328. 330. 333. 346. 353. 361. 363, 383. 396. 403. 405. 409. 423. 432. 449. 459. 462. 471. 495.
Chastity, p. 19. 26. 51, 52. 213.
Childrens education, p. 495. 459. 471.
See Family Government.
Christ preferred above all, p. 261. 278. 481. 425. 458.
Church reformed p. 98.
Christians are Pilgrims, p. 86.
Comfort in afflictions, p. 219. 227. 237. 239. 458.
Confession of Augsburg. p. 139. 323.
Conscience, p. 63. 108. 219. 223. 227. 234. 249. 363.
Conscience guilty, p. 20. 99. 458.
Contentation, p. 31. 260. 370. 407.
Conversion, with the means of it, p. 6. 8. 9. 16. 18, 19. 24, 25. 58. 90. 93. 130. 149. 157. 160. 161. 167. 177. 179. 183. 207. 210. 211. 214. 215. 221. 233. 236. 251, 252. 261. 263. 266. 274. 277. 285. 318. 335. 348. 358. 359. 362. 378. 387. 388. 390. 400. 415. 425. 445. 461.
Councils, p. 32. 35. 42. 44. 74. 76. 82. 87. 117. 142. 216.
Courage and Constancy of the Saints, p. 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 9, 13. 26. 28. 54. 55. 61. 77. 117. 129. 133. 135. 136. 138. 144. 149. 158. 162. 169. 178. 183. 206. 214, 215. 216, 218, 219 222, 223, 225, 226, 227, 234. 236. 254. 263. 270. 280. 301. 321. 323. 324. 333. 338. 339. 343. 365. 414.
Cruelty of Persecutors, p. 4. 7. 45. 331. 333.

D

Death comfort at Death, p. 163. 234.
Death desired, p. 55. 170. 230. 259. 330. 342. 353. 387. 401. 403. 433. 443. 446. 453. 459.
Death prepared for, p. 240. 281. 330. 342. 366. 371. 377. 379. 383. 392. 401. 408. 434. 439. 446. 450. 459. 493.
foreseen 496. 503.
Death not feared, p. 227.
Comfort at Death, p. 274. 355. 392. See above.

Diligence, p. 112. 331. 344. 433. See Industry.
Diſſentions among Miniſters, p. 59.
Diviſions dangerous, p. 289. 323. 307. 479.
Dreams remarkable, p. 150. 229. 257. 377.
Drunkenneſs, p. 88. puniſhed by God, p. 375.

E

Eloquence, p. 326. 455. 461.
Envy dangerous, p. 16. 69. 94. 344. 471.
Excommunications. Of Origen, p. 20. of Theodoſius p. 62. of J. Huſs p. 116. of the Popes Bull. p. 135.

F

Family Government, p. 90. 233. 330. 449. 461. 488. 490. 499.
Faith, p. 86. 137, 138. 209. 224. 234. 343. 353. 414. 503.
Falls of Gods Saints, p. 74. 112. 128. 161. 249. 328. 462.
Fidelity, p. 26. 61. 228. 375. 396. 413. 490. 495.
Flight in Perſecution, p. 3. 19. 39. 43. 46. 49. 221. 268. 280. 314. 321, 323, 324. 328. 335. 345. 361. 363. 381. 385. 409. 420. 453.
Flight refuſed, p. 4. 28. 159. 225. 229. 237. 248
Forgiveneſs, p. 366.
Fortitude, p. 381. See Magnanimity.
Friendſhip, p. 154. 272. 280. 298. 315. 426. 432. 433. 442. 488. 501, 502.
Frugality, p. 269.

G

Gluttony, p. 88.
Goſpels ſwift progreſs, p. 151. 177. 431.
Grace, p. 449.
Gratitude, p. 393.

H

Hatred cured, p. 60.
Heart tender, p. 229.
Heavens Glory, p. 92.
Hereticks puniſhed with Death, p. 300. 302. 305.
Hereticks plagued by God, p. 3. 37. 87. 289. 303. 307. 353. 474.
Hereticks ſeditious, p. 36. 38. 43.
Hereticks profane. p. 13. Malicious, p. 20. 33. 35. 43. 61. 68. 85. 91.
Hereticks nominated, p. 15.
Hereticks reformed, p. 20. 24. 79. 82. 93. 432.
Hereticks perſecutors, p. 32. 35. 38. 43. 49. 81. 91. 92. 477.
Hereticks ſubtile and falſe, p. 33. 34. 37. 39. 48. 58. 69. 74. 82. 83. 93. 289. 293. 474. 477.
Hereſy infectious, p. 38. 305. 349. 352. 479.
Hoſpitality, p. 364. 450.
Humility, p. 2. 15. 26. 52. 62. 79. 84. 93, 94. 96, 97. 100. 107, 108. 230. 244. 253. 257. 259. 279. 335. 354. 364. 370. 382. 385. 397. 401. 405. 436. 438. 446. 459. 462. 488.

I

Jews plagued by God, p. 51.
Ignorance, p. 130. 219.
Impatience, p. 91.
Inconſtancy, p. 13. 299.
Independents confuted, p. 391.
Induſtry, p. 13. 23. 66. 79. 83. 93. 104. 107. 154. 156. 176. 209. 210. 213. 243. 251. 255. 256. 259. 280. 286. 292. 305. 307. 332. 336. 344. 348. 357. 362. 368. 372. 373. 378. 380. 382. 391. 394. 400. 403. 408. 413. 419. 433. 437. 443. 457. 461. 470. 490. 497.
Ingratitude, p. 86. 351. 365. 476.
Injuſtice, p. 10. 76. 333.
Interim when made, p. 208. miſchief of it, p. 209. Confuted, 297. 323. 351. 356. 386.
Joy unſpeakable, p. 156. 162. 239. 240. 377. 446. 459.
Judaſſes, p. 166. 248.
Juſtice, p. 291. 449.

L

Love, p. 170. 172. 177. 488.
Luthers paſſionateneſs, p. 141. 171. 350.
Lying abhorred, p. 77.

M

Magnanimity, p. 26. 77. See Fortitude.
Malice of the Churches Enemies, p. 5. 61. 70. 73. 452.
Malice of Sathan, p. 236. See Sathans Malice.
Martyrdom deſired, p. 18. 58. 235.
Martyrs encouraged, p. 18. 333.
Meditation, p. 107, 108. 265. 434.
Meekneſs, p. 63. 75. 92. 94. 223. 488.
Miniſters loved, p. 78. 404. See Paſtors.
Miniſters Ordination, p. 12. 14. 16. 19. 25. 72. 93. 100. 105. 131. 183. 213. 218. 251, 252. 332. 378. 448. 458. 470. 499.

Miniſters

Miniſters faithful, p. 59. 64. 72. 77. 79. 80. 88. 95. 107, 108. 116. 120. 148. 155. 160. 182. 218. 222. 225. 232. 236. 273. 280. 283. 292. 298. 322. 324. 330. 341. 349. 365. 370. 385. 415. 442. 445. 458. 461. 471. 475.
Miniſtry ſucceſsful, p. 7. 73. 83. 146. 268. 316. 326. 336. 415. 445, 446. 458.
Miracles, p. 5. 7. 55. 145. 383. 411. How long continued, p. 13
Moderation, p. 93.
Modeſty, p. 25. 58. 103. 365. 476. 488. 492.
Money deſpiſed, p. 139.

N

Nichodemites confuted, p. 295.

O

Oaths, p. 85.
Origens Fall and Lamentation, p. 20. &c.
Origen, the firſt Commentator on the Scriptures, p. 24.

P

Parents duty, p. 2. Honoured, p. 144. 156. 459.
Paſtors faithful, p. 2. 6. 28. 50. 54. 253. 412. 416. 449. See Miniſters, p. 481. 496.
Patience in Afflictions, p. 2. 51, 52. 83. 118. 160. 163. 216. 220. 222. 224. 249. 257. 308. 325. 353. 360. 396. 405. 443. 444. 459. 462
Peace ſought, p. 12. 73. 89. 139. 173. 208. 254. 328. 349. 387. 449. 453. 461. 477. 483, 484. 489. 496.
Perſecutors welcomed, p. 4. 237.
Perſecutions great, p. 2. 4. 13. 20. 24. 29. 31. 112. 287. 293. 305. 346. 353. 391. 426. 431. 463.
Perſecution encreaſeth Religion, p. 15. 297. 391.
Perſecution advantagious, p. 7.
Perſecutors plagued by God, p. 77. 117. 119. 166. 181. 263. 264. 334.
Perſeverance, p. 52. 156.
Plato praiſes God for three things, p. 406.
Popiſh Lyes and Slanders, p. 110. 142. 156. 165. 166. 237. 247. 287. 304. 433. 472
Popiſh Covetouſneſs, p. 177.
Popiſh Malice, p. 112. 114. 116.. 132. 134. 152. 155. 157. 160, 161. 165. 206, 207. 210. 218. 222. 225. 236. 245. 262, 263. 268. 269. 270. 277. 280. 315. 319. 323. 326. 328. 336. 411, 412. 419. 420. 424. 426. 452.
Popiſh Cruelty, p. 117, 118, 119, 122. 223. 126. 128. 152. 216. 220. 228. 234. 239. 273. 295. 341. 345. 412.
Popiſh Treachery, p. 121. 179. 338.
Popiſh Prophaneſs, p. 131. 162. and Ignorance, p. 239.
Popiſh ſubtilty, p. 148. 249. 273. 317. 338. 340. 429.
Popiſh Blaſphemies, p. 131. 165. 176. 263. 336. 340.
Popiſh Uncleanneſs, p. 121. 340.
Poverty of Miniſters and Saints, p. 86. 185. 249. 260. 278. 318. 344. 356. 381. 402. 418. 435. 452. 457.
Prayer frequent, p. 15. 88. 218. 230. 237. 353. 382. 458.
Prayer prevalent, p. 36. 86. 95. 98. 141, 142. 145. 178. 182. 257. 353. 362. 416. 433.
Prayer at death, p. 5, 6, 7. 143. 223. 234. 254. 259. 503.
Preaching a hard work, p. 100 260.
Predictions, Propheſies, p. 10. 57. 59. 75. 94. 146. 158. 161. 217. 222. 226. 234. 237. 256. 329. 339. 341. 342 382. 387. 422.
Pride, p. 110. 220. 243. 341.
Prodigies, p. 118. 257. 307. 404.
Prophaneſs puniſhed, p. 63.
Providences ſpecial and extraordinary, p. 18. 20. 31. 35. 38. 45. 48. 54. 60, 61. 63. 81. 84. 112, 113, 114. 143. 145. 160. 182. 205. 214. 217. 223. 238. 242. 248. 250. 256. 260. 272. 276. 283. 286. 289. 315. 324. 332, 333. 334. 341. 347. 363. 366. 376. 381. 382. 383, 384. 386. 387. 389. 392. 411, 412. 418, 419. 425. 436. 453. 458. 468. 487. 492, 493, 494. 499.
Prudence, p. 33. 41. 44. 74. 84. 90. 109. 129. 164. 166. 213. 242. 243. 245. 266. 272. 288. 323. 405. 425. 461. 482. 489. 493. 496. 501.

R

Repentance, p. 161. 249. 328.
Repentance not to be delayed, p. 63.

S

Sacriledge abhorred, p. 295. 386.
Sathans Malice, p. 7. 12. 20. 166. 272. 279. 287.

287. 290. 293. 297. 316. 318. 335. 376.
Schiſmaticks dangerous, p. 501. Malicious, p. 81.
Schiſm at Rome, p. 115, 116.
Scoffers puniſhed by God, p. 341.
Scriptures ſtudied, p. 16. 64. 68. 72. 87. 89 100 105. 114. 131. 148. 225. 266. 277. 286. 465. 501.
Self-Denial, p. 280. 291. 405. 483
Sin the fore-runner of Perſecution, p. 26, 27. and of Judgments, p. 97. 231.
Slanders, p. 33. 262. 391. 396.
Speeches excellent, p. 2. 6, 7. 14. 16, 17. 25. 28. 51, 52. 55. 58. 60. 65. 71. 78. 86. 87, 88, 89, 90. 95. 99. 101, 102. 104. 106, 107, 108. 128. 135. 138. 144. 153. 163. 219. 224. 289. 330. 343. 354. 402. 446. 459.
A New Star, p. 353.
Studiouſneſs, p. 23. 25, 26. 96. 108. 168. 229. 237. 244. 277. 322. 327. 404. 448. 479. See Induſtry.
Sufferings of the Saints, p. 92. Rejoyced in, p. 92.
Synods, p. 30. 80. 214. 289. 401. 432. 453 474. 492. 502.
Synods, why neceſſary, p. 349.

T

Temperance, p. 394.
Temptations, p. 4. 138. 145. 175. 179, 180. 215. 343. 356. 418, 419. 445, 446. 458.
Temptations reſiſted, p. 91. 104. 223, 224. 230 277. 425
Thankſgiving, p. 435. 459. 503.
Thieves converted, p. 364. 415, 416.
Time to be well imployed, p. 96. 108. 229.

V

Vanity of all Earthly things, p. 249.
Viſions, p. 4. 27. 28.
Vows, p. 375. 497.

W

Witchcraft fruſtrated, p. 136. 166.

Z

Zeal blind. p. 105.
Zeal true, p. 2. 7. 9. 54, 55. 64. 79. 104. 109. 112. 127. 148. 160. 164, 165. 178. 207. 215. 218, 219. 225. 238. 240. 263. 279. 280. 322. 323. 331, 332. 335. 336. 337, 338, 339. 352. 365. 376. 488. 495.
Zeal againſt Hereticks, p. 3. 6. 11, 12. 16. 18. 32. 52, 53. 57. 59. 65. 70. 73. 77. 80. 83. 334. 373. 389. 439.

FINIS.

THE SECOND PART OF THE MARROW OF Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory:

CONTAINING THE

LIVES

OF

Many EMINENT CHRISTIANS, which have lived ſince the Primitive times to this preſent Age; Divided into Two Books:

Whereof the Firſt contains the Lives of Chriſtian Emperours, Kings, and Sovereign Princes:

The Second contains the Lives of Chriſtians of an Inferiour Rank.

BOOK I.

By Samuel Clark Paſtor of Bennet Fink, London.

The Second Edition, Corrected and amended.

Iſa. 49. 23. Kings ſhall be thy nurſing Fathers, and their Queens, thy nurſing Mothers:
Iſa. 60. 16. And thou ſhalt ſuck the Breaſt of Kings.

Præcepta docent, exempla trahunt.

LONDON,
Printed for Tho. Sawbridge, and Will. Birch, 1675.

The Epiſtle to the READER.

Chriſtian Reader,

When I publiſhed my laſt Book of the Lives of Eminent Divines, both ancient and Modern, my intentions were (as is hinted in one of the Epiſtles) to have ſeconded it with the Lives of ſuch worthy Divines as have lived lately in this Kingdom; but finding that my Intelligence comes but ſlowly in, I have in the mean time ſent abroad this Second Part, containing the Lives of ſuch Chriſtians as were famous in their Generations, ſome for doing, others for ſuffering much in the Cauſe of Chriſt: And indeed ſuch examples cannot but be very ſeaſonable in theſe laſt, and worſt of times, wherein the life of Reigion, and power of Godlineſs is ſo much decayed amongſt the Profeſſors of it: For as we deceive Children, by taking away Gold and Silver, and giving them Counters to quiet them: So Satan quiets the conſciences of many with bare forms of Piety, who are not able, or willing to diſtinguiſh between precious Duties, and the right Performance of them, and formal and empty ſervices; whereas theſe Worthies were ſuch inwardly, as they deſired to appear outwardly, and having their hearts heat with fire from Heaven, were ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, always abounding in the Work of the Lord knowing that their labour was not in vain in the Lord: And whereas many amongſt us turn Conſcience into Queſtions, and Controverſies, ſo that whilſt they are reſolving what to do, they do juſt nothing: Theſe on the contrary did not reaſon, but run: Did not (with Æſops Dog) catch at the ſhadow, and loſe the ſubſtance, but contending earneſtly for the Faith which was once delivered to the Saints; they were not led aſide by the error of the wicked, nor fell from their own ſtedfaſtneſs: And whereas now-adayes

1 Cor. 15. 58.

God loves Curriſtas, not Quariſtas. Luther. Jude 3. 2 Pet. 3. 17.

many that pretend much to Piety, make it their great design to decry, and vilifie the true, and faithful Ministers of Jesus Christ: These on the contrary, loved, reverenced, honored, and imbraced Cant. 1. 18 them, Going forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feeding their Kids by the Shepherds Tents: They were such as came not to Christ, as to a Jesus, for room, and shelter, to keep them from the fire only, but as to a Christ, for Grace, and Government in his Service. Yet it cannot be denied but they had their failings; And some may say, Why did you not record them, as well as their Graces, and Vertues? To whom I answer no more than this, that severe censurers of other mens faults, are like Crows that fasten only upon Carrion; or like the Horse-flie, that coming into a field of sweet flowers, yet if there be any dung, his eye, and scent is only to that, and upon that only will he light: whereas God on the contrary (and so should his Children) spieth out, and severeth gold, though but a dram, from a mass of dross; and good grain, though but an handful, from an heap of chaff.

I intend not (God continuing my life, and liberty) to sit down here, but to make some further progress in writing the lives of others of Gods Worthies: Wherefore my request is to all such as can furnish me with materials for the continuance of the blessed Memorials of their deceased friends, and for the publick good, and utility of the Church, to send them in to me, who shall be willing to lay out my poor endeavors in such a way, wherein I may be most serviceable to God and his Church; and for my furtherance therein, I earnestly crave thy prayers, who am,

Thine, and the Churches

SERVANT

Samuel Clark.

Heroës

Heroës Redivivi operâ venerandi viri, Magiſtri SAMUELIS CLARKI.

PLutarche cede: etſi majorum gentium
Et Scriptor aureus apud omnes audiat.
Quas Ethnicorum à te conſcriptas Ethnico
Volvi & revolvi cum voluptate intima
Minoris atque dudum Vitas æſtimo.
Nempe orto Sole parvi facio ſtellulam.
Surrexit alter, Chriſtianorum Optimos
Et maximos qui Chriſtianus optimè
Depinxit, atq; Vitâ donavit novâ.
Quid intereſt Viro Vir! & Vitæ ſimul
Quid Vita præſtat! Magnum Magnus anteit
Immane quantum; certè quàm longiſſimè.
Orbis terrarum domitorem, ſed non ſui,
Sibi imperans Conſtantinus, ſicut ſuis,
Dominique ſub vexillis Chriſti militans:
Perinde Primum Romanorum Cæſarum
Auguſtus ille Guſtavus, Chriſti Enſifer,
Sequatiumque Chriſti Vindex ſtrenuus:
Nec non eorum, quos in Cœlos evehit
Plutarchiana penna, laudatiſſimos, Hic Clarkianus, quem nunc intueor, Chorus.
Non jam videre videor, video clariùs
Ipſos, quorum oculos jam paſcunt Vitæ meos.
Plutarche, tuum ſic ſuperat Clarki dextera,
Tu mortuos magni, non Redivivos, facis.
At ejus cuncti Heroës atque Heroides,
Qui ſuperârunt vivi mortales cæteros,
En denuò ſuperant, & ætheriâ (papæ!)
Veſcuntur aurâ. Quos jam ſuſpiciam magis
An artem quâ ſunt tandem vitæ redditi,
Divina quam ſit illa, prorſus neſcio.
Has Clarki Vitas comparate, quæſumus,
Has legite ſeduli & jugiter, has vivite,
Sceptris gerendis nati, & rebus arduis;
Aliique quibus longo cenſeri ſanguine,
Et alios rerum copiâ ſupergredi,
Virûmque ſummos indigitari, contigit.
Ad haſce Vitas veſtras ô componite.
Qui dignitate cæteros præcurritis,
Non & virtutibus anteire, ſordidum eſt.
Magnates vos & Optimates dicimus,
Divorum & inſtar (O quantus honos!) ducimus,
Et venerabundi magno ſudamus opere
In deferendo cultu quis primas ferat.
Nè fruſtrà nos hæc omnia, vos optimi date.
Habete curæ, res titulis reſpondeat.
Magnates eſſe rebus geſtis maximos,
Et Optimates omnium longe optimos,
Et divos habitos divos eſſe convenit.
Eſtis tum demum in Vivis, non Cadaveris,
Quum Mortuis his redivivis ſitis pares.
Venerande Clarke! qui pius Matri piæ,
Huic Anglicanæ, canæ nunc Eccleſiæ,
Eoque quicquid ſomnient cerebroſuli,
Magis colendæ & propugnandæ à Liberis,
Tam ſæpe donas Munera quàm gratiſſima;

Alexand. Magnum. Conſtant. Magnus.

Guſtavus per anagrammatiſmum Auguſtus.

Non dura ſed pia Mater, Eccleſia Anglicana.

Sic Vertit Leo Judæ ut Jun. & Trem. cupe-dias.

Fragrantia primùm Serta, tum Speculum novum, Dein Medullam, (ut grandævo cibos patri Uterque gnatus delicatos obtulit.)
Et jam Medullam rursus: pergas impiger
De Matre sic mereri & fratribus tuis.
Qui pro Medulla tam dulci grates agunt
Quas possunt maximas, & plus efflagitant
Adhuc Medullæ. Quod si votis annues,
(Spero annues) amabunt te Medullitus.
Nè tadio sim, in tale votum desinam.
Qui mortuorum ità nôris Vitas scribere,
Et vivos doceas sanctè vitam ducere,
Non voce solùm Præco sed vitâ simul,
(Quod est Ministrûm Verbi divini omnium.)
Ut ipse vivas diuturnam hic vitam, precor.

Thomas Dugardus, Art. Mar.
Rector Barfordiæ.

SAMUEL CLARK.

Anagram.

SU(c)K ALL CREAM.

An Accroſtick to the Reader of the Labour of his Reverend Friend

Mr.

*Ah Reader, look, the*Se choſen Veſſels here,
Moſt Richly filled Are with Milk ſincere;
The Author ſcims the M and moſt ſweetly ſtrives
To make thee ſUck the Cream of all their lives.
*From other Books (*dEar friend) ſuck Milk thou maiſt;
But in this precious Book aL l Cream thou haſt.
Then ſweetly ſuck all Creams, and take thy fill;
Bleſſing the Lord of Life for the Authors skill.
This Book of Lives to reAd I need not woe thee:
*The choiceſt food is he*Re preſented to thee:
*All CREAM then ſu(c)*K: and much good may it do thee.

F. P.

To the Author of this moſt ſweet Book, Mr. Samuel Clark.

Anagram.

AL CLEAR MUSK.

Your Book's a fragrant Noſegay; and excels:
For it of AL CLEAR MUSK moſt ſweetly ſmells.

F. P.

Upon the pretious Labours of his Reverend Friend, M. Samuel Clark.

TO things of greateſt worth, to things moſt rare,
Would'ſt thou this Book of Hero's Lives compare?
Compare it as thou wilt; it will excell:
Thoul't hardly find for it a parallel.

A Garden wilt thou call it? So thou maiſt:
In every Life a thouſand Flowers thou haſt,
None ſuch (for ſweetneſs) Tellus boſome yields,
In any Grove or Mountain, Marſh or Fields,
Both Rhodope and Tempe's flowry plain;
Adonis Garden eke to this is vain
For in this ſacred Garden here doth grow
Such Flowers as Art and Nature ne're could ſhew.

If thou this Book wilt call a Fruitful tree,
Th' Heſperides the like could never ſee.
The root, ſtock, branch, bloſſom, and fruit: All theſe
Excell the beſt tree of the Pheaces.
Our Ages ſcarce a parallel can ſhew,
None ſuch can in Dame Natures Garden grow.
Now bleſt the man that gets this graceful Tree,
And of its bleſſed fruits partakes moſt free.

Or to a Spring wilt thou this Book compare?
Thou mai'ſt; for every line's a Stream ſo rare,
So clear, ſo pure, ſo pleaſant, and ſo ſweet:
Bleſt are the thirſty ſouls that do them greet.

T' Apothecaries Shop reſemble it,
That hath a ſalve for every ſore to fit:
Thou mai'ſt ſo aptly term it, if thou pleaſe,
Becauſe here's cure for thy poor Souls diſeaſe.
Then to this Pharmacopolium hye,
Where doth the bleſt Pharmacotheon lie.

Or wilt thou call this Book a Treaſury?
Why ſo thou mai'ſt; for here true Riches lie,
Which doth all Indian treaſures far excell:
No Gem, or Jewel can them parallel.
And though it be but for a ſmall price ſold,
The value of it yet can n'ere be told.

In praiſe of Book, or Author, who'l ſay more,
He guards a Title that was rich before.
And when that thou, and I our praiſe have done,
A Candle we have lighted to the Sun.
Nay, ſhould we ſay, and write even what we can,
It's but a drop unto the Ocean.
If in all this, thou wilt not credit me,
I wiſh thee (then) to read the Book, and ſee.

F. P.

To his much Honoured Father, Mr. S. C. on his Second Part of the Marrow of Eccl. Hiſt.

SIR, Could my fancy comprehend the worth
Of this your Book, or could I ſet it forth
As it deſerves, my Pen an Angels quill Muſt be; my Fancy equal with my Will,
It is a Jewel no where to be found
In either Eaſtern, or Weſt Indy ground.
If I may judge how good 'tis by how rare,
It may with Birds of Paradiſe compare:
If I may judge the rareneſs by how good,
'Tis mans delight, Saints pleaſure, Angels food.
Let Popiſh Mummiſts ſhew John Baptiſts Head:
Theſe are the Saints beſt Reliques when once dead.

F. C.

To his Honoured Uncle, Mr. Samuel Clark, upon His Book of LIVES.

RAre ſight! Your Synod calls a Parliament;
A Paradox in States: No, ſure y'ave ſent
Your Preaching Baptiſts firſt in good array,
For Gods annointeds to prepare the way.
Theſe Worthies th'others Doctrine o're again
By their Examples teach; and what more plain?
It's now no Solæciſm (ſure) to ſee
More-Suns, one Heaven, and yet no Anarchy.
Witneſs this Book, whoſe light my Star preſages,
A faithful Guide ſhall prove to after Ages.
The World's your Debtor (Sir) her Antique worth,
And Modern Beauty's to the life ſet forth.
Princes your Subjects, Peers your Clients are,
Your Pen their praiſes ſpeaks, they yours, 'tis rare:
This Book's another Weſtminſter, a Dort;
A true Compendium both of Church and Court.
In ſumm; a Maſter-piece of Polities,
Where Parliament with Synod well agrees.

N. C.

The LIVES of

CHRISTIAN EMPERORS, KINGS, AND SOVERAIGN PRINCES.

CONSTANTIN

The Life of Conſtantine the Great, who died Anno Chriſti 342.

Conſtantius the Father of Conſtantine, was for his paleneſs, ſir-named Chlorus, a Roman by birth, whoſe Father was a Senator: He was made Cæſar by Maximianus, who, together with Diocleſian, reſigning the Empire, choſe Conſtantius to ſucceed him, to whom the Government of the Weſt fell by lot: He was a man of ſingular clemency towards men, and piety towards God, not ſtaining his Reign with the blood of the Saints, as his Predeceſſors had done; He little regarded his private profit, but ſought the inriching of his ſubjects rather, ſaying, that is

His Pedegree.

A good Prince.

was

was more behooſeful for the Common-wealth, that the wealth of the Land ſhould be diſperſed in the hands of the Commons, than locked up in the Princes coffers. He was ſo averſe from all ſuperfluities, that upon Feſtival days, and when he entertained ſtrangers, he was fain to borrow plate of his friends to furniſh his Cupbords.

Humility.

This coming to Diocleſians ear, he ſent Ambaſſadours to him, reproaching him with poverty, becauſe his treaſury was empty: But Conſtantius intreating them to ſtay awhile, ſummoned a Parliament of his wealthieſt Subjects, to whom he declared his need of money, telling them that now was the time for them to expreſs their love to their Lord and King; whereupon without delay, they ſtrove to fill his Exchequer with Gold and Silver, which being done, Conſtantius ſhewed it to the Ambaſſadors, bidding them tell their Maſter, that this treaſure which he had now collected, was before in the hands of his Subjects, who as ſo many treaſurers kept it for his uſe: The Ambaſſadours wondred at it; but after their departure, the good Emperor reſtored it again to the former owners, with many expreſſions of his royal favour towards them.

Alſo to try his Courtiers, he commanded all to ſacrifice to Idols, pretending to diſcard all that refuſed ſo to do; but contrarywiſe thoſe that obeyed, he put from the Court, ſaying, that they which are diſloyal to God, will never be true and truſty to their Prince.

Hypocriſy detected.

His firſt wife was Helleua, by birth a Britain, the daughter of Celus, a Britiſh Prince; on whom he begat Conſtantine the Great in Britain.

His Education.

His Character.

Conſtantine in his youth was brought up, firſt with Diocleſian, whom he accompanied in his travels through Paleſtine: and afterwards was left an Hoſtage with Gallerius at Rome: He was of a comely ſtature, excelled others in ſtrength, was very affable, and of a Royal diſpoſition, his inward vertues being equal to his outward ſhape: for which he was envied by ſome, and feared and hated by the Tyrants, who thereupon ſought opportunity to work his overthrow; which Conſtantine obſerving (after God had twice or thrice diſcovered the conſpiracies that were plotted againſt him) he fled from Rome, having laid all the way with Poſt-horſes for the purpoſe, which he left houghed, for fear of purſuit, and ſo he came with all ſpeed to York, where his Father lay ſick, being lately returned from an expedition which he had made againſt the Caledonians, and Picts.

God protects him.

Conſtantius much rejoyced when he ſaw him, and ſitting upright in his bed in the preſence of his Councellors, he ſaid, It now ſufficeth, and death is not unwelcome, ſeeing I leave my unaccompliſhed actions to be performed by thee my Son, &c. Govern the Empire with upright Juſtice: protect the innocent from the Tyranny of oppreſſors, and wipe away all tears from the Chriſtians eyes; for therein above all other things, I have accounted my ſelf moſt happy: To thee therefore I leave my Diadem, and their defence, taking my faults with me to my grave, there to be buried in everlaſting oblivion: but leaving my vertues (if ever I had any) to revive, and live in thee. And ſo taking his laſt farewell of his Son, and Friends, he ended his days Anno Chriſti Three hundred and ſix, and of his age fifty ſix: having been Ceſar ſixteen years, and Auguſtus two years.

Good Counſel.

Immediately Conſtantine, by acclamation of the people, aſſiſtance of the Souldiers, and advice of Erocus, King of the Alemaines (who by the way had accompanied him hither in his flight from Rome) was proclaimed Emperor, and ſucceſſor to that part of the World which his Father held: which election was joyfully ratified by the Senate at Rome, and gladly accepted by all other Provinces, who accounted this Iſland of all other moſt happy, which firſt ſaw him Ceſar.

His firſt work was to proſecute the War begun by his Father againſt the Caledonians, and Picts, whom he ſubdued, together with the Inhabitants of the Weſtern Iſlands: But the unruly Pretorian Souldiers at Rome, hearing of the death of Conſtantius, Prochimed Maxentius, the Son of Maximianus Herculius, Emperor, who by his Necromancies, Adulteries, Perſecutions, and Murthers, grew ſo odious, and intolerable to all, that the Senate ſent to Conſtantine, craving

A wicked Tyrant.

ing

ing his aid to redreſs theſe things. In the mean time Maxentius was grown to that height of impiety, and impurity, that he violently took away mens Wives from them, and having violated their chaſtity, ſent them back to their Husbands again. Amongſt the reſt, a Chriſtian Matron, wife to a Senator, underſtanding that the Tyrants meſſengers were at the door to fetch her to him, ſhe deſired ſome time to dreſs her ſelf, and ſo going into her Chamber, ſhe ran a Swod into her ſide, and fell down dead, leaving her body to the Burial, rather than to ſatisfie the Tyrants luſt. He alſo maſſacred, and put his Subjects to death upon every light occaſion: Many of the Senators he ſlew for their wealth ſake: He gave himſelf over to Magical arts, ripping open the wombs of Women great with Child, ſearching the bowels of tender Infants, and other creatures; He by conjuration raiſed Devils, to conſult with them about the iſſue of his Wars. Chaſtity.

Maximianus his Father pretending a diſlike of theſe outragious courſes of his Son, repaired to his Son in Law Conſtantine, who had married his Daughter Fauſta, to complain to him of them: But whilſt he was with him, he ſecretly tampered with his Daughter to make away her Husband; but the good Lady, knowing that her bond to her Husband was greater than that to her Father, revealed it to Conſtantine, who thereupon cauſed him to be put to death: and then, commiſerating the Lamentable condition of the Romans, he raiſed an Army, and marched towards Rome againſt that Tyrant Maxentius, and drawing Licinius Governour of Sclavonia (who was made Ceſar) to his ſide, by giving him his Siſter Conſtantia to Wife, he haſted towards Rome with an Army of ninety thouſand Foot, and eight thouſand Horſe, levied out of Britain, France and Germany: But knowing well, that ſucceſs in War dependeth more on Divine aſſiſtance than humane ſtrength, he was muzing with himſelf unto what God he ſhould addreſs his Prayers for ſucceſs, (for as yet he was not fully ſettled in the Chriſtian Faith) and conſidering that his Predeceſſors, who had worſhipped many Gods, and put their truſt in them, had very often miſcarried, and that on the contrary, his Father, that had only worſhipped one, and the true God, had a happy Raign, and was ſtill preſerved from many dangers, he therefore reſolved to worſhip and adore that God only, which his Father had ſerved: wherefore he earneſtly prayed unto God, to reveal himſelf to him, and to proſper him in his journey; and whilſt he was thus praying, lifting up his eyes to Heaven about noon day, he beheld the ſign of a Croſs lively figured in the air, with this inſcription, In hoc vince, By this overcome; Himſelf and all his Army wondring at ſo ſtrange a prodigy, and being much troubled in his mind to know the meaning of it, the night following Chriſt appeared to him in his ſleep, commanding him to make the like Figure and Banner, and to carry it againſt his enemies: whereupon the next day, imparting the viſion to his Friends, he ſent for the beſt Gold Smiths, and Lapidaries, to make the like Croſs with Gold and precious ſtones, and withal, reſolved to worſhip that God only, who had thus appeared to him. He ſent for Godly Miniſters to inſtruct him in the Chriſtian Religion, who ſhewed him, that Chriſt was the only begotten Son of God, of his coming into the World, his holy life, death, &c. A good Wife. Prayer powerful.

Afterwards with great courage he went forwards, bearing before him, and his victorious Army, inſtead of the Imperial Eagle, the form of this viſion imbroydered upon his Standard: Maxentius, as much depending upon his ſorcerers, was no leſs confident of victory, for the furtherance whereof he framed a deceitful bridg over Tyber, to intrap Conſtantine: and alſo ſent out diverſe Armies to oppoſe him, before he ſhould come near the City; But Conſtantine truſting only in God, overthrew at the firſt incounter, his firſt, ſecond, and third Armies, and ſo marching thorow all Italy, he brought his victorious enſignes near the walls of Rome. Faith.

Hereupon Maxentius led forth his Army above a mile from Rome, and joyned a battel with Conſtantine, but being overcharged by the vantgard of Conſtantine,

The wicked caught in his own snare.

he, with the rest of his Army fled, and either through hast or forgetfulness, took over the deceitful bridg, which he had made to entrap Constantine withal, but no sooner were they entred upon it, but it fell in sunder, whereby they were all drowned.

Thanksgiving.

Constantine and his Army remaining victorious, sang praises unto God for the same. The Senators, Nobles, and all the people of Rome, being freed from servitude, received him with rejoycing hearts, and loud acclamations; Men, Humility.

Women, Children and Servants called him their Patron, and preserver. But his humble mind was not puffed up with their praises and applause, but ascribing all to God, he gave thanks to him as the giver of victory: He erected for a Trophy, his own Image, holding a Banner with a Cross quartered in it. All the Western Nations also having obtained liberty hereby, kept Festivals in honor of Constantine.

Justice.

He published his royal edicts, whereby he restored to his Subjects all those Lands which had been injuriously taken from them; calling some from banishment, and freeing others from Captivity, whom the Tyrants had imprisoned: He gat

Ministers honored, and loved.

Godly Ministers about him, and although they went in poor and mean habits; not considering their outside, but honoring the Image of God in them, he set them at his own Table, took them with him whithersoever he went, that he might enjoy the benefit of their Prayers. He repaired some Churches, built others, and relieved many poor men with bountiful donations and gifts: To those that begged in the streets, and at his Gate, he gave money, meat, and cloathing: and to such as by wrongs and oppressions were faln into want, he gave pensions.

Charity.

He was a Father to the Fatherless, an Husband to the Widdows: He married young Maides, that were Orphans, to honest wealthy men, and gave them

Unity endeavoured.

portions, and was very gracious to all petitioners and distressed Sutors: And perceiving that there was much discord, and various opinions in matters of Religion, he called a Synod of the Clergy, where also he was present himself: dismissing his Guard, as superfluous, whilst he was environed with Godly and Learned men: He declared to them the controverted points, whereof they were to consult, being very desirous to settle the Church in peace and unity; Those which were of a quiet and peaceable temper, he made much of, and much disliked those which were otherwise: And God, to requite his care of his house, made all the barbarous Nations to prostrate themselves at his feet: He made him a Conqueror, and terrible to his enemies, who of his own nature was of a most gentle and gracious disposition.

Gods goodness.

Yet some of the kindred of Maximianus conspired and wrought treason against him, but thorow the mercy of God (who in a wonderful manner revealed all their conspiracies to Constantine by visions and revelations) they were prevented. God also gave him much peace and safety, whereby he delighted himself in the love of his Subjects, but chiefly to see the Church of God in a flourishing Condition, and so continuing to the tenth year of his raign, he celebrated publick and solemn Festivals, wherein he offered up prayers and praises unto God.

But as his fame increased in the minds of most, so was it much maligned by

A Tyrant.

Licinius his fellow Emperor, who sought an occasion against Constantine, by raising a cruel persecution in the East against Christians, whom he never favoured in his heart, though for a time he had suffered them in the exercise of their religion for fear of Constantine: and besides, he plotted many treasons against Constantine, to whom God revealed them, whereby they were prevented: Then by faigned and crafty accusations he raised a persecution against the Godly Ministers, prohibiting them from meeting together in Synods to consult about matters concerning their own, and the Churches good, and thereby thought to break off and interrupt the harmonious agreement of the Churches, which could not be long preserved in peace without such meetings, wherein great and weighty matters of controverſie were fairly debated and determined. Then he baniſhed all Godly men out of his Court, others he degraded from their dignity, and employed them in Servile offices: He ſought to inrich himſelf by the ſpoiles of others: He threatned with death thoſe that profeſſed the name of Chriſt, He committed many adulteries, and held that no man could live chaſtly, meaſuring others diſpoſitions by his own vicious inclination.

The benefit of Synods.

and

Then made he a Law, that Men and Women ſhould not be preſent together at Divine Service: That Biſhops ſhould not expound the Scripture to Women, but that Women ſhould chuſe Women to be their inſtructers and Preachers: Then he commanded the congregations to meet together without the City Gates in the open Fields: Such Souldiers as would not Sacrifice to Devils he put out of their places and offices: He forbad any to relieve thoſe that lay in Priſon and were almoſt famiſhed, yea he made a Law that ſuch as did relieve them, ſhould be impriſoned themſelves. Tyranny.

His avarice was inſatiable, taxing the Lands of his Subjects, thereby filling his treaſury with Silver and Gold, and yet complaining of his poverty. He unjuſtly baniſhed many and confiſcated their goods: He made his Servants to abuſe the wives of Noble men, and then to accuſe them Himſelf defloured Virgins, and fell to open perſecution of the Church, eſpecially of the Miniſters, the chiefeſt of whom he cauſed ſecretly to be Murthered. Some Churches he wholly demoliſhed, and cauſed others to be ſhut up, that the congregations might not meet in them: He invented new kinds of tortures for the Chriſtians; ſome he cauſed to be cut into ſmall pieces, and ſo to be thrown into the Sea to feed Fiſhes. Avarice. Perſecution.

But the afflictions of the Church coming to the ears of Conſtantine, and he conſidering that he could not otherwiſe prevent them but by War, this Champion of Gods Church preſently raiſed Military Forces, ſo that many Troops of Horſe and Foot reſorted to him to follow his Chriſtian Standard againſt the Tyrant; and by way of preparation, he betook himſelf to Prayer, and choſe ſome Godly Miniſters to attend him; eſteeming them as his Souls guard. On the contrary, the Tyrant hearing that Conſtantine had undertook (by Gods aſſiſtance) to free the Chriſtians from his Tyranny, and had got Religious men about him, he derided him, and ſent for the Egyptian Conjurers and Magicians, and their Prieſts to ſacrifice to his falſe Gods, and to enquire what ſhould be the ſucceſs of his War, who all with one conſent promiſed, that he ſhould proſper and be victorious; and thus truſting to their promiſes, he marched forward, and prepared to joyn battel. Prayer.

The two Armies met in Hungary, and a little before the Battel, Licinius calling his friends and favorites into a grove where were many Idols, having lighted up waxen Tapers, and made his uſual ſacrifices to them, he ſaid, My friends, theſe are our country Gods, which we from our Predeceſſors do religiouſly worſhip: our enemy, violating the ancient cuſtoms, and blinded with error, worſhips a ſtrange God, which wickedly he conceiveth to be the true God: under whoſe Colours he intends to fight, and beareth his Standard before his Army. In confidence of whoſe aſſiſtance he warreth againſt us and our Gods, whom he hath traiterouſly forſaken, and relinquiſhed the worſhip of them. Now it will appear whether of us is in an error: For if we have the victory, we ſhall know that our Gods preſerve and aſſiſt us: if Conſtantines ſtrange God ſhall give him the victory over us, who are many more than they, we ſhall thereby know which God ought to be reverenced, &c. And having ended his Oration, he commanded his Souldiers ſtraight to give battail to the enemy.

About this very time, in ſome of thoſe Cities which were Subject to Licinius, the Citizens thought that they ſaw Troops and bands of men, of Conſtantines Army, marching at noon-day thorow the City, as if they had gotten the victory. Conſtantine having made his Prayers to God, joyned Battel with Licinius, and Prodigies. Prayer powerful.

and gave him a great overthrow: many of his enemies cast away their weapons, and falling down at his feet, craved mercy, which he willingly granted them.

Licinius forsaken of his forces, and finding by experience, that the confidence which he reposed in his false Gods was fruitless, fled away; and Constantine forbad his Souldiers to pursue him, hoping that the sense of his present calamity would make him leave off his wicked courses, and convert him to a milder temper: But he, escaping into Asia the less, consults again with Conjurers, is confident of success promised by them, raiseth another Army, which Constantine being informed of, devoted himself for a time to prayer, and Prayer. having erected a Tabernacle distant from his Tents, he gave himself to Godly meditation and Prayer, some other faithful and Godly men accompanying him him in these his religious exercises: and so marching against his enemies, they came to a second Battel, where he slew many, got the Victory, and carried away many Trophies: yet he commanded his Souldiers to shew mercy to the Captives, and to express humanity towards them; yea himself payed their ransome, whereby they were delivered.

Clemency. Licinius being taken Prisoner, by the mediation of his Wife Constantia, had his life spared, and was confined to the City of Nicomedia: but he, after a while practising new treasons, was at last, by the command of Constantine, put to death: whereupon the peace of Gods Saints manifestly appeared, and the Gospel of Christ had a free progress.

Peace of the Church. For no sooner was the blasting tempest of persecution blown over, but the faithful Christians, who before had hidden themselves in Woods, and deserts, and secret Caves, came forth, reedified the Churches, celebrated Festival days to God with pure hearts, and faith unfeigned: And now the whole Roman Religion flourisheth. Empire enjoying peace, Religion spread abroad her bright beams to illuminate those which sate in darkness, and the shadow of death: former miseries were forgotten, and God was praised as the author of this happiness.

Then were Constantines Proclamations sent abroad to call home those that were banished out of their Countries: Those which had been condemned to slavery, were freed; their goods which had been confiscated, were restored:
A good Prince. such as for their constancy in Religion had been discarded out of their Military offices, were put into their places again, and such as were condemned to the servility of feminine imployments, he enfranchised from such a base subjection. He made Laws to redress the grievances of his Subjects: enacted that the goods of those which had suffered Martyrdom, should be restored to their kindred, or if they had none, to the Church: By his edicts sent abroad into all Nations Humility. in Greek and Latine, he acknowledged that God was the owner, and donour of all things, and that by his own strength he had not obtained the Victory, but by Gods assistance, to whom he ascribed the Glory.

Bounty to the Church. He also enacted that the Church Lands and goods that had been injuriously taken away, though now belonging to his own Crown, should be restored: And such as had purchased Church Lands, or goods, though they had grievously offended, yet out of his accustomed clemency he freely forgave them, Restitution. provided that they made present restitution of the same: Then he proceeded to confer great dignities on the Christians, making them Governours of Provinces, and prohibited the Heathens to sacrifice to Idols, or to erect the Images of their Gods. He commanded that Churches should be built, and enlarged, and that the charge thereof should be defrayed out of his own Treasury.

Having thus made himself famous by his Pious actions, a report was brought to him of a great faction which was growing up in the Church, which begin-Contention in the Church. ning in the Church of Alexandria, spread it self through Egypt, Libya, and Thebes, and many other Provinces, and Cities, the Bishops writing, and inveighing one against another: This fire was first kindled by Arrius, which grieved

grieved Conſtantine as much as if himſelf had faln into ſome great calamity; whereupon preſently he choſe one about him, who had been a zealous and faithful Confeſſor of the truth in times of perſecution, whom he ſent to Alexandria to draw them to peace and concord, writing his Letters to the Authors of ſedition to this purpoſe, that, Whereas all his deſignes and endeavours had tended to bring all Nations to agree in one opinion in matters of Religion, the rather that the Heathen by ſuch an example might the ſooner be converted: and whereas ſome raſh, and ſeditious Spirits, had by their errors, made a ſchiſme in the Church of Africk, he had ſent ſober and religious Miniſters to reconcile their factious Spirits, and to ſettle peace in the Church: but hearing that new factious ſeditions were ſprung up amongſt them, he was much grieved at it, and now wrote to them, profering himſelf to arbitrate, and moderate their mutual diſſentions, not doubting, through the help of God, and aſſiſtance of Godly and Learned men, but to reconcile their differences, and to ſettle peace amongſt them again: And ſaith he, Whereas I was at Nicomedia, purpoſing a journey into the Eaſt, the receipt of your Letters diverted my intentions, being unwilling to behold that, which I was grieved to hear of, viz. your contentions; therefore by your concord, and agreement open me a paſſage into the Eaſt, whence your diſſentions have ſhut me out, and let me ſee a joyful agreement amongſt you, that all of us being reconciled together may praiſe and glorifie God. The danger of Hereſie.

The Meſſenger did not only deliver the letter, but dealt very earneſtly with them for the ſetling of peace, yet he could not bring it to paſs, the faction being grown ſo ſtrong, that it was ſpread all over the Eaſtern Provinces; and the Devil, envying the happineſs of the Church, cauſed this diſcord and contention ſtill to continue: The firſt original of it was this.

Arrius a Presbyter in the City of Alexandria, a man which outwardly made a great ſhew of holineſs, denied the eternity of the Son of God with the Father, alledging that he was not of the ſame ſubſtance with him: At the ſame time Alexander, a man of great holineſs and learning, was Biſhop in that City, who being of a gentle and mild diſpoſition, endeavoured to have cured Arrius of that Hereſie, praying and admoniſhing him to leave his errors: But he being of a proud and inſolent nature, perſiſted therein, and drew many followers after him; Hereupon Alexander proceeded to excommunicate him, which prevailing nothing, Alexander acquainted the Emperour with it, ſaying, that the miſchief was grown ſo great that it required a great and ſpeedy remedy: Conſtantine underſtanding that theſe diviſions increaſed in Egypt, and amongſt the Thebans, in ſo much as the people grew tumultuous, killing and murthering one another, and commiting many other outrages: And an other diviſion ſprang up alſo at the ſame time concerning the Celebration of Eaſter. He thereupon called a general Council in the City of Nicea, in the Province of Bithinia, in Aſia; and having ſent abroad his Writs into every Province, the Biſhops and Miniſters repaired cheerfully to that place; ſome hoping that a univerſal peace would be eſtabliſhed, others deſiring to ſee this Godly Emperor. Arrian Hereſie. General Council.

Here were congregated out of Aſia, Africa, and Europe, three hundred and eighteen Biſhops, beſides Presbyters, and Deacons, whereof ſome were famous for their Doctrine, ſome for their gravity and conſtancy, ſome for their experience, and age, ſome for their acuteneſs and ingenuity, and all had their Diet allowed them by the Emperor, who himſelf in perſon was preſent amongſt them.

Upon the day appointed to begin the Council, they all aſſembled in the Hall of the Emperors Palace, where Seats being ſet on both ſides, they took their places according to their degrees and dignity: Then came the Emperor with an humble countenance, and modeſt aſpect, whereupon they all roſe up; At the upper end of the Hall he ſtood a while, and would not ſit down, till he had given a ſign to the Biſhops to ſit down alſo: Then one of the chiefeſt of them made a briefe ſpeech to the Emperor, and recited an hymne of thankſgiving unto God: After which the Emperor ſpake to this purpoſe. It was my deſire (dear Friends) to convocate you in a general Council, and ſeeing you now aſſembled, I give God thanks for it; Let not therefore any private envy deprive us of that good which we expect by this meeting: and God having made us victorious over the Tyrants, let not the Devils tares of diſſention ſpring up to the diſturbance of the peace of the Church: for theſe are of worſe conſequence than War; for that kills the body, the other deſtroyes the Soul: I rejoyce to ſee you here together, but ſhall much more rejoyce to ſee unity in affection, and concord amongſt you, which, being men devoted to Gods ſervice, you ought to deſire, and to encourage others by your examples to embrace peace, and concord: I intreat you therefore, beloved Miniſters of God and Servants of Chriſt, take away the cauſes of diſſention, cut off this Hydra's head of Hereſie, and eſtabliſh peace, ſo ſhall you pleaſe God, and me your fellow Servant in the Lord.

But amongſt ſo many Biſhops, though many were good, and Holy men, yet others there were full of envy and of contentious diſpoſitions, whereupon they accuſed one another to the Emperor; exhibiting their complaints to him in writing: But he calling them before him, burnt their informations, that none ſhould ſee them, and ſaid unto them; Fathers, and Miniſters, God hath called you to the Miniſtry, and thereby hath given you power, in an orderly way to judge me, but you cannot be judged by me, wherefore I refer your controverſies to the judgment of God and the Council; pray you therefore ſetting a part all malice and diſcord, for Gods ſake, apply your ſelves to peace, and to the forgetting of all theſe private injuries. In the Council alſo he perſwaded ſome, pacified others, praiſed others, and endeavoured to bring them all to concord, and agreement, and ſo at length, by Gods bleſſing, he brought moſt of them to unity in opinion in all points of controverſie, that they did not only agree in matters of faith, but alſo of one certain time for the celebration of Eaſter: To which decrees they all ſet their hands, and they were ingroſſed as the determinate Acts of the Council.

Arrius and his wicked ſect were condemned by all the Biſhops, except ſeventeen, which held with him, whereof eleven afterwards recanted, and Arrius with the other ſix were excommunicate by the Council, and baniſhed by the Emperor: and ſo was that holy and Chriſtian Council diſſolved: After which the good Emperor, affirming that he had obtained a ſecond victory againſt the enemy of the Church, having now raigned twenty years, made a great feaſt to the honor, and glory of God, and invited the Biſhops thereunto, and ſome of them he placed at his own Table, the reſt at Tables on either hand him.

Hereticks baniſhed.

Miniſters loved and honoured.

The feaſt being ended, he gave gifts, and preſents to all the Biſhops, and by his letters divulged, and confirmed the Councils Acts, and by his Decrees enjoyned ſubmiſſion to the ſame.

When he diſmiſſed the Biſhops, he made a ſpeech to them, admoniſhing them to preſerve peace, to avoid contention, not to envy one another for gifts, or wiſdom, but to eſteem their abilities as a common good.

His next care was to demoliſh, and pull down Idolatrous Temples and Images: as the Grove and Temple of Venus in Phœnicia, which was a School of wickedneſs, to thoſe who were addicted to luſt, where men and women frequently committed adulteries, fornications, &c. Conſtantine thinking it unfit that the Sun ſhould behold ſuch villany, ſent a Band of Souldiers to ſuppreſs it: As alſo the Temple of Æſculapius, and the Image of Venus at Heliopolis, and many ſuch like in other places.

Zeal.

But the Devil envying the proſperity of the Church, raiſed a new Sedition in Antioch, where the whole City was divided into two factions about the choice of

of a Biſhop, and were ſo mad againſt each other, that had not Conſtantine interpoſed, they had deſtroyed one another: To them therefore he ſent Ambaſſadors to pacifie their Fury, adviſing them, by Letters, to preſerve Peace, and approve themſelves dutiful Subjects, perſwading them to refer their cauſe to him, that they ſhould not ſeek to have the Biſhop of an other Church, but ſhould chooſe him for their Biſhop, whom God of his providence ſhould appoint unto them. Contention.

The Biſhop, whom they deſired, was Euſebius, Biſhop of Cæſarea, but the Emperour wrote one Letter to them, to diſſwade them from that choice, and another to Euſebius to commend him for refuſing of it: To end this controverſie, a Synod was called, and Conſtantine wrote to them to do all things according to the preſcript of Gods word, commending ſome to them, whom he judged fit for the place. A Synod.

He endeavoured to extirpate and root out all Hereſies, writing to the Valentinians, Marcioniſts, Cataphrigians, &c. that their Doctrine was falſe, and ſeditious: That they were Enemies to the truth, and eternal life: and therefore that he would not ſuffer that Contagion to ſpread further, ſeeing the whole and ſound were daily infected with their peſtilent Errours, but would ſeverely puniſh the Offenders and Delinquents: Then he enacted that none of them ſhould meet together in Conventicles: That the Churches, where they uſed to meet, ſhould be demoliſhed and confiſcated to the Catholick Church, and other places of their Meeting, converted to the uſe of the Common-wealth, commanding that from that day, they ſhould have no places of Meeting, neither publick nor private: Hereby many being brought to a ſight of their Errours, publickly manifeſted their Repentance, and ſo were again received into the Church. Hereſies not endured.

He was eminent for Juſtice, neither denying nor delaying any juſt and reaſonable Petitioners. He remitted to the Owners of Land the fourth of ſuch Rents as were formerly paid him: He mitigated the heavy Tributes, and being unwilling that ſuch as were caſt in Suits of Law, ſhould be utterly undone, he freely beſtowed on them both Lands and Money. He thought it unfit, that any one, admitted into the preſence of his Imperial Majeſty, ſhould go heavily out of his preſence. And as his care was to advance Gods Glory, God alſo highly advanced him, by making him victorious over the Scythians, and Sauromatians. Juſtice. Mercy. Gods goodneſs.

Ambaſſadors came to him from all Nations, preſenting him with precious Gifts, and offering him from their Kings, if he pleaſed, to ſerve him in all his Wars: He returned gifts to the Ambaſſadors, and dignified the deſerving amongſt them with Roman Honours, ſo that ſome of them embraced Romane civilitie, and never returned into their own countries again: The King of Perſia ſent Ambaſſadours, with rich preſents to him, deſiring to renew their League: And he returned them with far richer gifts; and underſtanding, that many Chriſtians ſuffered perſecution in Perſia, he wrote effectually to the King in their behalf, deſiring him to receive them into his protection; For (ſaith he) By dealing graciouſly with them, you ſhall do me and your ſelf a great benefit.

He knowing how effectual the prayer of Faith was, did not only frequently proſtrate himſelf before God in private, but commanded and deſired the publick prayers of the Church alſo in his behalf. He made his Court a Church, where Prayers mere made, and the Scriptures were read, and expounded daily. He made Laws for the ſtrict obſervation of the Lords day, commanding, that through all the Romane Empire, all Work and Labour ſhould be forborn. He preſcribed a form of Prayer to the Legions of his Souldiers to be uſed both on the Sabbaths, and other dayes: He prohibited the Adoration of Images; as alſo the ſingle combats of Sword-players, who ſlew one Prayer. Laws for Sabbath.

another to make the people paſtime: And whereas the Ægyptians worſhipped the River Nilus with many ſuperſtitious Ceremonies, thinking that otherwiſe the River would not over-flow, he forbad it upon pain of Death; and that wicked cuſtom being put down, the River over-flowed the country, and made it more fruitful than formerly.

Superſtition reformed.

And, whereas certain unjuſt Laws were made againſt thoſe that were childleſs, he aboliſhed them, and Enacted, that their Inheritances ſhould deſcend to thoſe that were next of Kin to them. He ordained that the determination of Synods, ſhould be a binding Rule for deciding of Eccleſiaſtical controverſies. He endowed, and much enriched the Churches of God: Meeting with a covetous man, he ſaid, O good man, when will thy Thirſt of Covetouſneſs be ſatisfied; and having drawn forth with his Spear the meaſure of a Mans ſtature upon the ground, he ſaid, If thou hadſt at home all the Wealth and Treaſure of the world, yet muſt thou leave it, and poſſeſs no more than this Figure on the Earth, if thou obtaineſt that.

Synods Acts binding.

Folly of Covetouſneſs.

But whilſt he took pleaſure in Meekneſs, and Mercy, ſparing Offenders, he made his Government to be derided, and contemned by ſome wicked perſons. He ſent to Euſebius to get him fifty Bibles, fairly written out on Parchment for the City of Conſtantinople, appointing the Governour of the Province to provide him with all things neceſſary for the charge thereof: Gaza, formerly a Mart-town in Paleſtine, receiving the Faith, he much rejoyced at it, and made it a City, which he named Conſtantia: In many other Cities he cauſed the Idols to be taken away, and Churches to be erected.

Piety.

But whilſt he was thus buſie for the Churches good, the Devil ſtirred up new Factions, and Diviſions in Egypt; whereupon he aſſembled a Synod, commanding them ſpeedily to determine, and end thoſe controverſies: He ſent his Delegate to it with Authority, that if any contemned his command in not coming to it, he ſhould baniſh him. On a time a flattering Presbyter telling him, that he was a bleſſed man, and worthy to be Emperour over the whole world, and to reign with the Son of God in Eternal Glory; he manifeſted his Diſlike, and commanded him that he ſhould not dare hereafter to uſe any ſuch ſpeeches; but rather pray earneſtly for him, that he might live and die Gods faithful Servant.

Zeal.

A Synod.

Flattery.

Humility.

About this time came Ambaſſadours to him from the Eaſt Indies, bringing him all kind of precious ſtones, and pearles, and ſtrange living Creatures, declaring that their Princes did acknowledg him to be the King and Emperour of the world.

Religion Rewarded.

He had three Sons, Conſtantine, Conſtantius, and Conſtance: Theſe he made Cæſars whilſt he lived, and inſtructed them in thoſe Arts which do adorn Imperial Majeſty: He appointed them a Council for the Diſpatch of publick Affairs: He adviſed them to prefer the Knowledge and Worſhip of God before Wealth, and Kingdoms: He placed Religious Officers about them, and amongſt theſe three Sons he divided his Empire when he dyed.

Children inſtructed.

Hearing that the Eaſtern Barbarians roſe againſt him in his old Age; he raiſed an Army, and took ſome Biſhops along with him to pray for Succeſs, and ſo marched againſt them, but they hearing of it, ſent Ambaſſadors to crave Pardon, and promiſed Obedience; and he, being always deſirous of Peace, entertained them courteouſly, and granted their requeſts.

Falling into ſome Diſtemper, he reſolved to go to the warm Baths, but fell ſick at Hellenopolis, and finding his End to approach, he humbly confeſſed his ſins to God: And (as Euſebius ſaith) was there Baptized, but moſt probably he was long before Baptized at Rome; and ſo quietly reſigned up his Spirit unto God, in the three and thirtieth Year of his Reign; of his Age, ſixty ſix, Anno Chriſti 342.

Till his laſt ſickneſs his body continued ſtrong and luſty, not troubled with any

any Diſeaſe, Pain, or Infirmity: He was of a comely preſence and aſpect, and was ſtout, and hardy to endure Exerciſe, Riding, Travel, and War. Conſtantines character.

He made, and penned Holy Prayers to his Dying day: He removed the Imperial Seat from Rome to Byzantium in Thracia, which he adorned with ſtately Edifices, and priviledges above other Cities: He inriched, and adorned it with the ſpoiles of Rome, as Statues, Pillars, Coloſſes, and all other things that were ſingular, and excellent, either of Stone or Mettal; the like he did for other Cities alſo: He built in it a ſtately Palace, a moſt magnificent Church, wherein he erected his own Tomb: A famous Library, wherein he put an hundred and twenty thouſand of the chiefeſt written Books, and in the middeſt thereof were the Gutts of a Dragon of one hundred and twenty Foot long, whereupon was admirably written in Letters of Gold, Homers Iliads: His Death was much bewailed amongſt all ſort of perſons: His Guard, and Officers tore their Garments, caſt themſelves on the ground, beat their heads againſt the Pavement, crying out that they had loſt a gracious Lord, &c. The Centurions and Captains bewailed the loſs of their General: The Souldiers of their Shepherd: The people ran about the City with weeping and Lamentation: When the Senate, and Citizens of Rome heard of it, they ſhut up their Baths, prohibited all publick Plaies, and Recreations, lamenting and mourning exceſſively. Conſtantinople.

He uſed to ſhew much Reverence, and Attention to the Word of God preached, ſo that many times he would ſtand up all the Sermon while, and when ſome of his Courtiers told him, that it would tend to his Diſparagement: He anſwered, That it was in the Service of the great God, who is no Reſpecter of Perſons: He uſed to kiſs the hollow of old Paphnutius his Eye, which he had loſt for the cauſe of Chriſt in the former Perſecutions. The days of this Godly Emperours Reign, were the breathing Days of the perſecuted Church: And in his time the Goſpel was propagated into Eaſt India by Frumentius, and Edeſius. As alſo into Iberia, in the uttermoſt part of the Euxine Sea, by the means of a Captive Chriſtian Woman, by whoſe Prayers a Child that was mortally ſick recovered health: And the Lady of Iberia her ſelf was delivered from a mortal Diſeaſe: Whereupon the King her Husband ſent Ambaſſadours to Conſtantine, intreating him to ſend him ſome Preachers into Iberia, to inſtruct them in the True Faith of Chriſt: which Conſtantine performed with a glad Heart. Reverence to the word of God. Converſions.

He uſed to ſay, that an Emperour ſhould refuſe no Labour for the benefit of the Common-Wealth: As alſo, That an Empire is given by the determinate purpoſe of God; that he to whom it is given, ſhould ſo imploy his Diligence, that he may be thought worthy of the ſame by him that gave it. He made and publiſhed a Decree, that all Miniſters, and ſuch whoſe Vocation was to ſerve in the Church, ſhould be free, and exempted from all publick Duties, Taxes, and Burthens whatſoever, that being ſo priviledged, they might with more cheerfulneſs, attend upon Divine Adminiſtrations: Yea ſo careful was he to nouriſh and cheriſh Learning and Learned Men, that he enacted a Law which ran in this Form: Medicos, Grammaticos, & alios Profeſſores literarum, & Doctores legum cum vxoribus, & liberis, &c. We will and Decree, that Phyſicians, Grammarians, and other Profeſſors of the Liberal Arts, and Doctors of the Law, with their Wives and Children, ſhall be free together with their Lands and Poſſeſſions, from all civil Charges and Offices, &c. As alſo that their Stipends, and Salaries ſhall be well and truly paid them, whereby they might the more freely attend upon their Offices, &c. His ſayings. Note.

So ſtudious he was of Peace, that when any Biſhops or Miniſters brought Complaints one againſt another, he would take their Bills of Complaint, and burn them before their Faces; and withal ſo tender he was of their Honour, that he uſed to ſay, That if he ſaw a Biſhop committing Wickedneſs, he would ra- rather caſt the Skirt of his Gown over him to cover it, than by ſpeaking of it, to diſhonour his Holy Calling.

Collected out of Euſebius, the Book of Martyrs, Speeds Chronicle, and Sympſons Eccleſ. Hiſt.

JOVIANVS

The Life of Jovianus the Emperour, who Dyed, Anno Chriſti 363.

Vlian the Apoſtate having led the Romane Army into Perſia, in the Winter time, in a Battle againſt the Perſians, was wounded with an Arrow from an unknown hand, with which Wound, loſing his ſenſes, he fell upon his Horſe Neck, and by his Souldiers was carried into his Tent, where (after means uſed) coming to himſelf again, and recovering ſtrength, he called for his Horſe, and Arms, that he might return again into the Battail: But afterwards feeling his Force to fail, in extream pride, he took his Bloud in his hands, and holding it up to Heaven, he uſed theſe words againſt our Saviour Chriſt, It ſufficeth that thou Chriſt the Galilean haſt overcome me; for ſo he was accuſtomed to call Chriſt in ſcorn.

Viciſti Galilæe, viciſti.

By his Death there was ſo great a confuſion in the Camp, that they were in Danger to be overthrown by the Perſians, and beſides, they were in much Diſtreſs for want of Victuals; the Perſians alſo underſtanding theſe things, never ceaſed to moleſt them with ſudden Aſſaults and Alarms: Whereupon the chief Commanders of the Army aſſembled together, to chuſe an Emperour to govern them, and after much Contention, and Diverſity of Opinions, they all conſented to chuſe Jovianus, Emperour: He was the Son of Varronianus, a Noble Hungarian, who leaving the Wars to avoid Tumults, and Troubles, retired himſelf to his poſſeſſions in Hungary, there to live in reſt and quiet; But Jovianus his Son went to the Emperour Conſtantius his Court, followed the Wars, was valiant, and of a goodly Perſonage, and therefore much eſteemed by by Julian, who made him the chief Commander of his ordinary Troops.

His Parentage.

Jovianus was of an excellent Wit, ſound Judgment, given to ſtudy, well Learned, and withal a Faithful Chriſtian, inſomuch, as when Julian commanded, that no Chriſtian ſhould be a Captain, neither ſhould have any Charge, or Office in the Wars, Jovianus pleaſantly ſaid, that he made greater Account of the Faith, whereof he made profeſſion, than of any Dignity, or Honour that he enjoyed, and ſo he gave up his charge, chooſing rather to throw away his Military Belt, the Enſign of his Honour, than to do Sacrifice, or ſatisfie the wicked Edict of the Emperour. Yet afterwards Julian (when the neceſſity of the Perſian Wars conſtrained him) reaſſumed him into the number of his Captains. Conſtancy.

This Jovianus being choſen Emperour, conſidering that Julian had drawn the Men of War of his Army to commit Idolatry, and to ſacrifice to Devils, he in a publick Oration which he made to them, ſaid, That although he might, yet he would not, being a Chriſtian, be an Emperour over Infidels; and ſo he reſiſted, and abſolutely refuſed the Empire. But all the Army was ſo well pleaſed with the Election, that they cryed out aloud, ſaying, We are all Chriſtians, and for his ſake, they that were not ſo, reſolved to become Chriſtians, upon condition that he would accept the Empire, which he then conſented to: They all with incredible joy, and gladneſs ſware Obedience unto him, and gave him the Imperial Enſigns: Whereupon he preſently ordered, and reinforced the Army. A Chriſtian reſolution. He is choſen Emperor.

But Sapor, King of Perſia, gathering together the greateſt Forces that he could make, did ſo moleſt, and inviron them, that they were glad to come to an Agreement with him, though ſomewhat to the Diſhonour of the Romans; but it was the beſt end that he could make in thoſe ſtraits, whereinto Julian by his Pride, had brought the Army. Then he marched into Soria; the Chriſtians every where wonderfully rejoycing at his Election, and his firſt work was, by Proclamation to call Home all thoſe Biſhops which were exiled for oppoſing the Arrian Hereſie, or on any other unlawful occaſion, whom he reſtored to their former places, and principally the great Athanaſius. He alſo revoked, and made void all the Prohibitions, and Decrees made by Julian againſt the Chriſtians, and ordained that they ſhould be admitted to Offices, Dignities, Magiſtracy, and Study, as in the dayes of Conſtantine the great: He cauſed to be paid to the Churches thoſe Rents of Corn, and other things that Conſtantine had given them, and which, by the command of Julian, had been ſequeſtered. Then he cauſed the Idol-groves, and Temples to be ſhut up, and the Pagans wandred about, hiding themſelves here and there: The Bloody and Deteſtable Sacrifices uſed in Julian's time, he wholly took away. He makes Peace. Piety. Zeal.

The Biſhops of all Sects, and Opinions poſted unto him, hoping every one of them to find him according to their own minds, but he, adhering to the Nicene Creed, made them flat anſwer what his Judgment, and Faith was, and whom he would countenance: Then the Macedonians exhibited to him a Supplication, requeſting that they which held a Diſſimilitude, and unlikeneſs between the Father, and the Son ſhould be baniſhed the Church, and themſelves ſubſtituted in their rooms; but he ſent them away with theſe words: I tell you truly, I cannot away with Contention, but ſuch as embrace unity and Concord, I both honour and embrace them. Integrity. Peaceable.

When the Emperour had thus appeaſed the Contentions of Seditious Perſons, he went from Antioch to Tarſus, where he buried the Corps of his Predeceſſor: And immediately after he was proclaimed Conſul, and ſo from thence he went to Conſtantinople.

He laid a Godly Foundation to his Empire by eſtabliſhing the Chriſtian Faith, giving in all things, good ſigns of a juſt and vertuous Prince, every A good Prince.

man conceiving much Hope of him: But this and all his Noble Reſolutions, and other Chriſtian-like purpoſes were interrupted by his immature Death, the Iniquity of the people not deſerving ſo good a Prince, which happened thus.

He coming to a place called Dudaſtana in the Confines of Bithynia, the weather being very cold, they ſet in his Chamber where he lay, a great Pan with kindled Char-coals, which coals were wet, and as his Attendants were gone to take their reſt, his Chamber Door being lockt, and he aſleep, the Vapour of the fire waxing groſs, and thick, and filling the Chamber with Smoak, which had no place to evaporate, ſtopped the Emperours Breath, ſo that in the Morning he was found Dead in his Bed; In the eighth Moneth of his Reign, and of his Age about forty, Anno Chriſti 363.

His untimely Death.

His loſs was much bewailed of all good Men. He uſed to wiſh that He might govern wiſe men, and that wiſe men might govern him. He reſtored the Chriſtian Faith in every part of his Empire; ſtreightly commanding all the Idol Temples to be ſhut up, which his Predeceſſor Julian had opened, and upon great Penalties forbad all manner of Gentilitious Sacrifices: He called Home from Baniſhment that worthy Captain Valentinian, whom Julian had baniſhed: He reſolved to follow the Advice and Counſel of Athanaſius in matters of Faith, and Church-Government.

Jovianus his Character.

For his Perſonage, he was of a goodly preſence, both tall and big; his Geſture grave, his Eyes gray, and countenance pleaſant: An affectionate Lover, and Profeſſour he was of the Chriſtian Religion: Of indifferent Learning himſelf, but a moſt Honourable Imbracer thereof in others: Very preciſe and conſiderate in chooſing of Judges and Magiſtrates, and very facile and familiar to his Servitours about him.

Collected out of Socrates Scholaſticus, Speeds Chronicle, the Imperial Hiſtory, and the Book of Martyrs.

The THEODOSIVS. I.

The Life of Theodoſius Senior, who Dyed Anno Chriſti 397.

Gratian Governing the Empire with Valentinian the younger, finding that the Romane Empire daily decreaſed, and that the Barbarians waxed ſtrong, and increaſed daily, he found that the Common-wealth ſtood in great Need of a Valiant, and worthy Man to govern it: And knew that there lived at that time in Spain, one Theodoſius, the Son of a Noble Captain, whoſe Name was Theodoſius alſo, whom Valens had cauſed to be ſlain, becauſe his Name began with Th. and the Devil had revealed to him, that after him ſhould Reign one whoſe Name began with thoſe Letters: This Theodoſius, perceiving that he alſo was in great Danger upon the ſame reaſon, retired himſelf into his own Country, being as well for the Nobility of his Anceſtors, as for his own Valour and Exploits in Armies, the moſt Renowned, and of greateſt Account of any Man in his time. Hereupon Gratian ſent for him, made him Captain General of all the Empire, and ſhortly after, his Fellow Emperour.

Theodoſius having received the Emperours Letters, and accepting of the Charge, with the greateſt ſpeed that could be, he went into thoſe Countries where the Goths were, who knowing of his coming, gathered themſelves together to fight with him: Theodoſius being very Deſirous thereof, levied a ſufficient Army, and having tryed his Souldiers in ſome Skirmiſhes, he gave them Battail, which was one of the cruelleſt and moſt bloody that ever was fought. But Holy Theodoſius carried himſelf ſo Diſcreetly, and Valiantly in Directing, Incouraging, and Fighting, that, through Gods Mercy, he obtained the Victory, and made an Incredible ſlaughter of the Enemies; and ceaſed not, till he had wholly driven them out of the Province: And then marching with his Army in good order to Gratian, Gratian made him Emperour of Conſtantinople and the Eaſt.

He is choſen Empe-rour.

A great Battail.

Zeal.

Preſently he went thitherward, and coming to Theſſalonica, he fell ſick of a dangerous Diſeaſe, and much deſiring to be Baptized, he ſent for the Old

Bishop of that place: And when he was come, he demanded of the Bishop of what Faith he was; the Bishop answered, that the Opinion of Arrius prevailed not in those parts, and that the new-found Invention of his pestilent brain, had not crept in among them, but that all Christians in those Coasts retained the Authentick, and Ancient Faith delivered by the Apostles, and confirmed by the Council of Nice: And thereupon the Emperour was willingly Baptized of him.

Not long after he recovered his Health, and so went towards Constantinople. A little before whose coming, Gregory Nazianzen was translated, by the consent of all the Catholick Bishops, to govern the Sea at Constantinople: But perceiving that some murmured, and objected, that he was a Stranger and Forreiner, though he was glad of the Emperours coming, yet he refused to continue any longer at Constantinople. Theodosius finding the Church there out of order, endeavoured by all means to reduce it to Peace, and Unity: Wherefore immediately he gave Demophilus, the Arrian Bishop, to understand his Pleasure, demanding, whether he would embrace the Nicene Creed, set the people at Unity, and embrace Concord himself? Which he refusing, the Emperour said to him, If thou refusest to embrace Peace and Unity, I command thee to avoid the Church, and accordingly he, with many more of his Adherents, departed, leaving their Churches to the Orthodox.

Hereticks banished.

Presently after, the Emperour summoned a Council of one Hundred and fifty Orthodox Bishops; He cited also the Bishops of the Macedonian Sect, hoping thereby to reclaim them; of which there appeared thirty six, most of them out of Hellespont: There the Emperour and the other Godly Bishops used all means possible to reconcile them to the Catholick Church: But neither Admonitions nor Reprehensions would prevail with them, and so they departed, professing that they would rather joyn with the Arrians than with them: Then did the Council proceed to the Election of a Bishop for Constantinople, and chose one Nectarius, a man of a Holy life, and Godly Conversation. And they Decreed, that a provincial Synod should determine provincial Affairs: The Emperour confirmed their Canons, and so the Council was dissolved.

A Council.

But though the Arrians were banished the Churches, yet the Schism and Tumults ceased not, whereupon the Godly Emperour, aiming at Peace, summoned another Council, charging, that Men of all Sects and Opinions should meet there together, hoping that by Conference and Communication amongst themselves, they would at length be brought to establish one Faith and Opinion: And when they were all come together, the Emperour sent for Nectarius, Bishop of Constantinople, asking, and reasoning with him how he might rid the Christian Religion of that Discord and Dissention, and reduce the Church of Christ to Unity and Concord? He said that the Controversies and Quarrels that molested the quiet state of the Church, and rent asunder the Members of Christ, were to be sifted out, and the Punishment to light upon them that were found to be the Authors of Schism, and Disturbers of Peace. Nectarius leaving the Emperour for the present, went to Agelius the Novatian Bishop, who embraced the Faith of one substance, and opened to him the Mind of the Emperour. He (although he was otherwise a Man of rare and singular parts) yet was no body in Controversies, but appointed Sisinius, a Minister of his Church, to Reason with them in his stead: Sisinius being a well Experienced Man, knew that Disputations would not only not reconcile Schisms, but rather exasperate Mens spirits, and inflame Contentions, therefore he advised Nectarius after this sort.

A Council.

That instead of Disputations, the Emperour should demand of the Ringleaders of the Hereticks, whether they esteemed and embraced the Ancient Fathers that lived before the Schism sprang up, or whether they condemned them?

If

If they own them, saith he, out of their writings we can confirm the Truth, and confute these Men: If they reject them, all men will cry out upon them: Nectarius liking this Advice, reported it presently to the Emperour, who approving of it also, he presently demanded of all the Heretieks, whether they esteemed and allowed the Fathers, which governed the Church before them, and would be tried by their Testimonies touching the true and right Faith? They hearing this, knew not what Answer to make, and so were divided amongst themselves; whilst some would assent to the Emperour, others dissented: Yea, they also that were of one Opinion, were divided amongst themselves; The Emperour perceiving that they relied not upon the Ancient Fathers Exposition of the Faith, but upon their own Wit, and Quirks of Logick, he bad every Sect to lay down their Faith and Opinion in writing: Which accordingly they did, and brought them to the Emperour; the Emperour received them courteously, and then retired into his Closet, fell down upon his Knees before God, Humbly beseeching him to reveal the Truth unto him, and to assist him in finding of it out; Then perusing every ones Opinion, and seriously weighing it in the Ballance of the Sanctuary, he condemned and tore in pieces all those Creeds that derogated from the Unity that is in the Blessed Trinity, allowing and highly commending the other. Prayer.

The Sectarian Bishops, because there Reigned amongst them mutual Discords and Dissentions, were set at nought even of their own People and Party.

Thus as Theodosius was careful to build Gods House, the Lord built him an House, and prospered him in all his Enterprizes: For about this time, the Alanes and Hunns [people of Scythia] entered again into Hungary, against whom the Emperour went with his Army; he fought many cruel Battels with them, and in them all had the upper Hand, slaying an infinite number of them, and driving the rest out of the Confines of the Empire, insomuch as Athanaricus, King of the Goths, offered himself and his People to do him Service, and Theodosius, not being willing to over-tire his Men of War, granted him Peace, and so taking Athanaricus with him, he returned victoriously to his City of Constantinople, where Athanaricus beholding the power of the Emperour, the Solemnity and Greatness of his Court; the Riches, Furniture, and Order of his House, and Service, he said, that truly the Roman Emperour was a god on the Earth, and represented the God of Heaven, against whom none ought to be so Hardy, as to lift up his Hand, or Heart, except he would presently be condemned to Death. Gods goodness.

Not long after Athanaricus fell sick, and dyed, but the Goths that served in his House and Army, having had Experience of the Goodness and Bounty of Theodosius, desired to continue in his Service, and afterwards carried themselves Faithfully and Valiantly in all his Warrs. But Gratian, and his Son Valentinian ruling in the West very remisly and negligently, gave occasion to the Brittish Legions to rebell and chuse an excellent Captain, one Maximus, for their Emperour, who thereupon presently Marched into France, where Gratian was, who being ill beloved of his Souldiers, many of them forsook him, and went to Maximus; Hereupon Gratian resolved to retire into Italy, but being circumvented by the Policy of Maximus, he was slain in the way, Anno Christi 387.

Maximus marching forward with a great Army into Italy, Valentinian the Emperour knowing his own Weakness, deserted it, and went to Constantinople to Theodosius, to intreat Aid: Who compassionating his condition, of his natural and accustomed Valour, resolved to go into Italy, to revenge the Death of Gratian, and to restore Valentinian to his Empire, and thereupon, leaving his Son Arcadius in Constantinople, and taking Valentinian along with him, he raised the greatest and best Forces he could, and so marched through Lombardy, bardy, where Maximus already was, having left Androgathius General of his Army to resist Theodosius: Androgathius expecting that Theodosius would come by Sea into Italy, he Embarqued all his Army aboord a great number of Ships and Barks, purposing to overthrow Theodosius upon the water: The valiant Theodosius, being advertised hereof, Marched by long Journies, finding the Passages open into the Plains of Lombardy, and besieged the City of Aquileia where Maximus was, and compassing the City round about, they within it, having guilty Consciences, and being full of Fear, delivered Maximus into Theodosius his Hands, without staying for any Assault, or Fight, who caused him, as a Traitor to his Prince, to be put to Death.

Gods Goodness

When Androgathius, his General, being upon the Sea with a very mighty Navy, heard of it, he was so overcome with Sorrow and Despair, that he cast himself over-boord, and drowned himself, and thereupon his Army yielded themselves to Theodosius, and so without either Slaughter or Blood-shed, God gave unto his Holy Servant Theodosius, a very great Victory: And from France, Spain, Germany, and Brittaine there came Ambassadours to him, yielding him their Obedience with great Humility and Devotion.

Thence he Marched with Valentinian, to Rome, where they received him with a solemne Triumph; He continued there certain Dayes, reformed many Abuses, and Disorders, inflicted Punishments, and did Justice upon sundry Wicked and Dissolute Persons, and as an Holy and Faithful Christian, he reformed the Abuses of the Church also: And setting all things in good order, he returned to Constantinople, leaving with Valentinian an Army and Power sufficient to defend his Empire.

Justice.

Theodosius, through Gods Mercy, and Goodness, was so Feared, and Honoured by all Nations, that the King of Persia, notwithstanding his former Victories, in great Humility sent his Ambassadours to Constantinople, intreating a perpetual League, and Peace with him, and he seeing with how great submission that potent King sued for Peace, granted it.

Not long after, Valentinian the Emperour went into France, and there living in Prosperity, and void of Care, one Argobastes, a Captain of his, conspired with Eugenius to kill him, and for that end, suborned some of his Eunuches to strangle him in his Bed, which they did publish abroad, that he had hanged himself: Whereupon Argobastes nominated and made Eugenius Emperour: Theodosius being advertised of this Fact, was very sorry, and much troubled, considering how dangerous a War lay before him, yet thinking it a great Dishonour to suffer such an Action to go unpunished, he mustered up his Army, and leaving his Son Arcadius in Constantinople, with all possible speed he Marched against them; But as a good and Holy Christian, he first betook himself to Fasting and Prayer, seeking unto God, the Giver of Victory, for Success in his Enterprise, requesting the Prayers of other Holy Men also, whereof one of them sent him word, that he should have the Victory, but should die in Italy, and never return again to Constantinople.

Fasting and Prayer.

A Prophesie

When Theodosius with his Army came to the Confines of Italy, the Tyrants had such great Forces, and had taken such good Order for all Matters, that all the Passages of the Alps were stopped, and at the Foot thereof, they attended his coming with all their Forces: Yet Theodosius having overcome those Passages, and being entered into Lombardy, found himself much distressed, the Enemies being more in number, and having as valiant and experienced Souldiers as himself who compassed him about, and kept all Victuals from being brought to his Camp: But the Valiant Emperour, using the best means he could, as a Faithful Christian, expected and hoped for his best Relief from God, to whom with Tears he made continual Supplications: And truly his Danger was so great, that had not God miraculously fought for him, he had there been lost.

Prayer Powerful.

The

The Night before the Battail he spent wholly in Prayer, neither Eating nor Sleeping, and the next Day, seeing himself charged on every side, he set his Men in very good Order to fight, with great Courage and Resolution attending the coming of his Enemies, and just as the Battail was ready to begin, behold the Goodness of God; Arbicius, a Captain of the Enemies, came over to his side with all under his Charge. The Battail beginning, where Romans were against Romans, they fought at even hand, most cruelly wounding, and killing one another. But Theodosius his Auxiliaries were worsted, and at the first charge Ten thousand Goths, which were in his pay, were slain, which when he saw, he lifted up his eyes to Heaven, and with a true Faith and stedfast Hope, shedding many Tears, prayed unto the Lord, that he might not be over-thrown in so just a Cause. At that instant a Captain of his, with a great Troop of Souldiers came to the Rescue of certain Squadrons, which in all shew were overthrown, and they charged the Enemy with such Courage and Resolution, that they which were in a manner vanquished, recovered strength and Heart again: But the Enemies were so many, that it seemed impossible for them to defend themselves, at which instant it pleased God to send them succour from Heaven, for suddenly there arose so violent a Wind and Tempest, as the like had never been seen by any man then living, which without Annoyance to the Emperours Army, did beat into the Enemies Faces with such force, that it bereaved them of their sight, so that they were not able to march forwards, yea the Wind was so strong, that all the Arrows, Stones, Darts, and Lances, which the Enemies threw and shot, were born back again, wounding those that threw them. A Miracle of Mercy.

The most Christian Emperour taking notice of this miraculous providence of God, rendred thanks unto him for the same, encouraging, and animating his Souldiers, so as in a short space they obtained a compleat Victory: Eugenius himself was taken fighting, and brought to Theodosius, who commanded him to be slain for his Treason, and Argobastes flying, and finding no certain place of Refuge, with his own Sword cut his own Throat; and Theodosius had the spoyl of his Enemies Camp. Thanksgiving.

Presently after, all the Princes of the Empire sent their Embassadours to Theodosius, to congratulate his Victory, and many Barbarous Nations did the like, so that he remained the absolute Lord both of the East and West: And being freed from Wars, he came to Miliaine, where Saint Ambrose was the Bishop, in which place he remained the rest of his time, applying himself to Civil Government, whereof in the time of War also he neglected not to take great care.

Being thus in Millaine, meditating upon his Mortality by reason of his Diseases, he resolved to settle his Estate, and sending to Constantinople for his Son Honorius, by the general Approbation of all, he made him Emperour of the West: And his elder Son Arcadius of the East; After which he lived in great prosperity three years in Millaine, in the company of that Holy man Ambrose, during which time this fell out.

In Thessalonica [a rich and populous City of Macedonia] there happened a great Tumult amongst the People against the Magistrates and Governours under the Emperour, and their Fury grew so great, that they slew them; which when Theodosius understood, he was so incensed against them, that he made his Souldiers put to Death seven Thousand of the common people, making no difference between the Guilty and Innocent: Ambrose hearing of it, when the Emperour came to Church, as his manner was, Ambrose (that his Repentance might be as publick as his Offence) set himself in the Church-door, and told the Emperour that he should not enter there, making a Learned Oration to him, wherein he opened his Fault, and then Excommunicated him: All which the Emperour heard with great Patience, and returning to his Pallace, Zeal.

he continued there eight Months before he was Absolved, at the end whereof he said to one about him; Truly I will go and see what Penance my Pastor will lay upon me for my Offence, and so he went to the Church-door where Ambrose was, and intreated him to Absolve him. But what Repentance hast thou shewed (said the Bishop) for so hainous an Offence? And with what Salve hast thou healed so Mortal a Wound? Thou (said the Emperour) art to instruct, and shew me what I am to do, and thou shalt see that I will accomplish what thou shalt prescribe: The Bishop seeing the Emperours Mildness, thinking it Penance sufficient that he had been so long Excommunicated, with Mild and Curteous Speeches, said unto him: Thy Penance, Theodosius, shall be this, that seeing in thy hasty Fury thou committest such an horrid Murther, thou shalt presently establish a Law, that no man whom thou shalt adjudge to dye, shall be executed within thirty dayes after thou hast pronounced the Sentence, at the end of which time thou shalt either ratifie or disanul thy Sentence, as thou seest cause. The Emperour immediately caused this Law to be written, and proclaimed, which he ever after observed, and whereof much Good ensued: And so being Absolved, he came into the Church, Prayed, and Received the Sacrament, and ever after loved Ambrose very dearly, and used his Counsel in many Matters, and for his companies sake, he continued in Millaine the remainder of his life.

Humility.

Hereticks insolency.

In the good Emperours absence, the Arians at Constantinople began to wax bold, raised Tumults, and proceeded to that Insolency, that they set the House of Nectarius [Bishop of Constantinople] on fire: In other Cities also, where they were thrust out of their Churches by the Authority of the Emperour, they kept Conventicles in the Suburbs, and thereby much propagated their damnable Opinions.

Zeal.

About this time the Emperour commanded that all the Idol Groves and Temples in Alexandria should be demolished, and that Theophilus the Bishop thereof should see it done, which he with much Zeal prosecuted; But this so inraged the Heathen, that they made head together, ran upon the Christians, and sought to destroy them every kind of way: The Christians withstood them, and so they fought till both sides were weary, and many were slain, and more wounded: But the Heathens, when that the Heat was over, were wonderfully affraid of the Emperours Displeasure, and therefore forsook the City, and hid themselves in several places: Afterwards the Governour and Captaine of the Host assisted Theophilus in the Overthrow of those Temples: and all the Images by the Emperours order were given to the Relief of the Poor.

Justice.

Whilst Theodosius was at Rome, after he had overcome Maximus, he reformed two most abominable Wickednesses: The first was this; In Rome was an huge House of ancient building, where all the Bread that served the City was baked, and most of the Rooms were under ground: Round about it were Taverns and Victualing-Houses full of Harlots, so that many that resorted thither, either to satisfie their Hunger, or Lust, were by these Whores spoyled of all they had, and usually so made away that their Friends could never hear of them more: For by privy Conveiances, they were thrown into these Back-Houses, and there kept to Grinding, and Drudgery all their life after. It fell out that one of the Emperours Souldiers was thus thrown into this Hole, who, when they would not suffer him to depart, drew his Dagger, and slew some that stopped his passage, so that the rest being afraid, let the Souldier go: And the Emperour being informed by him, sent for the Millers and Bakers, punished the Masters with extream Torments, overthrew those blind Houses, and so rid the princely City of that shameful doing.

The other abuse which he reformed was this: If a Woman were taken in Adultery, they shut her up in a narrow Stew, and compelled her beastly, and without all ſhame to play the Harlot, ringing a Bell whilſt the Deed was doing, that all the Neighbours might be made privy to it, which was ſo far from removing the ſin, that it increaſed it rather: The good Emperour being informed hereof, cauſed the Stews to be pulled down, and wholly ſuppreſſed; and made other Laws for the puniſhment of Adultery. Adultery puniſhed.

and

Theodoſius being aged, and infirm, at laſt fell extream ſick, and therefore he diſpoſed of the Empire to his two Sons; and becauſe they were young, and not of fit years for ſuch a Burthen, he left, as Tutors and Governours to them, two very ſufficient Men both for War and Peace: After he had ſet all things in order, his Diſeaſe ſo increaſed, that being overcome by it, he recommended his Soul to God, and ſo departed out of this preſent Life, Anno Chriſti 397. of his Age fifty, or as others ſixty, and of his Empire ſeventeen. His Death.

In all his Wars he was very Valiant and Politick: Of an excellent Wit and Judgment in Civil Government, a Lover of Juſtice and Equity, very Merciful, and of a moſt Noble Inclination, yet ſomewhat Haſty and Cholerick, but preſently pacified, and eaſily intreated: To moderate his Paſſion, beſides Ambroſe his Law in matters of Death, he uſed (knowing his own Haſty Diſpoſition) not to determine of any thing till he had repeated over the Letters of the Greek Alphabet, for in that ſpace his Wrath would be tempered: He was exceeding Liberal, Temperate, and Chaſt: He greatly Honoured Learning, and wiſe Men: He was well ſpoken, and Chearful in his Deportment. His Wife Placilla was an excellent, and moſt Religious Woman: He uſed to ſay, That he accounted it a greater Honour, that he was a Member of the Church, than that he was the Head of the Empire. His Character. Piety.

He wrote out the whole New Teſtament with his own Hand, accounting it a great Jewel, and reading a part of it every Day. He commanded that they which reviled, and ſpake Evil of him ſhould not be puniſhed: Quoniam ſi ex levitate proceſſerit, contemnendum eſt: ſi ex inſania, miſeratione dignum: ſi ab injuria, remittendum eſt: Becauſe if it proceeded of Levity, it is not to be regarded: if of Madneſs, it is to be pitied: if of an injury received, it is to be pardoned in them. Meekneſs.

In this Emperours Reign there was much Hurt done by Earth-quakes in ſundry places: In the Imperial City of Conſtantinople, there were thrown down at one time fifty ſeven Towers of the City Wall, which were newly built a little before: It endured by fits ſix Moneths together, ſo that many fair and goodly Churches and Fortreſſes were demoliſhed, and the Inhabitants were fain to forſake their Houſes, and lye in the Fields: It raged by Sea alſo, ſo that many Ships, and whole Iſlands were ſwallowed up by it. After which inſued Famine and Peſtiferous Airs, by which many thouſands of people, and Beaſts periſhed: And in Cherſoneſus, whole Pariſhes ſunk into the ground: Alſo in the laſt Year of his Reign, in Epyrus, there was a Dragon ſeen of that vaſt bigneſs, that when he was dead, eight Yoaks of Oxen could hardly draw him. Earthquake. Famine and Peſtilence. A vaſt Dragon.

The Inhabitants of Antiochia overthrowing the Braſen Portraiture of his beloved Wife Placilla, Theodoſius was ſo incenſed againſt them for it, that he deprived their Town of the Dignity of a Metropolitan City, conferring it upon their Neighbour Town of Laodicea: He threatned alſo to burn it down, but by the perſwaſions of Flavianus, Biſhop of Antiochia, the good Emperour moved with pitty, pardoned their Fault.

At one time he was very favourable to the Arrians, whom he permitted to keep Conventicles in his principal Cities, which Amphilochius, Biſhop of Iconium taking notice of, he came before the Emperour, and did his Reverence unto him, but not to his Son Arcadius, though he was already made Auguſtus, whereat Theodosius being offended, Amphilochius presently answered, That the God of Heaven would also be offended with them, who tolerated the Blasphemers of his only begotten Son Jesus Christ: The Godly Emperour being hereby brought to a sight of his great sin, presently made a Law, prohibiting the Conventicles of the Arrians in all his Cities.

Concerning that Miraculous Tempest that God sent for the Destruction of his Enemies, Claudian the Poet writes these Verses.

O nimium dilecte Deo! cui fundit ab Antris
Æolus armatas hyemes, cui militat Æther,
Et conjurati veniunt ad classica venti.

Collected out of Socrates Scholasticus, the Imperial History, Speeds Chronicle, and the Book of Martyrs.

THEODOSIVS. 2.

The Life of Theodosius the Second, who Dyed Anno Christi 453.

Arcadius, the Elder Son of Theodosius, in the thirteenth Year of his Reign, falling sick at Constantinople, left his Son Theodosius to succeed him in the Empire, who being but eight Years old, Arcadius, by his last Will and Testament, made Hisdigerdus, King of Persia and Parthia, his Son's Tutor, who understanding what Arcadius had done, accepted of the Charge, and speedily sent one Antiochus, an excellent Man, and a great Souldier to Constantinople, who with the good Will and Consent of Honorius, Emperour of the West, and Uncle to young Theodosius, Governed the Eastern Empire with great Fidelity and Discretion, and so maintained the same in Peace and Justice, till Theodosius came to Age. About which time the Western Empire was much infested by the Barbarians: But Theodosius being now of sufficient Age, was freed from his Tutors, and as he was a Godly Man, and the Inheritour of his Grand-Fathers Fathers Vertues, his chiefeſt Care was for the Service of God and the Defence and Advancement of his Church; whereupon he fell out with Barrabanus, King of Perſia (who ſucceeded Iſdigerdus) becauſe he perſecuted the Chriſtians that were in his Dominions, and when Perſwaſions would not prevail, he ſent Ardaburus, an excellent Captain againſt him, who fought a Battail with Naſius, General of the Perſians, overthrew him, and made a great ſlaughter of his Men, and afterwards entred his Country, and made great ſpoyl therein. Piety.

By an other way, Theodoſius ſent Gratianus, another Captain, againſt Alamander King of the Saracens, who came to aid the King of Perſia, who overthrew him in Battail, and ſlew a great Multitude of his Saracens: And in an other place, another of Theodoſius his Captains overthrevv the Perſians, ſo that at laſt, Barrabanus ceaſed from perſecuting the Chriſtians, and a Peace vvas concluded betvveen Theodoſius and him.

About this time Honorius, having raigned in all, thirtie years, died at Rome without iſſue: and thereby the whole Roman Empire was devolved upon Theodoſius: and ſome held for him, as reaſon and duty required; but the greateſt Potentates in the Weſt began to make themſelves Lords of the Empire in ſeveral parts of it. But they, falling out amongſt themſelves, Theodoſius, not thinking it ſafe to leave the Eaſt, made his Coſen German, Valentinian, Cæſar, who was the ſon of Placidia, ſiſter to Arcadius and Honorius, and wife to the Emperour Conſtantius: and ſo, with ſufficient Troops, he ſent him into Italy with his Mother Placidia, whoſe virtue and wiſdom was ſufficient to govern all, till her Son came to years fit for government.

In the mean time, one John who had uſurped the Empire at Rome, ſent his Ambaſſadors to Theodoſius, requeſting him to accept him as his partner in the Empire; but Theodoſius cauſed them to be apprehended as Traitors and Rebels, and withal he ſent command to Ardaburius, an excellent Captain of his, that with the greateſt power he could make, he ſhould paſs by Sea into Italy before Placidia, and ſhould ſeek to defeat the Tyrant John. But in his paſſage there befell him ſuch a ſtorm at Sea, that his own Ship, being ſevered from the reſt, was driven to an Haven where he was taken, and carried priſoner to Ravenna: His Son Aſper (who was in the ſame Fleet) being informed hereof landed his men after the ſtorm was over, and paſſing the Lakes and boggs near to Ravenna (vvhich vvere alvvays judged impaſſible, and never knovvn to be dry before) entred the City, freed his Father, took the Tyrant John and cut off his head. This miraculous deliverance of Ardaburius vvas judged to be the fruit of the effectual prayers of the Godly Emperor Theodoſius. Being conducted by an Angel of God, as Socrates ſaith.

Preſently after came Placidia vvith her Son into Italy, and paſſed to Ravenna, vvhere, hearing of another uſurper, that vvas coming vvith all his Forces from Spain to ſeize upon Rome, ſhe ſent Ardaburius againſt him, vvho fought a great battel vvith him, and overthrevv him, after vvhich his ovvn Soldiers, mutinying againſt him, delivered him to Ardaburius. And vvhereas an other uſurper vvas riſen up in Rome, the Soldiers and Citizens apprehended him, and ſent him priſoner to Ravenna.

Valentinian being thus peaceably poſſeſſed of Italy, vvas by the conſent of Theodoſius, and vvith the good vvill of all men, made Emperor: and not long after, leaving all things in the beſt order that he could in Italy, he took his Paſſage for Greece, and went to Conſtantinople to ſee Theodoſius, where he Married Eudoxa Daughter to Theodoſius; and ſo returned into Italy.

About this time Genſericus, King of the Vandals, exerciſed great Cruelties upon the Chriſtians in Africk, for which Godly Theodoſius was ſo grieved, that he ſent two of his Captains with great Forces againſt him. But whilſt they prolonged time in Sicily, Attila, a mighty King of the Hunns, with many other Barbarous Nations, which like swarms of Bees came to him, intending to Invade the Eastern Empire, knowing that the best and greatest part of the Men of War were gone with the two Captains into Sicilie; and at his first Entry, he took many Cities in Thrace, and Slavonia; whereupon Theodosius, in great Hast called back his Army out of Sicilie, raised more Forces, and Fought with Attila many Battails, thereby much repressing his Fury. But in the middest of his Preparations against these Barbarians, it pleased God that he fell sick of the Plague, whereof he Dyed: Or (as some hold) by a Fall from his Horse; in the fiftieth Year of his Age, and of his Reign forty two, Anno Christi 453.

His Death.

Socrates Scholasticus gives this Character of him. Theodosius, though Born, and brought up in the Imperial Palace, yet was he free from all Light and vain Behaviour: He was so Wise and Discreet, that he seemed in his Youth to all that conferred him, a Man of great Experience: He was of such Hardiness and Sufference both inwardly in Mind, and outwardly in Body, that he could endure the pinching Cold of Winter, and the parching Heat of Summer: He used to Fast twice every Week: His Palace and Court seemed no other than a Religious Family: At the dawning of the Day, he used with his Sisters to sing Psalms and Hymns of Praise to God. He learned much of the Holy Scriptures without Book: He so reasoned of them with the Bishops, as if himself had been an experienced Minister: He gathered together a very great Library of the Ancient Fathers Works, but especially many Books of the Sacred Scriptures: He excelled all Men in Patience, Courtesie, and Clemency: He learned to bridle his Anger; to bear Afflictions patiently; to Revenge him of none that did him Injury: And when one of his Familiars asked him, why he would not put to Death some that had wronged him; He answered, I would to God it lay in my Power to revive them that are Dead: Indeed it is no hard matter to bereave a Man of his Life, but when that is done, be a Man never so sorry, he cannot revive him again: When any Traitour was Condemned, he would not suffer him to go so far as the Gates of the City towards the place of Execution, before he sent him a Reprieve.

Theodosius his Character.

Piety.

Scriptures studied.

A great Library.

Meekness.

One Day, as he set forth some publick Shews to the People at Constantinople, wherein Beasts Fought together, the People shouting, desired that one of the strongest Men, should be set to Encounter with one of those Beasts: His Answer was: Do not you know that we cannot abide Cruel Spectacles. He highly Honoured Gods Ministers, especially such as excelled in Godliness: Once as he was at the publick Shews to please the People, there fell out an exceeding great Tempest; whereupon he commanded his Beadles to speak to the People, telling them, that it was far better to lay aside those shews and pastimes, and with one Heart and Voice to pray unto God to cease that violent storm; The Words were no sooner spoken, but all joyntly fell down to the ground, and poured out zealous and earnest Prayers unto God: So that the whole City was become as one Church: And it pleased God that the Weather presently cleared up and became Fair: And whereas there was a great dearth, and scarcity before, through Gods Mercy, they had afterwards great store and plenty.

Cruelty hated.

Ministers loved.

Piety.

Prayers prevalent.

At an other time, as this most Godly Emperour was celebrating those shews in the same place, he had News brought him of Aspers success, and of the Death of the Tyrant John, whereupon he thus spake to the people: Let us give over this vain pastime, and let us repair unto Church and serve God devoutly, pouring out our zealous Prayers to him, and praise him for his wonderful Mercy, who by his own Hand and outstretched Arm, hath deprived the Tyrant of his Life; No sooner had he made an end of speaking, but all the People gave over their Spectacles, and passing through the Theatre, sang Praises together gether with the Emperour unto God: And so going directly to Church, spent the whole Day in those Holy Exercises. When Wars were at any time proclaimed, after the Examples of David and Jehosaphat, he made God his Refuge, and by Prayer, he always obtained prosperous success.

Nestorius denying Christ to be God, Theodosius summoned a Council at Ephesus to suppress that Heresie, by which Nestorius was deposed from his Bishoprick. He greatly detested all Hereticks. His Wife was Eudoxia, a very Godly and Discreet Woman. His usual Sayings was, That Emperours of all other Men were most miserable, because commonly the truth of Businesses is concealed from them. In his time there was such a Famine in Rome, that the poorer sort were fain to make Bread of the Bark of Trees, and the richer sort of Chesnuts; a Pound of flesh was worth fifty pence, and dead Mens flesh was sold and eaten.

A Council. Zeal. Famine.

In one Battail that his General fought against Attila, there were slain an hundred and sixty two Thousand Men, whose Blood made a Neighbour Brook to overflow it's Bank. This Attila was called the Terrour of the World, and the Whip wherewith God scourged many Nations. Theodosius in Godliness was like unto his Grand-father: In collecting a great Library of good Books nothing inferiour to Ptolemæus Philadelphus: In gathering into one short sum the Laws of his Predecessors, he trode a Path wherein Justinian followed him to the great benefit of Learned Men. His House was like unto a Sanctuary for Exercises of Reading the Holy Scriptures, and Devout Prayers. His Facility in subscribing unread Letters, was corrected by the prudent Advice of his Sister Pulcheria In his time Attila entred into Italy, took, sacked and ruined Aquileia, Ticinum, and Millaine, and intended the same Cruelty against Rome: But Leo, Bishop thereof, went forth to him, and with gentle words so mitigated his Mind that he forbore to do it.

A cruel Battail.

He had a Man whose Name was Palladius, one that had rare Gifts both outwardly in Body, and inwardly in Mind, and of that strength, and agility of Body, that he was able in three Dayes to Ride Post into the furthest bounds of the Romane and Persian Dominions, and back again in the same space to Constantinople: So that by his Celerity he made the Romane Empire which was vast and wide, to be but narrow and strait.

When Theodosius sent his Army under Ardaburius against the Persians, and for the Relief of the persecuted Christians there; the Citizens of Constantinople were very sad and heavy, fearing the variable Event of the Wars: But a company of Angels appeared to certain in Bithynia, that were travelling to Constantinople, and willed them to bid the Citizens to be of good cheer, and to pray and put their Trust in God: And that they should be confident of Ardaburius his Victory, for God had sent them as Governours, and Soveraign Captains of the Wars.

The Heresie of Nestorius was so hateful to him, that he made this Law concerning the Followers of it: We Decree, that whosoever doth imbrace the wicked Opinion of Nestorius, and shall give ear to his lewd Doctrine, if he be a Bishop, that he shall be Banished, if a Lay Person, that he shall be accursed. [In the time of Theodosius his Reign, the Brittains sent for the Saxons out of Germany, to assist them against the Scots and Picts: And when they came, Vortiger the British King entertained them, conferred with them of their Faith, and found them Pagans that worshipped Mercury, whom they called Woden, and in Honour of him Wodensday [Wednesday]: They worshipped also Venus, whom they called Frea, whence came Friday: These Saxons, when together with the Brittains, they had foyled the Scots and Picts, Traiterously fell upon their own Masters the Brittains, slew many, and drave the rest into the Mountains, whom they called after their Country Language, Welchmen, i. e. Strangers.

Collected out of Socrates Scholasticus, Evagrius, the Book of Martyrs, Speeds Chronicle, and the Imperial History.

JVSTINIAN

The Life of Juſtinian, who Dyed, Anno Chriſti 568.

His Parentage.

VSTINE, Emperour of the Eaſt being grovvn old, and having no Sons of his ovvn, Adopted his Siſters Son, called Juſtinian, appointing him to ſucceed in the Empire: He was a very godly Man, zealous for the Truth againſt Hereſies, and would ſuffer no Faith to be openly profeſſed, but that which was allowed in the four General Councils: And accordingly God bleſſed him exceedingly in his Wars: For coming to the Empire in a very troublous time, the firſt War that he made, was againſt the Perſians, who for fifty years together, had often Invaded the Romane Empire, and commonly had the better of it: Againſt them therefore Juſtinian ſent a great Army under the Conduct of Beliſarius, a Noble and Valiant Captain, who fought a bloody Battel with the Perſians, which continued almoſt a whole Day, but in the concluſion (through Gods Mercy) Beliſarius prevailed, and made a great ſlaughter of the Enemies: After which notable Victory, he recovered ſundry places in Meſopotamia, which the Perſians had uſurped from the Empire.

A great Battail.

Another Army alſo of Juſtinians entering into Armenia, by the ſame good Hand of Providence, obtained Victory, and recovered moſt part of that Country which was formerly loſt: Hereupon Cavades, King of Perſia, raiſed a mighty Army under the Command of a Valiant old Captain of his, called Alamander, who had formerly gotten many Victories againſt the Romans, with whom Beliſarius after ſome Encounters, came to a Battail, which was the greateſt, and cruelleſt that ever happened in thoſe Wars. This Battail was fought near to the River Euphrates, and much againſt the Opinion of Beliſarius, who knowing that the Enemy had the Advantage, would not have fought, but his Men, againſt his will preparing themſelves, he Ordered and Encouraged them all that he could: The Fight was maintained with ſuch Obſtinacy, and Fury on both ſides, that for the greateſt part of the Day, it appeared not to which ſide Victory would incline: But at laſt the Imperialiſts waxing Faint (having ving fasted all Day, because it was Easter Eve) they began to retreat: Which the Persians seeing, they Charged the Horse-Troops of Belisarius with such Fury, that they brake them also: Belisarius did what he could to Incourage and Reinforce them, but when he could not prevail, he alighted from his Horse, and placed himself in a Squadron of Foot-Men that kept their Ground, and Encouraging them with his Presence, they all resolved to Conquer or Dye, insomuch as when the Persian General saw them remain whole, he came upon them with great Fury, thinking easily to have had the Execution of them, but they kept themselves so close together, that they could not be broken, and fought so valiantly, that they slew many of the Persians, till Night coming on, the Persians left them. A brave Captain.

A bloody Battail.

Then did Belisarius with his Men, retire into an Island which was in the River Euphrates hard by, whither the rest of his Army came to him, and the next Morning set his Men in Order to Fight again: But the Persians having lost more Men than the Romans, removed into another Quarter, and the King of Persia understanding his great Loss, sickned, and shortly after Dyed, whereupon his Son made Peace with Justinian; and Belisarius returned to Constantinople, where he was received with much Triumph.

A few Dayes after, two potent Men in the City, which were Sisters Sons of Anastasius the Emperour, with a great party that adhered to them, Rebelled against Justinian, one of them taking the Ensigns, and Name of Emperour: And the War was so cruel within the City, that thirty Thousand Persons were slain, together with the Usurpers, whereby God did wonderfully deliver Justinian from an eminent danger, after which time he lived in Peace and better Estimation than before: In this scuffle Belisarius did him better Service than all others. Civil broyls

After the Vandalls had seized upon Africk, they raised a cruel Persecution against the Christians, some of them being Heathens, others Arrians: But after the Death of Genfericus, Gilimer his Nephew, succeeded in the Kingdom; Justinian sent Belisarius with a purpose to Regain the Kingdom of Africk, who imbarked himself, being accompanied with many excellent Captains, in five Hundred Sail of Ships, and ninety two Gallies, and so began his Voyage towards Africk, where (through Gods Mercy) he safely arrived: Epiphanius, Bishop of Constantinople going in the Fleet, prayed for their prosperous Success; When they were Landed, they found some that took part with them, and so they Marched along the Sea-coast towards Carthage, and the Navy did the like by Sea: When Gilimer understood this, he left his Brother Amata in the City for the Guard of it, commanding him to kill all the Prisoners, and at such an Hour the next Day to Issue out of the City with all his Forces against Belisarius, promising that himself with his Army would charge him at the same time in the Reer; and so he departed out of Carthage with his Army; and sent a Captaine with some Troops to Allarm and Trouble Belisarius in his March. Persecution. Prayer powerful.

The next Day Amata came forth according to Appointment, but was quickly beaten and slain by the Vauntguard: And Gilimer with his Forces charged so resolutely upon the Reer, that the Imperialists began to retire; but Gilimer hearing of the Defeat, and Death of his Brother, made an Alt, whereupon Belisarius his Souldiers Charged him with such Fury, that Gilimer was wholly overthrown, many of his Men slain, and he by Flight saved his Life. Gods goodness.

The next Day Belisarius Marched to the City, where Arriving in the Evening, he found no Resistance, and the Gates open, yet would he not enter into an Enemies City by Night, but the next Day he Marched in with great Quietness, not suffering his Souldiers to Plunder or Murther any, who were very Obedient to him: Possessing the City, he commanded presently the Walls Clemency.

to be repaired, which were very Ruinous: And in the mean time Gilimer unbroken in Spirit, Rallied his Army, raised more Forces, sent for his Brother Zazon with a great Army out of Sardinia, and having thus gotten a sufficient number, he went towards Carthage, either to Fight, or Besiege Belisarius.

But Belisarius for certain dayes would not take the Field, till he had sufficiently repaired the Walls, and then he marched forth with his Army to give Gilimer Battail, and when the Commanders saw each other, they set their Men in Order, one relying upon the Arm of Flesh, the other putting his Confidence in God. The Fight began with great Fury, but in the first Charge, Zazon was slain, and some other principal Men of the Vandalls, whereupon the rest fled into their Camp which they had strongly fortified: Belisarius gathering his Forces together presently pursued them, which when Gilimer saw, suspecting that he could not defend the Camp, with a few Servants he fled away, and Belisarius entred it, putting all in Arms to the Sword, taking the Women and Children Captives. In the Camp they found an infinite quantity of God, Silver, Money, and Jewels, for the Vandals, having no place of Refuge which they counted safe, carried all their Treasure with them, and so in one Hour they lost all that they had stolne, and gotten in Africa in Ninety five Years before: Thus God blessed his Servant Justinian, and justly plagued those wicked Vandalls, who had cruelly persecuted the Orthodox, cutting out their Tongues, imprisoning the godly Ministers, and making them their Drudges, making Stables of their Churches, &c.

Faith.
A Battail.
A great prize.
Gods just judgment on Persecutors.

The next day Belisarius sent an excellent Captain with a good Troop of Horse to pursue Gilimer, and shortly after himself followed with some choise Men of his Army, but finding that Gilimer was fled into some inaccessible Mountains in Numidia, he left a Captain with sufficient Forces to Besiege him, and so returned to Carthage, in his passage taking in many Towns, and much People resorted to him with Joy, being glad that they were freed from the miserable Servitude of the Vandalls, and restored to the Liberty of the Empire.

Shortly after he sent some to take in Sardinia, and others into Mauritania, and in all places God gave him wonderful Success, so that in little more than four Months he took in all Africk, that had been possessed by those wicked Vandalls for the space of Ninety six Years, wherein they had been great Oppressors of the true Church of Christ, and had almost extirpated it.

Gilimer being straitly besieged as before is said, at last yielded himself upon Quarter for his life, and so was brought Prisoner to Belisarius, who sent the Emperour Justinian News of his Success, requesting that he might return to Constantinople and bring Gilimer with him. Justinian referred it to himself, whether to stay and govern that Province, or to return; He made one Salomon Governour, and left with him a good part of his Army, and so took Gilimer, and his Kindred, and infinite Jewels, Treasures and Riches, which the Vandals had plundred from Rome, Spain, Africk, and other Provinces, and so returned to Constantinople, where he was received in Triumph.

In the mean time the Churches of the East, being much infected with the Arrian Heresie, were full of Dissentions and Troubles, but the good Emperour published an Edict, wherein he Accursed the principal Ring-Leaders, and inflicted great Penalties on them that held and maintained such damnable Opinions, endeavouring thereby that no Dissention might take Root in any of the Churches through the World.

Danger of Heresie.
Hereticks punished.

About this time the Nation that dwelled by the River Tanais sent to Justinian, requesting him to send a Bishop to them, who willingly assented to Conversion.

their

their Requeſts, by which Means they were Converted to the Chriſtian Faith.

Beliſarius did not long continue at Conſtantinople, before Juſtinian gave him the Charge of his Wars in Sicily and Italy againſt the Goths, and Theodatus, who at that time was Lord thereof; an Enterpriſe of no leſs Importance, and of greater Danger than the former of Africk: But Theodatus dying about that time, he left his Kingdom to his Nephew Athalaricus being but eight Years old, wherefore his Mother Amalaſunta had the Education of him, and the Government of the Kingdom: But Athalaricus ſhortly after Dying, Theodatus his Coſin-german uſurped the Kingdom, and treacherouſly put Amalaſunta to Death.

Juſtinian deteſting ſo vile a Fact, ſent Beliſarius, and his Victorious Army, againſt him, who by the way, Landing in Sicily, took in Catania, Syracuſe, and many other Towns, and Cities, and after a while the whole Iſland ſubmitted to him. Theodatus being informed hereof, was much affraid, and preſently diſpatched Ambaſſadours to Juſtinian, profering to Renounce his Title to Sicily: And that alſo in Italy, in all Decrees and Proclamations, Iuſtinians Name ſhould be firſt uſed, and that once every Year he would ſend him a Golden Crown in Token of Subjection: Withal giving them in Charge, that if Iuſtinian refuſed that Proffer, that then they ſhould offer the whole Kingdom of Italy to him, upon Condition that he ſhould give him ſome Lands, and Poſſeſſions in Greece, or elſe-where; Iuſtinian refuſed the firſt, but imbraced the ſecond, and ſent back his Ambaſſadours with them to conſummate the Agreement.

But in the interim, Theodatus having by his Captains gotten a Victory againſt ſome of Iuſtinians Captains in Slavonia, he was ſo puft up with Pride, that he refuſed to ſtand to his former Offer; yea his Inſolency was ſuch, that he Apprehended, and Impriſoned Iuſtinians Ambaſſadours: And he was the more Encouraged, hearing that Beliſarius was gone from Sicily into Africk, where a Captaine with a great Part of the Army, had Mutined againſt Salomon, put the Judges, and Governours to Death, and poſſeſſed themſelves of a great Part of the Country; But Beliſarius Arriving there, Overthrew them in Battail, and ſo leaving all in peace, he Sailed into Italy. Pride.

About this time there was ſeen ſo prodigious a ſight about the Sun, that the like hath never been heard of: For the Sun, for the greateſt part of a Year, gave ſo little Light, that it was but equal to the Light of the Moon, the Sky being clear, without Clouds, or any thing to ſhadow it, after which there followed a great Famine, and much War, and Bloodſhed. A Prodigy.

Iuſtinian ſeeing the Inconſtancy of Theodatus, and being greatly diſpleaſed with the Death of his Captains in Dalmatia, and the Impriſonment of his Ambaſſadours, with the Wiſdom, Courage and Reſolution of a worthy Prince, he ſent Conſtantius, a Noble Captain into Dalmatia, and Slavonia, who quickly recovered moſt of that which was loſt: And withal he ſent to Beliſarius ſpeedily to enter Italy with the greateſt power he could make; Beliſarius with his accuſtomed Expedition and Courage, leaving ſufficient Garriſons in Sicily, tranſported his Army into Italy, Landing at Meſſina, and finding no oppoſition, he ſeized on many Towns thereabouts, conquering all to the City of Naples, into which Theodatus had put a great Garriſon of his Goths: Then Beliſarius beſieged, and after many Skirmiſhes, he took the City by force, where his Souldiers found great ſpoyls, and ſlew many of the Goths: But the next day Beliſarius ſet all the Inhabitants at liberty, and reſtored to them the greateſt part of their Goods again: This Action ſtroke a great Fear into the Goths, who before held Naples to be Impregnable. Clemency.

Theodatus in the mean time making but ſlender proviſion for his Defence, all his chief Captains met together, and choſe for their King, one Vitiges, a Wiſe and Valiant Captain, which Theodatus hearing of fled towards Ravenna, but being purſued, he was overtaken, and ſlain: Vitiges preſently called a Council of War, where it was reſolved, that they for the preſent could neither Defend Rome, nor Fight Beliſarius, and that therefore he ſhould retire to Ravenna, till having raiſed ſufficient Forces, he might return and give him Battail.

Beliſarius leaving a ſtrong Garriſon in Naples, Marched to Rome, to whom the Inhabitants opened their Gates, and let him in. In the Senate he made an excellent Speech, exhorting them to embrace, and defend their Liberty: Then he Repaired the City Walls, and brought in ſtore of Proviſion from all the adjacent parts: In the mean time Vitiges left no means untried to increaſe his Power, concluding a Peace with the King of France, and drew all his Forces thence, and from Germany, and other parts he procured all the Aid that poſſibly he could; ſo that he raiſed an Hundred and fifty thouſand Men, Horſe and Foot, good Souldiers, and moſt of them well Armed, and ſo he marched towards Rome, where Beliſarius was, but with an inconſiderable Army, and therefore not able to take the Field.

Pride. Whereupon Vitiges, nothing doubting of the Victory, grew ſo proud, that he asked every one he met, whether Beliſarius was not fled away, and rejoy-

Faith. ced infinitely when he heard that he was fortifying of Rome. But the Valiant Beliſarius truſting in God, was far from flying, reſolving rather to Dye than to Abandon what he had gotten: Vitiges coming near Rome, Beliſarius had cauſed two very ſtrong Towers to be built by the Bridge to ſtop his Approach, and had placed in them very good Guards; but when Vitiges Army approached, they which guarded the Bridge were in ſuch Fear, that they preſently ſurrendred the place, and the ſame Night Vitiges paſſed over a great part of his Army: The next Morning Beliſarius, ſuſpecting no ſuch matter, ſallied out of Rome with a thouſand choyce Horſe, with which he Marched towards the Bridge, and coming near to it, he ſuddenly met with Vitiges Men at Arms, which ſo vexed Beliſarius, imagining that his Men that guarded the Bridge were loſt, that with Gods goodneſs in protecting his own. leſs Prudence than was requiſite, he Charged them with ſo much Fury, that there fell out a cruel Fight, ſo that theſe Men at Arms were driven back to the Battalion where Vitiges was, who charged with ſo great a Troop of his Goths, that Beliſarius and his Company were held for loſt, yet he in his own Perſon did Wonders, wounding and ſlaying many of his Enemies, and Charged ſo far in amongſt them, that though he did the part of an excellent Souldier, yet not of a Diſcreet General: For he put his Perſon in ſuch Danger, that he was held for Dead, and ſo ſome of his Men that fled, reported of him in Rome: Being in this Diſtreſs, and unable any longer to maintain the Fight, his People began to retire on the Spur, and he alſo did the like, after they had ſlain a thouſand of the Goths.

Many of Vitiges Horſe-men purſued him to the Gates of Rome, which were ſhut, and the Guard would not open them, leſt the Enemy ſhould have entred with them; beſides, the Noyſe was ſuch, that they knew not Beliſarius his Voyce, whom they accounted for Dead: He having Fought the greateſt part of the Day, was driven to Lean to the Wall, and Ranging his Souldiers into a Squadron, made Head againſt the Enemy, and ſo continued Fighting without Meat or Drink till it was Night; in which he did a Valiant, though a Dangerous Exploit: Charging the Goths with ſuch fury, that they all believed (through the Darkneſs of the Night) that great Troops were Sallied forth againſt them, whereupon they retired to their Camp: Thus God almoſt miraculouſly preſerved this brave Captain, who afterwards coming to the Gates, and calling to the Watch, they knew him, and joyfully let him in: He had abundance of Arrows ſticking in his Horſe, and Armour, and ſome Blows and Cuts with with the Sword, but (through Gods Mercy) none of them came to his skin, which was held for a Wonder by those which saw what great Danger he had been in.

The next Day Vitiges came with all his Army to the City; but being unable, by reason of the great Circuit, to compass it all about, he made six strong Camps in several parts of it: Many dangerous Conflicts there were, during this Siege, which lasted a Year and nine Dayes: For the first seven Moneths the Enemy never ceased to Assault and Batter the City on all parts, where they did, and received much Hurt: And Belisarius never ceased from Defending, Sallying forth, and Fighting with them, so that they slue above Fourty Thousand of the Goths: In which his Valour and Wisdome did wonderfully appear; for it was the most terrible, and bloody Siege that ever was.

The good Emperour Justinian neglected them not, but sent them Succour of Companies of Horse, and Foot, valiant Captains, Corn, and other Necessaries, though with much difficulty: Notwithstanding which, the City endured extream Famine. A Famine.

Belisarius managed all things with such Prudence, and Valour, that Vitiges seeing his Men tired, and weakned, he sent and concluded a Truce with him for six Moneths: Yet it continued not so long, for Vitiges understanding the wants of the City, renewed the Wars, whereupon Belisarius sent the Marshal of his Army with two Thousand Horse, and other Souldiers, to begin War in the Marches of Ravenna, and God so prospered them, that they took in Ariminum and other Places; Which Vitiges hearing of, and fearing the Loss of Ravenna, raised the Siege, and returned to Defend the rest.

In his Retreat, Belisarius Charged his Reer-gard so furiously, that he slue a Number of his Men: And so with Shame, Dishonour, and Loss, Vitiges went back to Ravenna, and presently after laid a strong Siege to Ariminum, where the aforesaid Forces were. Belisarius presently raised such Forces as he could; went to Naples, fortifyed that City, and so marched straight towards the City of Ravenna, and by the Way he met with Narses, a Brave and Religious Captaine, whom Justinian had sent with New Supplies to his Aid. Pride punished.

Being thus strengthened, he Marched to Ariminum, forced Vitiges to raise his Siege, and so Relieved his Men. Hereupon Lombardy, Millan, and other places Declared for the Emperour: And Belisarius sent them Aid of Captains, and Men, and there fell out many Conflicts, and Battails, both with the Gothes, and with Theodoricus, King of France, who came with a great Army, thinking to possess himself of that Country. Belisarius also after many great Adventures, Fought another terrible Battail with Vitiges, who had gathered all his Forces together for that end, and (through Gods goodness) got the Victory: Vitiges fled into Ravenna: Belisarius pursued, besieged him in the City, and in the end took it, and had Vitiges delivered into his Hands, with whom almost all Italy came under his Obedience. Victories.

Cosroes, King of Persia, hearing that Belisarius whom he chiefly feared, was busied in the Wars of Italy, took the Opportunity to make War upon the Territories of the Empire, and took some Cities; whereupon Justinian, who was very circumspect for all parts, sent an Army into the East, under a Valiant General, who being slain in a Battail against the Persians, he sent a second, yet could not the Imperialists make sufficient Resistance against them, but that they still prevailed; wherefore Justinian sent for Belisarius, as the only Man that could match the Persian.

Belisarius going to Constantinople, took with him Vitiges, with his Queen, many of his Kindred and other principal Men of the Gothes, his Prisoners, and was received into Constantinople with exceeding Honour, and much Joy, and was looked upon as the Wonder of the World, every one extolling his Vertues and noble Acts. He was a Man of a pleasant Countenance, tall of Stature, of an excellent Constitution, Noble of Condition, Pious, Mild, Courteous; and endued with many other Rare and Heroical Vertues.

Belisarius his Character.

He is sent into the East

Within a few Dayes after he came to Constantinople, he was sent into the East against Cosroes, and with his coming the Imperialists took new Heart, and and he Revived the War with such Discretion and Courage, that there was a present Alteration in all things: And having obtained some Victories, he soon recovered most of that which was lost. But whilst thus he was far from Italy, the Goths which kept some Garrisons there, assembled together, and chose one Idibaldus King; but not long after, his Guard slew him: In whose place they chose Araricus King, who was also slain within five Moneths, and then they chose Totila for their King, who presently marched through all Italy without any great Resistance, and besieged the City of Naples, which, after many Exploits both by Sea and Land, he took, and prospered so much in his Enterprises, that he was like in a short space to make himself Lord of all Italy: Which Justinian hearing of, sent to Belisarius, commanding him to leave the Affairs of the East in as good a posture as he could, and speedily to return to Constantinople; whence without any stay he was presently sent by the Emperour into Italy, whither he led with him but fifty thousand Men, expecting that he should have found sufficient Forces there: For the Emperour was made to believe that his Affairs were not in so low a state as they proved. His coming was much expected by his Friends, and feared by his Enemies; but when they saw that he brought so small an Army with him, his Friends grieved, and his Enemies contemned him.

Policy.

Putting himself into Ravenna, he fortified and kept the same, and within few Dayes took such Order, that though he could not match his Numerous Enemies in the Field, yet by Policy, he won upon them: Whereupon Totila being Angry, assembled his whole Power, sent one part of his Army to Ravenna against Belisarius, and with the rest he went to Rome, which was so slenderly provided with Men and Ammunition, that it was not like to hold out long: Belisarius understanding this, remembring with what Trouble and Care he had formerly Defended that City, and having not sufficient Forces to Relieve it by Land, he was very sorrowful, and thereupon wrote earnestly to the Emperour to send him Men and Money, and in the mean time he resolved to put himself into Rome by Sea: And so passing over into Dalmatia, he went to Durasso, where he met with Captain John, whom the Emperour had sent with an Army to assist him: But judging that the Relief of Rome was presently necessary, he took the Sea, to enter Rome by the River Tyber, appointing Captain John to hast his March by Land to Relieve him: Coming to the Mouth of Tyber, he speedily Rigged a great number of Barks and Frigots, with which he passed up the River, in the narrowest part whereof, Totila had drawn a Chain a cross, made a Bridge, and two Castles at either side, guarded with a great number of Souldiers: yet Belisarius with his Men, charged the Guard so lustily that they scattered them, and Rome had been presently Relieved, if by a strange mishap it had not been prevented: Indeed God (who had raised up these Goths to scourge the Romane Empire, and to punish the sins of Rome, and the Decay of Zeal, and Increase of Superstition in the Church) had otherwise determined of it.

Gods providence remarkable.

For Belisarius having left his Wife, whom he dearly loved, with his Family in a Port at the mouth of the River, under the Care of a good Captain, and a strong Garrison, had News brought him, that the Town was taken, and his Wife in the Enemies Hand, which so grieved and enraged him, that he presently returned down the River, determining to recover his Wife, or lose his his life, presuming that if he sped well, he might presently return to the Relief of Rome again: Being come to the Port, he found the Town safe, and his Wife well, and at Liberty, whereupon he was more grieved to see himself so Deluded: And the same Night it pleased God (who maketh all things to concur for the effecting of his own Will) that he fell sick of a Feaver, and his Disease daily encreating, he was often at the Point of Death.

In the mean time Totila so straitly besieged the City of Rome, that they within did eat Cats, Rats, Dogs, &c. And yet many Dyed of Hunger: So that in the end he became Master of it, burnt the Capitol, and the best part of all the City, threw down the third part of the Walls, commanded the Inhabitants upon the pain of Death to depart, and live in other places: And so he left that City Burnt, Desolate, and Wast, which had been the Mistress of the World. And then he marched against Captain John and his Army, that was coming towards Rome, who shewed himself so very a Coward, that he durst not stay his coming, but put himself into Otranto, whereby Totila took all Calabria, Abruzzo, and Lucania.

A great Famine.

Gods just Judgment on Rome.

In the mean time Belisarius, having recovered his Health, performed one of the most desperate Attempts that ever was undertaken: Which was with those Troops which he had, to go and put himself into the Desolations of Rome, where he presently caused Trenches to be Digged, Rampires to be made, and all the Victuals that could possibly be gotten to be brought thither. The Fame whereof brought many Citizens, for Love of their Country, to come and put themselves thereinto with him.

As soon as Totila heard hereof, by long Journies, he returned to Rome, assuring himself presently to enter it, and therein to take Belisarius: But Belisarius so valiantly Defended the same, that to his great Loss Totila was forced to raise his Siege: Afterwards Belisarius, having better fortified it, and left a good Garrison in it, went to joyn with John, and his Army, and to pursue Totila: But the King of Persia again making Wars in the East, Justinian sent for Belisarius to Constantinople, which when the King of Persia heard of, he concluded a Peace with Justinian, and so Belisarius remained in Constantinople all the rest of his life; during which time the Huns came down into Thrace, Robbing and Spoyling all the Country, against whom Old Belisarius was sent, who overthrew them in a great Battail, and so returned to the Emperour.

After Belisarius departed from Italy, Totila returned again and besieged Rome, and after a long Siege, wherein the Inhabitants and Souldiers endured great Extremities and Famine, he again took it, but did it no Harm, seeking rather to Repair and Repeople it, giving great Gifts, Priviledges, and Exemptions to the Inhabitants: Afterwards he took many other places, and then passed over into Sicily, but finding that the Conquest thereof would be difficult, he left four Captains with many Men of VVar, and so returned into Italy, where in a short space, he had made himself absolute Lord of the Country, had not the Emperour sent Narses, a Religious, Famous, and Valiant Captain with a great Army into Italy; who being in his March towards Rome, Totila met him, and presented Battail to him. They Fought, and in the Fight Totila was slain, and his Army routed, whereupon Narses easily reconquered all Italy.

Rome taken again.

A Battail.

Totila slain.

After Totila's Death, the Goths chose Teyas (a potent Man amongst them) King, who railed with Totila's Treasure a great Army, and so marched out of Lombardy to encounter with Narses. They both lodged their Armies upon a River side, where after some notable Skirmishes, they came to a Battail, which was one of the most cruel that had been Fought in all that VVar: Having fought six Hours, wherein Teyas in his own Person had done VVonders, he was at last slain; yet the Battail continued till dark Night: The next Morning they returned to the Fight again without ceasing, and the Goths, taking the advantage of an Hill, defended themselves till towards Night, at which time they sent Ambassadours to Narses, profering to resigne all they held in Italy to him, provided that he would let them Live in it, without Armour or Weapons. Narses granted their Request, for that he would not fight with a desperate People, himself also having lost many of his Men in the Fight: And so they delivered what they possessed, and in a short time after they were so mixed with the Natives, that the Name of the Goths was wholly extinct and forgotten.

A terrible Battail.

The Goths wholly vanquished.

Rome contracted.

Narses after this applyed himself to the Re-edifying of Rome: And because it was extream Ruinous, and the Inhabitants few, he contracted the compass of it, and setled the Government of it, and of Italy in the best manner he could:

Narses his Character.

He was a Man of great Judgment, a good Christian, zealous in Religion, and an excellent Captain, and held the Government of Italy under Justinian all his life after.

Earthquakes, &c.

In Justinians time, besides these and many other Wars, there happened great Earthquakes, Famine, and many other Calamities:

Justinians Character.

He was a Godly and Excellent Prince, who provided for all his great Wars without Taxing or Oppressing his Subjects: And in his Civil Government he was so careful, as if he never had applyed himself to any thing else: For whereas the Laws, made by former Emperours, were many, tedious, obscure, and sometimes contradictory each to other, he contracted, cleared, and made them Uniform, adding New, where there was a Defect. And whereas they contained two Thousand Books before, he reduced them to fifty, called the Digest, and compiled four Books of Institutes: And other Decrees, which were dispersed into divers Books, he reduced to twelve, called Justinians Codex. He was very curious in Architecture, and built many great and sumptuous Edifices. Being grown old, and having no Son to succeed him, he Adopted his Daughters Son, called Justin, for his fellow Emperour. And after so many Noble Acts, he left this for a better Life in the Eightieth Year of his Age, and of his Reign, thirty Nine, Anno Christi 568. His Death was greatly lamented, and deplored through the whole Empire.

His Death.

Ingratitude.

As some Write, Justinians Wife was Theodora, a Woman infected with the Heresie of Eutyches, who after the Death of her Husband, out of Malice, and Envy to that Brave and Noble Captain Belisarius, caused his Eyes to be put out, and brought him to that extremity of Want, that he was forced to sit by the High-wayes side begging, Date obolum Belisario, For Gods sake, give an Half-penny to poor Belisarius, Evag. Vanity of Vanities, all is Vanity.

Worlds vanity.

One thing is very remarkable in this Godly Emperour Iustinian; Gensericus when he spoyled and plundred Rome, took the Vessels of Gold and Silver, which Titus had brought from the Temple in Ierusalem, and carried them with him to Carthage: These Vessels, amongst other spoyls, Belisarius met with when he took Carthage, and carried them to Constantinople: But Iustinian would not receive them into his Treasury, but sent them again to Ierusalem, to be disposed of for the good of the Church, according to the Discretion of the Christian Bishops which lived there.

Collected out of Evagrius, the Imperial History, and the Book of Martyrs.

The

HVNIADES

The Life of Huniades, Prince of Tranſilvania, who Dyed, Anno Chriſti 1450.

Huniades was born in Valachia, of Noble Parentage, and endowed with all thoſe Vertues which adorn a Prince, and therefore was Anno Chriſti 1443, made Prince of Tranſilvania, which at that time was much infeſted with the incurſions of the Turks: He was a politick, pious, valiant, and famous Captain: His Victories ſo great, that the like were never obtained by any Chriſtian Prince againſt the Turks, and his Name became ſo Dreadful to them, that they uſed to ſtill their crying Children with it. His Parentage.

At his firſt coming to his Soveraignty, he began to keep the Turks ſhort, by cutting them off, whenſoever they preſumed to enter into his Country: He ſhut up alſo the Paſſages whereby they uſed to enter, and ſo having made Tranſilvania ſafe, he went into Moldovia, and never reſted till he had quite wone it out of the Turks Hands: Then he paſſed over Danubius into their Dominions, making Havock of all, and carrying back a great Booty, and many Captains.

At this time Iſa Baſſa, a great Favourite of Amurachs, was Governour of Temeſwar, and an excellent Souldier; he to pleaſe the Sultan his Uncle, continually forraged the Country about Belgrade, burning the Villages, driving away the Cattel, and taking the people Captives: Sometimes alſo he brake into Huniades Country, laying in every place as he went, ſtrong Ambuſhes, hoping to entrap that wary Captain; But Huniades purpoſing Revenge, raiſed a ſtrong Army both of Horſe and Foot, and paſſed over Danubius, Encamping near to Belgrade: Which Iſa hearing of, preſently ſet forward with a great Army to meet him: And coming on in good order, he found Huniades as ready for the Battail as himſelf. The Signal of Battail being given, there began a great and cruel Fight: At the firſt Encounter the Wings of Huniades Army were forced to retire, but his Men at Arms charged with ſuch Fury, A great Battail.

Turks beaten. that many fell on both ſides, but moſt of the Turks, who were not able long to endure the ſhock, but were overthrown by Heaps, and at laſt betook themſelves to flight, and Iſa Beg; with them; Huniades and his Hungarians fiercely purſued to the very Suburbs of Sinderovia, ſo that moſt of the Turks were ſlain, and a rich Prey and many Priſoners fell to the Chriſtians, which they carried into Belgrade: The Fame of this Victory coming to Buda to Vladiſlaus, Thankſgiving. King of Hungary, he cauſed publick Thankſgiving in every Church, and ſent rich Preſents to Huniades, for his Encouragement.

Amurath much grieved with his Loſs, repaired his Forces, ſending Miſites Baſſa (a Man of great Experience, and Valour) with a puiſſant Army to Turkiſh Cruelty. invade Tranſilvania, where he Burned all that came in his Way, killing Man, Woman, and Children, without reſpect of Age, or Sex: Huniades having no Army to oppoſe ſo potent an Enemy, was much grieved for the ſpoyl of his Country, and therefore went to Alba Julia, to the Biſhop thereof: The Turks came on within ſight of the City, laying all Waſt before them, which ſo grieved Huniades and the Biſhop; that with a Tumultuary Army raiſed in Haſt, they Marched out, either to repreſs the Rage of the Turks, or dye Honourably: But they quickly fell into Ambuſhments laid by the crafty Baſſa to entrap them, and were forced to fly back into the City with ſome loſs; and Huniades in danger, flies. the Biſhop, taking a River with his Horſe, was there ſlain by the Turks: Huniades with wonderful Celerity went into the Borders of his Country, perſwading all to take Arms, and ſo having raiſed ſome Forces, he Marched back after the Baſſa, who was returning back, loaden with the ſpoyls of the Country: Pride. Meſites hearing of Huniades approach, proudly anſwered, Let him come, and with the ſpoyle of himſelf enrich our Victory: Yet withal, he appointed certain Companies of his beſt Souldiers in the Fight to ſet upon Huniades, knowing that if he were ſlain, the reſt would eaſily be put to flight, withal, giving them Tokens whereby they might know him and his Horſe: This Huniades being informed of by a Spie, he changed Horſe and Armour with a Valiant Gentleman that was like him, appointing him a ſtrong Troop of Horſemen to attend him, and watching his Opportunity, like a violent Tempeſt he fell on the Turks, and finding them out of Order, he ſlew many of them; but the Troops before appointed, ſpying the Counterfeit Huniades, made A great Battail. towards him as they were ordered, where began a cruel Fight, but at laſt the Turks prevailing, ſlew him and his Guard, though with great Loſs to themſelves: But Huniades himſelf rode up and down in the Army, encouraging his Men, and relieving them where was moſt need.

The Tranſilvanian Priſoners who were in the Turks Camp, chooſing rather to Dye, than to go into Captivity, in the Heat of the Fight, brake their Bonds, and took ſuch Weapons as came next to hand, with which they killed their Keepers, and ſo iſſued forth to help their Friends, laying about them Turks beaten. like deſperate Men, ſo that the Turks began to Waver, and afterwards to fly, whom the Hungarians purſued with a moſt terrible Execution: Meſites and his Son were both ſlain in their flight, with twenty Thouſand Turks, and of the Chriſtians were loſt about three Thouſand. All the Prey was hereby recovered, the Tents and Baggage of the Turks taken, and the poor Priſoners releaſed, who falling down at Huniades Feet, gave God thanks for their Deliverance by him: And he with Tears in his Eyes courteouſly embraced them, rejoycing at the publick good; himſelf giving moſt Hearty Thanks to God, Thankſgiving. and enjoyning the like to be done in all the Churches of his Province: Part of the ſpoyls he gave to Pious uſes, the reſt he divided amongſt his Souldiers, and ſent the Turks Enſigns, and the Heads of the principals of them to King Vladiſlaus.

Amurath was ſo enraged at this News, that he commanded a great Army to be raiſed againſt the Spring, which he committed to Abedin Baſſa, commanding ding him to enter into Valachia, and having laid it waſt by Fire and Sword, to go thence into Moldovia, and having done the like there, to go into Tranſilvania, &c. The Baſſa according to his Order marched into Valachia with eighty Thouſand fighting Men: Huniades willed the people to retire into the ſtrong Holds, till he came to help them. The Baſſa dividing his Army into two parts, laid all waſt before him, ſpared none that fell into his Hands of any Age, Sex, or Condition, but moſt of the people that were in the Fortreſſes, or Mountains out of his reach. Turks cruelty.

Having thus Raged there, he Marched into Tranſilvania, to have done the like in that place, but Huniades attended his coming with Fifteen Thouſand brave Men, which the Baſſa hearing of by his Scouts, preſently encamped himſelf, as being ſomewhat afraid of Huniades: Yet underſtanding that he had not a fourth part of his number, he Advanced forwards towards him: The Armies being within half a Mile one of the other, they made an Alt, reſolving to uſe their beſt Policy as well as Valour: Yet the next Morning they drew forth both their Armies, Warily ordering of them for the beſt Advantage: Huniades ſought by provident Fore-ſight, and Policy, to match the Huge Multitude of his Enemies, which when he had done, calling his Captains together, he with a chearful Countenance ſaid unto them. No Courage (Companions, and Fellows in Armes) could have induced me to Encounter ſo great a Multitude, did not Neceſſity enforce, your Approved Valour perſwade, and the Aſſured Hope I have in Chriſt Jeſus, above all things, confirm me; Chriſt hath Choſen us to Fight this ſacred Battail, and with our right hands to revenge the Diſhonour of his Holy Name, &c. And ſo with this moſt Holy and Chriſtian Speech, he enflamed their Hearts with a Reſolution of adventuring their Lives in ſo good a cauſe: The Baſſa alſo in the beſt manner he could, encouraged his Souldiers, telling them of their Victories, their Valour, their Number, and the contemptible Forces of the Chriſtians: But above all things, he willed them in the Battail to ſeek out Huniades to kill him, and thereby they might ſecure the Victory, and of him ſhould receive Honourable Rewards: And ſo marching forward, the Signal of Battail was on both ſides given, and they encountered together with ſuch fury and outcries, as never was any thing more terrible: The Turkiſh Horſe-men being more, and more expert, forced the Chriſtians to retire to their Men at Arms, but they charging the Turks home, ſlew moſt of them: In the main Battail of Foot, was a moſt cruel Fight between the Chriſtians and Janizaries, and ſuch a ſlaughter was made on both ſides, that the blood ran like Rivers, and ſo the Fight continued four Hours: At which time the Baſſa brought on his Rereward, Commanding them to compaſs the Chriſtians, and ſlay their weary Enemies, whereby they might obtain an eaſie Victory; Huniades prepared for this ſtorme, and encountered afreſh with them. And though the ſlaughter of the Turks was great, yet becauſe of their number they felt it not, and ſo fought it out deſperately, yet at laſt they began to faint, and by degrees to ſhrink back, whereby the Hungarians cheered up with Hope of Victory, eagerly preſſed on, till they put them to open flight: The Baſſa ſeeing that all things were deſperate, fled alſo with ſome of his Janizaries, but the Chriſtians fiercely following, ſlew ſo many of them, that of that great Army not one half returned over Danubius: Huniades wonderfully enriched himſelf and his Souldiers with the Spoyl of the Turks Camp: He took five Thouſand Priſoners, and one Hundred Enſigns, beſides their Tents and rich Pavilions: Then he cauſed General Prayer and Thankſgiving to God for three dayes in all the Churches of his Provinces; and carried the Enſigns and part of the Spoyl to King Uladiſlaus at Buda.

Huniades Speech to his Captains.

A terrible Battail.

The Turks beaten.

Thankſgiving.

Againſt the next Spring, Amurath raiſed a great Army to be revenged on the Chriſtians; Uladiſlaus, by Huniades perſwaſion, expecting no leſs, did the like, with which he Marched towards Bulgary, and coming near the Turks; Huniades with ten Thousand choyce Horse-men in the dead of the Night, went to fall upon the Turks in their Camp: And the Moon shining at that time, he discerned them to be buried in sleep and security, and having viewed the fittest place to assault them in, with a most Hideous out-cry he entered their Camp, Encouraging his Men valiantly to assail their Sleepy, Naked, and fearful Enemies: The Turks astonished with the Noise, at first rather made a stir, then Fought, but hearing that Huniades was there, as Men dismaied with his Name, they turned their Backs, and fled. In that Night, by Huniades, with ten Thousand Men, there were thirty Thousand of the Turks slain: All the spoyls of a rich Camp taken, their Ensigns and four Thousand Prisoners, and all with the Loss of five Hundred Men, and so he returned Loaden with Booty to the King, who received him with much joy, and Honoured him exceedingly: And then through all the Camp they joyned in prayers, and thanksgivings unto God for so great a Victory.

Huniades beates the Turks.

Thanksgiving.

Afterwards the Christians marching forward, took all such Towns in Bulgary as stood in their way: but being come to the great Mountain Hemus, through which they should pass into Thracia, the depth of Winter was come upon them, the passages of the Mountain were strongly shut up, and guarded with a great Army, commanded by Carambey Bassa, and the Army began to suffer great extremity for want of provision, so that at length they were forced to march backwards: which Carambey hearing of, presuming of a glorious and easie Victory (contrary to the special command of his Master) pursued them with his Army: Uladislaus was gone before, and Huniades was with the rereward a dayes journey behind. When news was brought of the approach of the Turks, his Soldiers much rejoyced at it, as deeming it much more honor to die in fight, then to starve with hunger and cold: Eight times did Huniades encounter with the Turkish Troops, and as often put them to flight: But when Carambey came on with his whole Army, Huniades was sorry that the King was so far before him; but making a vertue of necessity, he put his men in the best order that he could, and perswaded them not rashly, and furiously to run upon their enemies, as men prodigal of their lives, but to keep their ranks, and to fight like valiant men, intending to carry away the Victory, or to leave unto their enemies a bloody remembrance thereof: Immediately the battel began, and the Armies met together with great fury, many were slain on both sides: Huniades his Horse-men fought so, as if they fought for nothing but an honorable death. The Turks stood to it a long time, but finding that they fought against desperate men, at last they began to give ground: but Carambey coming on with fresh supplies, restored the battel almost before quite lost: Huniades seeing the fainting of some of the Turks, cryed out Victory, Victory, encouraging his Men as fighting under the protection of the Almighty: Carambey performed all the Offices of a prudent Commander, and Valiant Souldier, so that he stayed the Battail for a while, but at last seeing the case desperate, he fled amongst the rest, and his Horse falling into a Bog, he was taken by a private Souldier: Huniades seeing so brave a Man in the Hands of a common Souldier, asked him if he would sell his Prisoner; and he asked Ten Ducats for him, Huniades presently gave him Four Hundred Ducats: The Despot of Servia coming afterwards into Huniades Tent, asked him how he would Ransome his Prisoner, who answered that he valued him at Forty Thousand Ducats, which the Despot gave him. O the mutability of all worldly things! Carambey, allayed to the great Turk, and immediately before so great a Commander, was now twice in one day Prized, and valued by his Enemies.

Turks beaten.

A Battail.

A great Victory.

Mutability of earthly Glory.

Shortly after, Huniades consulting with Uladislaus after so great a Victory, attempting the opening of the Straites, but finding the Difficulties, and Dangers gors great, the Winter cold, and raging, and the Wants in the Army daily encreasing, they resolved to return the same way they came: Which the Turks beholding from the Mountains, and having fresh supplies come to them, they followed them at the Heels, and often skirmished with them, but at last the King came to Belgrade, where he was joyfully entertained by his Subjects; and after some few Dayes stay there he went to Buda, and in the Cathedral Church returned Humble and Hearty Thanks for his good Success, hanging up in the same Church many of the Enemies Ensigns in remembrance of so notable a Victory. Thanksgiving.

Amurath being at this time engaged in his Wars against Scanderbeg, by the perswasion of his Bassa's, sent Ambassadours to Vladislaus, who concluded an Honourable Peace with him for Ten Years, and the same was confirmed by the solemne Oath of both parties: But many great Kings and Princes were much discontented at it, and endeavoured to perswade the young King to break it: And the King calling a Councel of all the Nobility of Hungary to consult about that business, Julian the Popes Legat, made a large speech against the Peace; and having at last prevailed with the King, he absolved him from his Oath given to the great Turk. Amurath ignorant of these proceedings, according to his Agreement with-drew his Garrison out of Servia, restoring it to the Despot, together with his two blind Sons, and set at Liberty a great number of captive Christians, faithfully performing whatsoever he had promised upon his Religion. Peace concluded. Popish perfideousness.

But Vladislaus in the mean time prepared his Forces, sent to Scanderbeg to come, and to joyn his strength with his, (though God prevented it, as is mentioned in the life of Scanderbeg) and being daily pricked forward by the earnest Solicitations of the Popes Legat, having assembled a great Army of brave Souldiers, Hungarians and Polonians, he Marched into Bulgary, came to Nicopolis, the chief City thereof, where he burnt the Suburbs, and refreshed his Army three or four days, and then marched towards Thracia, taking in many Towns and Forts by the way. Anno 1444.

Amurath awakened with the Noise hereof, raised a great Army of an Hundred Thousand Men, and so marched with them towards Varna, where the Christian Army lay. Huniades, the Christians General, hearing of the Approach of so numerous an Enemy, with great Prudence and Policy disposed of his Forces, guarding one side with a Fen or Marish, and the other side with his Carriages. The Turks approaching, began to skirmish with the Christians, which was maintained with great Courage till the Ground was covered with the bloud of the slain. At length the Battail being joyned, the Victory began to incline to the Christians; Huniades with his Horse having valiantly put to flight both the wings of the Turkish Army, making great slaughter wheresoever he came. A great Battail.

Amurath seeing the great slaughter of his Men, and all brought into extream Danger, pluckt the Writing out of his Bosome, wherein the late League was comprised, and holding it up in his Hand, with his Eyes cast up to Heaven, he said, Behold thou crucified Christ, this is the League that thy Christians in thy Name made with me; which they have without any cause violated. Now if thou be a God, as they say thou art, and as we Dream, revenge the wrong now done unto thy Name, and me, and shew thy Power upon the perjured People, who by their Deeds deny thee their God. Immediately after the Janizaries, which were the greatest strength of the Turks, began a most cruel Fight against the Christians; yet where the King and Huniades fought, the Turks shrunk back: But they prevailed on the other side of the Army, which Huniades (having a Vigilent Eye to every place) perceiving, presently rode thither, and with his Presence restored the Battail, before almost lost: In the mean time the young King, with greater Courage than Care of himself, brake into the Battail of the Amurath appeal to Christ.

Janizaries, where a French Knight of the Roades, wounded Amurath with a Pike, and had certainly ſlain him with his Sword, had he not ſpeedily been reſcued by his Guard: Uladiſlaus having performed all the parts of a Valiant Souldier, had firſt his Horſe ſlain under him, and then oppreſſed with Multitude, was himſelf ſlain; whoſe Head Amurath cauſed to be held up upon a Launce, and Proclamation to be made, that it was the Head of the Chriſtian King: Which ſo diſcouraged the Chriſtians, that they betook themſelves to flight, and Huniades ſeeing no Hope to reſtore the Battail, with ſome Valachian Horſe-men, fled through the Woods and got into Valachia: Where, by Dracula, the Prince of that Country, he was taken Priſoner: And thus as God puniſhed good Jehoſaphat for joyning with Ahab: So Huniades eſcaped narrowly with his life, and afterwards became a Priſoner for joyning with the perjured Popiſh King. Of the Chriſtian Army ſcarce a third part eſcaped, yet was there a greater ſlaughter of the Turks, who hearing much ſilence in the Chriſtian Camp, feared ſome Deceit, ſtaid two dayes before they durſt adventure to take the Spoyl. Amurath was very Melancholy after the Victory, having loſt thirty Thouſand Men, whereupon he ſaid, That he wiſhed not ſo great a Prize to gain many Victories. This bloody Battail was fought at Varna, Nov. 10. Anno Chriſti 1444.

Uladiſlaus ſlain the Chriſtians beaten, and their perjury puniſhed by God.

Turks loſt 30000. men.

Huniades being releaſed out of Priſon, the Hungarians called a general Aſſembly of the States, where they choſe Ladiſlaus, the Son of Albertus, Arch-Duke of Auſtria, for their King: But he being a Child of five Years old, they unanimouſly choſe Huniades Regent, during the Kings Minority, as of all others the moſt fit for ſo Great and Heavy a Charge: In which Office he ſpent four Years in Peace, deciding Civil Controverſies, compoſing Quarrels amongſt the Nobility: Equally adminiſtring Juſtice to all Men: Ending Controverſies, and that without any ſuſpition of Corruption, uſing therein ſuch Expedition, and never wearied Patience, in hearing every Mans Cauſe, that ſitting, walking, ſtanding, riding, he diſpatched many great and weighty Matters, always ſhewing himſelf Affable, and Courteous, as well to the Poorer ſort, as to others of greater Calling, that had Suits unto him, ſo that no Man was to his Friends more friendly, and to his Enemies more terrible: In times of Peace he was always provident for War, heaping up great Treaſures, without which the War could not be maintained, and in all things ſo carrying himſelf, that he was of his Subjects both beloved and feared.

Huniades choſen Vice Roy of Hungary.

His Juſtice, and other Virtues.

Ladiſlaus the young King of Hungary lived as yet at Vienna, about whom was Ulricus Earl of Cilicia a very potent Man, who much envied, and maligned Huniades, and prevailed with the King to ſend for him in a Friendly manner to Vienna, and then to make him away privily: But it pleaſed God that Huniades came to the knowledge of this wicked Conſpiracy, and thereupon returned Anſwer to the King; that he was ready to ſerve his Majeſty within Hungary in all his Affairs. But that it was neither beſt for the King, nor ſafeſt for himſelf to go out of that Kingdom: The wicked Earl being thus diſappointed of his Hopes, went to the Borders of Hungary with divers others in his Train, intending either cunningly to apprehend, and carry away Huniades unto Vienna, or elſe to Diſpatch him upon the place: But Huniades, though he profered in the open Field to Commune with him, yet by no means would he be got into the Town; whereby the treacherous Earl's Expectation was diſappointed.

Treachery prevented.

Afterwards an other Train was laid for him, that under pretence of the Kings ſafe Conduct, he ſhould meet the King in the broad Fields of Vienna: Huniades, though he ſuſpectd Deceit, yet came to the place, but when he neither met there the King; nor had the Earl any ſafe Conduct for him, he told the Earl that it was now in his power to ſlay him, who thus ſought

ſought his blood, but for Reverence to the King he would ſpare him, and ſo let him go.

In the mean while he was advertiſed by his Spies, that Amurath was raiſing great Forces againſt him; and therefore deſiring nothing more than to be Revenged for their great Loſſes at Varna, accompanied with the greateſt part of the Nobility of Hungary, and with the Vayvod of Valachia, he ſet forward againſt the Turks, with two and twenty Thouſand choice Souldiers; and going into Servia, he ſent to the Deſpot, deſiring him to joyn his Forces with them: But the falſe Deſpot did not only refuſe it, but gave Intelligence to Amurath of their Number, and every days March: And withal adviſed him to let them come ſo far into his Country, that he might get behind them with his Army, and ſo ſtop their Return. Which Advice the Turk followed, and ſo both the Armies came into a a great Plain in Bulgary. Treachery.

Huniades, daily expecting the coming of Scanderbeg with his Forces, declined the Fight, though Amurath daily provoked him: But he ſtill ſtanding upon his Guard, Amurath endeavoured to cut him off from Water, and Forage: So that Huniades was at laſt forced to fight, and therefore commanded his Souldiers to prepare themſelves: And the more to encourage them, he made an excellent and moſt Chriſtian Speech to them, deſiring them not to be diſcouraged for the Remembrance of the loſs of the Battail at Varna, for therein God had juſtly revenged the Chriſtians Breach of Faith, and all the Authors of that perfidious dealing, were juſtly cut off: Whereas (ſaid he) we, againſt our Wills drawn into that woful War, through the mercy of God yet live, preſerved for the defence of the Chriſtian Common-wealth: Hitherto we have rather fought by the power of God than of Man, and in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, have eaſily overthrown theſe wicked Infidels. We have fought under the Leading and Conduct of the Higheſt, whoſe help we have always felt at hand, and therefore we need not fear their great Multitude, &c. Neither did Amurath neglect to order his Battail, and encourage his Men, whoſe Army filled all the Plain from one ſide to another, to the great Aſtoniſhment of the Chriſtians. About nine a Clock the Signal of Battail being given, the fierce and couragious Souldiers began to skirmiſh; but afterwards they fought Foot to Foot, and Hand to Hand for three hours; at which time the Chriſtians put the right wing of the Turks to the worſt, and alſo in the left wing they did the like with great ſlaughter of the Turks. Amurath preſently ſent in ſtrong ſupplies, whereupon the Chriſtians light Horſe-men, wearied before, retired to their men at Armes, who ſerving together, eaſily repulſed the Turks, and made a great ſlaughter of them. Huniades ſpeech to his Souldiers. The firſt days fight.

Huniades in the mean time with his Artillery from the Hill, did the Turks great harm; which Amurath perceiving, drew up his men cloſe under the Hill, whereby that miſchief was prevented: Huniades encouraged his men ſometimes with cheerful ſpeeches, ſometimes with his own moſt valiant Hand: to the weary he ſent relief, the fearful he animated, thoſe that were flying he ſtaid, and where the enemies came faſteſt on, there was he preſent himſelf to meet them, performing all the offices of a good General, and worthy Soldier, whereby the Battel grew ſo fierce and terrible, that every place was ſoiled with the Blood of the ſlain: but the Turks came on ſo faſt with freſh ſupplies, that one Battalion of the Chriſtians was oft-times enforced to weary four or five of the Turks before they could be Relieved. The cruel Fight maintained all the day, was by the coming of the Night ended, both Armies retiring to their Trenches, and with little reſt was that Night ſpent: It was ſcarce fair day, when both the Armies orderly ranged, began the Battail again: But the Chriſtians had almoſt ſpent their ſtrength the day before, whereas there were forty thouſand Turks that had not fought at all: Yet Huniades wonderfully encouraged his Men by many Arguments, beſeeching them for the Love of God and Man, with their wonted Valour that day for ever to ſet at liberty themſelves, their A dreadful Battail. The ſecond Battail.

country, their wives, and Children, and whatſoever elſe they held dear unto them.

So that both the Armies being fully joyned, the battel was fought with no leſs force and fury then the day before: yea many of the wounded Chriſtians came again into the battel, there either by ſpeedy death, or ſpeedy Victory, to cure their wounds, and did excellent ſervice. Thus the battel continued all day long, yet the Turks had the better, and ſo both Armies, throughly wearied, returned to their Tents.

The third days fight.

The next morning by the dawning of the day, the battel was again begun, where for certain houres, it was fought with like hope on both ſides, and a great ſlaughter made: many of the Hungarian Nobility there loſt their lives, valiantly fighting againſt their enemies; whereupon Amurath commanded forth all his reſerves at once with their number to overwhelme the wearied Chriſtians, which accordingly ſucceeded, for the Chriſtians, weak and wounded, were hereby wholly overthrown, which Huniades ſeeing, ſaved himſelf by flight, the like did many of the Chriſtians, whom the Turks eagerly purſued till the night ſtopped them; Then the Turks Army compaſſing in the Hungarian Camp to rifle it, wereby the wounded Soldiers, Wagoners and other drudges of the Army, kept out ſo long as they had any ſhot left, who at length were all ſlain, yet not altogether unrevenged. In this battel the Turks loſt four and thirty thouſand men, for eight thouſand of the Chriſtians.

The Chriſtians overthrown.

Huniades eſcaped.

Huniades all alone, by uncouth wayes travelled three days and nights without meet, or drink, and the fourth day tyred his Horſe, and caſt him off: and afterwards being himſelf on foot diſarmed, he fell into the hands of two notable thieves, who diſpoiled him of his apparel, but falling at ſtrife in parting the prey, he took occaſion to lay hand on one of their Swords, with which he ſlew one of them, and put the other to flight; ſo travelling on, almoſt ſpent with hunger and thirſt, the next day he light upon a Shepherd, a ſturdy knave, who hearing of the Hungarians overthrow, was roaming abroad in hope of prey: at his firſt ſight of Huniades he ſtood at a gaze, ſtricken with his majeſty: Huniades alſo being ſo extream weak deſired not to have to do with him: at laſt the ſhepherd bluntly asked him of his fortune, and he for Gods ſake craved ſomething to eat, the ſhepherd moved with the promiſe of reward, brought him to a poor cottage hard by, and cauſed bread and water with a few onions to be ſet before him, who after-wards at his bankets would pleaſantly ſay, that he never in his life fared better, nor more daintily, then when he ſupped with this Shepherd. Thus refreſhed, he went to Synderovia, which the Deſpot having intelligence of, cauſed him to be apprehended and impriſoned, yet at laſt releaſed him upon certain conditions: but ſhortly after, the Deſpots country being invaded by the Turks, he ſent to Huniades, craving pardon for his offence, and humbly intreating aid of him: which Huniades readily granted, he went himſelf with his forces, and ſo joyned with the Deſpot, he marched ſpeedily againſt the Turks, who ſpying Huniades his Enſign in the Chriſtians Army, as men wholly diſcouraged, betook themſelves to ſpeedy flight, after whom followed the Chriſtians with moſt bloody execution, purſuing them all that day, and had not the night come on, few of them had eſcaped: the General, and moſt of the Turks chief Commanders were taken Priſoners: then did Huniades enter far into Bulgary, burnt the chief City, and having well revenged himſelf of the Turks, he returned with triumph to Buda.

Huniades in great danger.

Almoſt famiſhed.

He is relieved by a Shepherd.

Hunger the beſt ſauce.

He is impriſoned by the Deſpot.

He forgives the wrong.

The Turks beaten.

Amurath being dead, and Mahomet ſucceeding him, having taken the great City of Conſtantinople, his next deſign was againſt Belgrade, which ſtands upon the great River of Danubius, and was the Key of Hungary, which being taken, would let him into the heart of the country; and for that end, he raiſed raiſed an Army of an Hundred and fifty Thouſand of his beſt Souldiers, and ſent before him two Hundred Ships and Gallies up the River, to prevent the Victualling of the City by Water, and preſently after came himſelf with all his Army, and ſat down before it, and with the Fury of his Artillery overthrew a great part of the Wall, which the Defendants with great Induſtry ſpeedily Repaired. Huniades alſo ſent a Fleet of Ships, which encountering with the Turks Fleet, took twenty Sail of them, and ſo terrified the reſt, that they were glad to run themſelves a ground near to the Turks Camp: All which were preſently ſet on fire that they ſhould not come into the Hands of the Chriſtians. His Navy beaten.

Mahomet Prepares to beſiege Belgrade.

Huniades being thus Maſter of the River, himſelf with five Thouſand Valiant Souldiers entered into the City. Mahomet reſolved to gain the City, and for that end having made a great Breach, he appointed the next day to give a general Aſſault, but whileſt he was preparing for it, Carazias Baſſa, his Lievtenant General, was ſlain with a great Shot from the Town, with which the proud Tyrant was exceedingly troubled, yet went on with his Purpoſe, and the Janizaries, his beſt Souldiers, without any great Reſiſtance entred the Breach, the like did others in many parts of the City, whereupon they reckoned that it was their own: But the Valiant Huniades iſſuing out on every ſide with his moſt reſolute Souldiers, ſo oppreſſed the Turks, that few of them that were entred the City eſcaped, but either were ſlain or taken Priſoners, and the reſt with exceeding Slaughter were beaten from the Walls: Preſently alſo in this Confuſion, Huniades Sallied out of the Town, ſet upon the Turks that guarded their great Ordnance, whom with great Slaughter he drave from their Charge, and enforced them to leave them to their Enemies: Mahomet ſeeing this, courageouſly charged the Hungarians afreſh to have recovered his Ordnance, but was ſo Valiantly repulſed by Huniades, and beaten with Murthering ſhot from the Town, that he was glad when he got into his Trenches: Huniades alſo turned their own Ordance againſt their Camp, with which he did them no ſmall Harm: And being ſtrengthened with a New ſupply of Chriſtians, he aſſailed the Turks Trenches, at which the proud Tyrant, never before ſo braved, iſſued out, Valiantly encountering him, beat him back again to the great Ordnance, from whence he was again by the Chriſtians beaten to his Trenches. Huniades goeth into Belgrade. The Turks beaten out of the City. Huniades ſurprizeth the great Ordnance.

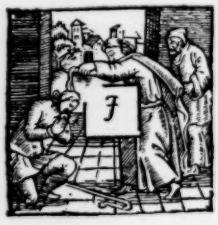
In theſe Hot Skirmiſhes the Captain of the Janizaries, with many other Valiant Men, were ſlain, and Mahomet alſo himſelf was ſo ſore Wounded under the left Pap, that he was carried into his Pavillion for Dead: But coming again to himſelf, conſidering that he had loſt his whole Fleet, his great Ordnance, and forty thouſand of his beſt Officers, and Souldiers, ſecretly in the Night he aroſe with his Army, and in great ſilence ſhamefully departed, ſtill looking behind when the Hungarians ſhould have purſued him, which for want of Horſe they could not do. Mahomet wounded. Flieth ſhamefully

Shortly after, this Valiant and Renowned Captain Huniades, worthy of Immortal Praiſe, grew Mortally ſick of a Wound received in thoſe Fights, who feeling himſelf in danger of Death, deſired to Receive the Sacrament, and would in any caſe (ſick as he was) be carried to the Church to Receive it, ſaying, It is not fit that the Lord ſhould come to the houſe of his Servant, but that the Servant ſhould rather go to the houſe of his Lord and Maſter; and ſhortly after he reſigned up his Spirit to God, Anno Chriſti 1456. Humility. Huniades Death.

He was much lamented, and Honourably buried at Alba Julia in St. Stephens Church.

He was prudent of Wit, diſcreet in Council, expert and politick in War, prompt of Hand, very circumſpect and wary before he attempted any thing, but very quick and expeditious when once reſolved. He maintained War His Character.

againſt two mighty and puiſſant Emperours of the Turks, Amurath and Mahomet the Great: And through the Lords Might, he defended all Panonia againſt them, and was as a mighty Wall, or Bulwark to all Europe againſt the cruel Turks, the Enemies of Chriſt and his Chriſtians, and therefore he was called the Thunderbolt and Terrour of the Turks: Neither was there ever any Chriſtian King or Prince, that gat ſo many Victories, and ſo profitable for Chriſtendom as he did.



Collected out of the Turkiſh Hiſtory, and the Book of Martyrs.

SCANDERBEG

The Life of George Caſtriot, alias Scanderbeg, King of Epyrus, who Dyed, Anno Chriſti 1466.

His Parentage.

Ohn, the Father of this George, was Deſcended of an Ancient Family, which had long Reigned in Epirus, or Albania, a part of Macedonia; yet he ſurmounted his Predeceſſors in Prudence, Gravity, and Magnanimity; in corporal Beauty, and Comlineſs of Perſon, and in many Vertuous Endowments: His Mother was Voiſava, Daughter of the King of the Tribullians, a Woman for Beauty, Wiſdom, and Excellency of Spirit, ſurpaſſing moſt of her Sex. God bleſſed theſe Perſons with nine Children, four Sons, and five Daughters, whereof this George was the Youngeſt, upon whoſe Right Arm, when he was Born, appeared the Form of a Sword, as Naturally imprinted, as if it had been Engraven by the Hands of a cunning Workman.

His Birth.

About this time the Ottoman Empire had extended it ſelf into Europe, and Amurath, the great Turk, having long afflicted Macedonia with a terrible and tedious War; John Caſtriot, amongſt other Princes, was fain to ſue to him for Peace; which he obtained upon Condition, that he ſhould deliver to him all all his Sons in hoſtage: which thing though it was very grievous, yet neceſſity forced aſſent.

Thus was George, with his other brethren, delivered to the great Turk; who faithfully promiſed well and honorably to intreat them: But this miſcreant having them in his power, falſified his oath, and cauſed them to be circumciſed; giving to George (in whom ſomething more then ordinary appeared) at his circumciſion, the name of Scanderbeg; i.e. Lord Alexander: He was about nine years old at this time, and Amurath, taking a liking to him, appointed him good Maſters and Inſtructers, under whom he quickly learned the Turkiſh, Arabian, Greek, Italian, and Sclavonian Languages: And as his ſtrength increaſed, he acquainted himſelf with all thoſe vertuous Exerciſes which might fit him for the War. And ſometimes with his Sword, ſometimes with his Bow, on Horſe-back and Foot, he gave forth incredible proofs of Agility and Readineſs of body, and of a forward and couragious ſpirit: Hereupon the Sultan made him a Sanziak, and Collonel of five Thouſand Horſe: His Brethren alſo proving very good Souldiers, he imployed them in ſeveral parts of his Empire. His learning and valour.

Scanderbeg when he was eighteen years old, was ſent by Amurath into Natolia; where, in his firſt Enterpriſe, his Vertue, and good Succeſs in War appeared, and he returned Victorious. And afterwards he, with his Regiment, always made one in all Enterpriſes; and the good Succeſs was, by the common conſent of all the Souldiery, ſtill caſt upon him, without the mention of other Commanders. And new Troubles ariſing in Aſia, he, at thoſe years, was choſen General of the whole Army; by which means he did eaſily ſurmount the glory of his former Acts, by the quick and ſpeedy defeat of his Enemies. Amurath wondred not ſo much at his happy ſucceſs, as at his Wiſdom and Prudence. Victorious in his firſt enterpriſe. His fame.

About this time there came a Gyant-like Scythian to the Court, demanding if there were any that durſt encounter him in Arms, and prove himſelf in Fight againſt him. Amurath proclaimed and promiſed to the Conqueror a great Reward, to encourage his Men to undertake the Combat. But when every one abhorred the purchaſe of Honour upon ſuch deſperate Conditions (for they were to fight in their ſhirts in a narrow place with their Swords only) Scanderbeg ſtepping to him, ſaid, Either ſhalt thou not, O Scythian, bear away this Prize, and Glory, or elſe, being made more Glorious by my death, thou ſhalt be enriched with theſe ſpoyls, and Ornaments, &c. In the Duel, Scanderbeg ſlue the Scythian, without Receiving the leaſt Wound from him; and preſenting his Head to Amurath, received the Reward of his Victory. A Duel wherein he ſlue a great Scythian.

Afterwards two Perſians, of a fair and goodly ſtature, came, and made the like challenge to fight on Horſe-back; and when all refuſed, he took up the Gantlet againſt them: and whereas (contrary to agreement) after his firſt courſe, they both aſſaulted him together; he ſo acquitted himſelf, that he ſlue them both, and preſented their heads to Amurath; and both by the Emperor and his Baſſa's, was admired and rewarded with great and bountiful preſents. If at any time he was imployed againſt the Chriſtians, and could not evade it without ſuſpition, he uſed to pray to God that it might be far from him, to purchaſe honor by ſhedding the blood of Chriſtians: and therefore he ever ſought as little as might be, to endamage them, and gave them opportunity to ſave themſelves. Whatſoever money came to his hands, he diſtributed it bountifully amongſt his Soldiers. He ſlew two brave Perſians. His bounty.

About this time died John Caſtriot in Epyre, which Amurath hearing of, ſeiſed upon his Kingdom, put Gariſons into all the Cities and ſtrong Holds, and poyſoned all the brethren of Scanderbeg, which was an extream grief to him, yet durſt he not diſcover the leaſt ſignes of it, but carried himſelf, as if he had preferred Amurath before them all. Amurath's perfidiouſneſs.

Notwithſtanding the Tyrant grew jealous of him, and put him upon all deſperate Services, hoping that by his Forwardneſs he would periſh in ſome of them; yet knowing how much Intereſt he had in the Affections of the Men of War, he carried fair Weather towards him. But rather the admirable providence of God in preſerving him is to be taken notice of: For the Tyrant wanted not Will, nor Power, nor Opportunities, nor Provocations from his Court-Paraſites to have taken away his Life, but the Lord preſerved him to be the Deliverer of his People, a Bulwark to the Chriſtians, and a Scourge to that proud Ottoman Empire in her greateſt height and glory.

As Saul did with David. Gods ſpecial providence.

Not long after, Amurath fell out with Uladiſlaus King of Hungary, for aſſiſting the Deſpot of Miſia, and thereupon, raiſing an Army of eighty thouſand Men, he ſent Carambey, the Baſſa of Romania, with Scanderbeg, and twenty Thouſand Men to Invade the Hungarians, himſelf following with the body of his Army: Uladiſlaus, with great Huniades, that famous Captain, prepared an Army of five and thirty Thouſand Men to encounter him: The Baſſa encamped by the River of Moravia; Huniades not enduring this Bravado, with ten Thouſand Men leaving the King in his Camp, paſſed the River to encounter with the Barbarians, who contemning his ſmall Number, began the Fight: Caſtriot (ſeeing an Opportunity to accompliſh what he had before determined) in the beginning of the Battail, he with his Bands, began to Retreat, and afterwards fled, thereby ſtriking a Fear into the other Turks, who ſoon fled alſo: Scanderbeg having before imparted his purpoſe to his Friends, eſpecially to his Nephew Amaſe, as they fled through a Wood, he laid his Hands upon the Turks Secretary, and cauſed him with Threatnings to write Letters in the Name of Amurath, to the Governour of Croia (the Regal City of Epyrus) to Deliver up his Command into the Hands of Scanderbeg, as deputed by him to have the Command thereof, and then killing the Secretary, he poſted by very long journies into the upper Dibria, where, ſending for ſome of the principal Men of the Town, he Diſcovered himſelf and his Purpoſes to them, who unamiouſly aſſented to what he deſired, preſenting to him their Eſtates and Lives, for the ſettling of him in his Kingdom; and ſo taking good Order for all his Affairs, he haſtened towards Croia; ſending Amaſe before, to carry News to the Governour, and to certifie him that Scanderbeg with his Train was not far behind: He took with him his Friends, and a ſelect Number of Dibrians, and ſo entring into Croia, he delivered the Packet, which being opened and Read, was eaſily believed, and the Governour prepared to depart.

Huniades

Scanderbegs Policy.

He becomes Maſter of Croia.

The Night after, his Men at Arms, which he had left ſecretly near the Town, were let in, with whom many of the Citizens joyned, who ſetting firſt upon the Watch, and then on the Garriſon, put moſt of them to the Sword, and ſo having made himſelf Maſter of Croia, he preſently ſent to Dibria to give his Friends Notice of his Succeſs, and to ſtir up that Country, and their Allies, to lay Hold upon the Opportunity for the Recovery of their Liberty: He alſo gave Notice to all the Country about Croia, ſtirring them up to take Arms to free themſelves from the Turkiſh Yoak, who readily, and with much Joy received him, and came ſo flocking in, that he quickly had a good Troop of reſolute and couragious Souldiers, with whom he preſently marched to Dibria, where Amaſe alſo had raiſed an other Company: Then he appointed two Thouſand Men to guard the Frontiers, and with the reſt he went into baſe Dibria, where a Noble and Brave Captain [Moſes Galome] came to him, that afterwards did him excellent Service.

Moſes Galome. His firſt Victory againſt the Turks.

In the mean while, many of the Turks in thoſe Parts aſſembled together to fight with him, but were eaſily vanquiſhed, and moſt of them put to the Sword.

Sword. Then Scanderbeg imploying his Captains to raiſe all the Forces they could; and make Noble Men of his Kindred, with their Followers, coming to him, he quickly had an Army of twelve Thouſand Souldiers well appointed, with theſe he Marched to Petrella a ſtrong Garriſon of the Turks, ſituate upon the top of a ſteep rocky Mountain; and partly with fair Words, partly with terrible Threats, he ſo far wrought upon the Governour, that he ſurrendred the place to him, and he with his Garriſon departed out of it: From thence having Garriſoned the place, he Marched (though in the Froſt and Snow) to Petra Alba, ſcituated upon the top of a Mountain alſo, as were all the Cities of Epyrus; there the Governour was content upon the ſame Terms to quit the place; and from thence Scanderbeg went to Stelluſa, to which he profered the ſame Terms as he gave to the other; the Souldiers were willing to accept of them, but the Governour oppoſed, but at laſt the common Souldiers laid Hold on him, and delivered him Bound to Scanderbeg, and ſo departed: Upon this News, all the weaker Garriſons eaſily yielded to him.

Petrella taken.

Petra-alba taken.

Stelluſa taken.

Then he went to Sfetigrade, where he attempted to have entred by a Treaty, but the Garriſon ſtanding out ſtoutly againſt him, and the depth of winter being come, he left Moſes with three thouſand Horſe to block it up, and to have an eye to the frontiers, and ſo he retired to Croia, where he diſbanded his Army, till there was further occaſion. Then he betook himſelf to the ſervice of God, and ſetling of his civil affairs; but preſently came news from Moſes, that many of the Turks were gathered together neer unto him. Whereupon Scanderbeg, taking his followers and a hundred Horſe, went ſtraight thither, which the Turks hearing of, preſently ſcattered; Scanderbeg then took a thouſand Horſe, that were with Moſes, and made an in-rode into Macedonia, ſpoiling all the Country, and returned loaden with the prey.

Sfetigrade beſieged.

He plunders Macedonia.

By this time Amurath heard of his eſcape, and of all that he had done in Epyrus, which exceedingly grieved and vexed him; Whereupon, calling a Councel, he made peace with the Hungarians, and bent all his thoughts againſt Scanderbeg. In the mean while Scanderbeg aſſembles a Parliament of all the Eſtates of Epyrus at Liſſa, where he was choſen General of their Forces.

The Spring coming on, Scanderbeg levied his Forces, and took the Field with ſix thouſand men, and ſo marched to Sfetigrade; but the Garriſon continued obſtinate, he ſpoyled the Country, that they might have no proviſion; and then with his Army he marched into Morea, a pleaſant and fruitful Country, which he quickly ſubdued, and added it unto his Dominions. This further incenſing Amurath, he commanded a puiſſant Army to be levied; which Scanderbeg hearing of by his friends at Court, he ſtrengthened himſelf by confederating with his neighbours: And in the mean time Sfetigrade was ſurrendred to Moſes.

Morea won.

Sfetigrade taken.

Amurath having raiſed an Army of forty thouſand choyce Horſe, committed them to the leading of Hali-baſſa, one of his moſt Valiant and experienced Captains: with the report whereof, the common people of Epyrus were extreamly affrighted, betaking themſelves to prayer for deliverance from ſo imminent a danger: many alſo flocked to Scanderbeg, to ſerve under him, out of whom he choſe eight thouſand Horſe, and ſeven thouſand Foot, and diſmiſſed the reſt.

With this Army, after prayers made to God, he went into the lower Dibria, where he heard daily of the approach of his Enemies: Hereupon he cauſed Gree Muſach and Amaſe, with three thouſand Horſe, to lie in Ambuſcado; which was no ſooner done, but the Turks began to approach, pitching their Camp neer to Scanderbeg, yet knew not that he was ſo nigh them. Scanderbeg having appointed good watch, bade the reſt of his men to betake themſelves to their reſt. The Turks having diſcovered him, grew very inſolent, and comming neer the Chriſtians Camp, began to revile them, and challenge them to the battel: Scanderbeg made his men to be quiet till the riſing of the Moon, then he cauſed them to refreſh themſelves with food, and ſo ſome of them to iſſue forth to skirmiſh with the Turks, in the mean time he ordered his battel: Hali-Baſſa, contemning the ſmall number of his enemies, gave the firſt charge with a ſmall Troop of Horſe, who after they had charged, retired, hoping that the Chriſtians with eager purſuit, would diſorder their battel: But Scanderbeg finding their policy, kept his men in good order. So both Armies coming on, the Wings began the battel afreſh; Scanderbeg bringing on the main battel in the face of the Baſſa, valiantly charged him. No ſooner were the battels throughly joyned, but the Ambuſcado brake out, and charged the Rereward of the Turks, making ſuch a ſlaughter, that ſome of them began to fly. Thus was the Baſſa's great Army diſtreſſed by a few. But He having placed his beſt Soldiers neereſt to himſelf, with them renewed the fight, ſo that Scanderbegs fortune was at a ſtand, till Vranacontes coming on with ſome freſh Troops from the Rere, brake through the Baſſa's Army, with incredible ſlaughter of his men; ſo that the Turks ſeeing their fellows lying by heaps wallowing in their own blood, betook themſelves to flight, whom the Chriſtians fiercely purſuing, ſlue two and twenty thouſand of them, took two thouſand Priſoners, and four and twenty Enſignes of the Turks: And ſo Horſing all his Foot-Soldiers with the Horſes of the ſlain Turks, he made a road into Macedonia, laying all waſt before him, and returned with a rich booty, beſides all the ſpoiles gotten in the Turks Camp; and with it went back to Croia, where he was received with wonderful joy. Hali-Baſſa, with the remainder of his men, returned to Adrianople, where he had much ado to to make his peace with the Sultan, who was almoſt ready to make away himſelf for his great loſſes, before in Hungary, and now in Epyrus.

A Battel.

Hali Baſſa beaten by Scanderbeg.

Of the Chriſtians were ſlain but 120.

See it in the Life of Huniades.

Popiſh perfidiouſneſs.

About this time the Popes Legat perſwaded the King of Hungary to break his League lately made with Amurath, ſaying, That Faith was not to be kept with Infidels and Miſcreants, and he abſolved the King and his Nobles from their Oath to the Great Turk: and thereupon great preparations were made, and a great Army raiſed, whereof Huniades was made the Lievtenant General. The King of Hungary alſo wrote to Scanderbeg, to come and joyn his Forces with them: which Scanderbeg, after a Councel held with his Princes, aſſented unto, and raiſing a potent Army, and ſeeking to God by Prayer, for a proſperous journey, he marched towards Hungary: But God intending to chaſtiſe the perjury of the Hungarians, and to preſerve Scanderbeg from having any hand in ſo horrid a ſin, ſtirred up the Deſpot of Miſia (a very Atheiſt) to deny him paſſage through his Country: Whereupon Scanderbeg reſolved to force it, though it was like to prove a difficult work; and indeed before he could do it, the Turks and Hungarians had fought a dreadful battel: wherein many were ſlain, and amongſt others, Vladiſlaus with his perjured Nobles, and the Chriſtian Army, was wholly overthrown. The news whereof coming to Scanderbeg, he was ſo grieved, and enraged alſo at the Deſpot, that he ſpoiled his Country with Fire and Sword, and ſo returned home again.

Perjury puniſhed by God.

Amurath hearing of the ſpoil that Scanderbeg had made in Macedonia, reſolved in the next place to take him to task; but firſt he ſought to undermine him by treachery, and offers of peace and amity, writing to him for that purpoſe. But Scanderbeg being well acquainted with his wiles, wrote back to him, rejecting his proffered peace. Amurath was much incenſed at this, and hearing that Scanderbeg had diſmiſſed his Army, and kept the Field onely with his Horſe, who alſo ranged up and down careleſly after prey, he ſent for Fereſey Baſſa, a Captain of a fierce and ready Spirit, and loading him with promiſes, if he returned Victor, he gave him nine thouſand Horſe, all choſen and pickt men,

Men, commanding him ſpeedily and ſecretly to enter into Epyrus, before the Enemy were aware: Who accordingly proceeded, and promiſed to himſelf Victory before he came thither. But all this was not concealed from Scanderbeg, who ſuddenly went and ſeized on a narrow Valley called Mocrea, which the Turks of neceſſity muſt paſs through; where, hiding his Men in Woods and Rocks, till the Turks were intangled on all ſides, they then violently brake out upon them, killing and ſlaying them at their pleaſure. The Turks made ſtout Reſiſtance for a while, but their Horſes in that place rather hindred then help them, ſo that the greateſt number of them were ſlain, and the reſt throwing away their Arms, upon their Knees craving Mercy, and had it, and ſo were made Priſoners. Fereſey Baſſa overthrown.

Fereſey almoſt in the beginning of the fight, ſeeing his Men encloſed and ſlaughtered, and not knowing his Enemies number, turned back with thoſe Troops that were about him, and ſo eſcaped, yet was purſued by the Chriſtians, and loſt many in his flight. Amurath, when he heard of it, was marvellouſly troubled and perplexed, bending all his thoughts againſt Scanderbeg: And therefore preſently ſent Muſtapha, a politick and hardy Captain, with a new ſupply of ſix thouſand Souldiers to take Fereſey's charge, commanding him in no caſe to enter far into Epyrus, but to burn and ſpoyl the Frontiers of it: Who accordingly coming into the Valley of Mocrea, pitched his Camp upon the ſide of an Hill, placed his Scouts upon the tops of the Mountains, kept four thouſand Horſe with himſelf in his Camp, and ſent nine Thouſand abroad to ſpoyle the Country: Scanderbeg drawing near to the Valley with four Thouſand Horſe, and one Thouſand Foot, was informed of all theſe paſſages, and ſeeing that Policy was not to be uſed againſt ſo Wary an Enemy, he reſolved to aſſault him ſuddenly in his Trenches, before his diſperſed Troops could retire to him: And ſo entring the Valley, he was preſently diſcovered, and warning given to Muſtapha, who endeavoured to call back his Men, and ſome that were near, haſted to him: Scanderbegs Souldiers followed them at the Heels, and aſſaulted them in their Trenches, beat them from them, and fell pell mell upon them, filling all their Camp with fear and ſlaughter: Muſtapha ſeeing that all was like to be loſt, eſcaped at the Port which was fartheſt from the Enemy, ſome of his Men alſo following him: Five Thouſand Turks were ſlain, three Hundred taken, and Scanderbeg loſt but twenty Horſe-men, and fifty Foot-men. Muſtapha overthrown.

Muſtapha afterwards obtained an other great Army of Amurath, with which he went againſt Scanderbeg, who lying at the ſiege of Dayna againſt the Venetians, had preſent information ſent him from his Gariſons upon the Frontiers of Epyrus, whom he commanded by a ſpeedy meſſenger, in no wiſe to encounter with the enemy, but to keep themſelves in their ſtrong holds till his coming, and ſo leaving Amaſe to continue the ſiege, he took five hundred Horſe, and a thouſand five hundred Foot-men, with which he haſted to the relief of his Gariſons: Muſtapha had ſought by all means to draw forth Scanderbegs men out of their holds: but ſeeing that they would not ſtir, he began to burn and ſpoil all the Country, till hearing of Scanderbegs approach, he called all his Army together and incamped within two miles of him: Scanderbeg drawing ſome Forces out of his Gariſons, had in all four thouſand Horſe, and two thouſand foot, with which, having ſtrengthened his trenches, he left three hundred for the guard of them, and iſſuing forth with the reſt, he placed them in order of Battel. Muſtapha did the like; but before the Battel began, there came from the Turks a man at Arms in rich and Gallant furniture, challenging any one of the Chriſtians to fight hand to hand with him: Paul Maneſſi thereupon ſtepped to Scanderbeg, deſiring leave that he might accept the challenge, and chaſtiſe the proud Turk, which Scanderbeg aſſenting to, and praying for his ſucceſs, he preſently mounted on Horſe-back, rode forth to the Turk, bidding him to prepare himself to the Battail: Both Generals agreed upon the Laws for the Combat, and so the Champions taking their Course, ran each at other with their Shears, and Menassi ran the Turk through the Head, and so slew him, and then alighting, he struck off his Head, took his Armour, and returned to the Camp loaden with his Spoyls

A Duel fought, and the Turks slain.

Scanderbegs Men were much encouraged with this good Omen, and the Turks as much affrighted, whereupon Scanderbeg presently marched forward against them, and charged the Turks with such Fury, that they presently began to retire: Mustapha seeing that, put Spurs to his Horse, resolving to win the Field or Dye; most of his chief Captains did the like, which a little renewed the Battail; but presently Mustapha and twelve of his chief Men were taken Prisoners, the rest slain and scattered: There were killed of the Turks ten Thousand Men, and fifteen Ensigns taken; the Christians lost but three Hundred, and they found a rich prey in the Turks Camp.

Mustapha beaten again and taken prisoner. The Turks beaten.

Then did Scanderbeg make an Inrode into Macedonia, spoyled and took a great Booty, after which he left Two Thousand Horse, and One Thousand Foot for the Guard of his Frontiers, and so returned to the Siege of Dayna.

Shortly after the Venetians made Peace with Scanderbeg; and Amurath sent him rich presents, with five and twenty Thousand Duckats to redeem his Captains, whom Scanderbeg had used Honourably, and sent them away with a safe Convey; the Money he divided amongst his Souldiers; and then he made an other Inrode into Macedonia, and dividing his Army into three parts, he laid all Waste, and brought away a rich Prey, that he might leave nothing for the Relief of his Enemies, when they returned again.

Scanderbegs bounty to his Souldiers.

Amurath was so incensed herewith, that he resolved to send no more of his Captains, but to go in his own person with such an Host, that should fill every Corner of Epyrus, and make an easie Conquest of it: Scanderbeg either having Intelligence, or suspecting the worst, when he heard of such great Preparations, advertised his Christian Neighbours to stand upon their Guard, and Mustered up all his Men, took up all the Provisions throughout Epyrus, where-with he stored his Garrisons, and thrust most of the Common People with their Provisions, into his strong Holds, leaving nothing to relieve his Enemies.

Then bending his chiefest Care for his Regal City of Croia, he placed in it a Garrison of one Thousand three Hundred old Souldiers, sent away all the Citizens that could not bear Arms, into the Venetian Territories, who after earnest Prayers and Supplications made unto God, departed with heavy Hearts. Out of all his Bands he chose ten Thousand expert Souldiers for a Field-Army: He made Uranocontes, a famous Captain, Governour of Croia; and so with his Army he marched into Dibria: And by the way he met with Moses, who had taken the like Care for Sfetigrade as he had done for Croia. But Scanderbeg fearing that that City would be first assaulted, went thither, made a Speech to the Souldiers and Citizens, exhorting them to be Valiant and Faithful, &c.

Amurath goes in person against Scanderbeg.

In the mean time Amurath had assembled his Army, consisting of an Hundred and fifty Thousand Horse and Foot, well furnished with all things needful, with which he set forward towards Epyrus, sending fourty Thousand Horse before him, to begin the Siege before Sfetigrade. The News whereof coming to Scanderbeg, he marched thitherward also with four Thousand Horse, and one Thousand Foot: And having from the Mountains viewed the Encamping of the Enemy, the Night following, with much Secrecie, he brought his Men in the Coverts of the Woods and Vallies near unto the Turks: The next Morning he sent out Moses and thirty others well mounted, driving ſome Horſes laden with Corn before them; which the Turks eſpying, they ſent out the like number to ſurprize them. But Moſes and his Men ſet upon them, ſeeing no more, and ſlew five of them, and chaſed the reſt to the Camp. Hereupon the Turks General ſent out four Thouſand Horſe after them: Theſe Moſes drew along till they were within the compaſs of Scanderbegs Ambuſhment, who preſently riſing out of the Coverts, ſet upon them, ſlue two Thouſand of them, took a Thouſand Horſe; and of the Chriſtians were loſt but two and twenty Men.

driving

A ſtratagem

Two thouſand Turks ſlain.

Eight dayes after came Amurath with all his Army in the beginning of May, Anno Chriſti 1449. and Encamped before the City. His firſt Work was to ſummon the City, and to ſeek to corrupt the Governour; but that not prevailing, he planted his Ordnance, and having made a Breach in the Walls, gave a terrible Aſſault to it: But the Garriſon gave them as valiant a Repulſe. And though the Aſſault was renewed again and again, yet ſtill they were repulſed; ſo that Amurath at laſt cauſed the Retreat to be ſounded. There were many other Aſſaults given, during which time Scanderbeg was ſtill in action, ſetting upon the Turks Camp, ſometimes in one Quarter, ſometimes in another; and then preſently departed, ſo that Amurath wondred what was become of him.

The ſiege of Sfetigrade.

The Siege continuing to the end of June, Scanderbeg brought all his Army towards the Turks Camp, and underſtanding by his Eſpials, that they lay in great Security there, the Night following he ſet upon one of their Quarters, and ſlue two Thouſand of them, and ſo retired; having taken two Hundred and thirty Horſe, and ſeven of their Enſigns, with the loſs of two and fourty Men.

Two thouſand Turks ſlain.

Amurath reſolving to ſhew his Wrath upon the City by a general Aſſault, appointed twelve Thouſand Horſe, and ſix Thouſand Foot under Feri Baſſa, to attend Scanderbeg: In the mean time he promiſed great Rewards to thoſe that ſhould firſt aſcend the Walls, and enter the City. There was alſo a great Tower of Wood made equal with the Walls of the City, ſo that they fought as upon even ground; and the Turks preſſing hard upon the Chriſtians, advanced their Enſigns upon the Walls: But Perlat the Governour, coming with a Company of freſh Souldiers, beat them back, took their Enſigns, fired their Tower of Wood, and ſo delivered the City.

Scanderbeg in the mean time came with nine Thouſand Souldiers to aſſault their Camp: But Feri Baſſa, contemning his ſmall number, encountered with him, and withal ſent four Thouſand Horſe to compaſs him in behind. But this Maſter of his Art, having Moſes in the Front, took two Thouſand Horſe to meet them, and ſo fought with them, that they had no great cauſe to boaſt of their coming. He ſlue alſo Feri Baſſa, fighting with him Hand to Hand, and drove the reſt back to the Camp, making a great ſlaughter of them; yet Amurath continued his Aſſault againſt the City till Night came on, in which he loſt ſeven Thouſand Men, beſides the Wounded: Of the Garriſon were ſlain only ſeventy Men, and ninety more Hurt.

Feri Baſſa ſlain by Scanderbeg.

Seven thouſand Turks ſlain.

Amurath not prevailing by Force, ſought by large Promiſes to corrupt the Garriſon, and at laſt ſo far prevailed with one baſe minded Traytor, that for a great ſum of Money he concluded to betray the City, and for that end he caſt a great Dog into the only Well which ſerved the whole City, which being in the Morning found by the Souldiers, they, upon a ſuperſtitious Conceit, refuſed to drink any more of the Water, notwithſtanding all the Perſwaſions and Arguments that the Governour could uſe, inſomuch as he was forced to make a Compoſition with Amurath, and then delivered up the City to him, and ſo marched away through the Turks Camp in ſafety, only Mahomet, a Prince of a fierce Diſpoſition, would have perſwaded his Father Amurath to have put them all to the Sword, which yet he refuſed. The Tray-tour remaining in the City was richly rewarded by Amurath according to his promise, but within a few days, was secretly, at his command, made away, as a just Recompence for his trayterous Wickedness.

Treaſon.

The reward of Treason.

Amurath placed in Sfetigrade a thousand two Hundred Janizaries in Garrison, and so raising his Camp in the beginning of September, returned Home, having lost thirty thousand of his Souldiers in that Expedition: Scanderbeg followed him at the Heels, and in many streets and passes assaulted him, whereby he slue many more of his Men, and then he besieged Sfetigrade, and gave two great Assaults to it, but hearing that Amurath was re-assembling his Army, and Winter growing on, he left it, spending the Winter in setting all things in order, and preparing for the next Summers War, having Intelligence that Amurath made extraordinary preparations against the next Spring. By which time, he had gotten together an Army of an Hundred and sixty Thousand Men strong: And so dispatches away forty Thousand Horse-men under the Conduct of Sebalias, a politick Captain, to Encamp before Croia, with a charge not to venture any thing against Scanderbeg; himself followed with the rest of his great Army: And when he was come, he sent to summon the City, and made mighty Proffers to Vranocontes, the Governour of it, if he would surrender it to him: But the Messenger was sent back with Scorn and Contempt, whereupon Amurath ordered ten great battering Pieces to be cast, and with them battered the City for four Dayes space in two places without Intermission, so that he beat down much of the Wall, which exceedingly Encouraged the Turks to make an Assault: And Mahomet, besides the large Proffers made by his Father, promised ten Thousand Aspers to him that should first advance his Ensign upon the Wall.

Amuraths second expedition into Epyrus.

Croia battered.

The Christians within were nothing Discouraged, but trusting in God, resolved to Defend it to the uttermost. Just as the Turks began the Assault, Scanderbeg with five Thousand Men brake into one of their Quarters, and at the first Encounter slue six Hundred of them, and was spoiling their Tents: But Mahomet with his Guard, and four Thousand more sent by Amurath, hastening thither, and Moses also (having done them much Harm) retreated with his Men to the Mountains, whilest Scanderbeg in the Heat of the Fight, had so far engaged himself amongst the Turks, that he was in much Danger to be slain, or taken Prisoner, but at length, resolutely breaking through them, he escaped, and came to his Camp to their great Joy and Comfort.

Assaulted.

Scanderbeg in danger.

Then Amurath caused the Assault to be renewed with more Fury, and continued it till almost Night, in which he lost eight Thousand Men, without any considerable Damage to the Garrison. Mahomet, hearing where Scanderbeg was Encamped, took all the best Souldiers in the Camp, and lodged in that Quarter which was next him, hoping at his next Assault to entrap him: Which Scanderbeg, being by Fugitives informed of, appointed Moses the Night following with five Hundred Horse to Alarum that Quarter, and and then to retire to his Camp, whilst himself with the rest of his Men, going through By-wayes, brake in on the other side of the Turks Army, where he made such Havock amongst them, that their loss in the storm was forgotten in comparison of this: And then fearing to be oppressed with Multitude, he retired to his Camp.

The second Assault.

The next Morning Amurath encouraged his Men again to make a new Assault, which they did perform with much Fury, and continued it long by fresh supplies, but they were so bravely repulsed by the Christians, that at last he sounded the Retreat, grieving much to see so many of his Men slain.

His next Design was, to undermine the City, and as he was doing of it, a great Convoy of Victualls coming towards the Camp, Scanderbeg, having Intelligence of it, met the Convoy, ſlue the Guard, and divided the Proviſion amongſt his own Souldiers; and having encreaſed his Army with two thouſand Recruits, he divided it into three parts, giving one to Moſes, another to Tanuſie, and took the third himſelf, appointing in the Dead of the Night to aſſault the Turks Camp in three parts; but himſelf being diſcovered by the Scouts, whilſt all Men ran to that ſide, Moſes and Tanuſie brake into two parts, where they ſlue a number of the Turks, and made a great ſpoyl. In the mean time Scanderbeg retreated, and ſat down on the ſide of a Hill, in the ſight of the Turks Army; which they taking as a Bravado, requeſted leave of Amurath to go againſt him, and accordingly their iſſued out of the Camp ſeven thouſand Horſe, and five thouſand Foot of their beſt Souldiers.

Scanderbeg ſeeing their approach, retreated ſoftly, waiting for Moſes and Tanuſi's coming to him: The Turks followed with much Difficulty, till perceiving the other Forces coming, they began to Retreat; whereupon Scanderbeg charged them with much Fury, and ſlue many of them. Moſes alſo came upon them, killing ſome, and taking many Priſoners in ſight of the Turks Camp, and ſo retreated again into the Mountains. All Amuraths Hopes failing, he ſent a Baſſa to the Governour of Croia, to try, if by large and glorious Promiſes he could win him to ſurrender the City. But Vranocontes ſcorning the Preſents which he brought, and the Promiſes that he made, charged him, that neither he nor any other ſhould preſume to come to him any more; for if they did, he would cut off their Hands, Noſes, and Ears, and ſo return them to their Maſter. The Turks beaten. Fidelity.

Hereupon Amurath, in a great Rage, commanded all things to be prepared for a new ſtorm, which the next day he put in execution, but to his own great loſs, the Chriſtians valiantly defended themſelves againſt the Turks fury: This put him almoſt out of his Wits, in ſo much that he pulled off his Hair; and though his Baſſa's endeavoured to comfort him, yet he became ſick of Grief, that a ſmall Town ſhould eclipſe all his former Glory; and finding that his end approached, he called his Son, and great Captains, charging them not to leave his Death unrevenged; and ſo ſhortly after he gave up the Ghoſt. The third aſſault. Pride. Malice. Amurath dieth.

After the Death of Amurath, Mahomet preſently raiſed the Siege, and returned to Hadrianople; yet ſhortly after he ſent Ambaſſadors to Scanderbeg, proffering Peace, if he would pay him a certain Tribute; which motion Scanderbeg ſcornfully rejected, and ſo diſmiſſed the Embaſſadours, and preſently after he made an Inrode into the Turkiſh Dominions, which he grievouſly waſted, and returned Home loaden with ſpoyl.

But Mahomet to requite him, ſent Ameſa, one of his beſt Captains, with twelve thouſand Horſe-men, to do the like in Epyrus: Which scanderbeg underſtanding by his Eſpials, he lay cloſe in Ambuſh with ſix thouſand Souldiers upon the great Mountain Modriſſa, over which the Turks were to paſs; who, with much difficulty, having almoſt got to the top thereof, in the Night, were ſuddenly charged by scanderbegs Foot-men, who made a great ſlaughter of them, their Horſes being rather an hindrance than an help to them, ſo that they were driven down the Mountain amain; and when they came to the foot of it, they were again charged by Scanderbeg, and Ameſa, who with their Horſe-men were ſet in places of Advantage: Hereby they were totally routed, ſeven thouſand ſlain, and Ameſa, with moſt of the beſt Captains, taken priſoners, with whom he returned with great joy to Croia, uſing his priſoners very courteouſly. Ameſa deſired of him, that he might ſend to Mahomet, to inform him of their ſtate, which he aſſented unto, and ſet their Ranſom at thirteen thouſand Duckets. Mahomet ſtormed extreamly at this Diſaſter, and refuſed to ranſom the priſoners; yet afterwards, by the perſwaſion of his Baſſas, he ſent it, with other rich Preſents to Scanderbeg. Whereupon he ſent the Priſoners back with a ſafe Convoy, and divided the Money amongſt his Souldiers. Ameſa Baſſa beaten. And taken priſoner. Bounty.

The proud Tyrant reſolved revenge, and therefore ſent Debreas, one of his beſt Captains, loaden with promiſes of great preferment, if he prevailed againſt Scanderbeg, and under him, fourteen thouſand choyce Horſe-men, which were as many as Debreas deſired, and with which he promiſed to chaſtiſe Scanderbeg. Scanderbeg having Intelligence hereof, reſolved not to ſtay his coming into Epyrus, but to meet him by the way: And ſo taking ſix thouſand Horſe-men, he went into the Enemies Country, and came by Night into a great plain where the Turks lay, hoping not to have been diſcovered; but the Moon ſhining bright, the Scouts had diſcovered him, and gave the Alarum to their Camp, and Debreas mindful of his promiſe to his Lord, ſent out ſome Troops to skirmiſh with him, whiles he ſet the reſt of his Army in Order: Scanderbeg ſent out ſome to Encounter them; and ere long, both Armies charged each other with much Reſolution: And Debreas did ſo encourage his men, and fought ſo valiantly, that Scanderbegs Fortune ſeemed to be at a ſtand. Thus both ſides did their uttermoſt to conquer, one while one party prevailing, and then the other, till at laſt Scanderbeg encountred Hand to Hand with Debreas, and ſlue him, with whoſe Fall the whole Army was diſcouraged and fled, whom the Chriſtians eagerly purſuing, ſlue more in the Chaſe than in the Battail; for of the Turks were ſlain four Thouſand one Hundred and twenty; but of the Chriſtians very few. Scanderbeg returned Thanks to God for that Great and Doubtful Victory, dividing the ſpoyl and Priſoners amongſt his Souldiers, and ſo returned with great joy to Croia.

A terrible fight.

Debreas Baſſa ſlain, and his army routed.

Thankſgiving.

At the report of this Defeat Mahomet grew very Melancholy; whereupon his great Baſſa's offered to ſpend their Lives in that Service: But the crafty Tyrant intended to go another way to work, viz. to corrupt ſome of Scanderbegs chief Commanders, which would eaſilieſt turn to his Ruin. And amongſt others ſingling out Moſes Galome, which was counted the beſt Captain next to Scanderbeg himſelf, he found means ſecretly to ſend to him, proffering him ſtore of Gold, and promiſing golden Mountains, Honours about himſelf, yea, the Kingdom of Epyrus, if he deſired it. Moſes was at laſt prevailed with, yet preſently left not Epyrus, but perſwaded Scanderbeg to beſiege Belgrade in the Confines of Epyrus, which was held by the Turks, giving him Hopes of an eaſie Conqueſt.

Treachery.

Belgrade beſieged.

Scanderbeg deceived by him, made all things ready for the Siege, and ſent to Alphonſus, King of Naples, his ſpecial Friend, for ſome Men that were verſed in managing of Sieges; which he obtained from him, and ſo ſat down before Belgrade, with an Army of fourteen Thouſand brave Men, and in a ſhort time ſo diſtreſſed the City, that the Turks deſired Truce for ſixteen dayes, promiſing that if Relief came not in that ſpace, they would ſurrender the City to him. This Scanderbeg conſented to, and ſo himſelf encamped on an high Hill with three Thouſand Horſe, and one Thouſand Foot, and ſent Muſachius and Tanuſius with the reſt of his Army, into a great Plain, where they might lye freelier in that Hot Seaſon, and withal appointed five and twenty Scouts to keep continual Watch towards the Enemies Country.

Sebalias Baſſa ſent to the relief of Belgrade.

Mahomet hearing of this Siege, preſently diſpatched away Sebalias, a great Captain, with forty Thouſand Horſe to Relieve Belgrade, promiſing him great Rewards if he could bring him Scanderbeg alive or dead. This Baſſa by long Journies prevented the Fame of his coming, and drawing near to Scanderbegs Camp, he entrapped, or corrupted his Scouts, ſo that they gave no warning of the Turks approach: Yea, he came ſo ſuddenly on that part of the Army which lay in the Plain, that they had not leiſure to bridle their Horſes, or put on their Armour: Muſachius arming himſelf, endeavoured to order his Men, ſeeing equal Danger in Fight, and Flight, and therefore reſolved to ſell his Life as dear as he could; but ſeeing his Men ſlain by heaps about him, he endeavoured to have broken through, and eſcaped to the Mountains to Scanderbeg, but being oppreſſed with Multitude, he continued fighting to the Aſtoniſhment of his Enemies, 'till he and all about him were ſlain. Tanuſius made divers brave Attempts to have reſcued him, but finding it impoſſible, he exhorted his Men to flie, yet moſt of them were ſlain by the Turks in their flight. Muſaclius ſlain.

his

Scanderbeg from the Mountain ſaw this miſerable ſlaughter of his Men, and would with his handful of Souldiers have gone down to their Reſcue, or Dyed with them, but was with-held by his Captains, who told him, that he would thereby expoſe himſelf and them to certain Deſtruction: Sebalias being in the purſuit of Tanuſius and his party, with moſt of his Army, Scanderbeg came down ſuddenly upon the reſt, and ſlew them in an inſtant, and then following at the taile of the Turks, did them much miſchief, till Sebalias, gathering all his forces together, made head againſt him; yet Scanderbeg again charged them, and ſlew with his own hand two brave Champions which had before ſworn to Mahomet, to kill him if they met with him. The fight continued till the night parted them, and then both armies retreated, Sebalias to Belgrade-ward, and Scanderbeg towards Epyrus, whither he marched the next day, leaving good guards upon all the ſtreight paſſes, leſt the Turks ſhould breake into Epyrus: of Scanderbegs men were ſlain five thouſand, but moſt of them the Italians that Alphonſius had ſent him, and the Turks loſt three thouſand, Sebalias repared the battered walls of Belgrade, reinforced the Gariſon, and then returned with great triumph to Conſtantinople: being the firſt Captain that ever gave a defeat to Scanderbeg; and he was received there with ſuch applauſe, as if he had conquered a great Kingdom, every man talking of the praiſes of Sebalias: and no preferment was thought too great, or reward ſufficient for him. Scanderbeg ſlew many of the Turks. Belgrade relieved.

The poor Chriſtian Captives taken by him, were ſome ſold for Slaves, others impailed Alive upon ſharp ſtakes, others Hanged on Iron Hooks, and others cruelly tortured to Death at the proud Victors Pleaſure. Turkiſh cruelty.

Moſes hearing of this loſs, thought it a fit time for him to revolt in, and ſo went to Conſtantinople, where, by Mahomet, he was joyfully received, and Honourably entertained; Scanderbeg hearing of his Revolt, was at firſt much aſtoniſhed, but after a while he ſaid no more, but that he wiſhed that all Treaſon was together with Moſes gone out of Epyrus: Moſes much ſolicited Mahomet to continue his Wars with Scanderbeg, promiſing to do great matters therein: Yet the crafty Tyrant durſt not at firſt truſt him too far, till in time he had diſcovered that his Affections were wholly alienated from Scanderbeg. Moſes turns Traytor.

Then the Spring following, he gave him fifteen thouſand Horſe, which were as many as he deſired, and furniſhed him with all other warlike proviſion, with which he marched into Dibria: Scanderbeg hearing of the coming of Moſes, and what ſtrength he had, ſtood not upon Policy againſt him that had been privy to all his Stratagems, but marched with true Valour to encounter him: When the two Battails were ready to joyn, a Meſſenger came from the Turks, to ſee if any durſt prove his Valour againſt a Champion of the Turks hand to hand: The Challenger was accepted, and the Turk appearing, Zacharie Groppa, having obtained leave of scanderbeg, went out againſt him, and after a ſhort Parley, they ran with their Lances each againſt other with ſuch Fury, that both Horſes and Men were overturned: Then nimbly recovering themſelves, they drew their Scimitars, and encountered each other with ſuch ſturdy ſtroaks, that at laſt both their Swords fell out of their Hands, then grappling together, they wreſtled ſo long till Groppa overthrew his Adverſary, Moſes goeth againſt Scanderbeg. A Duel.

verſary, and with his dagger thruſt him into his throat, and then taking a ſword, he cut off his head, and returned loaden with his ſpoiles to Scanderbeg, who moſt honorably rewarded him; The Chriſtians ſhouted for joy, and the Turkes were as much diſcouraged. Then came Moſes with a loud voice challenging scanderbeg: But when he ſaw him preparing to meet him, he went back with ſhame to his Army: The ſignall of battell being given, both Armies met, and fought furiouſly, and Moſes with his choice men attended scanderbeg, hoping to have killed him, and a couragious Turk with his horſmans ſtaffe, bare him quite backward upon his horſe, ſo that the Turks ſhouted for joy, hoping that he had been ſlain: But Scanderbeg, chafed with ſuch an unwonted diſgrace, furiouſly aſſailed the Turk, and ſlew him: Moſes did what was poſſible to encourage his men, but ſeeing at laſt he muſt yield or die, he fled through by-waies to him well known; Eleven thouſand of the Turks wear ſlain, and not above one hundred of the Chriſtians, and eighty wounded.

Scanderbeg in danger.

Moſes and the Turks beaten.

Moſes before admired, was now ſcorned by the Turks, and Mahomet would have put him to a cruell death, had not the Baſſa's interceeded for him: Beſides, he was tormented in the conſcience of his own guilt, and ſo at laſt reſolved to eſcape, and caſt himſelf upon the mercy of Scanderbeg, and accordingly, taking his opportunity, he fled, and coming to Scanderbeg with his girdle about his neck, he fell at his feet and craved pardon: Scanderbeg tooke him up, kiſſed him, reſtored his eſtate, honour and offices to him, forbidding any man to ſpeak to his diſgrace of what had formerly paſſed.

A guilty conſcience.

Moſes returns to Scanderbeg.

This vexed Mahomet exceedingly, yet returning to his former artifices, he inveigled Amaſe, with the promiſe of the Kingdom, to revolt to him, who to give him the better aſſurance of his fidelity, carried his wife and children with him to Conſtantinople; There he was kindly entertained by Mahomet, and the Spring following he ſent Iſaac, the great Baſſa of Conſtantinople, with fifteene thouſand into Epyrus, and with him Amaſe with five thouſand more, who was to be proclaimed King at their coming into Epyrus, to draw the people to them: Scanderbeg hearing of it, ſent for all his great Captaines into Dibria, where the ſtorme muſt firſt fall, and cauſing all the ſtore, and cattell to be removed into ſtrong holds, he left all naked. By this time Iſaac was entred Epyrus, and Scanderbeg with ſix thouſand Horſe, ſeeming to be affrighted with the great Army of the Turks, fled towards Lyſſa in the Venetian territories, that thereby they might ſuſpect no ſubtility. Iſaac glad hereof, ſent out ſome Troops after him to mark which way he went, and ſo reſted his Army after their long journey: the Horſe-men at their return certified him that Scanderbeg was fled out of Epyrus, and not an enemy to be ſeen in all the Country.

Amaſe turns Traytor.

Iſaac Baſſa ſent againſt Scanderbeg.

Scanderbegs Policy.

Hereupon the Baſſa created Amaſe in the name of Mahomet, King of Epyrus, and ſo marched forward, yet commanding his Men upon pain of Death, not to break their Ranks: And at laſt he came to the famous Pharſalian plains. In the mean time Scanderbeg in the Night had ſent ſome Spies excellently well Mounted, to the tops of the Mountains, to give notice of the Motions of the Army of the Turks, and with his own Army he conveyed himſelf ſecretly by Night as near as he could unto them. The Enemy finding ſome ſtragling Cattel in thoſe Plains, fell to ſeeking after Booty, as Men without Fear; and at Night encamped without any great Watch, but only towards Lyſſa, whither Scanderbeg went. The next Morning the Baſſa came to the ſame Mountain, on the other ſide whereof Scanderbeg lay, and there encamped with half his Army, ſending Amaſe with the other half to burn and ſpoyl the Country.

Amaſe proclaimed King.

Scanderbeg, like a politick Captain, divided his Forces into three parts, one under Moſes, another under Tanuſius, the third he took to himſelf, appointing every one his part, and what he ſhould do, and ſo marched to the top of the Mountain, from whence he beheld how the Turks lay in the Plains, eſpecially they which were lately returned from ſpoyling the Country with Amaſe, how their Horſes were unbridled, and unſadled, themſelves ſome reſting on the ground, others victualling of themſelves, others at ſeveral kinds of ſports, and many faſt aſleep on the Graſs. The like negligence was in the Baſſa's Camp, all being without fear of Scanderbeg, of whom they had heard nothing for many dayes.

ing

Scanderbeg delighted with this ſight, placing more Drums and Trumpets in every part of his Army, than ordinary; himſelf, with ſome of his beſt Horſe-men, deſcended from the Mountain to oppreſs the Turks Scouts, and ſlue them all but one, who eſcaped, and gave the Alarm to the Camp. The Turks could not believe that Scanderbeg was ſo nigh them on that ſide: But Scanderbeg following at his Heels with his Horſe, and his Foot haſting after, began to break in upon them; and the other parts of his Army deſcended from the Mountain with ſuch horrible ſhouts and noiſe of Inſtruments of War, as if Heaven and Earth ſhould preſently go together; the Hills and Vallies with their hollow Eccho encreaſing the Terrour of the Alarm. Amaſe firſt made Head, and encouraged the Turks; with whom Scanderbeg encountred, and whilſt the Baſſa was coming to his Reſcue, Moſes on the one ſide, and Tannſius on the other, charged him ſo hotly, that he was glad to retire to his Trenches.

A great Battail.

The Turks beaten.

Amaſe ſtill with great Courage withſtood his Uncle, and encouraged his Turks: Yet Scanderbeg ſtill prevailing on them, they at laſt turned their backs and fled: Scanderbegs Horſe purſuing the Chaſe, ſlue very many, and took Amaſe priſoner. Moſes alſo had diſperſed the Baſſa's Army, and purſued them till they were out of Epyrus: Many were ſlain, and many taken priſoners, together with twenty of the Turks faireſt Enſigns, of whom were ſlain about twenty thouſand, and of the Chriſtians about ſixty. Scanderbeg poſſeſſed the rich Pavillion of the Baſſa; and his Captains had Tents with much rich Furniture, which were never prepared for their uſe.

And ſo with his victorious Army he marched to Croia, all the Country coming forth to meet him with Acclamations of joy. Amaſe was condemned to perpetual Impriſonment, and ſent to Alphonſus, King of Naples, with part of the ſpoyl, by him to be kept in durance.

Mahomet was much grieved for this loſs, and angry with the Baſſa; yet afterwards was pacified again. After which he concluded a peace with Scanderbeg for a year: And when that was expired, he ſent an Army under Synan-beg of twenty thouſand into Epyrus, with which Scanderbeg forthwith encountered and overthrew, ſo that few eſcaped by flight.

A Peace concluded.

Synan-beg overthrown.

Then ſent he Aſam-beg with thirty thouſand, whom Scanderbeg in plain Battail vanquiſhed at Ocrida, and took Aſam priſoner, and uſed him Honourably, and afterwards diſmiſſed him.

Aſam-beg.

Juſſum-beg came after with eighteen thouſand, was ſet upon by Scanderbeg, had many ſlain, and himſelf hardly eſcaped by flight.

And Juſſum-beg.

Then Caraſa-beg, an old and expert Captain, deſired Mahomet to let him try his Fortune, who ſent him with an Army of almoſt fourty Thouſand. Scanderbeg more feared him than any of the former, and therefore raiſed more Forces than ordinary: And to welcome him the better, he ſent two Thouſand of his beſt Horſe-men to lye in Ambuſh in the Enemies Country, who ſet upon the Vauntguard of four thouſand Turks, who expected no danger amongſt their friends, and ſlue moſt of them. With which unfortunate beginning Caraſa was ſo vexed, that had it not been for ſhame, he would have returned back again; yet coming into Epyrus, whilſt he was reſolving what courſe to take, Scanderbeg ſuddenly aſſaulted him before he could order his Men. But at the ſame time there fell ſuch a violent ſtorm, that the Armies were ſundred: The ſtorm continued three dayes, yet Scanderbeg was always vexing the Turks on one ſide or other: Whereupon the old General returned back to Conſtantinople with the remainder of his Army, and was well derided by his Maſter for having promiſed ſo much, and performed ſo little.

A Peace made.

Mahomet finding that he could not prevail by force, betook himſelf to Craft, writing kind Letters to Scanderbeg by his Ambaſſadors, and concluded a Peace with him, which was proclaimed with great joy, and faithfully kept for a ſeaſon, whilſt Mahomet made War with the Venetians; but there being new provocations on both ſides by the Borderers, Scanderbeg entred with an Army into Macedonia, made much ſpoyl, and returned with a great Booty. Hereupon Mahomet ſent Seremet Baſſa with fourteen thouſand Souldiers, to lye upon the Confines of Epyrus for a Guard, but to attempt nothing againſt it.

Seremet Baſſa beaten

Scanderbeg having Intelligence hereof, marched thither with twelve thouſand lying in Ambuſh near the City where the Turks were; and in the Morning he ſent five Hundred towards the Enemy, to draw him out, if they could, into the Field: But if he came forth, he ordered them to Retreat to the place where the Army lay, which fell out according to his deſire; ſo that riſing up, he aſſaulted the Turks on every ſide, ſlue ten thouſand of them, and took twelve principal Men priſoners, for whom he had fourty thouſand Duckats in Ranſome.

A great Battail.

Then Mahomet ſent Balabanus with fifteen thouſand Horſe, and three thouſand Foot to invade Epyrus, who knowing that Scanderbeg lay not far from him with a ſmall power, he intended in the Night to ſet upon him at unawares, but Scanderbeg having Intelligence by his Scouts, ſet forward in good Order to meet him. Balabanus perceiving that he was diſcovered, made an Alt: Scanderbeg when he drew nigh him, conſidering the ground where the Enemy lay, encouraged his Souldiers, which were but four thouſand Horſe, and a thouſand five Hundred Foot, charged them on their lives, that if the Enemy in the Fight retired, they ſhould not purſue them beyond the ſtraits of the Hill, ſuſpecting an Ambuſh behind it, and ſo retired a little; which Balabanus, ſeeing his ſmall number, judged to be a flight, and therefore haſtily marched after, till Scanderbeg watching his Opportunity ſtayed, and ſet courageouſly upon them, yet the Battail for a great while ſtood Doubtful, but ſuch was the Fury of Scanderbeg and his Souldiers, that at laſt the Turks fled, and they purſued to the ſtraits of the Mountains, where Scanderbeg had commanded them to ſtay. But his beſt Captains in the Heat of Fight, forgetting his Command, entred the ſtraits, and were ſet upon by many that lay there in Ambuſh, where, fighting like Lyons, at laſt they were oppreſſed with Multitude, taken priſoners, and ſent to Mahomet; they were Moſes, Muſachius, Perlot, &c. The leaſt of them able to have Conducted a brave Army.

Scanderbegs beſt Captains taken.

Turkiſh cruelty.

Scanderbeg preſently ſent to have Ranſomed, or Exchanged them for others, but the Tyrant knowing that they were his beſt Captains, refuſed, and flayed them by degrees, ſo that they were fifteen dayes in dying. Epyrus mourned for the great loſs, but Scanderbeg, reſolving to revenge their blood, with fire and ſword, entered into the Turks Dominions, ſparing nothing that he could burn or deſtroy.

Scanderbeg Scouts corrupted.

Mahomet ſent Balabanus rich preſents for his good Service, commanding him to recruit his Army, and proſecute the Wars, which he performed with all Diligence, yet uſing Policy, he corrupted Scanderbegs Scouts, and had like to have oppreſſed him ere he was aware; but Scanderbeg himſelf, who ſpent moſt of the Night in careful Watch, diſcerned the Approach of the Enemy by the Noiſe of their Horſes, and ſo ſpeedily ordering all things, encountred with with them, and after a great Fight put them to flight, ſlue moſt of them in purſuit, Balabanus with a ſmall Remnant hardly eſcaping. Yet Mahomet ſent him again with fourteen Thouſand Horſe, and three Thouſand Foot, knowing his deadly Hatred to Scanderbeg; when he firſt came, he firſt tryed by ſubtilty to circumvent Scanderbeg, and when that prevailed not, he reſolved by plain force to ſubdue him, and ſo marching forward, Scanderbeg met him with eight Thouſand Horſe, and a Thouſand five Hundred Foot near to Sfetigrade. Balabanus beaten.

The Fight beginning (though the Turks were two to one) yet Scanderbegs Men fought like enraged Lyons, without regard of Danger: Scanderbeg carefully ordered all things, himſelf fighting at the Head of his Army, performed all the parts of a worthy Chieftain, and valiant Souldier; but whilſt he thus fought in the middeſt of his Enemies, his Horſe was ſlain under him, and in the Fall ſorely bruiſed one of his Armes: The Turks preſſed on vehemently to have ſlain him; but God delivered him, his Souldiers reſcuing, and remounting of him; and he forthwith encountring one of the Turks great Commanders, ſlue him Hand to Hand, which ſo terrified the Turks, that they firſt Retired, then fled, whom Scanderbeg purſued with ſuch Execution, that few returned Home with Balabanus. Mahomet was extream Angry with the Baſſa, but when his fury was over, Balabanus told him, that the way to Conquer Scanderbeg, was to enter Epyrus with two puiſſant Armies, to ſpoyl the Country, and incloſe Scanderbeg betwixt them, and neither of them to fight, but when the other was near at hand, by which means he might certainly be deſtroyed: The Tyrant liked this advice ſo well, that he gave him Commiſſion to take what Forces he would, and to chooſe his Aſſociate out of all his Men of War, &c. Scanderbeg in great danger. Balabanus beaten.

Balabanus choſe out forty Thouſand good Souldiers, and one Jacup, a valiant Captain for his Companion, whom he ſent with ſixteen Thouſand one way, and himſelf with twenty Thouſand Horſe and four Thouſand Foot went another way: Scanderbeg, having ſecret Intelligence of all theſe projects, gat in Readineſs eight Thouſand Horſe, and four Thouſand Foot, choiſe Souldiers, and ſent out his Eſpials; who, hoping for great Rewards, proved falſe Traytors, and went to Balabanus, acquainting him with ſo much of Scanderbegs Deſigns as they knew: Scanderbeg marvelling that they returned not, went out himſelf with five more to ſee how the Enemies lay: But he had like to have fallen into an Ambuſh, had he not ſeaſonably diſcovered it, and ſpeedily retired, yet he loſt four of his Men: And coming to his Army, he ſuddenly prepared to fight with Balabanus before the other Army came, and ſo preſently marched into the Valley where Balabanus lay; and he divided his Army into four parts, one under himſelf, the other three under three of his beſt Captains, and ſo advanced towards the Turks. But Balabanus waiting for the coming of his Partner, would not ſtir out of his Trenches. Scanderbeg ſcouts turn Traytors. Scanderbeg in danger.

Scanderbegs Men derided and provoked them all they could, till the Turks enraged with the Affront, would have iſſued forth without the General, had he not led them. When therefore he ſaw no remedy, he advanced in good order, and Scanderbeg furiouſly aſſaulted him, ſo that there was a dangerous and doubtful Battail, yet Scanderbeg and his Men ſo preſſed upon them on all ſides, that at laſt they were broken in pieces, moſt of them ſlain, only Balabanus with ſome few eſcaped. Balabanus again beaten.

Scanderbeg had ſcarce divided the ſpoyl, and breathed himſelf, when a Poſt brought him News, that Jacup was burning and deſtroying all in another part of his Country: Whereupon he preſently marched thitherward, and his Men went as to an aſſured Victory: Jacup hearing of his coming, retired into a corner of the Plain: Scanderbeg coming near him, reſted one whole day, and then brought forth ſome of his Priſoners before the Enemies Camp, which before knew nothing of Balabanus his Overthrow: Yet Jacup ordered his Army, and fiercely charged ſcanderbegs Men, where the Fight laſted not long, but the Turks fled, and moſt of them were ſlain; in all, there were ſlain in the two Battails four and twenty Thouſand Men, and ſix Thouſand taken Priſoners; Jacup eſcaped with a few: After which Scanderbeg entred into the Turks Territories, made Havock of all, and ſo returned with his Victorious Army to Croia, where he diſmiſſed them every Man to his own Home.

Jacup beaten.

Two Aſſaſinates ſent to ſlay him.

Then Mahomet, with great Rewards, hired two Villians to go and kill ſcanderbeg, who went into Epyrus, declaimed againſt Mahomet and his Superſtition, deſired to be inſtructed in the Principles of the Chriſtian Religion, and to be Baptized, and thereby found much Favour with Scanderbeg, yet they watched their opportunity to Murther him: But Treaſon againſt Princes whom God hath under his moſt Mighty Protection, cannot be long concealed: Theſe Aſſaſſinates falling out between themſelves, let ſome Words fall, which gave Occaſion of Suſpicion, and ſo being Examined, they confeſſed the Treaſon, and were juſtly Executed according to their Demerits.

Gods care of Kings.

The Traytors executed.

Mahomet then reſolved to go himſelf into Epyrus with ſuch an Army as ſhould ſpeedily end the Warr, and for that end, he raiſed an Army of two Hundred Thouſand Men: Scanderbeg having Intelligence of it, fortified all his Cities and ſtrong Holds, eſpecially Croia, which he furniſhed with all things Neceſſary for a long Siege, put into it a choiſe Garriſon, and made Balthaſar Perduce, a worthy Captain, Governour thereof. He left nothing abroad in the Country, removed all the Inhabitants into Garriſons, or other place of Refuge: And no ſooner was this done, but Balabanus came with Fourſcore Thouſand Horſe, and ſat down before Croia. In few dayes after came Mahomet with his huge Army, and encamped there alſo: He ſummoned the City; to which the brave Governour made no other anſwer, than by continual Thundering ſhot into his Camp. Mahomet cauſed great Ordnance to be caſt, and planted his Batteries. In the mean time Scanderbeg with a ſmall Army of choice Souldiers, lay in the Woods, cut off his Forragers, and ſuch as brought Victuals to the Camp; and oft in the Night ſuddenly brake into one or other of the Quarters of the Turks Camp, making great ſlaughter of them, and kept them in ſuch continual Alarms, that he never gave them reſt.

Mahomet invades Epyrus.

Scanderbeg troubles him.

Mahomet ſeeing his Men to Decreaſe, and that the City was not to be taken but by Famine, and a long Siege, and fearing ſome Diſaſter, as had there happened to his Father, left Balabanus with the greateſt part of his Army, and returned himſelf to Conſtantinople. As he went back, he corrupted the Governour of a Fort called Chidna, in which were eight Thouſand of Scanderbegs Souldiers, promiſing them Liberty, and Safety to depart: But when he prevailed, and had them in his power, the Tyrant cauſed them cruelly to be cut in pieces, ſparing neither Souldier nor Inhabitant, Man, Woman, nor Child.

Mahomet returns home.

Mahomets perfidiouſneſs and cruelty.

Scanderbeg ſcorning to have his chief City beſieged by Balabanus, and yet wanting Forces of his own to raiſe the Siege, he ſent to his Friends the Venetians, and other Confederate Princes; ſo that by their Help in few dayes, he got an Army of above Fourteen Thouſand choyce Souldiers, with which he marched to Croia: But by the way, underſtanding that Jonima was coming with a new ſupply to Balabanus, with ſome choyce Horſe-men, he poſted over the Country, fell upon them, ſlue and put them to flight, took Jonima and his Son priſoners, whom the next day he ſhewed to Balabanus. And then with plain force, he drave the Turks from a Mountain near to the Jonima beaten.

City

City of Croia. Balabanus seeing this, with some others, he rode up to the City Gate, and with infinite promises would have perswaded them to deliver up the City to him; but they, sallying out, drave them away, and one of them shot him through the Throat, whereof he presently dyed. Balabanus slain.

The Turks discouraged with these things, rose in the silence of the Night, and retreated eight Miles from the City. Scanderbeg the next Morning found in their Tents great store of Corn, and other provision, which he conveyed into Croia in great Triumph. The siege raised.

The same Day he sent Select Souldiers to take the Streights through which the Turks must needs pass, when they went out of Epyrus: Which the Turks hearing of, they sent two Messengers to Scanderbeg, promising him to deliver up their Horse and Armes, if he would permit them safely to pass out of the Country. From whom they received this short Answer; That as they came into his Countrey without his Leave, so they must Depart without his Leave also. VVhereupon in the Dead of the Night they desperately brake through those passes, yet not without great loss. Scanderbegs imprudence

Shortly after Scanderbeg recovering what he had lost, and putting all the Turks to the Sword, brake up his Army, retaining only two Thousand Horse, and one Thousand Foot for the Guard of his Frontiers. Mahomet was so vexed at this evil Success, that he could neither Eat, nor Drink, nor Sleep for a season; yet at last he resolved the next Spring to go thither again in person, to make a full Conquest of it. And Scanderbeg provided for him as he had done formerly.

Mahomet with a mighty Army, when the Spring was come, entred into Epyrus, and with much labour and charge built a City, which he made a Garrison. From thence he marched to Dirrachium, a City belonging to the Venetians, which he had thought to have found unprovided: But it proved otherwise, insomuch as having spent some time there, to his great loss, he suddenly arose, and returned into Epyrus, and sat down before Croia, proffering large priviledges and great gifts, if they would surrender the City; or else threatned them with all the Calamities of War. To which they made no answer but with the Mouth of the Canon. Mahomet again invades Epyrus. Mahomet besieges Croia Scanderbeg also continually molested his Camp, and brake into their Quarters every night. Whereupon Mahomet rose with his Army, and hearing of many Epyrots, retired into the Mountains; he went to seek them out, but was by them repulsed with great loss. Scanderbeg also following him at the Heels, daily cut off part of his Army: So that at last the Tyrant despairing to do any good, went back with vexation and shame to Constantinople. The siege raised.

After all this, Scanderbeg viewed the state of his Kingdom, ordered his Affairs, and then went to Lyssa, to confer with the Venetian Embassadour and the other Confederate Princes: But within few Dayes he fell Sick of a Feaver, and perceiving his End to draw nigh, he sent for his Wife and Son, and the Confederate Princes, and discoursed to them of his troublesome Life, fore-warned them of the Dangers that were like to ensue, perswaded them to persevere in Unity, made the Venetians Protectors of his Son and Kingdom: And so after he had with most fervent Prayer commended his Soul into the Hands of Almighty God, he quietly left this Life, January 17. Anno Christi, 1466. and of his Age sixty three, of his Reign twenty four.

His Death was much lamented by all Christian Princes, especially his Neighbours, who had lost their most careful watchman, and invincible Champion. The sorrow of his Subjects is not to be expressed: He was royally buried in the Cathedral in Lyssa. Yet nine years after, the Turks having taken the City, Scanderbegs Death.

His bones digged up by the Turks.

with great Devotion digged up his bones, reckoning it ſome part of their Happineſs, if they might ſee or touch the ſame: Such as could get any part thereof, ſet it in Silver or Gold, and hung it about their Necks, perſwading themſelves, that it would make them valiant and proſperous.

His Character.

He was a Man of rare parts, and of an indefatigable Spirit: During all the time of his Warrs, he never ſlept above two Hours in a Night: He ever fought againſt the Turks with his Arm bare, and that with ſuch fierceneſs, that the bloud did oft-times burſt out of his Lips. He with his own Hands in thoſe Wars ſlue at leaſt three thouſand of the Turks. What his ſtrength was, may appear by theſe Examples. There was in a part of Epyrus a mighty wild Bull, that had murthered many, and committed a thouſand Outrages: Him Scanderbeg encountered with on Horſe back, and with one only blow of his Cimitar, he cut his Neck clean from his ſhoulders.

Alſo a monſtrous Boar in Apulia, that had wounded many of King Ferdinands Courtiers, Scanderbeg being Hunting with the King, encountred with this Beaſt, and ſoon parted his Head from his Body.

His Cimitar was made at Damaſco in Syria, and was of an excellent temper: He oft carried two of them in one Scabbard, and ſometimes would break them both in one Battail.

Mahomet hearing that he would cut Helmets, Head-pieces and Pouldrons clean aſunder with it, he ſent to him for one of his Swords, thinking that there had been ſome Extraordinary Vertue in them: And when Scanderbeg had ſent it, he put it into their Hands who had the ſtrongeſt Arms about him: but perceiving no ſuch Wonders as was reported of it, he ſent it back with ſcorn, ſaying, That he would not be beholding to him for that which he could get for his Money: And that he credited not what was related to him of that ſword.

But Scanderbeg, in the ſight of the Meſſenger, having made ſtrange and admirable Proofs of it, bad him tell his Maſter, that it was not the Vertue of the Sword, but the ſtrength of his Arm, which he reſerved againſt his Enemies.

God raiſed up this worthy Chriſtian Prince, and endowed him with ſuch excellent parts, as another David, againſt thoſe proud Goliahs, Amurath and Mahomet, who were cruel and bloody Perſecutors of the Church of God: God made him ſucceſsful and victorious in above twenty Battels that he fought againſt the Turks.

Collected out of the Hiſtory of Scanderbeg, and out of the Turkiſh Hiſtory.

The

M:CORVINVS etc.

The Life of Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, who Dyed, Anno Chriſti 1490.

Huniades being Dead, the young King Ladiſlaus and Ulricus Earl of Cicilia, thought they might the more boldly come into Hungary, and thereupon they preſently began their journey. Ladiſlaus the eldeſt Son of Huniades, who was now at the City of Alba, hearing of the Kings approach, obediently opened to him the Gates, but four Thouſand of the Kings Armed Souldiers he debarred from entring into the City: Whilſt the King was there, he with the Earl Ulricus ſat often in Councel with ſome other Nobles alſo: At laſt, they required Ladiſlaus to reſort unto them, he at firſt was in ſuſpenſe what to do, but afterwards, putting on a private Coat of Male, he came to them. Treachery.

Whilſt they were in Debate, Ulricus picked a Quarrel with him, and called him Traytor for ſhutting the Gates againſt the Kings Souldiers, and withal, taking his Sword from his Page, let flie at his Head. To break the blow, ſome putting up their Hands, had their Fingers cut off: The Hungarians that were without, hearing the Tumult, brake into the Chamber, where they preſently ſlue this falſe Earl Ulrick, and cut him almoſt all to pieces: The King was much diſcontented hereat in his Mind, yet ſeeing there was no other remedy, he diſſembled his Grief for the preſent, and making fair Weather to Ladiſlaus, he took him along with him towards Buda: By the way, paſſing by the Town where Huniades Wife was, mourning for the Death of her Husband, the King went to her, and ſeemed with many fair words to comfort her; there he reſted, and refreſhed himſelf, and ſo departed with much diſſembled Love, and fained Favour, and took along with him the two Sons of Hypocriſie.

Huniades, Ladiſlaus and Matthias, who where now without ſuſpition, and therefore the more ready to wait upon him: But when he came to Buda, he cauſed them both to be ſuddenly apprehended; and immediately after, the elder [Ladiſlaus] was brought forth to the place of execution: at which time, a Cryer proclaimed, Thus are they to be chaſtened that are rebels againſt their Lord. After the Hang-man had three blows at his neck, Ladiſlaus having his hands bound behind him, roſe up right upon his feet after the third ſtroak, and looking up to Heaven, called upon the Lord, and proteſting his innocency, meekly laid down his head again, and ſo at the fourth blow had it ſtricken off: Then did this bloody Tyrant take Matthias, and carried him captive with him into Auſtria.

A Miracle of mercy.

Shortly after, this young King was to marry the French Kings Daughter: great preparation was made againſt the Wedding, which was to be celebrated at Prague in Bohemia: many Princes and Potentates were invited to the ſolemnity, at which time this wicked King had intended to make an end of all the Huſſites in Bohemia: Thither therefore he went, taking his Priſoner Matthias along with him to Prague: Where he alſo impriſoned him, but in the middeſt of all his great preparations, Anno 1461. this great Adverſary of Gods people, Ladiſlaus King of Bohemia and Hungary, and Archduke of Auſtria, was, by the revenging Hand of God, ſmitten with a peſtilent Sore in his Groin, whereof he dyed within the ſpace of ſix and thirty Hours: After whoſe Death, the Kingdom of Bohemia fell to George Pogiebracius, a Friend and Favorer of the Huſſites, whom afterwards Pope Innocent the eighth did Excommunicate, and Depoſe for his Religion. But the Nobles of Hungary, hearing of the Death of Ladiſlaus, met together, and for the Love they bare to the Remembrance of Huniades, they choſe Matthias, ſurnamed Corvinus, now a Priſoner at Prague, to be their King, and withal diſpatched away Ambaſſadors to Pogiebracius, to deſire him to ſend this their King Elect to them: Pogiebracius having heard their Meſſage, at Supper time, he immediately ſent for Matthias out of Priſon, and placed him at the upper end of the Table; Young Matthias, being but about eighteen years old, was much abaſhed at it, and began to crave Pardon: But the King would needs have it ſo, and when he was ſet, to quiet his mind, he willed him to be of good cheer, for that he had good News to tell him: Good News (ſaid Matthias) if it would pleaſe your Majeſty to grant me my Liberty. Yea that (ſaid the King) and more too, and then ſaluting him by the Name of the King of Hungary, he brake unto him the whole matter: And within few dayes after, he married to him his Daughter, furniſhed him with all things fit for his ſtate, and Royally accompanied him into Hungary, where he was with great joy and triumph received by his people, and over whom he glorioufly Reigned for the ſpace of eight and thirty years, in which time he notably enlarged the Kingdom of of Hungary, and proving the Thundering Son of a Lightning Father, he became a far greater Terrour to the Turks, than ever was his Father Huniades.

Popiſh malice and cruelty.

Gods judgment on a bloody perſecutor.

Gods goodneſs.

A ſtrange providence.

Preſently after, the Emperour Frederick, having the Crown of Hungary remaining in his Hands, which Elizabeth the Mother of Ladiſlaus had carried to him, laid claim to the Kingdom, whereupon Wars enſued between Matthias and him; but at laſt by the Mediation of the Princes of Germany, a peace was concluded betwixt them, and Matthias ranſomed the Crown from Frederick for eight Thouſand Florences.

Wars betwixt Matthias and the Emperour.

He ranſoms his Crown.

At this time there were great Wars between the Venetians and the great Turk; but the Venetians going by the worſe, ſent Ambaſſadors to King Matthias, ſoliciting him to joyn in League with them, and to take up Arms againſt the common Enemy, offering preſently to furniſh him with a great ſum of Money, beſides a large yearly Penſion towards the Maintenance of thoſe Wars. For which He enters into league with the Venetians.

he

he ſhould to his power, by land, defend all thoſe Territories of theirs, which lay between the Rhetian Alps, and the Adriatick Sea, againſt the invaſion of the Turk.

Matthias having well conſidered of this their requeſt, anſwered, That they had many times before in the like caſe, refuſed to give aid to the Hungarian Kings, his predeceſſors; yea, and judged it a thing unreaſonable, that any ſuch thing ſhould be requeſted at their hands: So that the Hungarian Kings had many times received great loſs for want of their aſſiſtance: Yet he was willing to forget all ſuch unkindneſſes, and to take their Territories into his protection, according to their requeſt; promiſing withall, the next Spring to invade the Turks Dominions. And according to his promiſe he honorably performed it: For in the beginning of the Spring he paſſed over the Danubius at Belgrade, with a puiſſant Army, and raiſed the Forts which the Turks had built thereabouts, and ſo entring into Servia, laid all the Country waſt before him; and afterwards laden with ſpoyle, returned home again, carrying away with him twenty thouſand captives. His Wars againſt the Turks.

And with the like proſperous ſucceſs he maintained warrs againſt Mahomet the Great, and againſt his ſon Bajazet, almoſt alwayes going away with the Victory; ſo that there was no Chriſtian King or Chieftain, that did ever more often with ſucceſs fight againſt the Turks, or had of them greater victories.

Then did he (according to his promiſe made to the Venetians) enter into the Kingdom of Boſna; where by force he overthrew the ſtrong Forts which the Turk had built for the defence of the Frontiers, and valiantly drave them all out before him, till he came to Jaitze, the chiefe City of Boſna, unto which he laid ſiege and took it: and ſo Garriſoning it, he followed the courſe of his victories, ſcarcely ſuffering the Turks to breath, untill he had by force wreſted all that Kingdom out of their hands. Boſna won from the Turks.

This ſo vexed the proud Mahomet, that in great fury he came with a mighty Army into Boſna, and laid hard ſiege unto Jaitze, which was by the Chriſtians worthily defended, till Matthias came to the relief thereof, who ſo troubled the Turks Camp with continual skirmiſhes on the one ſide; and they within the Town, with deſperate ſallies on the other, that at length the proud Turk was driven to ſuch extremity, that he was forced ſecretly to ſteal away in the night with all his Army, into Servia; and for haſt, left behind him all his Tents, and his great Ordnance. Mahomet ſhamefully beaten.

Matthias having thus valiantly relieved the City, followed the Turks Army into Servia, and took part of that Countrey alſo; which together with Boſna he annexed to the Kingdom of Hungary: So that now the name of Matthias was unto the Turks, no leſs dreadful, then was ſometimes the name of his valiant Father Huniades. Part of Servia taken.

Anno 1475. Mahomet the Great having ended his Wars with the Perſians, reſolved to convert all his power againſt the Venetians; and for that end ſent Solyman Baſſa with an Army of fourſcore thouſand brave men, to beſiege Scodra, or Scutari, within the confines of Albania: many were the deſperate aſſaults which the Turks gave to the City, and yet they were ſtill as valiantly repulſed by the Chriſtians within.

In the mean time Matthias raiſed an Army, and with it marched into the Turks Dominions, where he made ſuch havock and ſpoil of all before him, that Mahomet was glad to call back the great Baſſa from the ſiege of Scodra (after he had lain there three moneths with his great Army, and loſt fourteen thouſand of his men) to defend his own Country. He waſteth the Turks Dominions.

With this diſhonor Mahomet was ſo diſcontented, that he gave one a yeatly penſion daily to put him in mind of the ſiege of Scodra. Malice.

Anno 1480. the Turk ſent a mighty Army, conſiſting of an hundred thouſand men, under ſome of his chiefeſt and moſt expert Commanders, into Tranſylvania, which brought ſuch a general fear upon the Country, that Steven

He relieved Transilvania

Batore, the Vayvod, was glad with all ſpeed to fly unto Matthias, King of Hungary, declaring to him the danger of his Country, and craving his aid. Matthias at this time lay ſick of the Gout, yet he ſent an Army under his expert Captains, which not far from Alba Julia, met with the Turks, and there in a great and bloody Battail defeated them, ſlue Iſa, one of their chief Captains, and thirty Thouſand Turks beſides. By which great Victory Tranſilvania, was delivered from that preſent Danger.

The Turks beaten.

The noble Acts of Matthias againſt theſe Enemies to the Name of Chriſt, were ſo many, and ſo great, that through Gods goodneſs, he was a great ſhelter, not only to Hungary, but almoſt to all Chriſtian Kingdoms, in repelling and beating back the proud ſwelling Waves of the Turkiſh Empire, which were like to have over-flown all: Yea, he ſo defended the Confines of Illyria from the power of the Turks, that both Mahomet, and Bajazet his Son, were enforced to ſeek to him for Peace. But the Devil in the mean time, envying his proſperous ſucceſs in Defence of the Chriſtians, ſtirred up the Pope to caſt in the Ball of Contention between Pogiebracius and him; whereby not only his courſe of Victory againſt the Turks was ſtopped, but alſo great Wars and Bloodſhed followed amongſt Chriſtians: In which Wars Matthias took from Pogiebracius, Moravia, and a great part of Sileſia, and joyned them to his Kingdom of Hungary. Alſo by the Popes means, a new Quarrel ſprang up between the Emperour Frederick and him: In which Wars Frederick had utterly gone to Ruin, had not Albert, Duke of Saxony, reſcued the Emperour, and repreſſed the vehemency of Matthias. Alſo, after the Death of Pogiebracius, the Emperour conferred the Kingdom of Bohemia upon Vladiſlaus, the King of Polands Son: Whereupon Matthias made War upon him, and alſo proclaimed open Wars againſt Frederick: But it pleaſed God in the midſt of theſe great Undertakings and preparations to take him away by ſickneſs, Anno Chriſti 1490. and of his Age fifty ſix, after he had Reigned with Renown, thirty eight years.

Satans Malice.

Popiſh Malice.

His ſecond wars with the Emperour.

His Death.

His Character.

Beſides his noble Acts of Chivalry, he was Religious according to thoſe times, Learned, and a great Lover of Learning and Learned Men, whom he with great Stipends procured to come to him out of other Countries; by which means he much civilized and reduced into good order, the barbarous Rudeneſs of thoſe Kingdoms which he governed, and made thereof a moſt flouriſhing Common-wealth.

A great Library.

Moreover, he erected a great and ſtately Library, which he furniſhed with all ſorts of Books, both for Languages, Arts, and Hiſtory; many of which he cauſed to be tranſlated out of the Greek into Latin: So that the like Library was not to be found in all Europe beſides, except the Vatican at Rome. Out of which Library we have received divers parts of Diodorus ſiculus, and Polybius, which were not extant before.

Collected out of the Book of Martyrs, and the Turkiſh Hiſtory.

The

K. EDWARD. 6.

The Life of Edward the ſixth, King of England, who Dyed, Anno Chriſti 1553.

EDward the ſixth, born Anno Chriſti 1537, was the Son of King Henry the eighth by his third Wife, Jane, Daughter to Sir John Seymer: Whoſe Mothers Body was opened for his Birth, whereby ſhe dyed of the Inciſion the fourth day after. His Education.

When he was ſix years old, he was committed to the tuition of Doctor Cox, and Mr. John Cheek, the firſt inſtructed him in the knowledge of the Arts, and Divinity; the ſecond in the Languages of Latine, and Greek: Others were appointed for other Languages, who all endeavoured to infuſe into him Knowledge, and Vertue by ſome mixture of Honeſt Delight.

Under theſe he profited ſo much, that in ſhort time he ſpake French and Latine perfectly; alſo Greek, Spaniſh, and Italian. He was well skilled in Logick, Philoſophy, Muſick, and Aſtronomy, and other liberal Sciences, in ſo much as the great Italian Philoſopher, Cardane, having made ſome tryal of him, was aſtoniſhed with Admiration and Delight, reporting Abroad, That he was a Miracle of Nature.

When he was about nine years old, his Father dyed, and he was proclaimed King, and brought to the Tower, where he remained about three weeks; in which time his Uncle, the Earl of Hartford, was elected Protector of the Realm, and Governour of the Kings Perſon during his Minority: And a few dayes after, he Knighted the King, who taking the Sword from him, Knighted the Lord Mayor, and advanced divers other of the Nobility: The Lord Protector was made Duke of Sommerſet, his other Uncle, Sir Thomas Seymer was made Lord of Sudely, and High Admiral of England, &c. Proclaimed King.

February 19. Anno Chriſti 1547. he Rode in great ſtate from the Tower to his Coronation.

Weſtminſter, and the next day was crowned by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. The ſame day a generall pardon was granted to all perſons, ſix only excepted: Never was King more loving to others, or better beloved generally of all: He was of an excellent beauty and modeſty, very curteous, and naturaly ſo diſpoſed to learning, that he ſeemed rather born ſo, then inſtructed in it; He was full of Clemency, courage, care and knowledg in ſtate affairs. He was very tender of ſhedding blood, ſo that none were executed in his time for religion, but only two blaſphemous Hereticks, Joan Butcher, and George a Dutchman: For the execution of the firſt, all the Council could not get him to ſet his hand to the warrant, till Cranmer perſwaded him to it, to whom he ſaid, That he would lay all the charge of it upon him before God. He took much delight in repreſentations of Battails, skirmiſhes, and Aſſaults, and ſuch like military exerciſes: He took much pleaſure in the exerciſes of activity, and cauſed his ſervants to uſe wreſtling, leaping, running, riding, and ſhooting at rovers &c. He was exceeding skilfull in fortifications: He knew all the principal ports of England, Scotland, Ireland, and France, how they lay, when the tide ſerved, what veſſels of burthen they could receive, and what winds ſerved for entrance.

His Character.

Two Hereticks put to death.

his knowledg.

He was exceeding careful about State affairs, was much with his Councell, and would well underſtand what matters paſſed them, and upon what grounds; and would often encounter their reaſons, and gave lively reaſons of his own, inſomuch that they made an order, that no matters of weight ſhould be debated, but when he was preſent: He had a Cheſt, whereof himſelf carried the Key, wherein he kept the records, of ſuch matters as were concluded by his Councell: He ſet time apart to diſpatch poor mens cauſes without tedious attendance, and delay. Of all the Magiſtrates, Juſtices and Gentlemen of quality in his realm, he knew their names, houſe-keeping, religion, and manner of life.

He was skilful in the matter and manner of Exchange abroad, and provident for the Mint at home. To Ambaſſadours he would give anſwer upon the ſudden, and touch both orderly, and fully upon every part of their ſpeech, to the admiration of his Hearers. He much frequented Sermons, and penned them with his own hands: His ſports were ingenuous, and manlike, whereby he always learned ſomething: He in the middeſt of all his buſineſſes reſerved dayly ſome houres for his private ſtudies and exerciſes with his Teachers.

his Piety.

About this time, preparations were made for warr with Scotland, which was thus occaſioned: Mary Stuart, ſole daughter and heir to James the fifth, being very young, was deſired by Henry the eighth to be aſſured to his ſon Prince Edward, which was aſſented to by the Nobility, and Parliament of Scotland, and all conditions, and covenants were concluded, ſealed, and ſworn to on both parties, and a peace eſtabliſhed for ten yeares, at the end whereof both Prince and Queen ſhould be of age to conſent. But the King of France hearing of it, laboured by all means to break this agreement, endeavouring to get this match for Francis, afterwards King of France, and ſo farr prevailed, that he made a ſtrong party for him in Scotland: yet our Protector wrote in a friendly manner to the nobility, remembred them of their promiſes, ſeales, and oaths: He ſhewed them the benefits that would redound to both Kingdoms by this union &c. but when notwithſtanding all this, they would not be brought to reaſon, he raiſed a great Army, with which he marched into Scotland, and ſent a great Fleet by Sea to meet him there. In the Army were twelve thouſand Foot, and two thouſand eight hundred light Horſe: The Earle of Warwick was Lieutenant Genenerall, the Lord Gray of Wilton was Marſhall of the Field, &c. The Protector of Scotland alſo made great preparation to reſiſt them, Making his Rendevouz at Muſſelebrough Field, whither whither the Engliſh marched; and ſo between the two nations, a great and cruel battell was fought, wherein the Engliſh were victors, and purſued the Scots for five houres ſpace, doing great execution upon them, ſo that the River of Esk ran red with blood. A great Battail. The Scots beaten.

The quarrell with Scotland.

The Protector invades Scotland

Divers of the Scottiſh Nobility and Gentry were ſlain, and of the inferiour ſort about ten thouſand. Of the Engliſh were ſlain fifty two, but very many hurt. And thus the Lord revenged upon them their perfidiouſneſs in Breaking their Oaths and Covenants. In the which victory this alſo is to be noted, that the ſame day and hour wherein the Images were burned openly in London, the Scots received this great overthrow. Perjury punished by God. A ſpecial Providence.

Alſo fifteen hundred of the Scots were taken Priſoners, amongſt whom was the Earl of Huntley, and ſome other Noblemen: Huntley being afterwards asked, how he ſtood affected to the intended marriage, anſwered, That he liked the marriage well, but he liked not the manner of wooing. Afterwards the Engliſh fired many places, took in divers Caſtles, placed Garriſons in them, and ſo returned back into England. Huntlies ſpeech.

In England a great alteration alſo was made in Religion, Injunctions were ſet forth for removing Images out of Churches, Godly Preachers were ſent abroad to inſtruct and teach the people, and for want of Preachers, Homilies were appointed to be read in Churches. Edmund Bonner was committed to the Fleet, for refuſing to receive theſe Injunctions, and Steven Gardiner to the Tower, with Biſhop Tonſtall, and Heath. Bonner, Gardiner, and other Biſhops impriſoned.

In the firſt year of the King, a Parliament was held, wherein was enacted, That none ſhould ſpeak againſt receiving the Sacrament in both kindes; That all Proceſſes Eccleſiaſtical ſhould be made in the Kings name: The Statute of the ſix Articles was repealed, and that which prohibited the uſe of the Scriptures in Engliſh: and a Liturgy was ſet forth.

Commiſſioners being ſent abroad to pull down Images in Cornwall, one of them was ſtabbed by a Prieſt, as he was pulling down an Image; and afterwards the whole County roſe in a commotion, which ſpred alſo into Wiltſhire and Somerſetſhire; they beat down Encloſures, and Parks: but Sir William Herbert, with ſome Soldiers, ſet upon them, ſlue ſome, and ſcattered the reſt. A Commiſſioner ſtabbed. A Rebellion.

The like commotions were raiſed in other Counties, which by the prudence of Gentlemen, and other honeſt Perſons, were appeaſed: Yet afterwards there was another Riſing in the Weſt Countries, to whom the King wrote, Firſt reproving them for their Diſordered Aſſemblies; then he pitied their Ignorance, and Errors thence ariſing, perſwading them to return to their Homes, and due Obedience. In which Letter he thus wrote to them, Aſſure your ſelves moſt ſurely, that we of no earthly thing under the Heaven, make ſuch account, as we do of this one thing, To have our Laws obeyed, and this cauſe of God which we have taken in hand, to be throughly maintained, from the which we will never remove a Hairs breadth, nor give place to any Creature living, much leſs to any Subject, but therein will ſpend our own Royal Perſon, our Crown, Treaſure, Realme, and all our eſtate, whereof we aſſure you of our High Honour. But they growing more unruly, went to Exeter, demanded entrance, which being refuſed, they attempted to take the City by ſtorm, by firing the Gates, by Mines, but all in vain, being eaſily repulſed, and ſlain like Dogs. In the mean time the L. Privy Seal, with a ſmall company, attempted the Relief of the City, which the Mutiniers hindred, by felling many Trees croſs his way, and in his Retreat ſet upon him; but he beat them back, with the loſs of ſix Hundred of them. Zeal and courage. A great Rebellion.

In the mean time the Citizens ſuffered great want, made bread of the courſeſt Bran: Their fineſt fleſh was their Horſes. An aged Citizen in this their want, brought out all his ſtore, ſaying, That as he communicated to them his ſtore, ſo he would participate with them in their wants; and that he would feed upon one Arm, and fight with the other, before he would conſent to put the City into the hands of the Seditious. A Famine in Exeter. Fidelity.

But the Lord Gray coming with more Forces, ſet upon them, ſlue above nine hundred of them, and diſperſed the reſt: notwithſtanding which, about two thouſand of them rallying the next day affronted the Kings Forces, yet after a while, they ran away. After this alſo, a greater number met together, and brought with them a Crucifix upon a Cart, beſet with Croſſes, tapers, holy bread, &c. The Lord Gray ſet upon them and ſlew the greateſt part of them, diverſe were taken, and ſome of the principal preſently executed. The ſeditious in Norfolk were more dangerous, as having greater ſtrength, and the City of Norwich to favour them. To theſe the King wrote alſo, and ſent an Herald with a General pardon, if they would quietly depart, which they refuſing, the Lord William Parre was ſent againſt them, who entring into the City of Norwich, was the next day ſet upon by the ſeditious, but he repulſed them with the loſs of three hundred of their company.

Ignorance.
Rebels overthrown.
A rebellion in Norfolk.
Rebellion ſuppreſt.

Afterwards the Earl of Warwick came with ſome more forces, and after ſome bickerings, wherein many of the Rebels were ſlain, he pardoned the reſt, only executing ſome of the ringleaders, and ſo that commotion was quieted.

Religion beginning now to flouriſh in the land, as well all ſuch Godly ſubjects as were in the Realm had free liberty publickly to profeſs the Goſpel; as alſo many learned, and zealous Preachers before baniſhed, were now licenſed freely to return home, and were encouraged boldly, and faithfully to travel in their function, and calling, ſo that God was much glorified, and the people much edified.

Exiled Miniſters reſtored.

About the ſame time a dangerous rebellion began in Yorkſhire, but through Gods mercy, one of the Rebels revealing it in his drunkenneſs in an Alehouſe, it was in ſome meaſure prevented, and the miſchief intended againſt others returned upon the contrivers pates: The French King alſo thinking to make his advantage of ſuch ſtirs in England, denounced War againſt King Edward, and ſent a great Fleet ſuddenly to have taken Jerſey, and Gernſey, together with many of the Kings Ships there, but they were ſo hotly intertained, that they loſt one thouſand of their men, and their Ships and Gallies were ſo ſpoiled, that they were forced to return home with ſhame and diſhonour.

A Rebellion.
The French beaten.

Anno 1549. After this the French King came in Perſon with a mighty Army again Bulloigne, where alſo he was repulſed with ſhame and great loſs: ſo that it was apparent, that the mighty arm of God fought for King Edward his Servant, to defend and deliver him from ſo many dangerous commotions at home, and attempts abroad.

Gods goodneſs.

But the Devil envying the progreſs of the Goſpel, ſought to hinder it, by ſtirring up contentions amongſt our Nobility: Firſt between the Lord Protector and his Brother the Lord Admiral, which was not appeaſed but by the blood of the latter: then between the Lord Protector and the Earl of Warwick, and other Nobles that he had drawn into his party, which (notwithſtanding all indeavours uſed by the Godly King to make peace betwixt them) ended in the death and deſtruction of the Protector. Hereupon many of the vulgar ſort (thinking that the alterations of the Latin ſervice into Engliſh &c. had been the only act of the Protector) began to bruit it abroad, that now they ſhould have their Latin ſervice again with holy Bread, and holy Water &c. Whereupon the King with his Privie Councel ſent to all the Biſhops, to take away all Popiſh Books in every Pariſh, and that if any were refractory, and would not deliver them up, that they ſhould be committed to Ward.

Contention among the Nobility.
Reformation carried on.

Anno Chriſti 1550 Letters were ſent abroad for the taking down of Altars in Churches and ſetting up of Tables inſtead of the ſame: and during all the time that the Nobles lived in peace amongſt themſelves, Religion flouriſhed, the Goſpel had a free paſſage, Popery was confounded, and ſcarce a

Papiſt

Papiſt found that durſt ſhew his Head: The popiſh Doctors, Smith, Chadſey, Standiſh, Young, Oglethorp, with many more, recanted their former Ignorance and Errours. Yea Bonner with his own Hand ſubſcribed to the Kings ſupremacy, and promoted his Injunctions: The ſame alſo did Stephen Gardiner. Yea during all the time of Peace and Concord, what Papiſt was found in all the Realm, which out of Devotion to the Pope, would put his Neck into the Halter, and dye a Martyr for his ſake? In thoſe peaceable times it was that the King ſent for P. Martyr, Martin Bucer, Paul Fagius, with many other learned Men, whereof ſome he placed at Cambridge, others at Oxford, who with their diligent Induſtry, did much good. Recantations. Forraign Divines ſent for.

And whereas the Emperours Embaſſadour demanded boldly, that the Lady Mary might be ſuffered to have the Maſs freely exerciſed in her Houſe: The good King reſolutely and conſtantly Denyed to condeſcend thereunto: He increaſed Sermons at the Court, and ordered that no Man ſhould have a Benefice from the King, but firſt he ſhould preach before him: He ſent five Thouſand Pounds beyond Sea, to Relieve the Poor Proteſtants; and hearing that the Emperour made many ſtrait Laws againſt them, he charged his Merchants to forbear their Trade into Flanders, as much as they could. Zeal and courage of the King. His bounty to diſtreſſed Proteſtants.

This prudent and godly King, ſeeing the woful Breaches at Home amongſt his Nobles, intended by Alliance, to ſtrengthen himſelf abroad; for which end he ſent to treat of a Marriage between his Siſter the Lady Elizabeth, and the King of Denmarks eldeſt Son. But this Lady, though ſhe was furniſhed with many excellent Endowments both of Nature and Education, yet could ſhe never be induced to Marry with any.

The Lord Protector having been brought to his end by the Malice and Subtility of the Earl of Warwick, (now made Duke of Northumberland) the King at firſt gave no Token of any ill tempered paſſion, as taking it not to be agreeable to Majeſty openly to diſcover it: The Lords alſo laboured to Diſpel ſuch Melancholy thoughts, by plying him with variety of Exerciſes, and Diſports: Yet upon ſpeech of him afterwards, he would often ſigh, and let fall Tears: Sometimes he thought that he had done nothing that deſerved Death; or if he had, that it was very ſmall, and proceeded rather from his Wife than from himſelf. And where then (ſaid he) was the good nature of a Nephew? Where was the Clemency of a Prince? Ah! How unfortunate have I been to thoſe of my Blood? My Mother I ſlue at my very Birth, and ſince have made away two of her Brothers; and haply to make way for the purpoſes of others againſt my ſelf. Alas, how falſly have I been abuſed? How weakly carried? How little was I Maſter over my own judgment? &c. But the Lords laboured to divert his Thoughts other-ways all that they could. The King grieves for the death of his Uncle.

The King had ſix Chaplains in Ordinary, concerning whom an Order was made, that two ſhould remain with the King by turns, and four ſhould travel in Preaching Abroad: The firſt year, two in Wales, and two in Lincolnſhire: The next year, two in the Marches of Scotland, and two in Yorkſhire, and ſo through all the Shires in England. Hereby Religion was much propagated, and the People taught Obedience. His zeal in propagating the Goſpel.

The King being fallen into want of Money, Commiſſions were ſent for ſelling of Chantry Lands, and Church-jewels, Chalices, &c. by purchaſing whereof many mean Perſons were advanced to great Eſtates, whereby they left their Poſterity ranged amongſt the Nobility of the Land. But within a few years, moſt of them by the ſecret Curſe of God, melted to nothing; and by Improvidence, or Riot, conſumed all. Puniſhment of ſacriledg.

In the ſixth year of the Kings Reign, in April he fell ſick of the Meazles: yet, through Gods Mercy, in a ſhort time, he recovered of the ſame. Not long after, he fell ſick of the ſmall Pox; which coming kindly forth, was judged a The Kings ſickneſs.

And recovery. means, which would much conduce to his future Health: And hereof alſo he recovered perfectly. And the Summer following he Rode his Progreſs with a great Train; but when he found that it was Burdenſome to the Country, he diſcharged the greateſt part of it.

Prodigies. Soon after, the King complained of a continual Infirmity of body; about which time ſundry Prodigies were ſeen; In Oxford-ſhire a Child was born that had two bodies from the Navel upward, which lived eighteen days, and then they died both together. At Quinborough three great Dolphins were taken: Preſently after ſix more at Black-wall. At Graveſend three great Fiſhes called Whirle-pooles, were taken.

The Kings laſt ſickneſs. In January, and the beginning of the ſeventh year of the Kings Reign, his ſickneſs increaſed upon him, attended with a ſtrong Cough; and notwithſtanding all Means and Remedies uſed, yet it daily increaſed by dangerous Degrees. He had alſo a great Faintneſs, which ſhewed that his Vital Parts were moſt ſtrongly and ſtrangely aſſaulted. And the common report was, that his ſickneſs proceeded from a ſlow working Poyſon. His ſickneſs was much lamented, not only by his own people, but by ſtrangers, his Courteſie and Wiſdom having procured him much Love every where. He was famous for his fore ſight and judgment in Affairs; and he ſo well tempered the greatneſs of his eſtate with Modeſty and Gravity, that he avoyded Envy by the one, and Contempt by the other.

In the time of his ſickneſs, Dr. Ridley preaching before him, in his Sermon much commended Works of Charity, which as they were a Duty for all Men to perform, ſo more eſpecially for thoſe which were in great place, as well in regard of their great Abilities, as for that they were obliged to give example thereby unto others.

His Humility, Piety, and Charity. The ſame day after Dinner the King ſent for him into his Gallery, cauſed him to ſit in a Chair by him, would not ſuffer him to be uncovered: And then after courteous Thanks for his Sermon, he repeated all the principal Points of it, and then added, I took my ſelf to be chiefly touched by your ſpeech: For as in the Kingdom I am next under God, ſo muſt I moſt neerly approach to him in Goodneſs and Mercy. For as our Miſeries ſtand moſt in need of help from him, ſo are we the greateſt Debtors: And therefore as you have given me this general Exhortation, ſo direct me, I intreat you, by what particular Act I may beſt diſcharge my Duty: The Biſhop partly aſtoniſhed, and partly overjoyed with theſe ſpeeches, was ſilent for a time: At laſt, Tears and Words breaking forth together, he declared to the King, that as he little expected ſuch a Queſtion, ſo was he not furniſhed with a preſent Anſwer: But ſaid withal, that he conceived the Citizens of London had beſt Experience, as over-burthened with Multitudes of Poor of their own, and from all parts of the Kingdome, and therefore if his Majeſty pleaſed to afford his Letters to that effect, he would confer with them, and in ſhort time return their Anſwer.

The King Immediately cauſed the Letter to be written, which before the Biſhop, he ſigned, and ſealed, and enjoyned him to be the Meſſenger, who going to the Lord Mayor with it, he called certain Aldermen, and four and twenty Commoners to joyn with him, who ranked the poor into three ſorts: Such as were poor by Impotency of Nature, as Orphans, Decrepit Perſons, Idiots and Criples: Others by Faculty, as Wounded Souldiers, Diſeaſed, &c. Thirdly, ſuch as were poor by Idleneſs, Unthriftneſs, &c. The firſt, to be Educated and Maintained: The ſecond to be Cured and Relieved: The third, to be Corrected and Reduced to good Order: Which being preſented to the King, he gave to the City, for Education and Maintenance of the firſt, the Gray-Friers Church by Newgat-Market, with all the Revenues belonging to it: To the ſecond, Saint Bartholomews near Smithfield: For the third, third, his Houſe at Bridewell: And for increaſe of Maintenance to theſe, beſides the Hoſpital of Saint Thomas in Southwark, he gave ſeven Hundred and fifty Marks yearly out of the Rents of the Hoſpital of St. John Baptiſt, or the Savoy, with all the Bedding and Furniture belonging to that place: And the Charter of this Gift being preſented to him with a blank for Lands in Mortmaine, he preſently filled it up with theſe words, Four thouſand Marks by the year: Which being done, with reverend Geſture, and Speech, he thanked God for prolonging his life to finiſh that buſineſs.

The Kings ſickneſs daily increaſed, and ſo did the Duke of Northumberlands Diligence about him: Poyſon was ſtrongly ſuſpected, for his Phyſitians diſcerned an invincible Malignity in his Diſeaſe, which though in the Lungs, a part of no quick ſence, yet his ſickneſs grew very extream. The people did hereupon break forth immoderately into paſſion, complaining that for this cauſe his two Uncles had been taken away: For this cauſe the moſt faithful of his Nobility and Councel had been diſgraced and diſcarded, and that for this Cauſe ſuch were placed about him as were ready to commit, or permit any Miſchief. The Duke of Northumberland ſuſpected to poyſon him. The peoples complaints and ſorrow.

Yet at this time the Lord Guilford, fourth Son to the Duke of Northumberland, was Married to the Lady Jane, eldeſt Daughter to the Duke of Summerſet, by Frances, Daughter to Mary, ſecond Siſter to Henry the eighth: And albeit this Lady Jane had no right to the Crown, for ſhe was excluded by the Ladies, Mary and Elizabeth, by the Iſſue of Lady Margaret, eldeſt Siſter to Henry the eighth, married into Scotland, and by Frances, this Lady Janes Mother, now living: Yet Northumberland, blinded with Pride, procured the King by his Letters Patents under the broad Seal, to appoint the Lady Jane to ſucceed him in the Kingdom: And this the King did the more eaſily aſſent to, partly in regard of his great deſire to have the reformed Religion continued, which he ſuſpected would be altered by the Lady Mary, if ſhe ſucceeded, and he could not leave the Crown to the Lady Elizabeth, excluding Mary: And partly, by reaſon of that intire love which he bare to his Couſin Jane, a Woman of moſt rare and incomparable Perfections, not only for her Religion, but for her Knowledge of the liberal Arts, and skill in Languages, wherein ſhe exceeded all of her Sex: Theſe Letters were ſigned by the King when he was very weak, and then by all the Privy Councellers: By moſt of the Nobility, Biſhops, Judges, (except Sir James Holles) and by the Kings learned Councel. The Lady Jane made his Heir.

Thus the Duke, having (as he thought) ſecured all, nothing remained but to diſpatch the King: His Diſeaſe was violent, yet the Phyſitians had ſome hope of his recovery, if he might be removed into an Healthfuller Air: But this the Duke over-awing the Councel, would not ſuffer: Then a Gentlewoman was brought, who would undertake to cure him, but the Kings Phyſitians talking with her, and finding her extream ignorant, would not conſent that ſhe ſhould meddle with him: Yet the Duke cauſed them to be diſcharged, and the Cure to be committed to her alone: And ſhe, adminiſtring ſomething to him, the King fell into deſperate Extremities, his vital parts were mortally ſtuffed, he breathed with difficulty, his Leggs ſwelled, his pulſe failed, his skin changed colour, and many other horrid ſymptoms appeared: Then were the Phyſitians called again, who ſeeing how he was, departed with a ſad ſilence; telling their Friends that they were called for faſhion ſake, but neither their Adviſe, nor Remedies uſed. And that the King had been ill dealt with more than once: So the King having long wreſtled with a lingring tormenting ſickneſs, about three Hours befor his Death, his Eyes being cloſed, thinking that none heard him, made this Godly prayer. Treachery.

Lord God, deliver me out of this miſerable and wretched life, and take me amongſt thy choſen: Howbeit, not my will but thy will be done; Lord, I commit my ſpirit to thee. Oh Lord, thou knoweſt how happy it were for me to be with thee: Yet for thy His prayer.

choſens ſake, ſend me life and health, that I may truly ſerve thee; O my Lord God, bleſs thy People, and ſave thine Inheritance, O Lord God ſave thy choſen People of England. O my Lord God, defend this Realm from Papiſtry, and maintain thy true Religion, that I and my People may praiſe thy Holy Name, for thy Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake: Then turning his Face, and ſeeing ſome by, he ſaid unto them, Are ye ſo nigh? I thought you had been further off.

With great patience he endured his pains. Many fervent Prayers he made, both for himſelf and this Realm: The laſt words he ſpake were theſe; I am faint,
His Death. Lord have mercy upon me, and take my ſpirit; and ſo he ſpent his laſt breath in committing his ſweet Soul into his Fathers Hands. And thus this bleſſed King, our young Joſias dyed, Anno Chriſti 1553, of his Age the ſeventeenth, and of his Reign the ſeventh.

His Zeal. His zeal for Religion doth eminently appear in this Example: The Emperour Charles the fifth ſent a Requeſt to the King and Councel, to permit the Lady Mary to have Maſs in her Houſe: The Councel thinking it fit to gratifie the Emperour, ſent Arch-Biſhop Cranmer, and Biſhop Ridley to the King, to requeſt his Conſent thereto; who coming to the King, alledged their Reaſons, why they deſired it of him: Which the King having heard, replyed again from Scripture grounds ſo gravely and fully, that they were forced to give way to what he had ſaid, granted it to be true: Yet upon politick grounds, they perſwaded him to it, becauſe elſe it might cauſe a Breach with the Emperour, &c. Unto which the King replyed, and willed them to content themſelves, for he would, he ſaid, ſpend his Life, and all he had, rather than to grant that which he knew certainly to be againſt the Truth: Yet ſtill the Biſhops preſſed him, and would have no Nay: Then the good King, ſeeing their Importunity, burſt out into bitter Weeping, and Sobbing, and deſired them to be content: Whereat the Biſhops themſelves, ſeeing the Kings Zeal and Conſtancy, wept as faſt as he, and ſo took their Leave of him, and coming from him, the Arch-Biſhop took his School-Maſter [Mr. Cheek] by the Hand, and ſaid, Ah Maſter Cheek, you have ſuch a Schollar, that hath more Divinity in his
His ſtudies. little Finger, than all we have in our Bodies. He read over Melanchthons common Places: All Tullies Works: The greateſt part of Livies Hiſtory: The choiceſt Orations of Socrates in Greek, of which he tranſlated two into Latine: Sophocle's Tragedies, and the New Teſtament in Greek alſo. The learned Cardane made this Epitaph upon him.

Flete nefas magnum, ſed toto flebitis orbe
Mortales: veſter corruit omnis honor.
Nam regum decus, juvenum flos, ſpeſq; bonorum,
Delicia ſecli, & gloria gentis erat.
Dignus Apollonio lachrymis, Doctaeq; Minervæ:
Floſculus heu miſero concidit ante diem.
Te tumulo dabimus, Muſæ, ſupremaque flentes Munera Melpomene triſtia fata canunt.

M. Bradford, Martyr, ſaith of him. So many things are to be ſpoken in Commendation of the Graces in this Peerleſs Prince, that as Saluſt writes of Carthage: I had rather ſpeak nothing than too little, in that too much is too little. For I judge him to be the Holieſt, and Godlieſt Man in the Realm of England.

Mr. Hooker ſaith of him, That he departed ſoon, but lived long; For Life conſiſts in Action. He lived apace, and dyed betimes, being Deliciæ Orbis, as Titus was called; and Mirabile Mundi, as Otho was ſtiled.

Collected out of the Book of Martyrs, Sir Io. Haywards Life of Edward the ſixth, and Speeds Chronicle.

The

Q: ELIZABETH

The Life of Queen Elizabeth, who Dyed Anno Chriſti 1602.

KING HENRY the eighth being Divorced from Katharine of Spain, who was his Brother Arthurs Widow, Married the Lady Ann Bullen, a Godly, Vertuous, and Charitable Woman, who was Deliveted of this Lady Elizabeth, September 7. Anno Chriſti 1533. Whoſe God-Father was Arch-Biſhop Cranmer, and her God-Mothers were, the Old Dutcheſs of Norfolk, and the Old Marchioneſs of Dorſet. She was brought up in the Proteſtant Religion from her Child-hood, and had for her School-Maſter, Mr. Aſcham, who inſtructed her in the Knowledge of the Tongues and Arts; and under whom ſhe profited very much in Learning. During all the Reign of her Father King Henry, and of her Brother King Edward, ſhe lived in a Princely faſhion: But under the Reign of her Siſter Queen Mary, ſhe met with ſo many Afflictions, that ſhe well deſerved the Title of Elizabeth the Confeſſor. Yet thoſe very Afflictions, through Gods goodneſs, did her ſo much good, that it's hard to ſay, whether ſhe were more Happy in having a Crown ſo ſoon, or in having it no ſooner, till Affliction had firſt laid in her a low, and therefore a ſure Foundation of Humility, for Highneſs to be afterwards built upon. By which means ſhe was ſo ripened for her future Rule and Soveraignty, that Pope Sixtus the fifth profeſſed, that amongſt all the Princes in Chriſtendome, he found but two which were worthy to bear Command, if they had not been ſtained with Hereſie, viz. Henry the fourth, King of France; and Elizabeth, Queen of England. But as in order of time her Sufferings preceeded her Soveraignty; ſo we will firſt ſet them down to the view of the Reader.

Her Birth.

Her Education.

Benefit of her affliction.

When Queen Mary came firſt to the Crown, ſhe pretended much Love to her Siſter, the Lady Elizabeth: For before ſhe was Crowned, ſhe would go no whither, but ſhe would have her by the Hand, and ſend for her to Dinner and Supper: But after she was Crowned, she kept her aloof from her: And shortly after, upon the Rising of Sir Thomas Wyat, she, with the Lord Courtney, were falsly charged to have a Hand in it: Whereupon the Lady Mary sent three of her Councellers, with two Hundred and fifty Horsemen of their Retinue to her, then lying at her House at Ashbridge, who found her very sick in bed, and very feeble and week of body: Yet they, going up to her Chamber, willed one of her Ladies to tell her, that they were sent to her with a Message from the Queen.

Hypocriſie.

Incivility of the Lords.

Her Grace being told of it, said, she was glad of their coming, howbeit being very weak, and it now ten a Clock at Night, she requested them to come again to her the next Morning; to which they replyed, That they must needs see her, and would do it in what case soever she were, and withal, hastily rushed into her Chamber, whereupon she being not a little amazed, said unto them, Is the Hast such that it might not have pleased you to have staid till the Morning? They answered, that they were sorry to see her in that case: And I (said she) am not glad to see you here at this time a Night: They replyed, that they came from the Queen, whose pleasure it was, that she should be at London the seventh of that Month: Whereunto she said, Truly there is no Creature more glad than I to come to her Majesty, and am sorry that at this time I am not in case to wait on her, as you see, and may testifie: They said, they were sorry to see it: Yet their Commission was to bring her either quick, or dead:

Popish malice.

She being troubled at this, asked if their Commission was so strict: They said yea, and withal called two Physitians and asking them, if she might be removed with life, or no? To which they answered, that she might in their Judgment; Thereupon the Lords willed her to prepare against the next Morning at nine a Clock to go with them: And accordingly at that time they took her forth, faint and feeble as she was, being ready to swoune, three or four times, between them. That Night they brought her to Redborn, where she was Guarded all Night: The next Day to St. Albanes, where she was both feeble in Body, and comfortless in Mind. From thence to Mimmes, and High-gate, where her sickness increasing, they tarried that Night, and the next day.

Her great weakness.

She is made a prisoner.

From thence she was carried to the Court, many people by the way flocking about her, and being very sorry to see her in that case. At Court she was presently shut up, and kept a close Prisoner for a fortnight, seeing no Friend all that time. Then came Stephen Gardiner, with nineteen more of the Privy Councel, charging her with Wyats Conspiracy, which she utterly denyed, protesting her Innocency. But after long debating of the business, they told her, it was the Queens Pleasure, she should go to the Tower. At which she being Agast, said, She trusted the Queen would be more gracious to her; still protesting her Innocency, and intreating them to Mediate for her to the Queen; that seeing she was a true Woman to her Majesty, both in Thought, Word, and Deed, she might not be committed to so Notorious and Dolefull place; protesting that she desired no Favour, if she were found Guilty of these Things. But the Lords told her, there was no Remedy, for that the Queen was fully resolved that she should go to the Tower, and so they departed.

Popish malice.

About an Hour after, came Stephen Gardiner again with three other of the Lords, and the Guard, secluding all her Gentlemen, Ladies, and Gentlewomen from her; and instead of them, appointed three of the Queens Men, and three other waiting Women to attend her, commanding that none should have Access to her Grace. They set also an Hundred Northern Souldiers to watch in the Gardens all Night, and two Lords with their Companies in the House. The Saturday following came two Lords to her, telling her, that she must presently go to the Tower, the Barge being ready, and the Tide serving, which would tarry for no body.

Here-

Hereupon ſhe, with ſorrow, intreated them, that ſhe might ſtay but till the next Tide: But one of them anſwered, that neither time nor tide muſt be delayed. Then ſhe requeſted, that ſhe might be ſuffered to write to the Queen, before ſhe went; but that alſo was denyed her by one of them: But the other (the Earle of Suſſex) kneeling down ſaid, ſhe ſhould have liberty to write, and as he was a true man, he would deliver it to the Queen, and bring her an anſwer, what ever came of it. And ſo the time and tide paſſed away; but they privily prepared all things for her going tho next tide, which fell out at Midnight: Yet fearing leſt ſhe ſhould be taken away, they ſtayed till next day, and then theſe two Lords came and told her, it was time for her to depart: She bad them go before, and ſince there was no remedy, ſhe would follow, adding, that ſhe wondred what the Nobility meant, to ſuffer her to be led into Captivity, the Lord knew whither, for ſhe did not. She ſhot the Bridge with ſome danger, the Boat ſtriking upon the ground. When ſhe came to the Tower, ſhe refuſed to land at the Traytors ſtairs; neither could ſhe land, but ſhe muſt be over her ſhooes. But one of the Lords ſaid, ſhe ſhould land there Whereupon ſhe coming out of the Barge, ſaid, Here lands as true a Subject, being a Priſoner, as ever landed at theſe ſtairs, and before thee, O God I ſpeak it, having no Friends but thee alone.

Her danger.

Impriſoned in the Tower.

At her landing ſtood many Warders, and others in order; what needs all this, ſaid ſhe? Going a little further, ſhe ſat down on a cold ſtone to reſt her ſelf: Then the Lievtenant ſaid, Madam, you ſet unwholſomely, you had beſt come out of the Rain. To whom ſhe anſwered, I had better ſit here than in a worſe place; for God knoweth, I know not whither you will bring me. Hereupon her Gentleman Uſher wept; To whom ſhe ſaid, What mean you to uſe me ſo? I took you for my comfort, not thus to diſmay me, ſeeing I know my Truth to be ſuch, that none ſhall have cauſe to weep for me. And ſo ſhe went into priſon; and the doors were locked and bolted upon her, which much troubled her. Then ſhe called to her Gentlewoman for her Book, deſiring God not to ſuffer her to build her Foundation upon the ſands, but upon the Rock, that ſo no bluſtering ſtorms might prevail againſt her.

Her prayer.

Two dayes after, Command came, that ſhe ſhould have Maſs ſaid in her Chamber. In the mean time there was much examining and racking of poor men, to force them to accuſe her, that they might put her to death. And five days after, came Stephen Gardiner, with others of the Councel, and examined her very ſtrictly about divers things: To whom ſhe at laſt replyed, My Lords you do ſift me very narrowly, but well I am aſſured you ſhall not do more to me than God hath appointed, and ſo God forgive you all.

Her faith.

About that time divers of her Servants, having provided her Diet, brought it to the Tower gate, where the raſcally Souldiers received it, which ſo grieved them, that they deſired to ſpeak with the Lievtenant of the Tower, whom they beſeeched, that they might not deliver her Graces Food to ſuch deſperate Ruffians, but that they might carry it to her themſelves: But he very churliſhly refuſed, ſaying, A Priſoner ſhe is, and ſhe ſhall be ſerved as other Priſoners are: They replyed, that they expected more favour from him, and perſwaded themſelves, that the Queen and her Councel would be better to her Grace than ſo: Whereupon he ſware by God, that if they either frowned, or ſhrugged at him, he would ſet them where they ſhould neither ſee Sun nor Moon.

A churliſh Nabal.

Then taken their leave, they prayed God to make him of a better mind to their Miſtreſs: Having thus continued in priſon for a Month, ſhe began to be ſickly, whereupon ſhe requeſted the Lievtenant that ſhe might have Liberty to Walk out a little, but he denying her that Favour, ſhe requeſted, that at laſt ſhe might Walk into the Queens Lodgings, but ſtill he pretended that he durſt not permit it: Well, then ſaid ſhe, if they be ſo ſtrict, God comfort me.

Popiſh cruelty.

The next day the Lord Shandois came to her, and told her, that he had ſued to the Councel for ſome Liberty for her, and had at laſt obtained, that ſhe might walk into thoſe Lodgings, provided, that the Windows were kept ſhut, and that the L. Chamberlaine, and three of the Queens Women did attend her; for which ſhe thanked him, and made uſe of that little Liberty: Afterwards ſhe had leave to walk into a little Garden, the Doors being locked upon her, and the Priſoners on that ſide the Houſe being ſtraightly Commanded not to Speak, nor Look out at Windowes, whileſt ſhe was there: For this ſhe praiſed God, and was well contented with it.

Contentment.

During her Impriſonment, a little Boy of four years old, a mans Child in the Tower, uſed ſometimes to bring her ſome Flowers, as he did to other Priſoners: Hereupon the Boy was ſent for, and they promiſed him Figgs and Apples, and then asked him when he was with the Lady Elizabeth? He anſwered, Every day: Then they asked him when he was with the Lord of Devonſhire, and what he ſent by him to her Grace? The Boy ſaid, I will go preſently to him and know what he will ſend her: But upon this the Lievtenant told him, he ſhould be Whipt, if he came any more at them: But ſaid the Boy I will carry my Lady and Miſtreſs ſome more Flowers: Whereupon the Childs Father was commanded, that he ſhould ſuffer him to go no more to their Chambers: The next Day her Grace walking in the Garden, the Boy peeped in at a Hole, and ſaid, Miſtreſs I muſt bring you no more Flowers: Whereat ſhe ſmiled, apprehending what the reaſon was: This ſo angred the Lievtenant, that he commanded his Father to put him out of the Tower.

Shortly after, the Conſtable of the Tower was Diſcharged, and Sir Henry Benefield put into his place, who brought with him one Hundred Souldiers, with which ſhe was much troubled, and asked, whether the Lady Janes Scaffold was yet taken away, fearing that ſhe ſhould have Acted the ſame Tragedy. Then ſhe enquired, what this Sir Henry Benefield was, and whether if her ſecret Murthering was required, he was a man of that Conſcience to ſee it done. They anſwered, they knew not what he was; but they were perſwaded, God would not ſuffer ſuch VVickedneſs. VVell, ſaid ſhe, God grant it: For thou, O God, canſt molifie ſuch Tyranous Hearts, and diſappoint all ſuch cruel Purpoſes: And I beſeech thee, to hear me thy Creature, which am thy ſervant, and at thy command, truſting by thy Grace ever ſo to remain.

Her Fear.

Her Prayer.

Shortly after, ſhe was told by the Lord Shandois, that ſhe muſt be removed by the New Guard, but he knew not whither, except to Woodſtock. This much troubled her, deſiring rather to ſtay there ſtill, than to be led thence with ſuch a ſort of Raſcals. But he told her, there was no Remedy: Accordingly the Sabbath following, Sir Henry Benefield (being made her Jaylor) received her into his Charge, with a Company of Rake-hells for her Guard. The Lord of Tame was alſo joyned in Commiſſion with him: The firſt Night they carried her to Richmond, where her own Attendants were removed into outward Chambers, and theſe rude Souldiers appointed to attend on her Perſon.

She is removed to woodſtock.

Hereupon ſhe, ſuſpecting ſome Miſchief, called her Uſher, deſiring him with the reſt, to pray for her: For this Night (quoth ſhe) I think to die. But he, with many Tears endeavoured to comfort her; and going down into the Court, he met the Lord of Tame, and Sir Henry Benefield, walking there, and deſiring to ſpeak with the Lord apart, he ſaid to him, My Lord, you have always been my good Lord, and ſo I beſeech you to remain; I now deſire your Honour unfainedly to tell me, whether any miſchief be intended to her Grace this Night, that I and my poor Fellows may take ſuch part as it ſhall pleaſe God to appoint us: For certain- certainly ſe will rather dye than that ſhe, being Innocent, ſhould ſecretly miſcarry. Marry (ſaid the Lord) God forbid that any ſuch Wickedneſs ſhould be wrought ; and rather than it ſhould be ſo, I and my Men are ready to dye at her feet alſo. And ſo, through Gods mercy, ſhe paſſed that doleful Night with an heavy Heart.

Her fears.

A faithful Servant.

The next Day, as ſhe paſſed to Windſor, ſhe ſpied ſome of her Men ſtanding in the Way to ſee her : Whereupon ſhe bad one about her to go to them, and to tell them, Tanquam ovis, that ſhe was led as a Sheep to the ſlaughter.

From Windſor ſhe was carried to Mr. Dormers: And by the way ſome poor people preſenting her with ſome ſmall trifles, Sir Henry Beneſield was exceeding angry, calling them Rebels and Traytors, &c. A churliſh Nabal.

As ſhe paſſed through ſome Towns, they Rang the Bells, which ſo angred Beneſield, that he ſent his Souldiers for the Ringers, and ſet them in the ſtocks.

The next Night ſhe went to the Lord of Tames, where ſhe was Entertained in a very Princely manner. At vvhich Beneſield grunted and grumbled, ſaying, That they could not Anſvver it, &c. But the Lord of Tame told him, that he knevv vvhat he did, and that her Grace ſhould be Merry at his Houſe. The Lord of Tames kindneſs to her.

The next day ſhe went to Woodſtock, where ſhe was impriſoned cloſely, the ſouldiers guarding both within, and without the walls of the houſe, day and night ; After, a while ſhe was allowed to walk into the garden, which much refreſhed her, yet all the doors were ſtrictly locked, Sir Henry himſelf keeping the Keys, whereupon ſhe called him her Jaylor, but he deſired her not to call him ſo, but one of her Officers, to whom ſhe anſwered ; From ſuch Officers good Lord deliver me. After a time ſhe made ſuit to the Councel, that ſhe might have leave to write to the Queen, which at laſt was permitted, and Sir Henry Beneſield brought her Pen, Ink, and Paper, ſtanding by whilſt ſhe wrote, and then requeſted that he might be the Meſſenger to carry it : But ſhe told him, ſhe would ſend one of her own Servants with it : Whereupon he replyed, that he thought none of them durſt be ſo bold as to carry it, ſhe being in that caſe : Yea (ſaid ſhe) I have none ſo diſhoneſt as not to go at my Requeſt.

Well (ſaid he) my Commiſſion is to the contrary, and I may not ſuffer it. Her Grace replyed ; You tell me oft of your Commiſſion, I pray God you may juſtly anſwer the cruel Dealing that you uſe towards me. Yet he ſtopt her Letters four or five dayes, but at length ſent for one of her Gentlemen, and asked him, if he durſt be ſo bold as to carry her Letter. Yea, ſaid he, That I dare, and will with all my heart: So, with an ill will, he gave him her Letter.

She being ſickly the Queen ſent two of her Phyſitians to her, who ſtaid four or five dayes, till ſhe began to amend, and then returned, reporting well of her mild Behaviour, and Humbleneſs towards the Queen. About which time ſhe was requeſted to ſubmit her ſelf to the Queens Majeſty : But ſhe anſwered, that ſhe vvould never ſubmit to them vvhom ſhe had never Offended ; for ſaid ſhe, If I have Offended, I crave no Mercy, but the Law, which had I been guilty of the Breach of, I am ſure I ſhould have had it before this: About this time alſo a Conſultation vvas held, vvhat ſhould be done vvith her, and One of the Lords ſaid, that it vvould never be quiet vvith England, except her Head vvere ſtricken off : Whereunto the Spaniards anſvvered ; God forbid, that their King and Maſter, ſhould have a mind to conſent to that Miſchief: And accordingly, they perſvvaded their King, that he ſhould never get ſo much Honour, as by delivering the Lady Elizabeth out of Priſon, vvhich at length he effected. She is ſickly. Popiſh malice. King of Spains kindneſs to her. God protects her from many Danger.

Whilſt ſhe was at Woodſtock, her life was oft in danger, firſt by fire kindled under her Chamber boards, which was verily ſuppoſed to be done on purpoſe, yet through Gods Mercy, it was quenched: Alſo a Ruffin, that was one of the Keepers, was ſuborned to Murther her, which the Lord alſo diſcovered, and prevented: Alſo a Darling of Stephen Gardiner was ſent to Murther her, which was prevented by Sir Henry Benefields abſence, who had commanded his Brother, to let no man whatſoever to come to her till his return: Alſo whiles ſhe was in the Tower, by Stephen Gardiners procurement, a Writ was ſent for her Execution, but the Lievtenant preſently going to the Queen with it, the Lord was pleaſed in Mercy thereby to prevent the Execution of it. At her Departure out of Woodſtock ſhe wrote with a Diamond in the Window.

Much ſuſpected of me,
Nothing proved can be,
Quoth Elizabeth priſoner.

She wisheth her ſelf a Milk-maid.

Whilſt ſhe was there, hearing a Milk-Maid in the Park ſinging merrily, ſhe wiſhed her ſelf a Milk-Maid, ſaying, That her Caſe was better, and Life more merry than hers in that ſtate as ſhe was. When ſhe was ſent for from Woodſtock, ſhe was by Sir Henry Benefield carried in a tempeſtuous day to Ricot, by the Way, her Hood was thrice blown off, and ſhe deſiring to go to a Gentlemans Houſe hard by, Benefield would not ſuffer her, ſo that ſhe was conſtrained under an Hedge to trim her Head as well as ſhe could.

Popiſh cruelty.

From thence ſhe was carried to Colebrook, and by the way ſome of her Servants meeting her, which had not ſeen her of a long time, they were not ſuffered to ſpeak with her, but were charged in the Queens Name preſently to depart, to their mutual ſorrow; She was ſtill ſurrounded and guarded with Souldiers all day, and cloſe ſhut up in her Chamber at Night, as in a priſon. From thence ſhe went to Hampton Court, where for a fortnight ſhe was ſhut up, and guarded with Souldiers as before: Then came to her the Lord William Howard, who uſed her very Honourably: Whereupon ſhe requeſted him to be a means that ſhe might ſpeak with ſome of the privy Councel; and ſhortly after, Stephen Gardiner with ſome others of them came to her, to whom she ſaid, My Lords, I am glad to ſee you, me thinks I have been deſolately alone a great while: Wherefore I deſire you to mediate to the King and Queen, that I may be delivered from priſon, &c. Then Stephen Gardiner requeſted her to ſubmit her ſelf to the Queen, adding, that then he doubted not but ſhe would be good to her: To whom she anſwered, that Rather than ſhe would do ſo, ſhe would lie in Priſon all the dayes of her life; for ſhe craved no Mercy, but rather the Law, in caſe ſhe had offended: For (ſaid she) if I ſhould yield to this, I ſhould confeſs my ſelf to be an Offender, and might give the King and Queen occaſion to judge Evil of me ever hereafter: And ſo the Lords departed.

Her courage

The next Day came Gardiner again, and told her, that the Queen marvelled that she carried her ſelf ſo ſtoutly, not confeſſing that she had offended; and thereby charging the Queen as if she had Impriſoned her wrongfully: Nay (ſaid she) It may pleaſe her to puniſh me as ſhe ſees good: Well (ſaid Gardiner) you muſt tell another tale before you be ſet at Liberty: The good Lady anſwered, That ſhe had as lieve be in priſon with Truth and Honeſty, as abroad, and ſuſpected of her Majeſty.

She goes to the Queen.

A Week after the Queen ſent for her at ten a Clock at Night, whom she had not ſeen of two years before, and ſo she was conducted to the Queens Bed-Chamber; when ſhe came in, she kneeled down, and prayed God to preſerve her Majeſty.

Majeſty, not doubting but ſhe ſhould prove as true a Subject to her as ever any did, deſiring her Majeſty ſo to eſteem of her, for ſhe ſhould not find her otherwiſe, whatſoever report ſhe heard to the contrary: The Queen anſwered, you will not confeſs your Offence, but ſtand ſtoutly to your truth: I pray God it may ſo fall out: If it do not (ſaid the Lady Elizabeth) I neither deſire Favour, nor Pardon, &c. and ſo after ſuch like Diſcourſe, ſhe was ſent away with little comfort from the Queen: Yet a Week after, ſhe was freed from Sir Henry Benefield her Keeper, and his Souldiers: And upon her Deſire ſhe went to refreſh her ſelf in the Country: But the Queen ſent with her Sir Thomas Pope, one of her Councellors, who watched her narrowly all Queen Maries days.

New troubles.

Shortly after came ſome of the Queens Servants, and carried one of her Gentlewomen to the Fleet, and three others to the Tower, which much troubled her Grace: But it pleaſed God about this time to take away by a remarkable judgment that cruel perſecutor Stephen Gardiner, whereby the life of this excellent Princeſs was preſerved: And ſhortly after, there dropped away by degrees, divers other of her Enemies, whereby her Danger decreaſed, and ſafety, and comfort began to appear, as light out of a dark Cloud.

Stephen Gardiner dies.

Queen Marie dies.

At laſt alſo Queen Mary dyed, at which time the Parliament was ſitting at Weſtminſter; and the Lords being informed of the Queens death, they communicated it to the Commons, and ſo both joyned together preſently in proclaiming Elizabeth, Queen of England, &c. She was now about five and twenty years old, and by experience, and adverſity had gotten wiſdom above her Age: The next day after ſhe was proclaimed Queen, ſhe came from Hatfield to London, and lodged at the Charter-Houſe: The next day ſhe went to the Tower: And in her paſſage, had divers Speeches made to her, and other expreſſions of her Subjects joy; and if ever perſon had the Gift, or skill to win the hearts of the people, it was this Queen; ſhe coupled Mildneſs with Majeſty; and ſtooped, yet in a ſtately manner, to Perſons of the meaneſt ſort. All her Faculties were in motion, and every motion ſeemed a well-guided Action: Her Eye was ſet upon one, her Ear liſtned to another, her judgment ran upon a third, to a fourth ſhe addreſſed her ſpeech: Her ſpirit ſeemed to be every where, and yet ſo intire in her ſelf, that it ſeemed to be no where elſe. Some ſhe commended, ſome ſhe pitied, ſome ſhe thanked; contemning none, neglecting none: And generally caſting forth ſuch courteous Countenances, Geſtures, and Speeches, that thereupon the people redoubled the teſtimonies of their joy, promiſing themſelves much Happineſs under the Government of ſuch a Queen.

She is proclaimed Queen.

Her Character.

She was of ſtature tall, ſlender, ſtraight, and of an amiable countenance: Her Hair inclined to a pale yellow, her Fore-head large and fair, a ſeemly Seat for Princely grace; her Eyes lively, her Noſe ſomewhat riſing in the middeſt, the whole compaſs of her Countenance ſomewhat long, but yet of admirable Beauty.

Her Character.

In life ſhe was moſt innocent, in deſires moderate, in purpoſe juſt, of ſpirit above credit, and almoſt above the capacity of her Sex: Of a Divine wit, as well for depth of judgment, as for quick conceit, and ſpeedy Execution; very eloquent, of wonderful knowledg both in Learning and Affairs: Skilful in Greek, Latine, and divers other forraign Languages.

She was very Religious, Magnanimous, Merciful, and Juſt: She maintained Juſtice at Home, and Arms Abroad, with great Wiſdom and Authority; She deſired thoſe that repaired to her, if they would not be deceived in her, that they would not be the firſt to deceive themſelves; intreating them not to prejudice her by moderate Expectations and Hopes, promiſing to themſelves out of a ſudden liking, more than was fit, or peradventure more than was poſſible to be performed: And laſtly, that they would not raſhly judge of her Actions, as being privy neither to occaſions nor ends of them.

Her Councellors. After ſome ſtay at the Tower, ſhe removed to Somerſet-Houſe: She continued all the Councellors left by the Deceaſed Queen; and to ballance them equally, being Papiſts, ſhe choſe divers Proteſtants to joyn with them; and knowing that ſudden alterations are dangerous, ſhe did by degrees aboliſh Popery, and eſtabliſh the reformed Religion: And then ſhe ſummoned a Parliament. When she took Coach in the Tower, she made a ſolemn Thankſgiving to God, who had delivered her no leſs Mercifully, and Mightily, from her Impriſonment in that place, then Daniel from the Lyons Den: That had delivered her from thoſe dangers wherewith she was environed, and overwhelmed, to bring her to the joy and honour of that Day.

Popery abolished by degrees.

Her thankſgiving.

As she paſſed through the City, the Recorder preſented her with a curious Purſe, wherein were a Thouſand Marks in Gold, deſiring that she would be a gracious Miſtreſs to the City: She anſwered, That ſhe was bound ſo to be, not for their Gold, but for their good Wills: And that as they had expended Treaſure to Honour her, ſo ſhe would be ready, not only to ſpend her Treaſure, but the deareſt Drops of her Blood to maintain and increaſe their flouriſhing Eſtate.

She receives a Bible. In her paſſing a Child from a Pageant let down in a ſilken Lace, an English Bible richly covered, to her: She kiſſed her Hands, took it, kiſt it, laid it to her Breaſt, then held it up, thanking the City, eſpecially for that gift, and promiſing to be a diligent Reader of it. She cheerfully received Noſegays, Flowers, Roſemary from mean perſons.

A diſputation appointed. The Sabbath following, she was Crowned at Weſtminſter: Then did she appoint a publick Diſputation there about matters of Religion; but the Popiſh Diſputants shewed themſelves ſo croſs, and froward in it, that it came to nothing.

King of Spain woes her. King Philip hearing of the Death of his Wife, Queen Mary, he ſent an Embaſſadour to propoſe his Marriage with her, promiſing to get a Diſpenſation from the Pope. This much troubled her, conſidering his quality, and how much he had deſerved of her, and yet now she muſt reject his ſuit: Wherefore she reſolved publickly to make profeſſion of her Religion, and to haſten the Reformation, as the only means to take him off. In the Parliament was enacted, That the Lady Elizabeth was, and ought both by the Law of God, the common Law of England, and the Statute Law, to be the lawful and undoubted Queen of England, &c. The Sacrament was appointed to be uſed in both kinds, and divers ſuch like Laws for eſtablishing the Proteſtant Religion. And shortly after she concluded a Peace with the French King.

Reformation of Religion.

Her anſwer concerning Marriage. The Commons by the Speaker, endeavoured to perſwade her to Marriage, from many politick grounds. To whom she anſwered. That at her Coronation ſhe had ſolemnly with a Ring eſpouſed her ſelf to the Kingdom, And (ſaid she) every one of you, and every true Engliſh-Man, are my Children, and Kinſ-Men: But if God ſhall pleaſe that I ſhall enter into another courſe of life, I promiſe you, that I will do nothing that ſhall be prejudicial to the Common-wealth, &c. And to me it ſhall be full ſatisfaction, if when I have left my laſt Breath, it be Engraven on my Tomb, Here lies ELIZABETH, which reigned a Virgin, and died a Virgin.

Her Motto.

By means of the Alteration of Religion, this Kingdom became the moſt free of all the Kingdoms in Chriſtendome, the Scepter being freed from Servitude to the Pope; and thereby made Wealthy than formerly, an infinite Maſſe of Money being ſtaid at Home, which was wont to be exported to Rome. She oft uſed to ſay that, That the Common-wealth might be in ſafety, ſhe was never without care. Her Motto was, Semper eadem, Always the ſame. Her ſtudy was, as to Reform, ſo to eſtabliſh the reformed Religion. When forraign Princes interceeded to her in the Behalf of the Papiſts, she anſwered: That they muſt not expect from her ſuch things, as ſhe could not grant with the ſafety of her Kingdom, and without wrong to her own Honour and Conſcience. Toleration denied.

the

The King of France, notwithſtanding his late made Peace with her, yet levied great Forces of Horſe and Foot, to be tranſported into Scotland: But whilſt he breathed out nothing but blood, and ſlaughter againſt the Proteſtants, by Gods juſt hand, his own blood was ſpilt at the Nuptial Solemnities of his Daughter, and Siſter. King of France his death.

About this time Religion was reformed in Scotland, which the Queen Regent much impugned; and for that end made uſe of French Souldiers to ſuppreſs the Proteſtant Nobility, and others. VVhereupon they ſued to Queen Elizabeth for aid, and ſhe enquired into their Ends, which they propoſed, which they profeſſed were to advance the Glory of Chriſt, the ſincere Preaching of Gods VVord, the Rooting out of Superſtition, and Idolatry, and to preſerve their antient Liberty againſt the Oppreſſion of ſtrangers. Religion reformed in Scotland.

After the Queen had ſeriouſly conſidered all things, it was reſolved, That the Profeſſors of the ſame Religion were to be relieved, and the French to be driven out of Scotland. Hereupon the Queen ſent Mr. VVinter with a Fleet into Edinburgh Frith, who ſet upon the French Ships of VVar, and upon one of their Garriſons. And the Duke of Norfolke was ſent to Barwick, unto whom reſorted many of the Scottiſh Nobility, where many Articles were agreed upon betwixt them. After which the Queen ſent an Army into Scotland, conſiſting of one thouſand two hundred Horſe, and ſix thouſand Foot, under the Lord Grey, a brave Souldier: The firſt thing they did was to beſiege Leith, the French iſſued forth and ſkirmiſhed with them, but were beaten in again. The ſiege continuing, the King of France ſent to Queen Elizabeth to treat of a Peace; which at laſt was concluded, and proclaimed in the Camp, and Town. Hereby the antient liberty of Scotland was retained, the Dignity of England preſerved, and the Scottiſh Proteſtants acknowledged our Queen to be the Defendreſs of their Happineſs. She relieves the Reformers. Leith beſieged. Peace concluded.

Shortly after, the Queen ſet forth a Proclamation, whereby ſhe Commanded the Anabaptiſts, and ſuch like Hereticks, which had flocked to the Coaſt Towns of England from the parts beyond the Sea, (under colour of ſhunning perſecution, and thereby had ſpread their poiſonous Opinions in England) to depart the Realm within twenty dayes, upon pain of Impriſonment, and loſs of goods. Hereticks banished.

The Abby of Weſtminſter ſhe converted to a Collegiat Church; Inſtituting to Gods Glory, and the Increaſe of Good Learning, a Deane, twelve Prebends, a School-Maſter, Uſher, and fourty Schollars, ſix whereof at leaſt are preferred to the Univerſities Yearly, twelve Almeſ-men, &c. Money, which King Henry the eighth had Embaſed, ſhe reſtored to it's juſt Value. Weſtminſter reformed.

Anno 1561. The Scottiſh Queen Deferred the Confirmation of the aforementioned Treaty: VVhereupon the Queen ſent into Scotland, to exhort the Nobility to mutual Amity, which is firmly founded in the Unity of Religion.

Shortly after, the Scottiſh Queen, being now a VVidow, and in France, ſent to Queen Elizabeth for leave to paſs into Scotland upon a ſafe Conduct; VVhich ſhe refuſed to grant, becauſe ſhe had not, according to her Faith given, confirmed the aforenamed Treaty. But yet in a great Fogg, ſhe paſſed by the Engliſh Ships, and ſo got into Scotland.

About this time the Pope endeavoured to perſwade our Queen to ſend ſome to the Councel of Trent, for the taking away of Diſſentions in Religion, &c. VVhereunto ſhe anſwered, That ſhe heartily wiſhed for an Oecumenical Councel, but to a Papiſh Councel ſhe would not ſend; that with the Biſhop of Rome ſhe had She diſclaims the Councel of Trent.

had nothing to do, whose authority was expelled out of England by consent of her Estates : Neither belonged it to him, but to the Emperour, to call Councels, nor would she acknowledg any greater Authority in him, than in any other Bishop.

Pauls steeple burnt. About this time the Spire of St. Pauls Steeple, which was five hundred and twenty Foot from the ground, and two hundred and sixty from the square Steeple, being framed of Timber, and covered with Lead, was set on fire by Lightning; and in five hours space, it was quite consumed, together with the Roof of the Church: But by the Queens bounty, and other large Contributions, the Roof was soon repaired again.

She assists the Protestants in France. Anno 1562. the Protestants in France being persecuted, and oppressed by the Popish party, sent to the Queen of England, desiring aid from her: And after mature Deliberation, she took into her protection the French Kings Subjects in Normandy, contracting with the Prince of Conde, and other Noble men, to pay them an hundred thousand Angels, and to send them over into France, six thousand men. And the same Day she published a Declaration, that she sent not her Army into Normandy to recover that Country, which anciently belonged to the Kings of England, but to preserve it for the French King, being not yet at Age, and to defend it against the Guises, who had exercised Barbarous cruelties against the Protestants, whom she could not neglect, without betraying her own Religion, Security, and safety.

And shortly after, she sent over Forces under the Earl of Warwick, to New-Haven : And the Queens Ships scouring the Sea, brought in many rich Prizes.

A Parliament. Anno 1563. another Parliament was holden at Westminster; where, amongst other good Laws, it was ordained, that the Bible, and Service-Book should be translated into the Welch Tongue. The year after, the Queen in her progress went to Cambridge, where she was entertained with all kinds of Honour, and with Comedies, Tragedies, and Scholastical Disputations: She surveyed every Colledge, and in a Latine Oration, she acknowledged their Love and Kindness, commending their multiplicity of Learning, Exhorting them to bend their whole minds and studies to the Improvement thereof; promising to be a Patroness to them therein.

Her entertainment at Cambridge.

And Oxford Anno 1566. she went to Oxford also, where she was magnificently entertained: There she stayed seven dayes, being much delighted with the pleasantness of the place, and beautifulness of the Colledges; and the wits, and excellent learning of the Students: She gave them large thanks in a Latine Oration, with singular sweetness of speech, and so bade them heartily fare-well.

A further reformation desired. Anno 1568. some Godly Ministers sought earnestly for a reformation of our Church, for abolishing of Episcopacy, and for the setling of the Presbyterian government in this Kingdom. But by the power of the Bishops with the Queen, they were imprisoned; yet had they many that concurred with them in judgment; which by the Prelatical party were branded with the odious name of Puritanes.

Queen of Scots imprisoned. About this time the Queen of Scots fled into England, and by the advice of the Privy Councel, was here detained.

Treason by the Popes means. Also Pope Pius Quintus suborned one Robert Ridolph, a Florentine, who had lived a Factor in London a long time, to stir up the Papists in England against Queen Elizabeth, which he most zealously, and closely prosecuted: yet the Lord prevented him: Also there was much underhand dealing, that the Duke of Norfolk might marry the Queen of Scots, and set her at Liberty, whereupon she was removed out of the North (being a Popish Country) to Tidbury Castle, under the custody of George Earl of Shrewesbury.

Queen

Queen Elizabeth uſed great care for the ſafety of Religion both at Home, and Abroad; and whereas in France, Edicts were publiſhed (contrary to the former Agreement) whereby the Exerciſe of the reformed Religion was utterly forbidden, the profeſſors of it removed from all publick Offices, and the Miniſters of the word commanded to depart the Realm by a Day perfixed, our Queen by her Embaſſadour [Norris] earneſtly ſolicited the King of France, that a ſound ſincere peace might be made, adviſing the King, that he would not by unſeaſonable Remedies incenſe his Subjects minds, and that above all things he would beware of thoſe, which by rooting out his faithful Subjects, ſought to weaken his Kingdome, that it might become a prey to others: But when he would not hearken to her Counſel, leſt ſhe ſhould fail thoſe that were joyned with her in one common cauſe, ſhe ſent one hundred thouſand Angels, and Munition for War to the Proteſtants: ſhe alſo entertained curteouſly ſuch French Proteſtants, as fled into England, as alſo the Netherlanders, many of whom came hither alſo to withdraw themſelves from the Cruelty of the Duke de Alva, who breathed forth nothing but bloud and death againſt them: And ſhortly after, picking a quarrel with our Queen, he prohibited all Commerce with the Engliſh, and commanded that nothing ſhould be brought in, or carried forth of the Netherlands by the Engliſh: He alſo appointed Searchers, amongſt whom there was none ſo active, as one John Story, an Engliſh Fugitive, who had before conſulted with a Magician againſt the Queens life, and had provoked the Duke de Alva to Invade England, but being allured with a Wile into a Ship, they preſently hoiſed Sail, and brought him hither, where he was afterwards Executed for his Treaſon.

Perſecution in France.

Our Queen mediates for them.

She relieves the Proteſtants.

Story executed.

About this time many Rumors brake forth, that the Earls of Northumberland and Weſtmerland (zealous Papiſts) were raiſing a Rebellion in the North, whereupon the Queen ſent to them, to come up to London, and Northumberland was partly minded ſo to do, but his Friends and Followers beſeeched him, that he would not fail them, nor the Religion of his Fathers: Telling him, that the Catholicks were prepared all over England to aſſiſt him: That ſome were coming out of Scotland, others out of the Netherlands from the Duke de Alva to joyn with him, whereupon he, going to the Earl of Weſtmerland; they brake out into open Rebellion, publiſhing theſe pretences: That they took Arms with no other intent, but that the Religion of their Forefathers might be reſtored, corrupt Councellers removed from the Queen, that the Duke of Norfolk, and other Knights that were put from their ranks, might be reſtored to liberty and grace: And that they attempted nothing againſt the Queen, to whom they vowed themſelves now, and ever dutiful and obedient Subjects.

Treaſon in the North.

Their firſt March was to Durham, where they rent and trampled under feet Engliſh Bibles in as great a contempt as Jehoiakim did Jeremy's Rowl. At Darington they beſprinkled the Army with Holy Water, and at Rippon they heard Maſs to forward their Treaſon: Their Enſigne was the Croſs and the five Wounds of Chriſt: At Brampton Moor they Muſtered a thouſand ſix Hundred Horſe, and four Thouſand Foot, with which they fell upon Barnards Caſtle, which, after eleven days ſiege, was yielded to them: Hereupon they were proclaimed Traitors; The Pope promiſed a hundred thouſand Crowns to advance this Deſigne, but before they received the Money, the Earl of Suſſex, Lievtenant General of the North, gathered ſome Forces, and purſued them, whereupon the chief of them fled into Scotland to the Popiſh party there, not bidding their deluded Followers farewel, who were preſently ſurprized without Reſiſtance, and the Ringleaders of them were Executed by Marſhal Law.

Popiſh profaneneſs.

Traitors attainted.

Yet preſently after Leonard Dacres began a new Rebellion, and raiſed many to revenge their Friends death, but the Lord Hunſdon haſting againſt them, after a long and deſperate fight, put them to flight, Dacres eſcaping into Scotland, and leaving his Followers to the Law.

New treaſon.

Northumberland beheaded. Gods judgment on Traytors.

Northumberland in Scotland was taken by the Regent, imprisoned, and afterwards sent into England, where (being attainted by the Parliament) he was beheaded at York. The Earl of Westmerland, by Gods revenging Hand, in the very time of his Rebellion, was deprived of his Children; and afterwards himself wandring in strange Countries, had his Body consumed with venemous Ulcers, whereof he Dyed.

The Popes Bull.

About that time, Pope Pius Quintus, at the instance of Nicholas Morton, an English Priest, sent forth his Bull against the Queen, whereby he deprived her of all Princely Authority, as one uncapable of the Crown, or Government. Then were his Emissaries sent forth, some of them were plotters of Invasions, to lay our Land wast; others, conspirators against her sacred Person: And the Popes Bulls was brought to London, and in the night time hung upon the Gates of the Bishops Palace by St. Pauls.

She relieves the French Protestants.

Yet in the middest of these Broils at Home, she failed not to Relieve the Protestants of France, who were in a most Distressed state: And she exhorted all the Princes of the same profession, to take upon them the Defence of the common Cause. The Queen of Navarre she supplyed with Moneys, taking Jewels in pawn for it. She permitted Henry Champernoun to lead into France an hundred voluntary Gentlemen upon Horse-back, who were very serviceable to the Protestant party. Not long after were Executed Sherwin, Campion, Kirby, for dispersing and promoting the Popes Bull against the Queen. And Sanders, who was the Popes Legate in Ireland to raise Rebellion, fell Mad, and wandred up and down succourless in the wast Mountains, where he miserably died.

Traytors executed. God plagues them.

Summerviles treason.

Then John Summervile of Ederston in Warwick-shire, came to the Court, (provoked thereto by one Hall, a Seminary Priest) with a purpose to Murder the Queen; but God discovering his Treason, he was committed to Newgate, where he desperately Hanged himself.

Many Priests and Jesuits repaired into England in the Attire of Gallants, dispersing themselves, and endeavouring to withdraw the Subjects from their Allegiance: Some of which were taken and Executed, as Campion, &c.

Throgmortons treason.

Then Francis Throgmorton (solicited thereto by Mendoza the Spanish Embassadour) undertook to sound the Havens for the Enemies entrance; to get a Catalogue of all the Popish Gentlemen in every County, that would assist: But God discovering his Treason, he was apprehended, and in his study the Catalogue was found, and the Havens for Landing, &c. for which he was worthily Executed.

Parrie's treason.

Then one William Parry (whose life the Queen had formerly spared, when he was justly Condemned for Burglary) vowed her Death: And for this end, he went to the Queen, desiring to speak with her, and oft-times after, having Weapon, Place, Presence, and Opportunity, intending resolutely to kill her, was ever Daunted when he beheld the Glory of her presence, and Majesty in her Face. Yet afterwards, reading Allens Book, he was so fired with Zeal, that he posted to a Gentleman, whom he thought as Discontented as himself, opening his Treason for the bringing in of forraign Invaders, and threatning with Dagg or Dagger, to kill the Queen: But the Gentleman revealing it to two privy Councellers, he was Apprehended, and confessing his Treason, was worthily Executed. Hereupon her Majesty in a Parliament, openly professed, that she knew no Creature breathing, whose life stood hourly in more peril than her own: And that even at her first Entrance into her estate, she entred into infinite Dangers of life, as one that had to wrestle with many and mighty Enemies; yet was she confident of her Heavenly Fathers protection, &c. God protects his own.

Shortly after, as she was upon the Thames in her Barge with the French Embassa-Embaſſadour, and ſome others, a Serving-Man with his Caleiver, ſhot a Bullet, which pierced both the Arms of one of the Water-men, within ſix Foot of the Queen: With which all in the Barge were aſtoniſhed; but ſhe being undaunted, and ſeeing the Man bleed, threw him her Scarfe, and with words of Comfort, bad him be of good cheer, he ſhould never want; for the Bullet was aimed at her, though it hit him: Yet afterwards, knowing that it was done Caſually, ſhe both pardoned the Party, and Commanded his Maſter to keep him ſtill in his Service. She was of ſuch ſingular Clemency, that ſhe never heard of the Capital puniſhment of Offenders, even of ſuch as had ſought her own Death, but it bread Horror, and ſorrow in her; ſo that had not her Councellers earneſtly inculcated the neceſſity of ſuch exemplary Juſtice, many dangerous Attempts had eſcaped their due puniſhment, which moved her to ſay, that her Reading of Seneca de clementia, had done her much good; but ſome would perſwade her, it had done her State as much harm. Courage. Clemency.

Her Love to her people in general, and tender Care over the poorer ſort, and Oppreſſed, was incomparable: Her Ears were always open to their Complaints, and her Hands open to receive their Petitions; and her manner was always to commend their Cauſes to her Counſel, and Judges, to whom ſhe uſed to ſay: Have care of my people; you have my place, do you to them that which I ought to do: They are my people, yet every one oppreſſeth and ſpoileth them without Mercy: They can neither help themſelves, nor revenge their Quarrel: See to them, I pray you, ſee to them, for they are my Charge; them therefore I charge you with, as God hath committed them to me: I care not for my ſelf, my Life is not dear unto me; my care is for my people. If you knew my care for my people, you might diſcern, that I take no great joy in bearing the Crown, &c. Love to her people. Her charge to the Judges.

Anno 1585. Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, was gone ſo far in Diſloyal practices againſt her, that he was committed to the Tower; and after ſome time, by diſcharging a Dagge with three Bullets under his left pap, he pierced his heart, and preſently Dyed. Northumberland kills himſelf.

Alſo Philip, Earl of Arundel, and Sir John Perat, late Deputy of Ireland, for plotting with Spain againſt the Queen, were impriſoned in the Tower; where, by courſe of nature, they ended their lives

Then Anthony Babington, Eſquire, and thirteen more, whereof one was a Seminary Prieſt, Conſpired againſt her, whereof ſeven of them undertook to Murther her: They held Intelligence alſo with forraign Powers to Invade the Realm; and with many Papiſts in moſt parts of the Kingdom. But the Prieſt going to the Spaniſh Embaſſadour Mendoza, to ſignifie that all things were now ready, was ſuddenly apprehended, and Impriſoned: Whereupon Babington and two others of them reſolved immediately to kill the Queen: But (God protecting her) he was intercepted, and impriſoned; from whence he eſcaped, and intended to fly the Land, Diſguiſed himſelf by colouring his Face and Hands with Walnut-tree Leaves, yet (through Gods Mercy) he was Diſcovered, Apprehended, and brought to the Tower: The other Conſpirators hereupon Diſperſed themſelves; yet were they met with, and Examined, who confeſſed their Treaſons, and were deſervedly Condemned, and Executed. Babington and his complices.

Then Stanly an Engliſh Fugitive, ſuborned Patrick Cullen for thirty pound to kill the Queen: Yet God diſcovering his Treaſon, he was Apprehended and Executed. Stanlie's treaſon.

Then Roderick Lopez a Phyſitian about her Majeſty, was Corrupted to give her poyſon in her Phyſick, and for that end had a Jewell of Gold garniſhed with a great Diamond, and a large Ruby given him for a Reward, and fifty thouſand Crowns more were promiſed when he ſhould effect it: But Gods Lopez his treaſon.

Mercy brought to light the Conſpiracy: So that Lopez coming with his poiſonous Phyſick to the Queen, ſhe told him, he muſt go to the Lord Treaſurer Cecill, who had more need of Phyſick than ſhe, whereupon he went to him with all Diligence, to whom the old Man ſaid, What is your Phyſick Maſter Doctor? a Purge ſaid Lopez: I think, ſaid the Lord Cecill, I muſt be a Phyſician to purge you, and ſo apprehended him for a Traitor; and other Doctors examining the Ingredients, eaſily found that the potion was poiſon, for which he ſuffered Death at Tyburne as he deſerved.

York and Williams treaſon.

Then two other Engliſh Fugitives, York and Villiams, Souldiers by profeſſion, and deſperate Papiſts, were ſuborned to kill her, and Oaths of ſecreſie was adminiſtred to them by a Prieſt, who ſent them away with his bleſſing: They came into England with a purpoſe to get Entertainment with ſome great Courtier, to further their Deſigne, but their Treaſon being found out, they were condemned, and dyed like Traitors.

Squires treaſon.

Then one Squire, who belonged to the Queens ſtable, was hired to poiſon the Pummel of her Saddle: And by a Jeſuit he was thus encouraged: God bleſs thee, and give thee ſtrength, my Son, be of good courage, I pawn my ſoul for thine, and thou ſhalt have my prayers, dead and alive: And thereupon he delivered him the poyſon, directed him how to apply it; and afterwards the Queen being to ride abroad, he preſſed out the poiſon upon the Pummel of her Saddle a little before ſhe gat up, yet Gods wonted and wonderful protection appeared; for though the ſeaſon was hot, and her Veins and Pores open to receive any malignant Tainture, yet her body felt no Diſtemper, nor her Hand more Hurt than Pauls did, when he ſhaked off the Venemous Viper.

Alſo with the ſame poiſon he anointed the pummels of a wooden Chair, wherein the Earl of Eſſex ſat, purpoſing to deſtroy him alſo, but the Lord prevented the Operation, as he did to the Queen: Hereupon the Jeſuit, ſuſpecting Squires Falſhood; becauſe the Act was not done; ſent Information againſt him into England, and he being taken was Committed to Priſon, and Examined, who confeſſing all, was Worthily Executed.

Duke of Norfolk executed.

The Duke of Norfolk, who was Priſoner in the Tower about the Queen of Scots, was after tryal Condemned, and Executed.

She relieves Scotland.

Anno 1572. The Regent of Scotland ſent to her to crave aid, for the Defence of the young King and Country, endangered by civil broils, whereupon the Queen ſent him a thouſand five hundred men, under Sir William Drury, who beſieged the Caſtle of Edenborough, held by ſome Rebels, took it in, and ſo returned into England.

Royal Exchange built Sir Francis Drake compaſſes the world.

The ſame year Sir Thomas Greſham built the Royal Exchange for the Commerce of Merchants, which was Anno 1577. Alſo Sir Francis Drake ſailed about the world, returning Anno 1580. to the great honour of the Queen and the Engliſh Nation, being the firſt that ever attempted and performed ſuch an Enterprize.

Stukelies rebellion in Ireland.

Anno 1583. The Pope and King of Spaine joyned together to ſend Men and Money under Thomas Stukeley into Ireland, to ſtir up Rebellions there: But the Lord Grey, Deputy of Ireland, quickly ſlew and took them Priſoners: And Stukeley, haunted with the furies of his own Conſcience, Dyed miſerably. Alſo the Earl of Deſmond, that had joyned in the Rebellion, wandring about in the Woods, was at laſt ſlain by a common Souldier.

Gods judgment on Deſmond.

About this time the States of the Low-countries joyned together to free themſelves from the Spaniſh Tyranny, ſought to our Queen to be their Protectreſs: She permitted them to carry over many Engliſh Voluntieres, and promiſed to mediate Peace betwixt them and the King of Spain, and ſo diſ-

miſſed

missed them well satisfied: But presently after, Don John of Austria oppressing them, they sued again to the Queen, that by her means, they might enjoy the ancient priviledges of their Provinces, and freedom of Conscience from the Spanish Inquisition, and by their lamentable complaints, they so prevailed with the pittiful Queen, that she sent into Spain, to intreat the King to redress their Grievances; But he, being Deaf to that request, and planting his Garrisons very suspiciously, she agreed with the States, and lent them an hundred thousand pound for their Relief.

She lends money to the Hollanders.

Anno 1581. Francis Valois, the King of France his Brother, came into England to woe our Queen; but she, desiring to do nothing that might grieve her Subjects, after Princely entertainment, dismissed him. Shortly after the Prince of Orange being Murthered, the States sued to her again for Relief and Protection, and her Councel upon Debate, resolved that for Defence of the Gospel, and the Professors of it, her Majesty to accept of the Offer, and thereupon she undertook to be their Defender, but would not take the Title of Soveraign Lady thereof, which they would have setled upon her and her Heirs: Then was Sir John Norris sent over with five thousand Foot, and one thousand Horse at her Majesties pay, for security whereof, Flushing, Brill, and the Ramekins were delivered to her Majesties use, Anno 1585. This King Philip of Spain took very ill, and published two false Libells against her, whereunto she returned a printed Answer. Then Mendoza, the Spanish Lieger Embassadour, practised to bring in forraign Forces for the Invasion of this Land, but the Lord prevented him.

She undertakes the defence of the Netherlands.

Mendoza's Treason.

About this time the Queen sent Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, with a brave train into the Low Countries, where he was joyfully, and honourably entertained, and the States took their Oath to the Queen. Leicester presently attempted the taking in of Zutphen, where happened a fierce encounter between the English and Spaniards, in which the brave Sir Philip Sidney, as he changed his Horse, was shot with a Musquet bullet above the knee, which so shattered the bone of his thigh, that he Dyed thereof twenty five Days after; yet the English took in a Sconse neer Zutphen; whereof Leicester made Rowland York, Governour, as also Sir William stantley, Governour of Deventer, contrary to the mind of the States; and these two men traiterously sold the places to the Spaniards presently, which made the States very jealous of the English.

Earl of Leicester sent into the Netherlands.

Sir Philip Sidney slain.

York and Stanley traitors.

Hereupon was the Earl of Leicester sent for back into England; and about that time, the Queen of Scots was beheaded at Fotheringhay Castle. In Leicesters ablence, his Officers and Souldiers grew very unruly, whereupon the States chose Maurice of Nassaw their Governous, yet Leicester returned into Holland, but the Differences betwixt him, and the States growing higher, the Queen caused him to resign his Government, and return for England.

Anno 1587. Queen of Scots beheaded.

Anno 1588. the Spaniard prepared for to invade England, yet held a Treaty for peace, the better to make the Queen secure. His preparations were Extraordinary, as may appear by this List of his Navy.

Popish perfidiousness.

The Admiral Galleon of St. Martins, of one thousand Tunn, one hundred seventy seven Marriners, three hundred Souldiers, fifty Cannon, &c.

The Spanish Navy.

Galleon of St. Johns, of one thousand and seventy Tun, one hundred sixty Marriners, two hundred thirty one Souldiers, and fifty Cannon, &c.

Galleon of St, Mark, of seven hundred ninety two Tun, one hundred and seventeen Marriners, two hundred ninety two Souldiers, &c.

Galleon of St. Philip, of eight hundred Tun, one hundred and seventeen Marriners, four hundred and fifteen Souldiers, fourty pieces of Artillery.

Galleon of St. Lewis, of eight hundred and thirty Tun, one hundred and sixteen Marriners, three hundred seventy six Souldiers, and fourty Gunns.

Galleon of St. Matthew, of seven hundred and fifty Tun, fifty Marriners, one hundred seventy seven Souldiers, and fourty Gunns.

Galleon of St. James, of five hundred and twenty Tun, one hundred Marriners, three hundred Souldiers, and thirty Gunns.

Galleon of Florence, of nine hundred sixty one Tun, one hundred Marriners, three hundred Souldiers, and fifty two Gunns.

Galleon of St. Christopher, of three hundred fifty two Tun, ninety Marriners, three hundred Souldiers, thirty Gunns.

Galleon of St. Bernard, of three hundred fifty two Tun, one hundred Marriners, two hundred eighty Souldiers, and thirty Gunns.

1 Zabra, of one hundred sixty six Tun, fifty five Marriners, fifty five Souldiers, and thirteen Gunns.

2 Zabra, of one hundred sixty six Tun, fifty Marriners, sixty Souldiers, &c.

Ship of St. Angel, of seven hundred sixty eight Tun, one hundred and fourteen Marriners, three hundred twenty three Souldiers, and thirty Cannon.

The Gangrin, of one thousand one hundred and sixty Tun, one hundred Marriners, three hundred Souldiers, and thirty six Cannon.

St. James, of sixty hundred sixty Tun, one hundred and two Marriners, two hundred and fifty Souldiers, and thirty Gunns.

Conception, of four hundred sixty eighty Tun, seventy Marriners, one hundred Souldiers, and twenty Cannon.

2 Conception, of four hundred and eighteen Tun, seventy Marriners, one hundred sixty four Souldiers, twenty four Gunns.

Magdalen, of three hundred and thirty Tun, seventy Marriners, two hundred Souldiers, and twenty two Gunns.

St. John, of three hundred and fifty Tun, eighty Marriners, one hundred and thirty Souldiers, and twenty four Gunns.

Mary, of one hundred sixty five Tun, one hundred Marriners, one hundred and eighty Souldiers, twenty four Gunns.

Manuel, of five hundred and twenty Tun, fifty four Marriners, one hundred and thirty Souldiers, sixteen Gunns.

Mary, of seven hundred and seven Tun, fifty Marriners, two hundred and twenty Souldiers, thirty Gunns; besides divers others.

They had in all one hundred and thirty Ships of fifty seven thousand eight hundred and eight Tun, eight thousand four hundred and fifty Marriners, one hundred and ninety thousand two hundred ninety five Souldiers, two thousand eighty eight Slaves: two thousand six hundred and thirty Cannon, seven thousand Musquets: ten thousand Halberds, and Partizans: One hundred thousand Quintals of Biscuits: One hundred fourty seven thousand Pipes of Wine: six thousand five hundred Quintals of Bacon, three thousand Quintals of Cheese. Besides Fish, Rise, Beanes, Pease, Oyl, Vinegar, &c. twelve thousand Pipes of fresh Water. The Army cost every day thirty thousand Ducats: The General was the Duke of Medina Sidonia: There were in it one hundred Friers; as many Physicians, Chirurgeons, Apothecaries; and four and twenty Noblemen Volunteers: This Navy was by them stiled the Invincible Armado; and had the blessing of the Pope along with it: To encounter with it, the Queen first appointed General Fasting and Prayer publickly through the Land: Then she sent forth under Charles Howard, Lord Admiral, and under Sir Francis Drake, Vice Admiral, a hundred ships, as also fourty little ships, under Henry Lord Seymor, lay about Dover; as the former lay at Plimouth: In all our Fleet, were but three and twenty of the Queens great ships; the rest were little ones.

Fasting and Prayer.

The Prince of Parma in the Netherlands was to joyn with the Spanish Navy, and and had prepared for that end two hundred and ten Bands of old Souldiers, a hundred in each Band, and four thousand nine hundred Horse for Land service. In the English Fleet were but twelve thousand Marriners and Souldiers.

July the 20*th*. Anno 1588. the Spanish Navy came within the sight of England: And they were so confident of success, that they spared for no cost, intending that England should pay the Reckoning. Besides what was mentioned before, they had two and twenty thousand great shot. Of Powder four thousand two hundred Quintals, every Quintal containing an hundred weight. Of Lead for Bullets, a thousand Quintals, of Match, a thousand two hundred Quintals; with murthering peeces, double Canons for battery: Field pieces for the Camp, with store of Furniture for Carriages, Mules, and Horses: They had store of Torches, Hides, and Lead, to stop Leakes; Whippes and butchering Knives: The Army in all was thirty two thousand strong. The Prince of Parma provided seventy flat bottom'd Boats, every one able to beat thirty Horses for transportation, with Bridges ready made to ship and unship them by: Store of Piles, sharpened at the end with Iron pikes to pull up the Mouths of Rivers; twenty thousand empty Casks with Cords, and other Furniture fit to make Floating Bridges to stop up Havens, &c. Towards this Expedition the Pope sent out his Crusado, and contributed a Million of Gold.

Our Queen besides her Navy, prepared a Land Army under the Earl of Leicester, Lievtenant General, which met at Tilbury in Essex, consisting of twenty two thousand Foot, and one thousand five hundred Horse; her self like another Deborah, was General of the Army. Tilbury Camp.

The first of the Spanish ships, which fell into our hands, was a great Galleon, which having lost her Foremast, lagged behind the rest, whereupon Drake sent to command them to yield; otherwise his Bullets should force them to it; but Valdez answered, that they were four hundred and fifty strong, and himself Don Pedro, and therefore expected Honourable Conditions; Drake replied, that he had no Leasure to parly, if they would yield presently, do it; otherwise they should prove that Drake was no Dastard: As soon as they heard that terrible Name of Drake, they presently yielded: In the ship they found fifty thousand Ducats, which they shared merrily amongst themselves. Drake takes a Galleon.

Whilst the Armado lay at Anchor neer Callis, the English emptied eight ships, filled them with Gun-powder, Pitch, Brimstone, &c. which they set on fire, and in the Night they let them drive with the Wind towards the Spanish Fleet; this so frighted them, with horrible fear, lest their ships should be fired, that they cut their Cables, and fled in such hast and confusion, that their greatest Galliasse fell foul on another ship, whereby she was taken by the English, and in her a rich booty. Eight fire ships. Spaniards beaten.

In brief, God fighting from Heaven by the Winds against them, and prospering the English in their little nimble ships, this Invincible Armado was so shatterd, torne, dispersed, &c. that they came short Home eighty one of their ships, and thirteen thousand five hundred and odd of their men. So that there was no famous and great Family in all Spain, which in this Expedition lost not a Son, Brother, or Kinseman: Hereupon this Religious Queen caused publick Thanksgiving to be celebrated to the Lord of Hosts for this signal Deliverance. Thanksgiving.

Concerning this wonderful Deliverance, Mr. Samuel Ward made these Verses.

Octogesimus Octavus, mirabilis annus,
Clade Papistarum, faustus vbique pijs.

In Eighty eight Spain arm'd with potent might Against our peaceful Land came on to fight.
The Winds, and Waves, and Fire in one conspire
To help the Englisſh, fruſtrate Spains deſire.

Queen Elizabeths Fame was ſo Advanced hereby, that Don Antonio, the Expulſed King of Portugal, came to her for Relief, who granted it to him.

Don Antonio ſeeks relief.

Shortly after the King of France, Henry the third, being murthered by a Jacobin Frier, the Guiſian Faction leagued together to keep out Henry of Burbon, King of Navar, and next Heir to the Crown of France, from ſucceeding in that Kingdom, becauſe he was a Proteſtant: Hereupon he craved aid of our Queen to ſettle him in his Throne, which ſhe granted in reſpect of the common Cauſe of Religion, and firſt ſent him over two thouſand pound in Money, Arms, Ammunition, &c. then ſhe ſent him ſome ſhips: Then a brave Army under the Lord Willoughby; Then three thouſand Foot under Sir John Norris: Then an other Army under the Earl of Eſſex: All which ſtood him in great ſtead, and much forwarded his advancement to the Crown.

She helps the King of France.

Anno 1596.

Afterwards ſhe prepared, and ſent forth a gallant Fleet under the Command of the Lord Admiral Howard for the Sea, and the Earl of Eſſex for the Land ſervice: ſhe alſo publiſhed a Declaration of the occaſion, viz. becauſe ſhe heard of the great preparation which the King of Spain made for a ſecond invaſion of her Land, and when it was ready to ſet ſail, ſhe made this Prayer: Moſt Omnipotent Maker and Guider of the Worlds Maſſe, that only ſearcheſt and fathomeſt the bottome of our Hearts, and in them ſeeſt the true Originals of all our Actions intended: Thou that by thy foreſight doeſt truly diſcern, how no malice of Revenge, nor requital of Injury, nor deſire of Bloodſhed, nor greedineſs of Gain hath bred that reſolution of our ſetting forth this Army, but a heedful Care, and wary Watch, that no neglect of Foes, nor over-ſurety of Haven, might breed either Danger to us, or glory to them: Theſe being our true grounds, we humbly beſeech thee with bended Knees, proſper the work, and with beſt fore-winds guide the journey, ſpeed the Victory, and make the return, the Advancement of thy Glory, the Triumph of their Fame, and ſurety to the Realm with the leaſt loſſe of the Engliſh Blood: To theſe Devout Petitions Lord give thou thy bleſſed grant, &c.

Her prayer for her Fleet.

Cadiz taken by the Engliſh.

The Fleet, according to her Prayer, ſailed with a proſperous Wind to Cadiz, in whoſe Haven lay ninety ſail of ſhips, and twenty Gallies: Five of them were of thoſe which they called the Kings twelve Apoſtles: Theſe were richly laden with Ammunition, Money, Oyl, Wax, Silk, Cloth of Gold, Quick-ſilver, &c. with theſe our Navy fought, beat them, then landed, aſſaulted the City, and took it: At which time the General made a Proclamation, that none on pain of Death ſhould offer Violence to any Religious Perſon, Woman, or Child: the Ladies and Gentlewomen were ſent away with their richeſt Jewels, and Apparel: the ſpoyl was given to the Souldiers, and the Citizens paid one hundred and twenty thouſand Ducats for their Ranſome: The Navy of the Spaniards at it was valued by themſelves at twelve Millions of Ducats, was ſunk, burned, or taken: Our Engliſh Souldiers were much inriched by this enterpriſe: Then they marched up into the Country without reſiſtance, took many booties, and returned to their ſhips, and ſo through Gods mercy, they came in ſafety to Plimouth.

Spaniſh Iſlands invaded.

Anno 1597, the Earl of Eſſex was again ſent forth with a brave Fleet, with which he went to the Spaniſh Iſlands, where he did great ſpoyl, took rich Prizes, and returned laden with Honour, and Treaſure. After this, the King of Denmark

Denmark ſent Ambaſſadors to mediate Peace between England and Spain, whom ſhe anſwered, and concluded thus; I would have the King of Denmark and all Princes Chriſtian and Heathen, know, that England hath no need to crave Peace: Nor my ſelf endured one hours Fear, ſince I attained the Crown thereof, being (through Gods Mercy) guarded with ſo Valiant and Faithful Subjects. Her anſwer to the King of Denmark

Anno 1600. Tir-Owen, and others, rebelling in Ireland, were much encouraged by the Pope: And the King of Spain ſent Don John de Aquila into Ireland with two thouſand old trained Souldiers to joyn with them, who landed at Kinſal in Munſter, and after came a new ſupply under Don Alphonſo, who was himſelf taken priſoner, and many of his Spaniards ſlain at his firſt Landing, and Don John ſo cloſely beſieged, that he was glad to ſue for Peace, which was granted upon Articles to ſurrender all that he had, and ſo to return home again. Tir Owens Rebellion.

Finally, God intending to advance this Nation under her Government, as ſhe had been careful to advance the glory, and the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, ſo ſhe proſpered in every thing at home and abroad; the great Affairs of Europe chiefly depended upon her Directions, who, ſitting at the Helm, arbitrated and guided their Eſtates, both in Peace and War. Piety rewarded. Her great Acts.

Spain, ſeeking to overthrow all, was by her beaten back, and ſcarcely able to maintaine his own Banks: In France, the Houſe of Valois was underpropped by her Councel, and that of Burbon advanced by her Countenance, Forces, and Treaſure: Scotland relieved by her Love: Netherlands by her power: Portugals King by her bounty: Poland by her Commiſeration: and Germany, Denmark, Swedeland often took up, and laid down Arms at her beck. Never did any Common wealth do ſuch things.

She extended her Trade and Fame into Ruſſia, Aſia, Africk, America; was highly honoured by the great Turk, Perſians, Barbarians, Indians: She had Warriers like to the Worthies of David: Renowned Captains for Sea and Land: By a powerful Navy ſhe attained the Soveraignty of the Sea. Her Character.

Her Temperance was ſuch, that her Brother King Edward uſually called her his Siſter Temperance: She was famous for Piety, Juſtice, and Clemency: Her Court was an Academy of honourable Councellors, Illuſtrious Peers, gallant Courtiers, learned Profeſſors, Intelligent Statiſts, and a Sanctuary where the meaneſt might find Refuge: As ſhe was learned, ſo ſhe took much pains to improve her Learning, by reading over Authors in their Originals, whereby ſhe was able to anſwer the Embaſſadors of moſt Nations in their own Languages: She (with Titus) thought that day loſt, wherein ſhe either did not, or received not ſome good: So that laying aſide her great Affairs, ſhe ſpent ſome hours every day in Reading, or hearing learned Readers.

But above all, her piety was moſt remarkable; for the ſacred Scriptures were her great delight, wherein ſhe read often, and heard them frequently preached, to which ſhe attended with much reverence, and the pious fruits thereof ſhined brightly in the whole courſe, as well of her private life, as of her publick Actions: Prayer, ſobriety, purity, charity, and chaſtity, were her inſeparable Companions, never ſuffering any Lady to approach her preſence, of whoſe ſtain ſhe had but the leaſt ſuſpition. The Diſtreſſed ſhe relieved, the Oppreſſed ſhe ſuccoured, the over-born Princes ſhe aided, the Proud ſhe amated, and always over-maſtred, through Gods aſſiſtance, to her laſting memory, and Englands glory. Her piety. Chaſtity.

Her Zeal to God appeared in preſerving his true Church and Worſhip from the pollutions of Idolatry: Her Kingdom and Court was a Sanctuary to baniſhed Proteſtants and perſecuted Chriſtians, ſo that by forraign Churches her loſs was much lamented, and ſhe was ſtiled the Nurſing-mother of the French, Dutch, and Italian Exiles for Chriſts Name, and the unconquered Defendreſs of the whole true Chriſtian Religion. Her death.

Her laſt ſickneſs.

Her laſt ſickneſs was accompanied with a deep Melancholy; wherein, as ſhe gave ſigns of Death to her Phyſicians, ſo great aſſurance of Eternal life to thoſe godly Divines that were about her, manifeſting by her fervent Prayers, and by lively ſigns at their Prayers, and Speeches, how ſhe rejoyced with the Apoſtle, That ſhe had fought a good Fight, finiſhed her courſe, and kept the Faith, hoping for the Crown of Righteouſneſs, which the Lord the righteous judge had laid up for her againſt that great day. And ſo ſhe Reſigned up her Bleſſed Soul into the Hands of her Faithfull Creator, and Merciful Redeemer, March 24th. Anno Chriſti 1602. of her Age threeſcore and nine, ſix Moneths and ſeventeen Dayes, and of her Reigne four and fourty. She was as well beloved, and her Death as much lamented, as ever any Prince was.

Her Death.

King JAMES erected for her a Princely Monument, whereon he cauſed to be inſcribed this Epitaph.

Sacred unto Memory.

RElegion to its primitive ſincerity reſtored, Peace throughly ſetled: Coin to the true value refined: Rebellion at Home extinguiſhed: France, neer Ruin by inteſtine Miſchiefs, relieved: Netherlands ſupported: Spains Armado vanquiſhed: Ireland, with Spaniards expulſion, and Traitors Coercion quieted: Both Univerſities Revenewes by a Law of proviſion, exceedingly augmented: Finally all England enriched; and five and fourty years moſt prudently governed: Elizabeth, a Queen, a Conquereſs, a Triumpher: The moſt devoted to Piety: The moſt happy after ſeventy years of her life, quietly by Death departed, hath left here (in this moſt famous Collegiat Church, which by her was Eſtabliſhed, and Refounded) theſe remaines of her Mortality, until at Chriſts Call, they ſhall again ariſe immortal, &c.

By her Abſtinence from Wine, and moſt temperate Diet, ſhe had preſerved her Health till her very latter end. A little before her Death, ſhe cauſed that Ring wherewith at her Inauguration ſhe was, as it were, married to her Kingdom, and which ſhe had never after taken off, to be filed off her Finger; She had a good vain in Poetry. In the time of her Siſters Reign, when a Popiſh Prieſt preſſed her hard to Declare her Opinion of Chriſts preſence in the Sacrament, ſhe truly and warily anſwered him thus.

T'was God the word that ſpake it,
He took the Bread and brake it;
And what the word did make it;
That I believe, and take it.

And at another time, a little before the Spaniſh Invaſion in eighty eight, the Spaniſh Embaſſador ſumming up his Maſters demands thus in Verſe;

Te veto ne pergas bello defendere Belgas:
Quæ Dracus eripuit nunc reſtituentur oportet:
Quas Pater evertit jubeo te condere cellas,
Religio Papæ ſic reſtituetur ad unguem.
Theſe to you are our Commands
Send no Help to the Netherlands.
Of the Treaſure took by Drake
Reſtitution you muſt make.
And thoſe Abbies build anew
Which your Father overthrew,
If for any Peace you hope,
In all points reſtore the Pope.

Our

Our Queen Ex tempore returned him this Anſwer;

Ad Græcas, bone Rex, fient mandata Calendas:

Know, O great King, that this your will
At latter Lammas wee'l fulfill.

Concerning that wonderful Deliverance, that God gave to our Queen and Kingdom from the Spaniſh Invaſion in eighty eight, the Learned and Acute Beza made theſe Verſes.

Straverat innumeris Hiſpanus claſſibus æquor,
Regnis junctturus ſceptra Britanna ſuis.
Tanti hujus rogitas quæ motus cauſa? ſuperbos
Impulit Ambitio, vexit Avaritia.
Quam bene te Ambitio, merſit, vaniſſima, ventus,
Et tumidæ tumidos vos ſuperaſtis aquæ!
Quam bene raptores Orbis totius Iberos
Merſit inexhauſti juſta vorago maris!
At tu, cui venti, cui totum militat æquor,
Regina, O mundi totius una decus.
Sic regnare deo perge, Ambitione remota,
Prodiga ſic opibus perge juvare pios:
Vt te Angli longum, longum Anglis ipſa fruaris
Quam dilecta bonis, tam metuenda malis.

Spain with his Fleet the Seas did cover o're
Thinking to Spain to joyn the Britiſh ſhore:
If you ask, Why? Ambition of riſe
Forc'd the proud fools, vexed with Avarice:
How well, Ambition, did the Winds thee drown
And tumid Waves thy tumid Mind bring down?
How well the al-devouring Seas did curb
The Spaniards, Raviſhers of the Earths whole Orb?
But thou, for whom the Winds, and Seas do fight,
Great Queen: The Worlds ſole glory and delight.
Still maieſt thou reign from foul Ambition freed,
Still with thy bounty to help them at need.
Long maiſt thou England; ſhe long thee poſſeſs, Belov'd of good Men, fear'd of Wickedneſs.

The Linage and Deſcent of Queen Elizabeth was by her Fathers ſide truly Royal. For ſhe was Daughter to King Henry the eighth; Grand-Daughter to King Henry the ſeventh: And great Grand-Daughter to King Edward the fourth. By the Mothers ſide her Deſcent was not ſo high, yet was it Noble, and ſpread abroad by many and great Alliances throughout England, and Ireland. Her great Grand-father's Father was Jeffery Bullen, a man of Noble birth in Norfolk, and Lord Maior of London in the year 1457. and at the ſame time Honoured with the Dignity of Knight-hood. An upright, and honeſt man, and of ſuch Eſtimation, that Thomas, Lord Hoo, and Haſtings, Knight of the Order of St. George, gave him his Daughter, and one of his Heirs to Wife: And he was of ſuch Wealth, that he matched his Daughters into the noble Houſes of the Cheineys, Heydons, and Forteſcues: He left his Son alſo a goodly Inheritance, and bequeathed a thouſand pounds to be diſtributed among the poor in London, and two hundred pounds in Norfolk. This mans Son, William Bullen was choſen among eighteen moſt choiſe Knights of the Bath at the Coronation of King Richard the third, to whom, Thomas, Earl of Ormond (who was in ſuch Favour with the Kings of England, that he alone of all the Noblemen of Ireland, had his Place, and Voyce in the Parliaments of England, and that about the Engliſh Barons alſo) gave his Daughter, and one of his Heirs in Marriage. By her (beſides Daughters Married to Shelton, Culthorp, Clere, and Sackvil, Men of great Wealth, and Noble Deſcent, and other Children) he begat Thomas Bullen, whom being a young Man, Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey, who was afterwards Duke of Norfolk, a Man much Renowned for his worthy Services, and Atchievments in the Wars (of whom ſee in my Deſcription of Norfolk) choſe to be his Son in Law, giving unto him his Daughter Elizabeth in Marriage : And after he had performed one or two very Honourable Ambaſſies, King Henry the eighth, made him firſt Treaſurer of his Houſhold, Knight of the Order of St. George, and Viſcount Rochford, and afterwards Earl of Wilt-ſhire, and Ormond, and alſo made him Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal.

This Thomas (amongſt other Children) begat Ann Bullen, who, in her Tender years being ſent into France, Attended on the Lady Mary of England, Wife to Lewis the twelfth : And then one Claudia of Britain, Wife to King Francis the firſt : And after ſhe was dead, one Margaret of Alenzon, who, with the firſt, favoured the Proteſtant Religion then ſpringing up in France. When ſhe was returned into England, ſhe was admitted amongſt the Queens Maids of Honour, and being twenty two years of Age, King Henry, in the thirtieth year of of his Age, did for her Modeſty, tempered with French Pleaſantneſs, fall deeply in Love, and took her to Wife, by whom he had Iſſue, Elizabeth, the aforeſaid Queen of England.

Queen Elizabeth ſpake ſo many Languages, that Du Bartas ſaid without flattery :

That Rome, Rhine, Rhone, Greec, Spain, and Italy, Plead all for Right in her Nativity.

Collected out of Speeds Chronicle, the Book of Martyrs, &c.

The

K:OF SWEDEN

The Life of Guſtavus Adolphus King of Sweden, who Dyed, Anno Chriſti 1632.

Guſtavus Ericus, the firſt of that name, and blood, was ONE of THOSE ſix Hoſtages ſent to, that ſcarce to be paralelled Tyrant, Chriſtierne King of Denmark, Anno 1518, which Hoſtages he having gotten into his power, moſt perfidiouſly retained as his priſoners, carrying them away with him into Denmark. But Guſtavus finding favour and liberty one day to go a Hunting, diſguiſed himſelf and eſcaped, and after many dangers, arrived in his own Country Anno 1520. About which time the ſaid King Chriſtierne, contrary to his promiſe made to the Swedes of remitting all offences upon their ſubmiſſion, beyond all examples of Chriſtianity, within four dayes after his Coronation, cauſed all the Nobility, Gentry, Biſhops, Councellers, and prime Citizens of the Kingdom of Sweden either to be hanged, or beheaded: ſo that the ſtreets of Stockholme, where he was Crowned, ran with blood: and their carcaſſes were kept unburied three dayes, and then he cauſed them to be buried.

See his Life in my Collection of Lives.

Bruitiſh cruelty.

Amongſt theſe thus maſſacred, the Father of Guſtavus was one; but when Guſtavus heard this doleful news, having that Winter gathered a ſmall company of Soldiers together, he excited the Swedes to vindicate their Countrys liberty: In the valiant proſecution whereof, he having been a chief author, by the conſent of all the States of the Kingdom, was choſen King Anno 1527. But he refuſed to be Crowned, contenting himſelf with the title of Governor; by authority whereof Anno 1523. he ſummoned a Parliament, where he propounded the reformation of Religion, but finding much oppoſition, he reſigned the Kingdom unto the States again.

Zeal.

But ſhortly after, the Country being in danger, they humbly beſeech Guſtavus once again to accept the Kingdom: and ſo he was Crowned the firſt Proteſtant

King that ever was, Anno 1527. He raigned three and thirty years. He left his Kingdom to Ericus his eldest Son Anno 1560, who reigned eight years, and dyed without issue: John the second Son of Gustavus succeeded Anno 1568. raigned four and twenty years: His only issue was Sigismund, who was chosen King of Poland in his Fathers life time, and succeeded his Father in the Kingdom of Sweden Anno 1593.

He took an oath to maintain the priviledges of the Kingdom, to continue the reformed Religion according to the Augustane confession, to bring in no strangers &c. which oath he palpably violated, by attempting to alter Religion, to enslave Sweden by making it a Province of Poland &c. Whereupon Anno 1599 in a full assembly of the States of Sweden he was deposed, and his Son Ladislaus chosen in his room, provided that his Father Sigismund would within three months send him into Sweden, there to be brought up in the Protestant Religion, which he refusing to do, the States chose Charles, the youngest Son of Gustavus, for their King, Anno 1600. who valiantly delivered his Country from the oppressions of the Polocks. This Charles married the Daughter of Adolph, Duke of Holstein, and of her begat this Gustavus Adolphus. who was born at Stockholme the last of November, Anno Christi 1594. and carefully brought up by his Father in the knowledge both of Arts, and Armes, and in such other exercises, as seasoned him both with Vertue, and Religion, and prepared him for great businesses: His spirit by his education was so elevated, as to esteem no good design too hard for him: His courage so fortified, that he knew not how to stoop beneath a King. So soon as he was fit for it, he travelled into France, Italy, Netherlands and Germany.

His birth and education.

Gustavus Adolphus Rex Sueco-rum.

His Father dying whilst he was abroad, he continued his travels under the name of Master GARS, the four initial letters of his name, and title.

His first Marshal imployment.

In his travels he gained much experience, studying the Mathematicks, and learning the French, Dutch, and Italian languages. About the seventeenth year of his Age, Anno Christi 1611. he was, by his Father Charles, made Colonel of a Regiment of Horse in his Wars against Denmark: Presently after which his Father dying, he setled Peace in his own Country by composing the differences, and quarrels that were risen between him and the King of Denmark: and the King of Poland laying claim to his Kingdom, he so bravely, and valiantly behaved himself, that he did beat him in several Battels, and at last enforced him to make Peace.

His prudence and valour.

He invades Muscovy and prospers.

About the year 1614. upon refusal made unto him of the reimbursment of large summs of money, laid out by the States, and Subjects of his Kingdom, and lent to the Emperor of Muscovy, he undertook upon the just quarrel, to make an inroad upon the adjacent Dominions of that potent Emperor: and taking his march from Finland, with prosperous success, he in a short time conquered the mighty Province of Ingereland: And amongst the rest, he took the Famous strong Fort of Kexholm; And shortly after, by the mediation of our soveraign King James, a Peace was concluded between him and the Emperour of Muscovy upon very good and honourable Conditions, whereby he not only held that Country which he had seized on, but also received of the Muscovite a great sum of Money for his Expences in that War: And the footing and ground which he gained here, may well be accounted the first step to his greatness, and the Foundation of his other Conquests, not only in order of time, but also in the enabling him, and fleshing his hardy Finlanders for further Undertakings.

And makes peace.

He conquers Lifeland.

Anno Christi 1618. he entred Lifeland against the Polonian, and proceeded in that Invasion so prosperously by several Conquests in divers places, that by the year 1624. that whole Country was made subject to him.

Anno

Anno Christi 1626. he entred Prussia, and surprized the Fort of Pelavia, and thereby at once made himself master of all the trade of the rich Cities of Koningsberg, and Elbing: which enterprize he undertook with his own native Swedes, and Finlanders (who in that imployment did not exceed the number of nine thousand men) but with so wonderful success, that this atchevement may well be accounted another step to the growth of his greatness. He invades Prussia and prospers.

With these small Forces he marched towards Elbing, and whilst the Burgers of that Town were treating about a Neutrality with his Commissioners in the Tents, he, with some few Musqueteers attending him, boldly entred the City, which with fear and amazement admitted him in upon the only command of his word, and confident majesty of his countenance, though the walls thereof were at that instant loden with armed men, well appointed for defence against him, who beholding his bold entrance, durst not discharge one bullet, or make the least resistance against him. His Policy.

This City he made his Magazine for the War; and departing from thence, he took the great Castle of Mariburg, being the seat of the Teutonique Order of Knight-hood; where (not having eight thousand Foot) he entrenched himself, fighting in the Face of fourty thousand Polonians, and ten thousand Imperialists: and so tired and wore out that great Army, that they not only (by the mediation of our late dread Soveraign King Charles the First, Anno 1629) submitted unto his conditions of Peace, very honorable on his part, but also yielded to him a great part of that Country of Prussia. He beats the Polonians, and Imperialists.

About this time the Emperor of Germany had greatly oppressed many Princes and free Cities of the Empire, especially the Protestant party, some of whom he had cast out of their inheritances: Stralsund, and stetin, Mecklenburg, and Pomerland were so heavily oppressed, so sorely overlaid with Taxes, and free quarter, that they were no longer able to endure it, whereupon they pittifully complained, and petitioned the Emperor for redress: But he, slighting their requests, continues the oppressions; then they complain to the King of Sweden, who pittying the complaints of his Allyes, confederates and neighbours, sends an Embassador to the Emperor in their behalf, who was returned with scorn, and contempt.

Hereupon the King, considering that his own safety did much depend upon theirs, resolves to undertake their protection, but withal, that he might not be misinterpreted, he publishes a declaration, wherein he protests, that he would not have stirred, if the Emperor had not put many insufferable affronts upon him; as in the time of the late Wars of Prussia between Sweden, and Poland, he had forbidden him to make any leavies of men, victuals, or ammunition in Germany, yet granting liberty to his enemy the King of Poland to do it: as also that the Emperor himself had sent two Armies into Prussia to the aid of his enemy the Pole: That his Currier riding post with letters to Bethlem Gabor, had been staid, his letters opened, and false Copies published of them: That his Embassadors had been slighted, denied Audience, and forbid to stay in Germany: That when he sought peace by the mediation of the King of Denmark, he obtained nothing but affronts and delaies: That the poor Town of Stralsund (though it had promise of protection from the Emperor, yet) was it blockt up by the Duke of Freidland, who also had taken the Isle of Rugen, lying near to it: That both those places had sought to him for protection, and that it much concerned him, not to suffer them to be possessed by his enemies; That the Emperor had hindred the Swedish trade upon the Baltick Sea: taken his Ships, layd embargoes upon them &c. That his coming with an Army into the Empire was to relieve his cousin and confederate, the Duke of Stetin and Pomeren, miserably oppressed and to secure his own Dominions, not to offer hostility to the Emperor, or Empire. He interceeds for the Protestants. His Declaration. Walstein.

This his declaration he sent in a fair, and respectful manner to the Emperor, who wholly sleighted it, but it much satisfied the World.

It was rumored abroad, that divers Potent Princes, as England, France, Russia, Venice, and Holland, were interessed with him in this action. The Emperor made great preparation to withstand his coming, filling the Towns of Pomerland, and Brandenburg with Garrisons. In Mecklenburg were Walsteines forces, who was newly made Duke thereof: All the Bridges and passes upon the river Oder were stopped up, manned, and fortified &c. The King of Sweden had not a Town to be his Friend, but the distressed Stralsund only, where he might land his Forces: He therefore intending to land in the Isle of Rugen, within half a league of Stralsund, sends to Sir Alex. Lesly, Governor of Stralsund, who with eighteen Swedish Ships fell upon the Island, and in a short time cleared it of the Imperialists.

Some say not above 11000 in all.

Presently after, his Majesty of Sweden in a hundred and thirty Ships, embarks his Army of about twelve thousand Foot, and three thousand Horse, some say not so many, and lands in this Isle of Rugen. His enemies in all those parts assembled together, to bid him battel at his first landing, but God struck them with such a terror, that they durst not do it. The King was the first that landed himself, who immediately kneeled down and prayed thus: O most great God, that commandest what ever thou pleasest both in Heaven and Earth, and in the surging Seas; what thankfulness am I bound to render unto thee for that thou hast preserved me thus safely in all this so perilous a voyage? Again, and again do I from the very bottom of my heart and soul give thanks unto thee; and here I humbly beseech thee, that seeing, as thou very well knowest, I have not undertaken this expedition for any private ends of my own, but only for thine honor sake, and to be some comfort and assistance to thine afflicted Church: so (if so be the time which thy self hast appointed be already come) thou wouldest now be pleased to favour and bless me hereafter also: and that especially thou wouldest send me a fair wind, and a prosperous, that the Army yet left behind, which out of so many people and Nations I have gathered together, I may with joyful eyes shortly here behold, and with an happy beginning promote with them the Glory of thy Holy Name, Amen.

His Prayer at his landing.

Prayer powerful.

This devotion of the King wrought so with his Councellors, and Commanders, that it wrung tears out of their eyes; to whom he said, Forbear to weep, but heartily conjoyn your Prayers with me; for the greater the Army of prayers is, the greater and more assured shall be the Victory: He that pray's diligently hath in part already overthrown the Enemy. Then took he a Shovel, and fell to digging of a Trench, and all the rest of his Army followed in their turns, the one half digging, the other half standing to their Armes, so that before night they had strongly entrenched themselves.

After two dayes rest, he took a party of Horse and Foot, marching three miles into the Country, where he saw diverse troops of the Enemies, but they all ran away: Then he assaulted and took in diverse Sconces, which were strongly built, but weakly defended, so that in twelve days space he cleared the Isles of Usedom and Wollin: and so marched to the City of Stetin, the seat of the Duke of Pomeren and Stetin.

He takes in two Islands.

All the Ladies and Gentlewomen gat upon the Leads, and into the Windows to look at the Kings Army: The King sent a Trumpet to demand entrance: The Duke returned answer, that he was resolved to stand Neuter: The King not satisfied, tells him, that he came into Germany to relieve the oppressed Princes, and therefore expects to be admitted into the City, which if it was refused him, he would force it: Hereupon the Duke issues out of the Port, and goes to the King, desiring to stand Neuter, but the King would not hear of it, and looking up to the Ladies, Cousin, saith he, if you mean to keep me out of the Town, you must set others to guard it, then these Ladies &c.

Then

Then the Duke desired leave to go into the Town, the King consented, and ordered the Lord Reay (a brave Scotchman) to guard him, who when the draw-bridge was let down for the Duke, entred upon it with him, and pell, mell, entred the gate notwithstanding the Town Garrison, whereupon the King with his whole Army marches into the City, and so became master of it without blood-shed. Stetin taken by Policy.

Not long after, the King commanded a solemn Fast to be kept through his Army, and Leaguer, at Stetin; The same day the Imperialists fell upon their out-guards, but the Leaguer taking the Alarum soon beat them off. Then were two Soldiers suborned by Tilly to murther the King, but it pleased God to discover the treason, whereupon one of them ran away, the other was deservedly executed. Afterwards the King marched against Grippenhagen, desirous to satisfie himself in viewing of a pass, with four and twenty Horse only in his company, fell into an Ambush of sixty Horse, where he valiantly defended himself till some of his Troops, hearing the Pistols goe off, fetched him off in safety. Fasting and prayer. Treason discovered.

Before he began his Battery, he ordered an other Fast to be kept in his Camp, and the Lord was pleased to give him success answerable to his desires: yea, which is admirable, in eight days space he took in many Cities, defeated many enemies, gat many Prisoners, so that he wholly cleared Pomeren, and Markland. The King in danger. A Fast. Pomeren and Markland cleared.

He was very sparing of Blood, putting few to the Sword, even in those Towns and Castles that he took in by storm. His clemency.

Shortly after came the French Embassador to his head quarters, where a league was concluded betwixt the King of France and him, upon these conditions: First that the War should be undertaken for the defence of their Friends, clearing of the Ocean, and Baltick Seas; restoring of the oppressed States of the Empire, and demolishing of new built Forts upon the Ports and Coasts of either Sea; And secondly, that seeing the Adverse party refused to repair injuries, and rejected all intercessions, therefore the King of Sweden was to maintain thirty thousand Foot, and six thousand Horse in Germany, and the King of France was to pay his share towards the maintenance of the same; These with divers others were the conditions of the League, whereof the King of Sweden gave present notice to the Protestant Princes met in a Diet at Leipsich, assuring them that his intentions were no other, but to defend, and restore the German Princes and their Liberties, &c. King of France confederates with him.

Whereas some of the Kings Forces were left in Prussia since his late Wars there, order was given unto them within three days to take shipping, and to come to the King in Pomeren; and for their transportation, nine Ships were appointed; but a storm arising, the Fleet was scattered, seven of the Ships with much ado, made their Port, one other, wherein was Monroe, a brave Scotchman, with three companies, ran a ground near to Rugenwald, a strong place held by the Imperialists. Hear a double fear seased on them, either that they should be drowned in the Sea, or have their throats cut on shore, the latter they put unto the venture, and upon a float of boards, gat safe to the Land; but, through Gods good providence, most of the Garrison were gone abroad to fetch in their weakly contribution: whereupon the Burgomaster, or Major of the Town, seeing the Scots thus gotten a shore, went to them, and understanding that they were the King of Swedens men, invited them into the Town, and accordingly in the night time he let them in, and furnished them with Armes; Monroe sent Captain Bullion, with a chosen party of Musqueteeres to fall upon the Imperialists that remained in the City, who quickly cryed for quarter, and had it granted: The Town being thus miraculously taken, God brought in the ninth Ship that was driven away by the storm, to Anchor before the Town, whereby Monroe was strengthed, and enabled to do some feats of Armes abroad in Gods providence. Rugenwald taken.

the Country. The King perceiving that God himself had herein fought for him, commands Monroe to continue there, and sends gallant Banditzen, with some more Horse and Foot, to joyn with him.

His answer to the Emperor.

A while after came an Imperial Currier to the King; his letter contained an admiration of the Emperors, why the King should come Armed into the Empire, offering him a treaty of peace, if he would first lay down armes. To this the King answers, That his Imperial Majesty would cease to wonder, if he pleased to remember the two Armies sent against him into Prussia: The wronging of his Friends, and the endangering of his Kingdoms; and as for the proffer of peace, he could not believe that it was sincerely meant, seeing that before when he had made it, it was scorned: But to lay down Armes, he utterly refused, unless Germany were restored to her liberty &c. A wonderful thing it is, and yet ere that in eight months space, betwixt July and February, he took in eighty Cities, Castles, and Sconces in Pomerland and Mecklenburg Eighty Cities &c. taken in eight months.

Tilly the Imperial General, having about this time gotten together a brave Army of one and twenty thousand Horse and Foot, advances towards the King: who strongly entrenched himself, and out of which, he would not be drawn. Tilly passed and repassed by, yet durst not venture upon him in his trenches. The ing had no reason to present him battel, his Army having been so wearied out, and no necessity forcing him to fight: Therefore Tilly goes back, and laies siege to Magdeburg, which at last he took, and like a bloody villain, put to the Sword twenty thousand persons at least, of all ranks, ages, and sexes; that great City also he burned down, utterly turned it into Cinders, excepting a hundred nine and thirty Houses. His Soldiers committed all manner of ravages all the Country over: Ladies, Gentlewomen, and others, like beasts and Dogs they yoaked and coupled together, leading them into the Woods to ravish them, and such as resisted, they stript naked, whipt them, cropt their eares, and so sent them home again.

Tillies Army.

Popish cruelty.

In the mean time, the King taking with him eight thousand men, advanceth towards Frankfurt upon Oder: Count Scomberg was Governor there, who suspecting the Kings purpose, took in seven thousand more into the Garrison, and burnt down the suburbs. The same day came the King, who entrenched in the Vineyards near the City: In the approaches the valiant Baron Dyvel was wounded, which much troubled the King; In the evening the Imperialists sallied out, but were soon beaten back with loss. The next day being the Sabbath, the King had Prayers, and Sermons in his Camp: all things being quiet, the Soldiers in the Town began to revile the Swedes, asking them, if they had eaten up their leather Guns; they hung out also a Goose upon a Pike, jearing the Swedes with it; The great Officers within the Town thought that the King had no purpose to set upon them, his numbers were so small, and their own strength so great.

Sabbath sanctified.

But both Sermons being ended, he commanded Sir John Banier to give order for the assault: and when he saw his Commanders and Officers in a bravery ready to fight unarmed, he commanded them to put on their armour: Saying, If my Officers be killed, who shall command my Soldiers. The Swedish Soldiers wanting Ladders, ran to the Boores Houses, and fetched their racks, with which and some Hatches they got to a mighty strong Pallisado near the walls, which they fell to hewing down; Then the Enemies and they fell to it, Bullets and smoak darkening the very aire; but the Imperialists being beaten, retire through a Salley-port into the Town. The King called Sir John Hephbron, and Colonel Lumsdel, said, now my brave Scots, remember your Country-men slain at new Brandenburg: They thereupon with their English and Scots Regiments, press upon the Salley-port, Bullets flying as thick as Haile; Lumsael with his drawn Sword presses on, saying, Let's enter my hearts, and so thrusting in amongst the Franckfurt taken by storm.

the thickeſt of his enemies, his men follow knocking down their enemies moſt pittiouſly: Then breaking open the greater Gate, they entred the City, making a pittiful ſlaughter, crying, New-Brandenburg, knock him down; One Scotch-man killed eighteen men with his own hands; and Lumſdel took eighteen Colours, yea he ſhewed ſuch valour, that the King afterwards bid him ask what he would, and he would give it him.

By this time the Swedes gat over the walls: Scomberg valiantly oppoſed himſelf, but was quickly forced to retire: the Swedes running into danger, like Flies into the Candle, as if they had not ſeen it: The Imperialiſts having brought all the riches which they had gotten by Plundering the whole Country into this City, were now lading of it away upon Mules, Wagons &c. but the Swedes ſaving them that labour, and the flying Soldiers were ſo ſtopped, and wedged in upon the Bridge with theſe Carts, that many of them were ſtifled, ſlain, or thruſt into the Oder: divers of the Imperial Colonels were here ſlain, with fifty Captains and Officers, and above ſeven thouſand Soldiers; three and twenty Enſignes, and eight Cornets were preſented to the King: many Priſoners taken, and ſent to Stetin; of the Swedes were ſlain but one hundred, and as many more hurt. Much riches taken.

The next day the King, by intreaties and threats reſtrained his men from Plunder; Here he found much riches: a hundred thouſand pound of Powder: eighteen pieces of great Ordinance, beſides little ones, and a great quantity of Armes, and Ammunition; there was no woman raviſhed in all this City, nor any Burger kill'd. The King cauſed ſolemn thanks to be returned to Almighty God for this great Victory: Shortly after he reſtored the Duke of Mecklenburg to his ancient and paternal inheritance, out of which he had been unjuſtly caſt by the Emperor, who had given it to Walſteine: After which, he cleares Brandenburg of the Imperialiſts, and takes in Gripſwald, and many other places. Good diſciples. Thankſgiving.

Then he advanced towards Magdeburg, from which Tilly was departed, having fortified and Garriſoned it. By the way he took in many Towns and Caſtles, which Tilly hearing of, ſent back four Regiments under Pappenheime to reſiſt him, who joyning with the Garriſons that were expulſed by the King, fell upon a party of the Swedes, which the King hearing of, with all his Horſe, and two thouſand Muſqueteers, he comes time enough to make one in the medley: Pappenheim's Foot are almoſt all ſlain on the place: his Horſe plaid the Pultrons, and ran away, himſelf eſcaped by the ſwiftneſs of his Horſe: Hereupon diverſe Garriſons were quitted to the King: Then the King proceeding further, formed a ſtrong Camp at Werben upon the River Elbe, hearing that Tilly was coming back towards him, and called off his Garriſons that were not tenable. Pappenheime beaten. Anno 1632.

Tilly ſent, as his avantcurriers, four Regiments of Horſe, excellent old Soldiers, and moſt of them Curiaſſiers, to ſee if they could tempt out the King to fight; Theſe were confident that the King would not fight, and ſo marched to a Town within a league of him, not ſeeing one Swede all the way, and ſo there they took up their quarters; Bernſteyn that commanded in chief with ſix hundred Curiaſſiers ſet the watch, the other betook themſelves to their reſt. The King of Sweden privily ſends out a party of two thouſand Muſqueteers, and five hundred Dragooners againſt them, which in the break of day fell upon them, ſlew a thouſand and five hundred, and Bernſteyne among them, they took nine and twenty Cornets, and great ſtore of Plate and Money. Bernſteine beaten and ſlain.

Tilly reſolved revenge, marches towards the King with ſix and twenty thouſand brave men, all like himſelf, full of anger and reſolution: but before he aſſaulted his trenches, he endeavoured ſecretly to hire ſome Traytors with large promiſes to nail up the Kings Ordnance, that it might be made unſerviceable againſt him: but by remorſe of conſcience in one of the undertakers, the Treaſon.

Plot was discovered: yet the King gave not Tilly one Cannon shot, though he came near his Ordnance, which made him very confident that his Plot had taken, and his men pressed on in great multitudes, but on a sudden there was such a tempest of chain shot, murthering shot, and what ever was cruellest to do execution, shoured in amongst them, that there was made a miserable slaughter: And immediately sallyed out Baudissen with three Regiments of Horse, and so cruelly charged his Curiassiers, that had the King seconded him, Tilly had had a great defeat: but a retreat was sounded for that night.

Tilly worsted

Treason.

Then Tilly hired some Boores to fire the Town of VVerben, about which the Kings Leaguer was: but through Gods mercy they were discovered, and executed: Tilly made some other attempts, but seeing he could make nothing of it, he retreated: after whom the King followed, charging the Crabbats [light Horsemen] so furiously, that they were driven upon their own foot, who were faign to charge their Pikes against them: Hereupon Tilly made an Alt, ordered his men, and a skirmish was begun, which by the nights approach was broken off, and so both sides retired to their quarters.

Tilly had a great mind to be revenged, sent out diverse Parties to watch their opportunity, but seeing that most of them came short home, and victuals grew very dear, he disloges with his Army, and marches quite away into the Duke of Saxonies Country. He left behind him five hundred starved Horses, and eight hundred Wagons for want of draught Horses, besides, about seven thousand of his men lost in this expedition: Then did the King divide his Army into several quarters.

Tilly retreates into Saxony

At this time the Queen of Sweden arrived at VVolgost with eight thousand men: and Marquis Hamilton brought six thousand more out of England at the same time: with these men the King reenforced his several Armies: Tilly in the mean time was busily imployed in taking in Towns in saxony, and afterwards besieges Lipsich: Hereupon the Duke of Saxony sends importunatly to the King, to hasten to his relief, who accordinglyly, uniting his forces again, marches thitherward: By the way they met with hard lodging, and worse commons, whereupon the Army being drawn up into Battalia, the King thus spake to them: Lords and gentlemen, I am much grieved for this your hard lodging, and entertainment: But courage my hearts, we are now allmost in the Dukedome of Saxony his country: there things will mend: there wee shall have victuals, and provision enough, then shall you be paid your arrears, only I desire you to behave your selves civilly amongst the inhabitants &c. It is nothing, I know, daunts your valiant hearts, that you are going to fight with an Army that call themselves invincible: since you have found it not to be so: On therefore my hearts, on Gods name; we dayly pray to the Lord of hosts for you, and we desire you to doe the same for us, that he would be graciously pleased to goe along with us, to assist us, and to give us good success in whatsoever, just and religious enterprize we undertake. The Army much encouraged with this speech, marches couragiously that night near VVittenberg: and hither the Duke of Saxony sent Embassadors to the King to conclude upon what terms he should assist him: which were these.

English under D. Hamilton.

His speech to his Armies.

Articles between the King and D of Saxony.

First, that the King might freely pass, and repass through Saxony. Secondly, that the Duke at his own charge should find the Kings army with powder, shot, and provisions. Thirdly that the Dukes Army should be under the command of the King. Fourthly that the Duke should conclude no peace with the Emperour without the Kings consent.

When the two Armies, the Dukes horse and foot vailed their Cornets, and Ensignes as they passed by the Kings Army. The next day news came that Tilly had gotten Lipsich: Then did Tilly out of a bravery send a Trumpet to the King with this message, that as he was a brave Cavalier, he should come come, and give him battel: the King scorning the term of Cavalier, replyed thus: what! doth your General think me worthy of no better a term then of a Cavalier? I am a King, and tell him ere long I shall find him out. Hereupon Tilly prepares his Army, as for a victory assured, rather then to fight much for it, and his men who counted themselves invincible, were very glad of the news of a pitch't battell. Pappenheim, when he saw the blood prodigiously dropping from the house at Hall, where he was, said: what! must we bleed? will the King of Sweden beat us? that's impossible. September the seventh, Tilly with four and forty thousand brave men advances into the field: the place was a Goodly plain called Gods-acre, a mile from Leipsich: the same place, where Charles the fifth overthrew Prince Mauris formerly: There was in this plain a little rising hill, and a wood, here Tilly, careful of all advantages, placed his Army: the hill was fit to plant his Cannon on, and easie for him to descend; but hard for the Swedes to climb up; the wood served him to hide his men at the first, and for a retreating place if need were: His word was, Saint Mary, the token to be known by, was white strings and ribbons.

Tilly takes Lipsich.

His message to the King.

Pride.

A Prodigie.

The King, the day before the Battell, kept a fast with his Army, to seek unto God for success: And in the evening he marcheth forward within three or four miles of the enemy, where they rested that night; The King that night dreamed that he had Tilly fast by the hair of the head, and for all his strugling, would not let him go, till he bit him on the left side, which upon the success, was thus interpreted, that the King should have the upper hand of his enemy, and that Tilly should defeat the Duke of Saxony, who had the left side of the King in the battel: Before day light, he was upon his march, and coming within view of the enemy, he saw them upon the higher ground: Tilly knowing that the Kings men were to meet with a troublesome passage through bushes and dirty waies, sent out some to trouble them, who also by setting fire to traines of Gun powder, scattered for that purpose, sought by the smoak thereof, the wind blowing it just into the Protestants faces, to blind and trouble their putting of themselves into order: But neither force, nor stratagem could serve turn; for in despite of both, the pass was gained, where the Protestants immediately began to put themselves into order of Battel: and seeing Tilly present his men in a mighty large front, which with his wings extended full two miles in length, and to prevent being hemmed in, they divided themselves into two Armies, the Duke of Saxony towards the left, the King towards the right hand: Tilly seeing their march, said, Now fellow Soldiers we must look for blows: But his men, deeming themselves invincible, expressed much desire to be at it:

Fasting and prayer before the Battel.

A Dream of the Kings.

Tilly's speech to his souldiers.

The King of Sweden rode from Regiment, to Regiment, saying with a loud voice, Come on, Comrades, will you fight to day for the name of Jesus Christ? They all cheerfully cried out; vivat Gustavus Adolphus vive, vive, vive thereupon the King presently sent a Trumpet to Tilly with a letter, that seeing he desired to see him in the Field, to that purpose he now attended for him: to which Tilly returned answer, that he for his part had never refused to fight with him, that he would now meet him half way, and that the King knew well where to find him: The King had in his Army about twenty thousand, amongst whom were many English and Scots: The Duke of Saxonies Army consisted of fourteen thousand, led by the valiant L. Arnheim; The word for both the Protestants armies was, God with us; their tokens, Green branches in their hats and helmets: some few days before, two flocks of Birds had fought in this place, the one killing and beating away the other, the victorious birds remained on the place, which being sprung by the Kings vauntcurriers, took their flight to Tillies Army, and there fetching a circle about, returned towards the Kings Army: as who would say, we went to fetch you victory: at least some thus thought of it.

The King of Swedeland to his.

A Prodigy.

Being now ready to come to the shock, some strugling there was for the

The Battel begins.

the wind, which was full in the Protestants faces; the King by wheeling about sought to alter it, the other strove as much to keep their advantage. The fight began with great Ordnance, Tilly himself gave fire to the first three great Guns: and the King, as his manner was, to the two first: The hideous roaring of the Cannons on both sides, made the very Earth to tremble, and continuing so two hours, made many a brave man breath his last. About two a clock the Cannon gave over, and both Horse and Foot charged: and Pappenheim with his Horse, charging the Kings right wing, which was lined with Musqueteers, was so pelted, that traversing their ground, they thrust in between the Kings right wing, and the main battel, where Bannier commanded, after whom the King immediately sent some able Troops, who, hemming them in, cut them utterly to pieces: Pappenheimes Foot being thus left naked, were easily defeated, he himself was wounded, forsook the field, and left all his Ordnance behind him.

Prayer the best refuge in dangers.

The King in the beginning of the fight, seeing his men hardly charged, alighting from his Horse, with bended knees prayed to the God of Heaven for Victory; Tilly seeing it go hard with his left wing, advanceth down the Hill with his Battel, consisting of sixteen Regiments of brave old Soldiers, the Horse-men also proudly prancing upon their flanks: opposite to him was Gustavus Horn, with his left wing: Tilly twice or thrice charges him with great bravery, which charges Horne with as much resolution endures and returns: Tilly finding himself much galled there with the Swedish Horse lined with Drakes, and small field pieces, leaving part of his Horse and Foot to hold Horne play, suddenly with the rest converts all his fury upon the Duke of Saxony. Two or three charges the Saxons endured well enough, but the wind carrying the smoak and dust full into their eyes, and Tillies men falling too heavily upon them, they not able any longer to endure the fury of the old Walions, Germans, and Burgundians, at first began to give ground, and to run quite away a little after: some were slain and many were taken prisoners, the rest fled, leaving all their fair Ordnance to the enemy, who presently turned them upon the Swedes: But these cowardly Saxons, as soon as they were out of reach of the enemy, fell to pillage their own Wagons, that they might carry home the spoiles of the Wars, though not of their enemies. The Imperialists seeing the Saxons flying, cry Victoria, Victoria, follow, follow, follow; But the old Lad their General said, Let them go, we shall overtake them time enough, let us beat the Swedes too, and then all Germany is our own: Some posts were presently dispeeded away to the Emperor at Vienna with welcome tidings of Victory: But valiant Arnheym, with the best of the Dukes Horse, and his life Guard, edging towards the Swedes, kept the Field: An Imperial Cavalier seeing a Saxon Captain of Horse, behave himself bravely in the head of his Troop, presently riding up to him, bent his Pistol upon him, engaging him in a single combat, which the Saxon refused not, and both their Horses being shot, to it on Foot they go with Sword and Pistol; both are slain, and both fell down dead together one upon another: yet death gave the honor to the Saxon Champion, laying him uppermost. But that party which Tilly had left engaged with Horne, came not so victoriously off from the Swedes, as their General had done from the Saxons, but were dispersed, and put to flight. The Earl of Frustenberg which commanded the left wing of the Tillians, having peiced in with Tillies body that charged the Saxons, seeing them fly, he with his Regiment flies amain upon the Swedes again, charging the reere of the left Wing, where Colonel Hall, a brave Gentleman, commanded: after a while Frustenberg was himself dangerously wounded, and carried off: Hall also, whose brest-plate was not full proof, was slain with a Musquet bullet upon the place.

The Saxons flie, and pillage their own Wagons.

A Duel.

But no sooner were Frustenbergs Foot defeated, but eight thousand of those Imperialists, which had discomfited the Saxons came upon the place, where the

Saxons

Saxons were lately Marshalled. The dust and smoak were so great, that they were on Collenbach, ere he was aware, the Imperialists turning two pieces of Ordnance, which they had taken from the saxons, let fly amongst the Swedes: Just at that time came the King riding up to his men, crying to Collenbach, Charge man, on Gods name, and withal himself led them up against the enemy: Collenbach advancing (and the King going away to look to other places) was presently charged with ten Cornets of Horse, who at the first or second charge killed all his officers, that commanded four of his Troops, yea Collenbach himself was there slain, and thereupon his four Troops fled; which yet the Imperialists by reason of the smoak discerned not; then did a party of the Kings Musqueteers give fire upon them, which made them wheel about to the left; where they encountred with four other Troops of Collenbachs Regiment, who charged so lustily upon them, that they drove them to the gates of Leipsich. The King when he went from Collenbach, rode to his three Brigades of reserves, under the command of valiant Hepbron, carrying with him many prisoners, which he had taken with his right wing, shewing them to his men, and crying, Lustily, valiantly: the Soldiers answering Vive: The King seeing their alacrity, led them on against those eight thousand, which had defeated the saxons, mentioned before, and with all, he sent Baron Dyvel to Sir John Hepbron, to bid him fall on: Scarsly had this brave Baron Dyvel done his message, but he was shot stark dead upon the place. Live.

Hepbron moved forward, with whom was the valiant Scots, Colonel Lumsdal, and Sir James Ramsey, with Muschamp a brave English man, our Musqueteers gave not fire till they came within Pistol shot, and then the three first ranks discharged together, and after them the other three; which done, they fell pell mell into their ranks, knocking them down with the butt ends of their Musquets: yet four gallant Troops of the enemies Curiassiers, came up to the Swedes, and with their Pistols shot all the scottish Antients dead upon the place: notwithstanding which the Scots bravely stand to it, maintaining the fight about an hour together, in which time many of the Imperialists were slain and the rest fled: So that there was not a greater carriage of men any where that day, then in this place: nor any piece of service better on both sides maintained; and here it was that Tilly himself received his wounds. Tilly wounded.

The King having set Hepbron upon Tilly, returned to his right wing, presently advancing forward with it towards the wood upon the Hill, where some of Tillies Regiments stood as reserves, and others that had been routed, were resorted thither: The King in person set upon these with such courage, that at the first onset, he cut in pieces those which guarded the Ordnance, which he turned immediately upon the enemy; but there were four Regiments of old Soldiers, that stood to their Armes bravely, such as feared no enemy: These made good the wood for a long time against the King: killed many a brave fellow, nor would they budg a foot, though they saw no hope of relief, but fought it out to the last man: only some few of them, when they had done as much as men could do, retired under the benefit of the night which was now come on: by which time all the Imperial Army was wholly beaten. The Imperialists beaten

Thus after five hours hard fight, the victory, through Gods mercy, fell to the King, whose Horse-men continued the chase, till darkness made it dangerous to pursue the enemy any further.

The Kings Army remained Masters of the Field, lay all night upon the bare ground, yet none but the wounded, complained of the want of a featherbed. The next Morning they pursued the flying enemies, killing many, and taking many prisoners: thus that formidable Army of the Catholick leaguers, which had for eleven years together given Laws to all Germany, and made the name of Tilly so renowned, was in one day, through the power and goodness of God, broken in pieces; about ten thousand of them slain, many thousands wounded, Pride goes before destruction.

and six thousand forsaking that side, took oath and pay for the Kings service, many more running away, and never returned to their colours again: Then did the King seize upon the enemies standing Camp, where he found three thousand Wagons with all their Baggage, Tents, and Pavilions, many Cattel, Oxen, Sheep, Horses, Asses, Poultry, Bread, Wine, Meet upon the Spits &c. much costly stuff, money and plate: He took one hundred Ensignes, and Cornets: fourteen Demicannons; sixteen Field pieces &c. the King of Sweden lost but seven hundred men, and the Duke of Saxony two thousand: the King lost but four Colonels; but Tilly many more: all advantages were on the enemies side: the wind, the wood, the higher ground: Tillies Army was the greater, his Soldiers the older, and their Army, by themselves, counted Invincible: besides the Kings Army was much discouraged by the flight of the Saxons, yet the Lord of Hosts gave him the Victory, that so he might give him the praise.

The greatness of the victory.

Tilly weeps. Tillies manly heart could not refrain from tears, when he thus saw his old Soldiers go to ruine: and this old Conqueror, that used still to see the backs of his enemies, is now glad to shew them his own heels, and, wounded as he was, fled twenty miles that night: Fustenberg and Pappenheim also sorely wounded, came thither to him, and having their wounds dressed, they fled farther in an Hackney Coach, and Tilly in an Horse litter.

Thanksgiving. The King of Sweden, as he began with Prayer, so he ended with Thanksgiving, appointing (together with the Duke of Saxony) a Publick day of Thanksgiving to be celebrated, both in the Army, and through all Saxony, unto God for this so glorious a Victory.

Tilly after this overthrow, flies from place to place, partly to secure himself, and partly to glean up as many of his dispersed Soldiers as possibly he could, so that in ten dayes space he had gone a hundred and fourty miles: He wrote also to Altringer to joyn his Army with him, and then begins to form an Army again, and Altringer brings to him about ten thousand men, so that in all he had about eighteen thousand men, but ill cloathed, and Armed: Afterwards he joyns with the Lorrain Army; and coming before the great City of Norimberg, he demanded supply of bread &c. promising that if they yielded to him, he would pay them honestly, otherwise he would force them to it: But the Count of Solmes, sent thither as Governour by the King of Sweden, made a resolute salley the next day before Tillies trenches, where with his Swedish Horse, he took the young Prince of Anhalt with diverse more, Prisoners: Tilly thereupon leaving behind him two thousand dead, wounded and sick men, dislodged with his Army.

Tilly formes a new Army.

About this time he had twelve thousand five hundred weight of Powder blown up by an accident, whereupon he said, with a deep sigh: I do evidently see all my good fortunes begin to fail me, and every thing goes awkardly with me: He should have said, Now doth the Lord revenge upon me all that innocent blood which I shed at Magdeburg, together with all other my wicked practises.

Gods just judgment upon Tilly.

After this he marches into the Palatinate, after whom the King of Sweden follows with about four and twenty thousand men, but first he went to Norimberg, and was there with wonderful joy entertained, and presented with four great pieces of brass Ordnance: two Globes of Silver, filled with Silver and Gold: Oates, fish, wine &c. and an Oration made to him, to which (being an excellent speaker) he presently returned answer, thanking them for their presents, but especially for their constancy in Religion, and defence of it, promising for his part, that as he had undertaken the defence of it, so through Gods grace and assistance he would protect them, and all the rest of his Friends to the uttermost of his power: Also hearing that Tilly went further and further from him, to joyn with Walsteines Army, he resolved to march into Bavaria,

The Kings entertainment at Norimberg.

a

a rich and fertile Country, and so thereby to remove the seat of War from the Palatinate; and for that end he marched to Donawert, which was the Key to open his passage into Bavaria: This was a strong City, and had in it a Garrison of one thousand seven hundred Foot, and five hundred Horse under the valiant Rodulph Maximilian, Duke of Saxen Lawenburg: by the City ran the River of Danubius, over which the King must pass into Bavaria. The King raised a Battery, on which he mounted twenty pieces of Ordnance, wherewith he annoied the Town, and hindred the passage over the Bridge: He also sent Colonel Hepbron with his Brigade over a Bridge five miles about, who about midnight silently disposed his men in a covert all along in Gardens under the wall, so disposing the matter, that none could pass over the Bridge, or out at the Western Port, but he fell within his reach, which they in the Town perceiving and despairing of relief, intended under the covert of the night to have marched over the Bridge into Bavaria: But Hepbron so galled them in their passage, that though Saxen-Lawenburg and some few with him, got safely over, yet the rest were so cut down, that their dead bodies covered the Bridge, and thereby encombred the whole passage; the rest seeing that, sallied out at the Port upon Hepbron, but were soon repulsed. The siege of Dunawert.

The King, all this while thundered with his Cannon on the other Port, and they within, still fearing his entrance, boldly sallied out again upon Hepbron, who so entertained them, that he slew about four hundred, and took as many Prisoners, and in the height of his valor, entred the Port, with my Lord Craven, and some other English Gentlemen, where they cut in pieces all that resisted, and the Soldiers fell to plundering, where many a Gold chain, plate, and other treasure of the enemies were made prize. Dunawert taken.

By this time the King was entred at his Port also, who immediately commanded, that none of the Burgers Houses should be plundered: The King gave Hepbron the honor of this action: Then he restored thee free exercise of the Protestant Religion, Garrisoned the place, and so advanced forwards.

Tilly having notice of the Kings marching toward Bavaria, presently hasted thither by an other way, and the better to keep out the King, he breaks down the Bridges over Danubius, and the River Lech, and to keep him from passing over the Lech, he laies his Army all along upon the Bavarian shore of it, sixteen miles in length; yet the King prepares to lay a Bridge over the River, and in two small Boates sends over the Swedes, and Finns, his Pioneers and Carpenters to the other side of the River, to cast up an halt Moon to secure the passage of the Bridge, which Tilly with all his art and power endeavoured to resist: yet they performed their task, making good the place till they were relieved: the small and great shot go off incessantly on both sides with extream hot execution one upon another: In which time, General Altringer was near slain, and carried off in the Duke of Bavaria's own Coach: The Bavarian Captains found this such hot service, that Tilly himself was faign to come up to the point, and in the very face of danger to give directions, where he received a Musquet shot in the thigh, whereof he shortly after dyed. Tilly slain.

This accident so astonished the Duke of Bavaria, that he presently posted away to Ingolstat, his chief City, and most of his Army retreated from their Charge, so that the King with his Army gat over the River, and sending out parties, cut off many of the Bavarian straglers. The King enters Bavaria.

Afterwards the King took in diverse strong places and Cities, and amongst them, the great City of Auspurg, into which when he was entred, he went straight to Church, where Doctor Fabricius, the Kings Chaplain, preached on Psalm 12. 5. For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord &c. after Sermon, was a solemn Thanksgiving for the Victory; Then he fortified the City, and restored the Protestant Religion in it again, and so marches to Ingolstat; in the siege whereof the Kings Horse was slain Thanksgiving. The King in danger.

The Kings Christian speech.

slain under him, and the Marquess of Baden, a gallant man was slain hard by, with whose death the King was exceedingly grieved, and in a speech before his Commanders, he told them, that hereby he was put in mind of his own mortality, knowing that the bullet made no distinction between a King and his meanest Soldier; and that it was Gods decree, that no priviledges should exempt him from death, therefore saith he: I wholly resign up my self to the providence of the Almighty, who, though he may take me away, yet I know, he will not abandon this so just a cause, which I have undertaken for restoring the Germans liberties: He doubtless will raise up some other, more wise, couragious and valiant than my self, who shall put a period to this War, &c.

Munchen delivered to the King.

The Duke of Bavaria lying with his Army on the other side of the River, and the King finding that the City was not ealy to be taken, raises his siege, and taking in diverse Towns, and restoring the Protestant Religion in them, he at last came before Munchen, where was the curious Pallace of the Duke of Bavaria, whereupon the Deputies of the Town came forth to him, presented him with the Keys, and a promise of three hundred thousand Dollars: The King enters, suffers the Garrison to march out safely, viewed the Magazin, where were great store of Armes and Ammunition; He found buried also one hundred and forty fair pieces of Brass Ordnance, and in one of them thirty thousand pieces of Gold: but the Chamber of Rarities afforded him the most entertainment, in which were imcomparable varieties both of Art and nature.

The great and speedy victories of the King.

About this time, Commissary Ossa, with an Army of seven thousand men, came into those parts, against whom the King sent a party: and leaving Colonel Hepbron Governor of Munchen, himself follows after: which news coming to Ossa, he retreated so speedily, that he left his great Ordnance behind him: So that about this time the King had either conquered, or drawn to his party all the middle part of Germany, yea from the Baltick Sea to the Alps, near to Italy, for five hundred miles together, he had gone on with victorious success. And shortly after the great City of Ulm accorded with the King, to whom he sent Sir Patrick Ruthuen, a gallant Scotch-man to be their Governor; and so a while after, he returns, and encamps by Norimberg: and this he did the rather, because the Duke of Bavaria had now joyned his Army with Walsteine, who, by command of the Emperor, had gotten together a great Army, wherewith they threatened the ruine of Norimberg.

The King encamps about Norimberg.

The King therefore round about this Town entrenched himself: his present Army being but about fifteen thousand, and five hundred men, and therefore he sends for his other Armies to come to him: Walstein had in his Army twenty thousand Horse, and forty thousand Foot, besides five thousand Crabats: About four miles distant from the Kings Leaguer, Walstein formes his, who as Imperial Generalissimo, commanded in chief over the Bavarian Army also, and having fortified his Camp, he gave order to his Soldiers to make more use of their trenches, then of their Weapons, intending by delayes to force the King to dislodge from before Norimberg, and to abandon it up to his mercy.

Walsteines great Army.

The two Armies being quartered so near together, there passed many skirmishes betwixt them, sometimes one going away with the loss, sometimes the other; Having lain thus a while, Walstein sends home to the King, Colonel Dubattel, whom he had taken Prisoner, without ransome, and with his message: That he had no other ambition then once to see his Majesty in good tearms with the Emperor, his Master, and himself to have the honor to be the instrument of it.

After a while the Duke of Bavaria moved Walsteine to beat up the Kings quarters, before his other Armies came up to him; to whom he answered, that he would not venture, for if his Army were beaten, all Germany, and Italy were were both endangered: yet if Bavaria would fall on first, he would second him with all his forces. During the Kings aboad here, the Norimbergers complained to him, that their lands and territories had been as bad plundered by his Army, as by the enemies, whereupon the King calling his Officers together, spake thus unto them: Ye Princes, Earles, Lords, and Gentlemen, you are some of those that are unfaithful, and disloial to your own Country, and do help to ruine it: I confess you are gallant men, and have done brave service in the Wars, but when I hear of your ravages, robberies and plunderings, my hair stands an end at the very horror of it: Judge your selves; is it not a doleful case that one Christian, of the same profession in Religion should pillage another. One friend ransack, spoil, and ruine another. The very Divels in Hell are more trusty one to an other then you are: my bowels yern within me, when I hear complaints, that the Swedish Soldiers are more insolent then the enemies: But they are not the Swedes, they are the Germans that commit these insolencies: Had I known that you Germans had been a people of this temper, to bear no more affection to your natural Country, &c. I would never have sadled Horse for your sakes, much less have hazarded my life, Kingdom, and estate in your behalf &c. But it may be, you will say, you want money, but is not the fault in your selves, who hinder me from having means to pay you by your robbings and pillages: For my own part, I protest before God, that I have not by all this War enriched my self so much as a paire of Bootes comes to: yea I had rather ride without Bootes, then in the least degree to enrich my self by the dammage of these poor people: Since my coming into Germany, I have received out of my own Country forty tuns of Gold, which I have spent for the reestablishment of those oppressed Princes, which are of the same true Religion with me &c. That which I desire of you for the time to come is, that you spoile not others of their goods, but leave every man to his own possessions. The choller and manhood that you have, skore it (on Gods name) on the fronts of your enemies, but distain not the honor of a Soldier by insulting over unarmed innocents: Live upon your means like Soldiers, and not upon pilfering and spoiling like Thieves, and robbers: this if you do not, you shall ever be infamous, and I by such helpers shall never be victorious: This speech was delivered with that efficacy and life, that it extracted tears of compunction from these Military Hearers, who had rather bleed then weep: He also seconded it with a Proclamation, that he would henceforth pardon no man of what ranck soever, that should in this kind be again complained of: adding, that if to avoid punishment, they should all conspire upon a mutiny, himself with his Swedes and Finlanders would undertake so to rattle them, that the shivers of their staves should fly about their eares for it.

The Kings speech to his Commanders.

About this time the several Armies, that the King had sent for, to release him, began to draw near: which the King hearing of, appointed a solemn day of Fasting and Prayer in his Leaguer, to seek unto God for the happy joyning and good success of his Armies, and then quitting his trenches, he went forth and joyned with them, whereupon he drew up into Battalia before the enemies trenches, and stood there all day to make a Brave upon them. The King was now six and forty thousand strong, and therefore resolved, if he could, to joyn Battel with the enemy, but because Walstein kept himself in his trenches, and would not stir, the King raised Batteries, planted Ordnance, with which he plaid into his Camp: and when that prevailed not, he sought to force his trenches, whereupon ensued a very desperate fight, wherein many a brave man lost his life: a piece of the sole of the Kings Boot was carried away with a shot, and Duke Bernard of Saxen Weymer had a Horse slain under him, and yet it pleased God to preserve them both from any further hurt: then the King sent out parties to cut off Walsteins victuals, whereupon ensued divers bickerings, Fasting and Prayer.

The King in danger.

The Crabats flew out as far as Altroffe, an University belonging to Norimberg, rimberg, where they light upon the poor Schollers (they might as well have robbed the Spittle.) Agricola, Nester, and Bruno, Professors there, they carried away, and put poor Genus and Species to their ransome. But the King perceiving that the enemies would not be drawn out to fight, resolved upon a remove, marching by, and almost round about the Imperial Leaguer with Colours flying, Drums beating &c. and so divided his Army, he took in diverse places; Then did Walstein march into Voitland to undoe the Duke of Saxony, which the King hearing of, presently turned his course thitherward, and not long after, having reunited his Forces, he intended to set upon Walstein; who perceiving the Kings purpose; called together his Forces also; Then did the King consult, whether he should fight the enemy or no: Duke Bernard was for the valiant Affirmative: Major Kniphausen for the sober Negative, his reasons were.

A University Plundered.

1. No man is to fight, but when he is apparently stronger then the enemy, which the King is not.

2. None is to attack a stronger enemy but when compelled by a pressing and inavoidable necessity, viz to force his passage, when he is hemmed in, and when hunger and want of provision enforceth, which are not the Kings case: Hereupon the King resolved to go and joyn with the Duke of Saxony, but by the way, hearing that the Imperialists lay scattering in several Dorps and Villages about Lutzen, without any intelligence of the Kings motion, his Majesty then put on a resolution to fight, saying, that he now verily believed that God had given his enemies into his hands: thereupon did he, and all his Army advance stoutly against the enemies, doubling their march, but their legs found it a longer way then their eyes, and besides there was a filthy pass by the way at a Bridge over a River, which hindred the Army full two houres, so that it was night when he came within two miles of Lutzen, where he was forced by the darkness of the night to quarter in the open Field with all his Army.

Then did the Imperialists take the alarum, and order was sent to all the quarters of their Army upon pain of death to repair immediately to Lutzen, so that by ten a Clock the next morning they were all come up together, and Walstein had planted his Ordnance advantagiously, entrenched about it, cast up breastworks for his men &c. The King having thus brought himself into a necessity of fighting, very early in the morning, caused the Drums to beat; and he had Doctor Fabricius to pray with him, and other Ministers in the head of other Regiments: It was a very misty morning, which was a great advantage to the enemy to prepare his works, from which he was resolved not to stir; and about ten a Clock, November the sixth, the Fog cleared up, and the King going first to his own subjects, spake to this purpose: My dear brethren, carry your selves bravely this day; fight valiantly on Gods name, for your Religion, and for your King: this if you do, Gods blessing, and the peoples praises shall be your Guerdon, and you for ever shall be laden with an honorable memorial, nor will I forget to reward you nobly: If you play the Poultrons, I here call God to witness, that not a bone of you shall ever return again to Sweden. To the Germans he said, O my brethren, Officers and fellow Soldiers, I most earnestly intreat and beseech you to make full tryal of your valour this one day: fight manfully against your enemies this day, both with me, and for me: Be not faint hearted in the Battel, nor for any thing discouraged: Set me before your eyes, even me who dreadlesly for your cause, am here ready to adventure both life and blood: If you do this, God no doubt himself will from Heaven reward you with a most glorious victory, of which your selves and posterity shall have the benefit: If you do not, farewel for ever to your Religion, and your selves must for ever remain enslaved.

The Battel of Lutzen. The Kings speech to his Soldiers

The Soldiers of both Nations with joyful acclamations answering the King, he

he further ſaid, and now my hearts, let us on bravely againſt our enemies, and the God of Heaven proſper our endeavours: and ſo caſting up his eyes to Heaven, with a loud voice he ſaid, Jeſus, vouchſafe this day to be my ſtrong helper, and give me courage to fight for thy glory, and for the honor of thy name: His Prayer. Then drawing his Sword, he waved it over his head, and advanced the formoſt of all his Army: Amongſt the Kings own guard were the Engliſh and Scottiſh Gentlemen: he himſelf was attired in a plain Buff-coat without Armour: and being requeſted to put on his Corſlet, he ſaid. The Lord God is my Armor; His watch word was, God with us: VValſteines was, Jeſus Maria, The King ſaid, I thank God I have both Wind and Sun to favour me.

The Field, where the Battel was fought, was a plain Champion Country, yet had many Ditches which ſerved VValſteines men for breaſtworks, and the Kings Horſe in paſſing over them, were ſome of them overthrown: There were alſo two little Hills, upon which VValſteine had planted his great Guns: And ſo great was his Army, that the front of it extended two miles in length: The Armies coming within reach, the great Guns began to play on both ſides: but the Imperial Cannon being planted upon ſteady and fixt Batteries (where as the Kings gave fire in motion) did the greater execution, ſo that the King not liking that ſport, cauſed his Army to advance upon the very mouth of the Cannon: The Imperialiſts kept their ground, expecting that the Swedes fury would be over, and themſelves out of breath, ere they could get over the Ditches, and beat out the Muſqueteers: yet they overcame thoſe difficulties, and ſo the left wing engaged with the right of VValſteines: then the King advancing with his right wing, and obſerving where the Crabbats ſtood, and where the Curiaſſiers, which were armed Cap a pied, calling Colonel Stalhanſh to him, he ſaid; As for thoſe fellows [the Crabbats] I care not for them: but charge me thoſe black fellows ſoundly, for they are the men that will undoe us: The King fought at the head of his Squadron, himſelf being formoſt with his Piſtol in one hand, and his Sword in the other: and thus charging upon the Curiaſſiers, he was there overlaid with numbers, inſomuch as his men, in danger of being hemb'd in, were faign to give ground, and to retire towards their body; there did the King receive a ſhot into the left arme, which he not feeling at firſt, would have led on ſtill, but by and by, perceiving his blood to guſh out abundantly, and that, part of his bone was broken, he called to Duke Albert of Saxen-Lawenburg, ſaying, Couſin, I am ſore wounded, help me to make my retreat; This, whilſt the Duke and thoſe that were with the King, were about to do, his Squadron alſo being now upon the retreat, there comes up an Officer of the Curiaſſiers, that too well knew the King, and ſaid, This is the right bird, and ſo diſcharging his Piſtol, ſhot him through the body, and himſelf was preſently ſhot dead upon the place. The King was held up in his ſaddle a while, but preſently fell: his Horſe alſo was ſhot, and ſo ran away without his Maſter. The King ſlain.

Juſt now fell a great miſt, the Sun, which before ſhined very brightly, on a ſudden Muffling up his face in a mourning cloud, as if not able to look upon the fall of the King of Sweden. The Imperialiſts being now maſters of the Kings body, fell to ſtripping it: one getting his Spurs, another his Sword, another his Ring, another his Buff-coat &c. every one being greedy to get ſome part of his ſpoiles: but before they could carry away his body, the Swedes returned, ſo charged the enemies, that they were forced to retreat. whereupon Stalhanſh, recovering the body, carried it away in an ammunition Wagon privately, ſo that few in his own Army knew of his death. His body recovered.

All this while were the four foot Brigades of the Swedes pell mell at it, and gat ground a pace of the Imperialiſts: The Horſe alſo after an houres fight, drave them back, and got poſſeſſion of ſeven pieces of their Ordnance: but by this time the miſt was ſo extraordinarily thickned by the ſmoak, that the Swedes could not see to pursue their advantage: yet it pleased God to strike part of the Imperial Army with such a Pannick fear, that above one thousand Dutch Horse ran all away together, one amongst them crying out, Oh I know the King of Sweden well enough; he is best at the latter end of the day: But the chiefest fright was among the Ladies and Captains Wives, and other women behind the Army, many of them getting out of their Coaches, cut asunder the Harness, and mounted straddling upon the bare Horse backs, and so scudded away amongst the Soldiers: diverse women and Children were there troden to death, nor did the Horse-men stay till they had fled diverse miles: But in the heat of the Battel, Count Pappenheime (who was before sent for) came in with his Horse and Dragooners, by whose coming the charge was again renued: but just as he was ordering his Horse, he was shot with a Falconet bullet, whereof he presently dyed: His Officers flocking about him, cryed out, O our General is slain, our General is slain, and thereupon turning their Horse heads, they ran out of the Battel without a stroke striking: but the Imperialists, who were encouraged and set on by his coming, maintained the fight with admirable resolution: yet the charge was sustained by the Swedes with much gallantry: full two houres were they thus in hot battel: but the greatest loss fell upon two Brigades of the old Swedish Soldiers, whom the King had most relyed on: These old blades stood to their Armes stoutly, till the ground was covered with their bodies, yet they dyed not unrevenged, for they slew many of the Imperialists, and amongst them diverse of great account.

A Pannick fear.

Pappenheim slain.

Duke Bernard had as hard a Chapter of it, as any man against the Imperial right wing, commanded by Count Coloredo: yet never did man behave himself more gallantly then Duke Bernard did that day, charging his enemies twelve several times one after an other: A little before Sun set, the mist cleared up, and then did Duke Bernard overview the posture and countenance of the Army, which he could not do since he heard of the Kings death, till now: He spake cheerfully to the Officers, and Soldiers, encouraging them to a new onset: He found the whole Army (except Kniphausens part) in no good order, yet he took much pains to rally them, and draw them on to a new charge: Alas comrade, saith the poor Soldier, must we fall on again? come saith the other, if we must, let us do it bravely, and make a day of it.

The Imperialists hearts quaked within them, when they saw the Swedes thus advancing in good order against them again; whereupon the Horse began to retreat, which the Swedes perceiving, they with their great Ordnance gave them such a rowsing Salve, and then charged them so home, that they put them into disorder: but then again fell there such a mist, that the Swedes could not see to pursue their enemies: and now was all the service turned to the wind Mills, where Coloredo was, who strugled hard at the last cast for life: A cruel fight was here maintained till about six a Clock at night, about which time the Imperialists quite gave it over: This cruel and bloody Battel had lasted about nine houres; and now Walstein marched away towards Leipswich, leaving the field and victory to the Swedes, who lodged upon the ground all night, where was a pittiful groaning of the dying and wounded of both sides. It was a frosty cold night, in which many a brave man dyed of his wounds, that with help might have been cured: The next morning the Swedes found all the Imperial Cannons left behind them. There were slain of the Swedes about three thousand, and of the Imperialists about four thousand upon the place, besides whom, the Boores knocked down near three thousand that fled away straggling: The wounded were as many more as the slain: on the Swedes side were slain, the King himself, whose death can never be sufficiently lamented; the enemies themselves giving him this testimony, teſtimony, that he was the braveſt enemy, and the beſt Captain that ever was in Chriſtendom: and beſide him, Grave Neeles: Nicholas, Count of Vvefenburg with ſome other Colonels and Officers: on the Imperial party were ſlain, the Abbat of Fuldea, Count Pappenheim, young Count VValſtein, and diverſe Colonels and Officers. VValſtein at firſt intended only to make a retreat to Leipſich, but his Soldiers, ſo ſoon as they heard the Drums beat a retreat, fell to running preſently: and the fright was ſo great that moſt of them never came into order again: His chief Officers confeſt, that if the Swedes had but ſent out one thouſand Horſe after them, they might have cut off the whole Army. A Prince of the Empire.

The Imperialists beaten.

The King of Sweden bore a port and preſence, full of Majeſty: was of a gallant ſtature, above ſix Foot high: full fac't: had an Hawks eye: of yellowiſh hair: he was clean limb'd, ſtrong, active, and hardy: of an undaunted courage; a ſtrong judgment; an admirable quickneſs of conceit; of a natural vigilancy, and indefatigableneſs: He had a marvellous forecaſt, to apprehend and diſpoſe of his affairs to the beſt advantage: He had an excellent dexterity to extricate, and untangle the Gordian knottineſs of a buſineſs: He knew how to take advantage of mens humours: and had a native attraction in him to win hearts, as well as Provinces: He was a great Student upon any buſineſs of Importance: a diligent diſputer, and canvaſſer of the anſwer which he was to give to Ambaſſadors. A ſudden danger ſeldom aſtoniſhed his judgment: but the more deſperate the peril was, the nimbler was he in his deliveries: ſtill ſhewing moſt vigour, where there was moſt need of it: He was exceeding temperate in his diet: his feeding was upon ſtrong and Soldierly diſhes: But that which was moſt commendable in him, was his Religion, both publick and Private: He was frequent in Prayers and thankſgiving, upon every emergent occaſion: He would pray a Shipboard, a Shore, in the Field, in the midſt of a Battel, as if Prayer alone were the ſureſt piece of his whole Armour: He was a ſtrict obſerver of Martial Diſcipline: and a ſtrict puniſher of miſdemeanors in his Camp. King of Swedens Character. His Piety. His Diſcipline.

When he firſt came into Germany, he ſaw that many women followed his Army, whereupon coming to a great River, his men and Wagons being paſſed over, he cauſed the Bridge to be broken down, hoping thereby to be rid of his lumber: but they on a ſudden ſhriking out grievouſly, the Soldiers on the other ſide, vowed not to ſtir a Foot till the Women were fetched over: whereupon the King, finding that this ill humour was ſo generally diſperſed among his men, that it was dangerous to purge it all at once, ſmiled out his anger for the preſent, permitting what he could not amend: yet this abuſe he afterwards reformed by degrees: His Army won the day, though they loſt their King; which made one to compoſe this Elegie.

Upon this place, the great Guſtavus di'd,
Whilſt Victory lay bleeding by his ſide.

A little before his death, being in diſcourſe with Doctor Fabricius, his Chaplain; he told him, that he thought God would ere long take him away, becauſe the people did ſo overvalew, and Deifie him: He was ſlain in the battel at Lutzen, November the 16 Anno Chriſti 1632. and of his age thirty eight. He preſageth his death.

At his firſt coming into Germany, having a deſign upon Stetin, and his Army now ready upon the ſhore, and his Boates ready upon the River to imbark them; the wind was contrary, and ſo had continued for diverſe daies before: The King obſerving this, before his Army with bended knees, and hands lifted up to Heaven, he ſaid: O thou moſt juſt God, full well thou knoweſt that I did not at firſt undertake this enterpriſe out of any raſhneſs, or ambition, Power of Prayer.

but for the Glory of thy most Holy name, and the defence of the truth of thy word: here now therefore I call upon thee, O God, and most humbly beseech thee, that with the air of thy favour, and with a prosperous wind, thou wouldest be pleased to breath upon this my undertaking for Christ his sake, Amen: No sooner was his prayer ended, but, through Gods mercy, the wind turned about with so full a gale, that the whole Fleet, passing up the River Oder, in two houres space ran up twenty miles, and unlooked for, came to an Anchor within a mile of Stetin, to the great defeat of the purposes of the Imperialists, who had an intent within two daies after to have laid siege to the City, had not God thus miraculously prevented them. Also when he came first to his Crown, he would needs lay siege to Notteburg Castle, which the Muscovite had given to his Father, for some assistance that he had afforded him. The Castle stood in an Island in the mouth of the most raging and swift River of Nerva, his Colonels despairing of taking it, and loth that their young King should receive a check in his first attempts, labour to dissuade him from the Action: yet he continued resolute to pursue it: and see how Almighty God wrought for him. The besieged Muscovites were stricken with such thrushes, warts, and blisters in their throats and mouths, that they could neither chew their meat, nor swallow it down, whereupon they parlied, and yielded up that impregnable Castle to him, wherein he found a whole years victuals, besides abundance of ammunition.

A special providence.

Not long after this, he had a difference with the Dantzickers, who prepared twenty, or thirty good Ships of War, with the first opening of the spring to have burnt up his Navy in the harbour: but towards the end of Winter, when this narrow Swedish Sea was Frozen a yard, or two deep, this young King caused his Boores to cut open this Ice for ten or twelve miles together, which done, he came in a night with his Fleet upon the Dantzickers, and burnt, sunk, and took most of their Ships: Also in his Wars with the King of Poland, he conquered so many Towns from him in Prussia, and Livonia, that he inforced him, by the mediation of our King Charles, to make peace with him.

In these Wars with the Polanders, his Army was never great: he had but five thousand men for the most part, and never above seven thousand; and yet with them he fought several Battels: beat out, or wearied out two Imperial Armies: took in the great, and strong City of Elbing, with diverse others: and finally obtained his end upon his enemy, who was able at once to have come down with such a number of Horse, as had been sufficient to have carried him away, and five such Armies as his was.

When he came first into Germany, he had many brave Generals: the Lord Oxenstern, a Swede born, and Lord Chancellor of that Kingdom: the Lord Faulkenburg, a German born, and Lord Chamberlain of his Majesties Housholds: the Lord Gustavus Horne, a Finlander, with whom the Lord Marquis Hamilton was associated: the Lord Achatius Todt, a Swede, General of his Majesties Horse. Sir John Bannier, a Swede, General of the Infantry: The valiant Maximilian Dyvel, or Teufel, Baron of Gindersdorf, and Weyersburg, Colonel of the Life-Guard: the gallant Bauditzen, Lieutenant General of the Horse: Sir John Hepborn, Sir Alexander Lesly, and Colonel Lumsdel, all brave Scots, &c.

Collected out of the Swedish Intelligencer, and some other Books.

FINIS.

An Alphabetical Table of all the chief things contained in this first Part of the Second Volume.

ADultery punished p. 21.
Afflictions profitable to Gods Children p. 75.
Amuraths Appeal to Christ p. 39. His perfidiousness p. 45.
Angels comfort Gods People in their heavinesse p. 23. 25.
Anger rash p. 19. How cured p. 20.
Arrian Heresie, its first rise p. 7.

B B

Battels, against Attila p. 25. The Persians p. 25, 26. Gilimer p. 27. Vitiges 28. 31. The Hunns p. 29. Totila p. 33. The Turks p. 36, 37, 38. 41. 45, 46. 48. &c. The Scots p. 69. The Emperor of Germany p. 102. Tilley p. 109. Walstein 114.
Belisarius p. 32. &c.
Bibles provided by Constantine p. 10. Reverenced by Queen Elizabeth p. 82.
Bounty to the Church p. 6. Bounty p. 53.
Bounty to distressed Christians p. 71.

C C

Cadiz taken by the English p. 92.
Charity p. 4. 72.
Chastity p. 3. 93.
Children carefully educated p. 10.
Christians Persecuted p. 5. 23. 27. Favoured p. 3.
Church bountifully provided for p. 6. Its Lands restored p. 6. It flourishes in times of peace p. 6. Its peace sought after p. 9, 10.
Church reformation p. 69. 82. 84. Endeavoured p. 170.
Churlish Nabal p. 77. 79.
Civil broiles dangerous p. 27.
Clemency p. 6. 27. 29. 67. 101.
Commissioner stabbed p. 69.
Conscience guilty p. 56.
Constancy and Courage p. 13. 80. 87.
Constantines Birth and Education p. 1. Election to the Empire p. 2. His Wars against the Picts p. 2. He is sent for to Rome p. 2. Sees the sign of the Crois in the air p. 3. His Victories over Maxentius p. 4. and Licinius p. 6. His Speech in the Council of Nice p. 8. He burns the complaints of the Bishops p. 8. is Baptized p. 10. His Character p. 2. 11. and his Death p. 11.
Constantinople built and adorned p. 11.
Constantius his last Speech p. 2.
Contentation p. 9. 78.
Contention dangerous p. 6. 70.
Conversion p. 11. 28.
Covetousness p. 5. Foolish p. 10.
Council of Nice p. 7. Of Constantinople p. 16. Of Ephesus p. 25.
Councils Acts confirmed p. 8. 16.
Cowardise p. 43. 65.
Cruelty p. 36, 37. 55. 58. 60. 64. 77. 80. 97. 102.

D D

Devil a Lyar p. 5.
Discipline p. 103. 115.
Dragon monstrous p. 21. Dragons Guts rarely written on p. 11.
Drake compasses the World p. 88.
Dreams p. 105.
Duels p. 56. 43. 106.

E E

Earth-quakes p. 31. 34.

Edward the ſixth, his Learning and Character p. 67, 68. His laſt Prayer 73. His death 74. His ſtudies 74. His Zeal p. 74.
Queen Elizabeths Birth and Education p. 75. Her troubles 76, 77. Great deliverances 81. Her Character p. 8. 93. She declines marriage 82. Her Wars and Victories 89, &c. Her care for the Kingdom 82. She aſſiſts the afflicted Proteſtants 84. 86. Her love to her People 87. She aſſiſts the Hollander 83. Don Antonio 92. the French King 92. Her great Acts p. 93. Her Character p. 93. Her death p. 93, 94. Her Parentage p. 95.
Exchange built p. 88.
Excommunication of Hereticks p. 8.

F F

Faith p. 3. 28. 30. 77.
Family Government p. 24.
Famins p. 21. 25. 31. 33. 69.
Faſting, See Prayer and Faſting
Fidelity p. 53. 69.
Flattery p. 10.
French beaten p. 70.

G G

Gods goodneſs, See Protection p. 4. 9. 17, 18. 30. 64. 70. 86.
God honours and rewards ſuch as honour him, and ſeek the good of his Church p. 4. 9, 10. 18.
Goſpel propagated p. 11.
Gratian the Emperor ſlain p. 17.
Guſtavus Adolphus his Birth and Education 96. His firſt Wars and Victories p. 98. He enters Germany p. 100. His great ſucceſs 100, &c. Battel at Lipſick 106. at Lutzen 112. where he was ſlain 112, 113. His Character 115.

H H

Hereticks dangerous to the Church p. 7. 28. To the State p. 9. Hated p. 9. 25. Proud p. 7. Obſtinate 16. Puniſhed by civil Magiſtrates p. 28. 83. Baniſhed p. 16. 83. Put to death 43. 68. Divided among themſelves 17. Inſolent p. 20. Malicious p. 28.
Hunger the beſt ſauce p. 42.
Humility p. 2. 4. 6. 10. 20. 43. 72.
Huniades his Character p. 43. His name terrible to the Turks p. 44. His brave Speech to his Army p. 37. 41. His death 43.
Huntleys witty anſwer p. 69.
Husbands love to his Wife p. 32.
Hypocriſie p. 75. Detected and deteſted p. 2.

I I

Idolaters falſe confidences p. 5.
Ignorance p. 70.
Imprudence p. 61.
Ingratitude p. 34.
Integrity p. 13.
Jovianus his Chriſtian reſolution p. 13. His untimely death p. 14. His Character p. 14.
Julian the Apoſtate ſlain p. 12. His contempt of Chriſt p. 12.
Juſtice p. 4. 9. 18. 20. p. 40.
Juſtinians Character p. 34.

K K

A good King deſcribed p. 1, 2. 6. 13.
Gods care of Kings p. 2. 52. 56. 102. See Prince.

L L

Learning encouraged p. 11. 84.
Liberality,

Liberality, See Bounty
Libraries famous p. 24,25.66.
Luſt and Impudence p. 102.

M

Magiſtrates, See King. They ſhould provide for the Churches Peace p. 7,8,9.
Magiſtrates clemency abuſed p. 10.
Malice p. 53.64,65,66.76.79.
Mathias Corvinus his Character p. 66.
Meekneſs p. 21. 24.
Mercy p. 9. 30.
Miniſters honored and loved p. 4. 8. 24. 70.
Perſecuted p. 4, 5. Freed from Taxes p. 11.
Miracles of Mercy p. 19.64. 18.30.

N

Narſes his Character p. 34.

O

Oppreſſion p. 99.

P

Pauls Steeple burnt by Lightening p. 84.
Peaceableneſs prized p. 16.
Peace-makers p. 13.16.
Perjury puniſhed by God p. 40.48,69.
Perſecution, See Chriſtians, and Miniſters p. 5. 27. 85.
Perſecutors plagued by God p. 28. 64.
Piety p. 10.13.21.23,24.68.72.93.115.
Policy p. 32. 46. 51. 99.
Popiſh cruelty and Malice, See Cruelty
Popiſh perfidiouſneſs p. 39.89.
Prayer and Faſting p. 18.90.101.105.111.
Prayer frequent p. 9. Powerful and prevalent p. 3.5,6.17,18.23,24.27.92.100.115.
Prayer the beſt refuge in dangers p. 25.77,78.106.113.
Pride p. 29, 30. 36. 53. 105. Puniſhed p. 31. 107.
Prince taken away for the Peoples ſins p. 14. See King
Prodigies p. 5.29.72.105.
Prophecies p. 18.
Providences extraordinary p. 32.46.64 69.116.
Providences of God in preſerving his Children p. 79. 101.
Prudence p. 16.25.31.98.

R

Rebellions p. 69, 70.
Recantation p. 71.
Religion flouriſhes in times of Peace p. 6. Rewarded p. 10. 70.
Reſolution p. 61.
Reſtitution p. 6.
Rome beſieged p. 31. taken and ſacked p. 33. Repeopled p. 33. Defended bravely p. 33. made leſs p. 34.

S

Sabbath eſtabliſhed p. 9. Sanctified p. 102.
Sacriledge puniſhed by God p. 71.
Scanderbegs Birth and Education p. 44. His Victories p. 48, &c. His death p. 61. His Bones highly eſteemed by the Turks p. 62. His Character p. 62. His ſtrength p. 62.
Schiſm in the Church dangerous p. 7, 8.
Scots Queen beheaded p. 89.
Scriptures ſtudied p. 24.

Servant faithful p. 78.
Soldiers choose the Emperor p. 2.
Speeches observable p. 11.
Spanish Armado p. 89.
Studious p. 93.
Subjects love to their Prince p. 2.
Superstition reformed p. 10.
Synods p. 9,10.
Synods Acts binding p. 10. Necessary for the Peace of the Church p. 4.

T

Thanksgiving after Victories p. 4.19.36,37,38.54.108,109.
Thanksgiving for Mercies p. 39. 82. 91. 102.
Theodosius Senior overthrows the Goths p. 15. The Alans p. 17. Maximus 18. Eugenius p. 19. Is Baptized p. 16. Excommunicated p. 19. Absolved p. 20. His Character p. 21.
Theodosius Junior overthrows the King of Persia p. 23. The Huns p. 24. Dies of the Plague p. 24. His Character p. 24.
Tilley slain. p. 109.
Tilbury Camp p. 91.
Tir-Owens Rebellion p. 93.
Toleration denied p. 83.
Traitors punished by man p. 52. 60. 85, 86, 87, 88, 89. 101. By God p. 86. 88.
Treachery, Treason p. 40, 41. 51. 54, 55. 59. 63. 73. 84, 85. 103, 104.
Tyrants p. 2. 4, 5. 17. 23.

V

Valor p. 30. 45. 98.
Vanity of all Worldly Glory p. 34. 38.
Uncleanness p. 3. 5.
Unity in Religion endeavoured p. 4. It's very advantagious p. 82.
University plundered p. 112.

W

War, the success of it depends upon God p. 3.
Wicked caught in his own snare p. 4.
Wife good p. 32. 3.
Women Preachers set up by Licinius p. 5.
Word of God highly reverenced p. 11. 93.

Z

Zeal p. 8. 10. 13. 15. 19. 25, 26. 69. 71. 97.
Zeal against Heresie p. 7, 8, 9, 10. 16. 25. 28. Against idolatry p. 8. 10. 13. 20. Against Profaneness p. 8.

THE

SECOND PART

OF THE

MARROVV

OF

Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory:

Containing the Lives of CHRISTIANS

Of Inferiour Ranks.

BOOK II.

The ſecond Edition, Corrected, and ſomewhat Enlarged.

---

2 PET. 2. 9.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the Godly out of temptations, and to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of Judgment to be puniſhed.

LONDON,

Printed for Tho. Sawbridge and Will. Birch. 1675.

A Table of the Names of ſuch perſons, whoſe Lives are contained in this Book.

SIR John Oldcaſtle, Lord Cobham.
Ziſca, a noble Bohemian.
John Picus, Earl of Mirandula.
Thomas Cromwel, Earl of Eſſex.
Galeacius Caracciolus, Marqueſs of Vico.
Lady Jane Grey.
Sir Philip Sidney.
Miſtris Catharine Bretterg.
John Lord Harrinton.
Philipp Lord Mornay, Maſter John Bruen.

L. COBHAM

The Life of Sir John Oldcaſtle, who Dyed, Anno Chriſti 1417.

SIR John Oldcaſtle was born of an Antient and Honorable Family, bred up at the Court under King Henry the Fourth, and for his abilities, and valour, was by him made Lord Cobham. He was alſo much prized by King Henry the fifth; but that which did truly enoble him, was, that the Lord was pleaſed in thoſe dark times to reveal the truth unto him, whereof he became a zealous Profeſſor, and a valiant Defendor, eſpecially of the Godly Miniſters, who were Wickliffs Diſciples, whom he protected againſt the rage of the Anti-chriſtian Clergy, who bore the greateſt ſway in thoſe Popiſh times. His Converſion. Zeal.

Hereby he made himſelf the Butt of their envy, and malice; inſomuch as Arundel, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, calling a Synod of the Clergy, they appointed twelve Inquiſitors of Hereſies to ſearch out Wickliffs Books, and Diſciples: who, after a while, brought in two hundred forty ſix concluſions, which they collected as Hereſies out of his Books; whereupon they reſolved, that it was not poſſible to make whole the ſeamleſs Coat of Chriſt (as they ſaid) except ſome great men were taken out of the way, which were the chief upholders of thoſe Hereticks and Hereſies, amongſt whom, the Lord Cobham was eſteemed the principal, who in the Dioceſs of London, Rocheſter, and Hereford, had entertained, maintained, and ſet up to preach ſuch as were not Licenſed by the Biſhop; and who himſelf held Heretical opinions about the Sacraments, Images, Pilgrimages, &c. Hereupon they concluded, that without any further delay, proceſs ſhould be awarded out againſt him, as againſt a moſt pernicious Heretick: But ſome, of more wiſdom and crafty experience then the reſt, adviſed that the matter ſhould not be handled ſo raſhly; but ſeeing that the Lord Cobham was a man of great birth, and in great favour with the King at this time, that therefore they ſhould firſt make Popiſh malice.

the King acquainted with the buſineſs, and procure his approbation, and conſent before they ſummoned him.

This Counſel was well liked of, and thereupon Arundel, with his other Biſhops, addreſſed themſelves ſtraight ways to the King, laying forth before him moſt grievous complaints againſt the ſaid Lord Cobham, to the great diſgrace of that Godly man. The King gently heard theſe blood-thirſty Prelates, for indeed in thoſe dark dayes they kept Kings in awe, yet he requeſted, and inſtantly deſired them, that in regard of his noble Stock, and for that he was his Knight, they would deal mildly, and favourably with him, ſeeking to regain him with gentleneſs, rather then by rigorous dealing: He promiſed alſo, that if they would have a little patience, he would ſeriouſly commune with him himſelf about thoſe matters.

Thus having pacified them for the preſent, he ſhortly after ſent for the Lord Cobham to him, adviſing him as an obedient child to ſubmit himſelf to the Church, and to acknowledge himſelf culpable: To whom this Chriſtian Knight anſwered: You, moſt worthy Prince, I am alwayes willing, and ready to obey, for as much as I know you to be the Miniſter of God, bearing the Sword for the puniſhment of evil doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well: unto you, next to my eternal God, I owe my whole obedience, and ſubmit all that I have unto you, being ready at all times to do whatſoever you ſhall in the Lord command me: but as touching the Pope, and his ſpiritualty, I owe them neither ſute nor ſervice; knowing him by the Scriptures to be the great Antichriſt, the Son of Perdition, the open adverſary of God, and the abomination ſtanding in the Holy place. When the King had heard this ſtout and Godly anſwer, he left him; And (not indeed daring to do otherwiſe) he gave the Archbiſhop leave to proceed againſt him as he ſaw fit: Then the Arch-Biſhop, with the conſent of his other Biſhops, reſolved to call the Lord Cobham before them, perſonally to appear, and to make anſwer to ſuch Articles as they ſhould charge him with; and for this end they ſent forth their chief Sumner with a very ſtrict Citation to the Caſtle of Couling, where he then lived, to cite him; but when the Sumner came thither, he durſt by no means enter into his Caſtle Gates without his Licenſe, and therefore after a while returned to his Maſters, as wiſe as he went.

Chriſtian Courage.

Then did the Arch-Biſhop ſuborne one John Butler, who was Door-keeper of the Kings privy Chamber, with large promiſes of reward, to go with his Sumner to cite the Lord Cobham, who accordingly went to him, falſly informing him, that he was ſent by the King, to tell him, that it was his mind that he ſhould obey the proceſs, and make his appearance: But the Lord Cobham ſtoutly anſwered, that he would in no caſe conſent to thoſe divelliſh practiſes of the Prieſts. With this anſwer they returned, and told the Arch-Biſhop that no man could ſafely, without peril of his life, cite him any more: Hereupon he decreed preſently to ſend down Citatory Letters to be ſet upon the great Church Doors in Rocheſter, which was but three miles from Couling Caſtle; but as ſoon as the Letters were ſet up, they were pulled down again, by ſome Friends and favourers of the Lord Cobham, and thus the Arch-Biſhop was ſerved twice, or thrice: and yet when the day came, and he appeared not, they condemned him of moſt deep contumacy; and hearing by ſome of their fawning ſpies, that the Lord Cobham laughed the Arch-Biſhop to ſcorn, and diſdained all his doings, he then proceeded to excommunicate him, and withal ſet up a new Citation, wherein he cruelly threatned, that if he did not appear at the day, he would handle him more extreamly; and withal, he commanded the Lay-power, under pain of terrible curſes, to aſſiſt him againſt this ſeditious Apoſtate, Schiſmatick, Heretick, and troubler of the publick peace, &c. with other ſuch like odious names.

Popiſh lies.

Courage.

Popiſh malice.

But this worthy and conſtant ſervant of the Lord, ſeeing the fury of Antichriſt, chriſt, and and his followers thus kindled againſt him; perceiving alſo that he was compaſſed about with deadly dangers, he wrote a moſt Chriſtian Confeſſion of his Faith, Signing and Sealing it with his own hand, wherein alſo he anſwered to four of the chiefeſt Articles that they laid to his Charge, and ſo taking it along with him, he went to the King, truſting to find mercy, and favour at his hands: He concluded the Confeſſion of his Faith thus: All the premiſes I believe particularly, and generally, all that God hath left recorded in his Holy Word; and therefore I deſire you my Liege Lord, and moſt worthy King, that this Confeſſion of mine may be juſtly examined by the moſt Godly, Wiſe, and Learned men of your Realm: if it be found agreeable to Gods Word, let it be allowed, if otherwiſe, let it be condemned: provided always that I be taught a better belief by the Holy Scriptures; and I ſhall at all times moſt reverently ſubmit to the ſame: But the King, over-awed by the Biſhop, rejected it, bidding him to deliver it to thoſe that ſhould be his Judges: then he deſired before the King, that he might have an hundred Knights, and Eſquires to be his Compurgators, which he knew would clear him of all Hereſie: Alſo he offered after the Law of Arms, to fight with any man living, Chriſtian, or Heathen, in the quarrel of his Faith, the King and his Councel being excepted: Laſtly, he proteſted that he would refuſe no correction that ſhould be inflicted upon him according to the Laws of God, &c.

Confeſſion of his Faith.

Valour.

Yet for all this the King ſuffered him perſonally to be ſummoned in his privy Chamber. Whereupon the Lord Cobham ſaid, that he had appealed from the Arch-Biſhop, and therefore he ought not to be his Judge; This made the King very angry, and when he refuſed to be ſworn to ſubmit to the Arch-Biſhop, he was arreſted, and led to the Tower till the day of his appearance. In the mean time he cauſed the Confeſſion of his Faith to be written out again.

When he was brought before the Arch-Biſhop, and his Conſiſtory, the Arch-Biſhop proffered to abſolve him, if he would humbly deſire it: Cobham told him that he was ready to make a rehearſal of his Faith, if they would give him leave, and ſo drawing it out of his boſom, he read it before them all, and then delivered it to the Biſhop. After private conſultation amongſt themſelves, they told him, that there were many good things contained in his Confeſſion, but for the preſent they muſt examine him upon other matters; Then they examined him about the Sacrament of the Altar, and Pennance, &c. But he told them that he would no otherwiſe declare his mind, then as it was expreſſed in his writing: The Arch-Biſhop ſaid, that if he would not fully and clearly anſwer to the Articles propoſed, they would adjudge him an Heretick: Do as ye think beſt (ſaid Cobham) for I am at a point: that which I have written, I will ſtand too to the death; The Biſhops were amazed at his ſtout anſwer, and ſo returned him to the Tower till Munday following, at which time the Lieutenant of the Tower, Sir Robert Morley, brought him before them again; then the Arch-Biſhop told him that he was (as formerly he proffered) ready to abſolve him, if he humbly deſired it: No, ſaid the Lord Cobham, I will not, for I never yet treſpaſſed againſt you, and ſo kneeling down, and lifting up his eyes, and hands towards Heaven, he ſaid, I ſhrive me here unto thee, O eternal, ever-living God: In my frail youth I offended thee, O Lord, by Pride, Coveteouſneſs, Wrath, Uncleanneſs. Many men have I hurt in mine anger, and committed many other horrible ſins, good Lord I ask thee forgiveneſs; and ſo weeping, he ſtood up, and ſaid, Lo good people, for breaking Gods Laws, and his Holy Commandments, they never yet curſed me, but for their own Laws, and Traditions, they handle me moſt cruelly, and therefore both they and their Laws by Gods promiſe ſhall be utterly deſtroyed: Yet they proceeded again to further examination of him, to whom he gave ſtout, witty, and ſound anſwers; whereupon the Arch-Biſhop proceeded Popiſh ſubtility.

Chriſtian courage.

Prayer.

Popiſh cruelty.

ceeded to read the Bill of condemnation againſt him; after which the Lord Faith. Cobham with a moſt cheerful countenance ſaid, though you judge my body, which is but a wretched thing, yet I am ſure you can do no harm to my ſoul, no more then Sathan could to Jobs Soul; he that created it will of his infinite mercy ſave it, I doubt not, and as for the confeſſion of my Faith, I will ſtand to it, even to the very death by the grace of my eternal God; and then turning to the people, he ſaid with a loud voice, good people, for Gods ſake be well aware of theſe men, for elſe they will beguile you, and lead you blindfold into Hell with themſelves; and ſo, falling down upon his knees, Prayers for his enemies. he prayed for his enemies, ſaying, Lord God eternal, I beſeech thee of thine infinite mercy to forgive my purſuers, if it be thy bleſſed will; and ſo he was ſent back to the Tower.

But this cruel handling of the good Lord Cobham procured them much diſcredit, both with the Nobility, and Commons; whereupon the Prelates, laying their heads together, cauſed it to be blown abroad by their creatures, Popiſh ſubtility. that now the Lord Cobham had ſeen his errors, and recanted the ſame, and withal, they drew up a form of abjuration in his name, and ſcattered it abroad, as if he had lowly ſubmitted himſelf in all things to the Church, and changed his opinion concerning the Sacrament.

Not long after the Lord Cobham made an eſcape out of the Tower, and Flight in perſecution. fled into Wales, where he remained for the ſpace of four years: In the mean time Proclamation was made by the King, and a great ſumm of money was promiſed to him that could take Sir John Oldcaſtle, either alive or dead; and
A Judas. at the end of four years, the Lord Powis, either for the love of the money promiſed, or for the hatred of the true Chriſtian Religion, ſought by all wayes how to play the Judas, and at length obtained his bloody purpoſe, apprehended the Lord Cobham, and bringing him bound to London, Anno 1417. at which time there was a Parliament aſſembled to raiſe money to maintain the Wars in France.

The Lord Cobham was then carried before the Houſe of Lords, who taking cogniſance of all the proceedings againſt him; and he no wit recoiling from his former profeſſion, they adjudged him to be carried to the
He is condemned as a Traytor. Tower, and from thence, as a Traytor, that he ſhould be drawn through the Streets of London, to the new Gallows in Giles his Fields, where he ſhould be firſt hanged, then burnt upon the Gallows, which ſentence was accordingly ſhortly after executed, and ſo this Godly, zealous, and His Martyrdom. couragious Champion of Jeſus Chriſt ſuffered Martyrdom, Anno Chriſti, 1417.

A Juſt judgment of God. But behold the Juſt Judgment of God upon the Arch-Biſhop, who had ſate in judgment upon him, and pronounced the ſentence againſt him: It pleaſed God ſhortly after to ſtrike the ſaid Thomas Arundel, Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, in his tongue, that he could neither ſwallow down any food, nor ſpeak a word for ſome dayes before his death, by which means he was ſtarved to death.

Popiſh lies. This Lord Cobham was a man ſtrong, valorous, and in ſpecial favour with his Prince, till the ſpiteful, and malicious Prelates ſuggeſted to him, that this Oldcaſtle, and his adherents, lay in wait to take away his life, and that in Giles his Fields twenty thouſand of them were to aſſemble in a hoſtile manner to deſtroy the Monaſteries of Weſtminſter, Saint Albons, and all the Religious Houſes in London; together with Pauls Church alſo: whereupon the King with a great Army at midnight, went into Giles his Fields, and found inſtead of an armed aſſembly, only thoſe that were aſſembled to hear the Goſpel preached in thoſe times of perſecution, ſeeing they could not have liberty to do it in other times, and places; theſe were about eighty, with a Godly Miniſter a-Popiſh cruelty. mongſt them, whereof thirty ſeven were condemned, and ſome of them hanged, and conſumed with fire.

During

During the time than the Lord Cobham was in Wales, all the Maſs Books that he met with, he ſcratched, and defaced the Pictures, and Images which he found in them, and ſome of them coming to the hands of the Abbot of Saint Albons, he ſent them to the King, and pittifully complained of the great wrong done to the Saints thereby: but the King returned them to the Arch-Biſhop, to do as he pleaſed therein.

Sir John Oldcaſtle, Knight, was a Noble Gentleman extracted from an Antient Family in Wales, where he had large Poſſeſſions, and much Alliance, by whoſe help he lay long hidden there, notwithſtanding all the ſearch his bloody enemies made after him. He had Iſſue by Katherine, Daughter of Richard ap Tevan his firſt Wife, John, who dyed before himſelf: and Henry de Oldcaſtle, who ſurvived him, and to whom King Henry the ſixth, in the ſeventh year of his Reign, reſtored diverſe mannors and Lands which had been entailed upon him. He married to his laſt Wife, Joane, the ſole Daughter and Heir of Sir John de la Pole, Knight whom he had begotten upon the ſole Daughter and Heir of the Lord Cobham of Kent, which Joane had been firſt married to Sir Robert de Hemenhale, a Suffolk Knight, and was ſecondly the Wife of Sir Reginald de Braybroke, Knight, by whom ſhe had only Iſſue that ſurvived.

The ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle her third Husband, in her right enjoyed the Caſtle of Couling in Kent, and many other large, and great Poſſeſſions: And by the marriage of her alſo he was nearly allied to the Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Devonſhire, and many other great Peers of the Realm at that time, and did doubtleſs enjoy the ſtile and Title of Baron Cobham, as is infallibly proved by ſeveral Writs of Summons ſent unto him, being all entred upon Record in the cloſe Rolls, by which he was Summoned to aſſiſt in the Houſe of Peers in Parliament by that name, in the time of Henry the fourth, and Henry the fifth. All which (ſaith mine Author [Sir Simon de Ewes] I thought fit to tranſmit to Poſterity, being no where to be found in any Publick Story) not only to ſhew how many ſupportments he had, beſides the favour of King Henry himſelf; to have retarded the Clergy from queſtioning of him: But alſo, how eaſily he was deſtroyed by the bloody Prelates of thoſe endarkened times, when the Soveraign had but permitted unto them the uſe of his power to ancillate to their cruel reſolutions, of which impotent act of the Kings (ſaith A. B. Barker himſelf.) Rex virum clarum, ſibique familiariſſimum Epiſcoporum poteſtati, & carnificinæ permiſit, who yet overlived that bloody Arch-Prelate two years at leaſt.

Collected out of the Book of Martyrs, and Speeds Chronicle.

ZISCA

The Life of Ziſca, who dyed, Anno Chriſti, 1424.

His Birth.

Iſca was born in Troſnovia, in the Kingdom of Bohemia, of an Antient, and Noble Family, and from his youth was brought up in the Kings Court, and was much imployed in Military affairs; wherein he profited ſo well, that he became an able, and skilful Captain: and fighting valiantly in a battel againſt his enemies, he loſt one of his eyes; but it pleaſed God to recompence that outward loſs by enlightning his mind with the knowledge of the truth, by the help of Wickliffs Books (at this time rife in Bohemia) and by the Miniſtery of John Hus; and when John Hus, and Hierom of Prague were ſo cruelly, and unjuſtly burned by the Council of Conſtance, to the diſhonor of the Bohemian Nation, and to King Wenceſlaus, that had permitted it, who dyed ſhortly after, Ziſca reſolved to revenge the wrongs which the Council had done to them, upon their complices, and adherents, and for that end he raiſed an Army of fourty thouſand Proteſtants, by whoſe help he ſubverted the Monaſteries, and their Idolatrous Temples, pulling down, and breaking in pieces their Images, and Idols, driving away the Prieſts and Monks, which he ſaid were kept up in their Cloiſters, like Swine in a ſtie to be fatted.

Education.

Converſion.

Popery deſtroyed.

Then he attempted to take the Caſtle of Wiſgrade, and being not able preſently to carry it, he left part of his Army before it, and marched with the reſt to Pelzina, where were many Proteſtants, which Town he took in, and fortified the ſame very ſtrongly, and in the mean time, his party that he left behind him, took in the Caſtle of Wiſgrade.

Sigiſmund.

Hereupon the Queen ſent to the Emperor, and to other nobles adjoyning to her, for help. But the Emperor being preparing to go againſt the Turk, that had lately taken ſome Caſtles from him, could not aſſiſt her. She therefore taking all the Kings treaſure, fortified the Caſtle of Prague, and the leſſer leſſer City adjoyning unto it; making Gates, and Towers upon the Bridge over the River, to ſtop the paſſage of the Proteſtants that way.

In the mean time the number of Proteſtants encreaſing in Prague, they fought for the Bridge ſo furiouſly, that many were ſlain on both parts, but at length the Huſſites or Proteſtants woon the Bridge, and the neither part of the leſſer Prague; The Popiſh party for the Queen, fled into the upper part, and then turning again, the Battel was renewed, where they fought continually, day and night, for five days together. A fight.

But during this bickering, Ambaſſadors came from the Emperor, which made a truce amongſt them, and agreed that certain places being by Ziſca delivered back into their hands, they ſhould ſend Ambaſſadors to the Emperor Sigiſmund to treat with him about the ſetling of their eſtate. This both ſides conſenting to, and thereupon peace enſued for the preſent: But the Emperor being now at better leiſure, that he might ſhew his zeal for the Popiſh cauſe, and perform his promiſe to the Fathers at the Council of Conſtance, raiſes a great Army, wherewith he reſolved to root out all the Huſſites in Bohemia; But before he enters into that Kingdom, he goes with his Army to Vratiſlavia, the chief City in Sileſia, where he baniſhed ſome, impriſoned others, ſeized upon the eſtate of others, and many he put to cruel deaths, and all this (as himſelf gave out) that he might ſtrike a terror into the Bohemians, and make them obedient to the Church of Rome. Blind zeal. Popiſh cruelty.

This coming to the ears of the Bohemians, and they ſhortly after meeting with ſome of the Emperors Letters, wherein he wrote, that he would come ſpeedily, and rule them after the ſame order, and manner as his Father Charles had done before him: They thereupon ſeeing that their Religion, Liberty, and all that was dear unto them, lay at ſtake, reſolve to arm for their own defence, and to repell unjuſt Tyranny by lawful force, and choſe this noble Ziſca for their General; and drawing the Governor of the Caſtle of Prague, called Cencho, to their part, they ſent Letters into all the Realm, that no man ſhould ſuffer the Emperor to enter, who was an enemy to Bohemia, ſeeking nothing elſe but to deſtroy the Kingdom: and one that had put by the Marqueſs of Brandenburg, whom they had choſen for their King, and had not only ſuffered John Hus, and Hierom of Prague to be burned at the Council of Conſtance, contrary to his Faith given, but had alſo procured the ſame, and with all his endeavor ſought to extirpate the Doctrine, and Faith which they taught, and followed.

In the mean time Ziſca was ſet upon by the Imperialiſts, who were all Horſe-men, and Ziſca's Soldiers were all on Foot; The place where they fought was rough, and rugged, ſo that the Horſe-men were faign to alight, and fight on Foot; hereupon Ziſca commanded all the Women that followed his Army, to throw their Kerchiefs on the ground, wherein the Horſe-men being intangled by their Spurs, were ſlain before they could unlooſe their Feet; and by this policy he got a great Victory over them. A ſtratagem. A great Victory.

Then he went to Auſca, out of which Town, Ulricius, a Papiſt, had caſt out the Proteſtants: This place Ziſca took by Storm, ſet it on fire, and razed it: He took alſo a Caſtle which was a mile off, whither Ulricius was fled, putting him, and all his Family, ſave one, to the Sword; Then conſidering that he had no walled, or fenced Town to inhabite, he choſe out a Mountain, that was fenced by nature, between two Rivers; This place he compaſſed in with walls, commanding his followers to build them Houſes, where they had pitched their Tents, and named the City Thabor, and the inhabitants his followers, Thaborites; The way to it by land was ſcarce thirty Foot broad, in which neck of Land, he made a deep trench, and a triple wall of ſuch thickneſs, that it could not be broken with any Engine. Thabor built.

At this time the Thaborites had no Horſe-men, but the Emperor ſending

A Victory. one of his Officers with a thouſand Horſe-men into Bohemia to reſiſt Ziſca, he fell upon them in their Quarters in the night, took away all their Horſes, and Armor, and ſet the Town on fire where they lay; and then he taught his Soldiers to mount on Horſe-back; to leap, run, turn, caſt in a ring, ſo that after this, he never led Army without his wings of Horſe-men.

In the mean time the Emperor Sigiſmund, gathering together the Nobles of Sileſia, entred into Bohemia with a great Army, marched to Prague, and enticed Cencho that kept the Caſtle, to ſurrender it to him; This cauſed the Citizens of Prague to ſend for Ziſca, who came with his Thaborites to aſſiſt them; and received the City under his Government. His firſt deſign was to beſiege the Caſtle, which was ſo ſtrongly fenced, that it could not be forced but by famine, whereupon he blocked up all the paſſages to it; But the Emperor coming with a very great Army, opened them again, and laid ſiege to the City of Prague, and aſſaulted it often for ſix weeks ſpace; he ſent out alſo part of his Army to ſeize upon the Tents of the Thaborites, againſt whom Ziſca ſent forth ſome power, under the command of Nich. Hus, who
A Victory. beat the Imperialiſts and took in Grecium, the Queens City alſo.

Near to Prague there is an high Hill, on the top whereof Ziſca planted a ſtrong Garriſon, that it ſhould not come into the power of his enemies: againſt this Garriſon the Emperor ſent the Marqueſs of Miſnia, with many Soldiers, who getting to the top of the Hill, were ſo luſtily ſet upon by Ziſca's men, that they were beaten into a corner, where the Rock was very craggy, and ſteep, and there they ſet ſo fiercely upon them, that when the Miſnians could no longer reſiſt, they were driven down the ſteep Rock, where they where broken to pieces. Upon this ill ſucceſs the Emperor, raiſing his ſiege, departed, and Ziſca with his men returned to Thabor.

Ziſca conſidering that the Popiſh Clergy in Bohemia were the procurers of the cruel burning of John Hus, and Hierom of Prague at Conſtance, and that now alſo they had ſet on the Emperor againſt the Huſſites, helpt to pay his Army, and had joyned with him in murthering the innocent ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt in Sileſia, drowning ſome, roaſting others before a ſoft fire, thruſting Popiſh cruelty. others into the mettal-mines; yea that their malice, and hatred was grown to that height, that they ſold them like cattel, giving a Florene for an ordinary Chriſtian, and five Florens for a Miniſter, whom they excrutiated with all manner of Torments; he thereupon reſolved to pay them back in their own coin, and in proſecution thereof, he burnt, deſtroyed, and over-
Juſt revenge. threw three hundred Monaſteries, and amongſt the reſt, the famous Monaſtery called the Kings Court, a mile from Prague, in the walls whereof the whole Bible was moſt exquiſitely written in letters of Gold; the Monks, and Friers he drave out, and cauſed them either to betake themſelves to labor, or to ſeek to other places for ſhelter.

Shortly after he took in many places, and then beſieged the Caſtle of Viſgrade; The beſieged were brought to great ſtraits, inſomuch as they were forced to live upon their Horſes; and at length they were driven to this compoſition, that if they were not relieved by the Emperor by a certain day, they ſhould ſurrender the Caſtle to him; the Emperor hearing hereof, marched to the relief of it with a ſtrong Army, but entering into a
A great Victory. narrow paſſage near the Caſtle, he was ſuddenly ſet upon by the Proteſtants, who gave him a great overthrow, which cauſed him to depart without effecting his purpoſe, and ſo the Caſtle was ſurrendred to Ziſca.

Preſently after he took one of the Imperial Captains in a ſtrong Town; he alſo took, and burned down five Monaſteries, and then ſate down before the ſtrong Monaſtery of Saint Clare. Thither alſo came the Emperor with a Popiſh cowardiſe. great Army, but when Ziſca drew forth his power againſt him, he moſt cowardly fled, and departed out of Bohemia.

From

From thence Ziſca went with his Army to the famous City of Commitavia, which he took by ſtorm, burning all the Prieſts therein; Then he beſieged the ſtrong Town of Raby, where he was ſtricken with an Arrow in the eye, and ſo was carried to Prague to the Phyſicians, who cured him of his wound, but he loſt his ſight, and ſo was ſtark blind, yet would he not leave his Army, but ſtill took the charge of them; After this the Proteſtants took many of the Emperors Garriſons, which cauſed him to ſend to all the Princes Electors to raiſe Forces, and to joyn with him for the ſubduing of the Bohemians: Himſelf with an Army of Hungarians entred on the Eaſt part of Bohemia, and he appointed the Electors to enter on the Weſt; The Emperor at his firſt coming took in ſome Towns: But when Ziſca (although he was blind) came towards him, he was in a great fear, yet a battel was fought, wherein Ziſca ſlew many of his Nobles, and common Soldiers, inſomuch as the Emperor fled, and Ziſca purſuing him a daies journey, got great and rich ſpoils; In his return he took the ſtrong Town of Broba by force, and burned it down, ſo that it lay deſolate for fourteen years after; The Emperor in his flight made ſuch haſt, that though himſelf paſſed over a Bridge, yet Piſo, a Florentine, that had brought fifteen thouſand Horſe out of Hungary to theſe Wars, adventuring to paſs the River upon the Ice, the Ice breaking by reaſon of the number and weight of the Horſe-men, moſt of them were there drowned, at which time and place periſhed a great part of the Hungarian Nobility.

Ziſca loſeth his eye.

Ziſca overcomes the Emperor.

Gods judgment on the Papiſts.

Ziſca having obtained this Victory, would not ſuffer any Images, or Idols to continue in the Churches, neither would he ſuffer the Prieſts to wear Copes, and veſtments.

Zeal.

After this Ziſca marched with a great Army into Auſtria, where the Husband-men drave, and carried a great number of their Cattel into an Iſland in the River Danubius, but leaving, for haſt, ſome Calves, and Swine behind them, Ziſca cauſed his Soldiers to drive them to the Rivers ſide, where they made them roar, and bleat, which the Cattel in the Iſland hearing, ſwam over to them, by which ſtratagem Ziſca got a great booty, and ſo returned home.

A ſtratagem.

Then did the Emperor deliver to the Marqueſs of Miſnia, the Bridge, and Town of Aſca upon the River Albis, to plant a ſtrong Garriſon in it; Thither Ziſca went, and beſieged it; whereupon the Marqueſs raiſed a great Army out of Saxony, Thuringia, Miſnia, and both the Alſatia's to relieve the beſieged: Ziſca fought a great battel with them, the Victory remaining doubtful for a great while, but it pleaſed God at laſt, to make the Proteſtants Conquerors, in which battel Ziſca ſlew many Noble-men, and nine thouſand of the common Soldiers, and thereupon Aſca was ſurrendred to him, which he utterly razed.

A great Victory.

At laſt there aroſe ſome diſſention between them of Prague and Ziſca; whereupon they raiſed a great Army againſt him, and he knowing himſelf to be too weak to withſtand them, retreated into certain mountains, but when his enemies purſued him into a narrow Plain, he knowing that they could not ſpread out their Army in that place, commanded his Standard to ſtand ſtill, exhorting, and encouraging his men to give them Battel, which accordingly they did; The battel was very fierce, and cruel on both ſides, yet at laſt Ziſca had the upper hand, and ſlew three thouſand of them, putting the reſt to flight, and ſtraight he took the City of Cuthna by force, which they of Prague had Garriſoned, and burnt it down, and ſo with all ſpeed he marched with his Army to beſiege Prague; But his Soldiers being not pleaſed with it, began to murmur, ſaying, that it was not reaſonable that the Regal City ſhould be ſuppreſſed, eſpecially not diſſenting from them in opinion; that the Emperor would make great advantage of theſe their diviſions, &c.

Contention.

A Victory.

Theſe ſpeeches coming to Ziſca's ears, he called together his Army, and ſpake thus unto them. Brethren, blame not me that have ſought your health, and ſafety; the Victories that you have obtained under my conduct are yet freſh in memory, neither have I at any time brought you to a place from which you have not gone Conquerors: you are become famous, and rich, and I for your ſakes have loſt my ſight, and dwell in darkneſs: I have got nothing to my ſelf but a vain name; For you have I fought, and vanquiſhed, &c. I do not perſecute them of Prague for mine own cauſe: Its your blood that they thirſt after, it would avail them little to deſtroy me, an old, and blind man; its your valor, and courage which they fear; either you, or they muſt periſh; Civil ſedition is dangerous, let us ſubdue Prague, and baniſh the ſeditious Citizens before the Emperor hear of it, and then when but few of his faction are left, we may fear him the leſs; But becauſe you ſhall accuſe me no more, I give you free liberty to do what you will. If you will let them of Prague alone, I will not be againſt it, ſo there be no treaſon wrought; If you determine of War, I am alſo ready; Look which part you incline to, Ziſca will be your aid and helper.

Ziſca's ſpeech to his Army.

Upon this ſpeech, the Soldiers minds were changed, ſo that ſpeedily betaking themſelves to their Arms, they ran to the City walls, to provoke their enemies to fight: Ziſca in the mean time provided all things ready for the aſſault: But it pleaſed God to ſtir up one of the City Miniſters, called Johannes de Rochezana, famous for his life, and learning, by the conſent of the Citizens to go out to Ziſca, and he dealt ſo effectually betwixt them, that he reconciled them each to other, and ſo put an end to that diſcord.

Peace made.

The Emperor conſidering the wonderful ſucceſs that God gave to Ziſca in all his undertakings, and that the whole State of Bohemia did depend upon him alone, he ſent to him, promiſing him the Government of the whole Kingdom, and making many other large promiſes if he would come to him, &c. This Ziſca aſſenting to began his journey towards the Emperor, but it pleaſed God by the way that he fell ſick at the Caſtle of Priſcovia, where he alſo dyed, 1424.

His Death.

Æneas Silvius (afterwards Pope) complains, that to the great diſhonor of the Imperial Majeſty, and diſgrace to the Catholick Religion, Sigiſmund, born of an Emperor, and himſelf an Emperor, whoſe name was ſo famous, and who was ſo much feared in Italy, France, and Germany, yea amongſt the very Turks themſelves, ſhould thus baſely, and unworthily truck with an old blind man, by promiſing him Gold, Government, and what not, if he would but ſubmit unto him.

In the time of his ſickneſs, his attendance demanded of him, where he would be buried. He commanded them to pull the skin from his dead Corps, and to make a Drum of it, which they ſhould uſe in their battels; affirming, that as ſoon as their enemies ſhould hear but the ſound of that Drum, they would not abide, but preſently fly away; He was buried honorably at Caſlavia by his Thaborites; But Anno Chriſti 1623. the Popiſh Army under the Emperor Ferdinand, two hundred years after wanting one, coming into the Church, and ſeeing the Epitaph upon his Tomb-ſtone, they brake it in pieces, and digging up the duſt of his Grave, they carried it out, and ſcattered it abroad in the wind, raging againſt him ſo long after his death, whom they could never overcome in his life.

Popiſh malice.

In the life time of King Wenceſlaus, he had a purpoſe to diſarm the Citizens of Prague for ſome offence that he took againſt them, which Ziſca hearing of, called together the Citizens, bidding them Arm themſelves and follow him; which they doing, he went preſently with them to the King in his Caſtle, who being aſtoniſhed at their ſo ſudden coming in that manner. Ziſca ſaid to him, Sir, where are thoſe enemies which Policy.

your

your Majeſty fears; for theſe your faithful Subjects, and Citizens of Prague are reſolved to ſpend their blood in the defence of their King; whereupon the King diſmiſſed them, and the Citizens kept their Arms, and were freed from their fears.

Collected out of the Book of Martyrs, and out of a Book called Hiſtoria perſecutionum Eccleſ. Bohemicæ; and out of another Book called Lachrymæ Bohemicæ, written by Samuel Martin.

I. P. MIRANDVLA

The Life of John Picus Earl of Mirandula, who dyed, Anno Chriſti, 1494.

Ohn Picus was born Anno Chriſti, 1463. of an ancient and Honorable Family in Italy, that derived their pedigree from Conſtantine the Great: A little before his Mother was delivered of him, there appeared in her Bed-Chamber a round flame of fire hanging (as it were) on the wall for a little while, and then vaniſhed away, concerning which there were many conjectures. His Birth.

When he had paſſed over his child-hood, under the care and tuition of his Mother, he was placed under able and learned School-Maſters, where he applyed himſelf with ſo much ardour, and diligence to his Book, that in a ſhort time, he became a very good Orator and Poet. He was of a very quick apprehenſion, rich phanſie, excellent invention, and ſound memory, inſomuch as having heard ſundry verſes once read over, after a little meditation, he was able to repeat them forwards and backwards, to the great admiration of all that heard him. His Education. A ſtrong memory.

When he was fourteen years old, his Mother, deſiring to fit him (being her youngeſt Son) for the entrance into Popiſh Orders, as the beſt way to preferment, ſhe ſent him to Bononia to ſtudy the civil Law. When he had ſpent two years in that ſtudy, and had made a very good progreſs therein, perceiving that it depended moſt upon precidents, and traditions he grew weary of it, yet as young as he was, in that ſpace, he made an excellent Epitome of the Popes Epiſtles and Decretals, which was excellently well approved of by learned men. But being exceeding deſirous to ſearch out the ſecrets of nature, he left theſe beaten paths, and betook himſelf to the ſtudy of Philoſophy, and for his furtherance therein, he travelled to all the Famous Univerſities of Italy and France, acquainting himſelf with the moſt learned men in them; and took ſuch extraordinary pains in his ſtudy, that in a little time he became an exquiſite Philoſopher, and an excellent Divine; and ſo having ſpent ſeven years in theſe Studies, being ambitiouſly deſirous of renown and credit in the World, he went to Rome, where he publickly ſet up nine hundred queſtions of Logick, Mathematicks, Philoſophy, Divinity, &c. not onely out of Latine Authors, but Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, Arabick, as alſo out of the Hebrew Cabala, and the old Philoſophers, Pythagoras, Trimegiſtus, Orpheus, &c. Beſides ſome of Natural Magick.

His travels.

Ambition.

Amongſt his Divinity queſtions theſe were ſome.

That the true body of Chriſt is in Heaven locally: on the Altar only Sacramentally.

That the ſame body cannot be at one time in divers places by the power of God.

That neither the Croſs nor any other Image is to be adored in the manner which Thomas Aquinas hath ſet down &c.

He alſo ſet up ſeventy two more queſtions, not formerly diſcuſſed by any Authors, but found out by himſelf, in Philoſophy, and Metaphyſicks, and withal he promiſed to bear the charges of ſuch learned men as ſhould come out of other Countries to diſpute with him upon thoſe queſtions.

But this his doing, procuring him much envy, was the cauſe that his Antagoniſts would never ſuffer him to come to a publick diſputation upon them: yet privately many ſcanned them over very curiouſly, and complained that divers of them were contrary to the true Faith: But he not enduring the leaſt diſgrace, in twenty dayes ſpace publiſhed a learned Apology, wherein he juſtified his queſtions, as being nothing at all contrary to the Catholick Faith: Concluding with that of St. Auguſtine: Errare poſſum, Hæreticus eſſe non poſſum, quando alterum ſit hominis proprium, alterum perverſæ, & obſtinatæ voluntatis: I may err, but I will not be an Heretick, the firſt being proper to man, but the other a property of an obſtinate, and perverſe will.

Envy.

His Character.

He was of an excellent beauty, tall of ſtature, of a comly countenance, lively eyes, and his hair of a yellowiſh colour, of a noble ſtock, and great riches, inſomuch that many Ladies, and Gentlewomen fell in love with him whileſt he was at Rome, and ſo inveagled him, being of a tractable, and courteous diſpoſition, that he began to give over himſelf in this his heat of youth, to unlawful pleaſures with them: But it pleaſed God, by the malice of his adverſaries, and the troubles which he met with by their means, to awaken him from his ſenſual delights, and to ſtir him up to ſhake off, and avoid all theſe provocations, and incentives to wickedneſs, and to choole celeſtial, inſtead of fleſhly pleaſures: and laying aſide his hunting after vain glory, and popular applauſe, to dedicate, and devote himſelf to the glory of God, and the good of his Church; reſolving for the time to come, ſo to carry himſelf, through Gods aſſiſtance, that his adverſaries ſhould have nothing to object againſt him.

Converſion.

His fame being ſpread abroad, many great Schollers repaired to him, ſome to diſpute with him, and to try whether his learning was anſwerable to the the report that went of it, others to learn, and be inſtructed of him: And whereas he had written ſome love verſes in his youth, he burnt them all, and ſome other unprofitable writings: Then did he addict himſelf ſeriouſly to the ſtudy of the Scriptures, and being twenty eight years old, he wrote a learned Tractate of the ſix firſt dayes work of God, and another of the Sabbath, for the publick benefit of the Church. He was wonderfully affected with the Elegancy of the Scriptures, in their Originals, eſpecially of Paul's Epiſtles, which he preferred before all humane Eloquence whatſoever; profeſſing, that the writings of Tully, Demoſthenes, &c. were not to be compared with them. Scriptures ſtudied.

Then he wrote his Book De ente & uno, ſtuffed with abundance of learning: He wrote much alſo for interpreting the old Teſtament, and reconciling ſeeming differences: He juſtified the tranſlation of Hierom againſt the calumnies of the Jews: He alſo defended the Septuagint Tranſlation, principally in reference to the Pſalms: He wrote alſo about the true computation of Times: He wrote much in defence of the Catholick Faith, againſt Mahumetans, Jews, and other oppoſers of it: many other excellent works he had begun, but being cut off by an immature death, he left them unfiniſhed: and his writing was ſo bad, that few could collect his ſence by it.

He read over whole Libraries both of Latine and Greek Authors with admirable celerity, and yet culled out the moſt uſeful things as he went through them. He was ſo verſed in the ancient Fathers, as if he had made them his only ſtudy all his life long: He was ſo well acquainted with Modern Writers, that if any difficulty was propoſed to him out of them, he could preſently reſolve it, as if he had been of their Counſel in writing. He was an acute and excellent Diſputant, which he much delighted in: He always preferred thoſe diſputations which were privately undertaken, with an humble and peaceable mind, to find out the truth, rather then to get the Victory; But could not endure ſuch publick diſputations as were undertaken to ſhew learning, or to win applauſe from the common people, profeſſing that they did very much hurt. He had a very great Library of Ancient and Modern Writers, of all ſorts and Languages. He was of ſuch an indefatigable Spirit, that he was never a weary of his ſtudy. Induſtry. Humility.

Three years before his death, he retired himſelf from the pleaſures, profits and honors of the World, and that he might live a more private life, he made over almoſt all his eſtate in the Earldoms of Mirandula and Concordia, to his Brothers Son: a great part of his Money, Plate and Jewels he diſtributed amongſt the poor. He kept a frugal Table, which he well contented himſelf with: He was conſtant in his daily prayers unto God: He relieved the poor every day: He gave much money to poor Maids, for preferring them in marriage: He imployed an intimate friend to enquire out the wants and neceſſities of poor Houſe-keepers, whom he bountifully relieved: He kept under his body by faſting, &c. He was of a cheerful countenance, and of ſo compoſed a mind, that he was ſcarce ever ſeen angry: He was very humble, being ſo far from ſeeking and affecting great honors, and offices, that he could not be perſwaded to accept of them: His uſual diſcourſe amongſt his friends was, of the vanity and uncertainty of all Earthly things, and of the ſtability of Heavenly things, and therefore he would often call upon them to love the Lord above all, &c. Charity. Prayer. Humility.

He did ſo little regard theſe outward things, that he was often blamed by his friends for too much neglect of them: He was always moſt cordially affected to his friends, whom he choſe for the ſimilitude of manners and learning, rather then for other outward reſpects of kindred, &c. Angelus Policianus, and Marcilius Ficinus were two of his moſt intimate friends: But falling into a violent Feavour, which contemned all means of cure, in thir- Love to his friends.

thirteen dayes ſpace he quietly departed, Anno Chriſti, 1494. and of his Age 32.

He was wondrous deſirous of Reformation of thoſe many things which were amiſs in the Church: whereupon not long before his death he thus wrote to the Emperor Maximilian.

I beſeech you by all the faith, and Piety that I can, that you will fulfil that your moſt holy purpoſe as ſoon as may be of reſtoring the Chriſtan Common-wealth unto her former liberty. It is ſhaken by forraign enemies: But it is torne in pieces by Domeſtick adverſaries: and that flock which was conſecrated by the pretious blood of Jeſus Chriſt hath ſuffered, and her ſufferings daily increaſe from Wolves that walk about in Sheeps cloathing. Go to the (moſt gracious Ceſar) and ſhew you are a faithful Miniſter by ſtirring up Chriſtian Kings to joyn with you in freeing the Sheep of Chriſt, who is King of all Kings, both from their outward enemies, and unfaithful Shepherds.

In St. Maries Church in Florence belonging to the Jacobin Friers, on the North wall, is the Tomb of Picus Mirandula, with this Epitaph ingraven on it.

Johannes jacet hic Mirandula: cætera norunt
Et Tagus, & Ganges, forſan & Antipodes.

Collected out of his life, Written by his Nephew, whom he brought up and made his Heir, and out of Boiſardus his Bibliotheca.

The

T. CROMWELL

The Life of Thomas Cromwel Earl of Eſſex, who Dyed, Anno Chriſti 1541.

THomas Cromwel was born at Putney in Surrey; his Father was a Smith, and therefore could beſtow no great coſt in his education, ſo that his poverty was a great hinderance at firſt to his vertue; yet ſuch was the activity, and forward ripeneſs of nature in him: his wit ſo pregnant: His judgment ſo ſound: His tongue ſo eloquent: His ſervice ſo faithful: His ſtomack ſo couragious, and his Pen ſo active, that he could not be long concealed, nor hindred from favour, and friends to imploy him: Nothing was ſo difficult which his wit and induſtry would not compaſs; He had alſo a very firm memory in retaining whatſoever he had once gotten, inſomuch as in a journey to, and from Rome, he learned the whole New Teſtament tranſlated by Eraſmus without book. His Birth. Scriptures ſtudied.

As he grew towards ripeneſs of years, he had a great mind to travel into forraign Countries to ſee the World, and learn experience; and ſo paſſing over the Sea, he went into France, from thence into Italy, at laſt he came back to Antwerp, where he was entertained by the Engliſh Merchants to be their Secretary.

It hapned about the ſame time, that the Inhabitants of Boſton in Lincolnſhire, were minded to ſend to Rome for the renewing of their two Pardons, which, though it would coſt them great expenſes, yet they found ſuch gain by that Roman Merchandiſe, that they choſe one Jeffery Chambers, and another, whom they furniſhed with Writings, and good ſtore of money, and ſo ſent them to Rome to diſpatch that buſineſs: By the way when they came to Antwerp, Chambers ſuſpecting his own weakneſs for ſo weighty a work, conferred, and prevailed with Thomas Cromwel to aſſiſt him therein: Cromwel, though he knew the difficulty of the enterpriſe, and what it was to have to deal with ſuch greedy Cormorants, as the Pope, and his Cardinals were, yet having ſome skill in the Italian tongue, and as yet being ungrounded in the true Religion, he conſented to go along with them.

The ſenſuality of the Pope.

Coming to Rome, he gat Information, that the Popes holy Tooth greatly delighted in new fangled diſhes, and ſtrange delicates, whereupon he prepared certain fine diſhes of jelly, made after the beſt Engliſh faſhion, but never before ſeen at Rome: And taking his time, with his two Companions, when the Pope was newly come from Hunting, and gone into his Pavilion, they brought their Engliſh Preſents in with a three mans Song (as it was then called.) The Pope marvelling at the ſtrangeneſs of the Song, and underſtanding that they were Engliſh men, and came not empty handed, he willed them to be called in: Cromwel doing his obeyſance, offered him his jolly-junkets, telling him, that they were ſuch as none but Kings, and Princes in England uſed to feed upon: Deſiring him to accept of the Preſent, which he, and his Companions, that were poor ſuitors to his Holineſs, had preſented as novelties for his recreation, &c. The Pope ſeeing the ſtrangeneſs of the Diſhes, bad one of his Cardinals to taſt of it, who liked it ſo well, that he commended it to the Pope: The Pope alſo was ſo well pleaſed with it, that he asked them what their ſuits were, and commanded them to teach his Cook the making of that meat, he incontinently confirmed both their Pardons according to their requeſts.

All this while Cromwel had no ſound taſt of Religion, and himſelf would often after tell Doctor Cranmer what a Ruffian he was in his young days: How he was in the Wars with the Duke of Burbon in the ſiege of Rome: As alſo how he aſſiſted Chambers in publiſhing, and ſetting forth the Pardon of Boſton every where in Churches as he went; and ſo he continued, till at laſt, learning the New Teſtament by heart, it pleaſed God to begin to touch and affect his heart with the knowledge, and ſavor of the Truth: In the mean time, Cardinal Woolſey began to rule all under the King, or rather with the King in England; ſo that men of the beſt wits, and ableſt parts, ſought to get into his ſervice: amongſt whom Thomas Cromwel alſo gat preferment under him, and having faithfully ſerved him divers years, the Cardinal at laſt preferred him to be his Solicitor: About which time Woolſey was building his ſtately Colledge in Oxford [now Chriſt-Church] for the furtherance whereof, he pulled down ſome ſmall Monaſteries, and Priories in divers parts of the Realm, the charge whereof he commited to Cromwel, wherein he was ſo induſtrious, that he gat him much hatred amongſt many ſuperſtitious perſons, and alſo with ſome of the Nobility that were about the King.

The means of his Converſion.

He is hated by the Papiſts

Shortly after the Cardinal grew into diſgrace with the King, and fel into a Premunire: So that his Houſhold being diſſolved, Thomas Cromwel amongſt others, ſought to get into the Kings Service: And Sir Chriſtopher Hales, Maſter of the Rolls (though a great Papiſt) yet liked Cromwel ſo well, that he commended him to the King, as a man moſt fit for his purpoſe, having then to do againſt the Pope. But the King having had former complaint made to him againſt Cromwel, for his homely dealing with the Monaſteries, Images, Altars, &c. he deteſted his very name, and ſome that ſtood by alſo, with railing, and reviling words, ſought more to inflame the Kings hatred againſt him: But there being preſent at the ſame time, the Lord Ruſſel, Earl of Bedford, with a vehement boldneſs he ſtood forth, and took upon him the defence of Cromwel, uttering much in his commendation before the King; and withal, told him, that when himſelf was at Bononia, about the Kings affairs, he was in extream peril of his life, had not Cromwel by his ſingular device and policy freed him from the ſame: Adding, that foraſmuch as his Majeſty had now Gods providence.

to

to do with the Pope, there was in all England none ſo fit for the Kings purpoſe, which could ſay or do more in that matter then he.

The King hearing this, was content to ſee, and ſpeak with him, and to hear what he could ſay: Cromwel having private notice that he ſhould be ſent for to the King, provided himſelf before hand, and gat in a readineſs the Copy of the biſhops oath, which they uſed to make to the Pope at their conſecration, and ſo being called for, he was brought to the King in his Garden at weſtminſter, Anno Chriſti 1530. Where the King propounded ſundry queſtions to him, he anſwered him very ſatisfactorily, and withal, ſhewed him how his Princely authority was abuſed within his own Realm by the Pope, and his Clergy, who being ſworn to him, were afterwards diſpenſed with, and ſworn anew unto the Pope, ſo that he was but an half King, &c. He is ſent for to the King.

He alſo ſhewed himſelf how he might accumulate to himſelf whatſoever the Clergy in England was worth, if he pleaſed to take the occaſion now offered unto him: The King giving good ear to this, and liking his advice, asked him, if he would ſtand by what he had told him: Yea ſaid he, I can avouch it to be certain, and there withall he ſhewed the Biſhops oath unto the King: This was ſo pleaſing to the King that preſently he admitted him into his ſervice, and taking his Ring off his finger, he ſent him therewith into the Convocation Houſe amongſt the Biſhops: Cromwel coming boldly into the Houſe, placed himſelf amongſt the Biſhops, where he made an Oration, and declared unto them the authority of a King, and the Office of ſubjects, eſpecially of Biſhops and Churchmen under the publick Laws, which Laws (ſaith he) you have all tranſgreſſed, and highly offended by derogating from the Kings Royal eſtate, whereby you have faln under a Premunire, by conſenting to the power Legantine of the Cardinal, as alſo by being ſworn to the Pope, contrary to your fealty to the King, to whom therefore you have forfeited all your Goods, Chattels, Lands, Poſſeſſions, and whatſoever Livings you have. Admitted into the Kings ſervice.

The Biſhops hearing this, were much amazed, beginning to excuſe, and deny the fact: But Cromwel ſhewing to them the very Copy of the oath which they gave to the Pope at their Conſecration, they could deny the matter no longer, but fell to intreaty: And after a ſhort debate amongſt themſelves were content to give one hundred one thouſand eight hundred eighty four li. to free them from the Premunire. Proves the Clergy to be in a Premunire.

After this Cromwel growing into favour with the King, he firſt Knighted him: Then made him Maſter of his Jewel-Houſe: Then one of the privy Councel: Then Maſter of the Rolls: Then Knight of the Garter: And laſtly, Earl of Eſſex: Great Chamberlain of England, and the Kings Vicegerent to repreſent his own perſon: Which Office is ſeldom conferred upon any ſuject in England, and was never better diſcharged then by this Lord. His preferments.

Neither did his honors make him grow proud, or remiſs in his duty, but he was rather quickened thereby to work more abundantly for the good, both of Church and State: and above all his other vertues, he is chiefly to be commended for his ſingular zeal, and laborious travel beſtowed for the reſtoring of the truth, and demoliſhing the Synagogues of Antichriſt, the Abbies, and Religious Houſes: For it pleaſed Almighty God to make him an inſtrument to perſwade the King to ſuppreſs, firſt the Chauntries, then the ſmaller Monaſteries, and at length all the Abbies in England, both great and leſs: And though the buildings might have been converted to Schools, and Houſes of learning: The goods, and poſſeſſions might have been beſtowed to much better, and more Godly uſe, viz. to the relief of the poor, and to many publick uſes of Piety, and charity: yet herein the ſecret judgment of God is to be admired, and adored, in that thoſe Houſes that were ſo full of all manner of abominations (as appeared to the Kings Induſtry. Zeal. Abbies demoliſhed.

Gods juſt judgment on Monaſteries.

Commiſſioners upon examination, and remains upon Record) ſo horrible to be heard, ſo incredible to be believed, ſo ſtinking before the face of God and man, that no marvel it is, if Gods vengeance from Heaven, ſo highly provoked thereby, would not ſuffer any monument of theſe Houſes to be unplucked up: The Doctrines, Laws, and Traditions alſo of ſuch as inhabited them, was rebellion againſt Chriſt, derogatory to his Glory, pernicious to mans ſalvation, full of much blaſphemy, and damnable Idolatry: So that of both, we may ſay with Matthew Paris: Cujus fætor uſque ad nubes fumum teterrimum exhalabat. i. e. whoſe filthy ſtink did breath a moſt peſtiferous fume even to the clouds of Heaven, and with Sodoms ſins, cried loud for vengeance, &c.

His zeal for the Truth.

The Biſhop of Romes power being thus aboliſhed out of England, there were yet divers Papiſh Biſhops, his creatures, which privily watched all opportunities to reſtore it again: But Cromwel (as a mighty wall, and defence of the Church) reſiſted it continually, and by that means fruſtrated all their expectations, and endeavors: About this time ſome tumults began to ariſe about Religion: Whereupon the King Summoned, and Aſſembled moſt of his Biſhops, and Learned men to meet, and treat ſoberly, and modeſtly about moſt of the controverſal points: To this Convocation, Cromwel went, and accidentally by the way, he met with Alexander Aleſius, a Scotch-man, whom he took along with him: And having taken his place as the Kings Vicegerent, at the upper end of the Table, he made an Oration to them, wherein in the Kings name he thanked them for their ready, and cheerful meeting together, told them that the King deſired that they ſhould debate about the preſent controverſies of Religion, for that he would ſuffer no alteration but by the advice, and conſent of them, and his Parliament: Therefore (ſaith he) he deſires you for Chriſts ſake, that all malice, obſtinacy, and carnal reſpects being ſet apart, you will friendly and lovingly diſpute amongſt your ſelves of the controverſies moved in the Church, and that you will conclude all things by the Word of God: Neither will his Majeſty ſuffer the Scriptures to be wreſted by any falſe Gloſſes, Papiſtical Laws, or by any authority of Doctors, or Councils, much leſs will he admit any Articles, or Doctrine not contained in the Scripture, but only founded upon continuance of time, and old Cuſtoms, or by unwritten verities, as ye were wont to do, &c. The only way to unity is to determine all things by the Rule of Gods Word, as himſelf requireth, &c.

Tumults about Religion.

Anno 1537.

A Convocation.

Scriptures to be the ſupream Judg.

In this Convocation many points were debated, wherein Aleſius, being a Godly and learned man, did the Church good ſervice, and ſo through Cromwels induſtry, though Religion could not be wholly reformed, yet the Reformation of it was well begun at that time through all England. And this good Lord was always very ſtudious how to advance the Cauſe of Chriſt: His whole life was nothing elſe but a continual care and travel to further the true knowledge of the Goſpel, and to reform the Houſe of God: He cauſed all the people through the Kingdom to be inſtructed in the Lords Prayer, and Creed in Engliſh: Then he procured the Scriptures to be tranſlated, and publiſhed for every Engliſh man to underſtand: Then he reſcued the vulgar ſort from damnable Idolatry, cauſing many of their groſſeſt Pilgrimages to be deſtroyed: He procured, that divers idle Holy-dayes ſhould be aboliſhed: That Liberty ſhould be given to eat Eggs, and white-meats in Lent: By him it was provided, that for the better inſtruction of the people, Beneficed men ſhould be reſident on their Cures to teach, and keep Hoſpitality. Infinite almoſt were the private benefits which he did in helping poor Godly men, and women out of trouble, and great diſtreſſes: Yea, his whole life was full of ſuch examples, being a man ordained of God to do good to many, eſpecially to deliver ſuch as were in danger of perſecution for Religion ſake. Some examples are ſet down by Maſter Fox in his Book of Martyrs, Vol. 2. Pag. 507. &c.

His zeal.

Scriptures tranſlated.

Mercy to the perſecuted.

Uſually.

Uſually men advanced from mean and baſe degree, to high and ample dignities, grow proud and inſolent, forgetting what they were, and from whence they came, and ſo caſt off their old friends that were formerly beneficial unto them; but it was far otherways with this courteous and Chriſtian Earl, as may appear by theſe examples: On a time he was riding in his Coach with Arch-Biſhop Cranmer through Cheapſide, where ſpying a poor Woman of Hounſloe, to whom he was indebted for certain old reckonings, to the value of forty ſhillings, he cauſed her to be called unto him, where queſtioning with her what was her name, and where ſhe lived; withal he asked her whether he was not ſomewhat indebted unto her, ſhe ſaid yea, but ſhe durſt never call upon him for it, though now ſhe ſtood in great need of it: He therefore preſently ſent her to his Houſe with one of his men, and when he came from the Court, he did not onely diſcharge his debt, but gave her an yearly Penſion of four pound, and a Livery every year ſo long as ſhe lived after. Humility: Rare examples of it.

Another Example was this: At what time Thomas Cromwel went with the French Army into Italy, the Army being overthrown, he fell into much want, and being in the City of Florence, he met a rich Merchant, called Francis Freſcobald, and asked of him an Alms for Gods ſake; The Merchant under his tottered attire, ſeeing an ingenuous countenance, moved with pitty, demanded of what Country he was, &c. To whom he anſwered, I am Sir of England, my name is Thomas Cromwel, my Father was a ſheerer of cloth, and I, ſtraying from mine own Country, came with the French Army into Italy, by whoſe overthrow I am faln into this want: The Merchant conſidering the ſtate of the young man, and loving the Engliſh Nation, amongſt whom he had formerly lived, and from whom he had received many courteſies, took him into his Houſe, entertained him kindly, and when he was deſirous to return into his own Country, he gave him an Horſe, a new ſute of apparel, and other neceſſaries, and ſixteen Ducats of Gold to bear the charges of his journey. An excellent example of gratitude.

It ſo fell out after, that at what time the Lord Cromwel was ſo highly in favour with his Prince, and advanced to ſo many dignities, that this Francis Freſcobald, was by many great loſſes that befel him in his Marchandizing, become very poor, yet remembring that in England ſome Merchants owed him fifteen thouſand Ducats, he purpoſed, if he could get that money, to content himſelf to live upon it, and to give over trading, and for this end he came into England; and it fell out that whilſt he was here, endeavouring to get in his debts, he met with the Lord Cromwel, whom yet he had forgotten, as alſo the kindneſs which he had ſhewed him: The Lord Cromwel, as he was riding to the Court, eſpied him in the ſtreet, and eying him well, he remembred him, and alighting from his Horſe (to the admiration of his followers) he went, and in a moſt kind manner embraced him, and ſcarcely refraining from tears, he asked him whether he was not Francis Freſcobald the Florentine: Yea Sir, ſaid he, and your humble Servant: My Servant (quoth Cromwel) no, as you have not formerly been my Servant, ſo will I not now account you other then my ſpecial Friend, aſſuring you, that I have cauſe to be ſorry, that you, knowing what I am (or at leaſt ſhould be) would not make known your arrival to me, that I might have paid part of that debt that I confeſs I owe you: But being now upon urgent affairs for my Prince, I muſt intreat you to excuſe my leaving of you, deſiring you with the faithful mind of a Friend, that you come this day to my Houſe to Dinner, and ſo remounting, he went to the Court.

Francis wondering with himſelf, who this Lord ſhould be, at laſt, called to mind, that it was the ſame man, whom he had formerly relieved at Florence, for which he was wondrous joyful, hoping that by his Authority he ſhould the ſooner recover his debts. About Dinner time he repaired to the Lord Cromwels Houſe, and there walking in the Court, he attended his coming: The Lord ſhortly returning, he no ſooner diſmounted, but he again embraced this Gentleman with ſo friendly a countenance, that the Lord Admiral and the other Lords that were with him, marvelled at it, which he perceiving, turned towards them, and holding Freſcobald by the hand, he ſaid, My Lords, marvel not that I am ſo glad to ſee this man, for by his means I have attained to this preſent dignity, and that you may not be ignorant of his courteſie to me, I will relate it to you, and ſo he told them every thing in order, as is before recited: and ſo, ſtill holding him by the hand, he had him into his Dining-Room, and placed him next to himſelf at the Table.

When Dinnner was ended, and the Lords departed, he would needs know of him what occaſion had brought him to London: Francis related his great loſſes to him, and told him that all that remained was this money that he came to ſue for: Cromwel having comforted him againſt his afflictions, and told him that he ſympathized with him in the ſame, ſaid further, you ſhall receive in this your diſtreſs ſome conſolation for your old courteſies that you ſhewed me in times paſt, and I further profeſs in the word of a true friend, that during this life, and ſtate of mine, I will never be wanting to do for you, wherein my authority may prevail to ſupply your lack and neceſſity: and ſo taking him by the hand, he led him into his Chamber, and commanding all to depart, he opened a Cheſt, and firſt gave him ſixteen Ducats which he had given him in money, then ten Ducats that he diſburſed on his apparel, and ten other that he paid for his Horſe: and further, ſaid he, for the intereſt of your money, take theſe four bags, in each of which is four hundred Ducats, theſe you ſhall receive from the hand of your aſſured Friend.

Freſcobald, though brought to a low ebb, yet expreſſing the vertue of a modeſt mind, would have refuſed the kindneſs offered, but that the other enforced him againſt his will to receive it. Then he cauſed him to give him a note of the names of his debtors, which he gave to one of his Servants, charging him diligently to inquire out the men, and to require them to make payment of thoſe debts within fifteen days, or to abide the hazard of his diſpleaſure: The Servant ſo carefully performed his Lords command, that in a ſhort time he procured Freſcobald all his debts, who willingly forgave the intereſt: and all this while he lodged in the Lord Cromwels Houſe, who gave him noble entertainment, and proffered, that if he would continue in England, and make his bank here, he would lend him ſix thouſand Ducats for four years gratis: But Freſcobald, deſirous to return into his own Country and to live a private life, with many thanks for his extraordinary favours, he took his leave, and went to Florence, where he dyed the year following.

Another example of gratitude.

Alſo at another time, being with other Lords at the Monaſtery of Sheen, examining ſome Monks that denied the Kings Supremacy, as he ſate at Dinner, he ſpied afar off a certain poor man, that uſed to ſweep their Cells and Cloiſters, and to Ring the Bell, &c. whom when the Lord Cromwel had well noted, he called him to him, and before all the Table, took him by the hand, asked him kindly how he did, and turning to the Lords, ſaid: My Lords, See you this poor man, this mans Father was a great friend to me in my neceſſity, and hath given me many a meals meat. Then ſaid he to the poor man, Come unto me, and I will ſo provide for thee, that thou ſhalt not lack whileſt I live.

Thus this Worthy and Noble Lord excelled in divers eminent vertues, eſpecially in a flouriſhing authority, excellent wiſdom, and fervent zeal to Chriſt, and his Goſpel: His great care was to preſerve, and nouriſh peace abroad in forreign Realms. In all neighbouring Princes Courts he kept ſpe-

cial

cial intelligence, that nothing was there done, or intended, whereof he had not notice: nor was any ſpark of miſchief kindled againſt our King, or Kingdom, which he by Wit, and Policy did not quench, and keep down: and if Policy prevailed not, he would purchaſe peace by money, ſo that during the time of his advancement, the King never had War with any forreign Nation, though many great Princes were much incenſed againſt him: He imployed his authority no leſs alſo in keeping all things in good order at home: Hampering the Popiſh Prelates, and diſappointing their ſubtile deviſes: as alſo in bridling other unruly perſons, forcing them to ſubjection by the Laws: He was a ſuccour, and refuge to all Godly perſons: a terror to evil doers, ſo that the very report that Cromwel was coming, quieted many fraies, and much evil rule: A company of Ruffians appointing to fight in Pater Noſter row, and having blocked up the ends of the ſtreet with Cars, that none ſhould interrupt them, Cromwel hearing of it, in the heat of the fight came down Pannier Alley towards them, but ſo ſoon as the report of Cromwels coming was heard, the Cars could not keep them in, but they ran away, and ſo the fray was ended,

A great preſerver of peace.

He was a terror to the wicked.

Alſo there was a Ruffianly ſerving man, who to put himſelf into the gallanter Garb, as he conceived, nouriſhed his hair till it hung down upon his ſhoulders: on a time the Lord Cromwel met this fellow as he walked in the ſtreets, who ſeeing his diſguiſed habit, which he judged might be of bad example unto others, he called him to him, and enquired whoſe man he was, and with all, asked him whether his Maſter, or any of his fellows wore their hair ſo long as he, or no? he anſwered no, but to excuſe himſelf, he pleaded that he had made a vow not to cut his hair for ſuch a time: to whom the Lord Cromwel anſwered, that ſince he had made himſelf a Votary, he would not force him to break his vow, but yet he would lay him in Priſon till the time was expired, and ſo preſently ſent him to the Marſhal-ſey, where he lay till his Maſter, having perſwaded him to cut his hair, petitioned for his releaſe, and ſo being brought before the Lord Cromwel with his ſhort hair, he diſmiſſed him: Alſo a Frier wearing his Coul after the diſſolution of Monaſteries, Cromwel meeting him in Pauls Church-yard, ſaid to him, will not this Coul of yours be left off yet? If I do not hear by one a Clock that this apparel of thine is changed, thou ſhalt be hanged immediately for example to all others, and ſo he durſt never wear his Coul after.

Long hair puniſhed.

Innumerable were the benefits which this worthy Lord did, by his prudent Policy, grave authority, and Godly zeal for the good both of the Church, and State: what good orders he eſtabliſhed, what wickedneſs he ſuppreſſed, what corruptions he reformed, what abuſes he diſcovered, what crafty juglings, and ſuperſtitious deluſions he detected, and aboliſhed out of the Church: as the Roode of Grace, wherein a man ſtood incloſed with an hundred wyers, wherewith he made the Image roll his eyes, nod his head, hang the lip, move and ſhake his jaws, according as the value of the gift offered, pleaſed, or diſpleaſed the Prieſt: if it were a ſmall piece of Silver, he would hang the lip, if it were a good piece of Gold, his chaps ſhould go merrily, &c. But Cromwel diſcovering this forgery, cauſed the Image, with all his engines to be openly ſhewed at Pauls Croſs, and there to be torn in pieces by the people.

Idolatrous juglings detected, and deſtroyed.

Alſo the Blood of Hales he cauſed to be brought to the ſame place, where it was proved to be the blood of a Duck: He alſo proved the Holy maid of Kent to be a notorious whore: Alſo the Roode of Chefter, of Thomas Becket, our Lady of Walſingam, with many more curſed monuments of Idolatry, this good man, ſtirred up by the providence of God, removed out of the peoples way, that they might walk more ſafely in the ſervice of Almighty God.

Bonner an hypocrite

About this time Edmond Bonner was a Lutheran, and a great Profeſſor of the Goſpel, whom therefore the Lord Cromwel much favoured, and procured for him the Biſhoprick of Hereford: Afterwards he obtained of the King that he ſhould be ſent over as Ambaſſador into France, by whom he ſent a letter which he procured of our King to the King of France, wherein he deſired him to licenſe a ſubject of his to Print a large Bible in Engliſh at Paris, becauſe Paper was eaſilier to be had there then in England; As alſo becauſe they had more ſtore of good Workmen to diſpatch the ſame. Bonner much beſtirred himſelf in this buſineſs, and outwardly ſhewed great friendſhip to the Merchants that had undertaken this work, entertaining them often at his Table, and ſo rejoyced in the Printing of thoſe Bibles, that himſelf would oft overſee the Preſs: yea, he was ſo zealous, that he cauſed them to Print a New Teſtament in Engliſh, and Latine, and himſelf took off many of them, and gave them to his friends: Then did the Lord Cromwel procure his advancement to the Biſhoprick of London, and Bonner took the oath of Supremacy before thoſe Engliſh men that Printed the Bible, and before Maſter Coverdale, who was the over-ſeer of the Preſs; to whom alſo he promiſed, that when the Bible was Printed, he would have at leaſt ſix of them to be ſet up in ſeveral places in Pauls Church.

The Bible Printed.

Afterwards, by the procurement of Cromwel, the Bible of Tindals tranſlation was Printed at London, one of which he preſented to King Henry, and obtained that the ſame might be freely read of all his Subjects: But the ſetting forth hereof did exceedingly incenſe the Popiſh Biſhops, eſpecially becauſe of the Prologues to the Books, and a large table in the end of it, wherein were ſet down Texts about the Lords Supper, and to prove the lawfulneſs of Miniſters marriage, and againſt the Maſs: But whilſt Cromwel was thus labouring for the publick good, and endeavouring to deliver the poor Saints out of their troubles, the malice of theſe Popiſh Biſhops encreaſed ſo againſt him, that they continually laboured by falſe traines, and crafty ſurmiſes to caſt him out of the Kings favour.

Popiſh malice.

About this time, there was one John Lambert, a Godly, and learned Miniſter, called in queſtion for his Religion, the King himſelf ſat amongſt the Biſhops, whilſt he was examined, and after a long diſputation betwixt the Biſhops, and him, in the cloſe of the day, the King ſaid to him: what ſaiſt thou now after all this pains that hath been taken with thee? wilt thou live or dye? Thou haſt yet free choiſe: To whom Lambert anſwered, I wholly ſubmit my ſelf to the will of your Majeſty: The King replied, if you ſubmit your ſelf to me, you muſt dye, for I will be no patron to Hereticks; and ſo (by the ſecret, and crafty counſel of Stephen Gardiner) turning himſelf to the Lord Cromwel, he ſaid, Cromwel, read the Sentence of Condemnation againſt him; which through humane frailty, and being ſurpriſed on the ſudden, he did read.

Humane infirmity.

But when the day came wherein Lambert was to be burned, Cromwel ſent for him into his Houſe, and taking him into his ſecret Chamber, he asked him forgiveneſs for that which he had done.

Repentance.

The ſubtile malicious Prelates ceaſed not, all this while, by themſelves, and their agents about the King, to calumniate, and traduce this good Lord, inſomuch that a Parliament being ſummoned, Anno 1541. Cromwel being in the Councel-Chamber, was ſuddenly apprehended, and committed Priſoner to the Tower, which was much lamented by all good men, who prayed heartily for him: But the Popiſh party much rejoyced, eſpecially the Clergy, whom he could not abide for their Popery, and masked Hypocriſie: Shortly after he was attainted by Parliament: The crimes which they laid to his Charge were theſe: Firſt he was accuſed of Hereſie, and for a ſupporter of ſuch perſons, as Barns, Clark, and many others, whom by his Authority, and Grievous crimes laid to his charge.

Letters

Letters written to the Sheriffs, and Juſtices in divers Shires, he had reſcued out of the hands of their adverſaries, and diſcharged out of Priſon: Then, that he had diſperſed amongſt the Kings Subjects many Books, containing much Hereſie in them: Thirdly that he had cauſed to be tranſlated into Engliſh many Books, comprizing matters againſt the Sacrament of the Altar, and that he had commended it as good and Chriſtian Doctrine; Fourthly they pretended that about two years before, he had ſpoken ſome words againſt the King, but the witneſſes to prove this did not agree amongſt themſelves. But the truth was, the King was a weary of his Queen, the Lady Anne Bullen, a vertuous and Religious woman, to whom he had been married but a few months, and caſt his wanton affections upon the Lady Katherine Howard, which Cromwel laboured to diſſwade him from, and therefore he muſt be taken out of the way. This Storm Cromwel did foreſee at leaſt two years before, conſidering the variable affections of the King, and the ſubtle malice of Stephen Gardiner, and his aſſociates; and thereupon he called together his Servants, and ſhewed them in what a ſlippery ſtate he ſtood, and therefore required them to look diligently to their order and doings, leaſt through their default any occaſion might ariſe againſt him: alſo he took ſuch order for them, that moſt of them, eſpecially his Gentlemen that were younger Brethren, which had little but his ſervice to take to, he well provided for, by leaving money in the hands of their friends for them: and having twelve boys that were his Muſitians, he gave them twenty pound apeece, and ſo returned them to their Friends: and as his great proſperity had not puffed him up with pride, ſo neither was he at all dejected in his adverſity, but bore it with admirable conſtancy, and Chriſtian fortitude, and patience.

False witneſſes.

His prudent circumſpection.

Charity.

Chriſtian Courage.

Some Commiſſioners coming to examine him whileſt he was in the Tower, he carried himſelf ſo gravely, and patiently, and anſwered them ſo diſcreetly, that they could put no Interogatories to him, either concerning Eccleſiaſtical, or Civil affairs, wherein he was not exceeding ripe, and well furniſhed with an anſwer. Amongſt the Commiſſioners, there was one whom the Lord Cromwel deſired to carry from him a Letter to the King, which he refuſed; ſaying, that he would carry no letter to the King from a Traytor: then he deſired him at leaſt to carry a Meſſage from him to the King, which requeſt he aſſented to, provided that it were not againſt his Allegiance; the Lord Cromwel taking witneſs of the other Lords what he had promiſed, You ſhall (ſaid he) commend me to the King, and tell him; By that time he hath ſo well tried and proved you, as I have done, he ſhall find you as falſe a man as ever came about him. His enemies durſt not bring him to his Anſwer, nor try him by his Peers, but procured an Act of Attaindure, whereby he was condemned before he was heard: yet the King not long after his death repented this haſt, wiſhing that he had his Cromwel alive again: When he came upon the Scaffold on Tower-Hill, he ſpake thus unto the People.

I am come hither to die, and not to purge my ſelf, as ſome perhaps may expect that I ſhould, and will: For if I ſhould ſo do, I were a very wretch: I am by the Law condemn'd to die, and I thank my Lord God that hath appointed me this death for mine offence, for I have always lived a ſinner, and offended my Lord God, for which I ask him hearty forgiveneſs. Its not unknown to many of you, that I was a great Traveller, and being but of mean Parentage, was called to high eſtate, and now I have offended my Prince, for which I heartily ask him forgiveneſs, beſeeching you to pray with me to Almighty God, that he will forgive me, &c.

His confeſſion.

And once again I deſire you to pray for me, that ſo long as life remaineth in this fleſh, I may waver nothing in my Faith: Then kneeling down on his knees he ſpake theſe words: O Lord Jeſus, which art the only health of all men living

He begs Prayers.

His Prayer at his death.

and the everlasting life of them which die in thee: I wretched sinner do submit my self wholly to thy blessed will, and being sure that that thing cannot perish which is committed to thy mercy; willingly now I leave this frail, and wicked flesh, in sure hope that thou wilt in better wise restore it unto me again at the last day, in the resurrection of the just: I beseech thee most merciful Lord Jesus Christ, that thou wilt by thy grace make strong my soul against all temptations, and defend me with the Buckler of thy mercy against all the assaults of the Devil. I see, and know that there is in my self no hope of Salvation, but all my confidence, hope, and trust is in thy most merciful goodness; I have no merits, nor good works that I may alledge before thee: Of sins, and evil works (alas) I see a great heap, but yet through thy mercy I trust to be in the number of them to whom thou wilt not impute their sins, but wilt take, and accept me for righteous and just, and make me an Inheritor of thine everlasting Kingdom. Thou merciful Lord wast born for my sake, didst suffer hunger and thirst for my sake, didst teach, pray, and fast for my sake: all thy holy actions and works thou wroughtest for my sake: thou sufferedst most grievous pains, and torments for my sake: Finally, thou gavest thy most precious blood to be shed upon the Cross for my sake: Now most merciful Saviour, let all these things profit me, that thou hast freely done for me, which hast also given thy self for me: Let thy blood cleanse and wash away the spots and foulness of my sins: let thy righteousness hide and cover my unrighteousness: let the merits of thy passion and blood-shedding be satisfactory for my sins: Give me Lord thy grace, that my Faith waver not, but be firm, and constant to the end: That my hope in thy mercy, and life everlasting may not decay; That love wax not cold in me: Finally, that the weakness of my flesh be not overcome with the fear of death: Grant O most merciful Father, that when death shall shut up the eyes of my body, yet the eyes of my soul may still behold and look upon thee, and when death hath taken away the use of my tongue, yet my heart may cry, and say unto thee, Lord into thy hands I commend my soul, Lord Jesus receive my soul, Amen. Having ended his Prayer, he made a Godly exhortation to those that were about him on the Scaffold, and so quietly commended his Spirit into the hands of God, Anno Christi 1541.

Upon his Monument was this engraven, Cromwel, surnamed the Great, whom Woolsey first raised from the Forge to eminent good Fortunes: Whom Henry the eighth used as his Instrument to suppress the Popes Supremacy, and to dissolve Religious structures: Whom he advanced to the highest pitch of Honor and Authority: Whom he cast down suddenly, and bereft both of Life, and Dignities, lyes here interred.

This Cromwel, this Pillar of the State was born in Putney, a Village in Surrey, by the Thames side, four Miles distant from London. He was Son to a Black-Smith, but in his latter dayes a Brewer. Whose Mother, after his Fathers decease, was married to a Shere-man.

He was a man of an active, and forward ripeness of Nature, ready and pregnant of Wit, discreet, and well advised in Judgment, Eloquent of tongue; Faithful and diligent in Service; of an incomparable Memory; of a reaching Politick Head; of a Noble, and undaunted Spirit. Whose good parts, being perceived by Cardinal Woolsey, he took him straight into his Service, made him his Solliciter, and imploy'd him in matters of greatest importance: After whose fall, he was presently advanced to the Kings service, wherein he so industriously, and wisely demeaned himself, as that he was thought worthy by the said King, to have the ordering of all his weighty affairs. Whereupon, at several times, he heaped these several Offices and honours upon him. He made him Master of his Jewel-house: Baron Cromwel of Okeham: Principal Secretary: Master of the Rolls: Chancellor of the Exchequer: Keeper of the Privy Seal: Justice of the Forests, and Chases from the River of Trent North-Northward: Great Chamberlain of England: Earl of Eſſex: Knight of the Garter: Vice-Gerent, or his Vicar General.

Thus Fortune raiſed him in a ſhort time for a ſudden fall. For upon the eighteenth day of April, Anno 1540. he was inveſted with the Honor of the Earldom of Eſſex, and High Chamberlain-ſhip of England: Upon which day alſo the King made his Son Gregory, Lord Cromwel. Upon the ninth of July next, and immediately following (being envied of many for his Honor, and Authority, and hated for his Religion) he was ſuddenly arreſted in the Council Chamber, and committed to the Tower: Upon the nineteenth of the ſaid Month he was attainted by Parliament of Hereſie and high Treaſon. And upon the eight and twentieth of the ſaid Month, he was Beheaded on the Tower-Hill.

Many lamented this great mans fall, but the Popiſh Party much rejoyced, eſpecially they of the Clergy, for that he was an enemy to Popery, and could never endure the ſnuffing Pride of the Prelates. Thankful he was and liberal, never forgetting former benefits. Careful he was of his Servants for whom he had provided competent livelyhoods, notwithſtanding the ſuddenneſs of his fall: And always faithful and forward he was to do his Friends good.

Services done by this Lord Cromwel to King Henry the eighth, within a few years after his firſt coming into favour with the ſaid King, Copied out of the Original remaining in the Treaſury of the Exchequer.

Inprimis: The King purchaſed Hampton Court. And the manner of Moye.

Item: The King purchaſed St. James's in the Fields, and all the Ground whereof the New Park in Weſtminſter is made.

Item: He hath purchaſed all the old Tenements in Weſtminſter, where now is builded the new Garden, the Tennis Court, and Cock-Pit.

Item: He purchaſed the Manor of Piſon of the Lord Scroop. And the Manor of Weſton Baldock.

Item: He purchaſed the Manor and Park of Copped-Hall. And Lands to a great value of the Earl of Northumberland.

Item: He purchaſed certain Lands of Thomas Roberts, the Auditor, lying by Waltham.

Item: He purchaſed of the Lady Audley the Manor of Lanamuerie, and Keymes in Wales.

Item: He purchaſed the Manor, and certain other Lands in Cobham, whereof a Park is made, of the Abbot of Chenſey.

Item: He purchaſed the Manor of Alderbrook in the Foreſt of Waltham, of one Monoke.

Item: He hath purchaſed the Manor of Edmonton in the County of Middleſex. And repaired the Tower of London, to his great charge.

Item: He hath newly made the Ships, called the Mary Roſe, the Peter, the Pomgranate, the Lion, the Katherine Gally, the Bark, the Minion, and the Sneep-ſtake.

Item: He hath purchaſed the Manor of Cogshal, and Eſtorford, of Mr. Southwell.

Item: He hath purchaſed the Woods by Portſmouth in Hampſhire, ſufficient for the new making of Henry-gracea Dieu, and the great Gally.

Item: He hath bought, and made within the Tower Bowes for a thouſand men.

Item: With a great and chargeable Train he paſſed the Seas in his own Perſon to Calice, and Bullein.

Item: He hath New-built Hampton-Court. As alſo the place at Weſtminſter, with all the Tennis-Courts, Cock-pit, and walled in the Park.

Item: He hath new built St. James's in the Fields, a magnificent and goodly Houſe.

Item: He hath purchaſed the Manors of Dunmington, Evelme, Hook-Norton, and others of the Duke of Suffolk.

Item: He hath made a great deal of new Braſs Ordnance here in England: and much other in the Town of Calice.

Item: He hath newly built a great part of the Walls of Calice.

Item: He hath moſt coſtly Wars in Scotland: And others in Ireland.

Item: He hath been at a moſt coſtly charge for the Coronation of Queen Anne.

Item: He hath maintained the great, and ſumptuous Houſe of the Lady Katherine, Dowager. And many other good ſervices he did for his King which were but ill requited.

This great man gave great relief to the Poor. Two hundred poor People were ſerved at his Gates twice every day, with Bread, Meat, and Drink ſufficient.

He had above two hundred and twenty men in check Roll. He gave Liveries garded with Velvet to his Gentlemen, and garded with the ſame Cloth to his Yeomen.

His Martyrdom. Popiſh lies.

Saunders, that Engliſh Runnagate, that never ſpeaks well of any Godly man, or zealous profeſſor, or of the truth, will have him to die for the breach of a Law made by himſelf, viz. That one appeached of Treaſon, ſhould not come into the Kings preſence till he had proved himſelf not guilty: but this is but a Popiſh lye, for neither did he ever prefer ſuch an Act, neither was any ſuch thing charged upon him in his Attaindure.

Collected out of the Book of Martyrs, and Speeds Chronicle.

The

J. GRAY

The Life of the Lady Jane Grey, who Died, Anno Chriſti, 1554.

DUring the languiſhing ſickneſs of King Edward the Sixth; the Duke of Northumberland, who bore all the ſway at Court, married his fourth Son, the Lord Guilford Dudley, to the Lady Jane Grey, eldeſt Daughter to the Duke of Suffolk, her Mother, the Lady Frances, was Daughter to Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, and Mary, younger Siſter to King Henry the Eighth; This Duke ſtudying how to advance his Family, came to the weak King, and inculcated to him in what danger the ſtate of the Church would be, if he choſe not ſuch a pious ſucceſſor, as would maintain the now eſtabliſhed Religion: He told him, that it was well known how the Lady Mary ſtood affected: Indeed of the Lady Elizabeth there were better hopes, but their cauſes were ſo ſtrongly connexed, that they muſt either be both excluded, or the Lady Mary admitted: That it was the part of a Religious and good Prince, to ſet apart all reſpects of blood, where Gods Glory, and the Subjects weal might be endangered, and that doing otherwiſe, they were in danger of eternal death: That the Duke of Suffolk had three Daughters near of blood to him, that they were ſuch as their vertues, and birth did commend, and from whom the violation of Religion, or the danger of a Forraign Yoak by any match, was not to be feared, foraſmuch as their education had been Religious, and they had (as it were) with their Milk, ſucked in the ſpiritual food of true Religion and Doctrine, and were alſo matched to Husbands as zealous for the truth as themſelves: He deſired therefore that the Crown might be left to the eldeſt of them, the Lady Jane, with this proviſo, that ſhe ſhould maintain the now eſtabliſhed Religion, her ſelf and her Husband being ſworn thereunto: Theſe reaſons ſo prevailed with this ſick Godly King, that by his laſt Will, he excluded both his Siſters, and left the Crown to the Lady Jane.

Northumberlands policy.

This Will was read in the preſence of the Conſel, and all the Judges of the Realm, who were required to ſubſcribe unto it, and by the power of the Duke of Northumberland, moſt of them were either perſwaded, or overawed to do it: only Arch-Biſhop Cranmer would by no means conſent thereunto, and withal, he went to the King to know of him the reaſon why he diſinherited his Siſters: The King told him how he was adviſed to it for the ſafety of Religion, and that the Lawyers had told him, that he might lawfully do it; and therefore entreated him, as he tendered the peace and propagation of the Goſpel, that he would conſent to it: So after much debate, and many perſwaſions, the facile Arch-Biſhop was at laſt drawn to ſubſcribe it. There was alſo one Judge Hales, an upright man, and lover of the Goſpel, that would not by any perſwaſions be drawn to ſubſcribe unto it.

The Counſel, and Judges corrupt.

Humane frailty.

A juſt Judge.

Humility.

Preſently after, the good King died, and the Lords perſwaded the Lady Jane to take the Crown upon her, but ſhe with many tears intreated her Father in Law, and the reſt of them, not to lay ſuch an unwelcome burthen upon her; yet by their Arguments and importunity, they at laſt drew an unwilling conſent from her, and thereupon proclaimed her Queen.

Between King Edward and this young Lady there was little difference in years, but in learning and knowledge of the tongues, ſhe was far his Superior, being trained up under a Godly and learned man, Mr. Elmar, and her ſelf being of a moſt fine, and rare wit; but this worthy Lady having perſonated a Queen but ten days, the Lords of the Counſel hearing that many flocked to the Lady Mary, and that ſhe was coming towards London, they preſently in Cheapſide, Proclaim her Queen.

Her learning admirable.

Queen Mary proclaimed.

The Duke of Suffolk being at this time in the Tower with his Daughter; the Lords ſeized on the Tower, and commanded the Duke to render himſelf Priſoner, who ſubmitting to them, went ſtraight to his Daughters Chamber, forbidding her the farther uſe of any Royal Ceremonies, and wiſhing her to be content to return to her former private ſtate; whereunto with a ſetled countenance, ſhe anſwered; Sir, I better brook this Meſſage then my former advancement to Royalty: Out of obedience to you, and my Mother, I have grievouſly ſinned, and offered violence to my ſelf: Now I do willing, and as obeying the motions of my Soul, relinquiſh the Crown, and endeavour to ſalve thoſe faults committed by others; if at leaſt ſo great a fault can be ſalved, by a willing relinquiſhment, and ingenuous acknowledgment.

Queen Jane Willingly leaves the Crown.

So ſoon as Queen Mary came to London, ſhe cauſed the Lady Jane to be committed to ſafe cuſtody in the Tower, and not long after, at Guild-Hall, ſhe was arraigned and condemned for Treaſon, together with her Husband and returned to the Tower again Priſoner. Some few days after, ſhe was ſet upon by one Fecknam a Prieſt, with whom ſhe held a Godly and learned diſputation about many points of Religion, and when he ſaw that he could not prevail with her, to alter her opinion, he took his leave, ſaying, I am ſorry, for I perceive that we two ſhall never meet: To whom ſhe replyed, True it is, we ſhall never meet, except God turn your heart: For I am ſure except you repent and turn to God, you are in an evil caſe; and I pray God in the bowels of his mercy to ſend you his Holy Spirit; for he hath given you a great gift of utterance, if it pleaſe him alſo to open the eyes of your heart: Her Father being Priſoner at the ſame time in the Tower, ſhe wrote this Letter to him.

She is impriſoned and condemned.

Chriſtian courage and charity.

Her Letter to her Father.

Father, Although it pleaſeth God to haſten my death by you, by whom my life ſhould rather have been lengthened: yet can I ſo patiently take it, as I yield God more hearty thanks for ſhortening my woful days, then if all the World had been given into my poſſeſſion, with life lengthened to my will: and albeit I am well aſſured of your impatient dolors, redoubled many ways, both in bewailing your own woe, and also (as I hear) especially my unfortunate state; Yet, my dear Father (if I may without offence rejoyce in my mishaps) me thinks in this I may account my self blessed, that washing my hands with the innocency of my fact, my guiltless blood may cry before the Lord, mercy to the innocent: and yet, though I must needs acknowledge, that being constrained and (as you well know) continually assaied, in taking the Crown upon me, I seemed to consent, and therein grievously offended the Queen and her Laws; yet do I assuredly trust that this my offence towards God is so much the less, in that, being in so Royal an estate as I was, my enforced honor never mixed with my innocent heart: and thus good Father, I have opened my state to you: whose death at hand, although to you perhaps it may seem right woful, to me there is nothing that can be more welcome, then from this vale of misery, to aspire to that heavenly throne of all joys, and pleasure, with Christ our Saviour: In whose stedfast faith (if it be lawful for the daughter to write so to her Father) the Lord that hitherto hath strengthened you, so continue you, that at last we may meet in Heaven, with the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, &c.

your

Death desired.

In the Raign of King Edward the sixth, There was one Master Harding, Chaplain to her Father, and a zealous Preacher, and professor of the Gospel, who in the beginning of Queen Maries Raign, turned Papist, swiming down the stream with the Time, which coming to the ears of the Lady Iane in Prison, her righteous soul was so grieved, that she wrote this Letter to him.

Her Letter to Master Harding.

So oft as I call to mind that dreadful and fearful saying of Christ, That he that putteth his hand to the Plough, and looks back, is not meet for the Kingdom of Heaven; and on the contrary, those comfortable words which he speaketh to those that forsake all, and follow him; I cannot but marvel at thee, and lament thy case who seemedst sometimes to be a lively member of Christ, but now the deformed Imp of the Devil: Sometimes the beautiful Temple of God, but now the stinking, and filthy kenel of Satan: Sometimes the unspotted Spouse of Christ, but now the shameless Paramour of Antichrist: Sometimes my faithful Brother, but now a stranger, and an Apostate: Sometimes a stout Christian Soldier, but now a cowardly runaway: Yea, when I consider these things, I cannot but cry out, and say to thee,, thou seed of Satan, whom the Devil hath deceived, the world hath beguiled, and the desire of life subverted, and made thee of a Christian, an Infidel: Wherefore hast thou taken the Law of the Lord into thy mouth? wherefore hast thou preached the will of God unto others? wherefore hast thou instructed others to be strong in Christ, when thou thy self dost now so shamefully shrink away, and so horribly dishonour God? Thou preachest not to steal, and yet most abominably thou stealest, not from men, but God, committing most hainous sacriledge, robbing Christ, of thy body and Soul, chusing rather to live with shame, then to die, and gloriously to raign with Christ, who is life in death unto his? why dost thou shew thy self most weak, when thou shouldst be most strong? The strength of a Fort is unknown before an assault, but thou yieldest up thy hold before any battery be made against it: And so she goes on to discover the danger of his present condition, the terrible threatnings out of the Word of God against backsliders, and Gods severe judgments executed upon them: And lastly, she sweetly sets before his eyes Gods mercies, His gracious promises, many examples of his readiness to forgive, and embrace true penitents, and so concludes with this pathetical exhortation: Let, I pray you, the lively remembrance of the last day be always before your eyes, remembring that Runagates and Fugitives from Christ, shall be cast out at that day, who setting more by the world then by Heaven, more by their life then by him that gave them their life, did shrink, and fall from him that forsook not them: And on the contrary, the inestimable joys prepared for them, that fearing no peril, nor dreading death, have manfully fought against, and victoriously triumphed over all the powers of darkness, hell, death and damnation through their

The danger of Apostasie.

most redoubted Captain Christ Jesus, who now stretcheth out his arms to receive you, is ready to fall upon your neck, and kiss you, and last of all, to feast you with the dainties, and delicates of his own most precious blood, which undoubtedly if it might stand with his own determinate purpose, he would be ready to shed again, rather then you should be lost: To whom with the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be all Honour, &c.

Be constant, be constant, fear not for any pain,
Christ hath redeemed thee, and Heaven is thy gain.

Her token and letter to her Sister.

The night before she suffered, she sent her Sister, the Lady Katherine, her Greek Testament, in the end whereof she wrote thus: I have here sent you (good Sister Katherine) a Book, which although it be not outwardly Printed with Gold, yet inwardly it is more worth then precious stones. It is the Book (Dear Sister) of the Law of the Lord. It is his Testament, and last will which he bequeathed unto us wretches, which shall lead you to the path of eternal joy; and if you with a good mind read it, and with an earnest heart purpose to follow it, it shall bring you to an immortal and everlasting life; It shall teach you to live, and learn you to die: It shall win you more then you should have gained by the possession of your woful Fathers Lands, which if God had prospered you, you should have inherited: So that if you apply diligently this Book, seeking to direct your life after, you shall be an inheritor of such riches, as neither the covetous shall withdraw from you, neither thief shall steal, nor the moth shall corrupt: Desire with David (Good Sister) to understand the Law of the Lord God, live still to die, that by death you may purchase eternal life: And trust not that the tenderness of your age shall lengthen your life, for as soon (if God call) goeth the young as the old, labour therefore always to learn to die: Defie the World, deny the Devil, and despise the Flesh, and delight your self only in the Lord: Be penitent for your sins, and yet despair not: Be strong in Faith, and yet presume not, and desire with Paul to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, with whom, even in death there is life: Be like the good Servant, and even at midnight be waking, lest when death comes, and steals upon you like a thief at midnight, you be with the evil Servant found sleeping, and least for lack of oyl you be found like the five foolish Virgins, and like him that had not on the Wedding Garment, and so you be shut out from the Marriage: Rejoyce in Christ, as I do: Follow the steps of your Master Christ, and take up his Cross, lay your sins on his back, and always embrace him: And as touching my death, rejoyce, as I do (good sister) that I shall be delivered of this corruption, and put on incorruption: For I am assured that I shall, for losing of a mortal life, win an immortal life, the which I pray God to grant you, and send you of his grace to live in his fear, and to die in the true Faith of Christ, from the which (in the name of God) I exhort you, that you never swerve, neither for hope of life, nor for fear of death: For if you deny his Truth to lengthen your life, God will deny you, and withal shorten your dayes: and if you cleave unto him, he will prolong your days to his glory, and your comfort: To the which glory, God bring me now, and you hereafter, when it shall please him to call you. Fare you well (good Sister) and put your only trust in God, who only must help you.

Prayer.

During this her imprisonment, she made sundry Divine, and heavenly Prayers; which she uttered with much affection, Faith, and Fervency: The morning before she suffered, her Husband the Lord Guilford Dudley, was carried out to the Scaffold on Tower Hill, where, with prayers, in a most penitent manner, he ended his life, whose body all bloody laid in a Cart, together with the head wrapped in a cloth, was brought to the Chappel within the Tower, even in the sight of this sorrowful Lady, a spectacle more deadly then was the Axe of her death: And now her own part was next to be acted: The Stage of her Tragedy was raised upon the Green within the

Her Husband beheaded.

Tower

Tower, upon which ſhe mounted with a chearful countenance, and looking upon the people, with great conſtancy, ſhe ſpake thus unto them: Good people, I am come hither to die, and by a Law I am condemned to the ſame: My offence againſt the Queens Highneſs was only in conſenting to the deviſe of others, which now is deemed Treaſon, yet it was never of my ſeeking, but by counſel of thoſe who ſhould ſeem to have further underſtanding of things then I, which knew little of the Law, and much leſs of titles to the Crown: But touching the procurement, or deſire thereof by me, or on my behalf, I do here waſh my hands in innocency before God, and the face of you all this day: And therewith ſhe wrung her hands, wherein ſhe had her book: Then ſhe ſaid further: I pray you all good Chriſtian people to bear me witneſs that I die a true Chriſtian woman, and that I do look to be ſaved by no other means, but only by the mercy of God in the blood of his only Son Jeſus Chriſt: And I confeſs, that when I did know the word of God, I neglected the ſame, loved my ſelf and the world, and therefore this plague and puniſhment is juſtly befaln me for my ſins: And yet I thank God of his goodneſs, that he hath thus been pleaſed to give me a time and reſpite to repent in: And now good people, while I am alive, I pray you aſſiſt me with your Prayers. Her ſpeech on the Scaffold.

Then ſhe kneeled down, and ſaid in Engliſh the one and fifty Pſalm in a moſt devout manner throughout unto the end: Then ſtanding up ſhe gave her Gloves, and Handkerchief to her Maid, and her Book to Maſter Bruges the Lieutenant of the Tower; after which ſhe untied her Gown, and the Hangman preſſing upon her to help her off with it, ſhe deſired him to let her alone, and turning to her two Gentlewomen, they helped her off with it, and her other attires, giving her a fair Handkerchief to knit about her eyes: Then the Hangman kneeled down asking her forgiveneſs: Unto whom ſhe ſaid: The Lord forgive thee, and I do; and I pray thee diſpatch me quickly: He willed her to ſtand upon the ſtraw, which doing, ſhe ſaw the Block: And ſo kneeling down, ſhe ſaid, Will you take it off before I lay it down: The Hang-man anſwered, No Madam: Then tied the the Handkerchief about her eyes, and feeling for the Block, ſhe ſaid, What ſhall I do? Where is it? Where is it? One of the ſtanders by guiding her thereunto, ſhe laid her head down upon the Block, and ſtretching forth her body, ſhe ſaid; Lord into thy hands I commend my Spirit; which was ſcarcely uttered before ſhe received the fatal ſtroke with the Axe: And thus ſhe ended her life Anno Chriſti, 1554. and of her Age 16. Her death.

Her death was lamented of all, but not ſuffered to go altogether unpuniſhed by God: For Judge Morgan, that paſſed the ſentence of condemnation upon her, ſhortly after fell mad, and in his raving fits, cryed out continually, Take away the Lady Jane from me, and in that horror ended his wretched life. Gods judgment on the unjuſt Judg.

She was a moſt chaſt, innocent, and vertuous Lady, of high Birth, yet were not her Parents any wit indulgent to her in her Childhood, but rather more ſevere then needed to ſo ſweet a temper: For what need Iron Inſtruments to bow wax: But as the ſharpeſt Winters (correcting the rankneſs of the earth) cauſe the more healthful, and fruitful Summers: So the harſhneſs of her breeding, compacted her ſoul to the greater patience and piety, whereby ſhe proved the Mirror of her Age. Her Character.

On a time, Maſter Roger Aſcham coming to wait upon her at Broadgates in Leiceſterſhire, he found her in her Chamber, reading Phædon Platonis in Greek, with much delight, whilſt her Father, with the Dutches, and all the Houſhold were Hunting in the Park: He asked her how ſhe could looſe ſuch Paſtime? Who ſmiling, anſwered, I wiſs, all the ſport in the Park is but a ſhadow of that pleaſure which I find in this Book: Adding further, that it was one of the greateſt bleſſings that God ever gave her, in ſending her ſharp Parents, and a gentle School-Maſter, which made her take delight in nothing ſo much as in her Studies. Studious.

During her impriſonment in the Tower, ſhe made miſery it ſelf amiable, by her pious and patient behaviour: Adverſity, her nightclothes, becoming her as well as her day dreſſings, by reaſon of her gracious deportment: Some ſaid that ſhe was with Child when ſhe was beheaded; If ſo, the greater was the cruelty, to cut down the Tree with bloſſoms on it, and that that which ſaveth the lives of other women ſhould haſten her death.

On a time this Lady Jane, when ſhe was very young, was at New-Hall in Eſſex, the Lady Maries Houſe, where being intreated by the Lady Anne Wharton to walk abroad with her, as they paſſed by the Chappel, the Lady Wharton made a low courteſie to the Popiſh Sacrament hanging over the High Altar, which when the Lady Jane ſaw, ſhe marvelled at it, and asked her why ſhe did it, and whether the Lady Mary was there, or no? She ſaid, no, but I make courteſie to him that made us all: Why (quoth the Lady Jane) how can he be there that made us all, when as the Baker made him: Which ſpeech of hers coming to the Lady Maries ears, ſhe never loved her after, which well appeared by the ſequel: Maſter Fox concludes his Story of her with theſe Verſes.

Malice.

Tu, quibus iſta legis incertum eſt, Lector, ocellis:
Ipſe quidem ſiccis ſcribere non potui:
What eyes thou read'ſt with, Reader, know I not,
Mine were not dry when I this ſtory wrot:

She had a fine vein in Poetry: In her troubles ſhe made theſe Verſes.

Non aliena putes homini quæ obtingere poſſunt:
Sors hodierna mihi, cras erit illa tibi:
Think nothing ſtrange which man cannot decline:
My Lot's to day, to morrow may be thine:

Deo juvante nil nocet livor malus:
Et non juvante, nil juvat labor gravis.
Poſt tenebras, ſpero lucem:
If God protect me, malice cannot end me:
If not, all I can do will not defend me:
After dark night,
I hope for light:

This Epitaph was alſo made of her:
Regia ſtirps, triſti cinxi diademate crines:
Regna ſed omnipotens hinc meliora dedit.
My race was Royal, ſad was my ſhort raign:
Now in a better Kingdom I remain.

Collected out of the Book of Martyrs, Speeds Chronicle, Stows Annals, Fullers Holy State, and Hollands Heroologia Anglica.

The

S^r. P. SYDNEY

The Life of Sir Philip Sidney, who Died, Anno Chriſti, 1586.

THE high, and renowned Family of the Sidneys derive their race from William de Sidney, Chamberlain to King Henry the ſecond: Out of which came Sir Henry Sidney, that renowned Lord Deputy of Ireland, who, of the Daughter of John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, and Earl of Warwick, begat two Sons, Philip and Robert, which later King James created Baron Sidney of Penſhert, Vicount Liſle, and Earl of Leiceſter: and to give more luſtre to theſe aforeſaid Honours, he was elected Knight, and Companion of the Honourable Order of the Garter, at an extraordinary Chapter holden at Greenwich, in the year 1616: And enſtalled at Windſor the ſeventh of July next following.

The elder Brother was this Sir Philip Sidney, whoſe Life now follows. Philip Sidney, was Son and Heir to Sir Henry Sidney, Lord Deputy of Ireland, Preſident of Wales, and Knight of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter: A Perſon of Great parts, and in no mean grace with Queen Elizabeth: His Mother was Daughter to the Duke of Northumberland, and Siſter to the Earls of Warwick and Leiceſter, ſo that his deſcent was apparantly Noble of both ſides. His Parentage.

In his very Childhood there appeared in him ſuch excellent parts, and endowments of nature, that his Father conceiving great hopes of him, was very careful of his education, ſo that having ſoon drunk in the principles of learning at home, he was ſent to the Univerſity of Oxford, where he profited exceedingly in the knowledge of the Arts, ſo that after an incredible proficiency in all the ſpecies of learning, he left the Academical life, for that of the Court, unto which he came by the invitation, and inſtigation of his Uncle, the Earl of Leiceſter, who was at that time a great Favorite of the Queens. His Education.

Fame had before hand blazed abroad his noble accomplishments: He was of a comely presence, and framed by a natural propension to Arms, so that he soon attracted the good opinion of all men, and was so highly prized in the good opinion of the Queen, that she thought the Court wanted a great Ornament, when he was absent from it. Whilest he was at Court, at his spare hours, he composed that incomparable Book for phancy, and language, called his Arcadia.

Beloved of the Queen.

When he was but one and twenty years old, the Queen thought him so fit for the greatest imployments, that she sent him upon an Embassy to the Emperor of Germany at Vienna, which he discharged to his own honor, and her good content; yea, his Fame was so renowned through Christendom, that he was in election for the Kingdom of Poland, but our Queen refused to further his advancement, not out of emulation, but out of fear to loose the Jewel of her times: He married the Daughter, and sole Heir of Sir Francis Walsingam, then Secretary of State, a Lady destinated to the bed of Honor, who after his death was married to the Earl of Essex, and after his death to the Earl of St. Albans.

In election to the Kingdom of Poland.

During his aboad at Court, he became of intimate acquaintance with Sir Fulk Grevil, afterwards Lord Brook, who thought himself so much honored by his Friendship, that having erected for himself a stately Monument in St. Maries Church in Warwick, He caused to be engraven upon his Tomb: Fulk Grevil, Servant to Queen Elizabeth, Counsellor to King James, and Friend to Sir Philip Sidney.

Friendship.

The States of the Netherlands, having obtained aid of our Queen against the Spaniards, agreed to deliver up to her some cautionary Towns for her security, whereupon she sent over Sir Philip Sidney to be Governor of Flushing, and of the Castle of Ramekins: Afterwards his Unkle the Earl of Leicester was sent over as Deputy-General for the Queen, who was honorably entertained by the States: and not liking to lye still, and do nothing, he made his preparation for the taking in of Zutphen, whereupon the Prince of Parma sought to furnish the place with Victuals, sending with it a Convoy of seven hundred Horse, and two thousand Foot: To intercept these, Leicester sent Sir John Norris, to whose assistance came the Earl of Essex, the Lord Willoughby, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir William Stanley, and Sir William Russel, in all two hundred Horse, and one thousand five hundred Musqueteers and Pikes.

He is made Governor of Flushing.

The day being dark by reason of great foggy mists, the Spaniards whilst their Waggons made forward, staid in a place of advantage near Zutphen, upon whom the English were entred before they were aware, and were entertained with a furious charge of shot, which notwithstanding they abode, and so valiantly followed the skirmish, that they overthrew, put back, slew, and took Prisoners many of them; but herein the day proved doleful, that the worthy Sir Philip Sidney, as he was changing his Horse was shot by a Musquet above the left knee, which so shivered the thigh Bone, that the Bullet could not be got out: Being thus wounded, he was carried to Arnheim in Gelderland.

A fight with the Spaniards.

Sir Philip Sidney wounded.

Whilest he lay thus upon his wound, Mr. Humphrey Fen, a Godly and able Minister, being at this time Chaplain to the Earl of Leicester, went to visit him, who found him carefully fitting and preparing himself for death; wherein he was much holpen by that faithful servant of Jesus Christ: and after Mr. Fen had been a while with him, Sir Philip told him that he had made his Will and that he was now minded to be his own Executor, and so causing a Cabinet to be brought to him, he gave him a good sum of Gold, which he had, formerly bequeathed to him in his Will.

This relation I had from Mr. Fens own mouth.

In this his last sickness, his Arcadia came into his mind, and he considered that in it there were divers light, and amorous passages, which might tend to His Arcadia devoted to the Fire.

the

the corrupting of the incautious Reader: It was not as yet Printed, neither was there any Copy of it, but only one, which for the preſent was in the hands of his intire Friend, Sir Fulk Grevil, and therefore to ſhew his repentance for the vanity of his youth, he ſent to Sir Fulk Grevil, and conjured him by all the obligations of Friendſhip that were betwixt them, that he ſhould preſently burn that Copy, that ſo it might never come abroad into the World; which earneſt requeſt of his dying Friend, Sir Fulk Grevil had intended to have fulfilled, but that the importunity of ſome about him, prevented it.

Sir Philip Sidney lay thus languiſhing upon his wound, for the ſpace of five and twenty days, bearing the pains of it with admirable patience, and Chriſtian fortitude, at the end whereof he quietly reſigned his ſpirit into the hands of his merciful Redeemer, Anno Chriſti, 1586. His Death.

His death was much bewailed both by the Queen and all good men, for the great hopes they had of this worthy Gentleman, in whom were compleat all the vertues, and valour which could be expected in him, his body was brought over into England, where he was honorably interred with his Anceſtors. I have many years ago, ſeen this Epitaph hanging up in Pauls Church of him.

His Epitaphs.

England, Netherland, the Heavens, and the Arts,
The World, and the Soldiers have made ſix parts
Of Noble Sidney, for who can ſuppoſe,
That a ſmall heap of ſtones can Sidney incloſe?

England hath his body, for ſhe it bred:
Netherland hath his blood, in her defence ſhed:
The Heavens have his ſoul: the Arts his fame:
The Soldiers the grief, the World his good name.

I have alſo ſeen this Epitaph on him.

Carmen Apollo dedit, belli Mars contulit Artes:
Sed juveni vitam Mors rapit ante diem.
Apollo made him wiſe,
Mars mad him very ſtout:
Death made him leave the World,
Before his youth was out.

Certain it is (ſaith one) that he was a Noble and matchleſs Gentleman, and it may be juſtly ſaid of him without Hyperboles of fiction, as it was of Cato Uticenſis: That he ſeemed to be born to do that onely which he went about.

He received his Deaths-wound at a Battel near Zutphen in Gelderland the 22th day of September, and dyed at Arnhem the 16th day of October, Anno Chriſti 1586. Whoſe Funerals were performed, and his body interred within the Cathedral Church of St. Pauls in London, the 16th day of February next enſuing.

Theſe Elegies alſo following in the Praiſe of the ſaid Sir Philip, were penned by our late Soveraign Lord King James.

Armipotens cui jus in fortia pectora Mavors,
Tu Dea quæ cerebrum perrumpere digna Tonantis,
Tuque adeo bijugæ proles Latonia Rupis
Gloria, deciduæ cingunt quam collibus artes,
Duc tecum, & querula Sidnæi funera voce Plangite. Nam veſtri fuerat Sidnæus alumnus.
Quid genus, & proavos, & ſpem floremque juventæ,

Immaturo obitu raptum ſine fine retexo?
Heu! fruſtra queror: Heu! rapuit Mors omnia ſecum,
Et nihil ex tanto nunc eſt Heroe ſuperſtes,
Præterquam Decus, & Nomen virtute paratum, Doctaque Sidnæas teſtantia Carmina laudes.

Thus Tranſlated by the ſame King.

Thou mighty Mars, the Lord of Soldiers brave,
And thou Minerve that doſt in wit excel,
And thou Apollo, who does knowledge have
Of every Art that from Parnaſſus fell:
With all your Siſters that thereon do dwell.
Lament for him who duly ſerv'd you all:
Whom in you wiſely all your Arts did mell,
Bewail (I ſay) his unexpected fall.
I need not in remembrance for to call
His race, his youth, the hope had of him aye,
Since that in him doth cruel death appall
Both man-hood, wit, and learning every way:
But yet he doth in Bed of Honor reſt,
And evermore of him ſhall live the beſt.

Ejuſdem Regis in eundem Hexaſticon.

Vidit & exanimem triſtis Cytheræa Philippum, Flevit, & hunc Martem credidit eſſe ſuum.
Eripuit digitis gemmas, colloque monile,
Mars iterum nunquam cen placitura foret;
Mortuus humana qui luſit imagine Divûm:
Quid faceret jam, ſi viveret, ille, rogo?

Thus Engliſhed.

When Venus ſad, ſaw Philip Sidney ſlain,
She wept, ſuppoſing Mars that he had been:
From Fingers, Rings, and from her neck the chain
She pluck't away, as if Mars were again
She meant to pleaſe. In that form he was in Dead: and yet could a Goddeſs thus beguile,
What had he done if he had liv'd this while?

Collected out of Hollands Herωologia Anglica: Fragmenta Regalia: Speeds Chronicle, and Netherland Hiſtory.

The

The Life of Galeacius Caracciolus, Marqueſs of Vico, who dyed, Anno Chriſti, 1592.

Galeacius Caracciolus was born at Naples, Anno Chriſti, 1517. His Fathers name was Calantonius, deſcended of the ancient and Noble Family of the Caraccioli of Capua: His Mother was deſcended of the Noble Family of the Caraffi, whoſe Brother was afterwards Pope Paul the Fourth. His Birth.

His Father was very careful of his Education in his youth, and being well known to, and in favour with the Emperor Charles the Fifth; he requeſted him to entertain this his Son into his ſervice, which the Emperor willingly did, and liking him ſo well, that ſhortly after he made him his Gentleman-ſewer; In which place, and office, he demeaned himſelf ſo well, that he wonn the favour of the Nobility, and reſt of the Court, and grew to be of ſpecial accompt with the Emperor himſelf: and indeed few were to be compared with him for innocency of life, elegancy of manners, ſound Judgment, and knowledge of many things.

His Father alſo, being deſirous to continue his name, and advance his Houſe, provided for him a Wife, a Virgin of Noble Birth, called Victoria, Daughter to the Duke of Nuceria, with whom he had in Portion ſix thouſand five hundred pounds, his Fathers eſtate being worth five thouſand pounds, per annum. By this Wife he had ſix Children [four Sons, and two Daughters] But God intending to advance him to an higher dignity than that to which he was born, was pleaſed in mercy by degrees to reveal himſelf, and his truth to him: The firſt beginning of it was this.

There lived about this time in Naples, a Noble Spaniard, called John Waldeſius, who having got ſome knowledge of the truth of the Goſpel, eſpecially in the Doctrine of Juſtification, he uſed often to confer with, and inſtruct divers other Noble-men, his companions and familiar Friends, in points of Religion, Light ariſeth in darkneſs.

confuting the falſe opinion of our inherent Juſtification, and merit of good Works, and thereby detected the vanity and fondneſs of ſome Popiſh points, and by this means (the Lord bleſſing his labours) many of theſe Noble men began to creep out of darkneſs, and to diſcern the truth, amongſt whom one was John Francis Caſarta, a Kinſman to Galeacius: He diſcourſing often with Galeacius, began to convince him of the vanity of worldly priviledges: of the true means of our Juſtification; of the excellency and power of Gods Word, and of the folly of moſt of the Popiſh ſuperſtitions: Now Galeacius much eſteemed this his Kinſman, yet the World hung ſo heavy upon him, that for the preſent theſe things ſeemed to make but ſmall impreſſion upon his Spirit.

At this time Peter Martyr was a publick Preacher, and Reader at Naples, whoſe holy life, and ſweet copious Teaching, made him very famous. Hereupon, Galeacius was once content at Caſarta's motion, to go and hear his Sermon, yet not ſo much out of a deſire to learn, as tickled with a curious humor to hear ſo famous and learned a man. Peter Martyr at this time was ſhewing out of 1 Cor. 2. the weakneſs and deceitfulneſs of the Judgment of mans reaſon in ſpiritual things, and the power and efficacy of Gods word in thoſe men in whom the Lord works by his Spirit, which he illuſtrated by this compariſon.

Benefit of hearing the word.

If (ſaid he) a man ſhould ſee men and women dancing together afar off, and hear no inſtrument, he would Judge them mad, or fooliſh; but if he come near, and hear the Muſick, and mark their meaſures, &c. he will then, not only delight to ſee them, but feel a deſire in himſelf to bear them company: Even ſo many men, when they Behold in others a ſudden and great change of their looks, apparel, behaviour, and whole courſe of life, at firſt he will impute it to melancholy, or ſome fooliſh humor; But if he look nearer, and begin to hear, and perceive the ſweet harmony and conſent of Gods Spirit, and word in them, then they change their opinion, and begin, firſt, to like them, and that alteration in them; and afterwards feel in themſelves a deſire to imitate, and be of the number of ſuch men, as forſaking the worlds vanity, walk according to the rule of the Goſpel, that they may come to true, and ſound ſanctification.

His converſion.

This compariſon, by the grace, power, and efficacy of Gods Spirit, wrought wonderfully in Galeacius, (as he oft confeſt to his friends) that from that hour he reſolved to forſake his former pleaſures and practices, and to ſet himſelf to ſeek out true happineſs: and for that end, he read the Scriptures every day, as the fountain whence it muſt be drawn, and wherein the way to Heaven was diſcovered: He choſe ſuch company, by whoſe life and conference he might be edified in the true Religion, and in his moſt Holy faith.

But this great alteration being obſerved in Naples, his old Companions were much amazed at it: ſome judged it a melancholy paſſion: others eſteemed it plain folly, and feared that he would become ſimple, and doting. But ſuch as feared God, as they wondred much to ſee ſo great a change in ſo great a man; ſo they exceedingly rejoyced to ſee it, and praiſed the Lord in his behalf: But the more couragiouſly this worthy ſervant of Chriſt went on in the ways of Godlineſs, the more the Devil raged againſt him by his temptations, endeavouring thereby to ſtop his courſe, or, if it were poſſible, to drive him back again, that having begun in the Spirit, he might end in the fleſh.

Satans malice.

Firſt, his zealous profeſſion procured him an infinite number of mocks, and made him the ſubject of moſt vile ſlanders: Many took occaſion thereby extreamly to hate him: His Father was much diſpleaſed and vex't, ſeeing how the honor and advancement of his Houſe was like to be ecclipſed thereby, and therefore he often, and ſharply chid him, charged him with his Fatherly

Temptations.

authority

authority to put away his melancholy conceits: This much grieved him, being always very ſubmiſs, and obedient to his Parents: His Wife Victoria alſo (though a wiſe, kind, and dutiful Wife) yet would ſhe by no means yield to his motion, for the change of her Religion, fearing infamy and reproach thereby, and therefore ſhe was always ſoliciting of him with complaints, tears, kind intreaties, and all other ways that a wife could uſe to her Husband.

It was alſo a great temptation to him, that almoſt all the Nobility in and about Naples, being of kin, and familiar acquaintance with him, oft reſorted to him, to draw him forth to his old ſports and pleaſures: And his Office, ſometimes calling him to the Court, it was a great trouble to him, for there he heard of any thing rather than of Religion; not a word of Gods word, but all of pleaſures, honors, &c. or how they might rid out of the way the forſakers of Popery, and profeſſors of the true faith.

Yet Satan ſet upon him by a more dangerous temptation, to withdraw him from the truth; for at that time Italy was much peſtered with Arrians, and Anabaptiſts, who with glorious ſhews deceived the ſimple; Theſe men ſet upon Galeacius, ſeeking by all means to entangle him in their errors, and Blaſphemous phancies: But Gods goodneſs appeared wonderfully, by enabling him, though newly entred into the School of Chriſtian Religion, and as yet little ſtudied in the Scriptures, to reſiſt the cunning ſnares of theſe diſſembling Hereticks, whereas many of them were grounded Scholers, and throughly ſtudied in the Scriptures: yet he, by the ſincere ſimplicity of Gods truth, and aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, not onely diſcerned the fondneſs of their opinions, but untied the knots, and brake the ſnares, and mightily confuted them: yea, (through Gods mercy) being often in their meetings, he was ſtrongly confirmed in the truth by hearing, and ſeeing of them. Tentations from Hereticks.

After this he met with a more dangerous temptation, for the Waldeſians, with whom he moſt converſed, though they were right in ſome points of Religion about Juſtification, &c. and diſliked ſome abuſes in Popery, yet they frequented the Popiſh Churches, heard their Maſſes, and were preſent at their vile Idolatries, and this they did to avoid perſecution, and this was a dangerous example to Galeacius, but (through the good providence of God) his Office calling him into Germany to the Emperors Court, at Straſbrough he met with his old Friend Peter Martyr (who was then Divinity Profeſſor there) by whom he learned, that the knowledge of the truth of Juſtification was not ſufficient to Salvation, if in the mean time a man defiled himſelf with Idolatry, which the Scripture calls ſpiritual Whoredom: From him he received many other comfortable inſtructions, and thereby was much confirmed in the truth: and ſo returning to Naples, he declared his Judgment to the Waldeſians, concerning the ſhunning of Idolatry, whereupon they preſently forſook him, being unwilling to hear of that Doctrine which would expoſe them to all manner of ſufferings: But God of his infinite mercy, wrought in him ſuch Heroical reſolutions, that ſeeing his Friends forſook him, and he had no hope of ſeeing a Reformation in Naples, he reſolved to forſake his Country, and to ſeek for Chriſt and his Religion whereſoever he might find them, and that he would rather forſake Father, Wife, Children, Goods, Honors, &c. to win Chriſt, then to enjoy them all, and want Chriſt Jeſus. Chriſtian courage.

But herein he met with many grievous combats: for ſo oft as he looked upon his aged Father that dearly loved him, and whom he again reſpected with all duty, and reverence, ſo oft he was ſtricken to the heart with unſpeakable grief to think of leaving him; and ſuch like reaſonings he had in his heart: What! muſt I needs forſake my loving Father, or Tentations many.

elſe I cannot have God to be my Father? And muſt I needs fail in my duty to him, if I perform my duty to God? Shall I hereby bring his hoary hairs with ſorrow to the Grave? Shall I bring an obloquie upon him, and my whole kindred? Shall I be the cauſe of his death, that would (if need were) redeem my life with his own death? Yet muſt I rather hazard his life, then caſt my own poor ſoul with horror into Hell. And no leſs was he grieved in reſpect of his noble Wife, having no hope that ſhe would renounce Popery, and go with him.

She was in the prime of her youth, a Lady of great birth, fair, wiſe, and modeſt, but her love and loialty to him paſſed all, which filled him with theſe reaſonings: Shall I thus ſuddenly leave my dear Wife, the only joy of my heart in this World, my Companion, the augmenter of my joy, and leſſner of my woe? Shall I thus leave her for ever? Shall I deprive my ſelf of her, and thereby of all others alſo, and of all comfort of a conjugal life, and married eſtate? Alas poor Lady! what will become of her, and her little ones when I am gone? What will ſhe do but weep and wail, and pine away with grief? Yet muſt I for Chriſts ſake reſolve to leave her, and all, to follow Chriſt.

Whilſt he meditated on theſe things, he thought he heard, and ſaw his Wife ſighing, and ſobbing, and weeping, and howling, and running after him, ſaying: Ah my dear Lord! and ſweet Husband! whither will you go? And will you leave me poor woman comfortleſs and ſuccourleſs? What can Honors, Riches, Gold, Silver, Jewels, Friends, &c. do, when I want you? What joy can I take in my Children without you, but rather my grief will be doubled by looking on them? How can any be perſwaded that you care for me, or them? Is this the love you have ſo often boaſted of? &c. Theſe thoughts tormented him the more, becauſe they boyled in his heart, and he durſt impart them to none, leaſt they ſhould have hindred his departure. Alſo the thoughts about his Children extreamly augmented his grief: they were goodly and towardly Children, worthy ſuch Noble parents: they were young, and therefore not apprehenſive what it was to want a Father: He loved them tenderly: When his wife the Lady, did ſometimes put into his arms the youngeſt for him to play with, how did it cut him to the heart, and what ado had he to contain from floods of tears? How did he in himſelf thus reaſon; and ſhall I preſently leave theſe ſweet Babes to the wide and wicked World, as though they had never been my Children? To be a Father is a comfort, but a Father of no Children, and yet to have Children, is a miſery? And you poor Orphans, what will become of you when I am gone? Your hap is hard to be Fatherleſs, your Father yet living. What can your great birth now help you? By my departure you ſhall looſe all, honor, living, dignity, &c. yea, hereby you ſhall be expoſed to infamy, reproach, ſlander, &c. ſo that you ſhall curſe the time that ever you had me for your Father.

Many other were the temptations that he conflicted withal, though inferiour to theſe, as his leaving the company of ſo many Noble-men, his kindred and acquaintance: To looſe his honorable Office at Court: To leave for ever his Native ſoyl, the fruitful Italy: To deprive himſelf and poſterity of the Noble title of a Marqueſdom: To undertake a long and tedious Journey: To caſt himſelf into exile, poverty, ſhame, and other miſeries: To leave ſo brave a ſeat, the Garden and Orchard whereof exceeded all others in Italy, to ſee which, there daily reſorted many ſtrangers out of all parts: yet reſolved he (through Gods grace) to leave all and follow Chriſt: ſaying thus to himſelf:

Chriſtian courage.

Thou Lord art he that dreweſt me out of the miſty darkneſs of ignorance, enlightning my mind with thy Holy Spirit, and with the heavenly knowledge of thy truth; Thou haſt made known to me the way of Salvation, and haſt ranſomed me to thy ſelf, by the blood of thy Son: now therefore, Holy Father, I am only thine, conſecrated to thy glory, and therefore I will follow thee, and obey thee, and walk in thy ways whitherſoever thou ſhalt be pleaſed to call me. Not my Father, Wife, Children, Honors, Lands, Riches, nor all my delicacies, and pleaſures, ſhall hold me one hour from following thee:

I deny

I deny my ſelf, and I deny this whole World for thee, and thy ſake: O Lord, thou knoweſt how many enemies compaſs me? How many hinderances and temptations lie in my way, &c. O Lord have mercy upon me, and deliver my ſoul, &c. O bleſſed and happy theſe miſeries, that pull me out of the Worlds vanities, and ſink of ſins, that I may be made an Heir of everlaſting glory; welcome therefore the Croſs of Chriſt, I will take it up, O Lord, and will follow thee.

According to this holy reſolution, making his mind known only to a few of his choice Friends, of whoſe Piety he hoped well, he wrought ſo much upon them, that they vowed to accompany him in this his voluntary exile; yet, ſee the deceitfulneſs of mans heart! moſt of theſe, when they came to the borders of Italy, and began ſeriouſly to conſider what they left behind them, and what they went to, they firſt (with Lots Wife) began to look back, and afterwards went back, turning again to the vomit of their pleaſures. Apoſtaſie.

But oh the unſearchableneſs of Gods Judgments! Theſe ingrateful perſons refuſing ſo great a mercy offered them, the Lord purſued them with juſt revenge: For purpoſing to ſerve God in their pleaſures in the midſt of Popery, they were taken by the Inquiſition, forced publickly to recant, and abjure their Religion, and ſo became the ſubject of miſery, and infamy, and were equally odious to both parties. Gods judgments on Apoſtates.

Yet their Apoſtacy was a great diſcouragement to Galeacius, ſeeing himſelf forſaken of thoſe by whoſe ſociety he hoped to have enjoyed much comfort in a ſtrange Country: Notwithſtanding all this, he prepared for his departure, and finding his opportunity, he concealed his purpoſe, leaſt the authority of his Father might have diverted him, and ſo getting ſome one thouſand Marks, which his Mother had left him, on the 20. of March, Anno 1551. and of his Age 34. he departed from Naples, as if he had intended for the Emperors Court, whither indeed he went, attending his Office for a ſhort time, and then bidding adieu to the Court, and all wordly pleaſures, he went ſtraight to Geneva, where he arrived in ſafety (through Gods mercy) and with a joyful heart. He forſakes all for Chriſt.

In that City, though there was an Italian Church, yet met he with none of his acquaintance but one, a Noble-man of Siena, and now a Preacher to the Italian Congregation: Thus bleſſing God for freeing him from the Antichriſtian Yoak, and bringing him where he might ſafely profeſs his name with a free conſcience, he aſſociated himſelf with Maſter Calvin, and ſubmitted to his inſtruction, who finding his ſincerity, meekneſs, &c. moſt kindly entertained him into his fellowſhip, and this their mutual love was ſo firmly grounded, that it continued to their lives end. Thankſgiving. Friendſhip.

Maſter Calvin ſhews how he honored and eſteemed of him by his Epiſtle to him, wherein he dedicates to him his Commentary upon the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians. And amongſt many other high commendations that he gives him there, he acknowledgeth that the example of Galeacius prevailed much with him, for the ſtrengthning of his Faith, and encreaſe of his Godlineſs. Benefit of good examples.

But when the news of his fixing at Geneva came to the Emperors Court, and to Naples, it cannot be imagined how ſtrangely it affected all that heard it: But above all, his own Friends were wonderfully aſtoniſhed at it, and his Family, where nothing was to be heard but lamentations, tears, and pitiful complaints, ſo that it ſeemed a lively pattern of woe and miſery: yet was the old Marqueſs his Father moſt affected of all others, foreſeeing hereby the ruin and downfall of his eſtate and Family.

But the violence of his ſorrow being once over, he began to caſt about by what means he might recover him again; and for that end, ſent a Coſen-German of his, that was moſt dear to Galeacius, with Letters to Geneva, full of authority New tentations.

authority, proteſtations, bitter complaints, and loving intreaties to him to return home again, for the comfort of his aged Father, the reviving, and cheering up his forlorn Wife, and diſtreſſed Children, and to the unſpeakable joy of all his kindred.

This Gentleman coming to Geneva, found Galeacius in a mean Houſe, which he had taken for his uſe, with only two Servants attending upon him: But how ſad was the meeting of theſe two Gentlemen! which was ſpent in nothing but imbracings, ſighs, ſobs, and tears; yea, it ſo exceeded, that for divers hours, they could not ſpeak a word each to other; till at laſt the Gentleman hoping, and longing to recover his Friend, with pitiful words mixed with tears, he delivered his Letters, till he had recovered more freedom of ſpeech, which having once obtained, to his Letters he added obteſtations, intreaties, perſwaſions, and exhortations, all mingled with many tears, thathe would reſpect the ruin of his Houſe, the grief of his old Father, the deſperate condition of his Wife, and Children, &c. and remedy all by his return into Italy.

Tentations reſiſted.

But Galeacius, being as unmoveable as a Rock, without delay returned him this anſwer; that he knew all this which he had ſaid to be true, yet withal, he would have him know, that he had done nothing raſhly, he had conſulted with God, by whoſe grace he was moved hereunto: and by the ſame grace had his eyes opened to diſcern the truth, and to ſee the Superſtitions in Popery, &c. He told him alſo, that he had well weighed the infamies, reproaches, and miſeries which attended this his change: But ſaid he, ſeeing one of theſe muſt needs be choſen, either to ſtay at home with a burthened conſcience, under an heap of errors and ſuperſtitions, or elſe to leave Houſe, Lands, Family, Country, yea, and all the worlds glory, thereby to obtain liberty to ſerve the Lord purely according to his word; that therefore he reſolved of two evils to chuſe the leſs, and rather to ſhut his eyes againſt the ſplendor of worldly glory, and emptie vanities, then that the ſight of them ſhould hinder him from following the call of Chriſt; who ſaith, That he is unworthy to be his Diſciple, who leaveth not Father, Mother, Wife, Children, &c. yea, and his own life to follow him: Therefore, ſaid he, I forſook all theſe becauſe I could not enjoy Chriſt, and them, profeſſing that he was heartily ſorry that they would not come to him, or that he might not have liberty ſafely to live with them: But for himſelf, he ſaid, he had Riches, Honor, and joy enough, ſo long as in that cottage with his two Servants, he might live in the true Church of God, enjoy his Word and Sacraments free from pollution, and the Society of Godly men, and have time to converſe with God by holy meditation, and to confer with his Religious Friends about Gods great goodneſs ſhewed him in his converſion, &c.

Conſtancy.

His Kinſman was much aſtoniſhed at this anſwer, yet had nothing to reply; conſidering that his reſolution was not grounded on carnal reaſon, or the will of man, but upon the holy word of God, and his powerful and unreſiſtable calling: therefore with a ſorrowful heart he held his tongue, bitterly complaining within himſelf, that he had ſucceeded no better, and ſo after a while he took his leave of his beloved Friend, with many tears, and pitiful cries on both ſides.

When he came near Naples, there was much running to hear good news, but when he had delivered his heavy meſſage, the ſorrow of them all was redoubled upon them: Father, Wife, Children, Friends, &c. were all overwhelmed with grief: and the rather, becauſe at the ſame time the Emperor had publiſhed an Edict, wherein he proclaimed Galeacius guilty of high-treaſon, confiſcated his goods, and making himſelf, and his poſterity uncapable of his Fathers Marqueſdom: This made the old man, notwithſtanding his great age, to go to the Emperor, and to ſue to him, that his Sons falling from the Roman Church might not prejudice his poſterity, but that himſelf only might bear bear the puniſhment of his fault, but before he entred upon this Journey, he diſpatched away a meſſenger with a letter, wherein he charged his Son upon his final obedience, to meet him ſuch a time at Verona, within the Venetian territories, hoping if he could ſpeak with him, that he could recall him from the ſociety of the Hereticks of Geneva: Galeacius having received this Letter, and taken advice upon it, purpoſed not to diſobey ſo lawful a command of his Father, though he feared that it would but further exaſperate him: yet, before he went, he reſolved by Gods grace, that neither threatnings, intreaties, allurements, &c. ſhould ſtir him one inch from that courſe of Religion, whereby he had begun to ſerve the Lord. His Father ſends for him.

And thus Armed with heavenly fortitude, and the Prayers of the Church, he haſted to Verona, where he found his Father, who received and uſed him kindly: and after ſalutations, he ſet upon him with all the cunning and ſubtile arguments that he could poſſibly invent, to draw him home again: Galeacius humbly anſwers, that his body and eſtate is his Fathers, but his conſcience is the Lords: tells him he cannot imbrace that motion, but he muſt make Shipwrack of a good conſcience; and therefore humbly intreats him, that ſeeing his only deſire was to obey God, and ſave his ſoul, that he would not urge him more to reſpect eſtate, and Family, then Gods glory, and his own Souls health. They meet.

The old Marqueſs ſeeing the unmoveableneſs of his Son, which he deemed wilfulneſs; yet enjoyned him at leaſt to ſtay there till he had been with the Emperor, and preferred his Petition to him: This Galeacius aſſented to, and performed; but ſo ſoon as ever he underſtood that the Emperor had granted his Fathers requeſt, he, with a joyful heart returned to Geneva; and being there, he conſidered how to imploy himſelf for the publick good: for which end he deviſed how to ſettle the Diſcipline of the Italian Church in that City, which was now much increaſed by a confluence of Families which fled thither from the bloody Inquiſition. Zeal.

About this time Calvin was delegated to go to Baſil about matters of Religion, with whom (at his requeſt) Galeacius went, and there met with Celſus, deſcended of the Noble Family of the Earls of Martinengo in Italy, lately (through Gods mercy) eſcaped out of the mire of Popiſh Superſtition: This Celſus was then purpoſed to go for England, but by the perſwaſion of Galeacius, he went with him to Geneva, where they both joyned together, and by the help, and direction of Calvin, they eſtabliſhed a form of Diſcipline for the Italian Church, and Celſus was choſen the firſt Paſtor thereof, in which place he performed the Office of a Faithful and vigilant Watchman, and had two Elders joyned as aſſiſtants to him: The Principal of the Elders, was Galeacius himſelf, by whoſe authority and diligence the Church was preſerved in Peace and Unity.

Anno 1555. Galeacius his Uncle, Paulus Quintus was made Pope; Hereupon the Old Marqueſs wrote to him again, commanding him to meet him at Mantua in Italy, ſending him proviſion of mony for his Journey: This he obeyed, and went thither, where his Father entertained him with more then ordinary kindneſs. Then he told him, that he had procured of his Uncle, the Pope, a Diſpenſation for him, whereby he might freely live in any City within the Venetian Territories, without being moleſted for his Religion and Conſcience: He told him that hereby he would be a greater ſolace to his old age, then his abſence had been a grief, earneſtly intreating him that he would gratifie him in this requeſt, and all in a moſt pathetical manner, beſeeching him not to reject ſo great a favour offered him by the Pope; telling him that hereby he might recover his honors, Eſtate, Friends, and eſtimation. His Father ſends again for him. Great tentations.

Galeacius was wonderfully perplexed with this motion, considering the proffers, and promises, and authority of his Father, which he knew not well how to deny, nor yet how to imbrace, the rather, because he wanted the advise of his Faithful Friend Master Calvin: Being in this great perplexity, he durst not rely upon his own wit, but retiring himself, he betook himself to fervent prayer unto God his Saviour, the Author of true Wisdom, humbly craving the assistance of his Holy Spirit, that in this his extremity he might resolve upon that which was most for Gods Glory, and his own sound comfort: And the Lord answered his prayers, directing him in the way that he should choose: For considering, that the Pope Antichrist like, directly opposed himself to Christ, his Religion, and true Church, that therefore he might by no means sue for, or accept any favour at his hands, nor be at all beholding to him for any thing: Besides, Gods Spirit suggested to him, that it carried with it a shew of Apostasie, to forsake the fellowship of Christs Church, and to live among Idolaters: as also how scandalous it would be to professors, who would be ready to think, that he had taken his farewell of Religion, and renewed acquaintance with his old Friend the World: and further, that this was to forsake the ordinary means of the true word, and Sacraments, and to live in a place where there was nothing but Idolatry: He farther saw that Sathans policy herein was to entangle him again in the cares of the World, and pleasures of Italy, and thereby to dazle his eyes with sensual delights, that by degrees the power of Godliness might decay in him: and lastly, Gods Holy Spirit taught him wisdom how to answer all his Fathers objections, and confute all his Arguments.

Prayer for wisdom and councel.

Return of Prayers.

Hereupon he beseecheth his Father not to draw him to that which afterwards he might have cause to repent of, by making him a prey to the Papists, who held it for a Maxime, That Faith was not to be kept with Hereticks: therefore saith he, it's better for me, and more joy to you, that I live in this poor estate, then that I should endanger my life, and my whole posterity: The Marques being silenced hereby, returned with an heavy heart to Naples, and Galeacius with a merry heart to Geneva, where he was received by his Friends, and the whole Church, with exceeding rejoycing for his safe return.

He goes back to Geneva.

But by the way, he visited that Godly Princess, the old Dutchess of Ferrara, who entertained him honorably, and had much conference with him about his Conversion, temptations, Journeys, about the Church at Geneva, and the great Calvin, and so lovingly dismissed him, sending him in her own Coach, for his ease, as far as to the Town of Francolium.

During these occurrences, his Wife Victoria burned in hearty affections towards him, and it's inexpressible how vehemently she longed for his company, so that she never ceased writing to him, beseeching him to return again to her, and his Children: And when letters prevailed not, she earnestly desired him to meet her in some City within the Territories of the Venetians, this request he yielded to, hoping to prevail with her to leave her superstition, and to come with him to Geneva: The place where they were to meet, was Lesina, a City in Dalmatia, a hundred miles by water from Vicum: Thither he went, but she came not according to promise, but sent two of her eldest Sons to meet him there; Their sight and company was most acceptable to him, but being frustrate of his expectation, in meeting with his Wife, he sent them back, and returned to Geneva; whither after a few days, came Letters posting from his Wife, craving pardon for her former failing, and beseeching him once more to come to that place, where, without fail she solemnly vowed to attend him.

His Wife sends for him.

But meets him not.

She sends again.

This request seemed very unreasonable, that he should so spend his time, and and weary out himſelf, in ſuch long and dangerous Journies: yet conſidering, that at his firſt coming from her, he had not ſo fully diſcharged his duty, by endeavouring her converſion, he yielded to go; and accordingly, Anno, 1558. he came again to Laſina, where he underſtood that many of his Friends, together with his Wife, had intended to have met him, but that a Marriner of Venice had diſappointed them; hereupon he reſolved to go to Vicum, relying on the Lords protection, having as he conceived, a ſpecial call thereunto. He goes to Vicum.

When he came to his Fathers Caſtle, it cannot be expreſſed how great joy the whole Family was filled with: but above all others, his Wife ſurpaſſed with joy, and delight, hoping that now ſhe had recovered her dear Lord and Husband, the only comfort, and ſolace of her life: But within a few days all this joy was turned into tears, and mourning, when he had diſcovered his conſtant reſolution to perſevere in his Religion, and that he would rather die then be drawn from it: yet in the midſt of theſe mournings, which almoſt brake his heart, he comforted himſelf in the Lord, dealing with his wife in a loving way, and earneſt manner to go and live with him her Husband, as the Law of God, and nature required, promiſing her that ſhe ſhould have liberty of her Religion, to live as ſhe would: But ſhe flatly anſwered him [though with many tears] that ſhe would never go with him to Geneva, and that ſhe would not live with him as long as he was intangled with thoſe Hereſies: Yea, ſo violent and wilful ſhe was, that ſhe there denied him that duty which a wife is bound by all Laws to yield to her Husband, nor would by any means lye with him as man and wife; ſaying, that ſhe was expreſly forbidden by her Confeſſor to do it, upon the pain of Excommunication. Conſtancy. His Wifes unkindneſs.

How this unwomanly anſwer pierced his heart, its eaſie for Husbands to gueſs: yet he bore it with invincible conſtancy and quietneſs of mind, but withal told her, that if ſhe denied him that matrimonial duty which by the Law of God ſhe owed him, he would ſue out a divorce againſt her: Notwithſtanding which ſhe ſtill perſiſted in her obſtinacy, rather chuſing to break Gods command, then her Confeſſors, he therefore reſolved to depart, reiterated his former proteſtation to her, and ſo bad her to take it as his laſt warning. His patience.

The doleful day of his departure being come, he went to his Father to take his leave, whoſe former love was now turned into fury, ſo that he gave him his farewel with many an heavie and bitter curſe, which the Lord turned into a Bleſſing, and ſo having paſſed this brunt, he came into the Hall, where was his Wife, Children, and many of his near kindred, and dear Friends all fraught with grief and heavineſs: Nothing was heard but ſighs, ſobs, and cries: Nothing ſeen but tears, and wringing of hands, his Wife imbracing, and taking him about the neck, beſeeching him with loving and pitiful ſpeeches, that he would pity himſelf, her, and his Children, and not ſo wilfully caſt them all away: His young Children all upon ther knees, with arms ſtretched out, hands holden up, and faces ſwoln with tears, crying unto him to have pity upon them, his own bowels, and not to make them Fatherleſs before their time: His kindred with heavy countenances, and watry eyes looked rufully on him, and though, through grief, they could not ſpeak, yet every look and geſture was a loud cry, and ſtrong intreaty for his ſtay amongſt them: unutterable was the grief of them all, and unſpeakable was the torment, and temptation that he felt in this agony, when he muſt either leave Jeſus Chriſt, or theſe his Friends for his ſake: Yet above all, there was one moſt lamentable ſight, which would have broken a heart of Flint: Amongſt all his Children he had one daughter of twelve years old, a proper and towardly Gentlewoman, who catching faſt hold about his knees, held him ſo Tentations at his parting.

hard, that he could by no means ſhake her off, and his Fatherly affections would not ſuffer him to hurt her: he laboured to be looſe, but ſhe held the faſter: He went forwards, but ſhe trailed after, crying to him, not to be ſo cruel to her his Child, who came into the World by him.

This ſo wonderfully affected him, being a man of a moſt loving and tender-hearted nature, that as he oft related, it made his very bowels to rowl within him, and that his heart was ready preſently to burſt in ſunder: But being armed with a Divine, and ſupernatural fortitude, he brake thorow all theſe temptations, and trod under foot whatſoever might hinder him from Chriſt, and ſo leaving that heavy Houſe, and dolorous company, he haſtened to the Sea-ſide, and taking Ship, he preſently cauſed them to hoiſe Sails towards Laſina, yet had he a toiled, and diſtreſſed mind, betwixt ſorrow, when he remembred whom he had for ever left behind, and joy to remember that he had eſcaped: Yet could he not ſo maſter his natural affections, but that he brake out into tears, and often looked back to that which he had left behind, yet ſaw that he muſt leave all for Chriſts ſake: But it much pierced his heart, when in looking back, he ſaw his Wife, Children, and kindred ſtanding on the ſhore, who, when their cries could be heard no longer, ceaſed not to look after the Ship, ſo long as it was in ſight, neither could he refrain, but with a woful countenance looked at them again, ſo long as he could diſcern them: and remembring all the former paſſages of his Fathers curſes, his Wifes tears, Childrens cries, &c. it fetched from him many a heart-breaking ſigh, and bitter groan: Yet the ſpiritual ſtrength and courage of his mind was conſtant, and invincible: So that after a while, he cheered up himſelf, and bended the Knees of his heart to the eternal Father in Heaven, giving him moſt hearty thanks, for that he had furniſhed him with ſuch a Portion of Grace, as to withſtand and conquer Satan in ſo perilous a conflict; and for delivering him from Popiſh thraldom, and the bloody Inquiſition, which he was in continual danger of whilſt he was in Italy: He praiſed God alſo for giving him time, opportunity, and grace to perform that duty to his Wife, which he had omitted at his firſt departure from her: As alſo that he had made that proteſtation to her, upon her monſtrous and undutiful behaviour towards him: And ſo (through Gods goodneſs) he came ſafely to Geneva, October 4. An. 1558.

Tentations overcome.

Thankſgiving.

Gods protection of him.

He returns to Geneva.

His ſafe arrival brought exceeding joy to the whole Church there, eſpecially to the Italian Congregation; amongſt whom he lived with unſpeakable contentment in his own conſcience, in his former private and quiet life: And after a few years, he began to find in himſelf ſome reaſons which inclined him to think of entering into a married condition; and the rather, becauſe he never heard from his Wife, nor found any relenting in her, nor remorſe for her former obſtinacy: This his purpoſe he communicated to Maſter Calvin, craving his adviſe and councel in a caſe of ſo great importance: His anſwer was, that it was moſt convenient, and leſs ſcandalous, if he could, to abſtain from marriage: Galeacius told him that he could not abſtain, and gave him many weighty reaſons which inclined him to marriage; and withal, imparted to him ſome ſecret reaſons.

He intended a ſecond mariage.

Calvin doubtful about it.

Holy Calvin, a man of a ſharp judgment, and of a wiſe diſcerning ſpirit, foreſaw that many would ſpeak evil of the fact, others would be ſcandalized, becauſe few truly underſtood the Doctrine of Divorcement, and feweſt of all knew all the circumſtances of this particular fact: Galeacius urged ſuch arguments out of Gods Word, as Calvin could not ſufficiently anſwer, and thereupon he told him at laſt, that if he would go to the Judicious Peter Martyr, and ask his opinion, and the opinion of the Learned Divines of Rhatia, and Switzerland, and requeſt them, after mature deliberation to ſet down their Judgments, and the reaſons of it in writing, for his own part he would ſubſcribe unto

unto them, and yield him what liberty they thought fit in this matter; Always provided, that he ſhould ſubmit and ſtand to their judgments in this caſe.

This Galeacius willingly aſſented to, deſiring nothing more then to find out what the Lord by his word, and by the voice of his Church ſhould preſcribe to him: And accordingly, he wrote to the Divines, and Churches afore mentioned, who meeting together, and ſeriouſly debating the caſe, and weighing all circumſtance, at laſt unanimouſly reſolved, that he might with a ſafe conſcience leave his former Wife, who had firſt maliciouſly diſſerted him, and ſo be married to another: and this their opinion they confirmed by Scripture, Fathers, Councils, and by the Civil Law, which anſwer being returned to Galeacius, he, ſtill taking the conſent of the Church along with him, ſued out a Divorce, and had it legally by the Magiſtrate granted unto him; After which, adviſing with his Godly, and prudent Friends, he began to think of diſpoſing himſelf in marriage, wherein yet he ſought not ſo much after riches, beauty, birth, &c. as for a fit Companion of his life, with whom he might comfortably ſpend the remainder of his days, and ſerve God cheerfully till the coming of his Lord and Maſter: And the Providence of God (which never fails his Children that wait and depend upon him) provided him ſuch a Wife as his heart deſired, viz. a Matronly Gentlewoman, a Widow that came from Roan in France to Geneva, for true Religions ſake: She was well reported of for Piety, Modeſty, and many excellent qualities, and about forty years of age: Galeacius conſidering her fitneſs in many regards, married her, Anno 1560. and of his age forty three, and they lived together many years after, with much comfort, and excellent agreement, ſo that the great afflictions, and unquietneſs of his former life was now fully recompenced with a life full of all contentment, and Chriſtian joy.

The Judgment of the Church of Switzerland, about it.

He is divorced.

He marries again.

His next care was to unburthen himſelf of all worldly cares, preſcribing to himſelf a moderate, and frugal courſe of life: Kept only two maid-ſervants, lived in great ſobriety, yet always free from ſordid baſeneſs, neither wanting neceſſaries, nor having ſuperfluities: His attire was plain, but comely: and he that might in his own Country, have been attended with many Servants, did often walk the Streets alone, not having one man with him: Yea, he diſdained not oft to go into the Market, and provide his own neceſſaries, and ſometimes would buy and carry home Fruits, Hearbs, Roots, and ſuch other things: eſteeming this courſe of life, together with freedom of Religion, better then the Marqueſdom of Vicum: Yet under this mean attire was ſhrowded that gravity, majeſty, and deportment, that any wiſe obſerver might eaſily diſcern that he came of a Noble race: He was a great ornament to, and was highly eſteemed and honored by all the City of Geneva, every one ſpeaking of his praiſe, ſo that it was hard to ſay, whether he was more beloved, or admired amongſt the Magiſtrates, Miniſters, and perſons of all ranks: No publick meeting was appointed, or ſolemn feaſt made, unto which he was not invited, every one thinking himſelf happy that might enjoy his company: and (though he would have refuſed it) yet every one gave him the title of a Marqueſs all his life long: His Noble qualities were ſuch, that every one honored him: Strangers, Princes and Noblemen that viſited Geneva would by no means omit to ſee, and be acquainted with Galeacius, honoring him no leſs then if he had been in Naples.

His frugality.

Humility.

God highly honors him.

His chief converſe was with thoſe Italians of his own Church, in whoſe eyes his humble mind, and Friendly converſation made him more honorable: He was one of a thouſand: for beſides his Noble birth, and Princely education, he truly feared God, was affable, Courteous, and Friendly to all men; wiſe, diſcreet, and very eloquent: As his memory was exceeding good, ſo his ſmooth ſtile, his eaſie, quiet and ſeemly delivery made his ſpeech moſt graceful to all that heard him; with poor men, if they were Godly, and honeſt, he would converſe as Familiarly, as if they had been his equals: He

His Character.

His Charity. was of a free and liberal heart; no poor or diſtreſſed man did ever deſire his aſſiſtance, but preſently he would reach out to them his helping hand to relieve them, and the loſs of his former eſtate never troubled him, but when he had not wherewithal to give to charitable uſes.

It was his joy, and delight to be lending, and giving to thoſe that wanted: Priſoners, and diſtreſſed perſons did oft taſt of his bounty: He viſited the ſick, and his preſence, and Chriſtian exhortations were very comfortable to them: Every day he joyned with the Church in their publick ſervice: He never
His Piety. omitted to hear Sermons, ſhewing wonderful devotion, and reverence to the word of God: He daily read a portion of the Holy Scriptures: As an Elder of the Church, he carefully obſerved, and enquired into the manners, and lives of Profeſſors; encouraging the good, admoniſhing offenders: where he ſaw, or heard of any diſſenſions, or ſuits of law amongſt Chriſtian neighbours,
A Peace-maker. he was exceeding careful to compoſe, and end them: He wholly dedicated himſelf and all his abilities to the advancement of Gods glory, and the edification of his Church.

But after a long calm of peace and tranquility, God raiſed up new ſtorms, yet further to try his patience, and exerciſe his graces: For firſt, he fell ſick
He ſickens. of a grievous, and doubtful diſeaſe, proceeding from abundance of rheume, which made him ſo ſhort winded, that he could hardly draw his breath, wherewith he was exceedingly tormented night and day, ſo that he could ſcarce get any ſleep: This was procured by his long and wearisome Journeys, which he had formerly taken by Sea, and by Land, for his conſcience ſake:
A new tentation. Then there came to Geneva a Nephew of his, bringing him letters from his former Wife, and his eldeſt Son, perſwading him yet at length to return to his Native Country, and former Religion: giving him hope that hereby he might advance his youngeſt Son to the place of a Cardinal, &c. But the Soul
His zeal. of this worthy Gentleman was much wounded, and grieved hereat, as abhorring thoſe profane dignities in the Popiſh Church, and to ſhew his diſtaſte of the motion, he burnt the Letters before the Meſſengers face, and withal, not daigning to anſwer them by writing, he by word of mouth returned a grave, wiſe, and zealous anſwer; Yet this importunate Jeſuite (for ſo he was) ceaſed not to moleſt him with frivilous reaſons, and fleſhly arguments, promiſing him an huge ſum of money, if he would return home, &c. But the Noble and Holy heart of this Godly Chriſtian, in an heavenly zeal, and ardent love to his Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, could not but ſhew it ſelf, which made him to cry out: Let their money periſh with them, who eſteem all the Gold in the World worth one daies ſociety with Jeſus Chriſt, and his holy Spirit: and curſed be that Religion for ever, which ſhall wed men to the World, and divorce them from God: Go home therefore, and take thy Silver with thee, make much of that droſs of the earth, &c. But know, that my Lord and Saviour hath made me enamoured of far more precious Jewels, and durable riches: Which words ſo enraged
A moſt Chriſtian Speech. this Papiſt, that he brake out into ill words, and reproachful terms, and ſo went his way.

Being delivered from this tempter, his ſickneſs encreaſed more, and more
His Faith and Patience. upon him: His pain was moſt grievous, but he bare it with an Heroical courage; and as the pains encreaſed, ſo his Faith, and Patience encreaſed, and as the outward man periſhed, the inward man was renewed day by day, and above all, he found unſpeakable comfort and ſweetneſs in his Prayers to the Lord, and Joy unſpeakable. would often ſay, that in the midſt of his Prayers his Soul ſeemed to be raviſhed, and to taſt of the bleſſed joys of Heaven, and as the ſuffering of Chriſt abounded abounded in him, ſo the conſolations by Chriſt abounded much more: The Phyſicians ſpared no pains to cure him, nor his Friends to viſit him, eſpecially his loving and tender Wife was never from about him: But all was in vain, the time of his diſſolution drawing now on; therefore he wholly ſequeſtred himſelf from any more care of his body, and from all worldly cogitations: He took his farewel of his Wife, and all his Chriſtian Friends, ſaying, That he would lead them the way to Heaven: His heart and thoughts were all in Heaven, and he cryed to Jeſus Chriſt, that as he had ſought him all his life, ſo he would now receive, and acknowledge him as his own: And ſo in the preſence of his Friends, whileſt the Miniſters were exhorting, and praying with him, he peaceably, and quietly yielded up his Spirit into the hands of his merciful God, and Faithful Creator, Anno Chriſti, 1592. and of his Age about 74. His death.

As Moſes, when he was come to yeats, refuſed to be called the Son of Pharaoh's Daughter, and choſe rather to ſuffer adverſity with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon, eſteeming the rebuke of Chriſt greater riches then the treaſures of Egypt: So our Noble Galeacius, when he was come to years, and the knowledge of Chriſt, refuſed to be called the Son and Heir to a Marqueſs, Cup-bearer to an Emperor, Nephew to a Pope, and choſe rather to ſuffer affliction, perſecution, baniſhment, loſs of Lands, Livings, Wife, Children, Honors and Preferments, then to enjoy the ſinful pleaſures of Italy for a ſeaſon; eſteeming the rebuke of Chriſt greater riches then the honors of a Marqueſdom without Chriſt; and therefore ſeeing he muſt either want chriſt, or want them, he diſpoiled himſelf of all theſe to gain Chriſt. Heb. 11. Like Moſes Collected out of the Hiſtory of his Life, written by Maſter Craſhaw, and tranſlated by him out of Beza.

C. BRETTERG

The Life of Mrs. Katherine Bretterg, who Died, Anno Chriſti, 1601.

Her Birth.

Scriptures ſtudied.

Modeſty. Her Character.

Sabbaths ſanctified.

A ſoft heart.

Katherine Bretterg was born in Cheſhire, being the Daughter of Maſter John Bruen, of Bruen-Stapleford: Her Education before her marriage, was ſuch, as became the profeſſion of the Goſpel, in Godlineſs, and purity of life, and Religion: She was ſtudious of the Holy Scriptures from a Child, and by reading thereof gained ſuch knowledge, that ſhe was able to make good uſe of them as occaſion was offered: She uſed the things of this World moderately, and ſoberly, not affecting the vain pleaſures and faſhions that others too much delight in: She uſed not to gad abroad with wandering Dina, but rather with Hannah, ſhe delighted to tread upon the duſt of the Sanctuary, and to walk in the ways of Sion, &c.

The Sabbath day was always dear and welcome to her, and though many times ſhe went far for it, yet ſhe would not be without the Miniſtery of the Word: And her heart was ſo tender, and full of compaſſion, that oftentimes ſhe was perceived to hear Sermons, read, pray, and meditate, with tears: She made conſcience of all, even of the leaſt ſin, and ſuch as many accounted no ſins: She never uſed to ſwear an oath, great or ſmall: Neither at any time brake forth into unſeemly ſpeeches, lying jeſt, immodeſt words, &c. She uſed not the name, or Titles of God at any time without great reverence: Her private diſcourſes were always well ſeaſoned, and proceeded from ſuch a ſanctified heart, that they miniſtred grace to the hearers: Her daily exerciſe was to converſe with God, in reading, praying, ſinging, and meditating: All her delight was in the Saints, and in thoſe that were moſt excellent: The Lords Precepts were precious to her; For from her childhood ſhe feared God, and walked before him with an upright heart: She was not like many women, women, that are unable to render a reaſon of the Faith, and hope that is in them, but grew in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus.

When ſhe was about twenty years old, by her Parents conſent, ſhe was married to Maſter William Bretterg of Bretterghold in Lancaſhire, neer Leverpool, who was a young Gentleman, that imbraced Religion ſincerely, and ſuffered much for it at the hands of Papiſts. Her Marriage.

This gratious couple lived two years together in ſuch mutual joy, and comfort, as well beſeemed the Children of God: In which time ſhe had one daughter by him: Their Habitation was in the midſt of ignorant, and brutiſh Papiſts, who were always doing ſome wrong, and injury to them, yet her knowledge, Patience, Mildneſs, and conſtancy for the Truth, much edified, and built up her Husband in his moſt Holy Faith, and encouraged him with more Patience to bear all the wrongs, and indignities that were daily offered to him. Popiſh malice.

He had his Horſes and Cattle divers times killed in the night in his grounds by ſuch malicious Papiſts as hated him for his Religion ſake, which exceedingly conduced to his loſs, and hinderance, being moſt of the ſtock that he had; yet did ſhe not only bear this great affliction with admirable patience, but even rejoyced, and praiſed God, ſubmitting to his Holy, and wiſe Providence therein. She would often ſay, It is good that ſuch things ſhould be, but no be to them that do them: It is good in God, thereby to chaſten his Children, and prevent ſome ſin that he ſaw us like to fall into: Its good in reſpect of Gods Church, that the weak may be confirmed in the Truth, and that Popery may be diſgraced, when the World ſhall ſee ſuch wickedneſs flow from it: Its good in God, that ſo the wicked may be without excuſe in the day of Judgment, when their conſcience tells them, that though God ſuffers them to do ſuch villany, for ſome juſt cauſe known to himſelf, yet they commit it only of malice, and revenge: And in the midſt of ſuch vexatious practiſes, ſhe would often ſay: The mercies of God are infinite, who doth not only by his word, but by his Juſtice alſo make us fit for his Kingdom: Little do our enemies know what good by theſe things they do unto us, and what ruin they bring to their own Kingdom, while they thus ſet forth the wickedneſs thereof. Her Patience.

She uſed often to pray, That God would forgive them, who had thus wronged them, and ſend them repentance for it: She uſed to call upon her Husband to do the like, and to bleſs them that curſed him; and leſt her Husband ſhould fail in this duty, ſhe daily prayed to God to ſanctifie her Husbands thoughts, and direct his heart aright, onely to ſeek Gods glory, without ſeeking revenge, or ſatisfying his own affections: So careful ſhe was to prevent ſin, both in her ſelf, and others. Her proneneſs to forgive.

Her Meekneſs, Humility, and unſpotted carriage was ſuch, as that ſhe forced ſome that were adverſaries to her Religion, yet to ſpeak well of her: She had a good report of all that knew her, for her Holy and ſincere life: She was very pitiful, and bountiful to the poor, neglecting no opportunity of doing good where ſhe could: She conſtantly kept her times of Praying, Reading, and Meditating: She would by no means be abſent from Family duties: She uſed private duties, not only in her Cloſet, but abroad in her Garden, Orchard, &c. She tasked her ſelf to the reading of eight Chapters a day at leaſt, out of the ſacred Scriptures, and ſuch time as ſhe ſaw idly, or evilly ſpent, ſhe uſed to call, The time of temtation. Charity. Piety. Idleneſs dangerous

She ſpent much time alſo in reading good Books, judicious Expoſitors, and the Book of Martyrs, and was many times ſo affected in reading of the torments which Chriſtians were put to, &c. that ſhe would weep very bitterly for the ſame: She was ſo zealous for Gods glory, and loved the truth ſo Zeal.

intirely, that ſhe would often argue againſt Popery, but never open her mouth to plead for Baal. Sin was ſo hateful to her, that ſhe would grieve for it, both in her ſelf and others.

Once, as ſhe was riding to Church with her Husband, he was angry with his man, whereupon ſhe ſaid to him; Alas Husband, I fear your heart is not right towards God, that can be thus angry for a triſle: and weeping ſhe ſaid further: you muſt pray againſt your paſſions, and always be ſure your anger be for God; elſe how dare you appear this day before his Miniſter, and offer up your prayers in the publick Congregation before God?

Mercy. And another time a Tenant of her Husbands being behind with his rent, ſhe deſired him to bear with him a quarter of a year longer; and then when he brought it, with tears ſhe ſaid to her Husband: I fear you do not do well to take it of him, though it be your right, for I doubt he is not well able to pay it, and then you oppreſs the poor.

She was ſo blameleſs in her whole courſe, that the common enemies of Religion, the Papiſts, had nothing to ſay againſt her: and amongſt all the Godly that knew her, ſhe was highly prized for her modeſt, holy, and humble carriage.

Her ſickneſs. Thus ſhe continued with her Husband about two years, and then it pleaſed God that ſhe fell ſick of a Feaver, which was ſo violent, that it made her ſometimes to talk idly, and by Satans ſubtilty, that whatches his opportunity, ſhe began to fall into an heavy conflict of Spirit.

Tentation. Firſt ſhe began to find ſome little infirmity, and weakneſs of Faith more then ordinary, but through Gods mercy, ſhe ſoon overcame it: Shortly after Satan aſſaulted her in a more violent manner, but after a day or two, God delivered her, ſending her peace, and comfort of conſcience, which encreaſed more and more in her, to her death.

In the beginning of her conflict, the ſeverity of Gods Juſtice, and the greatneſs of her ſins came into her mind, which much afflicted her, whereof ſhe often complained: Then ſhe accuſed her ſelf of pride, that ſhe had delighted in her ſelf, and her beauty too much: Then ſhe thought that ſhe had no Faith, but was an Hypocrite, and one that had not imbraced Religion ſo ſincerely, nor glorified God ſo carefully, eſpecially with her tongue, nor loved him ſo fervently as ſhe ſhould have done: Sometimes ſhe would caſt her Bible from her, and ſay, It was indeed the Book of Life, but ſhe had read the ſame unprofitably, and therefore feared it was become to her the Book of Death: Sometimes ſhe complained that her ſins had made her a prey to Satan, a ſpectacle to the World, a diſgrace to Religion, and a ſhame to her Husband, Kindred, and all true Chriſtians, and then ſhe would weep bitterly: Sometimes ſhe was troubled for the original corruption of her nature, the ſins of her Parents; Yea, and of our Firſt Parents, as if it had made her unworthy of God, &c. Sometimes ſhe accuſed her ſelf of impatience; bewailed her want of feeling Gods Spirit: doubted of her Election, &c. She wiſhed that ſhe had never been born, or that ſhe had been made any other Creature, rather then a woman: oft-times ſhe cryed out, Wo, wo, wo, a weak, a woful, a wretched, a forſaken woman, &c. with tears continually trickling from her eyes.

She complained of grievous thirſt, ſuch as all the water in the Sea could not quench, and yet refuſed Drink, or drank very little, her anguiſh was ſo great, that Sweat burſt out upon her exceedingly: At other times her body burned extreamly: Sometimes ſhe was very dull in Prayer, and once, as ſhe ſhould have ſaid, Lead us not into tentation, ſhe ſtopped, ſaying, I may not pray, I may not pray, being thus interrupted by Satan: Yet her Friends left her not, till ſhe could both pray, and make confeſſion of her Faith, with ſpecial application to her ſelf.

Theſe

These fits, though grievous to her self, and discomfortable to her Friends, yet they were neither long, nor continual, but in the midst of them, she would give good evidences of her Faith, striving and fighting against her tentations, and by Prayer, begging strength of God against them: Oft she would with a cheerful countenance intreat her Friends not to faint, nor to give her over, but constantly to pray, and to help her against the Tempter. Her Faith.

One of them once demanding whether she believed the promises? and whether she could pray? she answered: O that I could, I would willingly, but he would not let me: Lord, I believe, help my unbelief: And when he told her that her desires, and endeavours were accepted for a performance in Christ, she was much comforted at it: once after a great conflict with Satan, she said Satan, reason not with me, I am but a weak woman, if thou hast any thing to say, say it to my Christ; He is my Advocate, my strength, and my Redeemer, and he shall plead for me.

Sometimes being afflicted with the sight of her sins, and want of comfort, with many a pitiful sob, and much weeping, she would say: Pray to the Lord Jesus Christ to help, and comfort me, a poor, woful, distressed woman.

A Godly Christian Friend took much pains with her, minding her of Gods mercies, Christs merits, the many gracious promises contained in the Word, &c. which, through Gods blessing, greatly refreshed her, and gave her occasion many times to call upon God, for encrease of grace, and deliverance from those grievous tentations, wherein also the Lord, shortly after, answered her desires, so that she began to feel her self in a very good measure delivered from her former fears, and afflictions: But the day before her death she was wholly released, and filled with abundance of inward consolations: and from the beginning that her comforts appeared, she would very cheerfully joyn with the company in Prayer, and singing of Psalms. Joy unspeakable.

One day her Brother, Holy Master John Bruen, coming to visit her; he said, Sister be not dismaied at your troubles, remember what the Apostle saith, That Judgment must begin at the House of God; To whom she answered, True it is, and if it begin at us, and the righteous shall scarcely be saved, where shall the sinners and ungodly appear? During this time she often prayed, and would rehearse many comfortable Texts of Scripture, especially the eighth Chapter to the Romans, closing up all with Prayer, and most comfortable application thereof to her self, with much joy: When food was brought her, she would pray God, not onely to sanctifie those creatures for her bodily sustinance, but also to fill her soul with the waters of life, often repeating, To him that thirsteth will I give of the Waters of Life freely.

Once she took her Bible in her hand, and joyfully kissing it, she said, O Lord, it is good for me to be afflicted, that I may learn thy Statutes: The Law of thy mouth is better to me then thousands of Gold and Silver: At another time, calling her Husband to her, she said, O Husband, beware of Popery, keep your self holy before the Lord, yield not to the abominations of the wicked, lest they rejoyce, and so you dishonor God, and destroy your own soul: Let my little child be brought up in the true fear of God, &c. So shall I meet her in Heaven, whom I must now leave behind me on Earth.

She often repeated, We have not received the Spirit of Bondage to fear again, but the Spirit of Adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father, which last words she often doubled over: She often also repeated,

I will give thanks unto the Lord,
And praises to him sing;
Because he hath heard my request,
And granted my wishing. Psal. 13. ult.

The day before her death, the Lord discovered himself more plentifully to her, from which time, to her death, she was freed from Satans tentations: She laid aside all thoughts of the World, Husband, Child, or any thing else: She lay with a cheerful countenance, as one ravished in her Spirit: Her tongue overflowed with the praises of God: Her Husband reading some Portions of Scripture to her: When he came to that John 17. 4. I have finished the work that thou gavest me to do, and now glorifie me: She desired him to pause, and then said: Blessed be thy Name, O blessed Saviour: Perfect the work, I humbly beseech thee that thou hast begun in me: When he read v. 9. I pray not for the World, but for them which thou hast given me, for they are thine. She said, O Lord Jesus, Dost thou pray for me! O blessed, and sweet Saviour, How wonderful! How wonderful! How wonderful are thy Mercies! Read on: The blessedest reading that ever I heard, the comfort whereof doth sweeten my soul: When he read v. 22. The glory that thou gavest me, I have given them, that they may be one, as we are one: With marvellous joy she said: I confess before the Lord his loving kindness, and his wonderful works before the Sons of men; for he hath satisfied my soul, and filled my hungry soul with goodness: When he read v. 24. Father, I will that they which thou hast given me, be with me, even where I am, that they may behold my glory, &c. Stay, said she, let me meditate on the goodness of the Lord, For this is the sweetest saying that ever came to my soul: For now I percieve, and feel, that the countenance of Christ my Redeemer is turned towards me, and the bright-shining beams of his mercy are spread over me: O happy am I that ever I was born to see this blessed day: Praise, praise, O praise the Lord for his mercies, &c. O my sweet Saviour, shall I be one with thee, as thou art one with the Father? Wilt thou glorifie me with that glory which thou hadst with the Father before the World was? And dost thou so love me, dust and ashes, to make me partaker of glory with Christ? what am I poor wretch, that thou art so mindful of me? O how wonderful! how wonderful! how wonderful is thy Love! O thy love is unspeakable! O I feel thy mercies, And O that my tongue, and heart were able to sound forth thy praises as I ought, and willingly would! O help me to praise the God of all consolations: And thus she continued for five hours space, praising the Lord with a cheerful and Heavenly countenance, testifying such inward joy, from a comfortable feeling of Gods mercies in her soul, using such sweet sentences and sugared phrases of Divine Eloquence, as was most admirable: Some part whereof was thus: O my Lord God, Blessed be thy Name for evermore; thou hast shewed me the path of life: Thou didst, O Lord, for a little season hide thy face from me, but with everlasting mercy thou hast had compassion on me, &c. Thou art come with fulness of joy, and abundance of consolations, &c. Help me, O help me to praise the Lord: Then she sang with as sweet a voice as ever she did in her life, the third Psalm, concluding thus.

The Lord, the God of Israel,
Be blest for evermore:
Let all the people say Amen:
Praise ye the Lord therefore.

Then she said, O praise the Lord, for he hath filled me with joy and gladness of heart: My line is fain unto me in a pleasant place; I have a goodly Heritage: For the Lord is the portion of mine Inheritance: O how pleasant is the sweet perfume of the place where I lie? It is sweeter then Aarons composed perfume of principal Spices: How comfortable is the sweetness I feel? It is like that Odour that proceeds from the Golden Censor, that delights my soul: The taste is pretious, Do you not feel it? Sweeter it is then Myrrh, the Hony, or the Hony Comb: Then she sang Psal. 19. v. 7. &c. Then she prayed to, and praised God again: after which she sang Psal. 136.

A Christian Friend seeing her exceeding joys, prayed for the continuance of them to the end: Whereupon she said, O the joys! the joys! the joys that I feel in my Soul! O they be wonderful! they be wonderful! they be wonderful! After a while she fell into a short slumber, and then awaking, she said, O come kiss me with the kisses of thy mouth, for thy love is better than Wine: O how sweet the kisses of my Saviour be? Mine eyes are opened (blessed be God) I do feel, and see the everliving mercies of my Christ, &c. O how merciful, and marvellous gracious art thou unto me? I feel thy mercy, I am assured of thy love, and so certain am I thereof, as thou art the God of Truth: Even so sure do I know my self to be thine, O Lord my God, and this my soul knoweth right well, and this my soul knoweth right well: Then she sang the fourth Psalm: And afterwards said, I am sure that my Redeemer liveth, and that I shall see him at the last day, &c. Then a Godly Minister coming to her, she said to him: My soul hath been compassed about with terrors of death, &c. A roaring wilderness of woe was within me: But blessed, blessed, blessed be the Lord my God, who hath not left me comfortless; but like a good Shepherd, hath brought me into a place of rest, even to the sweet running waters of life, &c. O blessed, blessed be the Lord, that hath thus comforted me, and hath brought me to a place sweeter than the Garden of Eden: O the joy! the joy! the delightsome joy that I feel! O how wonderful! how wonderful! how wonderful is this joy! O praise the Lord for his mercy, and for this joy that my soul feeleth full well: And thus she continued, and divers prayed with her at sundry times: and immediately before one began his prayer, she said to her self: Hear, O Lord, and have mercy upon me: Lord be thou my helper, thou hast loosed my sack, and girded me with gladness: Therefore will I praise thee, O Lord my God, I will give thanks to thee for evermore: On the Sabbath Evening her strength and speech beginning to fail her, she said, My Warfare is accomplished, and mine iniquities are pardoned: Lord, Whom have I in Heaven but thee? and I have none on earth but thee? My flesh faileth, and my heart also, but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever: He that preserveth Jacob, and defendeth his Israel, he is my God, and will guide me unto death, &c. And with that she presently fell asleep in the Lord, passing away in peace, without any motion of body at all, May, ult. Anno Christi 1601. And of her Age 22.

Mr. William Harron.

Collected out of her Life, and Death, Printed with two excellent Sermons, preached at her Funeral by two Eminent and Godly Divines.

JO:L:HARINGTON

The Life of John Lord Harrington, Baron of Exton, who Died, Anno Chriſti, 1613.

His Parentage.

His Education.

John Lord Harrington was the Eldeſt Son of the Lord and Lady Harrington, to whoſe care, and tuition King James committed the Education of his Eldeſt Daughter, the Lady Elizabeth, who was after married to Frederick, Prince Elector Palatine: They were perſons eminent for prudence and piety, who carefully educated this their Son, both in Religion, and Learning: and this Honorable Lord, as a thankful man for their care, and honor received from them, returned honor to them again and that with advantage; being no leſs honorable to them, then they were to him.

His Learning.

He was of an excellent wit, firm memory, ſweet nature, and prompt to Learning, ſo that in a ſhort time, he was able to read Greek Authors, and to make uſe of them in their own language: He ſpake Latine well, wrote it in a pure, and grave Stile, was able to confer with anv ſtranger readily, and laudably, in the Italian and French tongues: Underſtood the Authors which he read in Spaniſh: And for the Arts, he was well read in Logick, Philoſophy, and the Mathematicks: He made a good progreſs in the Theorique part of the Art Military, and Navigation, ſo that he wanted nothing but practiſe to make him perfect in both.

His Religion.

And for his underſtanding in Heavenly knowledge, and the myſteries of Salvation, it was admirable; ſo that there was ſcarce any queſtion that could be propounded to him about thoſe matters, unto which he was not able, ſuddenly and underſtandingly to give an anſwer.

His Travels.

Being well grounded both in Religion, and Learning at home, his Noble Father ſent him to Travel abroad in France and Italy, that by experience he might ripen that knowledge which before he had gained, and for a guide, and Tutor for him in his Travels, he choſe and ſent over with him one Maſter Tovy, a grave, learned, and Religious man, and formerly the head Maſter of the Free-School in Coventry.

and

But how dangerous a thing it is for Religious Gentlemen to Travel into thoſe Popiſh Countries, may appear by the example of this Nobleman, and his Tutor, whoſe ſound Religion, and Heavenly zeal for the truth, being taken notice of by the Jeſuits, they took their opportunity to adminiſter a ſlow-working poyſon to them, that ſeeing they had no hopes of corrupting their minds, they might deſtroy their bodies, and bring them to their Graves: Of this Poiſon, Mr. Tovy being aged, and ſo leſs able to encounter with the ſtrength of it, died preſently after his return into England: but the Lord Harrington, being of a ſtrong and able body, and in the prime of his age, bore it better, and conflicted with it longer, yet the violence of it appeared in his face preſently after his return, and not long after haſtened his immature death. Popiſh malice. Anno, 1609.

He was eminent for ſobriety, and chaſtity: His lips were never heard to utter any unchaſt, or unſeemly ſpeech, which was the more admirable, conſidering that he was in the heat of youth, living in the Court, and had been a Traveller into thoſe Countries which are Schools of uncleanneſs, where few return ſuch as they went out, but of chaſt are made unchaſt, or if unchaſt before, they are made ſeven fold worſe then they were: But this our Noble man was, as fiſh, freſh in ſalt waters, and kept himſelf undefiled, as Lot in the midſt of Sodom: and indeed he took the right way to preſerve his Chaſtity, by avoiding the incentives, and provocations to luſt: He ſpent not his time in courting of Ladies, and amorouſly contemplating the beauty of Women, which are bellows of Luſt, and baits of uncleanneſs: But he preferred his Books before their beauty, and for his ſociety, choſe men of parts, and learning, for Arts and Arms. His Chaſtity. His Companions.

Beſides, he was very temperate in his diet, ſhunning Feaſting, and was frequent in Faſting; and hated Idleneſs, and much ſleep, which are the two Nurſes of uncleanneſs: and in the night when he lay awake, to prevent temptations, he exerciſed his thoughts with Heavenly meditations. Tentations prevented.

His Juſtice, ſo far as he had occaſion to ſhew it, was very exemplary; He dealt honorably and honeſtly with every one that he dealt with; and whereas his Father had contracted great debts by his Princelike Houſekeeping, and other publick and private occaſions, he was very ſolicitous for the diſcharge of the ſame, giving power to his Executrix to ſell part, or all his Land, if need were, therewith ſpeedily to diſcharge the Creditors; and being asked when the writing was drawn up, Whether he aſſented to it? He anſwered, Yea, with all my heart, for my honor, and my honeſty are my neereſt Heirs. His Juſtice.

But the ſplendor of his Religion out-ſhined all his moral, and natural accompliſhments: This was the Temple that ſanctified the Gold, and the Altar that ſanctified the Offering: This was that which enobled his Sobriety, Juſtice, and other virtues: And this appeared both by his Private, and publick exerciſes of Piety, which were rare in a young man, more rare in a young Nobleman, yea, and hardly found in ſuch a meaſure in any man, of what age and condition ſoever: He uſually roſe every morning about four or five a Clock, ſeldom ſleeping above ſix hours: When he firſt waked, his conſtant care was to ſet his heart in order, and to fit it for Holineſs all the day after, offering the firſt Fruits of the day, and of his thoughts unto God. His Piety. His Religious exerciſes.

Being up, he read a Chapter out of the Holy Scriptures, then with his Servants in his Chamber, he went to prayer; then did he ſpend about an hour in reading ſome Holy Treatiſe, to enliven his affections, and encreaſe his knowledg: He read over Calvins Inſtitutions, and Rogers his Treatiſes, which were his two laſt Books.

Family Duties. Before Dinner and Supper he had a Pſalm, Chapter, and Prayer in his Family, and a Pſalm ſung, and Prayer after Supper: and beſides theſe Publick duties, he prayed privately every Morning in his Cloſet, after which he betook himſelf to ſome ſerious ſtudy for three or four hours together, except he was interrupted by ſome ſpecial buſineſs: the reſidue of the morning he ſpent in converſe with his Friends, riding the great Horſe, or ſome ſuch other honeſt and Noble recreation, till Dinner time.

His ſtudies.

Thus avoided he Idleneſs, and prevented temptations, which enſue thereupon ordinarily; preſently after Dinner he retired into his ſtudy to meditate upon ſome Sermons that he had lately heard, or if he was diſappointed of that opportunity, he neglected not to take the firſt that was offered to him; yea, many times in his Travels by Land, or Water, he thus buſied himſelf: The reſt of the afternoon he ſpent in buſineſſes, ſtudy of Hiſtories, the Art of War, Mathematicks, and Navigation, wherein he attained to a great meaſure of perfection.

His Diary. After Supper he prayed with his Servants, then withdrew himſelf into his ſtudy, where he kept a Diary, or Day-book, wherein he recorded what he had done that day; how he had offended, or what good he had done: what temptations he met with, and how he had reſiſted them: and ſurveying his failings, he humbled himſelf before God for them; and for ſuch failings as were fit to be known only to God and his own ſoul, he wrote them down in a private Character, which none could read but himſelf, and then betook himſelf to his reſt; and to prevent evil thoughts before ſleep, one that waited upon him in his Chamber, read a Chapter or two out of the Holy Scriptures to him, and this practice he continued for four years together before his death.

His ſanctifying the Sabbaths. And as his care was thus in private to walk with God, ſo no leſs was his care in publick alſo, which appeared eſpecially in his uſe of the time, and means of Gods Worſhip. He was a moſt Religious obſerver of the Lords Sabbaths, both in publick and private duties, yet preferring (as he often profeſſed) the publick before the private, ſo that though he had an Houſhold Chaplain, yet he ever frequented the publick Aſſemblies twice a day; yea, whileſt he was a Courtier: and if his occaſions caſt him into a place where the word was not preached, he would ride to ſome other place, ſometimes four miles, rather than want it: Immediately after Sermon, he withdrew himſelf from company for about half an hour, to meditate upon, and apply what he had heard to his own Soul.

After the Evening Sermon, two of his Servants having written, he cauſed them to repeat both the Sermons in his Family before Supper; and ſuch was his memory, that uſually he could remember, and ſpeak of more then they had written; Then wrote he them down in his Book, and prayed himſelf with his Family, wherein he had an excellent gift: And by way of preparation to the Sabbath, every Saturday night he uſed to call himſelf to a ſtrict account how he had ſpent the whole week, and accordingly he humbled himſelf for his failings, and returned praiſe to God for mercies received from him: On the Sabbath morning, riſing betimes, he uſed, as he was making himſelf ready, to repeat to his Servant thoſe Sermons which he had heard the Lords day before.

Faſting, and Prayer. He uſed Monthly to receive the Sacrament of the Lords Supper; and to fit himſelf to feaſt at the Lords Table, he kept a private Faſt the day before, and then he looked over his Book for his carriage that month, and ſpent the whole day in Prayer, meditation, and ſelf-examination, obſerving how it was with

with him ſince his laſt receiving, what progreſs he had made in Piety, how he had thrived in grace, and what more ſtrength he had gotten over his corruptions: and thus he ſpent the whole day, not coming out of his Study till about Supper time. His preparation for the Lords Supper.

Alſo the morning before he received, he read over 1 Cor. 11. Wherein is contained the inſtitution of the Lords Supper, and to his Servants that were to communicate with him, he read a little Treatiſe to them, wherein the right manner of preparation was contained. And beſides theſe monthly Faſts, he kept many other days of afflicting his ſoul upon ſundry occaſions.

He was wondrous attentive in hearing the word of God preached, or read, and carried himſelf exceeding reverently therein, knowing that he was in the preſence of God, that was no reſpecter of perſons, and that he heard, not the words of a man, but of God: Shewing thereby, that when he came to hear, he willingly laid down his honor at Chriſts feet; and to avoid oſtentation, or the appearance of it in his private duties, he never admitted any one, either to his prayer, or repetition of Sermons in, and with his Family, but only one Friend, that was moſt intimate with him. And thus was this Holy Servant of Chriſt blameleſs, and pure, and the Son of God without rebuke, in a naughty and crooked generation, amongſt whom he ſhined as a light in the World, holding forth the words of Life, that he might rejoyce in the day of Chriſt, that he had not run in vain, nor laboured in vain. Reverence in hearing Sermons. Sir Edward Harwood.

He further manifeſted the ſincerity of his Religion, by his love to all that were truly Godly, eſpecially to faithful, and painful Miniſters; as alſo by his mercy, and charity to the needy Saints, and poor members of Jeſus Chriſt. His love to the Saints.

After his return from his Travels, by way of thankfulneſs to God, he gave yearly, by the hand of a private Friend, twenty pounds to the poor, and the ſecond Sabbath after his landing in England (having ſpent the day before with his Tutor, Maſter Tovy, in Faſting, Prayer, and Thankſgiving) he heard the Word, received the Sacrament, and gave to the poor of that Pariſh, five pounds; and beſides, he gave forty pound to be beſtowed upon poor Miniſters, and other Chriſtians, for the relief of their neceſſities: Yea, ſuch were his bowels of tender mercy, that he gave the tenth part of his yearly allowance, which was a thouſand pounds per annum, to pious and charitable uſes, beſides much that he gave occaſionally, as he travelled, walked abroad, &c. His Charity.

Alſo all his other graces were beautified, and adorned with admirable humility, which is rarely found in perſons ſo honorable, and honored both by God and men. Humility.

From the firſt day of his laſt ſickneſs, he ſtrongly apprehended the approach of his death, and therefore accordingly prepared himſelf for it (though others thought of nothing leſs then his death:) Beſides, his private meditations, he called often for others to pray with him, prayed often himſelf: made confeſſion of his ſins, and oft confeſſed his Faith and undoubted hope of ſalvation by Chriſt, profeſſing with much cheerfulneſs, that he feared not death in what ſhape ſoever it came: He uttered many heavenly ſpeeches, deſiring to be diſſolved, and to be at home with God, and his Father, profeſſing not above two hours before his death, that he ſtill felt the aſſured comforts, and joyes of his ſalvation by Chriſt Jeſus; and when death it ſelf approached, he breathed forth theſe longing expreſſions, O that joy! O my God, when ſhall I be with thee? and ſo in the middeſt of thoſe longing deſires, he ſweetly and quietly reſigned up his ſpirit unto God, Anno Chriſti, 1613. And of his Age 22. His laſt ſickneſs. Faith. Death.

He was not ſo eminent in place, as he was in Grace, his gifts and graces and power of Religion were exceeding rare; So that the Papiſts, who brag ſo much of merits, and good works, cannot bring forth a parallel example amongſt them, of any man of his age, honor and rank, nay ſcarce of any age, or degree whatſoever, that ſhewed ſo much power of Popery, or the form of ſeeming ſanctity, as this young Nobleman did of true Piety, and power of Godlineſs.

Collected partly out of my own knowledge, and partly out of Mr. Stocks Sermon at his Funeral, and Dr. Hollands Heroologia Anglica.

P. LI MONAY.

The Life of Philip de Mornay, Lord of Pleſſis Marly.

His Parentage.

Philip de Mornay was by the Fathers ſide of the Houſe of Mornay, allied to the moſt Illuſtrious Families in France, being ſomewhile ſince united to the Royal Family of Bourbon. His Mother was of the Noble Family of Bec Creſpin in Normandie; which, for having done worthy ſervice in the conqueſt of England, obtained the Hereditary dignity of Conſtable of Normandie. This Philip was born the fifth of November, Anno 1549. Iames de Mornay his Father was a valiant Gentleman, but (according to that Age) much addicted to the ſuperſtitions of the Church of Rome, in the which he was very careful to bring up his Children. Frances de Bec his Mother (Daughter to Charles de Bec Creſpin, Vice-Admiral of France, was a woman of reſolution and wiſdom above her ſex) ſhe had ſome knowledge of the true Religion in her Huſbands life time, and endeavoured under-hand to inſtil it into her Family, and in the end wrought ſo far with her Huſband upon his death-Bed, that after ſome ardent exhortations which ſhe uſed to him in his extremity; He ſignified to the by-ſtanders, that he had no need of the Romiſh ſuperſtitious Ceremonies, nies, grounded his ſalvation upon the alone merits of Chriſt Jeſus his Saviour.

Their deſign was to have made this their Son Philip, a Church-man; by reaſon that his Uncle, Bertin de Mornay, who poſſeſſed divers Benefices, intended to reſign them all to him: But Gods providence (which would not ſuffer him to be tempted with ſuch a Bait) permitted not this Uncle to think of it at his death.

His firſt Maſter was one Gabriel Preſtat, who together with humane Learning, infuſed gently into him ſome principles of true doctrin, though he durſt not make any open mention of Religion unto him, both becauſe he knew his tender age incapable of it, and likewiſe for fear of his Father, who knew not that this Gabriel was a Proteſtant. He was afterwards brought to Paris by his Father, where he continued for two years, though in that time the courſe of his Studies was often interrupted by ſickneſs. His Education. He went to Paris.

About the end of the year 1560. he was called from Paris to his Fathers Funeral; A certain Prieſt being ſent to fetch him, who perceived that his Mother was no Friend to the ſuperſtitions of the Roman Church, and therefore he gave him this counſel upon the way; that he ſhould take heed of the Lutheran opinions, of which his Mother was ſuſpected, and that he ſhould always perſiſt in that Religion in the which he had been nouriſhed and taught. Maſter Du Pleſsis (a little aſtoniſhed by reaſon of his age) gave him this anſwer; that he was reſolved to continue firm in what he had learned of the ſervice of God; and that if he ſhould doubt of any point of it, he would diligently read the Goſpels, and the Acts of the Apoſtles for his better information therein. Tentation.

Being arrived at his Mothers, he was ſollicited by her, and his elder Brother, to read the Proteſtant Catechiſm, which he refuſed, but withal, demanded a New Teſtament in Latin and French; and one of the Geneva Impreſſion being offered unto him, he likewiſe refuſed it, but accepted of one Printed at Lyons, which he greedily read, praying God to enlighten him in the knowledge of his truth; and withal, carefully obſerving, that the chief doctrines and ſervices of the Church of Rome were not to be found in Scripture, ſuch as Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, the Sacrifice of the Maſs, adoration of Images, &c. Each of theſe, ſtill as he found no mention of it in Scripture, he blotted out of his mind, and began to ſuſpect the reſt: ſo that at laſt he deſired to ſatisfie himſelf concerning Tranſubſtantiation, and Juſtification, by reading ſome controverſies of that time, concerning thoſe Subjects; which wrought ſo good effect in him, that about the end of the year, 1561. he became reſolved to quit the ſervice of the Church of Rome. Scriptures ſtudied with Prayer. His converſion.

His Mother, though ſhe exceedingly rejoyced to ſee that he had imbraced the truth, yet would not willingly have had him to profeſs it ſo ſoon, becauſe ſhe as yet adhered outwardly to the Papiſts. But God having, about the ſame time caſt her into a ſickneſs, almoſt unto death, ſhe interpreted it as an admonition to her, not to retain any longer to the truth of God in unrighteouſneſs, making a vow in expreſs terms, in the preſence of her Children, that if God would pleaſe of his mercy to raiſe her from that bed of ſickneſs, ſhe would make open profeſſion of the Goſpel, which ſhe performed at the end of the ſame year, 1561. Carnal fear. A Vow.

About the beginning of the year, 1562. he was again ſent to Paris by his Mother, where he had ſcarce continued three months, before the troubles for Religion brake forth, which forced him to leave the City.

Being returned home, he fell ſick of a Pluriſie, which with other infirmities, ſo far interrupted his ſtudies, that he forgot almoſt all which he had Learned: Whereupon his Mother had an intention to make him Page of His ſickneſs.

the Kings Chamber: but peace being re-eſtabliſhed in the year, 1563. His importunities prevailed ſo far with her, as to return once more to Paris, where in ſhort time he recovered what before he had loſt, ſo far as to out-go his Maſter, who was wont to liſten to him, as if himſelf had been his Scholler. It is obſervable, that during this time of his continuance at Paris, he was never ſeen to play, or take other recreation then expounding before his Maſter, Plato's Timaus, or ſome ſuch like Author.

His return to Paris.

Induſtry.

About this time his Uncle the Biſhop of Nantis ſtrove to win him back to the Church of Rome, exhorting him to read diligently the antient Doctors of the Church, and the better to allure him thereto, he promiſed to reſign unto him his Biſhoprick, and to put him in preſent poſſeſſion of a Priory; But he, thanking him for his proffers, anſwered, that he would remit himſelf wholly unto God, from whom he was confident, he ſhould receive whatſoever was neceſſary for him. And afterwards did often by Letters, mark out unto his ſaid Uncle ſuch paſſages of the Fathers as confirmed the Proteſtant Religion, and confuted that of the Papiſts.

Tentation.

Reſiſted.

In the year, 1567. the ſecond troubles ariſing for Religion, he prevailed with his Mother, to permit him to put himſelf into the Army, with two of her Brothers; But the eternal providence of God, which reſerved him to higher imployments, brought it ſo to paſs, that his horſe falling upon him by the way, broke his leg, which forced him to return. This hurt was long in healing, and at length conſtrained him to undertake a Voyage into forraign Countries, the uſe of Baths being requiſite to his full recovery: Wherefore about the end of Auguſt, 1568. with much trouble and danger, he went to Geneva, and from thence by Switzerland, to Hidelberg in Germany; There he lived in the Houſe of Emanuel Tremellius, and began alſo his ſtudies in the Civil Law, gaining immediately the affections of the moſt learned in that Univerſity.

Special providence.

His Travels.

September. 1569. he went to Frankford, and from thence into Italy, remaining ſome time at Padova to continue his ſtudies in the Law, not that he intended this for his chief end, but deſiring above all, the knowledge of the Chriſtian religion, yet he would not be ignorant of the reſt; His idle hours he paſſed in the Phyſick Garden, to learn the natures and names of the herbs and plants, in which he profited ſo far in a ſhort time, that Guillandinus (the Director of that Garden) had him in ſingular admiration: Beſides, at the ſame time he read over the greateſt part of the Bible, under Rabbi Menaken a Jew, the moſt learned of that Age in the holy Tongue.

He ſtudies Hebrew.

At length the State of Venice, making a League with Spain, and the Pope, againſt the Turk, occaſioned a more ſtrict ſearch to be made by the Biſhop of Padova after ſuch as profeſſed the Proteſtant Religion; of which profeſſion Maſter du pleſſis being known to be, retired himſelf to Venice to Monſieur du Ferrier, then Embaſſador for the King of France there: and here likewiſe he was likely to have come into ſome danger for his religion: For a certain Officer of the Inquiſition, proffering him an Oath upon ſome Articles propoſed unto him; he anſwered in Italian, That his Religion, permitted him not to take it: The Officer miſunderſtanding the word Religion (which in that Language, moſt commonly ſignifies ſome Order of Friers) asked him if he were a religious perſon? Monſieur du Pleſſis (underſtanding the Officers queſtion of a Proteſtant, ſuch being in France called of the Religion) anſwered, yes, where upon the Officer proceeded no further. Divers like dangers he eſcaped by the providence of God in other parts of Italy.

He is in danger.

Gods Providence.

At Rome a Provoſt came by night, and examined him concerning his Country, his name, &c. He told him his name was Philip de Mornay, the Provoſt not hearing du Pleſſis, by which name he was moſt ordinarily called, left him, ſuppoſing he was not the man he ſought for.

From

From Venice (having first seen the rest of Italy) he went to Vienna, and from thence by Hungary, Bohemia, and Saxony, to Franckfort, and so to Cologne, in the end of the year, 1571. Here he was Familiar with Philip Ximenes, a Spaniard (the great Friend of Cassander) with whom he had often Conference about Religion. Ximenes confessed many errors in the visible Church, but would by no means allow of a separation from it: du Plessis having obtained his Arguments in writing, gave him an Answer to them, which those of Cologne, called, Triduanum Scriptum: To which Ximenes promised, but never gave an answer.

In the Spring, Anno Christi 1572. he passed into Flanders, and so into England, where he was favourably received by Queen Elizabeth, who already had him in great esteem. At that time Monsieur de Montmorency, and Monsieur de Foix, were newly arrived in England, to swear the League betwixt the Queen, and Charles King of France. These intended to send du Plessis to the Queen of Scots (then Prisoner in England) to salute her in the name of their Master. But when he perceived that he was to deliver some Letters secretly unto her, which made against the League, he refused that Commission, Saying, That he would not begin his imployment by so evil an Action. He comes into England. His integrity.

At the end of July, 1572. he returned into France, and went to wait upon the Admiral at Paris; That Fatal marriage being then ready to be solemnized between the King of Navarr, and Margaret of France: His Mother was then in the City upon her return home, and himself ready to accompany her: When news was brought that the Admiral was hurt, whom presently he ran to help, and to aid him to his lodging. He had always suspected that marriage, but this wicked act confirmed his suspition. Wherefore, desiring his Mother instantly to depart, he resolved himself to stay and attend the issue of what he suspected. Upon Bartholomew-Day (the day of that horrid Massacre) the Messenger whom he had sent to inquire of the Admirals health, returned affrighted, and told him, that the Admirals lodging was broke open by force: At which sudden news, he leapt out of his Bed, and putting on his clothes, felt an extraordinary motion in himself, which caused him to say, God will deliver me out of this danger, and I shall see it revenged: On the contrary Ramini (his Tutor) presently answered, And I shall die in it. Both which came to pass. The French Massacre. Predictions.

Whilst he intended to hasten to the Admirals Lodging, divers hinderances kept him within, till the Murderers arrived at his House, so that he had scarce time to burn his Papers, and save himself on the top of the House, till they were gone. A day or two he lay hid in Paris, and on the third day of the Massacre, he slipt out of the City (though not without much trouble and danger) under the disguise of a Lawyers Clerk: Arriving at his Mothers, he found the Family dispersed, and her self concealed by a mean Gentleman of the neighbourhood; Having saluted her, he resolved to venture for England: To which end, one proffering to procure for him the Duke de Guise his Pass, he refused it, saying, That he would not owe his life to such, for whose service he should be loath to imploy it; That God had delivered him from the Massacre, and therefore into his hands he would commit his passage; and within two or three days, finding a Boat at Diep, he passed in it safe to England: Where he had been recommended to the Queen by the Lord Walsingham, then Ambassador in France. A special providence. His Flight. Holy courage.

Being there, he wrote some Remonstrances in Latine and French; by which he exhorted the Queen to the defence of the afflicted Church; and confuted by some Apologies, the calumnies imposed upon the Protestants: He was likewise imployed in the Treaty of Marriage betwixt the Duke of Alanzon (Brother to the French King) and Queen Elizabeth. This Duke, by reaſon of ſome differences betwixt his Brothers and himſelf, took up Arms, and made uſe of the Proteſtants, as a diſcontented party, to aſſiſt him; to joyn with whom, Monſieur du Pleſſis was much ſolicited, which occaſioned him at length to return into France; but withal, he expreſſed his diſlike of joyning the Intereſt of Religion with the Dukes Ambitious, and diſcontented Ends.

His Prudence.

This War not ſucceeding, he retired himſelf to Jametz, till the death of King Charles the ſeventh, who died, Anno 1574. After which he came to Sedan, where he was deſired by the Dutcheſs of Bouillon to undertake a Journey to the Duke of Cleve, who, with the Elector Palatine, had been by her late Huſband conſtituted Executors of his Will; which (though a buſineſs of much hazard) was undertaken by him, and performed to the great contentment of the Dutcheſs. During his ſojurning at Sedan, he married Charlotte Arbaleſte, a Widdow, who having likewiſe eſcaped the Maſſacre at Paris, was fled thither for Religion: At whoſe requeſt he compoſed his Treatiſe of Life and Death.

His marriage.

In the Year 1576. He went to the King of Navarr in Guienne, who immediately received him for one of his Counſel: to whom he did much ſervice in the Wars, againſt the pretended Holy League; In reference to which, he was by the ſaid King imployed, Anno 1577. with an ample Commiſſion to the Queen of England, to ſolicite her for aid againſt the Leaguers,

He is ſent into England.

Being arrived in May at London, the Queen (who was very prompt in ſuch kind of ſpeeches) told him, That ſhe had expected him as Meſſenger from a Duke, but now ſhe ſaw him as Ambaſſadour from a King. At his Audience he obtained from her the ſum of eighty thouſand Crowns to levy men in Germany for that War, which nevertheleſs were not raiſed, by reaſon of the Peace which followed in the ſame year: During this his abode in England, he compoſed his Treatiſe of the Church.

Being reſolved to paſs into the Low-Countries, in June, Anno 1578. He took leave of the Queen at Norwich; who beſides an honorable Preſent beſtowed upon him, would have a particular Cypher for Letters to paſs betwixt them: In his paſſage he was robbed by Pyrats, where he loſt (beſides other things) his Papers, amongſt which there were ſome Books of the Hiſtory of his Time in Latine, which he had begun.

He is robbed by Pyrats.

Anno 1570. Arriving at Antwerp, he was preſent at the Treaty of Alliance betwixt Queen Elizabeth, Duke Caſimir, and the Eſtates of the United Provinces; In the which he cauſed likewiſe to be included the King of Navarr, his Maſter: He was afterward Poyſoned by one Guerin, who had been hired to Poyſon the Prince of Orange, but his youth and good conſtitution overcame the force of the Poyſon.

Popiſh malice.
Gods protection.

During his ſtay here, about the midſt of the year, 1579. he began his work of the Truth of Chriſtian Religion; of which, when he had finiſhed about four Chapters, he fell into a grievous ſickneſs, which the Phyſitians judged to be cauſed by the reliques of the Poyſon which he had taken. This continuing upon him, and the Plague raging in Antwerp, he was invited by thoſe of Gant, for change of Air, unto their City, where, they provided and furniſhed a Houſe for him. There he ſpent the reſt of that year, and begun the next, viz. 1580. And no ſooner had recovered his health in part, but immdiately he ſet himſelf to the continuance of his work. But he was that Spring taken off by new imployments.

His ſickneſs.

The King of Navarr again took up Arms, and commanded Monſieur du Pleſſis, (laying all other buſineſs aſide) to make another Journey to England to demand ſuccours; which he immediately undertook: The Queen of England land was then about to make Peace with the King of France, ſo that this Embaſſage was not very agreeable to her: Yet after his return to Antwerp, ſhe wrote a Letter with her own hand to Monſieur du Pleſſis, telling him, that he ſhould be welcome when ever he pleaſed to return into England; and that never any Gentleman had treated with her, in whom ſhe took ſo much pleaſure as in himſelf. Queen Elizabeths favor to him.

He is again ſent to England.

At Antwerp he finiſhed his Book of Chriſtian Religion, which the year after himſelf turned into Latin.

Anno 1582. He returned into France, where he publiſhed a Treatiſe, containing the Reaſons why the Counſel of Trent could not be admitted in France, Printed by command of King Henry the Third in the year following. (1583.) He was ſent by the King of Navarr to the National Synod of Vitray in Bretaigne, where he was joyfully received by the whole Company, with this Preface, That had they met him occaſionally in the ſtreets, they ſhould have earneſtly importuned his preſence with them. He was likewiſe preſent in the General Aſſembly of the Proteſtants held at Montauban, by the Kings permiſſion, in the year 1584. where he was deſired by the Aſſembly to draw up the form of their Complaints againſt the violation of the Edict for Peace, which he, together with the Count de Laval, preſented afterwards to the King at Blois. He is ſent to a Synod.

The League of the Houſe of Guiſe, breaking forth in the year 1585. which was formed firſt againſt the King, under pretence of the defence of the Catholick Religion, and afterwards declared againſt the King of Navarr, and the Proteſtants: That famous Declaration in the name of the ſaid King, was penned by Monſieur du Pleſſis, wherein the King, having anſwered the Calumnies caſt upon him by that Faction, propoſed (to avoid the calamities of a Civil War) that the quarrel might be ended betwixt himſelf and the Duke of Guiſe, notwithſtanding the inequality of their conditions, by a Combate, either of one to one, two to two, or ten to ten, more or leſs, at the choiſe of the ſaid Duke: To which Declaration Monſieur du Pleſſis would not ſet his hand, till the King of Navarr had promiſed that he ſhould be one of the Combatants, if the Conditions ſhould be accepted. But this not being accepted by the Duke, there followed the Civil Wars for Religion; in which Monſieur du Pleſſis did many neceſſary and importent Services for the King of Navarr, and the Proteſtants, both with his Sword and Pen, having anſwered a virulent Book publiſhed by the League againſt the King of Navarr, called the Engliſh Catholick. A Challenge.

Beſides his aſſiſtance in the General Aſſembly of the Proteſtants at Rochel, and his Remonſtrances to the General Aſſembly of Eſtates, held at the ſame time by the King at Blois, intended for the diſinheriting of the King of Navarr, next Heir to the Crown. At which Aſſembly his Writings ſo far prevailed, that the greateſt part of the Deputies concluded a Peace to be made with the King of Navarr, and much ado there was to make them at length change their Language.

After the death of the Duke of Guiſe at Blois, there followed a Truce betwixt the Kings, in the year 1589. Upon which Monſieur du Pleſſis was by the King of France, made Governor of Saumur. One memorable paſſage during theſe Wars cannot well be omitted, which was, That the King of Navarr, having abuſed the Daughter of a Gentleman in Rochel (by whom he had a Son) the Church had often remonſtrated his fault unto him, which he ingeniouſly confeſſed, but could not be perſwaded to take off the ſcandal by a publick acknowledgment of it, till Monſieur du Pleſſis giving him counſel about a Battel which was then ready to be fought, took the opportunity to tell him how neceſſary it was to ſeek the favour of Almighty God, the only giver of Victory, and thereupon urged him to conſult with his Conſcience, whether He is made Governor of Saumur. His Prudence.

whether he ought not to give Glory to God upon ſuch an occaſion, and what remorſe it would breed in him, if God for want of it, ſhould blaſt his undertakings, to the ruine of ſo good a Cauſe; which ſo nearly touched the Kings heart, that he commanded him to conſult with a Miniſter concerning what he had to do in that buſineſs; according to whoſe advice he made the next day a publick Acknowledgment of his fault in the Church before all the Nobility of his Army. Which counſel being thought by ſome to be too rigorous, Monſieur du Pleſſis made this anſwer, That as a man could not be too couragious before men, ſo he could not be too humble in the preſence of God.

The King of Navarr doth Penance.

After the murther of Henry the Third, by a Jacobin at St. Cloud, in Auguſt, 1587. Monſieur du Pleſſis was made Councellor of Eſtate to the King of Navarr (now Henry the Fourth King of France) whom he ſerved in the recovery of his right againſt the League of the Houſe of Guiſe, though with much hazard to himſelf, ſome having been, by their own confeſſion, hired to murther him, for which they were executed at Tours.

King of France murthered.

Sixtus Quintus then Pope, being one of the Kings chiefeſt Enemies, an expedient was propounded of taking him off by ſome honorable Embaſſage, and to that end the queſtion was put, whether the King might with a ſafe conſcience write to him? Monſieur du Pleſſis anſwered, That doubtleſs he might, it being ordinary in the ſame caſe for Chriſtian Princes to write unto the Turk; ſo that the queſtion was not, if he ſhould write, but how? Since the King could not call him holy Father, or kiſs his feet, whom according to his profeſſion, he ought to think the enemy of Chriſt, and if he ſhould write otherwiſe it would be to no purpoſe. This expedient therefore was wholly laid aſide.

Gods providence over him.

Afterwards the duke of Florence being willing to joyn intereſts with the King, fearing the too great potency of Spain, ſent a Gentleman to him, who proffered to Monſieur du Pleſſis twenty thouſand Crowns a year, if he would counſel the King to change his Religion, to which he ſtoutly replyed, That his Maſters conſcience was not to be ſold, no more then his own.

In the year 1590. He built a Church for the Proteſtants in Saumur, and obtained a grant from the King, for the inſtituting of an Univerſity there, which was afterwards confirmed by a National Synod held in the ſame place.

Courage.

The King beſieging Rouen, in the year, 1591. and fearing the Army of the Prince of Parma, which was then entred France, intending to raiſe that ſiege; Monſieur du Pleſſis was again ſent into England, to demand aid from the Queen, where he had conference with ſome Engliſh Biſhops, concerning the differences betwixt them, and the Non conformiſts, remonſtrating unto them, with what conſcience they could moleſt thoſe, who agreed in the ſame Faith with them, only for ſome ſimple Ceremonies, with whoſe infirmities they ought rather charitably to bear; which Remonſtrance cauſed them for a while to be more gently dealt with, inſtead of the perſecution which was intended againſt them.

In the year 1593. He wrote a large Letter to the King, who then had changed his Religion, deſiring the continuance of his favour to the Proteſtants, and withall expoſtulating that ſudden change, aſſuring him nevertheleſs of their fidelity towards him, and reſolution to obey their lawful Prince, of what Religion ſoever, even to the hazard of their lives. Meeting him afterwards (according to command) at Chartres, the King ſomewhat troubled at the firſt interview, began to excuſe what he had done, by telling him that he had been neceſſitated to ſacrifice himſelf for his Proteſtant Subjects, that he might with more eaſe procure a peace for them: To which Monſieur du Pleſſis anſwered, That there were better expedients for the working of that end, had his Majeſty been pleaſed to have made uſe of them, and that it would have been more agreeable to their minds to have ſacrificed their lives for him. About this time he obtained of the King a revocation of ſuch Edicts as had been made made by the Leaguers againſt the Proteſtants, and a confirmation of others, by which the free exerciſe of their Religion had been formerly granted unto them.

Anno 1595. He began his work of the Lords Supper, which he finiſhed in leſs then a year; In which Book his principal end was, to repreſent the belief and practiſe of Antiquity in moſt part of the points controverted in Religion; which deſign the King had heretofore approved, as a means to facilitate a reformation: This Book was afterward approved by the National Synod at Saumur, though not Printed until the year, 1598. The publication of it ſtirred up many enemies againſt him, eſpecially of the Clergy: The Jeſuites of Bourdeaux petitioned the Parliament there, that it might be burned; The Pope himſelf by expreſs Letters complained of it to the King, that one of his Privy Counſel ſhould dare to call him Anti-Chriſt. The King nevertheleſs took no notice of it, only ſometimes he complained to his Friends, that he was ſorry that Monſieur du Pleſſis had by this means given him occaſion not to put him upon further Employments; which likewiſe he deſired Monſieur de la Force to tell him; To whom du Pleſſis anſwered, That he had not done this act raſhly, but upon good conſideration: That the King knew well, that he was ever wont to diſtribute his ſervices firſt to God, next to his King, and then to his Friends; which method he could not with a good conſcience change; That he was not ignorant how much this would hinder his preferments in the World, which he regarded not ſo much, as to do the leſs Service for his God; That however, God was Faithful, and would honor ſuch as honor him, and much more to the like effect. Piety. Zeal.

But the Pope, ſtill underhand ſolicited the King to ruin him, whom in all his Letters he called his enemy, repreſenting that he had puniſhed one in Rome for having ſpit upon the Kings Effigies, how much more ought the King to puniſh him who had ſo irreverently uſed Gods Vicar: And ſo far was the King led away by his frequent ſolicitations, that notwithſtanding the important ſervices of Monſieur du Pleſſis, he ſought all poſſible occaſions to caſt him off, which though ordinarily not hard to find in one who had ſo high a charge in the adminiſtration of the Common-wealth, yet (by the grace of God aſſiſting him) Calumny could not find on that ſide where to faſten.

At laſt (having nothing elſe to accuſe him of) his Book muſt be laid hold of, for a pretence to ruin him, in which the Biſhop of Eureux [du Perron] promiſed to ſhew five hundred falſe quotations: Du Pleſſis on the contrary offered to make good all the paſſages cited in his Book, out of Impreſſions approved by his Adverſaries. Whereupon a Conference was appointed at Fountainbleau. But the Sorboniſts fearing leſt the examination of particulars would prove to their diſadvantage, deſired the Popes Nuncio, and he the King, to hinder it.

The King deſired him not to trouble himſelf, ſince he would ſo manage the buſineſs, that the diſgrace ſhould remain upon the Proteſtants, which he intended to bring to paſs, by ordaining, that at the Conference the Biſhop ſhould open the Book, and name to the number of fifty paſſages, if the time would permit, to which du Pleſſis was to make anſwer ex tempore, otherwiſe he was reſolved to verifie the Biſhops accuſation.

This being told to du Pleſſis, he anſwered, that it was a hard condition for him, to make an unpremeditated anſwer to ſuch quotations as the Biſhop ſhould pick out of ten thouſand alledged in that Book, to the retaining of all which, no humane memory could ſuffice. Whereupon the conditions where a little (though very little) qualified, and thus propoſed; That the Biſhop ſhould quote unto him ſixty paſſages over night, to which he was to anſwer at eight the next Morning. Monſieur du Pleſſis (after ardent prayers to God) accepted the condition. Prayer.

About one of the Clock after mid-night the ſixty paſſages were brought to him, quoted only thus, Scotus p. 869. Durand. pag. 870, &c. beſides that the Books which he borrowed of the Biſhop (he having none there of his own) at two of the Clock, were again ſent for by ſix; yet in this ſpace of four hours (though weak ſighted) he had examined nineteen of the quoted paſſages; At eight of the Clock he was called, though then put off till one in the afternoon, ſo that but nineteen of the quotations were examined; upon his anſwer to the firſt, the Moderators (being moſt part Papiſts) were aſhamed, and pronounced in favour of Monſieur du Pleſſis; which they were about to have done likewiſe in the ſecond, had not the King interpoſed, which made them decide it againſt him. For the reſt, they were chiefly ſuch paſſages of Fathers, as the Biſhop pretended, that du Pleſſis had not intirely quoted; in which though du Pleſſis made it appear, that the words pretended to be fraudulently left out, were all to the ſame effect; yet the Moderators judged, that it were good they had been added.

This was the ſumm of that Conference; concerning which du Pleſſis Printed afterwards a Relation to vindicate himſelf: But the Biſhop every where cried up the Victory which he pretended to have gotten there, yea, even in the Cathedral Church, in a Sermon before the King and Court at Whitſontide, (About a fortnight after the Conference.) He was himſelf the Trumpet to his own praiſes: But that week a flaſh of Lightning broke into the Church, ſhattered the Pulpit where the Biſhop had Preached all the Holidays, burnt ſome Images, and at the ſame time fell likewiſe in the Kings Garden: Alſo on the Thurſday following, the Biſhop Preached again in a Church neer the Louvre, upon which Church, within two nights after, fell another flaſh of lightning, which uncovered part of the Steeple, and beat down ſome Images; and at the ſame inſtant falling again into the Kings Garden, burned ſome Orange Trees there.

Providences extraordinary.

In theſe Prodigies, the very Adverſaries of du Pleſſis acknowledged the finger of God; Neither would they ſuffer the Biſhop to Preach any more in their Churches; Beſides, that himſelf made an oath to preach no more till Winter.

Monſieur du Pleſſis thus faln into diſfavour with the King, began to lead a more private life, though he had ſtill a large influence upon publick affairs.

Popiſh treachery. Gods protection.

In the year 1602. A certain Monk had hired two young men to kill him; who came in Sermon time into the Church, at Saumur; the one of them drawing ſo neer, as to lift up the Carpet which lay before him, but had not the boldneſs to ſtrike: Being taken upon ſuſpition he confeſſed his intentions, and who ſet him on work; whereupon the Monk was apprehended, and hanged. Afterwards the King began again by little and little to favor him, moved thereunto, not only out of his own inclinations, which had been always towards him, though thus clouded for a while, for fear of the Pope; but likewiſe by a Remonſtrance from Queen Elizabeth, who had told his Ambaſſador, that ſhe knew not how to truſt his Maſter, who ſo far depended on the Pope, as for his ſake to ſlight his beſt and moſt Faithful Servant.

His Son ſlain.

In January, Anno 1605. The only Son of Monſieur du Pleſſis was ſent for to the Court by the King, who intended an imployment for him, where he was well received: But the deſign for which he had been ſent for, failing, he deſired leave to go into Holland, which was granted him, where he was the ſame year unhappily ſlain before Gueldres; which bred ſo great a grief in his Mother, that ſhe lived not long after, departing this life in May, Anno 1606. This was one of the moſt remarkable Epoches in the whole Life of Monſieur du Pleſſis, in the which two ſuch great and ſo contiguous loſſes had befaln him: After his Sons death, he had both his his own grief to combat with, and to comfort that of his Wife: But after her death he was wont to ſay, That heretofore ſhe had been an aid to him in living well, and ſhould hereafter be ſo in teaching him to die well; From thenceforth he took this for his Motto, Mihi bis anhelo ſuperſtes. His Wife dies. A good Wife.

The ſame year he was again himſelf called to the Court, and graciouſly received by the King, where he continued, till the year following, at which time he deſired leave of the King to retire himſelf, which the King unwillingly granted; withal, deſiring him to come ſometimes to Court, and expreſſing his grief that he could not employ him according as he deſired, the reaſon whereof himſelf well knew, meaning the ſcandal which the Pope would have taken at it: Being returned to Saumur, he began his Work of the Myſtery of Iniquity, Anno 1607. which, though a work of infinite labour, yet he finiſhed it in nine moneths. In which it is remarkable, that to ſpare his ſight, he dictated it to others that wrote it from his mouth. He is ſent for to Court.

In the Spring, Anno 1608. He began to ſet upon thoſe great Volumns of Baronius, to which he intended a confutation. About this time likewiſe were thoſe Letters of his written into Holland, concerning the Novelties introduced into the Church by Arminius, to whom he adviſed the French Church to ſend one of their Miniſters (naming Monſieur du Moulin) to confer with him concerning the Points by him maintained, and to adjure him in the name of God to forbear begetting of Parties in the Church: This adviſe was approved by the Church, but fearing to offend the King, they durſt neither ask his leave, nor ſend without it. His zeal againſt Hereſie.

Du Perron, Biſhop of Eureux, now made Cardinal, and Arch-Biſhop of Sens, was much preſſed by the King to anſwer Monſieur du Pleſſis, to which he was likewiſe urged by his Friends, who told him that the Action at Fontainbleau was little to his credit, and that ſhould du Pleſſis die, it would be then too late to anſwer him, becauſe men would be ready to ſay, that he durſt not do it in his Life time; wherefore he promiſed, and undertook the buſineſs: And going to Rome, ſequeſtred himſelf from other buſineſs for the ſpace of a year to perform it, promiſing the Pope at his arrival in France to Print his anſwer, which he ſaid was riſen to a great Volumn.

Upon his return, the King asked him when he would Print it? He told his Majeſty, that he ſtayed but for ſome Manuſcripts from Rome; which anſwer, the King ſeeing his delays, uſed as a Proverb to ſome undertakers, whoſe work went not forward, who making idle excuſes to him; Yes (ſayes the King) I ſee you ſtay for Manuſcripts from Rome too; Cauſabon, who was about the Cardinal, wrote to Monſieur du Pleſſis concerning this Anſwer, telling him that it was finiſhed, and that himſelf had ſeen it; whom du Pleſſis deſired, as the Cardinals Friend, to give him from him the ſame Counſel which Chriſt did to Judas in the Goſpel: What thou doſt, do quickly. But this Volumn of anſwer never appeared; The Cardinal after the Kings Murther, thinking himſelf to be diſingaged from his promiſe.

In October, Anno 1609. Monſieur du Pleſſis had notice given him of a Book in Folio, ſeen in the Houſe of one that was a Confident of the Jeſuits, which was written to the half, containing divers Oaths ſigned with blood; in which they obliged themſelves to obey the commands of the Pope: of which he immediately gave a ſecret advice to the Court; but by the evil conduct of him that was appointed to ſearch for it, the Book miſſed of being found. This year he turned into Latine his Book of the Myſtery of Iniquity, which he dictated ſo faſt, that his Amanuenſis had much ado to keep pace with him with his Pen.

The horrid Murther of the King following in the year. 1610. he upon notice of it, took ſo good order, as to keep the people about his Government in quiet, who upon that ſudden change, were ready to take up Arms: And as ſoon as he had received the Edict for the Regency of the Queen Mother, he adminiſtred the Oath of Fidelity to all the Clergy and People within his Juriſdiction; making a ſpeech unto them, in which he deſired them to forget the diſtinguiſhing names of Papiſt and Proteſtant, which having cauſed ſo many misfortunes, ought to be buried in this great one: Profeſſing, that whoever would ſhew himſelf a good French-man, and a Faithful Subject, ſhould be of him reſpected as his Brother.

In May Anno 1611. was held in Saumur the General Aſſembly of the Proteſtant Churches; where, chuſing a Preſident, ſix of the ſixteen Provinces were for the Duke de Bouillon, the other ten for Monſieur du Pleſſis; who being much troubled at it, deſired them to chuſe again, but was by the company commanded to take the place: At which the Duke being diſcontented, there followed a diſſention in that Aſſembly, manifeſtly tending to a Schiſm in the Church, which du Pleſſis (though a party) much laboured to reconcile, and at laſt, that was happily brought to paſs in the National Synod held the year following at Privas.

A bleſſed peace maker.

Another diſſention afterwards happened between Monſieur du Moulin, Miniſter of the Church at Paris, and Monſieur Tilenus, Profeſſor at Sedan, about the effects of the Union of the two natures in Chriſt: The making up of this difference was, by a National Synod held at Tonneinx, referred to Monſieur du Pleſſis, who proved the happy Author of a full reconciliation betwixt them, in the year, 1614. Yet had this difference like to have broke forth again the year following, by the indiſcretion (or malice rather) of ſome particular perſons, had not Monſieur du Pleſſis in time ſtopped its progreſs: In which he was aided by a ſeaſonable Meſſage of King James; who at that time ſent to invite du Moulin into England, to confer with him about a Method of Uniting all the Reformed Churches of Chriſtendom, to which he had been often ſolicited by Monſieur du Pleſſis. The iſſue of which Voyage was, That the King reſolved to ſend Letters to all Proteſtant Princes, to invite them to Union, and deſired the French Churches to frame a confeſſion gathered out of all thoſe of other reformed Churches, in the which unneceſſary points might be left out, as the means of begetting diſcord and diſſention.

King James mediates peace.

Some years following were ſpent by Monſieur du Pleſſis in procuring the peace of the Proteſtant Churches, and endeavouring to keep a good correſpondence between the King and them, which was continually ready to be interrupted; in which buſineſs he carryed himſelf with ſo much prudence and fidelity in all occurrences between them, that he was admired, and praiſed by all, yea, even Cardinal Perron himſelf (heretofore one of his greateſt enemies) ſhewed him great reſpect in the Aſſembly of Eſtates held at Rouen, Anno 1617. ſpeaking of him in all companies with an exceſs of Prayſes; and telling the King himſelf, that thoſe men had done him wrong who had kept off Monſieur du Pleſſis from having a greater power in the management of his affairs; And that his Religion ought not to render him unprofitable in the exerciſe of thoſe graces which God had given him; and that his Majeſty ought to keep him neer his perſon ſo long as he ſhould live. Which praiſes the ſaid Cardinal reiterated upon his death-bed, in September, Anno 1618. charging his Friends then about him, to ſend a ſolemn Farewel from him to Monſieur du Pleſsis, and to manifeſt his ſorrow for not having made a ſtraighter league of Friendſhip with him, having ſo high an eſteem of his Conſcience and integrity.

Cardinal Perron praiſes him.

His Government of the Town and Caſtle of Saumur was continued unto him till the year, 1621. when the King falling into diſpleaſure and ſuſpition of the Proteſtants, by reaſon of their high deportment in the Aſſembly

at

at Rochel, diſplaced him at firſt but for three Moneths, with a promiſe of reſtoring him ſo ſoon as affairs ſhould be a little quieted. But theſe diſcontents growing to an open War, he could never procure a re-eſtabliſhment, though it were continually ſolicited by him; Wherefore retiring himſelf to his Houſe in the Forreſt upon Dayure, he continued there till the day of his death, which followed in the year, 1623. there applying himſelf to holy meditations and exerciſes of Patience.

His preparation for death.

He did by a particular providence of God make his laſt Will for the peace of his Family, and the edification of thoſe that ſhould ſurvive him; which having finiſhed upon the third of November, in the forementioned year, he expreſſed himſelf to be now diſcharged of one of his greateſt cares, and that nothing was now left for him to do, but to dye well.

The next day he was ſeized by a continual Feaver, forcing him to keep his bed, which ſo continued and encreaſed upon him, that upon the ninth of the ſame moneth the Phyſicians gave over all hopes of his recovery: Nevertheleſs he lived for forty eight hours after, which he ſo well husbanded in the care of his ſalvation, that ſcarce one of thoſe hours was employed in any other buſineſs. In all which time he gave both by word and action, ſo many expreſs and evident ſigns of his faith and aſſurance, that it may be truly ſaid, that in this ſhort time he confirmed by Irrefragable proofs all that he had ſaid or written of the truth of Chriſtian Religion.

In all this time he felt little or no pain, ſo that when the Miniſter asked him how he did, he ſtill would anſwer, well, very well. His ſpeech continued till the tenth day at midnight, which he continually imployed in prayers for himſelf and his enemies, and in comfortable ſpeeches to the by-ſtanders; ſometimes in the middeſt of his prayers, being heard to ſay, I fly, I fly to Heaven, the Angels are carrying me into the Boſome of my Saviour, ſometimes repeating thoſe words of Iob, I know that my Redeemer liveth, I ſhall ſee him with mine eyes, hiſce oculis, repeating divers times theſe laſt words in Latine. Being asked if he felt not the Spirit within him, ſealing unto him the promiſes of God, he anſwered, Yes indeed, I am aſſured of it; and again, I feel, I feel what I ſpeak. Two hours after, his ſpeech, and his hearing failed him, and his breath between ſix and ſeven in the morning of the eleventh day, which was the hour that he yielded up his ſpirit into the hands of God his Creatour, finiſhing by a happy death, a life of above ſeventy four years continuance, exemplary ſpent in the fear of God, and the profeſſion of his Goſpel. His Death.

The laſt hours of Monſieur du Pleſſis.

MOnſieur du Pleſſis by an inſtinct from God, had made, and dictated his Teſtament, upon the twenty fourth day of Octob. 1623. In the which, for the peace of his Family, and the edification of his ſurvivors, he had ſet down his laſt will and pleaſure. But by reaſon of ſome intervenient occaſions he did not ſign it till the third of November following, which having done, Now (ſaid he) behold, I am diſcharged of one of my chiefeſt cares, and for the time to come have nothing elſe to look after but Death. And indeed, from the day following he kept his bed for the moſt part, being ſeized by a continual Feaver, which was ſince known to be of that ſort, which is commonly called Lityria. This ſickneſs continuing, and increaſing upon him, the Phyſicians gave advertiſement unto his friends, upon Thurſday the ninth of that month, that his eſtate was ſuch, as no humane hopes were left that he could ever recover it. After which time God continued him upon earth for the ſpace of forty eight hours, which he ſo well imployed in the Thoughts of himſelf, and his Salvation, that he ſcarcely ſpent any one intire hour of them upon any Preparation for Death.

other buſineſs; giving both by his words and actions, ſuch expreſs and evident Faith. Teſtimonies of his Faith and Aſſurance, that it may be truly ſaid, that in that ſhort time he confirmed by irrefragable proofs, all that ever he had ſaid or written concerning the truth of Chriſtian Religion.

The Goſpel of the Son of God was plainly ſeen to be ingraved upon his heart by the Holy Spirit. He ſeemed in the midſt of death to have obtained a firm poſſeſſion of Life, and to injoy a full contentment in that, at which moſt men are ordinarily affrighted. And this Leſſon was ſo lively and efficatious, that even thoſe who had the greateſt ſhare in the loſs of him, reaped joy and conſolation from the very ſubject of their grief: Would to God that all men could have been preſent there! Since it is impoſſible for any Pen to imprint that force upon his Expreſſions, which his own Accent, and the condition wherein he was, gave unto them. His words we ſhall endeavour to expreſs; though wanting that ſoul and life which they had in his mouth: And while we recount them as ſuch, we ſhall intreat ſuch as were then preſent to remember, with what voice and action they were accompanied; and thoſe that were abſent to imagine what weight the Spirit and Tongue of ſuch a Perſonage could add unto them, ſealing by a happy Death, a Life of ſeventy four years, ſpent (as is publikely known) exemplarily in the fear of God, and the profeſſion of his Goſpel.

On Thurſday, the ninth of November, Madam de Villarnoul his eldeſt daughter, came in the morning to his bed ſide, where, after ſhe had enquired of his health, as ſhe ſtood ſilent, he told her that he deſired ſome one might come and hold ſome good diſcourſe with him: Upon which occaſion they cauſed a Miniſter, being his houſhold Chaplain, to come, that he might give him notice of the dangerous condition in which he was, and prepare him to undergo the Will of God. And though the Miniſter was much troubled to be the bearer of ſo ſad a meſſage, yet he uſed much livelineſs in the delivery, without making uſe of the circumſtances wherewith men commonly uſher in ſuch diſcourſes; To whom Monſieur du Pleſſis was not any ways moved or aſtoniſhed, but with a countenance and ſpirit full of aſſurance, anſwered. Yea, ſaith he,
Charity. is it true? I am very well content it ſhould be ſo; And do in the firſt place pardon from my heart all ſuch as have done or procured evil unto me: Further, beſeeching God, that ſhe would pardon and amend them. The Miniſter praiſing God for that he was thus ready to forgive unto others their offences, which was an evident ſign that God would forgive him his; prayed him, that as he had edified the Church in his life time, ſo that now likewiſe he would do the ſame at his death, and ſince he ſtill injoyed the uſe of his Tongue, that he would comfort and edifie the By-ſtanders by his ſpeeches. To which he anſwered, That he had not his ſpeech ſo free as they imagined; neither indeed could he ſpeak without pain; nevertheleſs the deſire which he had to give an outward Teſtimony of the internal diſpoſition of his heart, made him in ſome meaſure overcome this hindrance: only he abridged into as few words as he could all that he had to ſay. Then he began a Confeſſion of his Faith, but not being able to finiſh it, he lifted up himſelf from the Chair whereon he ſate, and ſaid to the Miniſter, I have a great account to make, having received much, and profited little: It being anſwered, that he had, by the grace of God, faithfully and happily imployed his Talent, having ſerved the Church with much profit, and advanced the Kingdom of Chriſt. Alas, (ſaid he) what was there of mine in Humility, that Work? Say not that it was I, but God by me, which ſaying he repeated three or four times afterwards upon like occaſions, reciting at one time that paſſage of St. Paul, 1 Cor. 15. 10. I have laboured, yet not I, but the grace of God which is in me; ſpeaking theſe laſt words in Greek, as they are in the Original ἡ σὺν ἐμοὶ, giving thereby all the glory to God, without dividing it betwixt himſelf and his grace, as thoſe which underſtand that tongue may eaſily percieve.

After-

Afterwards, being laid upon his bed, There is nothing, (ſaid he) more juſt and reaſonable, than that the creature ſhould obey his Creator: Then lifting up his hands above his head, he thrice cryed out, Mercy, adding, that he did it to ſhew, that it was the alone mercy of God to which he had his recourſe, and to which we ought to have ours alſo: That he had heretofore deſired to live, in hope to ſee the deliverance of the Church: But that finding no repentance in the world, he now found nothing that ſhould invite him to continue in it: Then compoſing his countenance, with a firm and grave voice, he gave his bleſſing, firſt unto his daughters, afterwards unto his ſons in Law, recommending peace unto them, to which (ſaid he) I leave you, as alſo to their children, and whole poſterity, as well preſent as abſent, praying God to ratifie this his bleſſing by his moſt holy benediction; He gave his bleſſing likewiſe to Monſieur de Auberville his Nephew, and his Wife; after to his Family and houſhold Servants, and in particular, to the Miniſter which then aſſiſted him, beſeeching the Lord to proſper the holy Miniſtry of his Word in his hands. He called likewiſe Monſieur Diſſandeau the Phyſician, which had always faithfully ſerved him in his ſickneſſes, particularly in this, and bleſſed him.

At the ſame time calling to mind Monſieur Boucherean, Miniſter of the Church in Saumur, he prayed God to bleſs him, and, Let it not trouble him (ſaid he) to be patient; He hath to do with a troubleſome people, I beſeech God not to impute their ſins unto them; There are ſome in the company which know what I mean. He underſtood by theſe words thoſe horrible calumnies, with which he had been, eſpecially in his latter years, unworthily and outragiouſly charged at Saumur, more than any other place. After he gave his bleſſing to the Church of Saumur, and to that of Saint Iovin (which was the neareſt to his houſe) taking notice that there were in it many good men, which bore affection to the word of God. At length he prayed to God for all the Church in general, that he would deliver it, and relieve it from oppreſſion, and reſtore it to a proſperous eſtate. After which he gave charge to the Miniſter to write to Madam de Noiers, daughter to his wife by her former husband, to tell her, that he gave his bleſſing to her, and all her houſhold: Remembring a while after Madam de l'Iſle, daughter to Monſieur and Madam de Villarnoul, he expreſſed his ſorrow for not ſeeing her, bleſſing her & her children: As alſo a while after he bleſſed particularly ſuch of his Grand-children, as did or had followed the ſtudies of Learning, ſaying, that he was aſſured they ſhould be bleſſed with the bleſſings both of Heaven above, and of the Earth beneath.

This being done, he proteſted that he had through his whole life made Gods glory his end and aim; adding withal, that ſuch as knew him, were not ignorant, that had he propoſed any other end unto himſelf, it had been an eaſie matter for him to have come to great riches and honours. Thereupon (the Miniſter queſtioning him upon that ſubject) he declared, That he perſiſted conſtantly in the faith wherein he had lived, which alſo by the grace of God he had defended by example, word, and writings; That were his life again to begin, he would walk in the ſame way and path, by which he had already ſteered his courſe, to wit, by perſevering in the profeſſion of the Goſpel, notwithſtanding the many dis-favours which he had ſuffered for it; That this his Faith was altogether founded upon the goodneſs and mercy of God in Chriſt Ieſus, who by the Father had been made unto him, and unto all ſuch as believe in him; Wiſdom and righteouſneſs, ſanctification and redemption; And for your works, Sir, (ſaid the Miniſter unto him) do you attribute no merit at all unto them? Away (anſwered he) away with all merit both of mine, and of any other mans whatſoever: I call for nothing but mercy, free mercy. Upon which the Miniſter pronounced unto him, in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, the remiſſion of his ſins, and the inheritance of eternal life, belonging unto all thoſe that believe in the Son of God, ſaying, that he did it in the vertue and diſcharge of his duty, not that he at all doubted, but he in his heart fully felt the grace of God, and had full aſſurance of his mercy; I thank you (ſaid he) for it, and take your ſaying for an earneſt of the goodneſs of God towards me.

Monſieur de Villarnoul, praiſed God that he ſaw him enjoy ſo much comfort in his end, which he had always heard him to deſire, during his life, that he might be able to teſtifie it from his heart, and not dye without ſpeaking it; I feel (ſaid he unto him) my Son, I feel what I ſpeak. Afterwards the Miniſter demanding if he deſired that they ſhould pray unto God to fortifie him more and more, and likewiſe that he would reſtore him unto his health, that he might further ſerve him unto his glory. Pray unto God (ſaid he) that he would diſpoſe of me. It being anſwered, that all hope was not yet loſt, that what had been told him concerning the danger of his preſent condition, was but for fear leaſt ſome accident ſhould take away the conſolation of hearing him ſpeak: But that God was Almighty, able to raiſe up even thoſe that were already in the grave; I am not (ſaid he) an enemy unto life, but I already ſee one that is far better than this.

A while after, Madam de Villarnoul ſaid unto him, that ſhe hoped God would reſtore him at the inſtance of their prayers; My daughter (ſaid he) let him do what he pleaſes, I depend upon his will. And indeed though he always teſtified a great reſolution and aſſurance to encounter with Death, yet he never rejected ſuch remedies, or nouriſhment as were proffered unto him; and namely, that day he dined as he was accuſtomed: He retired himſelf from life, he fled it not.

After this they prayed by him, during which exerciſe he was extreamly attentive, his hands and eyes following to their power, the motions of his heart: And as long as the leaſt ſenſe was left unto him, he conſtantly lent a like attention to all the prayers, which at divers times were preſented unto God for him, during the ſpace of thoſe forty eight hours; ſo that about five hours before his death, when already motion and ſence began to fail him, it was marked, that he endeavoured with one hand to lift the other from under the clothes, that he might hold them joyned and lifted up, during the prayer.

Prayer being ended, he deſired they would read unto him the 71. Pſal. of which himſelf made choice; There was likewiſe read unto him the Meditation which himſelf had before time made upon 2 Tim. 4. 7. I have fought a good fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith, &c. And moreover, by his command, another, which he had likewiſe publiſhed upon thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt, Caſt thy burthen upon the Lord. Whileſt theſe were reading, he was very attentive, giving us infinite Teſtimonies of the pleaſure which he took in it, and of the applications which he made from thence for his own conſolation; All this during three good hours and above; After which we left him to his repoſe, as ſince we always obſerved the ſame, to give him ſome time of reſt after that we had heard him. All which ſpaces he employed in prayers and holy meditations by himſelf, as appeared by the motions, ſighs, words, which from time to time brake from him, of the aſſurance which he had in God; of the Victory which by his grace he had obtained againſt the Tempter, and the like.

In the afternoon, upon a diſcourſe which was made unto him of the bleſſed immortality, the Miniſter ſaying, That here below we have but the right and Title, the Poſſeſſion being reſerved for us in heaven, himſelf cited to this purpoſe the words of St. John in the firſt Epiſtle, Chapter the third: Beloved, now are we the children of God, but what we ſhall be doth not yet appear; now we know that when he ſhall appear we ſhall be like unto him. From whence, an occaſion being given to diſcourſe unto him of the Reſurrection, he thought good that they ſhould read unto him the fifteenth chapter of the firſt of the Corinthians, thians, and marked (ſo freſh and untroubled was his ſpirit) upon the forty ſeventh Verſe, The firſt man being of the Earth, is of duſt (for ſo it ſounds in the French Tranſlation) that it is in the Text χοικὸς.

About the end of this Lecture, arrived Madam de la Tabarriere, his daughter, ſent by her husband to viſit him, and render the laſt offices of her Duty to him: He expreſſed much contentment in ſeeing her, ſaying, that God had granted him that which he deſired: That ſhe made up a great part of his comfort, and had done him a great pleaſure in coming. He enquired likewiſe concerning ſome of her children, which ſhe had not brought with her; and gave her his bleſſing: Afterwards exhorting all his children in general, to Union and brotherly Love, that they might poſſeſs in peace the Inheritance which he ſhould leave unto them; injoyning them in particular, not to go to Law about it; which was promiſed unto him with great aſſeverations, by his ſons in Law, and daughters, and particularly by Madam de Fontenay in the name of her husband, then abſent in Normandy: Which being done, full of contentment, he ſaid, That he was arrived at the height of comfort, ſince he died with the aſſurance of leaving peace amongſt his children. And as all retired themſelves to leave him in repoſe; How ſhould I ſleep (ſaid he) there being ſo many good people near me? His daughters then returning unto him, he took them by the hands, ſaying, That he would ſpeak unto them, and would have them to anſwer him; And then repeated unto them all the preceeding Exhortations, tending to the fear of God, and to Peace and mutual Concord. Some time after, the Miniſter diſcourſing unto him, That of all his Enemies he had now none left to fear, not Sin, not Death, not the Devil, not the World, being already diſcomfited by the Lord Ieſus, and ſpeaking to each of theſe in particular, he ſeemed to take much delight in that diſcourſe: Amongſt the reſt, as he ſpoke unto him concerning ſin, he ſaid, That its power was the Law, aboliſhed by Chriſt for ſuch as believe in him; for Death, that it was indeed to be feared of thoſe that are out of Chriſt, φοβερώτατον βίλος (ſaid he in Greek, alluding to a paſſage in Ariſtotles Ethicks, where death is ſo called) but not to thoſe that die in the Lord, by whoſe Croſs, death was diſarmed: As touching the World, the Miniſter telling him that he knew well by his own experience, how little its temptations can prevail againſt ſuch as the Lord fortifies, his Grace and Mercy, having always conſtantly accompanied him in all his ways, even to the preſent hour, which was an aſſured ſign of the faithfulneſs of his eternal love towards him. He anſwered, lifting up his eyes on high, Thy Gifts, O God, and thy Call are without repentance: And upon that it was ſaid, That the World, to deceive the faithful, ſometimes threatens, and ſometimes flatters them. Theſe are (ſaid he) the ſubtilties of Satan. The Miniſter continuing the ſame diſcourſe, and ſhewing, that from henceforth the Calumnies of the Devil can do nothing againſt the children of Chriſt, being juſtified, and ſanctified by faith in him, who is it (cried he out) that ſhall frame an accuſation againſt the Elect of God? God is he that juſtifies; Declaring further, that he was fully aſſured to have part in all his Promiſes, ſo that neither life, nor death, things preſent, nor things to come, ſhould ever be able to ſeparate him from the love of his Saviour: Which ſaying, he repeated divers times.

The Evening of the ſame day, upon diſcourſe of the vanity of the World, Alas, (ſaid he) what is the world? It being anſwered, The World is but a Figure, he added (as it follows in St. Paul) which paſſeth away: And preſently uſed that expreſſion of Pindar in Greek, Σκιᾶς ὄναρ ἄνθρωπος. After, leaving this Diſcourſe, he inſiſted much upon Confeſſion of his ſins, Saying, That he was a grievous ſinner, even one of the greateſt that was upon the earth, That there was in him, as he acknowledged, the ſeeds of all evil; but that in Ieſus Chriſt he ſhould obtain mercy: And thereupon required with much affection, that they would ſpeak unto him touching the Death and Paſſion of our Saviour; which being done, and followed by prayer, he heard all with great Devotion, and at the end of the Prayer, ſaid theſe words, Amen, by Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, in whom all the Promiſes of God are, Yea, and Amen. Theſe were the greateſt part of thoſe things in Meditation, wherewith he ſpent the whole Thurſday, and the night following.

Friday morning, as we approached to his Bed-ſide, praying him that he would continue to edifie, and comfort us, by the Teſtimonies of his Faith and Perſeverance: He began with a Prayer, which he pronounced in Latine, Lord open thou my lips, and I will ſhew forth thy praiſe; Lord make me to know my ſins, to weep for them, to deteſt them, to have them in execration, which he repeated twice; Upon this the Miniſter took occaſion to ſpeak unto him concerning the remiſſion of his ſins, and the comfort which follows it, founded upon the hope of immortality, it being impoſſible that ſuch as are in Chriſt, though feeble, beaten down, and deſtitute, ſhould yet ever fall from life; the power of the Lord perfecting its ſelf in the midſt of their infirmities, in ſuch manner, that the inward man was ſtill fortified as the outward man grew weaker: Citing unto him, and reading all along to this purpoſe the end of the fourth Chapter of the ſecond to the Corinthians, from the fifteenth Verſe, and the beginning of the fifth, to the two and twentieth Verſe, laying a particular Emphaſis upon theſe words, We know that if our earthly houſe of this Tabernacle be diſſolved, we have a building of God, an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. And asking him if he believed not all theſe things; If in this Faith he were not aſſured to be made partaker of that eternal weight of glory, ſpoken of by the Apoſtle; He anſwered; That he was intirely perſwaded of it, by the demonſtration of the holy ſpirit, more powerful, more clear, and more certain than all the demonſtrations of Euclide, and ſpeaking thoſe words, by the demonſtration of the holy Spirit, taken out of the 1 Cor. 2. 4. he repeated them in Greek ἀποδείξει πνεύματος, as they are in the original; and a little after upon the ſame ſubject ſaid, That he had ſeen the ſalvation of God, the wonderful works of God, τὰ μεγαλεῖα τοῦ θεοῦ (ſaid he) in the words as they read, Act. 2. 11. Wherefore he might not ſay with Simeon, Nunc dimittis ſervum tuum in Pace, upon which he repeated likewiſe two or three times that of the Pſalmiſt, I believed, and therefore have I ſpoken, applying it as did Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 4. 13. to ſhew that all his confidence and aſſurance proceeded from his Faith.

After noon he was heard praying to himſelf, and ſaying in broken ſentences; I flie, I flie to heaven; the Angels carry me into the Boſome of my Saviour. Then the Miniſter approached, and to comfort and confirm him more and more, called to his mind the manifold favours which God had ſhewed unto him, preſerving him from ſo many dangers which he had run through, fortifying him againſt ſo many aſſaults which he had ſuſtained, having always a particular care over him, and carrying him as the Eagle carries her young ones; which conception he repeated in Latine, ut Aquila pullitiem ſuam. The Miniſter continuing this diſcourſe, he cried out, Lord thou haſt been our refuge in all generations, before the Mountains were brought forth, thou art God. Whereupon it being added, that as the goodneſs of God and his mercy towards us was from everlaſting, ſo is it likewiſe firm and durable to all eternity; whence he might reſt for ever aſſured of it, nor ſhould the weakneſs of his fleſh make him any ways to doubt of it; to which he anſwered, I know that my Redeemer liveth, I ſhall ſee him with theſe eyes, hiſce oculis, repeating theſe laſt words in Latine three or four times; And as for the infirmity of the body, which turns into duſt; it having been ſaid, that this ſhould not weaken our hope, becauſe that God, into whoſe hands we reſign it, is powerful and faithful to preſerve that truſt: that he ſuffered us to turn, as it were, into nothing, to raiſe us up again more glorioufly, taking pleaſure to magnifie his power in our weakneſs; of which he had often made experience during his life, and that it was ſtill to be ſeen in his death, in which by the Lords aſſiſtance he triumphed over all his enemies, though in the depth of weakneſs, according to the fleſh. we can do all things (anſwered he) in Chriſt that ſtrengthens us.

of

From that time he ſtill grew weaker, ſo that towards evening he could no longer pronounce entire periods, nor teſtifie the motions of his heart, but by ſhort anſwers to what they demanded of him, concieved in two or three words. Being then asked if he felt not within his ſoul the force of the holy Spirit ſealing unto him the promiſes of God, and filling him with a lively conſolation; He anſwered after a contented manner, which ſavoured of much cheerfulneſs, Yes indeed, and another time, I am aſſured of it, and a while after, with much ado, The love of God is in my heart: Always when the Miniſter asked him how he found himſelf, he anſwered, Very well.

Thus in the middeſt of theſe bleſſed thoughts he entred into poſſeſſion of the true Life, leaving by little and little this other earthly life. His ſpeech failed about midnight, his hearing two hours after, his breath betwixt ſix and ſeven in the morning, at which time he rendred his Spirit unto God his Creator.

It is worth our notice, that during theſe forty eight hours, he felt little or no pain, having been often carefully asked concerning it, almoſt every hour, always conſtantly anſwering, that he ſuffered none. Moreover, that he had his ſenſes perfect, as may appear by the preceeding diſcourſe, though a day before he had ſome raving fits, which ceaſed on an inſtant, without ever returning, ſo ſoon as they had given him warning to prepare for the life to come; At which the Phyſicians much wondred, ſeeing his Feavour and long waking (he having been many nights without ſleep) in their opinions ſhould have cauſed a Delirium. Laſtly, it muſt not be forgotten, that in all this time, he entertained no other diſcourſe then what tended to his ſalvation, having his judgment, ſpirits, and memory in ſo good eſtate, that in the middeſt of his extremities, they could ſcarce alledge any paſſage of Scripture, upon which he did not make ſome note, even upon the Hebrew, Greek and Latine words (whereof we have repeated ſome) uſing always the terms of Scripture to expreſs the diſpoſitions of his heart, and accommodating to his preſent uſe, the beſt and richeſt paſſages which are there to be found.

Of all this, many perſons of honour are witneſſes, both of ours and the other Religion, which were preſent there, both the one and the other declaring that they were extreamly edified and comforted by ſo fair a death: But none of them heard more than Monſieur Moris, a Phyſician of Breſſure, making profeſſion of the Roman Religion, who according to his wonted candor, will (I doubt not) always render a faithful witneſs to the truth of that which we have here repreſented; God give them and us grace to make our profit of it, to his glory and our own ſalvation, Amen.

This Life is written at large in French by one that was his Amanuenſis, and is thus contracted, and tranſlated by my worthy friend Mr. S. Fellow of P. H. in Cambridge.

J. BRVEN

The Life of John Bruen, of Bruen-Stapleford, who dyed, Anno Chriſti. 1625.

His Parentage.

John Bruen, of Bruen-Stapleford, in the County Palatine of Cheſter Eſquire, was born, An. 1560. and was the ſon of a worthy Gentleman, deſcended of Worſhipful Anceſtors. His Father was firſt married to a Siſter of Sir John Dorus of the houſe of Utkinton, from whom the Lord withheld the fruit of the Womb, as he did ſome time from Rachel: But after her deceaſe he took to Wife the daughter of Thomas Holford of Halford Eſquire, by whom the Lord gave him fourteen children, ſons and daughters, amongſt whom this John Bruen was the firſt born of the Male children, the beginning of his Fathers ſtrength, and Heir of his Family. Many of his Brethren and Siſters were holy men and women, eſpecially that rare Gentlewoman, Miſtriſs Katherine Bretterg, whoſe life is ſet down in this Book.

His Education.

His Parents brought him up civilly, and as thoſe times were, religiouſly alſo: And the Lord preſerved him in his childhood, and youth from the poiſon of Popiſh ſuperſtition, and the contagion of thoſe common groſs ſins, which for want of the light, and life of the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, raigned in thoſe parts, as if he had a purpoſe to reſerve him as a Veſſel of honor, and for his own houſe, and ſo by little and little, to fit and prepare him for his Miſtriſſes uſe and ſervice.

Seeds of grace.

When he was about ſeven years old his Father for ſome offence rebuked him ſharply, and corrected him ſoundly, which he being much grieved at, ſeeking relief, he took a prayer Book which he had learned, and going into his Fathers Chappel, read in it; and prayed as well as he could, and it pleaſed the Lord to comfort him with unexpreſſible joys; the next day he went to the ſame place, and uſed the ſame means, but found not the like comfort.

Probably

Probably the Seeds of Grace were then ſown, which, until they were further encreaſed by knowledge, and judgment, watered by the word, and warmed by the Spirit, lay hid under the corruptions of nature, and luſts of youth, as under clods of earth for a time; but afterwards brake forth in the Fruits of an effectual calling, and converſion in due ſeaſon to his Uncles, Maſter Dutton of Dutton, where he was bred up at School, under one Maſter James Roe, for about three years ſpace. This young Gentleman, wanting a School-Maſter at home, was by his Father ſent to his Uncles, &c. in which time ſomething he got for Grammer learning, a little, it may be, for civil Education, but nothing at all for nurture, and information in true Religion. Anno Chriſti 1574. he was by his Father ſent to Oxford, where he firſt received the love of the truth in any knowledge and underſtanding, being then about ſeventeen years old; He lived in Albans-Hall as a Gentleman Commoner, and was familiar with one John Breerwood, his Country-man, an Aldermans Son of Cheſter: This Breerwood obſerving in him ſome Popiſh practices, and opinions, as the forbearing of Meats, and Drinks for Religion, and Conſcience-ſake upon Frydays, and other dayes, and the forbidding of Marriage to Miniſters, as unlawful by the Popes Cannons, and Conſtitutions, &c. He ſet upon him by Scripture Arguments to convince and reform him, whereupon this young Gentleman (through Gods mercy) was ſo wrought upon, that as himſelf wrote it down in his Book. 1 Tim. 1. 2. Converſion.

This (ſaith he) when I ſaw, and conſidered, that it was a Doctrine of Devils, taught, and delivered by ſeducing Spirits, and ſuch as ſpeak Lyes through Hypocriſie, I was then inflamed with zeal againſt the prophane Beaſt of Rome, and all Popery, both perſons and things, with all their Monuments, Rites, and Ceremonies, &c.

Thus did the Lord inflame the heart of this young Gentleman with burning coles of his Word, and Spirit which he raiſed, and reached out unto him from the heart, and by the mouth of his Companion, and Friend, that the Droſs of Popiſh Errours was conſumed, and his Soul ſo healed, that the Treaſure of Gods Word was ever after better eſteemed, and entertained by him.

Anno Chriſti. 1580. His provident Father ſent for him Home, otherwiſe to diſpoſe of him, conſidering that he was the firſt-born of his ſtrength, the choiceſt Plant of his ſtock, and ſo he provided for him the Daughter of one Mr. Hardware [a worthy and wiſe Gentleman] to whom he was married with the conſent of Parents, and in the fear of God, and lived very comfortably with her for ſeventeen years, ſeeing his Sons and Daughters as Olive-plants round about his Table: Then being in the prime of his youth, he ſpent too much time in Hawking Hunting, and ſuch carnal Delights. Marriage.

But Anno 1587. his Father dying, he began to be much perplexed both in mind and eſtate; ſome ſorrows and fears, thoughts and cares began to ſtir, and work in him, and the Lord hereby began to work for his more effectual calling, and converſion: And this he did both by the Rebukes of his Word, and checks of his Spirit, convincing his judgment, and changing his Heart from the Love of baſer, to a Delight in better things: Whereupon he began to ſearch his Heart, and try his Ways, and to call himſelf to an account for his former Courſes, and weighing them in the ballance of the Sanctuary, he found them to be but Vanity, and vexation of Spirit. And albeit the pangs of his Converſion, and pains of his new Birth were not ſo violent as in ſome others of Gods Children; or as were Pauls, Conſtantines, or Luthers, yet were his paſſions, and affections at this time not much unlike to St. Auſtins, at the time of his Converſion, who being grown Weary of the Ways of Vanity, and tyred out with the Weight of his ſins, out of an Holy deſire to caſt off the Burden that preſſed him down, and to ſhake off the pleaſing ſins that did intangle him, he poured out his Heart in Prayers and Tears before the Lord in this manner; Uſq; quo Domine, iraſceris? in finem? Ne memor fu- Humiliation.

J. BRVEN

The Life of John Bruen, of Bruen-Stapleford, who dyed, Anno Chriſti. 1625.

His Parentage.

John Bruen, of Bruen-Stapleford, in the County Palatine of Cheſter Eſquire, was born, An. 1560. and was the ſon of a worthy Gentleman, deſcended of Worſhipful Anceſtors. His Father was firſt married to a Siſter of Sir John Dorus of the houſe of Utkinton, from whom the Lord withheld the fruit of the Womb, as he did ſome time from Rachel: But after her deceaſe he took to Wife the daughter of Thomas Holford of Halford Eſquire, by whom the Lord gave him fourteen children, ſons and daughters, amongſt whom this John Bruen was the firſt born of the Male children, the beginning of his Fathers ſtrength, and Heir of his Family. Many of his Brethren and Siſters were holy men and women, eſpecially that rare Gentlewoman, Miſtriſs Katherine Bretterg, whoſe life is ſet down in this Book.

His Education. His Parents brought him up civilly, and as thoſe times were, religiouſly alſo: And the Lord preſerved him in his childhood, and youth from the poiſon of Popiſh ſuperſtition, and the contagion of thoſe common groſs ſins, which for want of the light, and life of the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, raigned in thoſe parts, as if he had a purpoſe to reſerve him as a Veſſel of honor, and for his own houſe, and ſo by little and little, to fit and prepare him for his Miſtriſſes uſe and ſervice.

When he was about ſeven years old his Father for ſome offence rebuked him ſharply, and corrected him ſoundly, which he being much grieved at, ſeeking relief, he took a prayer Book which he had learned, and going into his Fathers Chappel, read in it; and prayed as well as he could, and it pleaſed the Lord to comfort him with unexpreſſible joys; the next day he went to the ſame place, and uſed the ſame means, but found not the like comfort.

Seeds of grace.

Probably

Probably the Seeds of Grace were then ſown, which, until they were further encreaſed by knowledge, and judgment, watered by the word, and warmed by the Spirit, lay hid under the corruptions of nature, and luſts of youth, as under clods of earth for a time; but afterwards brake forth in the Fruits of an effectual calling, and converſion in due ſeaſon to his Uncles, Maſter Dutton of Dutton, where he was bred up at School, under one Maſter James Roe, for about three years ſpace. This young Gentleman, wanting a School-Maſter at home, was by his Father ſent to his Uncles, &c. in which time ſomething he got for Grammer learning, a little, it may be, for civil Education, but nothing at all for nurture, and information in true Religion. Anno Chriſti 1574. he was by his Father ſent to Oxford, where he firſt received the love of the truth in any knowledge and underſtanding, being then about ſeventeen years old; He lived in Albans-Hall as a Gentleman Commoner, and was familiar with one John Breerwood, his Country-man, an Aldermans Son of Cheſter: This Breerwood obſerving in him ſome Popiſh practices, and opinions, as the forbearing of Meats, and Drinks for Religion, and Conſcience-ſake upon Frydays, and other dayes, and the forbidding of Marriage to Miniſters, as unlawful by the Popes Cannons, and Conſtitutions, &c. He ſet upon him by Scripture Arguments to convince and reform him, whereupon this young Gentleman (through Gods mercy) was ſo wrought upon, that as himſelf wrote it down in his Book. 1 Tim. 1. 1. Converſion.

This (ſaith he) when I ſaw, and conſidered, that it was a Doctrine of Devils, taught, and delivered by ſeducing Spirits, and ſuch as ſpeak Lyes through Hypocriſie, I was then inflamed with zeal againſt the prophane Beaſt of Rome, and all Popery, both perſons and things, with all their Monuments, Rites, and Ceremonies, &c.

Thus did the Lord inflame the heart of this young Gentleman with burning coles of his Word, and Spirit which he raiſed, and reached out unto him from the heart, and by the mouth of his Companion, and Friend, that the Droſs of Popiſh Errours was conſumed, and his Soul ſo healed, that the Treaſure of Gods Word was ever after better eſteemed, and entertained by him.

Anno Chriſti. 1580. His provident Father ſent for him Home, otherwiſe to diſpoſe of him, conſidering that he was the firſt-born of his ſtrength, the choiceſt Plant of his ſtock, and ſo he provided for him the Daughter of one Mr. Hardware [a worthy and wiſe Gentleman] to whom he was married with the conſent of Parents, and in the fear of God, and lived very comfortably with her for ſeventeen years, ſeeing his Sons and Daughters as Olive-plants round about his Table: Then being in the prime of his youth, he ſpent too much time in Hawking Hunting, and ſuch carnal Delights. Marriage.

But Anno 1587. his Father dying, he began to be much perplexed both in mind and eſtate; ſome ſorrows and fears, thoughts and cares began to ſtir, and work in him, and the Lord hereby began to work for his more effectual calling, and converſion: And this he did both by the Rebukes of his Word, and checks of his Spirit, convincing his judgment, and changing his Heart from the Love of baſer, to a Delight in better things: Whereupon he began to ſearch his Heart, and try his Ways, and to call himſelf to an account for his former Courſes, and weighing them in the ballance of the Sanctuary, he found them to be but Vanity, and vexation of Spirit. And albeit the pangs of his Converſion, and pains of his new Birth were not ſo violent as in ſome others of Gods Children; or as were Pauls, Conſtantines, or Luthers, yet were his paſſions, and affections at this time not much unlike to St. Auſtins, at the time of his Converſion, who being grown Weary of the Ways of Vanity, and tyred out with the Weight of his ſins, out of an Holy deſire to caſt off the Burden that preſſed him down, and to ſhake off the pleaſing ſins that did intangle him, he poured out his Heart in Prayers and Tears before the Lord in this manner: Uſq; quo Domine, iraſceris? in finem? Ne memor fu- Humiliation.

eris iniquitatum mearum antiquarum. How long Lord wilt thou be angry? For ever? Be not mindful of my old sins. Quam diu? Quam diu? Cras, & cras? Quare non hodie? Quare non hac hora finis turpitudinis mea? How long? How long? To morrow, and to morrow? Why not to day? Why not this Hour, is there an end put to my former Filthineſs? We may not compare this Gentlemen for meaſure of Grace with St. Auſtin; but for the nature, Manner, Means, Time, and truth of his Converſion, he may ſeem to go hand in hand with him.

1. Auſtin was about thirty two years old when he was effectually called, ſo was he.

2. Auſtin had then many Combats between Reaſon and Religion, the Fleſh and the Spirit, and ſo had he.

3. Auſtin had his Heart full of Prayers, and his Eyes full of Tears when he ſought after God, and ſo had he.

4. Auſtin had, and held ſweet Communion with God by Soliloquies, and Holy Meditations, and ſo did he.

5. Auſtin having once taſted of the ſweetneſs of the Lord, thought nothing ſo pleaſant, as to forgoe the pleaſures of his former Vanities: Quam ſuave mihi ſubito factum eſt carere ſuavitatibus nugarum; and ſuch were Mr. Bruens deſires, and Delights, ſuch his Diſpoſition, and Affection, when once he had taſted how ſweet the Lord was, and had drunk of the pleaſures of his Houſe more freely, and fully than formerly he had done.

6. Auſtins Converſion was ſo bleſt of God, that it was an occaſion of the Converſion of others his Friends, as of Alipius, Nebcidius, and Erodius. So was Mr. Bruens attended with the Converſion of divers his Friends, and Relations, who by his means, and Gods bleſſing, were effectually called, and converted.

Mr. Bruens Father, together with his Lands, left him charged with the Portions of twelve Children, Sons and Daughters, which that he might diſcharge, he laid away his Hawks, and Hounds, and began to cut off all other occaſions of waſtful and riotous Expences; and whereas his Father left him a Park well furniſhed with Deer, he diſparked it, and drawing himſelf to as narrow a compaſs as he well could, he provided competently and comfortably for his own Family, and faithfully payed his Brethren and Siſters all their Portions, and diſpoſed of them in Marriage to their own content: Then he was very careful to ſet up Gods worſhip in his Family, walking wiſely in the midſt of his Houſe, ſetting his Eyes, his Favour upon the godly, and not ſuffering a wicked perſon to abide in his ſight: And his principal care was to dwell with his Wife as a man of knowledge, and to train up his Children in the Nurture and Information of the Lord, and by his Holy and prudent carriage, his Wife (though well affected to Religion before) yet grew on to an higher pitch in Knowledge, and Grace, and became to him a faithful Helper, and careful Yoak-fellow, to bear and draw in the Yoak of Chriſt. They were both very careful in the Education of their Children, catechiſing of them in the Principles of Religion, and cauſing them to learn ſuch Sentences of Scripture as might make the eaſieſt impreſſion of Grace upon their Hearts: Neither did he ſpare to uſe the Rod of Correction, as Gods Healing Medicine to cure the Corruptions of his Children; yet if at any time his Heart was over-heated through his hatred of ſin, and zeal for Gods Glory, that he ſpake unadviſedly with his Lips, or dealt too violently with his Hands, he uſed to be much Humbled for it, that going about to cure others, he had wounded himſelf: The Fruits of which his Holy Deſires, and Endeavours he found, and reaped in due ſeaſon: For hereby he became more watchful over his Spirit, and Speech in all ſuch occaſions, and provocations to Anger: He grew more moderate in his Corrections: When his paſſions were moſt vehement againſt ſin, he Frugality.

Family Government.

Education of his Children.

he much aſſwaged them by his tender Affection to the ſinner: And laſtly, he lived to ſee thoſe whom he moſt ſharply corrected, effectually converted, and reformed.

Come we next to his Men, and Maid-ſervants, among whom there was not one idle and unprofitable perſon: And for his choyce of Servants, he took notice of any there-abouts, that began to ſet their Faces towards Heaven, ſuch he loved, and laboured to draw them into his Service: So that in a ſhort time he was furniſhed with godly and gracious Servants, both Men and Maids, and then he looked upon them as his Brethren, and fellow Servants in, and under Chriſt: Would ſometimes uſe them familiarly, adviſe, confer, conſult, and reſolve with them in matters of Conſcience, and other weighty occaſions: Sometimes he made them his Comforters in Afflictions, and Tentations, and received refreſhing from them: Among the reſt, he had one old Diſciple, [Robert Paſfield] a Man utterly unlearned, being able neither to write nor read, yet through Gods bleſſing upon his Induſtry, having a good Memory, he became ripe in Underſtanding, and mighty in the Scriptures: Yea, he was ſo well acquainted with the ſum, and ſubſtance of every Book and Chapter, that hardly could a man ask him for any Sentence of Scripture, but he would tell him in what Book and Chapter he might find it: He had a good Gift in Prayer, was very willing and able to confer of good things, whereby he became very uſeful both in the Family, and to other young Chriſtians abroad, as he had opportunity: For the Help of his Memory he invented and framed a Girdle of Leather, long and large, which went twice about him: This he divided into ſeveral parts, allotting every Book in the Bible in their order to ſome of theſe Diviſions; then for the Chapters, he affixed Points or Thongs of Leather to the ſeverall Diviſions, and made knots by fives or tens, thereupon to diſtinguiſh the Chapters of that Book; and by other points he divided the Chapters into their particular Contents or Verſes, as occaſion required: This he uſed inſtead of Pen, and Ink, in hearing Sermons, and made ſo good uſe of it, that coming Home, he was able by it to repeat the Sermon, quote the Texts of Scripture, &c. to his own great comfort, and to the benefit of others; which Girdle Maſter Bruen kept after his Death, hung it up in his Study, and would merrily call it, the Girdle of Verity: This old Robert (though but a Servant, yet) being Rich in Grace, his Maſter uſed him very familiarly; when conveniently he could, he would have him near him, would often go to the Hop-yard or Barn, where his buſineſs lay, to talk and confer with him; and when he was grown old, having been in his ſervice about thirty years, he was ſo far from caſting him off, that he daily fed him with ſome of the beſt Morſels from his own Table, and ſet him not far from him, that he might the better confer with him, which he continued to his dying day: Such other Servants as he choſe to be ever about him at Home, and Abroad, he made happy, by his taking Opportunities to impart ſome wholſome Words of Admonition, and Inſtruction to them, &c.

Old Robert.

His carriage to his ſervants.

To them all he allotted their places, and Imployments according to their skill and knowledge, proportioning their Labour to their ſtrength, and their Wages to their Labour, ever allowing them liberty, and leaſure, means, and helps to accompliſh the work they took in hand, not ſuffering them to want any Encouragement which might make them chearful, and faithful in his, and Gods ſervice. For which end (as his occaſion would permit he would go amongſt them, to ſee the work, and encourage the Workmen, and would take occaſion to raiſe matter of ſpeech from their Callings, VVork, VVages; ſometimes from the good Creatures of God, their Nature, and Uſe; or from the ſeaſon of the year, as Spring, Seeds-time, Harveſt, fair, or foul Weather, &c. To apply theſe to ſuch places of Scripture as they had heard or read the same things in, for their further Instruction, and Edification: And in their Labours what he saw well done for matter and manner, he would well approve, and accept of, and by a due Commendation provoke them to continue in their well-doing: When he saw amiss, if it were of small concernment, he would wisely pass it by, if of greater weight, he would admonish, or reprove them for it; yet without raying or reviling words, sometimes more sharply, according to the nature of the Fault, and Disposition of the Offender, and sometimes more mildly, as he found the party more sensible of his fault, and more capable of amendment. There was not the meanest of his servants, but he would chear and encourage him, especially if he saw aliquid Christi, any thing of Christ in them: his servants also did usually exercise themselves unto godliness, exhorting, admonishing, and encouraging one another in the ways of God, and praying unto God in their courses every night for Gods blessing upon themselves and labours, which they performed in the Kitchin after family Prayers were ended before they went to bed, and for such of his servants as were inclined to marriage, he provided well for them, sending them out in the fear of God to establish Gods worship in their own houses.

He never thought his Table better furnished, than when he had some godly persons to sit with him, or stand about him, nor his meat better seasoned, then when it was poudred with the salt of wholsom words.

His private and Family Duties.

The religious duties which he daily, and duly performed in his Family, Morning and Evening, were these: He rose very early every morning, before any in the Family, betwixt three and four a clock in the Summer, and at five in the Winter, and then spent an hour or two in private, before he rang the Bell to awaken the rest of his Family: In his secret prayers, he used to make mention of every one in his Family, and especially as their occasions, and afflictions required, and gave thanks for such mercies, as either he, or they had received: Then he meditated upon some part of Gods Word, or Works, wherewith he seasoned his mind in the morning: Then he wrote out fair, part of som Sermon that he had heard lately before: Then his Family being up, and met together, he, with his heart, and his hands lift up to Heaven, spake in this manner.

A form of Prayer.

Blessed Lord God, and our most merciful Father in Christ Jesus, We thy poor Children do humbly beseech thee graciously to assist us by thy Holy Spirit in this our morning Exercise, that we may Faithfully perform the same to thy praise, and our comfort, and that for Christ his sake, our only Saviour and Redeemer: Amen.

This set form of short prayer he used morning and evening before his Exercise, to convince their ignorance, which deny the lawfulness of them: Then he, with his Family, sung a Psalm, with which Exercise he was much delighted, and oftentimes so ravished therewith in his Spirit, that his heart would even spring, and leap in his body: Yea, he was so affected with praising of God, That he took the word Hallelujah, which is the title of nine Psalmes, for his Motto, and usually wrote it in the first Page of all his Books;

Spiritual joy.

His reading the Scriptures.

Then he read a Chapter himself out of the Bible keeping an orderly, and constant course in his reading to make his Family better acquainted with the order and matter of the Scriptures, and to season their hearts with some portion of Gods word in the morning as a preservative against all unsavourly thoughts, noisom lusts, rotten speeches, and ungodly works all the day after. Himself also prayed with them, and that with such power, feeling, fervency, sincerity, Faith, and Humility, that he was oft much admired of them that heard him: He so wrestled with God by prayers and tears, that he would not let him go, till he had prevailed, insomuch that they seldom met again to pray, but he had some new and fresh cause of thanksgiving for the

His fervent prayers.

returns

turns of his Prayers. In the Evening he called them together again to the like Service, which he performed very religiouſly after the ſame manner, ſaving that after the Chapter, he propounded ſome wholſome Inſtructions to them, as the portion of Scripture gave occaſion, whether to convince any Error, or to confirm the Truth, to rebuke ſin, or to inſtruct in the way of Righteouſneſs, &c. And the better to juſtifie this his practice againſt Oppoſers, he made Collections out of the ſacred Scriptures, out of the Expoſitions, Teſtimonies, and Examples of godly and good Men, concerning this point of the Maſters Duty, in teaching, and inſtructing his Family in the fear of God, and Faith of Chriſt: And leſt any ſhould think that hereby he intrenched too much upon the Miniſters Office, and went beyond his Line; they muſt know, that whatſoever he ſpake in this kind, he borrowed it of good men, or obtained it by ſerious Study and Meditation, got it by reading the Scriptures, and good Expoſitors, or by reviving his Notes of ſuch Sermons as he had heard upon thoſe Scriptures, uſing all good and Holy means, to fit and furniſh himſelf with ſpiritual proviſions for that Service.

Neither was his zeal confined within his own Walls: For finding in the Church of Tarvin, and his own Chappel that anciently belonged to him, many ſuperſtitious Imagies in the Windows, which by their painted Coats, darkned the light of the Church, and obſcured the brightneſs of the Goſpel, he cauſed all thoſe painted Puppets to be pulled down in a peaceable manner, and at his own coſt glazed the Windows again: And for his incouragement and juſtification, he had not only the Word of God, but the Queens Injunctions authorizing, and requiring, "To extinguiſh, and deſtroy all Pi-"ctures, Paintings, and all other Monuments of Idolatry, and Superſtition, "ſo that there might remain no Memory of the ſame in Walls, Windows, "or elſewhere within their Churches, or Houſes: As alſo he did it by vertue "of a Commiſſion ſent down into the Country to the Earl of Derby, the "Maior of Cheſter, and others, to the ſame purpoſe at the ſame time. Zeal againſt Idolatry.

Yea, his heart was ſo enlarged towards God, with zeal for his glory, and his peoples good, that it was the joy of his Soul to bring in godly and able Miniſters among them, almoſt every Lords Day into the publike Aſſembly, and that of his own coſt, and labour, which he did with a chearful Heart, honouring God with his ſubſtance, by giving Maintenance to ſuch as were the Lords Labourers in his Harveſt: And though many ſlighted it, yet was it no Diſcouragement to him, neither was he weary of well-doing: Whoſe practiſe will ſhame ſuch, as being intruſted with the Lands, and Livings of the Church, for the Maintenance of the Miniſtery, do turn their Patronage into Pillage, and their Devotion into Sacriledge, robbing the Miniſters of their Means, and the People of their Spiritual Proviſion. Zeal for propagating the Goſpel. Sacriledge abhorred.

Anno 1590. Having provided for his Pariſh a worthy Preacher, the people, though they admired his gifts, yet would not ſo much as thank him for his pains, which was a great Diſcouragement to the Miniſter: Hereupon Maſter Bruen withdrew his Preacher into his own Chappel, to make the people more to prize the VVord by the want of it, more careful to ſeek it where they might find it, and more thankful to God and his Servants, by whoſe means they did enjoy it. Mr. J. D. He withdraws the Miniſtry for a while.

Then reſorted many to him, ſome to the Chappel to feed their Souls, and many into the Hall to feed their bellies, to his no ſmall coſt, and yet great Comfort, becauſe Religion increaſed thereby: But after a while, at the importunity of Chriſtian Friends he reſtored him to the publick Congregation, maintaining him, and other Preachers after him, till by the Death of the Incumbent, God eſtabliſhed a faithful Paſtor among them, concerning which, hear Mr. Clarks own words at his Funeral: He was (ſaith he) the chief Inſtrument to plant, and eſtabliſh the preaching of the Goſpel in this Congregation, firſt by providing divers of Gods Miniſters to preach here oftentimes when the Incumbent was grown old, and decrepit: Afterwards by maintaining a Preacher at his own proper coſt, and charges, and laſtly by being a means to obtain the place for me in Reverſion; and allowing me the greateſt part of my Maintenance: So that this Pariſh hath cauſe for ever to acknowledge him a Nurſing Father of Religion amongſt them, and a bleſſed Inſtrument to bring in the light of the Goſpel unto them, when they ſat in Darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of Death.

My reverend, and learned brother, Maſter Sabbath Clark.

Wakes put down.

And whereas the people of Tarvin had a bad cuſtom of keeping VVakes upon the Sabbath Day, at which times there was much praphaneneſs practiced, to the diſhonour of God, by Banqueting, Drinking, Danceing, &c. This godly Gentleman ſtudying to remedy this great Evil, againſt that time, every year, provided three of the beſt affected Miniſters in the Country, who ſpent moſt part of three Dayes in preaching and praying in the Church, ſo that the Pipers, Fidlers, Bearwards, Players, Gameſters had no time left them for their Vanities, but went away with great fretting: Yet multitudes of well-affected People filled the Town, and the Church, much rejoycing before God; and theſe he feaſted at his Houſe alſo, ſo that at one of theſe times, he ſpent in his Houſe a fat Beef and a half, in the ſpace of three dayes upon godly, and well-affected people, ſuch was his deſire to do good, his Delight in the Saints, his Joy in the Houſe of God, and Love to his Service; that all other things in compariſon of theſe, were but loſs, and Droſs, and Dung unto him: Oh! how truly might he ſay with David, Away from me all ye Workers of Iniquity, I will keep the Commandments of my God. I hate all vain Invention, but thy Law do I love. All my Delight is in the Saints, and in them that excell in vertue. I was glad when they ſaid unto me, let us go up into the Houſe of the Lord, our feet ſhall ſtand in the Gates of Jeruſalem. And this he did for divers years together, till by degrees, he had weared out thoſe profane Wakes.

Liberality.

His houſe a Nurſery of Religion.

As Sir Richard Groſvenor, and Mr. Hardware, and his Family.

Hereupon he began to be admired for his Fervency in the profeſſion of the Goſpel, and practice of true Religion, inſomuch that divers Gentlemen of the beſt rank, deſired to ſojourn in his Houſe, for their better Information in the way of God: One of which at his firſt coming would by no means indure to be reproved for his Faults, but how it was afterwards with him, Maſter Bruen thus left it upon Record: After a while, having the one hundred forty firſt Pſalm for our Evening Exerciſe, diverſe of my Family did uſually give Notes, being Godly, and VVell-affected, and they all concluded together, that every one of them ſhould ſpeak upon the fifth Verſe. Let the Righteous reprove me, &c. And my ſelf gave the laſt Note, after which he never reſiſted any more. Yea, himſelf gives this Teſtimony concerning Mr. Hardware, his Brother in Law. It pleaſed God (ſaith he) whilſt my Brother, and his Wife, Children, and Servants were in my Family, ſo to work upon their hearts, that they went home with new hearts, converted unto God, and profeſſed Religion in Holy ſincerity till their Death. My Brother Hardware upon his return to the Poole, ſet up Religion in his Family with great power and comfort: So that the very firſt Evening after their coming home, they began to ſing Pſalms, to read the Scriptures, to pray, and Catechiſe. All which being ended, his Wife went to him, and kiſſed him, ſaying, Oh Husband, I thank God, and bleſs his Name, that ever you went to Stapleford.

His pains to hear the Word.

And whereas in thoſe dayes the Lord was pleaſed in Compaſſion to his people, to raiſe up, and eſtabliſh many Holy Exerciſes of Religion in Cheſhire, and Lancaſhire, which were maintained Monthly by the godly Labors of the faithful Miniſters of Chriſt in thoſe parts with much comfortable ſucceſs: Maſter Bruen frequented theſe Exerciſes, and with great care, and conſcience

conſcience, he ſtored himſelf with their Treaſures, and lighted his Candle at their Torches, whereby he was better enabled, and more furniſhed to ſet forwards Religion in his Family, and elſewhere, as occaſion was offered. In frequenting theſe Exerciſes, he took much pains, riding early and late, in heat and cold, and through foul ways, ſometimes ten, twenty, yea, thirty Miles, to his great charges alſo: Theſe Sermons he wrote diligently, repeated them as he went Home, and for about thirty ſix years together at Home he wrote over again the ſubſtance of theſe Exerciſes, whereby he left to the Heirs of his Family ſo many Volumns of Manuſcripts ſet up orderly in his Study, as is ſcarce credible, which he charged them to read over, if it were but once in their lives. He uſed the Miniſters whereſoever he came marvellous kindly, commending their pains, rejoycing in their Labors, and many times defraying their Charges; always encouraging them with gracious and ſweet words: Yea, this Kindneſs of his extended to all the profeſſors of Religion, even to the weakeſt and pooreſt Chriſtian that he obſerved to frequent theſe Exerciſes.

His love to Gods Miniſters.

In the middeſt of theſe ſweet Comforts, the Lord was pleaſed to exerciſe him with a great Affliction, by taking away with a ſtroke his dear Wife, and Faithful Yoak-fellow, who being well in the Morning, began to be Ill, and Sick at Supper, and departed this Life the ſame Evening; yet did the Lord ſo ſanctifie this Affliction to him, that by the power of grace, and Chriſtian Wiſdom, he moderated his Affections, and ſubdued his Paſſions, not mourning as a Man without Hope, but aſſuring himſelf that his loſs was her gain.

His Wife dies.

After which, finding that he ſtood in need of Marriage for the Comfort of his Life, and neceſſity of his Family, he ſought by prayer a prudent Wife from God; and the Lord was pleaſed to anſwer his prayers. For as he was in Mancheſter, attending upon the Holy Exerciſe of Religion kept in that place, he caſt his Eye upon a very amiable, and beautiful young Gentlewoman, which diligently frequented thoſe Aſſemblies, upon ſight of whom a ſudden thought aroſe in his mind, that this was ſhe whom the Lord had provided to be his Wife: And God, that he might not only pleaſe his Eye, and follow his Affection in his choice; but might deal prudently, and adviſedly for his better ſatisfaction touching her Virtues, and Graces (which he much deſired might be proportionable to her outward Lineaments) he imployed one of his moſt truſty, and religious Servants to make enquiry after her, who being born and bred in thoſe parts, ſoon brought him word, that this young Gentlewoman was Named Mrs. Ann Fox, Siſter to Mr. Fox of the Rhodes, well deſcended both by Father and Mothers ſide. Her Father a Gentleman of good Account, who ſometimes lived with the Right Honourable, Henry, Earl of Derby, and was Controller of his Houſe, one of his Counſel, and choſen by him as a principal Gentleman to attend upon him, when he was by Queen Elizabeth ſent Ambaſſadour into France: Her Mother (yet living) was a very godly, and gracious Matron, deſcended of the Ancient, and VVorſhipful Families of the Addertons, and Leylands in Lancaſhire; that her ſelf was a Virtuous, and Religious young VVoman, beautiful by Grace within, as well as by Nature without; one who was well reported of in the Church, and of good Eſteem amongſt God's people. Upon which report he being encouraged, neglected no time, but took the firſt opportunity to make a motion to her Mother, and Friends, which being readily entertained by them, he wooed the young Gentlewoman, gat her conſent, and ſo proceeding in the Fear of God, they were Married, to the comfort and content of all: And his Mother in Law gave them and theirs, their Table the firſt year; during which time he was as careful to do good to that Family, as if it had been his own Houſe, and he quickned himſelf and them to Prayer, and Praiſe, Reading the Scripture, Singing of Pſalms, Holy Conference, Catechiſing, &c. Concerning which, himſelf thus writes: My Mother in Law Tabling of us for a year, we ſet up the Exerciſe of Religion Morning and Evening; In which time through Gods grace, my Mother in Law got ſaving grace, and my Siſter in Law, now Miſtreſs Hinde, and another half Siſter of hers, and their Brothers, Maſter William, and Maſter Thomas Fox, a Servant or two, and ſome Neighbours, bleſſed be God for it, &c.

His ſecond Marriage.

He promotes Religion in his Mothers Family.

He entertained many Boarders.

At the years end, he brought Home his beloved Wife to Stapleford, where they lived in great Peace and Love; and being well ſettled, there were many of the greateſt Gentlemen in the Country that ſued to him, ſome for themſelves, ſome for their Children to be entertained into his Family, and all to this end, that being partakers of ſo good means of grace, under his Religious Government, and Holy Example, the Ignorant might be inſtructed, the Unruly reclaimed, the Superſtitious reformed, the Profane converted, or reſtrained, the Babes in Chriſt might be Nurſed, and grow up by the ſincere Milk of the Word, and that ſuch as were of riper years might be fed with ſtronger Meat, by which means, his Houſe became a Nurſery for Religion; a Vineyard which the Lord bleſſed to bear Trees of Righteouſneſs, and Fruits of Holineſs.

Amongſt theſe, the firſt that dealt with him in this kind, was that accompliſhed Gentleman Thomas Wilbraham, of Woodhey, Eſq; who having married his eldeſt Daughter to the Heir of the Houſe of Utkinton, of great place for his Birth, and Blood, and of good parts, and civil Diſpoſition (yet addicted to the Pleaſures, and Luſts of youth) was very deſirous to place them as Sojourners for a ſeaſon in Mr. Bruens Houſe, under his Government, that thereby they might be the better wained from ſuch occaſions of Evil, as happily elſe-where they might be expoſed unto. This godly Motion was by Mr. Bruen willingly entertained, partly to ſatisfie the worthy Gentleman's deſire whom he much eſteemed, and partly that he might have opportunity to do good to the young Couple, being near a Kin to him, and now committed to his truſt, and accordingly he entertained them, and their Attendance into his Family.

His prudence.

Now his manner was, when any came firſt into his Family, to try their Diſpoſitions, and Inclinations, and how tractable they were like to be to good Duties, and Practiſes: For which end he carefully obſerved their ways; ſaw much, and ſaid little, bore, and forbore as occaſion required; taking ſpecial Notice of any good they ſaid, or did, and paſſing over many leſſer Faults, till he had fitter opportunity to reclaim them.

Amongſt others, this young Gentleman Mr. Done could not well away with the ſtrict Obſervation of the Sabbath. Whereupon (ſaith he) we did all conſpire to do him good, ten of my Family ſpeaking one after another, and my ſelf laſt, for the ſanctifying the Lords day; after which he did very chearfully yield himſelf, bleſſed be God.

He reforms his Houſe.

At another time (ſaith he) coming into his Chamber, I found over the Mantle a pair of New Cards, and no body being by, I took out the four Knaves, and ſo laid them there again: But for want of ſuch Knaves his Game was marred, and he never played in my Houſe after: And in like manner (ſaith he) twenty years before, being in one of my Studies, and ſeeing a pair of Tables under my Feet, I took them, with the Men, Dice, and all the Cards I found, and put them into an Oven that was then in Heating; and thereby he rid them out of his Houſe: And to juſtifie his Deteſtation of theſe Games, he ſet down in Writing theſe Collections.

Againg Cards and Dice.

1. All Games depending upon Hazard, or Chance are to be eſchewed.

2. The

2. The Prince of Devils firſt invented them, and the place was Hell.

3. Such Gamſters were held, and accounted for infamous perſons, uncapable of any Office, and unworthy any benefit of Law.

4. Dicers, Harlots, and Thieves be of one Hall, and Corporation; and the more cunning in this Art, the more wicked in their Lives and Manners.

5. All Gain by Gaming is Turpe lucrum, plain Thievery, worſe than Uſury. Pro. 16 33. and 18. 18.

6. All play at Dice is plain Lottery, which to uſe idly or triflingly, is a ſin againſt the third and ninth Commandment. Act. 1. 26. & 16. 16. Ezek. 22. 13.

7. There is no Recreation of Body, or Mind in theſe Games, unleſs it be in Deſire, and Hope of Gain, by another mans Loſs, which is unlawful.

8. Cards ſeem leſs evil than Tables, but there is never a Barrel better Herring, there is ſo much Craft in packing, &c.

9. There are mixt Games, conſiſting partly of Lottery, partly of VVit, and are oftentimes maintained with Tricks of Coſnage and Knavery.

10. The Coat-cards were in times paſt the Images of their Idols.

11. We ſhould abſtain from ſuch Games; 1. Becauſe they never were, nor are of any good Report in the Church; 2. There is great appearance of evil in them; 3. The command of the Magiſtrate forbids them, by the Name of unlawful Games; 4. They tend not to Gods glory; 5. They are cauſes of much Hurt to our Neighbours, and occaſions of many Sins and Sorrows to the Gamſters, and their Families, &c. Alea, vina, venus, tribus his ſum factus egenus. Phil. 4. 8. 1 Theſ. 5. 22. Rom. 12. 1. &c. 1 Cor. 10. 31. and 8. 13. Mat. 7. 12. Luk. 6 31.

He ſets up Bibles in his Houſe.

And therefore for the preventing of theſe Miſchiefs, and to exerciſe the heads and hearts of his Family, and of ſuch as came occaſionally to his houſe, he bought two goodly fair Bibles, and ſet them upon two Desks, one in his Hall, the other in his Parlour, which practice of his was ſo much the more commendable, becauſe it was anſwerable to the Cannons, and Conſtitution of our one Church of England, made and printed 1571. by which there is a ſerious and heavy Charge laid upon all Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Cathedrial Churches, &c. that they provided themſelves Bibles of the faireſt, and largeſt Volume, and of the Book of Acts and Monuments, and place them in their Halls and Dining Rooms, Ut & ipſorum famulis, & advenis uſui eſſe poſſint, that they might be for the uſe of their own Servants, and of ſuch ſtrangers as came unto them.

Mr. Bruen having thus reformed, and ordered his own Family, he began to take notice of ſome Defect in the publike Miniſtry, whereupon he procured a Faithful Miniſter of Chriſt to be Preacher at Tarvin, whoſe Miniſtry being very powerful and profitable, he ſo much delighted in him, that he maintained him and his Family very bountifully, and entertained him kindly. Mr. Ar. St.

Concerning which, hear his own Teſtimony; I may well ſay (ſaith he) of that worthy Servant of God Mr. John Bruen, as it was ſaid of Noah, that he was a juſt, and a perfect Man in his time, and walked with God. whilſt I was Preacher at Tarvin, I had little Maintenance but what I had from him, and with much Cheerfulneſs did he miniſter both to me and mine, that which was ſufficient affirming oftentimes, that he had not the leſs for that which I and mine received from him: He was ever one and the ſame at home and abroad, very Faithful unto God, and loving unto Men, walking in the uprightneſs of his heart in the middeſt of his Houſe.

About this time the Fame of Mr. Bruen came to Mr. Perkins, who hearing of his excellent Parts, and Pains in the profeſſion of Religion, and Exerciſes in his Family, and of his Government of his Houſe, and the Religion of his Servants; being raviſhed with Heavenly joy, and ſtricken with an Holy Admiration at the hearing of it, he brake out into theſe ſpeeches: Certainly this is no other than the houſe of God, and for the practiſe and power of Religion, the very Topſail of England.

Mr. Perkins his teſtimony of him.

His Fame ſpreading ſtill more and more, many Gentlemen ſought to him to ſojourn with him, and at the Requeſts of his Friends, he entertained divers Families, and Perſonages of great place; many of which, during their Abode with him, were truly converted, others convinced, and all much reformed in their lives.

Concerning which, hear what himſelf ſaith: Afterwards (ſaith he) many more deſired to Table with me: The Lady Egerton, Widdow, Daughter in Law to the then Lord Chancellor, with her Company: And my Coſen Thomas Dutton of Dutton, with his Wife, Son, and Daughter, now Wife to the Lord Gerrard, being ten in that Company: And four Gentlewomen of Hatton, who were Siſters, and their Maid, which Maid was at firſt froward againſt Religion, and Religious Duties: But God in mercy began firſt with her; for being in grievous Affliction of Conſcience, ſhe was ſoundly humbled, and had a comfortable concluſion, bleſſed be God for it. And then two of the Siſters had a more eaſie Converſion, but I believe, true Grace: The other two Siſters being convinced, were very honeſt modeſt Maids: And for my Coſen Dutton, his Condition with me was to keep the Holy Sabbath with my Family, as well in the Afternoon as in the Forenoon, which he, and all his did in the publick Congregation: All of us having a great help from a Learned godly Miniſter, Mr. Robert Watts, a Reverend worthy man of God, whom we called Old El, for his gravity, and faithfulneſs above many, who was continually with us in my Family, &c.

At the ſame time my Coſen Dutton was preſſed, and charged by ſome of great place to maintain his Royalty of Minſtrilſy, by granting Licenſes to Pipe, and Dance on the Sabbath Day; but my Miniſter, my ſelf, and Family were very earneſt againſt it, and prevailed ſo far with my Coſen Dutton, that he promiſed that all Piping, and Dancing ſhould ceaſe on the Sabbath Dayes, both Forenoon, and Afternoon, and ſo his Licenſes were made, and do continue ſo until this day: By which means we had great Peace, and Comfort together, bleſſed be God for it.

But in the middeſt of theſe ſweet Comforts, the Lord again ſent a Tempeſt of grief, and ſorrow, by taking away his gracious Yoak fellow, which not long after cauſed a Diſſolving of his Family, and a diſperſing of that whole Company, to their no ſmall grief.

His ſecond Wife dies.

The loſs of this Gentlewoman was ſo much the more grievous, both to her Husband, and to the whole Family, becauſe of the great help, and comfort they had all by her. She lived ten years with her Husband, a faithful Helper, and ſhe a fruitful Vine, bearing to him Nine Children, Sons, and Daughters, and continuing with him in great Peace, and Love: A prudent Wife, and a wiſe Fellow-governour in his houſe, much reſpected, and beloved, not only of her own, but of all the Gentlemen, and Gentlewomen that Tabled with them.

Concerning which, himſelf thus writes: When it pleaſed God to take away my Wife from me, then all mourned for her loſs: As alſo becauſe all my Tablers muſt now part, being about the number of one and twenty: But we did ſtill ſo well accord, and ſo loth we were to part aſunder, that I requeſted them to ſtay with me that Quarter more, which was very thankfully accepted: In which time we had much Comfort, but mourned often to think of the Quarters end: And the laſt day ſitting at Dinner together, all were ſo full of Heavineſs, that there was no Meat eaten, ſo that I was forced to hide my ſelf, and could not take Leave of them &c.

Then

"Then (saith he) I lived a single Life five years and an half; and being in "Debt, and having four Daughters, and divers Sons to dispose of, by Advice "of Friends, I gave over House, and went to live at Chester for a season: "Master Bifield, a godly and powerful Preacher, being Minister there at "that time: And there I lived three Years, having the Company of Master "Bifield, and his Wife every Wednesday, and Friday at Dinner with me, "which were his Lecture Dayes, with some other good Company besides: "In which time God stirred up the hearts of many of my Neighbours to "come to Prayer with us: Which Meetings were at first traduced by "some, yet after a while, being well known what they were, no Fault was "found. He lives at Chester.

"In this time it pleased the Lord Almighty to give a great Blessing, All "Praise to his Holy Name: Many converted, many confirmed, and many "convinced: In these three Years, God also gave me a great Blessing in "my outward Estate: I paid all my Debts: I Married two of my Daugh-"ters, and paid their Portions: I preferred a Son or two: I maintained "the Poor in my own Parish in the Country, allowing them all the pro-"fit of my two Mills: I maintained the Poor in Chester, both at my "Gates, and otherwise Weekly, as I was rated: All humble and hearty "Thanks be given unto God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, for evermore, "Amen. God blesseth him exceedingly. Charity.

The three years being expired, he returned home to Stapleford, he married another Wife, by whom he had one Daughter that dyed, and one Son living; and encouraging himself in the ways of God, he daily performed these four Duties: First, Meditation for the Increase of Knowledge, and good Affections towards God, and good things: And for his help herein, he carried about him some part of the Bible, or Notes of Sermons when he went into the Fields: Within Doors he Read much in the Scriptures, and made Collections of the Promises, Preceps, Comforts, Prohibitions, &c. And these he made the subject of his Meditations: For this end also he Read oft the Works of divers Learned men, and drew into Heads, and Common-places what was most worthy Observation in them. Meditation.

Amongst the rest, he was much delighted, and refreshed with Doctor Halls Contemplations, and Meditations, Mr. Greenhams Works, Mr. Rogers his seven Treatises, which for his better help, and greater comfort, he had abridged, and epitomized all most all, till he was informed that another godly man, and worthy Divine [Mr. Paul Banes] had already done it to his hand: And afterwards when Mr. Egertons Practice of Christianity, containing the summ, and substance of that Book, came forth, he applied himself to make the best use of that part of it touching the Art, and Exercise of this Divine Meditation, wherein he perfitted so well, that he was very able, according to those places, and rules of Directions, to enlarge his Meditations upon any subject that did usually fall within his reach, and compass: So that now he might say with Holy David, Oh how I love thy Law? It is my Meditation all the day. I have made thy Statutes my Songs, and my Meditation in the dayes of my Pilgrimage. Psal. 119. 97, 45.

And he found much benefit by these Meditations; as the killing of noisom Lusts, the dislodging of many worldly Cares: It wrought in him a godly Care over his Thoughts, Words, and Actions: A gracious Aptness to, and chearfulness in Holy Duties: It ministred to him Counsel, and strength for spiritual Combats: It brought him to an Heaven upon Earth, and made him go about earthly affairs with an Heavenly mind: It kept his heart in possession of his Integrity, whereby he kept Faith, and a good Conscience in every thing: It wrought his Soul to a gracious Tenderness, Lowliness, and Meekness, to be very sensible of other mens sins, and sorrows, as well as of his own. It enabled The fruits of it.

abled him whereſoever he came to leave a ſweet ſavor of his grace, and vertues behind him: And it was as a ſoveraign preſervative againſt all Inticements, and Allurements to ſin.

His obſervation of Gods Works.

In the next place, he was very careful to obſerve Gods Works, both of Mercy and Judgments, for which end he obſerved, and Recorded many of them: Hear him ſpeaking in his own words.

"Some few years before my Brother Hardware died, he had a Man-ſervant "(as many thought) bewitched, and grew daily weaker and weaker, ſo that "my Brother ſent to me, and my Family to ſpend a day with him in Faſting "and Prayer: At that time I had good Mr. Wats, the Preacher with me; we "went to the Houſe, where we found the Man very ſick and weak, and "like an Anatomy, having nothing but skin and bones, not like to live "a Day longer: He was brought and layed in a Bed in the Chamber where "we prayed, and the ſame Evening he began to amend: The next Morning he "walked abroad, and the third day was ſo ſtrong, that he fell to his work and "labour; All Laud, and praiſe to God for it.

Return of Prayer.

Anno 1601. My Servant going with his Cart laden, fell down, and the wheels being Iron-bound, went over his Leg, yet hurt him not at all: Laus Deo, praiſed be God.

Gods mercy.

Anno 1602. My Son John going into the Field, took up a Sith to ſee how he could Mow, the Sith entred into his ſtocking to the ſhin-bone, ſhaving the hair, and came out at the back ſide of his Leg, and touched no fleſh nor skin: Laus Deo, praiſed be God.

Gods judgment on a ſwearer.

Anno 1603. One that dwelt in my Farm in Wimble-Stafford, ſeeing two godly perſons going in the way, ſaid to one with him, I will dance, ſwagger, and ſwear, to anger yonder two Puritans, and ſo he did, to their great grief: But preſently the revenging hand of God was upon him, ſo that immediately he fell ſick, was carried home in a Cart, and within three dayes died moſt fearfully: All glory to God.

A Boy poſſeſſed with the Devil. Tho. Hariſon about eleven or twelve years old.

But he took the greateſt pains in Recording the paſſages about a Boy, about twelve years old, at Northwitch, who was ſo ſtrangely, and wonderfully afflicted and tormented, that many held him to be really poſſeſſed with the Devil; about this he wrote much, ſome of the paſſages were theſe: By his Torments he was brought ſo low, weak, and feeble, that he was almoſt nothing but skin and bones, yet for the ſpace of four and twenty hours every day (having only one half hour reſpite, which they called his awaking time, and wherein they gave him a little Food) he was of that extraordinary ſtrength, that if he foulded his hands together, no man could pull them aſunder: If he rolled his head, or toſſed his whole body (as uſually he did) no man could ſtay, or reſtrain him: He would, to the great aſtoniſhment of the Hearers, howl like a Dog, mew like a Cat, roar like a Bear, froth like a Boar: When any prayed with him, his paſſions were ſtrongeſt, and his rage, and violence greateſt, ready to fly in their faces, and to drown their Voices by his yellings, and out-cries: If one came near him with a Bible, though under his Cloak, and never ſo ſecret, he would run upon him, and uſe great violence to get it from him, and when he could get any, he rent them in pieces: Sometimes he would lie along, as if he had been ſtark dead, his colour gone, and Mouth ſo wide open, that he would on a ſudden thruſt both his hands into it: And notwithſtanding his great Weakneſs, he would leap and skip from his Bed to the Window, from the Window to the Table, and ſo to Bed again, and that with ſuch Agility, as no Tumbler could do the like: And yet all this while his Legs were grown up cloſe up to his buttocks, ſo that he could not uſe them; ſometimes we ſaw his chin drawn up to his noſe, that his mouth could ſcarce be ſeen; ſometimes his chin and forehead drawn almoſt together like a bended Bow; his countenance fearful by yawning, mowing, &c.

The

The Biſhop hearing of the ſtrange Torments of this poor Child, ſent for him: His parents brought him, and once the Biſhop prayed with him, but the Boy was ſo outragious, that he flew out of his Bed, and ſo frighted the Biſhops men, that one of them fell into a ſown, and the Biſhop was glad to lay hold on the Boy, who ramped at the VVindow to have gotten out: Hereupon this Biſhop granted a Licenſe for a private Faſt in the Childs Fathers Houſe, for his Help and Releaſe, and that in theſe Words.

Having ſeen the bodily Affliction of this Child, and obſerved in ſundry Fits very ſtrange Effects, and Operations, either proceeding from ſome natural, and unknown Cauſes, or of ſome Diabolical practices: We think it fit, and convenient for the eaſe, and deliverance of the ſaid Child, from his ſad grievous Affliction, that Prayer be made publickly for him by the Miniſter of the Pariſh, &c. and that certain Preachers, namely theſe following, Mr. Gerrard, Mr. Harvey, Mr. Peirſon, &c. Theſe and none other to repair to the ſaid Child by turns, as their Leaſure will ſerve, and to uſe their Diſcretion for private Prayer, and Faſting, for the eaſe and comfort of the Afflicted.

Richard Ceſtren. David Yale.
Griffith Vaughan. Hugh Barches.

Which accordingly was performed by two godly Miniſters, and by Maſter Bruen, with divers others; yet God gave not Deliverance at that time. Mr. Harvy, and Mr. Peirſon.

When he was in his Fits, without underſtanding and knowledge of what he did or ſaid, he would often ſay, Jeſus ſaith, (for ſo he began all his ſpeeches) the Devil when he comes takes away my hearing, ſeeing, underſtanding, hands, legs, that I ſhould have no ſenſes, nor limbs to glorifie God withal.

Jeſus ſaith, If they would have caſt out the Evil ſpirit, they ſhould have come better provided.

Jeſus ſaith, ſome men did think that he that prayed, had a better Faith than the other, but he had not.

Jeſus ſaith, I have but three Devils: It's like one of the Spirits will go out of me, and take counſel of a great number of foul Spirits, and come again, and trouble me worſe.

Jeſus ſaith, ſome folk will ſay that the Witch will not look one in the face; but ſhe will look here-away, and there-away; and ſo he turned his hands this way, and that way.

Jeſus ſaith, The Witch ſaith ſhe hath done me no hurt that ſhe knows of: A Witch may over-look a Child, but ſhe cannot make him in ſuch a caſe as I am in.

The Devil is afraid when he hears any word, that he muſt be caſt out, then he quakes.

Jeſus ſaith, Now the Witch would faign undoe that which ſhe hath done; but now ſhe cannot undoe it.

Jeſus ſaith, Some ſay, if I were bewitched, or poſſeſſed, I could neither move my Tongue, nor my Lips; but the Devil can move both my Tongue and my Lips. Satan, I am bound to an hard Apprentiſhip; for thou wilt not give me leave, neither Holy-day, nor Work-day, to eat a Morſel of Bread.

The Papiſt that brought the ſtinking Weed, and laid it to my Noſe, if God had not had a ſtroke in this, would have caſt out the Devil: And a Boy was confederate with him. Now the Devil is poſſeſſed of their Souls; and he muſt continue a little while with me, but a great while with them.

God pulls back the Devil with a Ring in his Nose, yet the Devil shakes my Faith, as if it would go out of me.

They may know there is some ill thing in me; for when I would say my Prayers, he comes up and stops me, and then I must stay a little, and then again, and he would stay me.

Being in a sore fit, and a great rage, biting his hands, gnashing with his teeth, foaming like a Boar, and casting blood, and filth out of his mouth, he uttered these words. Proud Witch, Witch proud; I will tell you how these VVitches work, all upon Life, all upon Life, all upon Life; but they cannot take my Life from me.

VVell, these Drunkards and VVhoremasters do not think upon their sins: VVell, how then? There is no Drunkard that doth drink one spoonful, or drop of drink more than will suffice Nature, but the Devil doth pen it down in his Book: VVell, it is a great Book, and he doth keep it close till the Day of Judgment, and then he will lay it to their faces, at which time the Hills will tremble and quake, and the Devil will quake, yea, he doth quake for fear already.

VVell, some would think it a great while to be bound with the Devil a year or two, as I am, but it's better to be so, than to wallow in Drunkenness, Swearing, and VVhoring: For the Devil works in their Souls.

VVell, some will say, how can the Devil be in so little a Room? VVell, the Devil is as the VVind, for when he did take a man away out of a Chamber, he came in at at a little hole. But how did he carry him away? even out of the top of the Chimney.

VVell, there are some Papists, and some Atheists, and some of no Religion? VVo be to those that die suddenly, for they have no time to Repent, and especially those that live in Drunkenness, or VVhoring, or Swearing.

Jesus saith, They say he shall not out of me; but when God comes he will strike home.

Many other of these strange speeches did he utter, which for brevities sake are here omitted, though recorded by Mr. Bruen.

Private Duties.

Mr. Bruen, besides his Family Duties mentioned before, used private prayer very often, yet not confining himself to any place within, or without Doors for it, but taking his fittest opportunity, as time, and place best accorded: About his own House he had divers places which interchangeably he used for this purpose, not frequenting one, lest he should be suspected of Hypocrisie, or Vain-glory; within Doors he had variety of Closets, sundry Chambers, and other convenient Rooms: When he was abroad he had his Gardens, Orchards, Arbors, Groves, VVoods, and Fields, VValkes and Shades where he delighted to speak, and commune with his best Friend, and to seek the face and favour, help and succour of his Heavenly Father, in, and through the Mediation of Christ Jesus.

He prayed seven times a day.

And he was choice of the place, so of the time also, which he constantly set apart every day for private prayer. Seven times a day did he practise this Duty; first, in the Morning before any of his Family rose; next after Family prayer, before his Breakfast; then immediately before Dinner; then a little while after Dinner; then a little before Supper; then not long after Supper: Lastly, a little before he went to Bed: And as he was frequent, so was he, through Gods grace, powerful in these his Prayers: And hereunto upon extraordinary occasions, he added Fasting, which he observed with so great Austerity, that he much weakned his body thereby; and as it is Recorded of Saint James the Apostle, so was it true of this Gentleman, that his Knees were grown very senceless, and hard with much and frequent kneeling.

Fasting. He used to kneel upon the bare boards.

In

In theſe private Prayers his principal aim was to ſearch his Heart, examine his Life, confeſs and bewail his ſpecial ſins, and infirmities, craving pardon for them, and power againſt them; as alſo for the ſins or afflictions in his Family: He mourned for the ſins of Sion, and for the afflictions of Joſeph, and deſolations of Jeruſalem: He afflicted his heart for the Barrenneſs and Back-ſliding of Profeſſors, for their imbracing the world, forſaking their firſt Love: To which he added Praiſe, and Thankſgiving for Mercies, rejoycing in the Lord, and praiſing his Holy Name for bleſſings, Earthly, and Heavenly, beſtowed upon him, or his, and ſometimes for great deliverances which God had wrought for him.

Laſtly, his care was to imitate his Heavenly Father every day; and this he endeavoured by conforming himſelf to his Image, in expreſſing the properties, and vertues, the affections, and actions of him that had begotten him, and called him to be conformable to the Image of his Son Jeſus Chriſt. For which end he daily laboured to be more and more renewed in the ſpirit of his mind, in Knowledge, Righteouſneſs and Holineſs, according to the Image of him that created him: Whilſt his Commoration was on Earth, his Converſation was in Heaven: He had an Holy Reſolution, ſo to uſe the World, as neither abuſing of it, nor being abuſed by it, but to keep himſelf unſpotted from it: He had a full purpoſe to keep his heart always in Gods preſence, knowing and believing that he heard all his Words, and beheld all his Works: He uſed a conſtant and conſcionable ſtriving againſt all ſin, eſpecially the ſins of the times and places wherein he lived: He had a godly deſire in all companies, either to do good to others, or to receive good from others: A full purpoſe to deal juſtly, and uprightly with all men, doing no other to them, then he would have them do to him. A charitable Diſpoſition to take doubtful things in the beſt ſence, ſo far as he might, without wounding his own Conſcience, or offending others. He was ſlow to ſpeak, ſwift to hear. He utterly renounced the vain Conformities of the world, neither following the Faſhions, nor ſerving the humors of vain, or vile perſons, nor ſtaying in their Company longer than needs muſt.

His heavenly mindedneſs.

His univerſal obedience.

Charity.

Hated ſinful Faſhions.

According to the wiſdom which God had given him, he endeavoured to have his Converſation pure, and Holy, anſwerable to that Religion which he did profeſs, which by the Teſtimony of the Holy Ghoſt, is pure and undefiled before God the Father. He was well acquainted with his Natural Corruptions, Paſſions, and Pollutions of ſin, both Original, and Actual, inward and outward, Spiritual and Corporal, and knew that though he ſhould waſh himſelf with Snow-water, yet could he not ſay that his Heart was clean, ſo long as he did bear about him a body of Sin and Death. His conſtant care was, Firſt to be pure in heart, as Mat. 5. 8. and this he ſought for by Faith and Repentance, and the help of Gods Spirit, every day purging out old ſins, and renewing the beauty of former Graces. To be pure in hand, free from all Iniquity, and Injury, and waſhing his hands in Innocency, he was ever ready to lift up pure hands unto God, and ſo to compaſs his Altar, 1 Tim. 2. 6. To be pure in lips and Tongue, never ſuffering any rotten ſpeech, or unſavory word to fall from him; but having learned the Language of Canaan, his Tongue did oftentimes ſpeak of Judgment, and his ſpeeches were oft as the very Oracles of God, Eph. 4. 29. Iſa. 19. 18. Pſal. 37. 30. 1 Pet. 4. 11. To be pure in his ſences; with his Eyes he made a Covenant, reſtraining them from wanton looks, and then only, or eſpecially to open them, when they might ſerve as neceſſary Lights to the body, or to behold the Works of the Lord, that he might be bettered thereby, Job 31. 1. Pſal. 119. 37. His ears were circumciſed, nailed to the poſts of Gods houſe, boared by the ſpirit of Grace for Audience, and Obedience to hear what the ſpirit ſpeaks unto the Churches, Rev. 2. 7. Hoſ. 14. 8. To be pure in his whole body, ever preſerving his Veſſel in Holineſs, and Honour, and hating the garment ſpotted by the fleſh, 1. Theſ. 4. 4. Jude. 23. To be pure in the whole man, both ſoul, and body, cleanſing himſelf from all filthineſs of fleſh, and ſpirit, whereby he became a veſſel of honor, ſanctified for his maſters uſe; prepared unto every good work. 2. Cor. 7. 1. 2. Tim. 2. 21.

And as he was pure, ſo likewiſe was he peaceable, his care being to cut off all occaſions of variance, and ſtrife, with all ſpeed that might be. He laboured for an holy contentedneſs of mind, by entertaining all croſſes with patience, and turning them to their beſt uſe, and imbracing all comforts with thankſgiving, bringing forth the right and proper fruits of them. He would not be eaſily provoked by indignities, and injuries, he had rather forgive twenty wrongs, then revenge one, he was willing to purchaſe his peace, ſometimes with his own loſs, if otherwiſe he could not procure it. He uſed to ſhut his ears againſt tale-bearers, the ſeedſ-men of ſtrife, and firebrands of contention; Ordinarily he recompenced evil with good, frowardneſs with kindneſs, and paſſion with moderation and good affection.

Meekneſs.

Note.

A neighbour Gentleman conceiving a great diſpleaſure againſt him upon a very ſmall occaſion, in a great ruff, ſent his man to him, to inhibit him from coming upon his land, either himſelf, or any of his Family, upon their peril; To whom Maſter Bruen preſently anſwered; Tell your Maſter from me, that if he, or any of his Family will come upon part of my ground at their pleaſures, they ſhall be welcome, and if he will come to my houſe, he ſhall much more wellcome,; which gracious and kind anſwer did ſo melt the heart of his adverſary, that he preſently brake forth into tears, reconciled himſelf to him, and became his true and faithful friend ever after, he was alſo very careful to prevent or remove all occaſions of variance, and ſtrife amongſt neighbours, and friends, both neer and far from home.

Returns good for evil.

Naturally he was paſſionate, and haſty, but having his ſin pardoned in the bloud of Chriſt, and having gotten power over it, his nature was healed, his paſſions ſubdued, and his frowardneſs was changed into mildneſs: He was of an ingenious facility, either to be perſwaded to any thing that was good, or to be diſſwaded from any thing that was evil: an honorable Judge in open Court, having a complaint made to him againſt Mr. Bruen, of ſome wrong that he did, by a water courſe to his Mills: Out of that good opinion he held of him, ſaid: I cannot think but that you wrong Mr. Bruen, I will undertake for him, make him but ſenſible of any wrong that he hath done, and he ſhall willingly acknowledg it, and make you double amends for it.

Grace overcomes nature.

An honorable teſtimony of him.

Alſo there was forty ſhillings given to the Pariſh of Tarvin, which being lent abroad, through neglect, was loſt, whereupon the Church-wardens, and ſome of the neighbours requeſted him by himſelf and his friends to make it up again, to which he preſently anſwered, that he would not preſs upon any mans purſe for that matter, and ſo he gave them the money himſelf, which though not much, yet more then moſt Gentlemen would have done in ſuch a caſe he was full of mercy, and good fruits, towards Sinners and Saints, neighbours and ſtrangers, friends and foes, poor and rich, yea, towards all ſorts, and conditions of men as he had opportunity, and ability to declare himſelf unto them.

Liberality.

He ſaw none that were without the means of grace, but the bowels of compaſſion yerned in him, pitying the miſery that was upon them. He ſaw none occaſionally at their heatheniſh ſports, and ſinful paſtimes, but he looked angerly upon them, and ſpake roughly to them, yet withall inwardly mourning for the hardneſs of their hearrs. If occaſionally he met with mockers, contemners of God, and diſpiſers of good things, he would not caſt pearls before ſwine, but turn away his face, and not ſo much as ſalute them. If any poor ſoul erred from the right vvay, and yet deſired a guide; hovv careful vvas he of their good? Hovv joyful to do them good? yea, to encourage courage and to draw on ſuch; He would give them Mony, Corn, Bibles, Catechiſms and other good Books, which he had always by him for ſuch purpoſes. If a profeſſor of Religion fell into decay, he would relieve him by his own, and good Friends aſſiſtance.

Mercy.

Sometimes he would take off a good ſute of apparel from his own back, and beſtow it upon a Godly poor man that wanted it, and withal give him a good ſumm of mony out of his purſe to accommodate him in his calling. He was much given to Hoſpitality, and to entertain ſtrangers; his Houſe was the common Inn of Gods Children that came neer him: None ſo welcome to eat of his morſels as ſuch ſtrangers, as were no ſtrangers in Iſrael. Many that paſſed betwixt Ireland and England, and that came upon buſineſs to Cheſter, Horſe-men and others, would take up his Houſe for their lodging place, that they might comfort and rejoyce their hearts in ſeeing his face, hearing his voice, and conferring and adviſing with him. His ordinary Table was bountiful, and plentiful; not to exceſs, but to a very competent ſufficiency, and for the furtherance of it, he had a great flight of Pigeons, a Warren of Conies, delicate Fiſh-ponds, beſides other ordinary proviſion about his Houſe: Yet would he not ſuffer any wilful waſt or abuſe of Gods good Creatures: His Cellar was open, and free to any, as far as they kept themſelves within the bounds of moderation. He did uſually fill the bellies of great multitudes, which out of his own and other Pariſhes reſorted to him for that end: And in the deer years he made proviſion for them almoſt every day in the week, and would ſometimes ſerve them himſelf; both to keep them in good order, and equally to diſtribute according to their neceſſities: His purſe was ever open to give, or lend freely to ſuch as would borrow: His admonition was, Remember your promiſe, and pay again if you will borrow again: And if any that borrow were willing, but not able to pay, he would rather forgive the debt then exact it.

Charity. His Hoſpitality. Charity.

In the time of a great dearth, fearing that divers of his poor neighbours were in want, taking the opportunity when moſt of his Family were gone abroad to a Religious Exerciſe, he ſent for his neighbours, and diſtributed fourteen Buſhels of Corn amongſt them. Yea, the loyns of the poor did bleſs him, being warmed with the fleece of his flock, or clothed by the coſt of his purſe: Every year againſt Winter, he beſtowed four or five pound in making proviſion to clothe the poor: Yea, he was a Protector to the poor, to deliver them out of the hands of thoſe that were too ſtrong for them: He was a Counſellor to defend their righteous cauſe, and to plead for them.

His Charaćter.

He held always a gracious Harmony in Judgment with all ſuch Divines, and Profeſſors of Religion as were moſt ſound in the Truth. He Religiouſly ſympathiſed with the Church in all her afflictions.

When he heard evil tidings out of Bohemia, Hungary, Germany, the Palatinate, &c. he ſat down (as Nehemiah) and wept, and mourned certain days, and faſted and prayed before the God of Heaven. He was frequent in viſiting the ſick, and ſuch Families as had the extraordinary hand of God upon them. If any were troubled in conſcience, moleſted by Satan, terrified by Gods Judgments, happy was he that could get Maſter Bruen come to him, his very preſence was ſome eaſe and refreſhing to them: And as his gifts in Prayer, and pains were great, ſo was the iſſue, and ſucceſs thereof (through Gods Bleſſing) many times very effectual, either for full releaſe, or ſome relief at leaſt: He himſelf Recorded divers mercies obtained of God by his Prayers, the glory whereof he doth ever in great humility aſcribe to the Lord, giving him hearty thanks for manifeſting his Grace and power to ſo weak creatures, by ſo weak means Sympathy. Prayer powerful.

Being on a time at the Sheriffs Table, there was a health begun to the Prince; and there were great Lords, and many other Knights and Gentlemen of Quality there preſent, and according to the manner, this health was entertained, and maintained with a great deal of Ceremonial ſolemnity: As it went along, and came near to Mr. Bruen, many obſerved what he would ſay or do: He caſt out in a moderate manner ſome words of diſlike to this effect: Here is a ſolemn ſervice to the Prince, yet did he never require it, nor will give you any thanks for it: and when one preſſed him to pledge the Princes health, he made this mild, and prudent anſwer, You may drink to his Health, and I will pray for his health, but drink for mine own health, and ſo I wiſh you may do for yours, and ſo he paſſed it over, not yielding to any of the ſolemn Ceremonies in that act. He was a great enemy to the profane Cuſtoms and corruptions uſed in great Houſes, and would not ſpare to admoniſh his Friends, by word or writing to reform the ſame.

Zeal.

Mercy.

Amos 4. 1. Mich. 2. 2. & 3. 2.

He was very merciful in his dealing with his Tenants, not grinding the faces of the poor by great Fines, nor cruſhing their bones by heavy Rents, and racks, nor breaking their backs with cruel ſervices, nor did he uſe their beaſts without hire, nor their labour without wages: But it was the joy of his heart to ſee his Tenants proſper and thrive in their Eſtates under him: He uſed to entertain them lovingly, and to uſe them kindly, when they come to him: He was much of the ſame mind towards his Tenants as Auguſtus was towards his Subjects, he would not have any to come with fear before him as if they came to an Elephant; nor any to depart with an heavy heart or ſad countenance out of his preſence as if he had been with a Tyrant: Sueton in Auguſt.

Now concerning his departure out of this World we may conſider: His preparation for it: His patient reſolution to bear all the ſharp occurrences of it: And his Gracious confidence of a bleſſed and happy change after it. For the firſt.

Death prepared for.

His whole life was a meditation of death, and a continual preparation for it, and therefore his care was ſo to live that he might not be afraid to die, yea, ſo to live that he might deſire to die, and to be with Chriſt which is beſt of all: As Paulinus hath recorded of St. Ambroſe, that being ready to dye, he uttered theſe comfortable words to his Friends about him: Non ſic vixi ut pudet me inter vos vivere, nec mori timeo, quia bonum habemus Dominum: I have not ſo lived that I am aſhamed to live longer amongſt you, nor am I afraid to dye, becauſe we have a good Lord and Maſter.

His more eſpecial preparation for his latter end conſiſted in theſe perticulars. 1. In denying himſelf, his wit, will, reaſons, and affections. 2. In renouncing the World, and weaning himſelf from the love of it, and from the pleaſures, profits, honors, and favours of the ſame. 3. In ſeting, and ſetling his affections on things above, placing his heart where his head Chriſt was. 4. In taking all his decaies of nature, and bodily infirmities, to be certain impreſſions of his mortality and evident Summons to his diſſolution. 5. In making all his Spiritual rejoycings, and refreſhings to be pledges, and earneſts of his everlaſting joy, and happineſs in his ſtate of Glory. 6. In conſidering that death to the Godly is but a paſſage unto life: a diſſolution of ſoul and body for a ſeaſon, which afterwards ſhall be reſtored again in greater beauty and Glory at the Reſurrection. 7. In obſerving that death puts an end to all ſins, and ſorrows, to all temptations and afflictions, and brings us into the poſſeſſion of our Heavenly Inheritance. 8. In meditating that here we are but ſtrangers, and Pilgrims, having no continuing City here, but ſeeking one to come, That Heaven is our home: That whilſt we are preſent in the body, we are abſent from the Lord. 9. In conferring, and talking with his Godly Friends of the day of death, and time of his departure out of this World, and that, in the mideſt of all his other comforts.

It

It was obſerved by many of his Friends, both at home and abroad, that in his declining days, when he ſaw that he was drawing on towards his Journeys end, his Faith was exceedingly increaſed, his hope, and rejoycing in God much inlarged, his love and zeal wonderfully inflamed, his affections towards God and his people more holy, and heavenly, and his motions towards Heaven more quick and lively then before.

The day before his laſt ſickneſs, he roſe very early in the morning, went into his Study to his private prayer, then came forth and prayed with his Family, then returned into his Study till Dinner time: and after Dinner went into his Study again, where it pleaſed God after two hours to viſit him, as it were, with an Ague, whereupon he laid himſelf down upon a bed: His wife ſaid to him, Sir, I fear you have done your ſelf hurt with riſing ſo early; to whom he replied; If you had ſeen, wife, ſuch glorious things as I ſaw this morning, being in private prayer with God, you would not have ſaid ſo, for they were ſo wonderful and unſpeakable, that whether I was in the body or out of the body, with Paul, I cannot tell, Thus it hath pleaſed God, leſt I ſhould be too much exalted by this glorious ſight, to give me a buffet in the fleſh: The like raviſhing in ſpirit, and ſuch glorious ſights, he ſaw not long before (as he acquainted ſome private Friends) after he had been one day in private prayer with God in his Grove: Whence he had a ſtrong perſwaſion, that he ſhould not live long, before he made a glorious change of this life, with a better: And for this end he cleared up his Evidences for Heaven, and confirmed his aſſurance of his right thereunto: His evidence he cleered by informing his Judgment aright in the Alſufficiency, and perpetuity of that bleſſed eſtate: His aſſurance he confirmed by ſuch faithful records, covenants, grants, gifts, pledges, earneſts, witneſſes, ſignes, oaths, ſeals, fruits, and marks of his intereſt into that eſtate, that neither ſin, nor Satan, Law, nor Conſcience, Death nor Hell could infringe, nor find any flaw therein, to give, either to them any juſt occaſion to except againſt it, or himſelf any cauſe once to doubt of it. This his confidence was his comfort in all his ſickneſs, which drevv from him many ſuch heavenly ſpeeches.

His laſt ſickneſs.

Joy unſpeakable.

Faith.

O how great is thy goodneſs, O Lord, which thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee, which thou haſt wrought for them that truſt in thee, before the Sons of men.

O how precious are thy thoughts to me, O God! O how great is the ſumm of them! If I ſhould count them, they are more in number then the ſand: When I awake I am ever with thee.

Thou ſhalt guide me with thy counſel, and afterwards receive me to glory. Whom have I in Heaven but thee? And there is none on earth that I deſire beſides thee. My fleſh and my heart faileth, but God is the ſtrength of my heart, and my portion for ever. I know whom I have believed, and I am perſwaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him againſt that day. O love the Lord all ye his Saints, for the Lord preſerveth the faithful, &c. As the hart panteth after the water Brooks, ſo panteth my heart after thee O God: My ſoul thirſteth for God, for the living God: O when ſhall I come and appear before God? O let him kiſs me with the kiſſes of his mouth, for thy love is better then wine! becauſe of the ſavour of thy good Ointment thy name is as an Ointment poured out, therefore do the Virgins love thee. Draw me and I will run after thee. God is not unrighteous to forget our work, and labour which we have ſhewed unto his name. Faithful is he that promiſeth, and called us, who alſo will do it. Remember me, O my God, for good according to all that I have done for thy People, and wipe not out my kindneſſes that I have done for the Houſe of my God, and for the offices thereof. Remember me, O my God, and ſpare me according to the greatneſs of thy mercy. I truſted in thee, O Lord, I ſaid thou art my God, my times are in thy hands, I am continually with thee.

Theſe, and many hundred more of theſe Divine ſpeeches did he utter in the time of his ſickneſs; and though his bodily infirmity grew upon him, yet would he he by no means be kept from the Houſe of God, ſo long as he could either go or ride: and when he went to Church, beſides his Family, he uſed to call his Tenants, and neighbours that dwelt in his way, to go along with him, and then calling them about him, they uſed with one heart and voice to ſing Pſalms, ſpecially the 84. Pſal. and he with his train came to Church conſtantly before Prayers, and Divine Service began, that he might the more comfortably joyn with the Congregation in the confeſſion of ſin, in prayer, praiſe, reading, ſinging, hearing, receiving of the Sacraments, all which he performed with moſt reverend attention, and gracious affection.

His Houſe was a mile from the Church.

How he ſpent the Sabbath.

After the Morning Sermon he uſually ſtayed in the Church amongſt other good people, and ſpent the time in repeating the Sermon, ſinging of Pſalms, and holy conference. After Evening Sermon he returned home, attended with his company with much joy, and endeavouring as they went to encreaſe their knowledge, Faith, and obedience, by repeating and conferring of the evening Sermon, and enlarging their hearts in Gods praiſes by ſinging of Pſalms afreſh, conſidering what great things God had done for them: and if any amongſt them were afflicted, they would counſel him, comfort him, and pray for him; and Mr. Bruen himſelf, if he heard of any ſuch as were troubled in Conſcience upon the hearing of the word, would be ever moſt ready and willing, like the good Samaritan, to pour Wine and Oyle into the wounded Spirit: Wine that he might ſearch, and cleanſe it, Oyle that he might ſupple, and heal it.

In his Family exerciſes he was ſo full of life and zeal, that many that lived near him, came to hear him repeat the Sermons, and power out his prayers unto God with ſuch tender and ſweet affections for them all, that the heat of his Spirit, did cauſe their hearts, as it were, to melt within them. The joy and comfort that he found in theſe holy duties were ſuch, that he would often ſay, O that every day were a Sabbath, or a Faſt day, for then I ſhould be well. And when the Sabbath was ended, it was his uſual manner to bleſs God with a thankful, and cheerful heart, for that he had given him one Sabbath more then he had looked for, amongſt his People.

His laſt ſickneſs.

The week days were more tedious to him, his bodily infirmity encreaſing and his ſtrength decaying; yet would he quicken his ſoul, and raiſe up his heart by Faith and hope, often ſaying; The time is not long, I muſt ſhortly lay down this my Tabernacle, and then I ſhall get the ſtart of you all, and ſhall celebrate an everlaſting Sabbath before the Lord, with the Holy Angels, and bleſſed Saints, in the higheſt Heavens, which he ſpake rejoycingly, and yet with tears.

He grew dayly more and more weary of the world, and was then beſt contented when he could diſpatch worldly buſineſſes with feweſt words.

It was his provident, and Godly care to ſet his Houſe in order, as good Hezekiah did, to make his Will, and to leave all things in good tearms of peace and love, which accordingly he effected, with good ſucceſs. By which means, his mind being diſburdened, and eaſed of many worldly thoughts, and cares, he gat a greater freedom to think and ſpeak of Spiritual, and Heavenly things, and accordingly as he could ſtir abroad in the Houſe, he would drop ſome wholeſome words of counſel, or comfort amongſt ſuch as he met withal.

His councel to his Friends.

When any came to viſit him, he would often ſay, Alas good ſouls! what are you come to ſee, a poor wretch, a worm and no man, or a poor dying man, &c. and when any told him of hopes of recovery, he would ſay, My task is ended, the Lord hath no more work for me to do, my warfare is accompliſhed, my race is run out, I now only hope, and wait for that Crown of righteouſneſs, which Chriſt hath purchaſed, and God hath promiſed to me. I may now ſay with Job: If I wait, the Grave is my Houſe, I have made my bed in the dark. I have ſaid to corruption, Thou art my Father, to the Worm, Thou art my Mother, and Siſter, and yet I know that my Redeemer lives, and that he ſhall ſtand at the later day upon the earth, and though after, after my skin, wormes destroy this body, yet in the flesh I shall see God, Job 19. 15, 1. 6. therefore we faint not, but though the outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed dayly. Our conversation is in Heaven, from whence also we look for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, &c. Phil. 3. 20, 21.

To his Christian Friends he would give these admonitions, to hold on, and to hold out, to be stedfast in their professions, not to be weary of well doing, to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. To encrease in Faith, and abound in love: Never to be discouraged by mocks, and taunts, railings, and revilings, or any other persecutions for the name of Christ, but as they have given their names to him, so to give their hearts also: and then to be Faithful to the death that they may receive the Crown of life. And for their greater incouragement, he would tell them, that when he first began to profess Religion, there were almost none in the whole Shire that were acquainted with the power and practise of it, &c. I was, said he, a wonder of the World, and a Monster of men, and many did bend their tongues like bows for lyes, and did shoot their arrows, even bitter words against me, and yet for all this that came upon me, I did not forget the name of my God, &c. But (blessed be God) the number of believers, in this Country, is much enlarged, every quarter and corner of it being filled with the sweet savour of the Gospel, &c. Therefore my deerly beloved, stand fast in the Faith, quit you like men, be strong, be stedfast and unmovable, &c. With these and such like gracious speeches did he counsel, and comfort, encourage, and stir up the Godly minds of many professors, both elder and younger, that came to visit him.

Also, though his affliction and sickness encreased, yet were not his consolations diminished, though he was feeble in the flesh, yet strong in the Spirit: no pains of his body, nor pangs of approaching death did half so much trouble him, as the inward refreshings of Gods holy Spirit did make his consolations to abound. Afterwards his weakness increased by reason of a stopping in his breast, and throat, so that he could not take down any liquid thing, but he was ready to faint away. Comfort in affliction.

About this time a worthy Knight coming to visit him, could not refrain from many tears, which he observing, said to him, Good Sir, weep not for me, for there is no cause of weeping, but of much rejoicing in my behalf; turn your tears into Prayers, and let me enjoy that fruit of your love, &c. you are in your way, I am at my journeys end, walk on as hitherto you have done, and the Lord will be with you, he will never fail you, nor forsake you, and with many other words did he exhort him, and others that were with him, to be Faithful in keeping Covenant with God, and to continue in the Grace of God whereunto they were called in Christ Jesus. Sir Henry Bunbury.

Upon Munday January 16th, his eldest Son came unto him, whom he rejoyced to see, and unto whom he gave many wholsome instructions, and gracious exhortations, praying for him, and blessing his Children, encouraging him to be constant in Religion, commanding him to uphold the worship and Service of God, both in the publick Assembly, and in his private Family. His charge to his son.

A little before his death, there came two Godly Ministers to him, of his special acquaintance, whose presence much cheered him, to whom he said; I am here, you see, the Lords Prisoner, cast upon the bed of my sickness, and in great affliction, yet waiting upon the mercies of my God, for a comfortable release in due season: And being asked by them, whether his consolations did not abound in the midst of all his afflictions; he answered, Yes, I thank God they do, and do far exceed them: Yea, and that which is more remarkable, the Lord of his mercy hath given me such strong Evidence of his favor and love in Christ, that I am not troubled in mind or conscience with any doubts or fears, or any other Satanical molestations or tentations, but rest and wait in patience for the accomplishing his mercies upon me, according to his good pleasure towards me: Then he desired them to pray with him, Mr. Hinde and Mr. Langley. His freedom from tentations.

and raiſing up himſelf in his bed, with his heart and hands lift up to God in the Heavens, he did, as it were, reach after the petitions that were made for him, often with a cheerful conſent, ſaying, Amen, Amen. After this Mr. Langly ſpake to comfort him in the midſt of all his ſorrows, adding that ſhortly he ſhould be releaſed from all ſin and ſorrow, from Satan and this preſent evil World, whereunto he anſwered moſt cheerfully, and graciouſly, I know I ſhall, and be with Chriſt which is beſt of all, and now the meſſenger of death is upon me, meaning the Hickock which had now ſeized upon him: To which Mr. Langly replied, I hope Sir, death is not fearful, nor terrible to you? No indeed (ſaid he) is it not, I thank God, for it is my way to life: I am now called of God to it.

Patience. Thus he continued in great pain of body, but in great peace of mind, increaſing ſtill in conſolations, and bearing his ſickneſs and pains with admiral patience, not ſhewing the leaſt diſcontent in word or deed.

When they took their leave of him, they mingled their ſorrows, tears, and prayers together, and ſo parted. He was never quiet, unleſs he were either meditating, or praying himſelf, or had ſome Godly man, or ſome good Miniſter praying with him. The morning before his death, divers of his Friends took their leave of him, deſiring at their parting a bleſſing from him, which he did willingly expreſs, by lifting up his hands and heart unto Heaven for them:

Humility. And not long after, hearing ſome make motion of blacks, he ſaid: I will have no blacks, I love no proud nor pompous Funeral, neither is there any cauſe of mourning, but of rejoicing rather in my particular. Immediately before his death, lifting up his hands, he ſaid: The Lord is my portion, my help, and my truſt: His bleſſed Son Jeſus Chriſt is my Saviour and Redeemer, Amen. Even ſo ſaith the Spirit unto my Spirit: Therefore come Lord Jeſus, and kiſs me with the kiſſes of thy mouth, and imbrace me with the Arms of thy Love: Into thy hands do I commend my ſpirit, O come now, and take me to thine own ſelf: O

His death. come Lord Jeſus, come quickly, O come, O come, O come: And ſo his ſpirit fainting, and ſpeech failing, he meekly and graciouſly yielded up his pretious ſoul into the hands of God his Father, in January Anno Chriſti 1625. and of his Age ſixty five.

Not long before his laſt ſickneſs, my ſelf being with him; amongſt other diſcourſe, he told me, that when he firſt procured the ſetting up of an Exerciſe at Tarvin, he was exceeding ſolicitous to procure all the Eminenteſt Miniſters in thoſe parts of the Kingdom to ſupply it, which coming many miles, they were divers times hindred by foul weather, floods, or ſome ſudden accident or other, ſo that at a very ſhort warning, he was forced many times to get ſome honeſt neighbour Miniſter to ſupply their places, and uſually he, and moſt of the Note. Congregation found more edification, and comfort by the labours of thoſe honeſt plain Preachers, then they did by the Sermons of ſuch as were far more Eminent for parts: whereupon, ſaid he, to me, I reſolved to give over my former courſe, and to content my ſelf with Godly neighbouring Miniſters, ſeeing God had ſhewed me, that it was not the greatneſs of mens parts, who were much admired every where, but the efficacy of the Spirit, which makes the word effectual and profitable.

Collected out of that Learned and elaborate VVork, written of his Life and Death, by Mr. William Hinde; VVherein, beſides the Hiſtory of Mr. Bruens Life, many Theological points are occaſionally diſcuſſed.

FINIS.

An Alphabetical Table of all the Principal things contained in this Second Part of the Second Volume of Lives.

A

Abbies demolished, and their Lands given to the King p.19.
Ambition, Pride. p.14.
Apostates p.43.
Apostasie dangerous p.31.43.

B

Battels p.9.10.11.
Bibles set up in English for publick use p.91.
Bibles first Printed in English p.24. Highly prized p.91.
Bishop Bonners Hypocrisie. p.24.
Bounty 87. to Ministers, See Liberality.
Mr. Bruens Birth and Education p. 80. His Conversion 83. Marriages 91
Mr. Perkins his Testimony of Mr. Bruen p. 92. His Character p. 99. & Death. 104

C

Cards and Dice judged unlawful p. 90. 91.
A Challenge p.67.
Charity p.15.25 50.53.61.74.97.99.
Chastity p.59.
Children well Educated p.84.
Christ best of all p.43.
Christian courage p.4.5.25.30.41.42.65.68.
Church Discipline setled p.45.
Confession of Faith p.5.
Constancy p.44.47.63.
Contempt of the World p.50.
Contention p.11.
Conversion p.63.
Counsel good p.102.
Cowardize p.10.
Craft. p.3.
L. Cromwels Birth and Education p. 17. Conversion p. 18. Death p. 26. His Character p.26.

D

Death desired p. 31. not feared 103. prepared for p. 102. 100.
A Diary p.60.
Dice see Cards
Devil possesseth a Boy. p.94.
Divorce in case of malicious desertion p.48.49.

E

Envy p.14.
Examples profitable p.43.

F

False Witnesses p.25.
Faith p.6.50.55.61.101.103.
Famliy Duties p.60.86.
Family Government. p.84. Reformed p.90.
Fear carnal p.63.
Flight in Persecution p.6.65.
Forgivenels of wrongs p.53.
Friendship p.15.36.43.
Frugality p.49.84.

Galeacius

G

Galeacius Caracciolus, his Parentage, Education p. 39. Conversion 40. Temptations 41. 43. Character p. 49. Death p 51.
God highly honored 52, He honors such as honor him. p. 49. and rewards them 93.
Gratitude p.21.22.

H

Hair, long, punished. p.23.
L. Hartington his Birth, Education p. 58. Learing 58. Travels 58. Piety 58. Charity 61. Death 61.
Heart, soft p.52.
K. Henry the Fourth of France doth penance p. 68. His Apostacy p.68.
K. Henry the Third of France Murthred p.68.
Heavenly-mindedness p.97.
Hospitality p.99.
Humane infirmity p.24.30.
Humiliation p.83.
Humility p.15.21.30.61.74.104.

I

Lady Jane Grey her Parentage and Eucation p. 29. Learning p. 30. Humility 30. Last Speech p. 33. Death p. 33. Her Character p.33.
Idleness dangerous p.53.
Idolatrous juglings p.23.
Images destroyed p.87.
Industry p.15.19.64.
Joy spiritual p. 86. unspeakable p.50.55.101.
A Judas p.6.
Judg just p. 30. Corrupt 30. Plagued by God p. 33.
Justice p.59.

K

Katherine Bretterg, her Birth and Education p.52. Character p 52. Sickness p 54. Temptations 54. Conquest 55. Death. p.57.
Kings overawed by the Popish Clergy. p. 4

L

Liberality p.88. 98. See Bounty.
Light in darkness p.39.

M

Malice p.34.
Massacre of Paris p.65.
Meekness p.98.
Meditation p.93.
Memory p. 13. Helped p.85.
Mercy p. 54.94.98.100.
Ministers encouraged, defended. 3. Loved p.89.
Modesty p.52.
Lord Morney his Birth and Education p. 62. 63. Travels p. 64. Dangers 64. Deliverances 64. preparation for Death 33. his blessed Death. p.79.

O

Obedience to God universal p.97.
Sir. John Oldcastles Birth, Education, Conversion p. 1. Martyrdom p.6.

P

Parents obeyed and reverenced p.45.
Parents unnatural p.47.
Patience p.47.50.53.104.
Peace among Christians. p.12.

Peace-makers p.12.23.50.72.
Persecutors plagued by God p. 6. 11. Punished by man p. 10.
Persecuted Saints relieved p.21.
John Picus his Birth, and Education p. 13. His Character p. 14. Conversion p. 14. Death p. 16.
Piety p.50.53.59.61.69.
Policy p.12.29.
Pope Antichrist p. 4. 69. Sensual p. 18.
Popery abolished p. 8. Hated p.55.
Popish malice p. 3.4.12.24.53.59.66. Cruelty p.5.6.9.10. Hatred 18. Impiety p.21. Lyes p.4.6.23. Perfidiousness p.70. Subtilty p.5.6.
Prayer p.5.16.26.32.46.63.69.86.100.102.
Prayer frequent 86.96. the best refuge in afflictions p.46.
Prayer for enemies p. 6. At Death p. 26. Answered p.94.99.
Prayer with Fasting p. 60.
Predictions p.65.
Prodigies p.13.70.
Providences p. 18. Extraordinary p.65.68.70.
Providence of God over his Children p 48.64.66.70.
Prudence p.25.65.67.87.90.

R R

Religion promoted p.88.89.
Repentance p.14.24.36.
Return of Prayers p.99 86.

S S

Sabbaths sanctified p.52.60.102.
Sacriledge abhorred p. 87.
Saints dearly loved p. 61.
Satans malice p. 40.
Scriptures studied p. 15. 17. 52. 63. 86. Translated p. 21. the supream Judge p. 21.
Servants instructed p. 59.
Sir Philip Sidney his Birth and Education p. 35. Elected King of Poland p. 36. is wounded p. 36. His Pious death p. 37.
Spiritual Dissertion p. 54.
Stratagems p. 9. 11.
Studious p. 33. 60. 64.
Subtility, Se Craft
Swearer punished by God p. 94.
Synods p. 67.

T T

Temptations p. 40, 41. 45. 47. 63.
Temptations resisted p.44.48.50.59.64.103.
Thanksgiving p. 43. 48.

V V

Valor: Magnanimity p. 5. 67.
Vanity of Worldly Glory p. 24.
Vows p. 63.

W W

Wakes put down p. 88.
Wives fit p. 89. Good p. 71.
Wives unkindness p. 47.
Word of God reverenced p. 61. Highly prized p. 88. Se Scriptures
Works of God observed p. 94.

Z Z

Zeal p.3. 11. 19. 21. 45. 53. 69. 100. 99.

The Table.

Zeal for the Truth p. 21. 50.
Zeal against Errors and Hereſies P. 7. 71. 87.
Zeal blind p. 9.
Ziſca his Birth and Education. Converſion p. 8. He is blind p. 11. His Death p. 12.
Ziſca commanded his Soldiers to make a Drum of his skin p. 12.

Errata in the ſecond Volumn.

PAg. 35. r. Captives for Captains. p. 37. l. 7. put out That. p. 47. l. 2. r. many for make. p. 50. l. 3. r. ſpears for ſhears. p. 81. l. 51. r. immoderate for moderate. p. 82 l. 49. put in more. p. 89. l. 14. put in ought. p. 91. l. 17. r. block up for pull up. p. 93. l. 15. put in of God. l. 19. r. overflow for overthrow. p. 107. l. 31. r. carreag for carriage.

In the ſecond Part.

PAg. 19. l. 14. r. him for himſelf. p. 38. l. 32. r ne'r for were p. 39. l. 11. r. liked for liking. p. 74. l. 34. r. he for ſhe. p. 78. l. 31. put out not. p. 80. l. 4. r. Done for Dorus. l. 19. r. Maſters for Miſtreſſes. p. 83. l. 5. put in Afterwards his Father ſent him to. p. 86. l. 4. r. what for when. p. 89. l. 32. r. therefore for God. For other ſmaller faults, I pray thee correct, and cover them with the Mantle of Love.

Nebuchadnezzar.
Cyrus.
Artaxerxes.
Alexander.
Epaminondas.
Herod.
Hanibal.
Pompey.
Iulius Cæsar.
Augustus
Charlemain.
Tamberlain.

THE LIVES & DEATHS

Of most of those

EMINENT PERSONS

WHO

By their VIRTUE and VALOUR

Obtained the Sirnames of MAGNI,

OR THE

GREAT.

Whereof divers of them give much Light to the Understanding of the Prophecies in Esay, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel, concerning the three first Monarchies.

And to other Scriptures concerning the Captivity, and Restauration of the Jews.

The Second Edition, Corrected and Enlarged.

By Samuel Clark, Minister of the Gospel.

Longum iter per precepta, breve per Exempla. Hierom.

LONDON,
Printed by J. R. for W. B. and are to be sold by Tho. Sawbridge, at the three Flower de Luces in Little Britain, and by W. Birch, at the Peacock at the lower end of Cheap-side. 1675.

MAGIC.

THE LIFE and DEATH OF NEBUCHADNEZZAR THE GREAT,

First Emperour of the CHALDEANS.

NEbuchadonazar, or Nebuchadnezzar, was the Son of Nebuchadonazar, or Nabopolaſer of Babylon, who was made General of the Army by Saraco King of Aſſyria and Chaldea, after whoſe death Nabopolaſer took into his hands the Kingdom of Chaldea, which he held by the ſpace of one and twenty years; At the ſame time Aſtyages was made Governour of Media by Cyaxares his Father; and the better to ſtrengthen themſelves, they entred into affinity, by Aſtyages his giving his Daughter Amytis to Nebuchadnezzar, the Son of Nabopolaſer, and thereupon joyning their Forces together, they took Ninive, together with Seraco, the King thereof, placing a Vice-Roy in his ſtead. His Parentage. Ninive taken.

Shortly after, the Governour of Cæloſyria, and Pœnicia, revolting from Nabopolaſer, he ſent againſt him his Son Nebuchadnezzar (having firſt aſſociated him with himſelf in the Kingdom of Babylon) with a great Army, which was in the latter end of the third, and the beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim King of Juda; as appears Dan. 1. 1. compared with Jer. 25. 1. Nebuchadnezzar made King.

Nebuchadnezzar was no ſooner thus aſſociated with his Father in the Kingdom, but the things which he was to act, were preſently revealed to the Prophet Jeremy; the firſt whereof was the overthrow of the Egyptians; First, at the River Euphrates; then in their own Country, Jer. 46. The firſt of theſe came to paſs preſently, Pharaoh Necho's Forces, which he had left at Carchemiſh, being cut off by Nebuchadnezzar in the fourth year of Jehojakim, Jer. 46. 2. The ſecond was not till after the taking of Tyre, in the ſeventeenth year of the Captivity of Jechonia. Ezek. 29. 17, 18, 19. Prophecies of him.

His first action. He conquers Jehoiakim.

In the third year of Jehoiakim, Nebuchadnezzar the second, his Father being yet alive, entred Judæa with a great Army, who, besieging, and forcing Ierusalem, made Iehoiakim his Vassal, in despight of Pharaoh Necho, who had made him King, and took with him to Babylon, for Pledges, Daniel, who was yet a Child, with Ananias, Misael, and Azarias. He took also part of the Treasures belonging to the Temple; but stayed not to search throughly for all. For Necho hasted with his Army to the relief of Iehoiakim, hoping to find Nebuchadnezzar in Judæa. But this great Babylonian had no mind to hazard himself and his Army against the Egyptian, Judæa being so ill affected towards him, and himself far from all succour, or sure place of retreat. If he had (as may be supposed) any great strength of Scythian Horsemen, it was wisely done of him to fall back out of that rough, Mountanous, and hot Country, into places that were more even and temperate. And besides these reasons, the Death of his Father happening at the same time, gave him just occasion to return home, and take possession of his own Kingdom, before he proceeded in the second care, of adding more unto it.

His Fathers death.

And this he did at reasonable good leisure. For the Egyptian was not provided to follow him so far, and to bid him Battel, until the new year came in, which was the fourth of Iehoiakim, the first of Nebuchadnezzar and the last of Necho. In this year the Babylonian, lying upon the Banks of Euphrates (his own Territories bounding it on the North-side) attended the coming of Necho: there, after a cruel Battel fought betwixt them, Necho was slain, and his Army forced to save it self by a violent retreat, wherein it suffered great loss.

He conquers Pharaoh Necho.

He conquers Syria.

This Victory was so well pursued by Nebuchadnezzar, that he recovered all Syria, and whatsoever the Egyptians held out of their proper Territories towards the North. The Egyptians being thus beaten, and altogether for the present discouraged, Iehoiakim held himself quiet, as being in heart a Friend to the Egyptians, yet having made his peace with the Chaldeans the year before, and Nebuchadnezzar was contented with such profit as he could there readily make: he had forborn to lay any Tribute upon the Iews.

But this cool reservedness of Iehoiakim, was, on both sides, taken in ill part. Whereupon the Egyptian King Psamnis, who succeeded Necho, began to think of restoring Iehoahaz (who had been taken prisoner by his Father, and carried into Egypt) and of setting him up, as a Domestical enemy against his ungrateful Brother. But to anticipate all such accidents, the Judæan had put in practice the usual remedy, which his fore-fathers used: For he had made his own Son Iechonia King with him long before; in the second year of his own Reign, when the Boy was but eight years old. As for this rumour of Iehoahaz his return, the Prophet Ieremy foretold, that it should prove a vain attempt, saying, He shall not return thither, But he shall die in the place whither they have led him Captive, and shall see this Land no more. Jer. 22. 11, 12.

2 chron. 36 9.

The weak estate of the Egyptians.

The Egyptians, having lost their Mercenary Forces, and received that heavy blow at Carchemish, had more Gold than sharp Steel remaining, which is of small force without the others help. Besides, the Valour of Necho was not in Psamnis Apries, who, reigning after Psamnis, did indeed once adventure to shew his face in Syria; but after a big look, he was glad to retire, without adventuring the hazard of a Battel. Wherefore this declining Nation, fought only with brave words, telling such frivolous tales, as men that mean to do nothing, use, boasting of their former glorious acts against Iosias and Iehoahaz. And truly in such a time and case, it was easie for Iehoiakim to give them satisfaction, by letting them understand the sincerity of his affections towards them, which appeared in time following.

Nebuchadnezzar layes a Tribute upon Iehoiakim.

But Nebuchadnezzar went more roundly to work: For he sent a peremptory message to Iehoiakim, requiring him not to stand upon any nice points, but presently to acknowledge himself his subject, and to pay him Tribute; Adding ding thereunto ſuch terrible threatnings, as made the poor Iudæan lay aſide all thoughts of adhering unto Pharaoh; and to yield to do, as the more powerful would have him.

Thus he continued in Obedience to Nebuchadnezzar three years: During which time the Prophet Jeremy, cryed out againſt the Impiety of the Jews, putting them in mind that he had now for three and twenty years exhorted them to Repentance: But becauſe they had ſtopped their ears againſt him, and the reſt of the Prophets, he now foretold that their Captivity was at hand, and that they ſhould bear the Yoak of Bondage for ſeventy years. The ſame Calamity he threatned to all the Neighbouring Nations, to the Egyptians, Moabites, Ammonites, Idumæans, and the reſt; foretelling that they ſhould all drink out of the Babylonian Cup the Wine of his fury, whom they had forſaken; and that after the ſeventy years ſhould be expired, the Babylonians themſelves ſhould taſte of the ſame Cup, and be utterly ſubverted by the Medes and Perſians, by which means the Jews ſhould be permitted to return into their own Country, and Cities. The firſt Impriſonment of the Prophet Jeremy ſeems to have been in the fourth year of this Jehoiakim, at which time, Baruch the Scribe, wrote all his Prophecies from his Mouth, whom he ſent to Read them unto the people, and afterwards to the Princes, who preſented them to the King: But fearing the Kings fury, they had firſt ſet Jeremy at liberty, and adviſed him, and Baruch, to hide themſelves, Jeremy 36. 19, &c.

The Captivity foretold. Jer. 25. 15, &c. Jer. 27.

Jer. 25. 12, &c. And their return. Jeremy impriſoned.

Jehoiakim having heard part of it read to him, and perceiving the ill News contained therein, he made no more ado, but cut the Book in pieces, and caſt it into the fire. All which, Jeremy cauſed to be new written, with this Addition, That the dead Body of Jehoiakim, ſhould be caſt out, being expoſed in the day to the heat, and in the night to the froſt, and that there ſhould be none of his Seed to ſit upon the Throne of David.

Jehoiakim burns the Roul.

Time thus running on, Jehoiakim thought himſelf ſecure from all danger, as being Tributary to the Babylonian, and yet withal, well thought on by the Egyptian: About which time the mighty City of Tyre, oppoſed it ſelf againſt Nebuchadnezzar: And upon juſt confidence of her own ſtrength, deſpiſed all preparations that could be made againſt her. Now for as much as the term of ſeventy years was preſcribed for the Deſolation, as well of Tyre, as of Jeruſalem, and other places, and Countries, 'its apparent that they that refer the winning of this City to the ninteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar, have good ground and warrant for it. For the Siege thereof began in the ſeventh year of his Reign, and laſted thirteen years.

Tyre rebelleth againſt Nebuchadnezzar.

Here it will not be amiſs to inſert a brief Note concerning the beginning of this great Princes Rule; The third year of Jehoiakim, was the laſt of Nabulaſſer, who being freed from other cares, and buſineſſes, took notice of ſuch as had revolted from him to Pharaoh Necho, and ſent this Noble Prince, his Son, with an Army into Syria to reclaim them. In this Expedition was Daniel carried to Babylon, who therefore makes mention of it, Dan. 1. 1. The year next following, being the fourth of Jehoiakim, was the firſt year of Nebuchadnezzar, which Jeremy affirmeth in expreſs words, Jer. 25. 1. And from this we muſt reckon all his time, and actions which follow to be ſpoken of. In his three and twentieth year he conquered Egypt, and then began his great Empire, there being none left that durſt offend, or oppoſe him. The ſecond from this year it was wherein Daniel ſaw that Viſion of the Image conſiſting of ſundry Mettals, which prefigured the ſucceſſion of great Kingdoms, that ſhould Rule the World before the coming of Chriſt. But to return to the Siege of Tyre, which began in the ſeventh year of his Reign.

The ſtately City of Tyre covered all the ground of an Iſland, that was divided from the Continent by a deep, and broad Channel of the Sea. The Tyre beſieged.

Chaldæans had no Fleet of Ships, neither were they Seamen: The Tyrians excelled all other Nations in multitude of goodly Ships, and skill to uſe them: And every Wind, from one part or other, brought in all needful proviſions to the City: Wherefore neither force, nor Famine could greatly hurt the place; whereof nevertheleſs, the Judgments of God (denounced againſt it by Iſay, Jeremy, and Ezekiel) had threatned the deſtruction; and the obſtinate reſolution of Nebuchadnezzar had fully determined to accompliſh it.

Iſay 23. Jer. 25. Ezek. 26.

The difficulty of the work.

This hauty King, impatient of reſiſtance, undertook a vaſt piece of Work, which was, to fill up that part of the Sea which divided the Iſland from the continent. The City of old Tyre, that ſtood oppoſite to the New, upon the firm Land, and the Mountain of Libanus near adjoyning, that was loaden with ſtately Cedars, and abundance of other Trees, furniſhed him with materials to effect it. Thirteen years were ſpent in this difficult, and hopeleſs undertaking, which need not ſeem ſtrange, if we conſider, that Alexander, working upon that Foundation which was remaining of Nebuchadnezzars Peer, and being withal, aſſiſted with a ſtrong Fleet, was yet ſeven months e're he could make way into the City. Wherefore, if the raging of the Sea was able to carry away that wherewith Alexander laboured to cover a Shelve, with much more violence could it overturn, and as it were, conſume the work of Nebuchadnezzar; who laid his Foundation in the bottom of the deep; Striving, as it were, to fill the empty Belly of this greedy Cormorant, whereas the Macedonian did only ſtop the throat of it. All may know that God could eaſily have accompliſhed his own threatnings againſt this place (though it had not pleaſed him to uſe, either a Miracle, or ſuch of his more immediate Engins, as are Earthquakes, &c.) by making at leaſt, the Seas calm, and adding the favourable concurrence of all ſecond helps. But ſo it pleaſeth him oft-times, in chaſtiſing the Pride of man, to uſe the hand of man, even the hand of man, ſtriving, as it may ſeem, againſt all reſiſtance of nature, and providence. So that by this exceſſive labour of the Chaldeans, that Scripture was fulfilled, that every Head ſhould be made bald, and every Shoulder ſhould be made bare, Ezek. 29. 18. Yet would not Nebuchadnezzar give over till he was Maſter of the Town.

When he was entred upon his deſperate undertaking, whether it were by ſome loſſes received, or ſome Mutiny in his Army, or ſome glorious rumour of the Egyptians ſtrenth, his evil willers took courage to rebel againſt him; and amongſt them, Jehoiakim, renounced his ſubjection, and began to hope for the contrary, which ſoon after fell out. For Nebuchadnezzar gave him no leaſure to do much hurt: But with part of his Army, he marched ſtrait into Judæa; where the amazed King made ſo little reſiſtance (the Egyptians having left him, as it were in a dream) that Nebuchadnezzar entred Jeruſalem, laid hands on Jehoiakim, whom at firſt he bound, intending to ſend him to Babylon, but his mind changing, he cauſed him to be ſlain in that place, and gave him the Burial of an Aſs, to be devoured by Beaſts, and ravinous Birds, according to the former Propheſie; Leaving in his place his Son, Jehoiakim, or Jeconias; whom yet after three months, and ten days, he depoſed, and ſent him Priſoner to Babylon, together with Ezekiel, Mordecay, and Joſedech, the High Prieſt.

Jehoiakim rebels, and is taken, and ſlain. Jer. 22. 18, 19. & 36. 30.

Jeconias made King and impriſoned. Jer. 29. 2. 2 Kin. 28. 16. 2 Chron. 36. 10. Jer. 24. 1. & 29. 1, 2. Ezek 17. 12.

The Mother of Jeconias, together with his Servants, Eunuchs, and all the ableſt men, and beſt Artificers in the Land, were alſo then carried away Captives. This Jeconias, following the Counſel of the Prophet Jeremy, made no reſiſtance, but ſubmitted himſelf to the Kings will, wherein he both pleaſed God, and did that which was moſt profitable for himſelf, though at the preſent it might ſeem otherwiſe, to ſuch as conſider the evil that befel him, him, rather than the greater evil that he thereby avoided. This only particular act of his is recorded in Scripture which was good: But it seems that he was at least a partaker in his Fathers sins, if not a provoker, which was the cause, that though he submitted himself to Gods will, yet did he not preserve his estate: For so it is said, That he did evil in the sight of the Lord, according to all that his Father had done. In his stead, Nebuchadnezzar set up Mattania, his Uncle, making him King of Judæa, and called him Zedechias. For like as Necho King of Egypt, had formerly displaced Iehoahaz, after he had slain his Father Iosias, and set up Iehoiakim, the Son by another Mother: So Nebuchadnezzar slew Iehoiakim, who depended on the Egyptians, and, carrying his Son Iechonias Prisoner to Babylon, he gave the Kingdom to this Zedechias, who was whole Brother to that Iehoahaz, whom Necho took with him into Egypt, and from Zedechias he required an Oath for his loyalty, and faithful subjection, which Zedechias gave him, and called the living God to witness in the same, that he would remain assured to the Kings of Chaldæa, 2 Chron. 36. 13. Ezek. 17. 13, 14, 18.

Zedekiah is made King. Jer. 37. 1. 2 King. 24. 17.

In the first year of Zedechias, Ieremy saw, and expounded the vision of the ripe, and rotten Figs, the one signifying those that were already carried away Captives, the other signifying those Iews that yet remained, and were afterwards destroyed, Ier. 29. 17.

Jer. 24. 2.

In the fourth year of Zedechias, Ieremy wrote in a Book all the evil which should fall upon Babylon, which Book, or Roul, he gave to Seraiah, when he went with King Zedechias to Babylon, to visit Nebuchadnezzar, willing him first to read it to the Captive Iews, and then to bind a stone to it, and cast it into Euphrates, pronouncing these words; Thus shall Babel be drowned, and shall not rise from the evil which I will bring upon her. This journey of Zedechias to Babylon is probably thought to be in a way of a visit, and to carry some presents to Nebuchadnezzar; But yet it is likely he had some suit to make, which his Lordly Master refused to grant, and sent him away discontented. For at his return, all the bordering Princes sent Messengers to him, inciting him (as it seems) to those unquiet courses from which the Prophet Ieremy dehorted both him and them. About which time the Prophet, by Gods appointment, made bonds and yokes, one of which he wore about his own neck, others he sent unto the five Kings, of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Zidon, by those Messengers which came to visit Zedechias, making them know, that if they, and the King of Iuda continued in subjection to Babylon, they should then possess, and enjoy their own Countries; If not, they should assuredly perish by the Sword, by Famine and by Pestilence.

Babylons destruction foretold.

Sundry Prophesies of Jeremy. Jer. 51. 59.

Jer. 27. 8.

He also foretold them, that those Vessels which yet remained in Ierusalem, should be carried after the other to Babylon, yet at length should be restored again.

The same year Ananias, the false Prophet, took off the wooden yoke which Ieremy did wear, as a sign of the Captivity of the Iews, and brake it: Vaunting, that in like manner after two years, God would break the strength of Babel, and the yoke which he had laid on all Nations: and that he would restore Iechonias and all the Iews, with the Vessels, and Riches of the Temple, and put an end to all these troubles. But Ieremy instead of his Wooden yoke, wore a Collar of Iron; and in sign that Ananias had given a false, and deceitful hope to the People, he fore-told the Death of this false Prophet, which accordingly came to pass in the seventh Moneth.

Ananias a false Prophet. Jer. 28.

Jer. 28. 15.

After this, when Zedechias had wavered long between Faith and Passion, in the eighth year of his Reign, he practiced more seriously against Nebuchadnezzar, with his Neighbours, the Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, Tyrians, and others, who were promised great aids by the Egyptians, in confidence of whose assistance, he resolved to shake off the Babylonian Yoke; whereof, when Nebuchad- Zedechias rebells. Ezek. 17. 15, 17.

chadnezzar was informed, he marched with his Army in the dead of Winter, Jeruſalem beſieged. towards Ieruſalem, and beſieged it. Jeremy perſwaded Zedechias to render the City and himſelf to him: But Zedechias, being confident of help from Egypt, and being perſwaded by his Princes and falſe Prophets, that it was impoſſible that the Kingdom of Judah ſhould be extirpated until the coming of Shilo, ac-
Jer. 32. & 34. cording to Jacobs Propheſie, Gen. 49. 10. he deſpiſed the counſel of Jeremy, and impriſoned him. For Jeremy had told the King, that the City ſhould be taken and burnt; that the King ſhould not eſcape, but be taken Priſoner, and brought to the preſence of Nebuchadnezzar: That he ſhould not periſh by the Sword, but being carried to Babel, ſhould there dye a natural Death.

Jer. 44. Egypt a broken ſtaff. Jer. 37. 3, 10. The following year, Ieruſalem was ſurrounded, and more ſtrictly beſieged by Nebuchadnezzars Army; whereupon the King of Egypt, Pharaoh Hophra, entred into Judæa with his Army, to ſuccour Zedechias, of whoſe revolt he had been the principal Author. But Ieremy gave the Iews faithful counſel, willing them not to have any truſt in the ſuccours of Egypt: for he aſſured them that they ſhould return back again, and in no ſort relieve them. And it fell out accordingly. For when the Chaldæans removed from Ieruſalem to encounter the Egyptians, theſe bragging Patrons abandoned their enterpriſe; and taking Gaza in their way homewards, returned into Egypt, as if they had already done enough, leaving the poor people in Ieruſalem to their deſtined miſeries. Ier. 34. 11, 22.

Lev. 25. 39, 40, &c. In the mean while the Iews, who in the time of their extremity, had releaſed their Hebrew Bond-men, and Bond-women, according to the Law, in the year of Iubile, and made them free, thereby to encourage them to fight, did now upon the breaking up of the Chaldean Army, repent of what they had done, and thinking that all danger had been paſt, they held them by force to their former ſlavery. But the Chaldeans being returned to the Siege, the Pro-
Jer. 34. phet Ieremy, when the State of Ieruſalem began now to grow to extremity, Jer. 39. counſelled Zedechias to render himſelf to the Babylonians, aſſuring him of his own life, and of the ſafety of the City if he would do ſo. But his obſtinate heart led him on to that wretched end, which, his neglect of God, and his Infidelity and Perjury had provided for him.

Jer. 39. Three and twenty Moneths the Chaldean Army lay before Ieruſalem, and held it exceeding ſtraitly beſieged; For they built Forts againſt it round about, 2 King. 25. 1. or, they ſurrounded the City with Woodden Towers, ſo as the Beſieged could neither ſally out, nor receive into the City any ſupplies of men
Jer. 39. 1. & 52. 4. or Victuals. Joſephus ſaith, that they over-topped the Walls with their high Towers, which they erected upon Mounts, from which, with their Engines they did ſo beat upon the walls, that the Defendants were forced to forſake their ſtations. And though the Beſieged alſo raiſed Counter-buildings, like unto theſe, yet the Great Nebuchadnezzar, who Commanded all the Regions thereabouts, and had the Woods and Rivers at his command, found out means to diſappoint and overthrow all the Citizens endeavours, and to beat down their Towers as faſt as they raiſed them. For his own works were guarded by the Walls of Ieruſalem, whereas theirs within lay open to his Batteries. Beſides, both Famine and Peſtilence (which commonly accompany men ſtraitly beſieged) grew faſt upon them, whereby, when the number, ſtrength, and cou-
Jeruſalem taken. rage of the Iews failed, the Chaldeans made a breach, and forcing an entry, their Princes did ſeat themſelves as Lords of the Town, in the middle Gate, 2 King. 26. 2, 3, 4. Ier. 39. 2, 3. and 52, 5, &c.

Zedechias flyes and is taken. Zedechias, beholding this uncomfortable ſight, and finding no other means to eſcape the preſent danger, loſt both his Courage and his Hope at once, and ſhifted himſelf, together with his Wives, Children, Princes, and principal Servants, out of the City, by a way under-ground, leaving his amazed, and now headleſs Subjects, to the mercileſs Swords of their enraged enemies. Thus he, who when the Prophet Ieremy perſwaded him to render himſelf, deſpiſed both the the Counſel of God, and the Army and force of Nebuchadnezzar, uſed now the remedy which one calls, A woful, ſhameful, and unfortunate ſhift.

By this ſecret ſubterranean Vault, Zedechias ſtole away, and by the help of the dark night, recovered the plains, or deſarts of Iericho. But by reaſon of the train that followed him and his, (every one leading with him thoſe whom he loved beſt) he was eaſily traced and purſued. How great ſoever the company was that attended him, yet certain it is, that they, on whoſe fidelity he moſt relied, no ſooner beheld the Chaldeans to draw near, but they all abandoned his defence, and ſhifted for themſelves in the Deſarts, as they could. For, whom God had forſaken, no man regarded. And thus Zedechias was taken by the Miniſters of Gods vengeance, and being made a Priſoner, together with his Children, and Princes, he was carried to Riblah, in the Tribe of Nephthalim, where Nebuchadnezzar then lay, as a place indifferent between Ieruſalem and Tyre, with both which places he had at one time to do.

And carried to Babylon. Jer. 34. 3, &c. 2 King. 25. 4, 7. Jer. 39. 4, 7. and 52. 7, 11.

Now when Nebuchadnezzar had laid before Zedechias the many Graces and Favours which he had conferred upon him, together with the notable falſhood and perjury wherewith he had requited him, he commanded his Children, Princes, and Friends, to be ſlain before his face. This being done, to the end that ſo lamentable a ſpectacle ſhould be the laſt that ever he ſhould behold in this world, he cauſed his eyes to be put out, and ſo carried him like a Slave to Babylon, where he conſumed the reſt of his life in perpetual impriſonment. Herein was that marvellous Propheſie of Ezekiel fulfilled: I will bring him to Babylon, and he ſhall not ſee it, Ezek. 12. 13.

Thus, in the eleventh, and laſt year of Zedechias, which was the eighteenth of Nebuchadnezzar, the Chaldeans entred into Ieruſalem by force, where, ſparing neither Sex nor Age, they put all to the Sword that they found therein.

2 King. 25. 8. Jer. 52. 13. with 39. 8. The Temple and City burnt.

In the next year following, Nebuzaradan, the General of the Babyloniſh Army, burnt the Kings Palace, and the whole City of Ieruſalem, and after the fire had laſted from the ſeventh to the tenth day, he alſo burnt the Temple of God to the ground, the richeſt and moſt Magnificent place that ever the Sun ſaw, when it had ſtood four hundred thirty and one years.

2 King. 25. 18. Jer. 39. 8, 9. and 52. 14, 23. 2 Chron. 36. 18, &c. Poor people left under Gedaliah. Jer. 39. 10. Jer. 40. 16.

After this, upon a ſecond ſearch, Nebuzaradan (not yet ſatiated with blood) commanded ſeventy and two others to be ſlain, which had hidden themſelves from the firſt fury, to wit, the chief and the ſecond Prieſt, two Commanders of Zedechias his men of war, five of his houſhould Servants, and ſome others; carrying away to Babylon the ableſt of the People through all Iudæa, and leaving the pooreſt labouring people, with ſome that followed the party of Nebuchadnezzar, to till the Ground, over whom he placed Gedaliah, the Nephew of that Saphan, whom Joſias had formerly imployed in the Reformation of Religion. This Gedaliah, a Iew by Nation, left Zedechias, as it ſeemeth, in the beginning of the War, and by Ieremies deſire to live with him, it's probable that had embraced the ſame advice which the Prophet gave to Zedechias, which was, to ſubmit himſelf to the Babylonian King, who being ordained of God for them, as an inſtrument of his Juſtice, was, therefore irreſiſtable.

Jeremy goes to them. Jer. 40. 6.

The Prophet Ieremy being left to his own choice, to live where he pleaſed, made choice to go to Gedaliah, to whom he was commended by Nebuzaradan, and he, not only entertained him kindly, but comforted him, and all the other Iews that were left under his charge, promiſing them favour and liberty, ſo long as they remained obedient Subjects to Nebuchadnezzar, by whom he was eſtabliſhed Provincial Governour over his own Nation.

Gedaliah ſlain. Jer. 41. 2. 2 King. 25. 25.

But e're the year was expired, a Prince of the late Kings Family (who, during the Siege of Ieruſalem, had ſheltred himſelf from the ſtorm, with Baalis, King of the Ammonites) being attended by ten other choſen men, whilſt Gedaliah feaſted them in Mitſpah, the City of his reſidence, they trayterouſly ſlew him, together with divers Chaldeans and Iews that accompanied him. This done, done, they escaped, and in their way, encountring with eighty persons, repairing toward Gedaliah with presents, they slew most of them, and onely spared some, who promised to discover to them some Treasures that were hidden in the Fields during the War. They took with them also a Daughter of Zedechias, committed to the care of Gedaliah, by Nebuchadnezzar: This treachery of Ismael had been formerly discovered to Gedaliah by Iohanan, one of the Captains of the few remaining Iews, but he would not believe it.

Iudea being now without a Governour (for Ismael durst not take it upon him, but fled as fast as he could to the Ammonites) the residue of the Iews, fearing the revenge of the Chaldeans, resolved to fly into Egypt, and besought Ieremy to ask counsel of God for them, who returned answer, that if they remained in Iudea, God would provide for them, and shew them mercy; but if they sought to save themselves in Egypt, they should then undoubtedly perish. Notwithstanding which advice, the Iews held their determination, and despised the Oracle of God; and constraining Ieremy and Baruch to accompany them, they went into Egypt, and by the permission of Pharaoh, they dwelt in Taphnes; where, when Ieremy often reproved them for their Idolatry, foretelling the destruction of themselves, and the Egyptians, he was, by these his own hard-hearted and ingrateful Country-men, stoned to death, and by the Egyptians, who greatly reverenced him, buried near the Sepulchre of their Kings, Ier. 42. and 43.

Ieremy's counsel rejected. Jer. 43.

He is carried into Egypt, and stoned.

The nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzars Reign it was, when destroying utterly the great and mighty City of Ierusalem, he exceedingly enriched himself with the spoils of it and the Temple, and by that dreadful Example terrified all those that should dare to resist him. From that time forward, he, to his three and twentieth year, laboured in the Conquest of those adjoyning Countries, which God had exposed unto his Sword, and commanded to wear his Yoke, namely, the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, Tyrians, Sidonians, and Egyptians, though some of these were already become his followers, and served under him when Ierusalem was taken and burnt. But the Tyrians, whose City was built upon an Island, and therefore secure from the invasion of any Land-Army, and whose Fleet was so strong, that they needed not to fear any enemy at Sea, were neither daunted with the fall of their neighbour City, nor with the obstinate resolution of this mighty King, imploying all his wit and power to work their subversion.

Nebuchadnezzar conquers divers Nations.

That the City of Tyre was rather well-pleased, than any way discouraged with the destruction of Ierusalem, it appeareth by the Words which Ezekiel condemneth, as the common voice of Tyrus, Ezek. 26. 2. Aha! the Gate of the People is broken, it is turned unto me; For seeing she is desolate, I shall be repleniſhed. Yet at length, that great work before mentioned, began to appear above Water, and so to threaten them with inevitable mischief.

Nebuchadnezzar still follows his work hard, notwithstanding all discouragements, and in the thirteenth year of the Siege, and the nineteenth of his Reign, he had brought it to such perfection, that now the Citizens despaired of holding out against him; whereupon all the chiefest of them imbarked themselves, their Families, and Treasures in their Fleet, and escaped to the Isle of Cyprus, but the poorer sort were left to the fury of the enemy; who being inraged for being put to so much pains, slew with the Sword, not only such people of Tyre as dwelt on the Continent (who are called her Daughters in the Field) but the like execution was done in the streets, into which, with excessive labour, the Chaldeans made way for his Horses and Chariots. Thus Nebuchadnezzar made his Army serve a great service, against Tyrus, wherein every head was made bald, and every shoulder was made bare, yet had he no wages, nor his Army, Ezek. 29.18. but was fain to rest contented with the Honour of having destroyed that City, which in all mens Judgments had been held invincible.

Tyre is taken.

The

The destruction of these two Great, and powerful Cities, having made the name of the Chaldeans dreadful in the ears of all the Nations round about, Nebuchadnezzar used this advantage of that reputation which he had obtained by his victories already gotten, to the getting of more, and more profitable, with less pains. The Kingdom of Egypt was the mark which he chiefly aimed at. A Country so abounding in Riches and pleasures, that it might well have tempted any Prince, finding himself strong enough to pick occasion of quarrel against it. Besides, it was so far an enemy to the Crown of Babylon, that, had it been far poorer, yet it must have been subdued, or the Conquest of Syria could not have been secured.

Yet was it needful, that before he entred upon this business, the Countries adjacent should be reduced into such tearms, that either they should wholly stand at his devotion, or at least, be able not to work him any displeasure. And herein the Decree of God concurred (as in all prosperous enterprises) with reason of State. For the people of Moab, Ammon, Edom, Damascus, Kedar, Hazor, and other adjoyning Regions, whom God for their sins had condemned to fall under the Babylonian Yoke, were such, as regarding only their own gain, had, some of them, like Ravens, followed the Chaldean Army, to feed upon the carcasses that fell by the cruelty thereof. Others taking advantage of their Neighbours miseries, occupied the Countries, which, by his Victories, belonged to Nebuchadnezzar, all of them thinking, that when the Babylonian had satisfied his fury, he would be forced to forsake those desolated Countries, and leave the possession of them to those who could first seize upon them. Particularly, the Edomites, and Philistines, had shewed much malice against the Jews when their City was taken, Ezek. 25. 12, 15. Whether they had done any good service to the Chaldeans, it appears not; if they did any, its like to have been in reference to their own advantage, wherein yet they were deceived. The Ammonites were not contented to rejoyce only at the fall of Jerusalem, but presently they entred upon the Country of Gad, and took possession of it, as if, not the Chaldeans, but they had subdued Israel, Ezek. 25. 3. Jer. 49. 1. Neither can it be imagined what other design Baalis, King of the Ammonites had, when he sent Ismael, a Prince of the Blood of Judah, to murther Gedalia, whom the King of Babel had made Governour over those that remained in Israel, and to carry Captive into the Ammonites Country, the People that abode in Mizpah, than a desire of entangling Nebuchadnezzar with so many labours at once, as should force him to retire into his own Country, and abandon those wasted Lands, to himself, and others, for whom they lay conveniently. Such, or the like Policy, the Moabites also did exercise, whose Pride, and Wrath were made frustrate by God, and their dissimulation condemned, as not doing aright, Ver. 40. 14. & 41. 2. & 10. & 28, 27, &c.

The Jews enemies threatned.

All these Nations had the Art of ravening, which is familiar to such as either live in, or that border upon Deserts; and now the time ministred occasion to them to shew the uttermost cunning of their Thievish wits. But Nebuchadnezzar made void all their devices by sharp, and sudden War upon them, overwhelming them with unexpected ruin, as it were in one night, according to the Prophesies of Isay, Jeremy, and Ezekiel, who all foretold, with little difference of Words, the greatness and swiftness of the misery that should come upon them. It appears not with which of them he first began; but it seems that Moab was the last that felt his heavy hand: For so many interpret that Prophesie of Isay, threatning Moab with destruction after three years, as having reference to the third year following the destruction of Jerusalem: the next year after it, being spent in the Egyptian expedition. This is evident that all the principal Towns in these

They are destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar.

Isa. 16. 14.

Countries were burnt, and the people either ſlain, or made captives, few excepted, who ſaved themſelves by flight, and had not the courage to return to their habitations too haſtily, much leſs to attempt any thing againſt Nebuchadnezzar: but lived as miſerable out-laws, until the end of the ſeventy years which God had appointed for the deſolation of their Countries, as well as of the Land of Judæa.

Egypt attempted by Nebuchadnezzar.

When by a long courſe of Victory Nebuchadnezzar had brought into Subjection all the Nations of Syria, and the bordering Arabians in ſuch wiſe, as that no enemy to himſelf, or Friend to the Egyptian, was left at his back, that might either impede his proceedings, or take advantage of any misfortune that might befall him; then did he forthwith apply himſelf to the Conqueſt of Egypt, upon which thoſe other Nations had formerly been dependants. Of this expedition, and the Victorious iſſue thereof, the three great Prophets, Iſay, Jeremy, and Ezekiel have written ſo plainly, that its altogether needleſs to ſeek after any other authority to confirm the ſame. Long before it was propheſied by Iſay, that the King of Aſſyria, or Babylon, ſhould lead away the Egyptians Priſoners, and the Ethiopians Captives, young, and old, naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered to the ſhame of Egypt, Iſa. 20. 4.

But Ezekiel and Jeremy, as their Propheſies were neerer to the time of execution, ſo they handled this Argument more plainly, and preciſely. For Ezekiel tells us cleerly, that Egypt ſhould be given to Nebuchadnezzar as wages for his great ſervice which he had done againſt Tyre, Ezek. 29. 18, 19, 20. He recounteth alſo in particular all the chief Cities in Egypt, ſaying, that theſe by name ſhould be deſtroyed, and go into Captivity: yea, and that Pharaoh, and all his Army ſhould be ſlain by the Sword, Ezek. 30. 4, 10, &c. Chap. 32. 2, &c. And the Prophet Jeremy, ſaith thus, Behold I will viſit the common people of Noe, and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their Gods, and their Kings, even Pharaoh and all that truſt in him; and I will deliver them into the hands of thoſe that ſeek their lives, and into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babel, and into the hands of his Servants, Jerem. 46. 25, 26. Joſephus accordingly ſaith, that Nebuchadnezzar in three and twentieth year of his Raign, and in the fifteenth year after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, did Conquer Egypt, and kill the King thereof, appointing a Vice-Roy to Govern it. And it is evident that his Victories which followed his Conqueſt of Syria, were ſuch as did more enlarge his Dominions, than all his former Wars had done. For Ezekiel in his Thirtieth Chapter reckoneth up (beſides the whole Country of Egypt) Phut, and Lud, with other Nations that may ſeem to have reached as far as into Mauritania, which were conquered by him, and added to his Empire. And truly it is worth obſervation how Pharaoh, King of Egypt was infatuated by God, who thought himſelf moſt ſafe in his own Country by reaſon of the well-defenced ſituation thereof, and therefore very unwiſely ſuffered his enemies to make a cleer way to his own doors by the Conqueſt of all his Friends, and Allyes in Syria. For as the labour of this buſineſs did more harden than weary the Chaldean Army, ſo the confidence, and vain ſecurity of the Egyptians, relying upon the difficulty of the paſſages which the enemy was to make through the Arabian Deſarts, and the great advantage which the River Nilus afforded, did little avail them, when the War came on; Yea, it did much aſtoniſh them (as may juſtly be thought) in the time of execution. It being uſually ſeen, that the hearts of men fail, when thoſe helps deceive them, in which they had repoſed more confidence than in their own Virtue, and Valour.

Egypt conquered.

Carnal confidence.

Until this time, the Kingdom of Egypt had flouriſhed under the Rule and Government of the Pharaohs for above the ſpace of one thouſand, four hundred, and eighty years. But from this time forward, it remained forty years without a King under the ſubjection of the Babylonians; and then at lenghth

it

it began to recover by little and little the former greatneſs: Yet ſo, that it was never dreadful unto others as it had been, God having ſaid of that people; At the end of forty years I will gather the Egyptians from the People whither they were ſcattered; and I will bring again the Captivity of Egypt, and will cauſe them to return into the Land of Pathros, into the land of their habitation, and they ſhall be yet a baſe Kingdom. It ſhall be the baſeſt of the Kingdoms, neither ſhall it exalt it ſelf any more above the Nations; For I will diminiſh them that they ſhall no more rule over the Nations, and it ſhall be no more the confidence of the Houſe of Iſrael, Ezek. 29. 13, 14, 15, 16. For whereas it had been ſaid of Pharaoh, I am the Son of the wiſe, the Son of ancient Kings, Iſa. 19. 11. and whereas they had Vaunted, the River is mine, and I have made it, Ezek. 29. 9. The Princes of Egypt, now became fools, the River failed them, the King himſelf was now taken and ſlain, and that ancient Linage was quite extinguiſhed.

Egypt never recovered its ſtrength again.

Of any Wars made by Nebuchadnezzar after ſuch time as he returned from the Conqueſt of Egypt, we read not, except that againſt Ninive, the deſtruction whereof was foretold by the Prophet. Ninive indeed had been taken long before by Merodoch, and together with the reſt of Aſſyria, made ſubject to Babylon. Yet was it left under a peculiar King, who rebelling againſt Nebuchadnezzar, as Jehoiakim, and Zedechias, Tributary Kings of Judah, had done, was made partaker alſo of the ſame ruin. That the deſtruction of Ninive followed the Conqueſt of Egypt, is clear by the compariſon which Nahum the Prophet made between this City that was to fall, and the City of Noe in Egypt which was fallen already; Nahum 3. 8, &c. Art thou better than populous Noe, that was ſituate amongſt the Rivers, that had the waters round about it; whoſe Rampire was the Sea, and her wall was from the Sea, Ethiopia, and Egypt were her ſtrength, and it was infinite: Put, and Lubin were her helpers. Yet was ſhe carried away, ſhe went into Captivity; Her young Children alſo were daſhed in pieces at the top of all the ſtreets, and they caſt lots for her honourable men, and all her great men were bound in chains. Thou alſo ſhalt be drunken; thou ſhalt be hid; thou alſo ſhalt ſeek ſtrength becauſe of the enemy, &c.

Ninive deſtroyed. See before.

This Great Monarch, having thus ſpent his younger days in inlarging his Dominions, he betook himſelf to reſt, that he might reap the fruit of his former labours; and the firſt thing that he applied himſelf to, was to beautifie his Imperial City of Babylon, adding a new City to the Old, which he compaſſed about with three Walls, and made in them ſtately Gates. And neer the former Palace he built a New one, more ſtately than it, wherein he raiſed ſtone-works, like unto Mountains, which he planted with all manner of Trees. He made alſo Penſile Gardeus (one of the Worlds wonders) born upon Arches, fourſquare, each ſquare being four hundred Foot long, filled above with Earth, whereon grew all ſorts of Trees, and Plants. The Arches were built one above another in a convenient-heigth, ſtill increaſing as they aſcended. The higheſt, which did bear the walls on the top, were fifty Cubits high, ſo that they equalized the higheſt Mountains. He made alſo Aquæducts for the watering of this Garden, which ſeemed to hang in the air. This moſt ſumptuous frame, which out-laſted all the remainder of the Aſſyrian, and all the Perſian Empire, is ſaid to have been reared and finiſhed in fifteen Days. He erected alſo an image of Gold in the Plain of Dura, ſixty Cubits high, and ſix broad, commanding all his Servants, and Subjects to fall down and Worſhip it, Dan. 3. 1, &c.

Babylon beautified.

Penſile Gardens.

Nebuchadnezzars Golden Image.

But of all this, and other his Magnificence, we find little elſe recorded, ſave that which indeed is moſt profitable for us to conſider, to wit, his overvalewing of his own greatneſs, which abaſed him to a condition inferior to the pooreſt of men. For whereas God had honoured him, not only with many great, and glorious Victories, and much happineſs in his own life; but with a rare diſcovery of things that were to come after him; yea, and had manifeſted the certainty of his Dreams, by the miraculous reducing of it into his Memory, and given him the interpretation thereof by the Prophet Daniel: He notwithſtanding became ſo forgetful of God, whoſe wonderful power he had ſeen, and acknowledged, that he cauſed that Golden Image to be ſet up, and Worſhipped, appointing a cruel Death for them that ſhould dare to diſobey him, which was utterly unlawful, and repugnant to the Law of him that is King of Kings; And thus he who ſo lately had Worſhipped Daniel, the ſervant of God, as if he had been God himſelf: now commanded a Statue to be erected unto himſelf, wherein himſelf might be worſhipped as God: From this impiety it pleaſed God to recall and reclaim him, by the wonderful and miraculous delivery of thoſe three bleſſed Saints, out of the fiery Furnace, who being thrown bound into the midſt of it, for refuſing to commit that abominable Idolatry, were preſerved from all hurt of the fire, looſened from their Bonds, accompanied by an Angel, and at laſt called out by the King, and reſtored to their former honour.

Dan.2.31,&c.

His Pride.

A Miracle. Dan.3.26.&c.

Dan. 3. 29. He makes a Decree to Gods Honour.

Nebuchadnezzar being amazed at the Miracle, made a Decree tending to the honour of God, whom by the erection of his Image, he had diſhonoured. Yet was not this devotion ſo rooted in him, that it could bring forth fruit anſwerable to his haſty zeal: Therefore was he fore-warned of God in a Dream, of a terrible Judgement which hung over his Head, which Daniel expounding, withall counſelled him to break off his ſin by righteouſneſs, and his iniquities, by ſhewing mercy to the poor, that there might be a lengthening of his tranquility, Dan. 4. 27. Whence it ſeems, that injuſtice and cruelty were his faults, for which he was thus threatned: But neither did the Dream, nor advice of Daniel ſo prevail. For probably he believed it not, but looked upon it as an idle Dream; for that it ſeemed altogether unlikely that ſo great a Monarch ſhould be driven from amongſt men, yea, compelled to dwell with the Beaſts of the Field, and made to eat Graſs as the Oxen, this was altogether incredible in mans Judgment, and therefore giving ſo little heed to it, its no marvel that he had forgotten it by the years end.

His Dream interpreted.

He dwells with the Beaſts.

One whole year was given to this haughty Prince wherein to repent, which reſpiting of the execution, may ſeem to have bred in him forgetfulneſs of Gods ſentence. For at the end of twelve months, as he was walking in his Royal Palace in Babel, he was ſo overjoyed, and tranſported with a vain contemplation of his own ſeeming happineſs, that without all fear of Gods heavy Judgment pronounced againſt him, he uttered theſe proud words: Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the Houſe of the Kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the Honour of my Majeſty?

But his proud ſpeeches were not fully ended, when a voice from Heaven told him, that his Kingdom was departed from him, &c. And the ſame hour the thing was fulfilled upon Nebuchadnezzar; And he was driven from men, and did eat graſs as Oxen, and his Body was wet with the dew of Heaven, till his hair was grown like Eagles Feathers, and his nails like Birds Claws, Dan. 4. 33, &c.

His Bodily ſhape not changed.

This his puniſhment was ſingular, and unexpected. For he ran amongſt Beaſts in the Fields and Woods, where, for ſeven years he lived, not only as a ſalvage man, but as a ſalvage Beaſt: for a Beaſt he thought himſelf to be, and therefore fed himſelf in the ſame manner, and with the ſame food that Beaſts do. Not that he was changed in his external ſhape from a man to a Beaſt. For as St. Jerome well expounds it, when he ſaith, verſ. 34. that his underſtanding was reſtored unto him, he ſhewed, that he had not loſt his humane ſhape, but his underſtanding, being ſtricken with a Frenzy, or deep Melancholy, which made him think himſelf a Beaſt.

Seven

Seven years being expired, Nebuchadnezzar was reſtored both to his Underſtanding, and to his Kingdom: and (ſaith he) I bleſſed the moſt High, and I praiſed, and honoured him that liveth for ever, whoſe Dominion is an everlaſting Dominion, and his Kingdom is from Generation to Generation; And all the Inhabitants of the Earth are reputed as nothing, and he doth according to his will in the Army of Heaven, and amongſt the Inhabitants of the Earth: and none can ſtay his hand, or ſay unto him, What doſt thou? At the ſame time my reaſon returned unto me; and for the Glory of my Kingdom, mine honour, and brightneſs returned unto me, and my Counſellors, and my Lords ſought unto me, and I was eſtabliſhed in my Kingdom, and excellent Majeſty was added unto me. Now therefore I Nebuchadnezzar praiſe, and extoll, and honour the King of Heaven, all whoſe works are truth, and his way is Judgement, and thoſe that walk in Pride he is able to abaſe, Dan. 4. 34, 35, 36, 37. He is reſtored to his Kingdom. And gives Glory to God.

How long he lived after this is uncertain, but all agree that he reigned about twenty months co-partner with his Father in the Kingdom, and about three and forty years by himſelf alone.

Whilſt Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon raged in Judæa, God prepared a Worm, which in due time, ſhould eat out this ſpreading Tree; by reaſon of the cry of his poor people, which entred into his ears: According to that of the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 137. 8, 9. O Daughter of Babylon, who art to be deſtroyed: Happy ſhall he be that rewardeth thee, as thou haſt ſerved us. Happy ſhall he be that taketh and daſheth thy little ones againſt the ſtones. For in this very year was Cyrus, the Perſo-Median born; whoſe Father was a Perſian, and his Mother a Mede; of whom this very Nebuchadnezzar, at the hour of his Death, uttered this Propheſie. There ſhall come a Perſian Mule, who ſhall make uſe of your Devils, as his Fellow-Souldiers, to bring you into Bondage. He calls Cyrus a Mule, becauſe he was to be born of a Father and Mother of two divers Nations. Gods Juſtice. A Propheſie.

THE

THE

LIFE and DEATH

OF

CYRUS

THE

GREAT,

The First Founder of the PERSIAN EMPIRE.

His Parentage.

YRUS was the Son of Cambyſes, King of Perſia, by Mandanes the Daughter of Aſtyages, King of Media; He was ſo named by the Prophet Iſay, almoſt two hundred years before he was born, Iſa. 45. 1, 4. Thus ſaith the Lord unto Cyrus his anointed, &c.

His Education.

Cyrus his firſt Education was under his Father Cambyſes, with whom he lived till he was twelve years old, and ſomewhat more; at which time he was ſent for, together with his Mother Mandanes, by his Grandfather Aſtyages, into Media.

In Media he ſerved Aſtyages, firſt, as one of his Halberdiers, and then as one of his Armour-bearers, till he was called home into Perſia by his Father Cambyſes, when as yet he had one year to ſpend at School; and when he had ſpent ſeventeen years at School amongſt Boyes, he ſpent ten years more amongſt youths.

His firſt Action in War.

When Cyrus was now almoſt ſixteen years old, Evilmerodach the King of Aſſyria, being about to marry a Wife called Nicotris, made an in-rode, with a great Army of Horſe and Foot, into the borders of Media, there to take his pleaſure in hunting, and harraſſing of the Countrey: againſt whom, Aſtyages, and Cyaxares his Son, and Cyrus his Grand-child, who then firſt began to bear Arms, being but about fifteen or ſixteen years old, marched out, met with him, and in a great Battel overthrew him, and drave him out of his borders. Indeed the Death of Nebuchadnezzar, the Father of Evilmerodach, gave courage to thoſe that had found him a troubleſome Neighbour, to ſtand upon proudprouder terms with the Babylonians, than in his flouriſhing eſtate they durſt have uſed.

But Evilmerodach, being too proud to digeſt this loſs which he had received by the Medes, and their Allies, the Perſians under Cyrus, he drew unto his party the Lydians, and all the people of the leſſer Aſia, with great gifts and ſtrong perſwaſions, hoping by their aſſiſtance to overwhelm his enemies with a ſtrong invaſion, whom in vain he had ſought to weary out by a lingring War.

The iſſue of theſe great preparations made by Evilmerodach againſt the Medes, was ſuch as opened the way to the fulfilling divers Propheſies which were many years before uttered againſt Babel, by Iſay and Jeremy. For the Babylonians and their Confederates, who, truſting in their numbers, thought to have buried the Medes and Perſians under their thick ſhowers of Arrows and Darts, were encountred with an Army of ſtout and well trained men, weightily Armed for cloſe fight, by whom they were beaten in a great Battel, wherein Evilmerodach was ſlain. After which, that great Empire that was raiſed and upheld by Nebuchadnezzar, was grievouſly ſhaken and enfeibled under his unproſperous Son, and left to be ſuſtained by his Grand-child Belſhazzar: a man more like to have overthrown it when it was greateſt and ſtrongeſt, than to repair it when it was in a way of falling.

Evilmerodach is ſlain.

Xenophon relates the matter thus, When the Babylonian had enlarged his Empire with many Victories, and was become Lord of all Syria, and many other Countreys, he began to hope, that if the Medes could be brought under his Subjection, there would not then be left any Nation adjoyning able to make head againſt him. For the King of the Medes was able to bring into the Field ſixty thouſand Foot, and ten thouſand Horſe, to which the Forces of Perſia being joyned, made an exceeding great Army.

The ſtrength of Media.

Conſidering therefore the ſtrength of ſuch a neighbour, he invited Cræſus, King of Lydia, a Prince very mighty both in men and Treaſure, and with him other Lords of Aſia the leſs, to his aſſiſtance, alledging that thoſe Eaſtern Nations were very powerfull, and ſo firmly conjoyned by League, and many Alliances, that it would not be eaſie, no nor poſſible, for any one Nation to reſiſt them.

With theſe ſuggeſtions, backed with rich Preſents, he drew to himſelf ſo many adherents, as he compounded an Army of two hundred Thouſand Foot, and ſixty thouſand Horſe: Of which ten thouſand Horſe, and forty thouſand Foot were brought by Cræſus, who had great cauſe of enmity againſt the Medes, for that they had made great Wars againſt his Father Allyattes. Whereupon Cyrus was by his Father Cambyſes, and the Council of the Kingdom, made General of the Perſian Army, and ſent away into Media with thirty thouſand Souldiers, and one thouſand Commanders, all of equal Authority under him; and when he came thither, he was alſo made by his Uncle Cyaxares, who had ſent for him, General of the Median Forces, and the management of the War againſt the Babylonian, was wholly committed to him: With this Army he marched againſt Evilmerodach, and his aſſociates, and in a very bloody Battel, overthrew them. In which defeat, Evilmerodach, King of Babylon, being ſlain, ſo many of his Subjects revolted, that Babylon it ſelf could no longer be ſecured, but by the help of Mercenaries, waged with great ſums of money out of Aſia the leſs, Egypt, and other Countries, which new levied Forces were alſo defeated, and ſcattered by Cyrus, who following his advantage, poſſeſſed himſelf of a great part of the leſſer Aſia. Thoſe Perſians which followed Cyrus, and were by him levied, are reckoned to be thirty thouſand Foot, of which, one thouſand were Armed Gentlemen; the reſt of the common ſort were Archers, and ſuch as uſed the Dart, or Sling.

Cyrus made General of the Army.

He overthrows the Babylonians.

Cyrus his great victories.

Cræſus,

Cræſus his Victories.

Cræſus, notwithſtanding the men loſt, and the Treaſure ſpent in the quarrel of the Babylonians, yet did he Conquer Æolis, Doris, and Ionia, Provinces poſſeſſed by the Greeks in Aſia the leſs, adjoyning to his Kingdom of Lydia. He gave Laws alſo to the Phrygians, Bithynians, Carians, Myſians, Paphlagonians, and other Nations. He alſo enforced the Epheſians to acknowledge him for their Lord; He alſo obtained a ſignal Victory againſt the Sacæans, a Nation of the Scythians; All which he perſormed in fourteen years.

And being now confident by reaſon of his good ſucceſſes, and withall, envious at Cyrus his Fame and Proſperity; doubting alſo that his great Victories might in the end grow perillous to himſelf, he conſulted with the Oracle of Apollo, whom he preſented with marvellous rich gifts, what ſucceſs he might hope for in his undertakings againſt Cyrus; from whom he received this ambiguous anſwer, Crœſus, Halym penetrans, magnam pervertet opum vim: Cræſus paſſing over the River Halys, ſhall diſſolve a great Dominion: For the Devil being doubtful of his ſucceſs, gave him this Riddle, which might be conſtrued either way, to the ruine of Perſia, or of his own Lydia.

The Devils ſubtilty.

Hereupon Cræſus (interpreting it as he moſt deſired) reſolved to ſtop the courſe of Cyrus his progreſs, and therefore deſpiſed all the Arguments uſed by Sandanes to the contrary, who deſired him to conſider aforehand, that he provoked a Nation inhabiting a barren and Mountanous Region; a People not covered with the ſoft ſilk of Worms, but with the hard skins of Beaſts; not fed with meat to their Fancies, but content with what they found; Drinkers of Water, and not of Wine; and in a word, a Nation Warlike, Patient, Valiant, and Proſperous, over whom, if he became Victorious, he could thereby enrich himſelf in nothing but Fame, in which he already excelled: and if by them he ſhould be beaten and ſubdued, ſo great would his loſs appear of all things, which the world makes account of, that the ſame could neither be haſtily recounted, nor eaſily conceived.

Good counſel neglected.

Cræſus marches againſt Cyrus.

Notwithſtanding this ſolid, and ſeaſonable Counſel, Cræſus having prepared a powerful Army, advanced with the ſame toward Media: but in his paſſage he was retarded at Pterium, a City in Cappadocia of great ſtrength; which whilſt he attempted both by power and policy to take and Conquer, Cyrus came on, and found the Lydians encamped before it. Neither of theſe Champions were inferior to other, either in ſtrength or opinion. For out of doubt, Cræſus, as he excelled any Prince of that age in Riches and ability, ſo was he not inferiour unto any in Territories and Fame, that then lived. But Kingdoms and Commonwealths have their increaſe, and Periods from Divine Ordinance. This time was the Winter of Cræſus his proſperity, the leaves of his flouriſhing eſtate being ready to fall; and that of Cyrus but in the firſt Spring and Flower; the God of all Power had given a date to the one, and a beginning of glory to the other.

A great Battel.

When theſe two Armies were in view each of other, after divers skirmiſhes had paſſed between them, the Perſians and Lydians began to joyn together, and encounter each other in groſs Bodies; and as either of them began to retreat, freſh ſupplies were ſent in from both their Kings. And as the Perſians had ſomewhat the better of the day, ſo when the dark vail of night had hidden each Army from the others view, Cræſus doubting what ſucceſs the riſing Sun might bring with it, quitted the Field to Cyrus, and with all ſpeed poſſible, retreated towards his own Countrey, and taking the next way thither, he recovered Sardis, the firſt City of Lydia, and his Regal Seat, without any purſuit made by Cyrus to retard him; where, being arrived, and nothing ſuſpecting Cyrus his approach, or any other War for that Winter, he diſmiſſed his Army, and ſent the Troops of his ſundry Nations to their own Provinces, appointing them to re-aſſemble at the end of five Months, acquainting his Commanders with his intent of renewing the War at the time appointed.

Cræſus retreats.

The

The morning being come, Cyrus finding that the Lydians were departed, put his Army in order to purſue after them, yet not ſo haſtily, and at their heels, as to be diſcovered. But getting good intellengence of Cræſus his proceedings, he ſo ordered the matter, that he preſented not himſelf before Sardis, till ſuch time as Cræſus had diſpoſed of his Army, and ſent them to their Winter Quarters. His coming being altogether unlooked for, and unfeared, he had opportunity enough to ſurround Sardis with his Army, wherein Cræſus had no other Companies than the Citizens, and his ordinary Guards, inſomuch as after fourteen days Siege, Cyrus took the City by Storm, and put all to the Sword that made reſiſtance.

Cyrus purſues him.

And beſieges him in Sardis.

Sardis taken.

Cræſus now having neither Arms to Fight, nor Wings to fly, in this common calamity, he thruſt himſelf into the heap, and multitude of his miſerable Subjects, and had undergone the ſame lot with the reſt of the vanquiſhed perſons, had not a Son of his, who had been dumb all his Life before (by the extremity of Paſſion and Fear) cryed out to a common Souldier, who was with a drawn Sword purſuing his Father, that he ſhould not kill Cræſus. Hereupon he was taken and impriſoned, and deſpoiled of all things, but only the expectation of Death.

Cræſus preſerved.

Shortly after he was bound with Fetters, and Placed upon a large and high pile of Wood, to be burnt to aſhes thereon. To which, when Fire was ſet, and kindled, Cræſus remembring the diſcourſe which long before he had with Solon, the Athenian Lawgiver, he thrice cryed out, O Solon, Solon, Solon, and being demanded what he meant by the invocation of Solon, he at firſt uſed ſilence: But being urged again, he told them that now he found that true, which wiſe Solon had long ſince told him; That many men in the race and courſe of their lives might well be accounted Fortunate, but no man could diſcern himſelf to be happy indeed till his end.

He ſhould have been burnt, but is ſaved.

Of this his anſwer, Cyrus being ſpeedily informed, and thereby being put in mind of the mutability of Fortune, and of his own mortality, he commanded his Miniſters of Juſtice, ſpeedily to withdraw the Fire, and to ſave Cræſus, and bring him to his preſence; which being done, Cyrus demanded of him, who it was that had perſwaded him? or what reaſon had inſtigated him to invade his Territories, and to make him, of a Friend, an Enemy. To which Cræſus thus anſwered: It was thy proſperous, and my unproſperous deſtiny (the Grecian Gods with all, flattering my Ambition) that were the inventers, and conducters of Cræſus War againſt Cyrus.

Cyrus being much affected with this anſwer of Cræſus, and bewailing his eſtate, though he was victorious over him, did not only ſpare his life, but entertained him ever after as a King, and his companion; Thus Herodotus relates it. But Xenophon ſaith, that Cyrus did entertain Cræſus friendly at the firſt ſight, and makes no mention of any ſuch cruel intent of burning him alive; and this may ſeem the more probable, becauſe Cræſus was his Grandmothers Brother, and its very likely that neerneſs of Alliance might withhold Cyrus (if he had been vicious, which he was not) from ſo cruel a purpoſe as to have burnt him alive.

Cyrus makes him his friend.

When Cyrus afterwards paſſed with his Army over Araxes into Scythia, he left Cræſus to be a companion, and counſeller to his Son Cambyſes, whom he made Governour over his Empire in his abſence, with whom he lived all the Reign of Cyrus, and did afterwards accompany Cambyſes in his Expedition into Egypt, where he hardly eſcaped his Tyrannous hands. At this time the Races of three of the greateſt Kings in that part of the World came to an end; to wit, of the Babylonians, Medians, and Lydians, in Balthaſar, Xiaxares, or Darius Medus, and Cræſus.

Cyrus invades Scythia.

After this Lydian War enſued the great Conqueſt of Babylon, which gave unto Cyrus an Empire ſo large, and mighty, that he was juſtly reputed the greateſt Monarch then living upon the Earth. How long time the preparations for this great action took up, is uncertain, only it ſeems that ten whole years did paſs between his taking of thoſe two Cities of Sardis and Babylon; which time was not wholly ſpent in providing for the Aſſyrian War, but much of it in ſetling the Eſtates which he had already purchaſed; Cteſias alſo tells us, that during this time Cyrus invaded Scythia, and being victorious over that Nation, he took Amorges their King Priſoner; But being in a ſecond Battel overthrown by Sparetha, the Wife of Amorges, himſelf was taken Priſoner, and ſo one King was releaſed for the other. Gobrias about this time (a Nobleman, whoſe only Son, the King of Babylon, in his Fathers life time, had in a hunting match, villainouſly ſlain) together with his Friends, revolted to Cyrus.

His danger.

Its very probable alſo, that no ſmall part of thoſe troubles which ſprang up in the lower Aſia, grew ſoon after Cyrus his departure with his Victorious Army, before the Conqueſt was fully eſtabliſhed. For after Cyrus was returned out of Aſia the leſs, many Nations which were formerly conquered by Cræſus, and now by Cyrus, revolted from him; Againſt whom he imployed Pactias, and then Harpagus, who firſt reduced the Phocians under their former Obedience; and then the reſt of the Greeks that inhabited Aſia the leſs, as the Jonians, Carians, Æolians, and Lycians, who, very reſolutely (according to the ſtrength they had) defended themſelves; But in the attempt upon Babylon it ſelf, its not to be queſtioned but Cyrus imployed all his Forces, having taken order beforehand, that nothing ſhould be able to divert him, or to raiſe that Siege, or to fruſtrate that work upon which he did ſet all his reſt.

The ſtrength of Babylon.

And great reaſon there was; that he ſhould improve all his Policy and ſtrength unto the taking of that City, which, beſides the Fame and reputation that it held, as being the Head of an Empire, which depended thereupon, was ſo ſtrongly fortified with a trebble Wall of great heigth, and ſurrounded with the waters of Euphrates, that were unfordable, and ſo plentifully Victualled for many years, that the Inhabitants were not only free from fear, and doubt of their eſtate, but through their confidence, they derided, and deſpiſed all the Projects and power of their Beſiegers.

Babylon fortified by Nicotris.

For not long before, Nicotris, the Mother of Belſhazzar, a witty, and active Woman, foreſeeing the ſtorm that was ready to fall upon Babylon from the Medes, to hinder their paſſing the River by Boats into Babylon, She turned the River Euphrates, which before ran with a ſtrait and ſwift courſe, drawing it through many winding Channels, which ſhe had cut for that purpoſe, whereby ſhe made it to run more ſlowly than formerly it did: and then ſhe raiſed a huge Dam upon each ſide of the River; and up the River from the City-ward, ſhe digged a vaſt Pond, which was every way three or four hundred Furlongs wide, into which ſhe turned the River, thereby leaving the old Channel of the River dry; which done, ſhe fell to work, and fenced the Banke within the City with Brick-walls, and raiſed the Water-Gates, anſwerable in every point to the reſt of the Walls, which were made on the farther ſide of the Channel, round about the City. She built alſo a ſtately, and Magnificent Bridge of Stone in the midſt of the City, which joyned to the Kings Houſes, that ſtood on each ſide the River: and having finiſhed all her Works, and Fortifications, ſhe turned the River out of the Pond into its right Channel again.

Cyrus invades Babylon.

And now came Cyrus to invade the Country of Babylon, and appeared before the Walls of the City, and there challenged the King to a Duel, or ſingle Combat, but he refuſed it. At this time Gadatas, a Noble man of Babylon, whom Belſhazzar had gelt, upon a jealouſie that he had of him with his Wife, fell over to Cyrus, in revenge whereof the Babylonians ſallied out, and fell upon his his Lands; but Cyrus set upon them, and routed them; At which time the Caduſii, whom Cyrus had appointed to bring up the rear of his Army, unknown to Cyrus, ſet upon a Country lying neer to the City; but the King of Babylon falling out upon them, cut them all off. Yet Cyrus quickly revenged the Death of his men; and then came to an agreement with Belſhazzar, to hold truce with the Plough-men on both ſides, and the War to go on between the Souldiers only. After which, paſſing beyond the City, he took in three of their Forts, and ſo returned into the confines of Aſſyria, and Media; and thither, upon his invitation, came his Uncle Cyaxares, and was by him honourably received, and entertained in a Pavilion, that had been the King of Aſſyrias: and Winter now approaching, they entred into conſultation to provide things neceſſary to maintain the Siege.

Cyrus beſieges it.

The only hope of Cyrus with his Medes, and Perſians (who deſpaired of carrying by aſſault a City ſo well, and ſtrongly fortified, and manned) was in cutting off all ſupplies of victuals, and other neceſſaries; Whereof, though the Town was ſaid to be ſtored ſufficiently for more than twenty years, yet might it well be imagined, that amongſt ſuch a World of People as dwelt within thoſe Walls, one great want or other would ſoon appear amongſt them, and vanquiſh the reſolution of that unwarlike multitude. Yet in expecting that ſucceſs of this courſe, the Beſiegers were likely to endure much hardſhip, and travel, and that all in vain, if they did not keep ſtrict watch, and ſure guards upon all the Avenues, and Quarters of it.

Which that he might the better do, he cauſed preſently a vaſt trench, both for bredth and depth to be caſt round about the Walls of the City, caſting the earth ever towards his own Army, and made ſtore of Bulworks all along upon it, for his Guards to be upon: and then, dividing his whole Army into twelve parts, he ordered that each of them ſhould watch his Moneth, by turn.

The Babylonians vain Hopes.

And yet this was a very hard work, conſidering the vaſt circuit of thoſe Walls which they were to gird in, having neither men enough, nor yet ſufficiently aſſured to their Commander; the conſideration whereof Miniſtred unto the Babylonians matter of good Paſtime, when they ſaw Lydians, Phrygians, Cappadocians, and others, quartered about their City to keep them in, who, having been their Ancient Friends, and Allies, were more like to joyn with them, if occaſion were offered, than to uſe much diligence on the behalf of Cyrus, who had, as it were but yeſterday, laid upon their necks the galling Yoke of ſervitude.

Cyrus ſtrata-gem.

Whilſt the Beſieged were thus pleaſing themſelves with this fooliſh-fanſie, and vain mirth (the ordinary forerunners of ſudden calamity) Cyrus, who by God that ſet him on work, was made ſtrong, valiant, conſtant, and inventive, deviſed, and by the labour of his men, digged ſo many Channels as were capable of receiving the Waters of Euphrates, and ſo to draw the ſame from the Walls of Babylon, that thereby he might make his approaches the more facile, and aſſured, which, when by the labour of many hands he had performed, he waited for a fit time wherein to put in execution, what he had deſigned. For he had left in each of the Trenches towards the River, certain Banks, or Heads uncut till he ſaw his opportunity.

Belſhazzars Feaſt.

Now Belſhazzar finding neither any want or weakneſs within the City, nor any poſſibility for his enemies without, to approach the Walls by reaſon of the great River that ſurrounded them, he prepared an exceeding ſumptuous Feaſt, Publick Plays, and other Paſtimes, and thereto invited a Thouſand of his Princes, or Nobles, beſides his Wives, Courtezans, and others of that Trade. This he did, either to let the Beſiegers know that his Proviſions were ſufficient, not only for all needful uſes, but even for ſuperfluity, and exceſs; Or becauſe he hoped that his enemies by this time were diſcouraged, and even broken under their manifold diſaſters: Or elſe he made this Feaſt in honour of Bell, his moſt adored Idol: Or laſtly, becauſe it was his Birth, or Coronation Day: Or for many, or moſt of theſe reſpects.

Yea, he was not contented to uſe, and ſhew ſuch Magnificence, as no Prince elſe could Equal, but he lifted up himſelf againſt the God of Heaven, Dan. 5. 23. For he, his Princes, his Wives, and his Concubines, made carouſing Cups of the Golden, and Silver Veſſels which his Grandfather Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the Temple which was at Jeruſalem; and in contempt of the Lord of Heaven, he praiſed his own Puppets made of Gold, and Silver, and Braſs, and Iron, and Wood, and Stone; Whilſt Belſhazzar was thus triumphing, and had his brains well filled with vapours, he beheld a hand, which by Divine power wrote upon the Wall that was oppoſite to him, certain Words which he underſtood not, wherewith, ſo great a fear, and amazement ſeized upon him, that the joynts of his loins were looſed, and his knees ſmote one againſt another; Which Paſſion when he had in ſome meaſure recovered, he cryed aloud to bring in the Aſtrologers, the Chaldeans, and the Southſayers, promiſing them great rewards, and the third place of Honour in his Kingdom, to him that could read, and expound the Writing: But it exceeded their Art, and Skill.

His Blaſphemy.

The Writing on the Wall.

The Kings Diſtraction.

The Queen comforts him.

In this diſturbance and aſtoniſhment the Queen, hearing what had paſſed, came in, and obſerving what diſtraction the King was in, after Reverence done, She uſed this Speech; O King live for ever; Let not thy thoughts trouble thee, nor let thy countenance be changed; there is a man in thy Kingdom in whom is the Spirit of the holy Gods, and in the Days of thy Father light, and underſtanding, and Wiſdome like the wiſdom of the Gods was found in him, whom the King Nebuchadnezzar thy Father, the King I ſay, thy Father made Maſter of the Magicians, the Aſtrologers, the Chaldeans, and the Southſayers; for as much as an excellent Spirit, and knowledg, and underſtanding, in interpreting Dreams, and ſhewing of hard Sentences, and diſſolving doubts were found in the ſame Daniel, whom the King named Belteſhazzar. Now let Daniel be called, and he will ſhew the Interpretation.

This Queen was either the Grandmother, or the Mother of Belſhazzar; For it appears that She was not any of the Kings Wives, becauſe She was abſent from the Feaſt, and in regard of her age, paſt banquetting, and dancing; Yet upon the report of the Miracle, She came in to comfort, and cheer up the King; and whereas Daniel was forgotten, and neglected by others, of younger years, and latter times, this old Queen remembred well, what Daniel had done in the days of Nebuchadnezzar; Grandfather to this Belſhazzar, and kept in mind, both his Religion, and Divine gifts.

Daniel brought in.

The Kings Speech to him;

When Daniel was brought into the Kings preſence, he ſaid unto him: Art thou that Daniel, which art of the Children of the Captivity of Judah; whom the King my Father brought out of Jewry? I have heard of thee that the Spirit of the Gods is in thee, and that light, and underſtanding, and excellent Wiſdom is found in thee; and now the Wiſe men and the Aſtrologers have been brought in before me, that they ſhould read this Writing, and make known to me the Interpretation thereof, but they could not do it: And I have heard of thee that thou canſt make Interpretations, and diſſolve doubts: Now if thou canſt read the Writing, and make known to me the Interpretation thereof, thou ſhalt be clothed with Scarlet, and have a chain of Gold about thy neck, and ſhalt be the third Ruler in the Kingdom.

Daniels anſwer.

But Daniel made anſwer in a far differing ſtile from that which he had uſed to his Grandfather; For the evil which he had foretold to Nebuchadnezzar he wiſhed that it might befal his enemies: But to this King (whoſe contempt of of God, and vicious life he hated) he answered in these Words; Let thy gifts be to thy self, and give thy rewards to another: Yet I will read the writing to the King, and make known to him the Interpretation: which yet before he did, he shewed him the cause of Gods Judgments against him, and the reason of this terrible sentence, whereof the King and all his Wise men were utterly Ignorant, the substance whereof is this; That Belshazzar, forgetting Gods goodness to his Father, whom all Nations feared and obeyed, and yet for his Pride, and neglect of those benefits, as he had deprived him of his Estate and Understanding; so upon the acknowledgement of Gods infinite power, he restored him to both again; And thou his Son (said he) O Belshazzar, hast not humbled thy heart, though thou knewest all this, But hast lifted up thy self against the Lord of Heaven, and they have brought thee Vessels of his House before thee, and thou and thy Lords, thy Wives and thy Concubines, have drunk Wine in them, and thou hast praised the Gods of silver, and Gold, &c. and the God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy wayes, hast thou not Glorified: Then was the part of the hand sent from him, and this writing was written, Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin, whereof this is the Interpretation: Mene, God hath numbred thy Kingdom, and finished it: Tekel, Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting: Peres, Thy Kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians. He reads and interprets the writing.

The very Evening, or Night of this Day, wherein Belshazzar thus Feasted, and wherein these things were done, Cyrus, either by his Espeials, or being inspired by God himself, whose Ensign he followed in these Wars, finding the time and opportunity fit for him, even whilst the Kings Head, and and the Heads of his Nobility, were no less distempered with the Vapours of Wine, than their hearts were with the fear of Gods Judgments, he caused all the Banks, and Heads of his Trenches to be opened, and cut down with all speed and diligence, whereby that great River Euphrates was quickly drawn dry, and himself, with his Army, passing through the Channel, which was now dry, without any opposition, they easily made their entrance into the City, finding none to disturb them; Invadunt urbem somno, Vinoque sepultam: All the Town lay buried in Wine and Sleep; and such as came in the Persians way, were put to the Sword, unless they saved themselves by flight, as some did, who ran away crying, and filled the Streets with an uncertain tumult. Cyrus drains Euphrates, Babylon taken.

Such of the Assyrian Lords as had formerly revolted from Belshazzar to Cyrus, did now conduct a selected company to the Kings Palace, which being easily forced by them, they rushed strait into the Chamber where the King and his Princes were Banquetting, and there slew both him and them without mercy, who strove in vain to keep those lives which God had newly threatned to take away. Now was that Prophesie fulfilled, Jer. 51. 30, 31, 32. The mighty men of Babylon have forborn to fight; they have remained in their holds; their might hath failed; they became as women; they have burnt their dwelling-places; Her barrs are broken. One Post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to shew the King of Babylon that his City is taken at one end. And that the passages are stopped (viz. of the River Euphrates) and the Reeds they have burnt with fire, and the men of War are affrighted. The Prophet Isay also, two hundred years before this subversion of Babylon, in his forty seventh Chapter, and elsewhere, describeth this destruction so feelingly and lively, as if he had been present, both at the terrible slaughter there committed, and had seen the great and unfeared change, and calamity of this great Empire; Yea, and had also heard the sorrows and bewailings of every surviving Soul, thereunto subject; which Prophesie he begins with these words; Come down, and sit in the dust, O Virgin Daughter of Babylon, sit on the Ground; there is no Throne; O Daughter of the Chaldeans: For thou shalt Belshazzar slain. Prophesies fulfilled.

no

no more be called tender and delicate, &c. And though it cannot be doubted, that God uſed Nebuchadnezzar and the Chaldeans, as his Inſtruments to puniſh the Idolatry and wickedneſs of the Iews, yet did he not forget that in the Execution of Gods Judgments, they had uſed much rigour and extremity; as we ſee, Iſa. 47. 6. I was wroth with my people; I have polluted mine Inheritance, and given them into thine hand; Thou didſt ſhew them no mercy; Upon the Ancient haſt thou very heavily laid the yoke; And again, I will riſe up againſt them, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, and will cut off from Babel the Name, and the remnant, and the Son, and the Nephew: meaning Evilmerodach and Belſhazzar. And again, Iſa. 13. 15, &c. Every one that is found ſhall be thruſt thorow; and every one that is joyned to them ſhall be ſlain with the Sword; their Children alſo ſhall be daſhed to pieces before their eyes, their Houſes ſhall be ſpoiled, and their Wives raviſhed. Behold, I will ſtir up the Medes againſt them, which ſhall not regard Silver, and as for Gold, they ſhall not delight in it; their Bowes alſo ſhall daſh the young men to pieces, and they ſhall have no pity on the fruit of the Womb; their eye ſhall not ſpare children. And Babylon, the Glory of Kingdoms, and beauty of the Chaldees excellency, ſhall be, as when God overthrew Sodom, and Gomorrah, &c. Read alſo Chapter fourteenth. No Hiſtorian that was either preſent at this Victory of Cyrus, or that received the report from others truly as it was, could better deſcribe, and leave the ſame to poſterity after it was acted, than Iſay hath done in many parts of his Propheſie, which were written two hundred years before any of theſe things were attempted.

The greatneſs of Babylon.

The Greatneſs and Magnificence of Babylon, were it not by divers grave Authors recorded, might ſeem altogether Fabulous; For it is reported for truth, that one part of the City knew not that the other was taken three dayes after; which is not impoſſible, if we conſider the vaſt Circumference of it. Diodorus Siculus ſaith, that it was in compaſs three hundred and ſixty Furlongs, which make forty five Miles. The Walls were ſo thick, that ſix Chariots might paſs in front thereon, and they were three hundred ſixty and five Foot high, and were adorned, and beautified with one hundred and fifty Towers. Strabo gives a greater circuit, adding twenty five Furlongs more to the former compaſs, reckoning it at three hundred eighty five Furlongs, which makes forty eight Miles and one Furlong. Herodotus finds the compaſs yet to be greater, namely, four hundred and eighty Furlongs in circuit, the thickneſs of the Wall he meaſures at fifty Cubits, and the height at two hundred of the ſame Regal Cubits. For entrance, it had a hundred Gates of Braſs, with Poſts and Hooks to hang them on of the ſame Metal; and therefore did the Prophet Iſay rightly intitle Babylon, The Princeſs, and Glory of Kingdoms, Iſa. 47. 5. & 13. 19.

Babylons miſerable Captivity.

But when Cyrus had won her, he ſtript her out of her Princely Robes, and made her a ſlave, dividing not onely her goodly Houſes, and her whole Territory, with all the Riches therein contained, amongſt his Souldiers; but alſo beſtowed the Inhabitants themſelves as Bondſlaves, upon thoſe that had taken poſſeſſion of their goods.

Cyrus releaſes the Iews.

Cyrus having obtained this great, and Signal Victory, the glory of which was a reward for his ſervice done for him who was the Author of it, and of all goodneſs, and thereby tranſlated the Empire of the Chaldeans to himſelf, according to the Propheſies which went afore of him; in this firſt year of his Empire, he made a Decree that the Captive Iews ſhould return again into their own Countrey of Iudea, and that they ſhould build again the Houſe of God in Ieruſalem, having now endured, and finiſhed the ſeventy years Captivity, foretold by the Prophet Jeremy. The tenour of which Decree was thus;

His Decree for it.

Thus ſaith Cyrus King of Perſia; The Lord God of Heaven hath given me all the Kingdoms of the Earth, and hath charged me to build him an Houſe at Jeruſalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you, of all his people? Let his his God be with him, and let him go up to Jeruſalem, which is in Judah, and build the Houſe of the Lord God of Iſrael (He is God) which is at Jeruſalem: And whoſoever remaineth in any place where he ſojourneth, let the men of his place help him with Silver, and with Gold, and with goods, and with Beaſts, beſides the free-will Offering for the Houſe of God that is in Jeruſalem, Ezra 1. 2, 3, 4. He alſo brought forth, and reſtored the Veſſels of the Houſe of the Lord, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of the Temple at Jeruſalem, and had put them into the Houſe of his gods; Theſe were brought forth and numbred unto Sheshbazzar the Prince of Judah; and this is the number of them; Thirty Chargers of Gold, a thouſand Chargers of Silver, nine and twenty Knives, thirty Baſins of Gold, Silver Baſins of a ſecond ſort, four hundred and ten, and of other Veſſels a thouſand; All the Veſſels of Gold and Silver were five thouſand and four hundred. Or Zorobabel: He reſtores the Veſſels of the Temple.

The number of Jews that then returned out of Chaldea, under their Leader Zorobabel, the Son of Salathiel, and Nephew to King Jeconias, and Joſhua the Son of Joſedech, the High Prieſt, were about fifty thouſand: And as ſoon as they arrived at Jeruſalem, they built an Altar to the living God, and ſacrificed thereon according to their Law, and afterwards bethought themſelves how to prepare materials for the building of the Temple. The Jews come to Jeruſalem.

Cyrus having ſet all things in order at Babylon, returned, through Media, into Perſia, to his Father Cambyſes, and his Mother Mandanes, who were yet living; and from thence returning again into Media, he married the only Daughter and Heir of Cyaxares, and for Dowry, had the whole Kingdom of Media given him with her; And when the Marriage was finiſhed, he preſently went his way, and took her with him; and coming to Babylon, from thence he ſent Governours into all his Dominions; Into Arabia he ſent Megabyzus; into Phrygia the greater, Artacaman; into Lydia and Ionia, Chryſantas; into Caria, Aduſius; into Phrygia Helleſpontiaca, or the leſs, Pharmicas; But into Cilicia and Cyprus, and Paphlagonia, he ſent no Perſians to Govern them, becauſe they voluntarily, and of their own accord, took his part againſt the King of Babylon; yet he cauſed even them alſo to pay him Tribute. His Marriage. His Governours.

Cyrus having ſpent one whole year with his Wife in Babylon, gathered thither his whole Army, conſiſting of one hundred and twenty Thouſand Horſe, and two Thouſand Iron Chariots, and ſix hundred Thouſand Footmen; and having furniſhed himſelf with all neceſſary proviſions, he undertook that Journey wherein he ſubdued all the Nations inhabiting from Syria to the Red Sea. His great Army and Victories.

The time that Cyrus enjoyed in reſt and pleaſure after theſe great Victories, and the attainment of his Empire, is generally agreed upon by all Chronologers to have laſted only ſeven years; In which time he made ſuch Laws and Conſtitutions, as differ little from the Ordinances of all wiſe Kings, that are deſirous to eſtabliſh a Royal power to themſelves and their Poſterity, which are recorded by Xenophon. Cyrus his Civil Government.

The laſt War, and the end of this Great King Cyrus, is diverſly written by Hiſtorians: Herodotus and Juſtin ſay, That after theſe Conqueſts, Cyrus invaded the Maſſagets, a very Warlike Nation of the Scythians, Governed by Tomyris, their Queen: and that in an encounter between the Perſians, and theſe Northern Nomades, Tomyris loſt her Army, together with her Son Spargapiſes, that was the General of it. In revenge whereof, this Queen making new levies of men of War, and proſecuting the War againſt Cyrus, in a ſecond ſore Battel, the Perſians were beaten, and Cyrus was taken Priſoner, and that Tomyris cut off his Head from his Body, and threw it into a Bowl of Blood, uſing theſe words; Thou that His laſt War.

haſt

haſt all thy time thirſted for blood, now drink thy fill, and ſatiate thy ſelf with it. This War which Metaſthenes calls Tomyrique, laſted about ſix years.

But more probably, this Scythian War was that which is mentioned before, which Cyrus made againſt the Scythians, after the Conqueſt of Lydia, according to Cteſias, who calleth Tomyris, Sparetha, and makes the end of it otherwiſe, as you may ſee before.

The ſame Cteſias alſo recordeth, that the laſt War which Cyrus made, was againſt Amarhæus, King of the Derbitians, another Nation of the Scythians, whom, though he overcame in Battel, yet there he received a Wound where-
His Death. of he died three dayes after.

Strabo alſo affirmeth, that he was buried in his own City of Peſagardes, which himſelf had built, and where his Epitaph was to be read in Strabo's time, which he ſaith was this;

His Epitaph. O Vir, quicunque es, & undecunque advenis, neque enim te adventurum ignoravi: Ego ſum Cyrus, qui Perſis Imperium conſtitui; puſillum hoc Terræ, quo meum tegitur Corpus, mihi ne invideas. O thou man, whoſoever thou art, and whenſoever thou comeſt, for I was not ignorant that thou ſhouldſt come: I am Cyrus that founded the Perſian Empire: Do not envy me this little Earth with which my Body is covered.

When Alexander the Great returned from his Indian Conqueſts, he viſi-Alexander opens his Sepulchre. And honours his Tomb. ted Peſagardes, and cauſed this Tomb of Cyrus to be opened, either upon hope of great Treaſure ſuppoſed to have been buried with him, or upon a deſire to honour his dead Body with certain Ceremonies; when the Sepulchre was opened, there was found nothing in it, ſave an old rotten Target, two Scythian Bows, and a Sword. The Coffin wherein his Body lay, Alexander cauſed to be covered with his own Garment, and a Crown of Gold to be ſet upon it.

Cyrus finding in himſelf that he could not long enjoy the World, he called unto him his Nobility, with his two Sons, Cambyſes and Smerdis, Cyrus his laſt words. and after a long Oration, wherein he aſſured himſelf, and taught others, about the Immortality of the Soul, and of the puniſhments and rewards following the ill, and good deſervings of every man in this life; He exhorted his Sons, by the ſtrongeſt Arguments he had, to a perpetual Concord and Agreement. Many other things he uttered, which makes it probable, that he received the knowledge of the true God from Daniel, whilſt he Governed Suſa in Perſia; and that Cyrus himſelf had read the Propheſie of Iſay, wherein he was expreſly named, and by God pre-ordained for the delivery of his people out of Captivity; which act of delivering the Jews, and of reſtoring of the Holy Temple, and the City of Jeruſalem, was in true conſideration the Nobleſt work that ever Cyrus performed. For in other actions he was an Inſtrument of Gods power, uſed for the chaſtiſing of many Nations, and the eſtabliſhing of a Government in thoſe parts of the World, which yet was not to continue long: But herein he had the favour to be an Inſtrument of Gods goodneſs, and a willing advancer of his Kingdom upon Earth, which muſt laſt for ever.

His Iſſue. Cyrus had iſſue two Sons, Cambyſes and Smerdis, and three Daughters, Atoſſa, Meroe, and Artiſtona. At his Death he bequeathed his Empire to his Eldeſt Son Cambyſes, appointing Smerdis, his younger Son, to be Satrapa, or Lieutenant of Media, Armenia, and Caduſia. He reigned about one and thirty years, and died aged.

The Greek Hiſtorians wholly aſcribe the Conqueſt of Babylon to Cyrus, becauſe that he commanded the Army in Chief; yet the Scriptures attribute it to Darius, King of the Medes, whoſe General Cyrus was: For when Babylon was taken, and Belſhazzar ſlain; It's ſaid, Dan. 5. 31. that Darius rius the Median took the Kingdom, being about sixty two years old. It was Darius also that placed Officers over the several Provinces thereof, as we read, Dan. 6, 1, 2. It pleased Darius to set over the Kingdom an hundred and twenty Princes, which should be over the whole Kingdom, and over these, three Presidents, of whom Daniel was the first, &c. And thus was it Prophesied by Isay long before; Behold! I will stir up the Medes against them, &c. And by the Prophet Jeremy; The Lord hath raised up the Spirit of the King of the Medes: for his device is against Babylon, &c. Jer. 55. 11. And again, verse 28. Prepare against her the Nations, with the Kings of the Medes, the Captains thereof, and all the Rulers thereof, and all the Land of his Dominion.

But certain it is, that the Honour of that great Victory over Babylon, was wholly given to Cyrus, who was the Instrument pre-ordained, and forenamed by God himself: not onely for this Action; but also for the delivery of his Church: Yet Daniel makes it plain, that himself, not onely lived a great Officer under King Darius, but that he continued in that estate to the first year of Cyrus, which was not long after, which also was the year of Daniels Death.

As for the Age of Cyrus, we are beholding to Tully for it; who, in his first Book de Divinatione, Cites it out of one Dionysius, a Persian Writer, in this manner. The Sun (saith Dionysius) appeared unto Cyrus in his sleep, standing at his feet; which, when Cyrus thrice endeavoured to take in his hands, the Sun still turned aside, and went away: and the Magi, who were the most learned men amongst the Persians, said, that by his thrice offering to take hold of the Sun, was portended to him that he should reign thirty years; which came to pass accordingly: For he lived to the Age of seventy years, and began not to reign till he was forty. His Age.

In the first year of Belshazzar, Daniel had the Vision shewed him of the four Beasts, signifying the four Monarchies; and of God delivering over all power and Sovereignty to the Son of man, Dan. 7. Some useful Observations.

In the third year of Belshazzar, the Vision of the Ram and Goat, foreshewing the destruction of the Persian-Monarchy by Alexander the Great, and the great misery which Antiochus should bring upon the People of God, was shewed to Daniel, living then at Susa, in the Province of Elam, upon the Bank of the River Ulai, which environed the Castle of Susa, and parted the Provinces of Susa and Elemais, Dan. 8. whence we may collect, that at that time the Province of Susa was not in the hands of the Medes and Persians, but of the Babylonians, under whom Daniel then lived.

Darius the Mede, son of Cyaxares, or Ahasuerus the Son of Astyages, took upon him the Kingdom, which was delivered over to him by Cyrus, the Conqueror, Dan. 5. 31. and 9. 1. The Angel, in this first year of his Reign, is said to have confirmed, and strengthened him in his Kingdom, Dan. 11. 1. After which he reigned two years.

Towards the end of the first year of Darius the Mede, the seventy years of the Babylonish Captivity expired, which began under Jehoiakim, in the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, at which time God promised that they should return into their own Countrey, Jer. 29. 10. Thus saith the Lord, that after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word towards you, in causing you to return to this place. Upon consideration of which very time, now so near approaching, it was, that Daniel poured out that most fervent Prayer for the Remission of his own sins, and of his Peoples; and for that promised deliverance out of their Captivity: Whereupon the Angel Gabriel brought him an answer, not only concerning this, but also for the spiritual deliverance of the Church, to be wrought at last by the Death of the Messias, uttering that most famous, and memorable Prophesie of the seventy Weeks, Dan. 9. 12, &c.

The Samaritans, by the means of some Courtiers about Cyrus, whom they had bribed for that purpose, disturbed the Jews in their building of the Temple, Ezra 4. 5. Whence proceeded that three weeks mourning of the Prophet Daniel, which Fast he begun about the third Day of the first Moneth, in the third year of Cyrus, Dan. 10. 1, 4. After which, upon the four and twentieth Day of the first Moneth, that Vision of the Kings of Persia, of Alexander the Great, and his Successours, and their Kingdoms, was shewed and revealed unto Daniel, as he stood upon the Bank of Hiddikel, or Tygris; All which is contained in the three last Chapters of Daniel; which (as may be collected out of the close thereof) was the last Vision that ever he had, and that but a little before his Death.

THE

THE

LIFE and DEATH

OF

ARTAXERXES MNEMON,

One of the Great

MONARCHS

OF PERSIA.

THere were two Artaxerxes's that were Monarchs of Perſia; the firſt was called Artaxerxes Longimanus, or Long-hand, becauſe his right hand was longer than his left. The ſecond (whoſe Life we are now ſetting forth) was called Artaxerxes Mnemon, from his excellent Memory. This Artaxerxes was the Son of Darius Ochus, begotten by him on the Body of Paryſatis, before he came to be King: And Paryſatis was the Daughter of the firſt Artaxerxes. His Parentage.

Darius had by his Wife Paryſatis four Sons, of the which the eldeſt was this Artaxerxes, the ſecond was called Cyrus, the two younger Oſtanes, and Oxathres. This Artaxerxes before he came to the Kingdom, was called Arſaces, but after he came to the Kingdom he aſſumed the name of Artaxerxes: Darius Ochus raigned Nineteen Years, and dyed at Babylon. When he lay on his Death-bed, his Son Artaxerxes asked him by what Wiſdom and Policy he had maintained his State ſo long, To the end (ſaid he) that having learned by you, I may follow your ſteps therein? To whom Darius anſwered, That he had done it, by doing right to God and man. A wiſe ſaying.

Cyrus from his Childhood was of an hot ſtirring diſpoſition, and Artaxerxes on the contrary was alwayes mild and gentle. Wherefore Paryſatis always loved her Son Cyrus more than the Elder, and therefore often urged her Husband Darius Ochus to follow the example of Darius Hyſtaſpes, to leave him to ſucceed in the Kingdom, who was firſt born, after he came to be King, and not him whc was born before. This indeed did help Xerxes to the Kingdom: Wherefore ſhe urged this Example to induce her Husband to leave the Kingdom to Cyrus, who was born after his Father was Crowned King, and not unto Arſaces, who was born before: Yet could ſhe never prevail. For Darius, by his laſt will, gave the Kingdom to his eldeſt Son Artaxerxes, and made Cyrus Governour of Lydia, and the King Leiutenant General of all the lower Countries of Aſia, next to the Sea ſide.

He comes to the Kingdom.

Shortly after the Death of Darius, the new King Artaxerxes went unto Paſargades, there to be Conſecrated, and Anointed King by the Prieſts of Perſia. At this place was a Temple dedicated to Minerva, where the new Kings muſt be Conſecrated, after this manner: When he came into the Temple he muſt put off his own Gown, and put on that which the firſt and great Cyrus wore before he was King Then he muſt eat of a certain Tart or Fricacy made of Figs with Turpentine. Then he muſt take a Drink made with Vinegar and Milk, beſides ſome other ſecret Ceremonies, which none knew but the Prieſts themſelves.

Ceremonies at his Conſecration.

Now when Artaxerxes was ready to enter into the Temple, Tiſaphernes came to him, and brought him one of the Prieſts; who had been Schoolmaſter to Cyrus in his Youth, who informed him that Cyrus had conſpired Treaſon againſt him, and that he meant traiterouſly to kill him in the Temple when he ſhould put off his Gown. Upon this accuſation Cyrus was apprehended, and condemned: But as he was going to execution, his Mother took him in her armes, and wound the hair of her Head about his Neck, wherewith ſhe tyed him faſt to her, and withall, ſhe wept ſo bitterly, and made ſuch pittiful mone to the King her Son, that at her interceſſion, he granted to Cyrus his life, and ſent him again to his Government in the leſſer Aſia.

Treaſon diſcovered.

The Traytor pardoned.

Yet Cyrus was not ſatisfied with this, but ſhortly after entered into open Rebellion againſt the King his Brother; for which end he kept Souldiers in pay in divers places, not bringing them altogether into one Army, becauſe he deſired to conceal his enterpriſe. He had alſo Friends, and Servants that levied him men in divers places, and under divers pretences. He had his Mother alwayes about the King that cleared all ſuſpitions conceived againſt him. Himſelf alſo whilſt he made theſe preparations, wrote very humbly to his Brother, one while craving ſomthing of him, and another while accuſing Tiſaphernes, to delude the King, and make him believe that he bent all his malice againſt the ſaid Tiſaphernes.

Cyrus his new Treaſon.

Artaxerxes at his firſt coming to the Crown, followed and imitated the goodneſs, and curteſie of the firſt Artaxerxes, giving eaſie audience unto ſuitors, and more honourably rewarding thoſe that had deſerved well of him: and he uſed ſuch moderation in puniſhing offenders, that he made it appear that he puniſhed not out of any malicious mind, or deſire of revenge, nor yet but of a will to hurt any man. When he had any thing given him he took it very thankfully, and did as willingly and frankly give to them again: For how ſmall a thing ſoever was offered him, he took it well. One Romiſes upon a time preſenting him with a marvellous fair Pomgranate: By the Sun (ſaid he) this man in a ſhort time of a little Town would make a great City, if he were made Governour of it. At another time a poor Labourer ſeeing every man give the King a preſent, he having nothing to give, ran to the River ſide and took both his hands full of Water, and came and offered it to the King, who took it ſo kindly, that in a Cup of Maſſey Gold, he ſent him a thouſand Daricks, which were pieces of Gold ſo called, becauſe the Image of Darius was ſtamped upon them. And when one Euclidas a Lacedemonian, preſumed to give him bold words, he anſwered by one of his Captains, Thou maiſt ſay what thou liſteſt, and I, as King may ſay and do what I liſt. Another time as he was hunting, Tiribazus ſhewed the King his Gown that was all tatter-

Artaxerxes his Virtues.

His gratitude.

His meekneſs.

ed:

ed: well (ſaid the King) what would thou have me do? I pray your Grace (ſaid Tiribazus) take you another and give me that you have on. The King did ſo, adding, Tiribazus, I give thee my Gown, but I command thee not to wear it: But Tiribazus being a fooliſh, light-headed Fellow, not caring for the Kings Commandment, did ſtrait put on the Gown, and beſides, ſet on many Jewels which Kings only uſed to wear, whereupon every one in the Court murmured at him, becauſe it was a preſumption, directly againſt the Laws of Perſia: Yet the King did but laugh at it, ſaying, I give thee leave Tiribazus to wear thoſe Women gawds as a Woman, and the Kings Robe as a Fool. His prudence.

It was the manner in Perſia, that no Perſon ſat at the Kings Table but his Mother (which ſat uppermoſt) and his Wife which ſat lowermoſt, but Artaxerxes made his two younger Brethren, Oſtanes and Oxathres to ſit with him, which much pleaſed the Perſians, but eſpecially, becauſe he was contented that his Wife Statira ſhould ſit openly in her Chariot, that ſhe might be ſeen and reverenced by the other Ladies of the Court, and Country. But ſome that hated Peace and deſired innovations, ſaid, that the Realm of Perſia, needed ſuch a Prince as Cyrus, that was bountiful, given to Arms, and that liberally rewarded his Servants.

At this time all the Cities of Jonia, except Miletus, which were under the Government of Tiſaphernes, fell from him to Cyrus: and Cyrus ſent to Artaxerxes, praying him that he would be pleaſed to truſt him, being his Brother, with thoſe Cities, rather than Tiſaphernes, and in this ſuit his Mother alſo ſticked hard for him: All this while the King diſcerned not the Treaſon intended againſt him; but thought that Cyrus kept his Army about him to ſtrengthen him againſt Tiſaphernes, and he was well content that they two ſhould try it out between themſelves; for Cyrus did daily ſend the King the Tribute of thoſe Cities, which Tiſaphernes formerly held. But in the mean time Cyrus ſent to Lacedemon, praying them, that as he had hitherto ſupported them with men and money againſt the Athenians, ſo now they would ſend him ſome men, boaſting if they ſent him Foot, he would give them Horſes, if Horſemen, he would give them Coaches. If they had Lands he would give them Townſhips: If Towns, he would give them Cities for their rewards: And for their wages, they ſhould have it, not by tale, but by weight, and paid down preſently. Hereupon the Lacedemonians judging his requeſt but equal, and that this War would tend to their advantage, they decreed him aid, and the Ephori ſent preſently to their Admiral at Samos, to do whatſoever Cyrus required of him: He therefore with his Ships put over to Epheſus, where he met with Tamos the Ægyptian, who was Admiral with Cyrus, and offered him his ſervice, joyning his Fleet to his: and ſo they both ſailed round about the coaſt of Jonia, unto Cania, whereby they prevented Syeneſis (who Governed there) that he could not ſtir to hinder Cyrus in his march againſt his Brother. Cyrus his diſſimulation.

Cyrus having now his Army in readineſs, reſolved to march into upper Aſia, giving out, that he went againſt the Piſidians, who (as he ſaid) made often inrodes into his Government: He ſent for Clearchus of Lacedemonia, Ariſtippus of Theſſaly, Xenes of Arcadia, thoſe which were baniſhed from Miletus, and the Army that lay before that City: Proxenus alſo a Boætian, with all the power he could make, both of Grecians and others, to repair ſpeedily to him to Sardis. But Tiſaphernes ſeeing greater preparations made than a bare going againſt the Piſidians could require, taking with him five hundred Horſe, made all the ſpeed that poſſibly he could to Artaxerxes, informing him of his danger, who thereupon preſently prepared for the Wars. The Treaſon diſcovered.

Cyrus in the mean time left ſome truſty Perſians, his Friends, to look to Lydia, and Tamos, his Admiral, to take care of the Cities of Jonia and Eolia in his abſence, ſence, and himſelf with his Army marched towards Caria, and Piſidia, ſtill giving it out, that ſome Perſons in thoſe parts were grown unruly. He had in his Army a great number of his own, beſides thirteen thouſand Grecians; when news of his approach was brought to the Court, all was ſtrait in an uproar. Many accuſed the Queen-Mother as having a hand in it, and all her Servants were vehemently ſuſpected: But that which troubled Paryſatis moſt, was Queen Statyra, her Daughter in Law, who ſtormed exceedingly when ſhe ſaw this War begun againſt her Husband, and cryed out on the Queen-Mother for it: Paryſatis hereupon, being a cruel and malicious Woman, ſo hated her hence forwards, that ſhe ſought her Death by all means.

Cyrus in the mean time came on (without reſiſtance) even to the City of Babylon: And whereas Artaxerxes had determined to retire into the fartheſt parts of Perſia, Tiribazus was the firſt that durſt tell him that he ſhould not ſhun the fight, ſerving to his enemies the Kingdomes of Media, Babylon, and Suſa, conſidering that he had a greater Army than Cyrus, and far more skilful Captains: which words made the King to alter his mind, and to reſolve to give Battel ſo ſoon as he could.

Cyrus coming with his Army to the River Cayſter, received money from Epiaxa, Wife to Syeneſis, the King of Cilicia, wherewith he paid his Army Policy. full four months Wages: and by her perſwaſion her Husband Syeneſis gave him alſo a vaſt ſumm of money towards the maintenance of his Army: and like a wiſe man, at the ſame time he ſupplied Artaxerxes with neceſſaries for the War: and having two Sons, he ſent one of them to Cyrus, with a competent number of men for his ſervice, and the other he ſent privily away to Artaxerxes, to let him know, that having ſuch an Army come upon him, he durſt not but keep fair with Cyrus, nevertheleſs that he continued a true Servant in heart to Artaxerxes, and would fall to him ſo ſoon as he had opportunity.

At Tarſus the Grecians (who were eleven thouſand Corſelets, and two thouſand Targateers) told Cyrus plainly, that they would march no farther; but by the wiſdom of Clearchus they were perſwaded to go on, and ſo they came to Iſſus, the utmoſt City of Cilicia: where Cyrus's Fleet met him, bringing great ſupplies to him, and the Straights of Syria being abandoned, Cyrus marched without any ſtop to the place where the fight ſhortly after was. Cyrus, beſides the Grecians before mentioned, had in his Army one hundred thouſand fighting men, and two hundred hooked Chariots. Of Artaxerxes his part there were four hundred thouſand men, and fifteen hundred hooked Their great Armies. Chariots: The place where the fight was, was called Cyanaxa, five hundred furlongs from Babylon.

Cyrus his men were marvelouſly aſtoniſhed when they ſaw the Army of Artaxerxes in ſuch excellent good order, whereas themſelves were diſperſed here and there, ſtragling without any order, and ill armed, truſting too much to themſelves and diſpiſing their enemies: So that Cyrus had much ado to ſet his men in Battel array, and yet was it with great noiſe, and tumult. But of all others the Grecians wondred moſt, when they ſaw the Kings Army march in ſo good order of Battel without any noiſe: for they thought to have ſeeen them in great diſorder, and confuſion, and ſuppoſed that they would have made ſuch a noiſe as one could not have heard another: whereas Artaxerxes had marſhalled his Army excellent well. He had placed before his Battel his beſt Chariots armed with Sithes, and drawn by the ſtrongeſt and biggeſt Horſes he had, hoping by their fierceneſs and fury to diſorder the ranks of his enemies.

Before the Battel began, Clearchus (General of the Grecians) adviſed Cyrus to keep behind his Squadron, and not to hazard his Perſon amongſt his own men: To whom Cyrus anſwered: What ſaiſt thou Clearchus? What wouldſt thou have have me who ſtrive to be a King, to ſhew my ſelf unworthy to be a King? But Clearchus himſelf committed as great, if not a worſe fault, whenas he would not order his men directly againſt the Battel of the enemy where Artaxerxes was, but pent them up by the Rivers ſide, for fear leaſt they ſhould be compaſſed in behind, whereas, if the Grecians had been ſet in oppoſition to the King, he had never been able to endure their charge, but had either been ſlain or forced to fly, wherefore if Artaxerxes would have choſen or wiſhed a place where the Grecians might have done him leſs hurt, he could not have deviſed a fitter place that was ſo far from him, and from whence the Grecians could neither ſee nor hear what was done in the place where he was, as afterwards appeared.

Cyrus being mounted upon an hot, and hard mouthed Horſe, the Governour of the Province of the Caducians ſpyed him afar off, and clapping ſpurs to his Horſe, he came with a full career to him, crying out, O Traytor and moſt unfaithful man! Thou diſhonoureſt the name of Cyrus, for that thou haſt brought ſuch valiant Grecians upon ſo wicked an enterpriſe, to ſpoil the Perſians Goods, and to deſtroy thy Soveraign Lord and only Brother, who hath an infinite number of Slaves, and Servants that are honeſter men than thy ſelf, and that thou ſhalt preſently know by experience, for thou ſhalt die before thou ſeeſt the Kings face, and therewithall he threw his Dart at him with all his force: But the Armour of Cyrus was ſo good that it pierced not, yet the blow made him ſtagger on his Horſe back. Artagerſes having given him this blow, preſently wheeled about: But Cyrus threw a Dart at him ſo happily that he ſlew him, the head of his Dart paſſing quite through his Neck. Cyrus hereupon preſently ſlew upon thoſe that were neereſt to the Kings Perſon, and came ſo near the King that he ſlew his Horſe under him: But Tiribazus preſently mounted the King upon another Horſe, and Cyrus, clapping ſpurs to his Horſe, threw another Dart at the King and hit him: But at the third charge Artaxerxes told them about him that he could not abide this, and that he had rather die than ſuffer it, and thereupon he ſpurred his Horſe to charge Cyrus, (who alſo came fiercely againſt him) and threw his Dart at him, as alſo did all thoſe that were about the King, and ſo was Cyrus ſlain in this conflict.

A Battail.

Cyrus ſlain.

Now after Cyrus was dead, Artaſyras, one of the Kings Eunuchs, paſſing by, found his dead Body, whereupon he gallopped apace to the King, and with a ſmiling countenance told him the news. Artaxerxes was ſo joyful that he would needs go to the place to ſee it: But he was adviſed not to go in Perſon; for fear of the Grecians, who carried all before them, and were killing thoſe that had fled before them. Upon this advice the King ſtayed; and ſent thirty men with Torches in their hands to ſeek him out. The King was very ill, both by reaſon of the great thirſt he ſuffered; as alſo by reaſon of a wound that he had received in his Breaſt by Cyrus: One of his Eunuchs therefore, called Satribarzenes ran up and down to ſee if he could get any Water for him: and as he ran here and there, he met with ſame poor Slaves of the Cannians, amongſt which, one had in an old ragged Goats Skin about eight glaſful of ſtinking naughty Water: This he preſently carried to the King, who drank it up every whit, and his Eunuch asking him afterwards if that naughty Water did him no hurt? The King ſwore by the Gods, that he never drank better Wine, nor ſweeter Water than that was, nor that pleaſed him better: and therefore (ſaid he) I beſeech the Gods, if it be not my hap to meet with this man that gave thee this Water, to reward him, that yet it will pleaſe them to ſend him good Fortune.

Note.

As the King was thus talking with the Eunuches, the thirty men with Torches returned, who aſſured him of the death of Cyrus: Multitudes alſo

of

of his Souldiers gathered about him, ſo that he began to be couragious and with an infinite number of Torches and lights about him, he went to the place where the Body of Cyrus lay, and cauſed his Head and right hand to be ſtricken off, and taking the Head by the Hair, he ſhewed it to his men, who were yet flying: they taking courage hereby, ſo flocked about the King, that in a ſhort time he had ſeventy thouſand Souldiers about him, with whom he returned again towards the Camp of Cyrus, which he rifled, and there met with a Concubine of Cyrus, a woman famous for wit and beauty: She was a Phocæan, born in Ionia: her name at firſt was Mitto, but Cyrus called her Aſpaſia: She was brought bound to the King, for which he was ſo angry, that he impriſoned thoſe that bound her, and ever after eſteemed her above all the Harlots he kept (who were in number three hundred and ſixty, all choice beauties) and moſt doted on her.

Aſpaſia taken.

The Brigade of Grecians, not knowing what had befallen Cyrus, kept on fighting ſtill, and had beaten Tiſaphernes and all his power. But the King coming with the main of his Army to the relief of Tiſaphernes, fell upon the Grecians Camp, and rifled it, yet when they returned from the purſuit, they recovered it, and beat the King out again, and lodged Supperleſs in it that night, as well as Dinnerleſs the day before.

The Grecians valour.

Artaxerxes after this Battel ſent rich Gifts unto the Son of Artagerſes, whom Cyrus had ſlain with his own hands. He cauſed alſo the poor Caunian Slave that had given him the ſtinking Water, to be ſought out, and of a poor wretch, and unknown before, he made him a rich Nobleman. He puniſhed ſuch ſeverely as had offended againſt martial Diſcipline. And one Arbaces a Median, who at the firſt ran over to Cyrus, and after his Death he returned to Artaxerxes again, for puniſhment, he compelled him to carry a whore on his back, ſtark naked all day long about the Market place: and for one who had yielded himſelf to his enemies, and yet falſly boaſted that he had ſlain two, he cauſed his Tongue to be boared through in three places.

Artaxerxes his Gratitude.

His Juſtice.

Artaxerxes thinking that himſelf had ſlain Cyrus, and being deſirous that all others ſhould think ſo too, he ſent Preſents to Mithridates, who had firſt hurt him in the fore-head, commanding the Meſſenger to tell him from the King, The King ſends thee theſe Preſents, becauſe thou didſt firſt find the Capariſons of Cyrus his Horſe, and broughteſt them to the King. The Carian likewiſe that had cut Cyrus his hamm, which made him fall to the ground, asked his reward alſo, which the King gave him, and bad the Meſſenger tell him, The King gives thee this, becauſe thou waſt the ſecond Perſon that brought him the good news of the Death of Cyrus. Now Mithridates, though he was not well pleaſed with the meſſage, ſaid nothing for the preſent, but the unhappy Carian, in a fooliſh vain, being overjoyed with the rich Preſents, ſaid, that he would not take them as a reward for bringing the news, but called the Gods to witneſs, that he was the man, and the onely man that ſlew Cyrus, and that he did him great wrong to take that honour from him. The King was ſo incenſed hereby, that he commanded ſome preſently to ſtrike off his head: But Paryſatis (the Queen-Mother) ſaid, Let me alone with the Villain, I will chaſtiſe him well enough: and withall ſhe ſent Serjeants, who hung him in chains for ten dayes together, then cauſed his eyes to be pulled out of his head; and laſtly, poured molten lead into his ears, and ſo killed him.

His Vainglory.

Horrid Cruelty.

Not long after, Mithridates was invited to a Feaſt, where many of the Kings and Queen-Mothers Eunuchs were, and Mithridates ſat in the Golden Gown which the King had ſent him: and after Supper, as they were drinking freely, one of the Queen-Mothers Eunuchs ſaid to him, Mithridates, the King hath given thee a rich Gown, Goodly chains, and Carckenets of Gold, and eve- ry

ry Rich, ſo that every one thinks thee a happy man with them. Mithridates anſwered; What meaneſt thou by this, Sparamixes? I deſerved better than theſe when the Battel was fought. Why? (ſaid Sparamixes) what ſo valiant an act was it to take up a Capariſon of a Horſe that fell to the ground, and to carry it to the King: Mithridates being a choleriek man, and his brain heat with wine, anſwered: You may talk as long as you liſt of a Capariſon of a Horſe, but I tell you plainly that Cyrus was ſlain with my own hands, and with no mans elſe. For I hit him not in vain, as Artagerſes did, but full in the forehead, hard by the eye, which pierced through his head, of which blow he died. The envious Eunuch at his departure told this to Paryſatis, who went preſently and told it to the King. He was marvellouſly angry to loſe the thing that was moſt honourable, and that beſt pleaſed him in his Victory. For he deſired that all the world ſhould believe, that though his Brother hurt him, yet he ſlew his Brother with his own hand: He therefore commanded that Mithridates ſhould ſuffer the Death by Boats, which was thus; They took two Boats of equal ſize, and laying the offender in one of them upon his back, they covered him with the other, and faſtned both Boats together, that his feet, hands, and head came out at holes made on purpoſe: then they gave him meat as much as he would eat, which if refuſed, they thruſt awls into his eyes to force him: and when he had eaten, they gave him Honey and Milk to drink, pouring it alſo all over his face, and turned his face full into the Sun, which was covered over with Flyes ſucking at it. In his excrements alſo that came from him, Worms did breed, which devoured his Fleſh: And when they ſee the man is dead, they take off the upper Boat, and find all his fleſh devoured to his very intrails. Mithridates thus miſerably languiſhed for ſeventeen dayes together, and then died, with much torment. Cruelty.

Now Paryſatis, to ſatisfie her revenge, had only Meſabates to reak her teen on, who was one of the Kings Eunuchs, who, at his command, had cut off Cyrus his Head and Hand: But he was ſo wary, that ſhe could get no advantage againſt him, wherefore ſhe invented this device. She was very skilful in playing at Cards and Dice, and finding the King one day at leiſure, ſhe enticed him to play at Dice with her for a thouſand Daricks, and was contented willingly to loſe them, and paid them down. Then ſhe prayed him to play with her for one of his Eunuchs: the King was contented, but they agreed that each of them ſhould name five of the chiefeſt whom they would except, and then the loſer ſhould preſently deliver to the winner the choice of all the other Eunuchs they had. Now did ſhe play ſo warily and cunningly, that ſhe wan the Game, and then required Meſabates to be delivered to her, being none of thoſe whom the King excepted. And when ſhe had him, ſhe delivered him to the Hangman, commanding him to flea him alive, and then to nail him to a Croſs, and crucifie him, and to hang his skin by him, which was done accordingly. The King was marvellouſly angry when he knew it, and was grievouſly offended with his Mother. But Queen Statyra ſpared not to tell the Queen-Mother plainly, that it was wickedly done of her to put the Kings true and faithful Servant to ſo cruel a Death, for Cyrus ſake. Yet Paryſatis laughed it out, ſaying to her Son, Indeed it becomes thee well to be angry for an old Gelded Villain, whereas I loſt a thouſand Daricks, and ſaid never a word for it. In brief, ſhe would never be out of her Sons ſight, but as little as might be, and would let his Wife Statyra have as little time with him as poſſible, that ſhe might Govern him as ſhe would, becauſe ſhe hated her of all Creatures living, as alſo for that ſhe would bear the greateſt ſway and credit about him. Subtilty of Paryſatis. Her cruelty.

Tiſaphernes having deceived Clearchus, and the other Captains of the Greeks, by falſifying his word and promiſe given to them, he ſent them bound to the King, who caſt them into Priſon: and though Paryſatis was an earneſt ſuitor The Grecian Captains betrayed.

to the King her Son for them, yet at the perſwaſion of his Wife Statyra, he put them all to death but Menon.

Paryſatis had for a long time born implacable and inveterate hatred againſt Statyra, for that ſhe had more love and reſpect from the King than her ſelf, ſo that ſhe determined, that either her ſelf or her Daughter in Law muſt dye. Now Statyra had a Maid called Gingis, or Gigis, who was very gracious with her, and whom Paryſatis made uſe of in poyſoning Statyra. There is a little Bird in Perſia called Rhindaces, that hath no excrements at all, but all her guts are ſtuffed full with fat: One of theſe Birds, as ſhe ſat at Table with Statyra, ſhe (or one of her maids) took and cut in two, with a knife that was poyſoned on the one ſide, and ſo gave that half which was towards that poiſoned ſide to her Daughter, and did eat the other her ſelf; ſhortly after which, the Queen died in extream torments: And the King preſently ſuſpected his Mother for it, knowing her cruel and implacable diſpoſition; and he cauſed her Servants and Carvers to be examined, and wracked about it: But Paryſatis kept Gingis a long time in her own chamber, and though the King required her, yet would ſhe not give her up to Juſtice; till at laſt Gingis her ſelf deſiring to ſteal to her own lodging in the night, ſhe was apprehended, and puniſhed as a Poyſoner. As for his Mother, the King neither did, nor ſaid any hurt unto her: But when ſhe deſired to retire her ſelf to Babylon, the King gave it her, but withall, ſwore to her, that while ſhe lived, he would not come thither.

Statyra poyſoned.

Artaxerxes, for his good ſervice in the War, gave to Tiſaphernes all the Governments which his Brother Cyrus had held, beſides what he had before: he heaped alſo many other large gifts and favours upon him; and above all, gave him his own Daughter to Wife, and ever after uſed him as his moſt confident Friend and Servant.

Artaxerxes his Gratitude.

Now Artaxerxes having done the utmoſt he could to overcome thoſe Grecians whom his Brother Cyrus had brought into the heart of his Dominions, yet could he never prevail againſt them: For though they had loſt Cyrus who entertained them, and all their Captains that led them; yet did they chooſe other Captains, whereof Xenophon was one, and made their retreat in ſpite of all the Power of Perſia: whereupon all the other Grecians waxed bold, and deſpiſed thoſe Barbarous People: and the Lacedemonians thought it a great ſhame to them, if they did not deliver the Grecians that dwelt in Aſia from the ſlavery and bondage of the Perſians: For which end, they ſent thither their King Ageſilaus, who paſſing into Aſia with his Ships, began preſently to make hot War againſt the Perſians, and in the firſt conflict he overthrew Tiſaphernes, and cauſed moſt of the Cities of the Greeks in thoſe parts to rebell againſt him.

The Grecians valour.

Artaxerxes being informed hereof, conſidered ſeriouſly how he might prevent this miſchief, and at laſt reſolved upon this as his only courſe. He ſent into Greece, one Hermocrates, a Rhodian, with a very great ſum of Gold and Silver, which he was bountifully to beſtow amongſt the Nobility, and chief Rulers of the Cities of Greece, to provoke them to riſe up againſt the Lacedemonians. This Hermocrates ſo wiſely managed his buſineſs, that he made the chiefeſt Cities of Greece to rebell againſt the Lacedemonians; ſo that all Peloponneſus being in Arms, the Ephori at Lacedæmon were enforced to ſend for Ageſilaus home again. Ageſilaus being ſorry that he left Aſia, ſaid unto his Friends: that the King of Perſia had driven him out of his Dominions with thirty thouſand Archers: and this he ſaid, becauſe the Perſian coin was ſtamped on the Reverſe with an Archer, having a Bow in his hand.

Artaxerxes his Policy.

Artaxerxes alſo drave out the Lacedemonians from all their juriſdiction by Sea, by the help of Conon the Athenian Admiral, whom Pharnabazus (one of his Lieutenants) had procured to take his part. This Conon having been overthrown in a Battel at a place called the Goats River, kept ever after in the

Iſle

Isle of Cyprus, as being the meetest place to stay in, till the Wars of Greece were ended. He knowing that himself lacked power, and that Artaxerxes wanted a man of Judgment to be employed, he wrote Letters to him, wherein he advised him what to do. These Letters were delivered to Artaxerxes by Ctesias, who was presently sent to assist Conon. And it fell out, that after Artaxerxes had, through the conduct of Conon and Pharnebazus, won the Battel by Sea, near to the Isle of Gnidus, and thereby had driven the Lacedemonians from their Lordship of the Sea, all Greece had him in marvellous great estimation, so that he gave to the Grecians such conditions as he pleased, whereupon that famous Peace, called Antalcidas Peace, was concluded. This Antalcidas was a Citizen of Sparta, who, favouring the affairs of Artaxerxes, procured by this Treaty of Peace, that the Lacedemonians should leave to Artaxerxes all the Grecian Cities in Asia, and all the Isles belonging thereunto, and to cause them to pay him Tribute at his pleasure. Peace betwixt him and the Grecians.

This Peace being concluded with the Grecians, King Artaxerxes, though he extreamly hated the Lacedemonians, yet he loved Antalcidas very well, and entertained him honourably, when he came to him into Persia. One day the King took a Garland of Flowers, and wet it in the most precious and sweetest Oyl of perfume, that was prepared for the Feast, and sent it to Antalcidas: Indeed he was a meet man to follow the vanity and curiosity of the Persians. Shortly after, the Lacedemonians lost the Battel at Leuctres, and therewith the Principality which they had kept so long over all Greece. When Sparta flourished most, and was chief of all the other Grecian Cities, so long did Artaxerxes continue to make much of Antalcidas, and called him his Friend: But when the Lacedemonians had lost the Battel at Leuctres, having received so great a blow, and wanting money, they sent Agesilaus into Egypt, and Antalcidas into Persia, to King Artaxerxes, to pray him to aid and assist the Lacedemonians: But he made so small account of him, and disdained him so much, denying his request, that he returned to Sparta with shame and dishonour: And there also, seeing that his enemies did mock him, and fearing that the Ephori would commit him to Prison, he killed himself with Famine.

About the same time, the Thebans, having under Epaminondas won the Battel at Leuctres, sent Ismenias and Pelopidas into Persia to King Artaxerxes; where Pelopidas did nothing unworthy himself: But Ismenias, being commanded to kneel to the King, let fall his Ring at his feet, and stooped to take it up, whereby some thought that he did it to kneel to the King. At another time, Artaxerxes, liking well a secret advertisement sent him from Timagoras the Athenian, he gave him ten thousand Daricks by his Secretary Belluris: and because he had a sickly Body, and was forced to drink Cows milk to restore him; the King therefore sent him eighty milch Kine, that he might have fresh Milk every day. He sent him also a Bed, with all things belonging thereto, and Grooms of his Chamber to make his Bed, saying, That the Grecians knew not how to make it. He also sent him men to carry him upon their Arms to the Sea-side, because he was sick: and whilst he was at Court, he entertained him very honourably, and bountifully. But the Athenians afterward condemned Timagoras to dye, because he had taken Bribes of the King of Persia. Justice?

But Artaxerxes, though he had in many other things vexed the Grecians, yet he did one thing that pleased them exceeding well, when he did put Tisaphernes to Death, who was the greatest enemy they had. Parisatis, the Kings Mother, did help to bring this to pass, aggravating the accusations which were brought against Tisaphernes, out of the hatred which she did bear him for her Son Cyrus his sake: For the King did not keep his anger long against her, but sent for her from Babylon, knowing that she had an excellent wit, and was fit to Govern a Kingdom: Besides, there was nothing now to hinder their Malice?

coming together, his Wife being dead. And now Paryſatis applyed her ſelf to feed the Kings humour in every thing, ſeeming to miſlike nothing that he did: By this means ſhe grew into ſo great credit with him, that he denied nothing that ſhe asked. She perceiving that the King was extreamly in love with one of his own Daughters called Atoſſa, which hitherto he had diſſembled, chiefly for fear of her; Paryſatis having found out this, began to make more of his Daughter than ſhe did before; and in her Fathers preſence, ſometimes ſhe praiſed her beauty, another time her grace and good carriage, ſaying, That ſhe was like a Queen, and Noble Princeſs; ſo that at length ſhe perſwaded him to marry her openly (though before he had her Maidenhead) not paſſing for the Laws and opinions of the Grecians, conſidering that he was to eſtabliſh Laws to the Perſians, to determine of right, and wrong, good and bad. Hereupon he married Atoſſa, and loved her very intirely, inſomuch as though ſhe had a grievous diſeaſe that ran all over her Body, yet he loved her not the leſs for it, and prayed continually for her to the Goddeſs Juno, and fell on his knees before her Image, and ſent to her ſo many offerings, that all the way from the Court Gates to Juno's Temple (which was ſixteen furlongs off) was full of Gold, Silver, rich Purple, Silks, and Horſes, which were ſent thither.

Unnatural wickedneſs.

He wars againſt Egypt.

And againſt the Caducians.

About this time, Artaxerxes made War againſt Ægypt, by Pharnabazus, and Iphicrates the Athenian; but they did no good, becauſe they fell out betwixt themſelves; wherefore himſelf went in Perſon againſt the Caducians, with three hundred thouſand Foot, and ten thouſand Horſe. Their Country was very rude, which he invaded, alwayes dark and cloudy: the earth brought forth nothing that was ſowed by man, and the Inhabitants lived upon Pears and Apples, and ſuch like fruit, yet the men were ſtrong and luſty. When he was entred far into this Country, his Army fell into great ſtraits for want of Victuals; for his Souldiers found nothing that was fit to eat, neither could they come by Victuals from any other place, becauſe of the naughty, and craggy wayes, ſo that they were forced to live upon their own Beaſts, and that was ſold very dear; for an Aſſes head was ſold for ſixty Silver Drams. Yea, the Famine was ſo great, that the King himſelf wanted food, and now there were but few Horſes left. Now Tiribazus, though he was at this time out of favour with the King, yet he invented this Stratagem, whereby he ſaved the King and all his men.

A Famine in his Army.

A Stratagem.

In this Countrey, there were two Kings with their Armies in the Field, and each of them camped apart from the other. Tiribazus, after he had imparted his Project to the King, himſelf went to one of theſe Kings, and at the ſame time ſent his Son to the other, and told either of them, that the other had ſent Ambaſſadours unto King Artaxerxes, to make Peace with him, unwitting to his Companion: and therefore he counſelled them, if they were wiſe, one of them to ſeek to prevent the other, with all the ſpeed that poſſible he could. Both the one and the other Kings believed theſe words, either of them miſtruſting the other; So that ſpeedily the one ſent his Ambaſſadours to Artaxerxes with Tiribazus, and the other alſo his Ambaſſadours with his Son. But Tiribazus tarrying ſomewhat long in the Journey, Artaxerxes began ſomewhat to ſuſpect him: His enemies alſo accuſed him in his abſence, and the King grew angry, and was ſorry that he had truſted him ſo far. But at length he returned, and his Son alſo, and either of them brought with him the Ambaſſadours of the Caduſians, and ſo Peace was concluded with them both. Then was Tiribazus highly in favour again, and ſo departed with the King.

Artaxerxes at this time made it evident, that cowardlineſs doth not always proceed from Pomp and curioſity, which ſome think to effeminate mens hearts, but rather from a baſe and abject mind, that commonly follows evil, and and the worſt counſel. For neither the Jewels of Gold, nor Kingly Robe, nor other ſumptuous Ornaments which the King ever wore about him, valued at twelve thouſand Talents, did hinder him at that time to travel, and to take as much pains as any man in all his Army. For he himſelf marched on foot the fore-moſt man, carrying his knapſack in a ſcarf upon his Shoulders, and his Target on his Arm, with which he travelled over high ſtony Mountains, ſo that his Souldiers ſeeing the Kings courage, and the pains that he took, they marched ſo nimbly, as if they had wings, about two hundred Furlongs a day. At length the King by hard travel, came to one of his own Houſes, where were ſtately Arbours and Parks, with goodly Trees curiouſly planted, but all the Countrey beſide, was naked and barren, having no other Trees near, and the weather was very cold: the King therefore ſuffered his Souldiers to hew down the goodly Pines, and Cypreſs Trees in his Parks, and to embolden them, he himſelf took an Axe in his hand, and began to hew the goodlieſt Tree of them all: The Souldiers ſeeing that, fell every man to work, ſo that in a ſhort time they had wood enough, and the Parks were filled with fires, by which the Souldiers ſat all night.

His hard travel.

His pity to his Souldiers.

In this expedition Artaxerxes loſt many valiant men, and moſt of his Horſes, wherefore, thinking that his men would mock him for his miſcarriage, he grew diſtruſtfull of all, and ſuſpected the chiefeſt Nobles about him, ſo that in a rage he put many of them to death, and yet was not ſatisfied therewith. For there is nothing more cruel, nor a greater Bloud-ſucker, than a cowardly Tyrant: as on the contrary, there is nothing more courteous and leſs ſuſpicious than a valiant and couragious man.

His cruelty.

After this, King Artaxerxes being grown very old, heard that there were great contentions between his Sons, which of them ſhould inherit the Kingdome after his Death, and that the ſame was diffuſed amongſt his Kindred and Nobles. The wiſeſt of them deſired, that as he himſelf came to the Kingdom, as his Fathers eldeſt Son, ſo that he alſo ſhould leave it to his eldeſt Son called Darius. But the younger, who was called Ochus, being valiant, and of a ſtirring nature, had ſome in the Court that took his part, and himſelf hoped to obtain the Crown by the means of his Siſter Atoſſa, whom he much loved, and promiſed to marry her, and to make her Queen, if he came to the Kingdom after his Fathers Death. Now Artaxerxes, becauſe he would put Ochus out of all hope to ſucceed him, leſt his expectation might put him to go about to practice that which Cyrus did, and by this means, his Realm ſhould fall into factions and Civil Wars, he proclaimed his Son Darius, (who was now fifty years old) King after his Death, and gave him leave from henceforth to wear the point of his Hat upright, as the Perſian Kings uſed to do.

Darius proclaimed King.

Moreover, the cuſtome in Perſia was, that when any came to be proclaimed Heir apparent to the Crown, that he ſhould requeſt a gift of him that Proclaimed him his Succeſſor, which the other grants whatſoever it be if it be poſſible. Darius then asked his Father, for his Concubine Aſpaſia, who was firſt Concubine to Cyrus, but now the King kept her for his own uſe. She was born in Ionia of Free Parents, and was brought up virtuouſly, and amongſt other beauties, ſhe was brought one night to Cyrus as he was at Supper; thoſe others, without making nice of it, ſat down by him, and were glad when Cyrus began to play and be merry with them, anſwering him pleaſantly again: But Aſpaſia ſtood on her feet by the Table, and ſpake never a word, and though Cyrus called her, yet would ſhe not come at him: And when one of the Grooms would have forced her to him, The firſt (ſaid ſhe) that ſhall lay hands on me, ſhall repent it; whereupon all that were preſent ſaid, ſhe was a fooliſh thing, and meanly brought up, and knew not what belonged to Courtſhip: But Cyrus being glad of it, paſſed it over with laughter, and ſaid to him that brought them them to him, Doſt thou not ſee that of all thoſe that thou haſt brought me, there is not an honeſt woman but ſhe? After this, Cyrus made much of, and loved her very well, and called her Aſpaſia the wiſe. She was taken in the Camp of Cyrus, amongſt his ſpoils, after his overthrow; and now Darius begged her of his Father, who was very angry in his mind for it. For the Perſians, of all other things, were very jealous of their Women, and he was to be puniſhed with Death that durſt but ſpeak to, or touch any Concubine of the Kings, though but in ſport: yea, if they come near them, or near their Coaches, as they went abroad.

He begs his Fathers Concubine.

Darius begs Aſpaſia.

The Kings Daughter Atoſſa, whom he had married againſt the Law, was yet living, and beſides her, he had three hundred and ſixty Beautiful Concubines, and yet, when Darius asked Aſpaſia of him, the King anſwered, that ſhe was a Free-woman born, and if ſhe would, he was content that he ſhould have her, but if ſhe was unwilling, he would not by any means have him to force her. So Aſpaſia was called, and ſhe was asked with which of them ſhe would chooſe to be? She anſwered, with Darius: This was contrary to the expectation of Artaxerxes, who, both by cuſtome and Law, was forced to let him have her. But ſhortly after, he took her from him again, ſaying, that he would place her in a Nunnery of Diana, in the Country of Ecbatane, there to ſerve the Goddeſs, and to live chaſte all her dayes. Darius took this very impatiently, either for that he was deeply in love with her, or becauſe he thought that his Father mocked him.

She chooſes him before his Father.

Tiribazus perceiving it, he laboured to aggravate Darius his anger, and he every day buzzed it in his ears, that it was in vain for him to wear his hat upright, if his affairs alſo went not right forward, and that he deceived himſelf much, if he did not know that his Brother (by means of the women he kept) ſecretly aſpired to the Crown: and that his Father being ſo inconſtant as he was, he muſt not expect to ſucceed him in the Kingdom. For (ſaid he) he that for a Grecian woman hath broken and violated the holieſt Law that was in Perſia, thou muſt not think he will perform promiſe with thee: He perſwaded him alſo, that it was not a like repulſe to Ochus to be denied that which he looked for, as it was for him to be turned out of all that ever he had gotten. For (ſaid he) if it pleaſe Ochus to live as a private man, he might do it ſafely, and no man will trouble him; but for you who are already proclaimed King, you muſt of neceſſity make your ſelf King, or elſe you cannot live.

Now beſides theſe perſwaſions, the largeneſs of the Empire, and the fear Darius ſtood in of his Brother Ochus, much prevailed with him, inſomuch that he flatly conſpired againſt his Father Artaxerxes, together with Tiribazus, and both of them drew many Conſpirators to joyn with them. But one of the Kings Eunuchs ſmelling it out, ran preſently and told the King all, and how they had determined ſuddenly to aſſail him, and to kill him in his Bed in the night. Artaxerxes having received this intelligence, thought it not ſafe to be careleſs in a matter of ſo great importance as was his Life; and yet that it would ſavour of too great lightneſs, ſo ſuddenly to believe the Eunuch, without better proof of the matter: He therefore commanded the Eunuch to keep Company ſtill with the Conſpirators, and to follow them whitherſoever they went, and in the mean time he cauſed the wall behind his Bed to be beaten down, making a door in the place, and Tapeſtry Hangings to be put up before it.

Darius conſpires againſt Artaxerxes.

When the time was come, as the Eunuch had advertized the King, that the Conſpirators intended to execute their Deſign, Artaxerxes being laid on his bed, roſe not up till he had ſeen every Traytor in the face that came to kill him: But when he ſaw them coming towards him, with their Swords drawn, he ſuddenly ſlip't under the Hangings into the inner Chamber, and ſhut the door after him, crying Murther, Murther. The Traytors hereupon fled the Artaxerxes deceives them

ſame

ſame way that they came, failing of their purpoſe, and bad Tiribazus ſave himſelf, becauſe he was known: ſo they diſperſed themſelves and fled. But Tiribazus was taken, and after he had ſlain many of the Kings Guard, fighting valiantly, yet at laſt one with a Dart afar off, ſlew him. Darius alſo was taken, and together with his Sons, was brought Priſoner before the King. The King referred him to be judged by his Peers: and withall, he commanded his Secretaries to ſet down all the Tryal in writing, together with the opinion and ſentence of every one of the Judges, and to bring it to him. In concluſion, they all caſt him, and condemned him to dye. Then the Officers laid hold on him, and led him into a Chamber of the Priſon, where the Hang-man came with a Razor in his hand, with which he uſed to cut mens throats who were ſo condemned: But when he came into the Chamber, he ſaw it was Darius; whereupon his heart ſo failed, that he durſt not lay hands on him, but went out again: The Judges that were without, bad him go in and do it, unleſs he would have his own throat cut: Then went he in again, and took Darius by the hair, and made him hold down his head, and ſo cut his neck with the Raſor.

Tiribazus ſlain.

Darius condemned.

And executed.

Artaxerxes being informed hereof, went and worſhipped the Sun, and then turning to his Lords that were about him, he ſaid unto them: My Lords, God be with you, and be merry at home in your Houſes, and tell them that were not here, that the great God Oromazes hath taken revenge upon thoſe that practiſed Treaſon againſt me. Now Darius being dead, Ochus ſtood in good hope to be next heir to the Crown, and the rather, through the means and aſſiſtance of his Siſter Atoſſa: But of his legitimate Brethren, he moſt feared Ariaſpes, who was only left of all that were legitimate, and of his Baſtard Brethren he feared Arſames: Not for that Ariaſpes was elder than he, but becauſe (he being of a ſoft and plain name) the Perſians deſired that he might be their King. And for Arſames, he was wiſe and valiant, and Ochus ſaw that his Father loved him dearly.

Ochus his fear.

Now Ochus being ſubtle and malicious, firſt ſhewed cruelty upon Arſames, and then his Malice upon Ariaſpes, his Legitimate Brother. For knowing him to be ſimple and plain, he daily ſent ſome of the Kings Eunuchs to him, who carried him threatning meſſages, as from the King, telling him, that he determined to put him to a cruel and ſhameful death. Theſe things being daily buzzed into his ears, as great ſecrets, did ſo terrifie poor Ariaſpes, as that being put in deſpair of his life, he prepared a Poiſon, and drank it to prevent a worſe Death. King Artaxerxes being informed of his Death, took it very heavily, and began to ſuſpect the cauſe that made him thus deſtroy himſelf, yet, being grown very old, he neglected to ſearch it out. But the Death of Ariaſpes made him to love Arſames the better, making it to appear that he had a better opinion of him than he had of Ochus, and therefore made him privy to all his affairs.

His craft.

Ariaſpes kills himſelf.

Ochus ſeeing this, could no longer defer his revenge, and he therefore ſuborned Harpates, the ſon of Tiribazus, to murther his Brother Arſames, which accordingly he accompliſhed. Now Artaxerxes being almoſt ſpent with age, when he heard that his dearly beloved Son Arſames was Murthered, was not able to bear it any longer, but took it ſo to heart, that he died of grief, having lived fourſcore and fourteen years, and reigned threeſcore and two.

Arſames murthered.

When he was dead, the Perſians found that he had been a good and a gracious Prince, and one that loved his People and Subjects, eſpecially when they came to have tryal of his Succeſſor Ochus, that paſſed all men living in cruelty. For when his Father was dead, he dealt ſo with the Chiliarchs and Eunuchs that were about him, that his Death was concealed for ten Months together; in which time he diſpatched away Letters ſigned with the Kings Seal, into all parts parts of the Empire, commanding them to receive Ochus for their King: And when all men had acknowledged him, and ſworn fealty to him, he then made known his Fathers death, and commanded a publick mourning to be made for him, after the Perſian manner, and aſſumed his Fathers name, Artaxerxes: And then filled, and fouled his Court with the bloud of his Kindred and Nobles, without reſpect of Age or Sex: amongſt whom, he cauſed his own Siſter whoſe Daughter he had married, to be buried alive, with her heels upward: He alſo cauſed an Unkle of his, with above a hundred of his Children and Grand-children deſcended out of his loyns, to be put into a court, and there ſhot to Death with Arrows.

Artaxerxes dyes.

Ochus his cruelty.

This Artaxerxes following herein the example of Cambyſes, cauſed certain unjuſt Judges to be flead alive, and their skins to be hung up over the Judgment-ſeats, that they which ſat therein, ſeeing what hung over their heads, might be the more careful to do Juſtice to his People. He alſo it was, who intending to make War upon Egypt, that he might have the more aſſiſtance therein from the Grecians, he ſent his Ambaſſadours into Greece, to induce them to make a general Peace among themſelves, upon theſe terms, that every City ſhould from thenceforth live according to their own Laws, and ſhould have no Garriſons amongſt them. This motion all the Cities of Greece embraced, ſave only the Thebans, as you may ſee in the Life of Epaminondas.

An excellent example.

THE

THE

LIFE and DEATH

OF

ALEXANDER the GREAT;

KING,

OF MACEDONIA.

ALEXANDER, ſurnamed the Great was the Son of Philip, King of Macedonia, and of his Queen Olympias. He was born on the ſixth day of our June, called by the Macedonians Lous. Upon the very ſame day that the Temple of Diana in Epheſus was burned down; whereupon the Prieſts, Magicians, and South-ſayers ran about the City, crying, that ſome great Plague and miſchief to Aſia was ſurely born that day. Three Meſſengers came to King Philip, preſently after he had won the City of Potidæa, upon the ſame day, who brought him great News, the firſt, that Parmenio his General, had won a notable Battel of the Illyrians: the ſecond that his Horſe had won the prize at the Olympian Games: and the third, that his Wife Olympias had brought him a Son, that was named Alexander, born at Pella in Macedonia. His Parentage. His Birth.

Philip being marvellous glad to hear theſe Newſes, the South-ſayers much added to his joy; aſſuring him, that his Son that was thus born, ſhould be invincible. He had naturally a very fair white colour mingled with red, which chiefly appeared in his face and breaſt: His Skin had a marvellous ſweet ſavour, and his breath was very ſweet, which ſheweth his excellent conſtitution. He was naturally hot and Cholerick, which made him to be addicted to drink, and haſty, and yet was chaſt withall. His Father was very careful of his Education, and therefore gat for him excellent Tutors, as Leonidas, which had the chiefeſt Government of him. Then Lyſimachus, an Acarnanian; and Ariſtotle, the Beſt Philoſopher of his time, to whom Philip allowed a very honourable ſtipend.

His Education.

He delighted much in hunting divers kind of wild Beaſts, and playing at the Staff. On a time while he was young, Ambaſſadors were ſent to his Father from the King of Perſia, and it fell out that Philip was in ſome journey out of his Kingdom. Alexander therefore intertained them familiarly, not uſing any childiſh queſtions to them, nor enquiring about trifling, and trivial matters, but what diſtance it was from one place to another, and which way they went into the higher places of Aſia; Alſo about the King of Perſia himſelf, how he behaved himſelf towards his enemies, and what power he had, &c. inſomuch as they were raviſhed with delight to hear him, judging him to be of great Courage, and of a Noble mind, and one that was like to attempt great enterpriſes. When at any time news was brought him that his Father had taken ſome famous City, or had won ſome great Battel, he was no whit glad to hear it, but would ſay to his Play-fellows: Sirs, My Father will do all, I ſhall have nothing left me to Conquer with you that will be ought worth.

His early Wiſdom.

Bucephalus broken by Alexander.

Upon a time Philonicus, a Theſſalian brought a brave Horſe, called Bucephalus, to ſell unto king Philip, demanding thirteen Talents for him, and they went into the Field to try him: But the Horſe was found to be ſo unruly, and churliſh, that they which ſhould have ridden him, ſaid, that he would never be made ſerviceable: For he would let no man get upon his Back, nor abide any of the Gentlemens voices that were about Philip, but would yerk at them with his heels; whereupon Philip, being afraid, bad them take him away as a wild, untamable, and unprofitable Beaſt: which they had done accordingly, had not Alexander, that ſtood by, ſaid, O Gods! what a Horſe do they turn away for lack of skill, and courage to handle and break him? Philip heard what he ſaid, but held his peace. Alexander often repeating thoſe words, and ſeeming ſorry that the Horſe ſhould be ſent back, Philip ſaid, Why doeſt thou control them that have more skill and experience than thy ſelf; and that know better how to handle a Horſe than thou doeſt; Alexander anſwered, and yet me-thinks I could handle him better than all they have done. But if thou canſt do no more than they (replied Philip) what wilt thou forfet for thy folly? I am content (ſaid Alexander) to forfeit the price of the Horſe. Every one laughed to hear his anſwer, and the match was made between the Father and the Son. Then ran Alexander to the Horſe, and took him by the Bridle, and turned him towards the Sun. It ſeems he had obſerved how mad the Horſe was to ſee his own ſhadow, which was before, always before his eyes as he ſturred too and fro. Then Alexander ſpeaking gently to the Horſe, and clapping him on the back with his hand, till he had left his fury and ſnorting, ſoftly let fall his Cloak from him, and lightly leaped on his back, and ſo gat up without any danger, and holding the reins of the Bridle hard, without ſtriking or ſtirring the Horſe, made him to be gentle enough. And when he perceived that the fury of the Horſe was calmed, he put him forward, and began to Gallop; Then he put him to his full carrier, ſpurring, and ſwitching him. Philip at firſt, ſeeing his Sons confidence, began to fear leſt he ſhould catch any hurt. But when he ſaw him readily to turn the Horſe at the end of his carrier, and ſhewing bravery for what he had done, all the Spectators gave a great ſhoot for joy: and the Father fell a weeping for joy: and when Alexander was alighted from the Horſe, his Father went and kiſſed him, ſaying, O Son! thou muſt have a Kingdom that is meet for thee; for Macedonia is not ſufficient for thee: Conſidering alſo that he was not to be rigorouſly dealt with, and that by gentle means and perſwaſions he could make him do what he would, he ever ſought rather to perſwade than to command him what he would have done.

Alexander

Alexander in these his younger days was very mild, and of a patient disposition, insomuch as being told that some of his Friends used in secret, to speak against him, he said, Regium est male audire cùm benefeceris. Its a Kingly thing to hear ill, when one doth well. His mildness.

King Philip being dead, his Son Alexander succeeded, being a Prince no less Valiant by Nature than by Education, being well instructed, and inriched with all sorts of Learning. He began his Reign in Macedonia, four hundred and seventeen years after Rome was built, being himself about twenty years old. He comes to his Kingdom.

Upon this change of the King the neighbour Nations, whom Philip had oppressed, adventured to endeavour the recovery of their former liberty by force of Arms, the young years of Alexander giving some hope of prevailing, and his suspected severity encreasing the courage of others, who could easilier resolve to die, than to live in slavery: But Alexander gave no respite to these discontented humours; For after revenge taken upon the Conspiratours against his Father, whom he slew upon his Tomb, and the celebration of his Funerals, he first engaged his Macedonians to him by freeing them from all exactions, and bodily slavery, other than his service in the Wars, and to others that contemned his youth, he used such austerity, and such clemency to the rest; that having calmed these neerer discontents, he presently went into Peloponnesus, and so insinuated himself amongst them, that by the Council of the States of Greece, he was chosen Captain General to manage the War against the Persians, as his Father had been before him, who was so intent upon that War, that he had sent over into Asia part of his Army under the Conduct of Parmenio, and Attalus, with order to take in some place which might secure the descent of the rest. He slays his Fathers Murtherers.

Upon this enterprise against the Persians was Alexander wholly busied, his restless thoughts both sleeping and waking, presenting to him the Riches, Honour, and large Dominions which he hoped to attain thereby. Yet was he again crossed, and retarded by the Athenians, Thebans, and Lacedemonians, who had united themselves against him, hoping by the assistance of the Persians, to recover their former liberty; and they were to this, encouraged by Demosthenes, whom the Persian Gold had bribed thereunto. This unexpected rub, and loss of time was very grievous to Alexander, who was troubled that he should turn his Sword from the base and effeminate Persians, against the manly, and famous Grecians, of whose assistance in his intended Wars he had assured himself; He therefore made such expedition against them, that himself, with his Army at his heels, brought them the first news of his preparations. This celerity of his made them begin to stagger, and the Athenians, as they were the first that moved, so were they the first that fainted, and by their Ambassadours sought to pacifie him. Alexander was not long in resolving, but admitted their excuses, and made peace. He intends War against Persia. He subdues the Grecians.

Having now quieted his Borderers on the South, he resolved also to assure himself of those Nations which lay on the North of Macedonia, viz. the Thracians, Triballes, Peones, Getes, Agrians, and others, who by their frequent incursions had much molested his Father; and withal those, after he had given them divers overthrows, he made peace, or brought them into his Subjection: and yet could he not find the way out of Europe. And other Nations.

The Thebans, which had one thousand Macedonians in Garrison in their Citadel, being impatient of slavery, endeavoured to force it; which Alexander being informed of, hastened to their succour with thirty thousand Foot, all old Souldiers, and three thousand Horse, and presenting himself before their City, he gave the Thebans time to resolve whether they would have peace or War, only demanding that they should deliver up to him the two chief Incendiaries, Phœnix and Prothytes, which they took in such scorn, that they demand Philotas, and Antipater, two of his chief Captains. This ſo incenſed Alexander, that whilſt he aſſailed the City before, the Macedonian Garriſon did the like behind, and ſo breaking into the City, he ſlew ninety thouſand of them, and ſold thirty thouſand more for ſlaves, and this he did for a terrour to the other Grecians.

And the Thebans.

Many Arguments were uſed by Cleadas (one of the Priſoners) to diſſwade him from deſtroying the City of Thebes, but all proved fruitleſs; for he razed the City, only out of his reſpect to learning, he pardoned all of the race of Pindarus the Poet, and ſet at liberty Timoclea, the Siſter of Theagines, who died in the defence of the liberty of Greece againſt his Father Philip. This Noble Woman, being taken by a Thracian, and raviſhed, he threatned to kill her unleſs ſhe would diſcover her Treaſure to him: She led him to a Well, and told him that ſhe had caſt it therein, and when he ſtooped to look into the Well, ſhe thruſt him in, and ſtoned him to Death.

A brave Example.

Alexander ſhortly after at a Common Council of Greece, being choſen General a ſecond time againſt the Perſians, went to viſit Diogenes the Philoſopher, there. Then returned into Macedonia, where, in a Town called Dios, as he was wholly taken up with thoughts of ſubduing Aſia, there appeared to him in his Sleep the reſemblance of the High Prieſt of Jeruſalem, who bad him be couragious and bold, and ſpeedily with his Army to put over into Aſia, promiſing that he would be his Conductor in the Conqueſt of the Perſian Empire, as Alexander himſelf reported.

His Viſion.

All being now quieted at home, Alexander leaving the Government of Macedon, and Greece to Antipater, in the beginning of the Spring he paſſed the Helleſpont, and being ready to diſ-imbark, he threw a Dart towards the Aſian ſhore, as a token of defiance, commanding his Souldiers not to waſt, and deſtroy the Country, or to burn thoſe buildings which themſelves were preſently, and in future to poſſeſs. Then landed he his Army conſiſting of thirty two thouſand Foot, and five thouſand Horſe, all old Souldiers, neer unto Troy, where he offered a ſacrifice upon the Tomb of Achilles, his Maternal Anceſtor.

He goes into Aſia.

But before he left his own Country, he put to death, without an offence given him, all his Mother in Laws Kinſmen, whom his Father had greatly advanced, not ſparing ſuch of his own as he ſuſpected, thinking by unjuſt cruelty to ſecure himſelf for the preſent, and future: Yet the end fell out contrary to the Policy which his Ambition taught him, though well agreeing with the Juſtice of God: For within a few years all that he had planted was rooted up; thoſe whom he moſt truſted were moſt Traiterous: His Mother, Friends and Children fell by ſuch another mercileſs Sword as his own, and all manner of confuſion followed his dead Body to the Grave, and left him there.

His cruelty.

Gods Juſtice.

When Darius, the King of Perſia, was informed that Alexander was landed in Aſia, he ſo much ſcorned the Macedonian Army, and contemned Alexander himſelf, that writing to him, he ſtiled him his Servant, and reprehended him for his preſumption, and diſloyalty (For Darius Intitled himſelf King of Kings, and Kinſman of the Gods) and withal, he wrote to his Lieutenants in the Leſſer Aſia, that they ſhould take Alexander alive, whip him with Rods, and then convey him to his preſence; that they ſhould ſink his Ships, and ſend his Macedonians priſoners beyond the Red Sea.

Darius his Pride.

Notwithſtanding theſe brags Alexander ſoon diſcovered what manner of men the Perſians were: For two of Darius his Generals [Spithredates and Rhæſaces] at the River of Graniek (which ſevers the Territories of Troy from Propontis) with a huge Army both of Horſe and Foot, ſought to ſtop his paſſage, taking the higher ground, and the bank of the River to defend, which Alexander was forced to climb up unto from out of the Channel, yet was his victory ſo eaſie, that the Perſians flying, he ſlew twenty thouſand of the Foot, and His Victory at Granick.

two

two thousand five hundred Horsemen, with the loss of twelve of his own Foot, and two and twenty of his Horsemen, which shews that the Persians were rather killed in their backs whilst they ran away, than hurt in their bosoms by resisting.

It was wisely done of Alexander to pass this River of Granick in the face of the enemy, without seeking any other place, or means to convey his men over. For having beaten the Asiaticks upon their own ground, he did thereby cut off no less of their reputation, than of their strength, leaving the partakers of such Cowards without hope of Succour.

He wins many Cities, and Countries.

Presently after this Victory, he recovered Sardis, Ephesus, and the City of the Trallians, and Magnesia, all which were soon rendred to him, the Inhabitants he received with great grace, suffering them to be governed by their own Laws: and about the same time, by Parmenio, he wan Miletus, and by force took in Halicarnasseus, which because it resisted obstinately, he razed it to the ground. From thence he went into Caria, where Ada, the Queen, who had been cast out of all that she held (except the City of Alinda) by Darius his Leiutenants, presented her self to him, and adopted him for her Son, and Successour, which Alexander took so kindly that he left the whole Kingdom to her disposal. Then entred he into Lycia, and Pamphilia, and assured to him all the Sea-coasts, and subjecting to him Pisidia, he steared his course towards Darius who (as he was informed) was marching towards him with a marvellous great Army) by the way of Phrygia, and this he might the easilier do, for that his first Victory had laid under his feet all the Provinces of Asia the less, which bordered upon the Sea-coast.

The Queen of Caria Adopts him.

Then gave he order for the setling and Government of Lycia, and Pamphilia, and so marching towards the North, he entred Celenas, seated on the River Meander, which was abandoned to him, only the Castle held out, which yet after forty days, was surrendred to him also: for so long time he gave them to attend succour from Darius. From Celenas, he passed on thorow Phrygia towards the Euxine Sea, till he came to the City of Gordium, sometimes the Regal City of King Midas, where he found the Gordian Knot, which when he knew not how to undo, he cut it asunder with his Sword: For there was an old Propheſie which promised him that could unty it, the Lordship of all Asia: whereupon Alexander, not respecting the manner so it were done, assumed to himself the fulfilling of the Propheſie by hewing it in pieces.

He cuts the Gordian Knot.

Now before he left this part of Asia to go to the East, he took care to clear the Sea-coast on his back, and to thrust the Persians out of the Islands of Lesbos, Chio, and Coos, the charge whereof he committed to two of his Captains, giving them such directions as he judged most meet for that service, and delivering to them fifty Talents for defraying the charges thereof: and withal, out of the spoil gotten by his first Victory, he sent sixty Talents more to Antipater, whom he had left for the Government of Macedonia and Greece. From Celenas he went to Ancira, standing on the same River of Sanguarius, which runs through Gordium: there he mustered his Army, and so entred into Paphlagonia, whose Inhabitants submitted themselves to him, and thereby obtained freedom from Tribute. There he left Catus Governour with one Regiment of Macedonians newly come to him.

He Conquers the Islands.

Here he heard of the Death of Memnon, Darius's Lieutenant, which much encouraged him to pass on towards him: For of this one Commander he had more respect than of all the multitude assembled by Darius, and of all the Captains he had besides. Then did he travel hastily towards Cilicia, with a desire to recover the Streights thereof before Darius should arrive there. The Governour of Cilicia hearing of Alexanders hasty march, left some Companies to keep the Streights, which were indeed very defensible, and now now (though too late) began to prize, and put in Execution the advice of Memnon, who in the beginning of the Wars, had counselled to wast all the provisions both for Man, and Horse that could not be conveyed into strong holds, and always to give ground to the Invader, till he found some such notable advantage as might secure to him the Victory. For the fury of an invading army is best broken by delays, change of diet, and want, and other inconveniences bringing, and breeding many diseases upon all Nations out of their own Country. And had Darius kept the Macedonians but a while without meat, and sleep, refusing to give or take Battel, and had wearied them with his light Horsemen (as the Parthians afterwards did the Romans) in all probability he might have saved both his life, and Estate. For it was one of the greatest encouragements given by Alexander to his Macedonians before the third, and last fatal Battel, that they were now to fight with all the strength of Persia at once.

Memnon dies.

Good Counsel neglected.

But where God hath a purpose to destroy, wise men are taken away, and the charge of things is committed unto such as either cannot see what is for their good, or that know not how to put in execution any sound advice; the course which Memnon had propounded, must in all liklyhood have brought the Macedonians into great straits, and stopt them at those narrow passages of Cilicia. For had Cappadocia, and Paphlagonia being wasted when Alexander was far off, and the Streights of Cilicia been defended by Arsenes with his best Souldiers, hunger would not have suffered the enemy to stay the tryal of all means for the forcing of that passage: Or if the place could not have been defended, yet might Cilicia at leasure have been throughly spoiled, that the heart of Alexanders Army should have been broken, whilest they fought out miseries by painful travel.

But Arsenes leaving a small number to defend the Streights, took the best of his Army with him to wast and spoil the Country; or rather, as it seemed, to make himself some work, under which pretence he might with honesty run the further from Alexander; And in truth he so handled the matter, that he gave cause to the Cicilians to wish for Alexanders coming, and as great cause to the Keepers of the Passage not to hinder it. For Cowards are wise in apprehending all forms of danger. These Guardians of the Streights, hearing that Arsenes hasted to joyn himself with Darius, burning down all as he went, as one despairing to defend it, began to think, that surely their General (who gave for lost the Country behind their backs) had exposed themselves to certain ruin, as men that were fit only to dull the Swords of the Macedonians; Wherefore, not being ambitious to die for their Prince and Country (which honour they saw that Arsenes himself could well forbear) they presently followed the footsteps of their General, gleaning what he had left. And thus Alexander without hazard, got, both the entrance into Cilicia, abandoned by the cowardlines of his enemies, and also that whole Province whose minds were now alienated from the Persians through the imprudent carriage of Arsenes.

The Streights of Cilicia taken.

When Alexander with great speed was come to Tarsus, taking pleasure in the River Cydnus, which ran through the City, all hot as he was, he threw off his Armour, and leaped into the cold water, whereupon he grew instantly so benumb in all the Nerves of his Body, that he lost the use of his Tongue; and so far was he from hope of recovery, that nothing was expected but present Death: But one Philip a Physician, gave him a Potion, which he took, and it cured him out of hand, though Parmenio had forewarned him, that this Philip was set on work to poison him.

Darius his Army.

In the mean time Darius approached, having gathered together an Army of two hundred and ninety thousand men of divers Nations (saith Q. Curtius) or of three hundred thousand Foot, and one hundred thousand Horse, (as Justine numbers them,) Or of six hundred thousand, as Plutarch relates.

The

The manner of his coming was rather like a Masker, than a man of War; and like one that took more care to ſhew his Glory and Riches, than to provide for his own ſafety. For before his Army there were carried the holy Fire; which the Perſians worſhipped for their God; attended by their Prieſts, and after them three hundred ſixty and five young men, anſwering to the days of the year, clothed in Skarlet. Then the Chariot of Jupiter, drawn with white Horſes, with their Riders clothed in white, and carrying Rods of Gold in their hands. Next after them came the Horſe of the Sun, and after him ten ſumptuous Chariots Inlay'd and garniſhed with Gold and Silver: and then the Vaunt Guard of their Horſe, compounded of twelve ſeveral Nations, which, the better to avoid confuſion, did hardly underſtand one anothers Language, and theſe, marſhelled in the head of the reſt, being beaten, might ſerve very fitly to diſorder all that followed them. In the tail of theſe, marched the Regiment of foot ſtiled by the Perſians, Immortal; becauſe if any died, their place was preſently ſupplied by others; and theſe were armed with chains of Gold, and their Coats embroidered with the ſame, having their ſleeves garniſhed with Pearl: Baits fit either to intice the poor Macedonians, or to perſwade them that it were great incivility to cut or deface ſuch goodly Garments.

The manner of his March.

His Pride and Folly.

Then marched after them fifteen thouſand, more rich and glittering than the former, but apparelled like Women, and theſe were honoured with the Title of the Kings Kinſmen. Then came Darius himſelf with the Gentlemen of his Guard-robe, riding before his Chariot, which was ſupported by the Gods of his Nation, caſt and cut in pure Gold: the head of this Chariot was ſet with precious Stones, with two Golden Idols, covered with an open winged Eagle of the ſame mettal. The hinder part being raiſed high, whereon Darius ſat, had a covering of ineſtimable valew.

This Chariot of the Kings was followed with ten thouſand Horſemen, having lances plated with Silver, and their heads guilt. He had for the proper Guard of his own Perſon, two hundred of the blood Royal: blood too Royal, and precious to be ſpilt in any Noble adventure, and theſe were backed with thirty thouſand Footmen, after whom again were led four hundred ſpare Horſes for the Kings own uſe. Then followed the Rereward, being led by Siſygambis, the Kings Mother, and by his Wife, drawn in glorious, and glittering Chariots, followed by a great train of Ladies on Horſeback, with fifteen rich Wagons of the Kings Children, and the Wives of the Nobility, waited upon by two hundred and fifty Concubines, and a World of Nurſes, and Eunuches moſt ſumptuouſly apparelled: Between theſe, and a Company of ſlight Armed Slaves, was the Kings Treaſure, loaden on ſix hundred Mules and three hundred Camels.

In this ſort came this May-game King into the field, encumbred with a moſt unneceſſary train of Sumpters, attended with Troops of divers Nations, ſpeaking divers Languages, impoſſible to be well Marſhalled by reaſon of their numbers, and for the moſt part ſo effeminate, and ſo rich in Gold and coſtly Garments, as the ſame could not but have encouraged the Nakedſt Nation againſt them.

When Alexander met with theſe effeminate Aſiaticks, it may eaſily be gueſſed what a cheap Victory he had over them. Some ſay that he ſlew in this Battel ſixty thouſand Footmen, and ten thouſand Horſemen. Q. Curtius ſaith, an hundred thouſand Foot, with as many Horſemen, and took forty thouſand Priſoners, whileſt of Alexanders Army there miſcarried but two hundred and eighty of all ſorts, of which number ſome Hiſtorians cut off almoſt one half. He took Priſoners alſo Darius his Mother, Wife, Daughters, and other the Kings Children. Darius by this time found it true, that Charidemus, a baniſhed Grecian of Athens, had told him when he made a view of his Army about Babylon, to wit, That the multitude which he had aſſembled of divers Nations, richly attired but poorly Armed, would be found more terrible to the Countries through which they ſhould paſs, than to the Macedonians whom they went to aſſail, who being all old, Well-diſciplined Souldiers, imbattelled in groſs Squadrons, which they called their Phalanx, well covered with Armour for defence, and furniſhed with advantagious Weapons for offence, would make ſo little account of his delicate Perſians, ill Armed, and worſe Diſciplin'd, that except he would (having ſuch abundance of Treaſure) entertain a ſufficient number of the ſame Grecians, and ſo encounter the Macedonians with men of equal courage, he would repent overlate, as taught by the miſerable ſucceſs like to follow.

Alexander beats Darius.

view

Darius his cruelty.

But ſo unpleaſing was this diſcourſe to Darius, (who uſed to hear nothing but his own praiſes) that he cauſed this poor Grecian to be preſently ſlain, who whilſt he was under the Tormentors hand, ſaid, to the King, that Alexander, againſt whom he had given this good counſel, ſhould certainly revenge his Death, and deſervedly puniſh Darius for refuſing this adviſe. Darius likewiſe ſlighted the counſel given him by the Grecian Souldiers that ſerved under him, who intreated him not to fight in thoſe ſtreight places where Alexander could bring as many hands to fight as Darius could: and theſe old Blades, when Darius was overthrown with all his cowardly, and confuſed Rabble, under their Captain Amyntas, held firm, and made a brave retreat in deſpite of the vanquiſhers.

and Folly.

Theſe Grecians alſo after their retreat, adviſed Darius to draw back his Army into the plains of Meſopotamia, where he might have environed the Macedonians on all ſides with his multitudes; they counſelled him alſo to divide his huge Army into parts, and not to caſt his Empire upon one Battel, &c. But this adviſe was ſo contrary to the cowardly ſpirits of the Perſians, that they perſwaded Darius to environ theſe Greeks with his Army, and to cut them in pieces as Traitors. But Darius was ſo infatuated that he would needs fight with Alexander in ſuch a ſtreight place, neer unto the City of Iſſus, where he could bring no more hands to fight than Alexander could (who by the advice of Parmenio ſtaid there as in a place of advantage) whereby he was utterly overthrown, his Treaſure loſt, his Wife, Mother, and Children (whom the Grecians had perſwaded him to leave in Babylon) taken Priſoners, and all their train of Ladies ſpoiled of their rich Garments, Jewels, and Honour. Indeed the Queen, with her Daughters, who had the good hap to be brought to Alexanders preſence, were entertained with all reſpect due unto them, their Honours preſerved, and their Jewels, and rich Garments reſtored; and though the Queen was a moſt beautiful Lady, and her Daughters of excellent features, yet Alexander maſtered his affections towards them all: Only he embraced the Wife of the Valiant Memnon, who was lately dead, ſhe being taken by Parmenio, as ſhe fled from Damaſcus, at which time the Daughters of Ochus, who reigned before Darius, and the Wives and Children of almoſt all the Nobility of Perſia, fell into Captivity, together with the Treaſure of Darius (not taken at Iſſus) was ſeized upon, amounting to ſix thouſand and two hundred Talents in ready Coin, and in Bullion, five hundred Talents, with a world of Riches beſides.

Alexanders Chaſtity.

Parmenio alſo in his Letter to Alexander ſent him word, that amongſt other things, he had taken at Damaſcus three hundred twenty nine of the Kings Women, which were Skilful in Muſick; forty ſix Weavers, or Knitters of Crowns; Paſtry Women two hundred ſeventy ſeven; Cook Maids twenty nine; White-meat-makers thirteen; Makers of drinking Cups ſeventeen; Wine-cellar men ſeventy; Apothecaries, and Confectioners forty. Thirty thouſand Men, and ſeven thouſand Camels.

Darius

Darius himſelf leaving his Brother dead (caſting the Crown from his head) with divers others of his chief Captains, hardly eſcaped by flight. Darius flies.

After this overthrow given to Darius, all Phœnicia (the City of Tyre excepted) yielded unto Alexander, who made Permenio Governour of it. Alſo Aradus, Zidon, and Biblos, which were Maritine Cities of great importance, of which one Strato was King (but hated of his People) ſubmitted unto Alexander: Yea, good ſucceſs attended him every where. For Antigonus, who was his Lieutenant in Aſia the Leſs, overthew the Cappadocians, Paphlagonians, and others lately revolted. Ariſtodemus alſo, who was Darius his Admiral, had his Fleet partly taken, and partly drowned by the Macedonians. Likewiſe the Lacedemonians, who roſe up againſt Antipater, were beaten: and four thouſand of thoſe Greeks, that made ſo brave a retreat at the laſt Battel, being led by Amyntas into Egypt, intending to hold it for themſelves, were there ſlain: for the time to divide Kingdoms was not yet come. Alexanders great ſucceſs.

Alexander to honour his beloved Epheſtion, gave him power to diſpoſe of the Kingdom of Zidon, and Epheſtion, to ſhew his gratitude, offered to beſtow it upon his Hoſt with whom he quartered; But the Man, not being of the Kingly Race, refuſed it, ſaying, It is not our Country faſhion, that any ſhould be King, but ſuch as are of the Kingly Line. And ſuch an one (ſaith he) lives hard by, a good, and a wiſe man, but very poor, and one that lives by his hard labour. Then did Epheſtion (taking Kingly apparrel along with him) go to this poor Man, and ſaluted him King, bidding him, waſh off his dirt, and put off his rags, and put on that Royal Apparel; The poor Mans name was Abdolominus, who thought he had been in a dream, but being by the ſtanders by, waſhed, and adorned, Epheſtion led him into the Pallace, ſaying, When thou ſitteſt on thy Throne, and haſt power over the lives of all thy Subjects, forget not thy former condition. Alexander hearing of it, ſent for him, and asked him, with what pacience, he, being of ſo Noble an Extraction, could bear his former poverty? To whom Abdolominus anſwered; I pray God that I may bear the Kingdom with the ſame mind. For (ſaid he) theſe hands have provided for my neceſſities, and as I had nothing, ſo I wanted nothing. A notable Example.

While Alexander ſtaid in thoſe parts, he received a Letter from Darius, wherein he deſired to ranſom his Mother, Wife, and Children, with ſome other conditions of Peace, but ſuch as rather became a Conqueror, than one who had been ſo ſhamefully beaten, not vouchſafing in the Endorſement to give Alexander the Title of King. Alexander diſdained his offers, and ſent him word, that he was not only a King, but the King of Darius himſelf. Darius deſires Peace, which Alexander rejected.

When Alexander came neer the City of Tyre, he received from them the preſent of a Golden Crown, and great ſtore of Victuals, with ſome other things, which he took very thankfully, ſending them word, that he deſired to offer a Sacrifice to Hercules, the Protector of their City, from whom he was deſcended. The Tyrians, not liking his preſence within their Walls, returned anſwer, that the Temple of Hercules, was ſeated where the old City ſtood; but Alexander was reſolved to enter Tyre by force, though in moſt mens Judgments the City was impregnable; for the Iſland whereon it was built, was eight hundred furlongs from the Land, yet with the labor of many hands, having great ſtore of Stone from old Tyre, and Timber ſufficient from Libanus, he ſtopped up the paſſage between the Iſland and the Main, being more than once carried away by Storms, and ſometimes fired by the Tyrians, yet with the help of his Navy, he overcame all difficulties, and prevailed, having ſpent ſeven moneths in that attempt. The Tyrians in the beginning of the Siege, had barbarouſly drowned ſome Meſſengers ſent by Alexander to perſwade them to yield, in reſpect whereof, and of his great loſs of time and men, he put eight thouſand to the Sword, and Tyre attempted, and taken Alexanders rigor.

and cauſed two thouſand of thoſe that had eſcaped the firſt fury, to be hanged on Croſſes upon the Sea-ſhore, and reſerved for ſlaves thirteen thouſand, ſome ſay thirty thouſand, and many more of them had died, if the Zidonians, that ſerved Alexander, had not conveyed great numbers of them by ſhipping to their own City. Alexander gave the Government of this Territory to Philotas, the Son of Parmenio. Epheſtion had the charge of the Fleet, and was commanded to meet Alexander at Gaza in the way to Egypt.

Whilſt Alexander lay at the Siege of Tyrus, he ſent to Jaddus, the High Prieſt at Jeruſalem, demanding of him ſupplies, and proviſions for his Army; and withal, ſuch Tribute as they formerly paid to Darius: But when Jaddus anſwered, that he was tyed by a former Oath of Allegiance to Darius, from which he could not be free ſo long as Darius lived: Alexander growing wroth at this anſwer, ſwore, that as ſoon as he had taken Tyrus, he would march againſt Jeruſalem.

At the ſame time alſo came Sanballat, the Cuthæan to Alexander; who, haing forſaken Darius, brought with him eight thouſand men: Him did Alexander receive very graciouſly; Whereupon he asked leave of him to build a Temple upon his own Land, and to make high Prieſt thereof, his Son in Law, Manaſſes, who was Brother to Jaddus, the High Priſt at Jeruſalem; and having obtained leave, becauſe he now grew old, he fell preſently to work, and built a Temple, and made Manaſſes High Prieſt of it, thinking hereby to leave a great Honour to the Poſterity of his Daughter.

Darius his ſecond meſſage. In the mean while Darius ſends again to Alexander, ſetting before him all difficulties he ſhould meet with in his paſſing on to the Eaſt, laying the loſs of the late Battel to the ſtreightneſs of the place: He bids him to conſider how impoſſible it was for him to paſs the Rivers of Euphrates, Tygris, Araxes, &c. with all ſuch other dreadful things as he thought might diſcourage him. Moreover he profered to him all the Kingdoms which lay between the River Halis, and the Helleſpont, as a Dower with his beloveed Daughter: But Alexander rejected all, ſaying, That he profer-red him nothing but what already was his own, and what Victory, and his Virtue had poſſeſſed him of. That he was in a capacity to give conditions, and not to receive any: and that having paſſed the Sea it ſelf, he diſdained to think of reſiſtance in tranſporting his Army over Rivers. Indeed Parmenio, who was now old, and full of Honour and Riches, told the King, that if he were Alexander he would embrace the offers of Darius; to which Alexander anſwered, that ſo would he if he were Parmenio.

Rejected by Alexander.

Then did Alexander march on towards Egypt, and when he came to Gaza, Getes the Governour, a faithful ſervant to Darius, ſhut the Gates againſt him, and defended the Town with a Noble Reſolution, at the Siege whereof Alexander received a wound in the ſhoulder which was dangerous, and a blow on his Leg with a ſtone. He found better men in this place than he had done in the former Battels: For he left ſo many of his Macedonians buried in the Sands of Gaza, that he was fain to ſend for a new ſupply into Greece. Here it was that Alexander began to ſhew his cruelty: For after he had taken Gaza by aſſault, and Getes the Governour, who was weakened with divers wounds, and who never gave ground to the Aſſailants, Alexander cauſed holes to be bored through his feet, and himſelf to be dragged about the ſtreets whilſt he was yet alive, who being as Valiant a man as himſelf, ſcorned to ask him either for life, or the mitigation of his Torments.

Gaza beſieged.

and taken.

Alexanders cruelty.

He goes to Jeruſalem. From Gaza Alexander led his Army towards Jeruſalem, a City for the Antiquity, and great fame thereof, well known unto him; while he lay lay before Tyre, he had ſent for ſome ſupplies thither, which Jaddus the High Prieſt, being Subject, and Sworn to Darius, had refuſed him. The Jews therefore fearing revenge, and unable to reſiſt, committed the care of their Lives and Eſtates to Jaddus, who had recourſe to God by Supplications and Sacrifices for the Common ſafety; and was by him warned in a Dream that he ſhould make Holy-day in the City, and ſet the Gates wide open, and that he and the reſt of the Prieſts, every one in his Prieſtly Raiment, and the People all clothed in white, ſhould go forth and meet Alexander; and accordingly he Iſſued out of the City, arrayed in his Pontifical Robes, to wit, an upper garment of Purple, Embroidered with Gold, with his Mitre, and the Plate of Gold, wherein was engraved the Name of God, the Prieſts and Levites alſo in their rich Ornaments, and the People in White Garments, in a manner ſo unuſual, ſtately, and grave, as Alexander greatly admired it; and when he came neer to the High Prieſt, he fell to the ground before him, as reverencing the Name of God, and when Parmenio reproved him for it, Alexander told him, that in Dios, a City of Macedonia, his mind being buſied about the Conqueſt of Aſia, he ſaw in his ſleep ſuch a Perſon as Jaddus, and ſo apparelled, by whom he was encouraged to purſue his purpoſe, with aſſurance of Victory; and now beholding with his bodily eyes him who before was only repreſented to his fancy, he was ſo exceedingly pleaſed, and encouraged, as (contrary to the expectation of the Phanicians, who hoped to have ſackt, and deſtroyed Jeruſalem) he gave the Jews all, and more than all that they deſired; During his abode there, Jaddus ſhewed him the Propheſie of Daniel, wherein he ſaw himſelf; and his Conqueſt of Perſia ſo directly pointed at, as that nothing from thenceforth could either affright, or diſcourage him therein.

and Worſhips the High Prieſt.

His Viſion.

His favour to the Jews.

The next day Alexander aſſembled the People, and bad them ask what they would of him: But they asked nothing but that they might live according to the Laws of their own Country, and that every ſeventh year (vvherein they were to have no harveſt) they might be exempted from paying any Tribute, all which he granted. And when they asked further, that he would ſuffer the Jews, vvhich dwelt in the Countries of Babylon, and Media, to live according to their own Rites and Laws, he anſwered that he vvould ſatisfie their deſires in that point alſo, ſo ſoon as he ſhould get thoſe Countries into his power. And vvhen he told them, that if any of them vvould follovv him in his Wars, they ſhould uſe their own Rites vvhereſoever they came, many liſted themſelves to ſerve him.

From Jeruſalem Alexander turned again towards Egypt, and entring into it, Aſtaces, vvho vvas Darius's Lieutenant, received him, and delivered into his hands, Memphis, vvith eight hundred Talents of Treaſure, and all other the Kings Riches; and vvhen Alexander had ſet things in order in Egypt, he began to affect a Deity, at the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, ſo fooliſh had proſperity made him. He vvas to paſs over dangerous and dry Sands, vvhere, vvhen the Water vvhich he brought on his Camels backs vvas ſpent, he muſt needs have periſhed, had not an extraordinary ſhower of Rain fallen, juſt vvhen his Army vvas in extream deſpair. Indeed it nevever Rains in Egypt; but the purpoſes of Almighty God are ſecret, and he bringeth to paſs vvhatſoever pleaſeth him. Its ſaid alſo that vvhen he had loſt his vvay in thoſe vaſt Deſarts, a flight of Crows flew before his Army, making ſometimes more, ſometimes leſs haſt, till they had guided him over thoſe pathleſs Sands to Jupiters Temple.

Egypt delivered to him.

His journey to Jupiter Hammon.

Zach. 14. 18.

When Alexander came neer the place, he ſent ſome of his Paraſites to corrupt the Prieſts attending the Oracle, that their anſwer might be given in all things according to his mad ambition, vvho affected to be accounted counted the Son of Jupiter: and accordingly he was ſaluted Jupiters Son, by the Devils Prophet, for which he was richly rewarded, and preſently a rumour was ſpread abroad, that Jupiter had owned him for his Child: and the better to confirm his followers in the belief of his Deity, he ſuborned the Prieſts to give anſwer to ſuch as conſulted with the Oracle, that it would be very pleaſing to Jupiter to Honour Alexander as his Son. But this is certain, and very obſervable, that at Chriſts coming, and at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel, the Devil in this, and in all other his Oracles became ſpeechleſs.

His Pride.

The power of the Goſpel.

From the Temple of Hammon, Alexander returned to Memphis, where among many other learned men, he heard the Philoſopher Pſammones, who underſtanding that he affected the Title of Jupiters Son, told him, that God was the Father King of all men: and, refining the Pride of this haughty King, he brought him to acknowledg, that God was the Father of all mortal men, but that he acknowledgeth none for his Children, ſave good men.

The charge of the ſeveral Provinces of Egypt, Alexander gave to ſeveral Governours, following therein the Rules of his Maſter Ariſtotle, that a great Dominion ſhould not be continued in the hands of any one man; Then gave he order for the building of Alexandria upon the moſt Weſternly branch of Nilus; and thus having ſetled (as he could) the State of Egypt, with the Kingdoms of the Leſſer Aſia, Phœnicia, and Syria, he Conducted his Army towards Euphrates, which paſſage (though the ſame was committed to Mazeus to be defended by him) yet did he abandon it, and Alexander without reſiſtance, paſſed it. From thence he marched towards Tygris, a River, for the ſwiftneſs thereof, called by the Perſians, The Arrow: here might Darius eaſily have repelled him; for the violent courſe of the ſtream was ſuch, as it drave before it many weighty ſtones, and thoſe that moved not, but lay in the bottom were ſo round, and ſmooth by continual rolling, that no man was able to fight upon ſo ſlippery a ſtanding: Nor were the Macedonian Footmen able to wade through the River, otherwiſe than by joyning their hands, and interlacing their Arms each in others, making thereby one intire, and weighty Body to reſiſt the impetuouſneſs of the ſtream; and beſides this, the Channel was ſo deep towards the Eaſtern Shore, where Darius ſhould have oppoſed him, that the Footmen were enforced to lift their Bows, Arrows, and Darts over their Heads to keep them from being made unſerviceable by the Water. Indeed it cannot be denied, that as all Eſtates of the World, by the ſurfeit of miſgovernment, have been ſubject to many grievous, and ſometimes, mortal diſeaſes: So had the Empire of Perſia at this time brought it ſelf into a burning Feavour, and thereby became frantick, and without underſtanding, foreſhewing manifeſtly the death, and diſſolution thereof.

Alexandria built.

He paſſeth Euphrates.

And Tygris.

But Alexander had now recovered the Eaſtern Shore of Tygris without any oppoſition but what the Nature of the River made, where Mazeus, who had the charge to defend the banks, both of Euphrates, and it, preſented himſelf to the Macedonians, being attended with certain Troops of Horſemen, as if with uneven forces, he durſt have charged them upon even ground, when as with a multitude far exceeding them he forſook thoſe advantages which no valour of the enemy could eaſily have overcome. But its commonly ſeen that timorous and cowardly Perſons do ever follow thoſe ways, and counſels, whereof the opportunity is already loſt.

Baſe cowardize.

Its true, that he ſets all proviſions on fire wherewith the Macedonians might be aſſiſted in their paſſage over Tygris, thinking thereby greatly to have diſtreſſed them: but the execution of good counſel is fruitleſs, when unſeaſonable. For now was Alexander ſo well furniſhed with carriages, that no conveniences were wanting to the Army which he conducted. Thoſe things alſo which Mazeus now ſought to deſtroy, Alexander being in ſight, ſight, by his Horſemen, ſaved and recovered them. This Mazeus might have done ſome days before at good leaſure; yea, at this time he might have done it with ſo great a ſtrength of Horſemen, as the Macedonians might not have dared to purſue, leaving the Body of their Foot out of ſight, and ſo far behind. Darius his new Army.

Darius upon Alexanders firſt return out of Egypt, had aſſembled all thoſe Forces which the Countries next to him could afford; and now alſo were the Arians, Scythians, Indians, and other Nations come to him. Nations (ſaith Curtius) that rather ſerved to make up a number, than to make reſiſtance. Some reckon them to amount to the number of ten hundred thouſand Foot, and four hundred thouſand Horſe, beſides armed Chariots, and ſome few Elephants. Curtius numbers them but two hundred thouſand Foot, and about fifty thouſand Horſe, which is more probable: And yet ſeeing Darius had more confidence in the number, than in the Valour of his Souldiers, probably he had brought together ſome three or four hundred thouſand of all ſorts, with which, he hoped in thoſe fair plains of Aſſyria, to have overborn the ſmall number of the invading Army. But its moſt true, That in every Battel skil and practice do more towards attaining the Victory, than multitudes, and rude audacity.

An Eclipſe frightens the Macedonians.

Whileſt Alexander reſted, and refreſhed his Army after their hard paſſage over Tygris, their happened an Eclipſe of the Moon, at which the Macedonians (being ignorant of the cauſe, and reaſon of it) were much troubled; taking it as a certain preſage of their ruin and deſtruction, inſomuch as they began not only to murmur, but to ſpeak boldly, that to ſatisfie the ambition of one man, and of ſuch a one as diſdained Philip for his Father, and would needs be called the Son of Jupiter, they ſhould all periſh: For he enforced them, not only to War againſt a world of enemies, but againſt Rivers, Mountains, and the Heavens themſelves.

Hereupon Alexander, who was now ready to advance, made an halt, and to quiet the minds of the multitude, he led before him the Ægyptian Aſtrologers, that by them the Souldiers might be aſſured that this Eclipſe of the Moon, was a ſure preſage of his good ſucceſs. But they never informed them that it came to paſs by natural cauſes, but reſerved that as a ſecret fit to be kept among themſelves. Theſe Aſtrologers gave no other reaſon for it than this, That the Grecians were under the Aſpect of the Sun, and the Perſians under that of the Moon, and therefore the Moon loſing her light, did foreſhew that the ſtate of Perſia was now in danger of falling, and their Glory of being obſcured. This being noiſed through all the Army, every man was ſatisfied, and quieted, and their courage redoubled.

As Alexander drew near the Perſian Army, certain Letters were intercepted, written by Darius to the Grecians, proffering and promiſing them a great ſum of money, if they would either kill or betray Alexander. But theſe, by the advice of Parmenio, were ſuppreſſed.

Darius his Wife died.

About this time alſo Darius his beautiful Wife, being oppreſſed with ſorrow, and wearied with travel, died: which accident Alexander ſeemed to bewail no leſs then Darius: who, upon the firſt report of it, ſuſpected, that ſome diſhonorable violence had been offered to her; but being ſatisfied by an Eunuch of his own that attended her, of Alexanders kind, and Kingly reſpect towards her from the very time of her being taken, he prayed the immortal Gods, that if they had decreed to ſet a new Maſter over the Perſian Empire, that then it would pleaſe them to confer it on ſo juſt & chaſt an enemy as was Alexander, to whom, once more before the laſt tryal by Battel, he offered theſe conditions of peace.

Propoſals to Alexander.

That if he would marry his Daughter, he would deliver, and reſign up to him all Aſia the leſs, with Egypt, and all thoſe Kingdoms between the Phœnician Sea and the River Euphrates. That he would pay him for the Ranſom of his Mother, and

and other Daughters, thirty thouſand Talents, and that for performance thereof he would leave his Son Ochus in Hoſtage; and they ſought by ſundry Arguments to perſwade Alexander to accept hereof. Alexander cauſing the Ambaſſadors to withdraw, adviſed with his Councel, yet heard no man ſpeak but Parmenio, who was the very right hand of his good Fortune, and he perſwaded him to accept of ſuch fair conditions: He told him, that the Empire between Euphrates and the Helleſpont, was a large addition to Macedonia: That the retaining of thoſe Perſian Priſoners was a great cumber to him; and that the Treaſure offered for them was of far better uſe than their Perſons, with divers other Arguments, yet Alexander, rejected all; though it was very probable, that if he had followed his advice, and ſet bounds to his ambition within thoſe limits, he might have been as famous for his virtue, as he was for his great ſucceſſes, and might have left a ſucceſſor of fit age to have enjoyed his eſtate, which afterwards, indeed he much enlarged, rather to the greatning of others than himſelf, who to aſſure themſelves of what they had Uſurped, left not one of his iſſue alive within a few years after. Beſides, Alexander by going ſo far into the Eaſt, left behind him the reputation which he brought with him out of Macedonia, of a juſt and prudent Prince: A Prince temperate, adviſed, and grateful; and learned by abundance of proſperity, to be a lover of Wine, of Flatterers, and of extream cruelty.

Alexanders anſwer.

But the Perſian Ambaſſadors waited for their anſwer, which was to this effect: that what curteſies ſoever he had beſtowed upon the Wife, and Children of Darius, proceeded from his own natural clemency, and magnanimity, without all reſpect to their Maſter, but thanks to an enemy was improper: That he made no Wars againſt adverſity, but againſt thoſe that reſiſted him: Not againſt Women, and Children, but againſt armed enemies: And alſo that by the reiterated practices of Darius, to corrupt his Souldiers, and by great ſums of money, to debauch his Friends to attempt ſomething againſt his Perſon, he had reaſon to doubt whether the peace offered were really intended, yet could he not (were it true and faithful) reſolve in haſt to accept of it, ſeeing Darius had Warred againſt him, not as a King, with Royal and over forces, but as a Traytor, by ſecret, and baſe practices. Beſides, the Territories which he offered him were already his own; and if Darius, could beat him back again over Euphrates, he would then believe that he offered him ſomething that was in his power to give: Otherwiſe he propounded to himſelf, as a reward of his enterprizes, all thoſe Kingdoms which Darius as yet had in his poſſeſſion; wherein, whether he was abuſed by his own hopes or no, the Battel which he meant to fight the day following, ſhould determine. And in concluſion, he told them, that he came into Aſia, to give Kingdoms, and not to receive them: That the Heavens could not hold two Suns, and therefore if Darius could be content to acknowledg Alexander his Superiour, he might perchance be perſwaded to give him condition fit for a ſecond Perſon, and an Inferiour.

His Ambition.

The Ambaſſaders being returned with this anſwer, Darius prepares to fight, and ſent Mazeus to defend a Paſs, which yet he never dared ſo much as to hazzard. Alexander conſulting with his Captains, Parmenio, perſwaded him to force the Camp of Darius by night, that the multitudes of his enemies might not affright his Macedonians, being comparatively but a few. But Alexander replied, that he ſcorned to ſteal a Victory, and reſolved to bring with him Daylight to witneſs his Valour. Indeed the ſucceſs commended Alexanders reſolution, though the Counſel given by Parmenio was more ſound. Yet when he came to view the multitude of his enemies, he began to ſtagger, and entrenched himſelf upon a Ground of advantage, which fooliſhly the Perſians had abandoned. And when as Darius, for fear of a Camizado, had ſtood with his men in Armour all the day, and forborn all ſleep in the Night; Alexander on the contrary, gave his men reſt, and

His Valour.

ſtore

ſtore of food, knowing, that Souldiers do better ſtand to it in fight, if they have their bellies full of meat and drink: for hunger within, fights more eagerly than ſteel without.

The numbers which Alexander had, were about forty thouſand Foot, and ſeven thouſand Horſe, which were of the Europæan Army: And beſides theſe, he had Ægyptians, Syrians, Judæans, and Arabians which followed him out of thoſe Countries. He uſed but a ſhort ſpeech to his Souldiers to encourage them, neither need he; For one Victory begets another, and puts courage into the Conquerors, and taketh away ſpirits from thoſe that have been beaten. They prepare to fight.

Some make large deſcriptions of this Battel, fought at Gaugamela, but in concluſion they tell us but of three hundred of Alexanders men that were ſlain, and ſome ſay leſs; but of the Perſians there fell forty thouſand: But what can we judg of this great encounter, other than (as in the two former Battels at Granick, and in Cilicia) that the Perſians, upon the firſt charge, ran away, and that the Macedonians purſued them. For if that every man whom Darius brought into the Field, had but caſt a Dart, or a Stone, the Macedonians could not have bought the Empire of the Eaſt at ſo eaſie a rate, as ſix or ſeven hundred in three ſuch notorious Battels. Certainly if Darius had fought with Alexander upon the Banks of Euphrates, and had Armed but fifty or ſixty thouſand of this great multitude, only with Spades (for moſt of his men were fit for no other Weapon) it had been impoſſible for Alexander to have paſſed that River ſo eaſily, much leſs the River of Tygris. But as a man, whoſe Empire God was putting a Period to, he abandoned all places of advantage, and ſuffered Alexander to enter ſo far into the bowels of his Kingdom, as all hope and poſſibility of eſcaping by retreat being taken from the Macedonians, they were put to the choiſe, either to Die or Conquer, to which Election Darius could no way conſtrain his men, ſeeing they had many large Regions to run into from their Invaders. A Battel. Darius beaten.

Darius, after the rout of his Army, fled to Arbela that Night, better attended in his flight than in the fight, and to them that fled with him, he propounded his purpoſe of retreating into Media, perſwading them that the Macedonians, who were greedy of ſpoil and riches, would rather attempt Babylon, Suſa, and other Cities filled with Treaſure, than to purſue the vanquiſhed. This miſerable reſolution his Nobility rather obeyed, than approved. and flies.

Soon after the departure of Darius, came Alexander to Arbela, vvhich, with a great maſs of Treaſure, and many Princely Ornaments, was ſurrendred to him. For the fear which accompanied Darius, took nothing with it but ſhame, and diſhonour. He that had been twice beaten before, ſhould have ſent his Treaſure into Media rather than to have brought it to Arbela, ſo neer the place where he intended to wait the coming of his enemy. If he had been victorious, he might have brought it back at leaſure: But being overcome, he knew it impoſſible to drive Mules and Camels loaden with Gold, from the purſuing Enemy, ſeeing himſelf, at the overthrow which he had in Cilicia, caſt the Crown from his head, to run away the lighter: But its eaſier to reprehend, than to amend what is paſt. Arbela taken and much Treaſure.

From Arbela, Alexander marched towards Babylon, where Mazeus, in whom Darius had moſt confidence, rendred to him, himſelf, his Children, and the City. Alſo the Captain of the Caſtle where the Treaſure was kept; ſtrewed the Streets with Flowers, burnt Frankincenſe upon the Silver Altars, as Alexander paſſed by, and delivered to him whatſoever was committed to his truſt. The Magi alſo, who were the Chaldean Aſtrologers, followed this Captain to entertain their new King: After theſe, came the Babylonian Horſemen, infinitely rich in attire, but exceeding poor in Warlike furniture. Between theſe and himſelf, Alexander cauſed his Macedonian Footmen to march. When he entred the Caſtle he admired the Glory thereof, and the Babylon taken.

the abundance of Treasure which he found therein, amounting to fifty thousand Talents of Silver uncoined. In this City, rich in all things, but most of all in voluptuous pleasures, the King rested himself and his whole Army thirty four days, spending that time in Banquetting, and in all sorts of effeminate exercises, which so much softned the minds of the Macedonians, not acquainted till now with such delicacies, as the severe Discipline of War, which taught them to endure hunger and thirst, painful travel, and hard lodging, began rather to be forgotten than neglected. Alexander, as he was rowed upon a Lake neer Babylon in his Gally, a sudden tempest arising blew off his Hat, and Crown fastened upon it, into the Lake, whereupon one of the Marriners, leaping into the water, swam, and fetched it to him, and to keep it the drier, he put it upon his own head. Alexander rewarded him with a Talent for saving his Crown; but withal, caused his Head to be cut off, for presuming to put his Crown upon it.

Base cruelty.

During his abode here, Alexander instituted those Regiments consisting of a thousand Souldiers, appointing Colonels over them, who thereupon were called Chiliarks. This new order Alexander brought in, was to honour those Captains, which were found by certain Judges, to have deserved best in the late War.

While Alexander was yet at Babylon, there came to him a great supply out of Europe. For Antipater sent him six thousand Foot, and five hundred Hore out of Macedonia; and of the Thracians three thousand Foot, and as many Horse, and out of Greece four thousand, and four hundred Horse, by which his Army was greatly strengthened. For those that were infected with the pleasures of Babylon, could hardly be brought again to change their soft beds for hard boards, and the cold ground.

Alexander left the City and Castle of Babylon, with the Territories adjoyning, in charge with three of his own Captains, Agathon, Minetus, and Apolidorus, leaving a thousand Talents to supply their wants: But to grace Mazeus, who delivered up the City to him, he gave him the Title of his Lieutenant General, and took along with him Bagistines, who surrendred the Castle to him; and having distributed to every Souldier a part of the Treasure, he left Babylon and entred into the Province of Satrapene, marching from thence towards Susa in Persia, situated on the River Euleus, which City was sometime Governed by the Prophet Daniel.

Susa taken.

Here Abulites, the Governour of this famous City, gave it up to the Conquerour, with fifty thousand Talents of Silver in Bullion, and twelve Elephants for the War, with all other the Treasure of Darius there; such as the Persian Kings had for a long time heaped up together, leaving it from Father to Son; all which in one hour came into his hands who never cared for it. In this sort did those Vassals of Fortune; those lovers of the Kings prosperity, not of his Person, purchase their own peace, and safety with their Masters Treasure; and herein was Alexander well advised, that whatsoever Titles he gave to the Persians, yet he left all places of importance in trust with his own Captains, as Babylon, Susa, Persepolis, with other Cities, and Provinces that were Conquered by him: for had Darius but beaten the Macedonians in one Battel, all the Persian Nobility would have turned again to their natural Lord.

Gross folly.

Whilest Alexander was ransacking Arbela, Mazeus might have furnished Darius from Babylon; and whilest he stayed those thirty four days at Babylon, Abulites might have holpen him from Susa: and whilest he was Feasting, and Frolicking there; Teridates from Persepolis might fully have supplied him: for the chiefest bulk of his Treasure was laid up in that City: But benefits bind not the ambitious but the honest; for those that are selfish, do in all changes, consult only the conservation of their own greatness.

The Government of Susa, with the Castle and treasure, Alexander committed to his own Macedonians, making Abulites, who rendred it to him, his Lieutenant, as he had done Mazeus before, giving them Honourable Titles, but neither truſt nor power. For he left three thouſand old Souldiers to Garriſon that City, and with them, the Mother and Children of Darius to repoſe themſelves there.

to

From Suſa Alexander marched with his Army towards Perſepolis; but when he ſought to paſs thoſe Mountains that ſunder Suſiana and Perſia, he was ſoundly beaten by Ariobarzanes, who defended thoſe Streights againſt him, called Pilæ Perſidis, and after the loſs of many of his Macedonians, he was forced to ſave himſelf by retreat, cauſing his Foot to march cloſe together, and to cover themſelves with their Targets, from the Stones that were tumbled upon them from the Mountain-tops. Yet in the end, he found out another paſſage, which was diſcovered to him by a Lycian that lived in that Countrey, and thereby, coming ſuddenly upon Ariobarzanes, who now was enforced to fight upon even ground, he overthrew him, who from thence fled to Perſepolis: But the Citizens refuſing to admit him, he returned, and gave a ſecond charge upon the Macedonians, in which he was ſlain. Alexander beaten.

Many Greeks (for Authors agree not upon their number) having been taken Priſoners by the Perſians, preſented themſelves here to Alexander. Theſe had the Barbarians ſo maimed, by cutting off their Hands, Ears, Noſes, and other Members, as that they could not have been known to their own Countrey men, but by their Language. To each of theſe Alexander gave three hundred Crowns, with new Garments, and ſuch Lands as they liked to live upon. Barbarous cruelty.

Tiridates, one of Darius his falſe hearted Grandees, hearing of Alexander's approach to Perſepolis, made him know that Perſepolis was ready to receive him, and intreated him to double his pace, becauſe there was a determination amongſt the People to Plunder the Kings Treaſury. This City was forſaken by many of her Inhabitants upon Alexanders arrival, and they that ſtaid, followed the worſt Counſel. For the City was given up to the Liberty of the Souldiers, to ſpoil and kill at their pleaſure. There was no place in the world at that time, which, if it had been lain in the balance with Perſepolis, would have weighed it down. Indeed, Babylon and Suſa were very rich, but in Perſepolis lay the bulk, and greateſt ſtore of the riches of Perſia. For after the ſpoil that had been made, of money, curious Plate, Bullion, Images of Gold and Silver, and other Jewels, there remained to Alexander himſelf, one hundred and twenty thouſand Talents, and as much other Treaſure as twenty thouſand Mules, and ten thouſand Camels could carry away; much whereof had been reſerved there from the dayes of Cyrus. Here it was that Alexander, ſetting himſelf down upon Darius his Throne, it was ſo high that his feet could not reach the ground; whereupon one of his Attendants brought him a little Table, and ſet it under his feet. One of Darius's Eunuchs ſtanding by, ſighed, and wept grievouſly, which Alexander taking notice of, asked him the reaſon of it? the Eunuch anſwered, I weep to ſee a Table that was ſo highly prized by my Maſter Darius, now to be made thy foot-ſtool. Here he left the ſame number of three thouſand Macedonians, in Perſepolis, as he had done in Suſa, and gave the ſame formal honour to the Traitor Tiridates, as he had done to Abulites; but he committed the charge of the place to Nicarides, a Creature of his own. Perſepolis taken.

The Body of his Army he left there for thirty dayes, and the care of Parmenio and Craterus, and with a thouſand Horſe, and certain choſen Bands of Foot, he would needs view in the Winter time, thoſe parts of Perſia which now were covered with Snow: a fruitleſs and fooliſh enterprize. Some ſpeak it in his praiſe, that when his Souldiers cryed out againſt him, becauſe of the extream Froſt and Snow, through which they could not make way but with A fooliſh enterprize.

great difficulty, that Alexander forſook his Horſe, and marched on foot before them: But what can be more ridiculous, than for a man to bring other men into extremity, thereby to ſhew how well himſelf can endure it; being his walking on foot did no otherwiſe take off their wearineſs that followed him, than his ſometime forbearing to drink, did quench their thirſt that could leſs endure it.

Alexander turns Drunkard.

Alexander being returned to Perſepolis, thoſe Hiſtorians that were moſt enamoured of his Virtues, complain, that the opinion of his Valour, of his Liberality, of his Clemency towards the vanquiſhed, and all other his Noble conditions, were drowned in Drink. That he ſmothered in his carouſing cups all the reputation of his former actions, and that by deſcending as it were frow the awful Throne of the greateſt King, into the company and familiarity of the baſeſt Harlots; He began to be deſpiſed both of his own, and of all other Nations. For when he was enflamed with Wine, and being perſwaded by the infamous Strumpet Thais, he cauſed the moſt ſumptuous, and goodly Caſtle and City of Perſepolis to be conſumed with fire, notwithſtanding all the Arguments that Parmenio could uſe to the contrary, who told him, that it was a diſhonour to deſtroy thoſe things by the perſwaſion of others, which by his proper virtue and force he obtained: and that it would be a certain evidence to the Aſiaticks, to think hardly of him, and thereby alienate their hearts from him. For they might well believe, that he which demoliſhed the goodlieſt Ornaments they had, meant nothing leſs, than after ſuch vaſtations, to hold the poſſeſſion of them.

Perſepolis burnt.

Darius his laſt Army.

About this time Alexander received another ſupply of Souldiers out of Cilica, and advanced to find out Darius in Media. Darius had there formed his fourth, and laſt Army, which he meant to have encreaſed in Bactria, had he not heard of Alexander's coming on, with whom (truſting to his preſent numbers, which yet were but thirty or forty thouſand) he intended once again to try what he might do againſt him. He therefore called together his Captains and Commanders, and propounded his reſolution to them, who, deſpairing of good ſucceſs, ſtood for a while ſilent: But at laſt Artabazus, one of his eldeſt men of War, who had ſometime lived with King Philip the Father of Alexander, brake the ſilence, proteſting that he could never be beaten by any adverſity of the Kings, from the Faith that he had ever ought him, with firm confidence that all the reſt were of the ſame mind, whereof they likewiſe aſſured Darius, by the like proteſtation, and ſo they approved of the Kings reſolution. Two onely, and they the greateſt, to wit, Naburzanes, and Beſſus, who was Governour of Bactria, had conſpired againſt their Maſter, and therefore adviſed the King to lay a new foundation for the War, and to purſue it for the preſent by ſome ſuch perſon againſt whom, neither the Gods, nor Fortune had in all things declared themſelves to be an enemy.

The Treaſon of Beſſus.

This preamble Naburzanes uſed, and in concluſion, adviſed the election of his fellow Traitor Beſſus, with promiſe that when the War ſhould be ended, the Empire ſhould be again reſtored to Darius. The King, ſwoln with diſdain, preſſed towards Naburzanes, to have ſlain him; but Beſſus and the Bactrians, whom he commanded, being more in number than the reſt, with-held him. Hereupon Naburzanes withdrew himſelf, and Beſſus followed him, making their Quarters apart from the reſt of the Army. Artabazus, the Kings faithful Servant, perſwaded him to be adviſed, and to comply for the time, the rather becauſe Alexander was at hand, and that he would at leaſt make ſhew of forgetting the offence: which the King (being of a gentle Diſpoſition) eaſily yielded to. Then came Beſſus to the King, and made his ſubmiſſion:

Thé fidelity of the Greeks.

But Patron, who commanded a Brigade of four thouſand Greeks, which had in all the former Battels ſerved Darius faithfully, and had alwayes made their retreat in deſpite of the Macedonians, offered himſelf to Darius, to guard his Perſon, proteſting againſt the Treaſon of Beſſus. (But God had otherwiſe determined mined of the Empire, and therefore ſo far was the King infatuated, that he ever rejected their Counſel from the beginning of the War, who were moſt faithful to him.) And now hearkened to Beſſus, who told him, that the Greeks, with Patron their Captain, were corrupted by Alexander, and practiced the diviſion of his faithful ſervants: Yet, even this while, Beſſus had corrupted, and drawn to himſelf thirty thouſand of the Army, promiſing them all thoſe things by which, the lovers of the world and themſelves, are wont to be allured, to wit, Riches, Honour, and Safety.

Darius Diſcharges his Attendants.

Now the day following, Darius plainly diſcovered the purpoſes of Beſſus, and being overcome with paſſion, as judging himſelf unable to make head againſt theſe ungrateful and unnatural Traitors, he prayed Artabazus, his faithful Servant, to depart from him, and to provide for his own ſafety. In like manner he diſcharged the reſt of his Attendants, all ſave a few of his Eunuchs. For his Guards had voluntarily abandoned him. His Perſians, being moſt baſe cowards, durſt not undertake his defence againſt the Bactrians, though they had four thouſand Greeks to aſſiſt them, who of themſelves were able to beat both the Parties. But it's moſt true, That him that forſakes himſelf, will no man follow. It had been far more man-like, and King-like, to have dyed in the head of thoſe four thouſand Greeks, who offered him the diſpoſal of their Lives, (to which Artabazus alſo perſwaded him) than to have lain upon the ground bewailing himſelf, and ſuffering himſelf to be bound like a Slave, by thoſe Ambitious Monſters that laid violent hands on him; whom, neither the conſideration of his former great eſtate, nor the Honour he had conferred upon them, nor the truſt he had repoſed in them, nor the world of benefits he had beſtowed on them, could move to pity: No, nor his preſent adverſity, which above all things ſhould have prevailed with them, could pierce their viperous and ingrateful hearts.

Darius made a Priſoner and abuſed.

Darius, thus forſaken, was bound by them, and laid in a Cart covered with Hides of Beaſts, that he might not be diſcovered; and to add deſpite and deriſion to his adverſity, they bound him with Chains of Gold, and ſo drew him amongſt their ordinary Carriages. For Beſſus and Naburzanes perſwaded themſelves that they might redeem their lives, and be ſetled in their Provinces that they held, either by delivering him Priſoner to Alexander, or if that hope failed, to make themſelves Kings by his murther, and then to defend themſelves by force of Armes. But their expectations were fruſtrate in both. For it was againſt the Nature of God, who is moſt juſt, to ſuffer ſuch villany to go unpuniſhed, yea, though againſt an Heathen King, and an Idolator.

Gods Juſtice.

Alexander purſues him.

Alexander hearing that Darius was retreated towards Bactria, not daring to abide his coming, haſtned after him by a violent march, and becauſe he would not force his Footmen beyond their ſtrength, he mounted on Horſeback certain ſelect Companies of them, and thoſe which were beſt Armed, and with ſix thouſand other Horſe, he rather ran than marched after Darius. Now ſuch as hated the Treaſon of Beſſus, ſecretly forſook him, and gave intelligence to Alexander of all that had happened, informing him of the way that Beſſus took, and how near he was unto him. Hereupon Alexander again doubled his pace, and his Vant-guard being come within ſight of Beſſus his Rear, Beſſus brought a Horſe to the Cart where Darius lay bound, perſwading him to mount thereon, and to ſave himſelf by flight. But the unfortunate King refuſing to follow thoſe that had betrayed him, they caſt Darts at him, and gave him ſome mortal wounds: they wounded alſo the Beaſts that drew him, and ſlew two poor ſervants that attended his perſon. This done, they all fled that could, and left the reſt to the mercy of the Macedonians.

Darius is wounded.

Polyſtratus, a Macedonian, in his purſuit after Beſſus, being extream thirſty, as he was refreſhing himſelf with ſome water that he had found out, eſpied a Cart drawn by wounded Beaſts, that were now ſcarce able to go, whereupon he ſearched it, and there found Darius bathed in his own bloud: and by a Perſian Captain that Polyſtratus had, he underſtood that it was Darius, and was informed of that barbarous Tragedy. Darius alſo ſeemed greatly comforted (if dying men, ignorant of the living God can be comforted) that he vented not his laſt ſorrows unheard; but that by this Macedonian, Alexander might be informed of the truth, and take vengeance on thoſe Traitors, who had dealt no leſs unworthily, than cruelly with him, recommending the revenge thereof to Alexander by this meſſenger, beſeeching him to purſue the Traytors, not for Darius his ſake, but for his own Honour, and for the ſafety of all that did, or ſhould hereafter wear Crowns. He alſo having nothing elſe to preſent to Alexander, rendred him thanks for his Kingly Grace and Favour uſed to his Wife, Mother, and Children; deſiring the immortal Gods to ſubject to him the Kingdom of the whole World. As he was thus ſpeaking, importunate Death preſſing out his few remaining ſpirits, he deſired a little Water, which Polyſtratus preſented unto him; after which, he lived but to tell him, that of all the good things which of late he was Maſter of, he had nothing remaining but his laſt breath, wherewith to deſire the Gods to reward his compaſſion.

His laſt words.

The Macedonians began now to hope that their Travels were near an end; and therefore every man was preparing for his return: whereof, when Alexander was informed, he was much troubled at it. For the bounded Earth ſufficed not for his boundleſs Ambition. Many Arguments he therefore uſed to draw on his Army farther into the Eaſt: But that which prevailed moſt was, that Beſſus, a baſe Traitor to his Maſter Darius, having at his Devotion the Hircanians and Bactrians, would in a ſhort time, if the Macedonians ſhould now return, make himſelf Lord of the Perſian Empire, and reap the fruit of all their former Travels. In concluſion, Alexander won their conſents to go on: Which done, leaving Craterus with certain Regiments of Foot, and Amyntas with ſix thouſand Horſe in Parthia, he entred (not without ſome oppoſition) into Hyrcania. For the Mardons and other barbarous Nations, defended certain paſſages for a while. But at laſt prevailing, he paſſed the River of Zioberis, which, taking its riſe in Parthia, empties it ſelf into the Caſpian Sea. It runneth under the ledge of Mountains which bound Parthia and Hyrcania, where, hiding it ſelf under ground for three hundred furlongs, it then riſeth again, and follows its former courſe, as is ſaid before. In Zadracarta, the Metropolis of Hircania, Alexander reſted fifteen dayes, Banquetting, and Feaſting therein.

Alexanders Ambition.

He goes into Hircania.

About this time Pataphernes, one of Darius his greateſt Commanders, with ſome others of his followers, ſubmitted themſelves to Alexander, and were reſtored to their places and Government. But above all other, he Graced Artabazus moſt highly, for his approved and conſtant Faith and Loyalty to his Maſter Darius. Artabazus brought along with him ten thouſand and five hundred Greeks, the remainder of all thoſe that had ſerved Darius. He treated with Alexander for their pardon before they came; but in the end, they rendred themſelves ſimply without promiſe or compoſition: Alexander pardoned all but the Lacedemonians, whom he impriſoned, their Captain having ſlain himſelf. He was alſo prevailed with (though to his great diſhonour) to pardon Nabarzanes, that had joyned with Beſſus in the Murther of Darius.

Divers ſubmit to him.

Here (as ſome write) Thaleſtris, Queen of the Amazons came to viſit him, and her ſuit was, (which ſhe eaſily obtained) that ſhe might accompany him, till ſhe proved with child by him: which done, ſhe refuſed to go along with him into India, but returned into her own Country.

Queen of the Amazons comes to him.

Now as Alexander had begun to change his conditions after the taking of Perſepolis; ſo at this time Proſperity had ſo much corrupted his Virtue, that he accounted Clemency to be but baſeneſs, and the Temperance, which all his his life before he had uſed, to be but a poor and abject humour, rather becoming the inſtructers of his youth, than the condition and ſtate of ſo mighty a King as the World could not equal. For he perſwaded himſelf, that he now repreſented the greatneſs of the Gods; and he was pleaſed when thoſe that came before him, would fall down on the ground and adore him. He wore the Garments and Robes of the Perſians, and commanded his Nobles to do the like. He entertained into his Court and Camp the ſame ſhameleſs Rabble of Curtizans and Catamites, as Darius had done, whom he imitated, in all the proud, voluptuous, and deteſted manners of the Perſians, whom he had vanquiſhed, and became a more foul and fearful Monſter than Darius, from whoſe Tyranny, he vaunted, to have delivered ſo many Nations; Inſomuch as they that were neareſt and deareſt to him, began to be aſhamed of him, entertaining each other with this, or the like ſcornful diſcourſe; That Alexander of Macedonia was become one of Darius's licentious Courtiers: That by his Example, the Macedonians, after ſo many, and tedious travels, were more impoveriſhed in their Virtues, than enriched by their Victories; and that it was hard now to judge, whether the Conquerors or conquered were the baſer ſlaves. Neither were theſe things ſo whiſpered in corners, but that they came to Alexanders ears: He therefore with great Gifts ſought to ſtop the mouthes of the better ſort, and of ſuch, of whoſe judgments he was moſt jealous.

He affects a Deity.

For which he is ſcorned of his Friends.

Then did he make it known to the Army, that Beſſus had aſſumed the title of a King, and called himſelf Artaxerxes; and that he had compounded a great Army of the Bactrians and other Nations, whereby he perſwaded them to go on; to the end, that all which they had already gotten, together with themſelves (ſo far engaged) might not be caſt away and loſt. And becauſe they were peſtered with the plunder of ſo many rich Cities; that the whole Army ſeemed but the guard of their Carriages, he commanded that every mans Fardel ſhould be brought into the Market place; which, when it was done, he, together with his own, cauſed all to be conſumed with fire. This, in probability, might have proved very dangerous unto him: For the Common Souldiers had more intereſt in that which they had purchaſed with their painful travel, and with their blood, than in the Kings Ambition; had not this happy temerity overcome all difficulties.

He burns all the ſpoils.

As he was upon his march, news was brought that Satribarzanes, whom he had eſtabliſhed in his former Government over the Arians, was revolted; Whereupon, leaving the way of Bactria, he ſought the Traytor out: But the Rebell hearing of his coming, fled with two thouſand Horſe to Beſſus. Then marched Alexander on againſt Beſſus, and by ſetting a great Pile of wood on fire, with the advantage of a ſtrong wind, he won a paſſage over an high an unacceſſible Rock, which was defended againſt him by thirty thouſand Foot, the extremity of the fire and ſmoke forcing them to quit the place, which otherwiſe had been invincible: After which, he found no reſiſtance, till he came into Aria, on the Eaſt of Bactria, where the chief City of that Province, called Artacoana, was a while defended againſt him, by the revolt of Satribarzanes; but in the end, he received the Inhabitants to mercy. At this place his Army was recruited with a new ſupply of five thouſand, and five hundred Foot, and near five hundred Horſe, out of Greece, Theſſaly, and other places.

Rebellion againſt him.

At this time it was, that the Treaſon of Dimnus was diſcovered, of which, Philotas the Son of Parmenio was accuſed, at leaſt as acceſſary, if not principal. This Dimnus, with ſome others, having conſpired againſt the life of Alexander, went about to draw Nicomacus, a young man whom he loved, into the conſpiracy: The youth, although he was firſt bound by Oath to ſecreſie, when he heard ſo foul a matter uttered, began to proteſt againſt it ſo vehemently, Treaſon againſt him.

hemently, that his Friend was like to have ſlain him, to ſecure his own life; and ſo conſtrained by fear, he made ſhew as if he had been won by perſwaſion, and by ſeeming at length to like well of the buſineſs, he was told more at large who they were that had undertaken it. There were nine or ten of them, all men of rank, whoſe Names Dimnus (the better to countenance the enterprize) reckoned up to him. Nicomachus had no ſooner freed himſelf from the company of this Traytor Dimnus, than he acquainted his own Brother, Ceballinus, with the whole deſign; whereupon it was agreed between them, that Ceballinus, (who might do it with the leaſt ſuſpition) ſhould go to the Court, and utter all. Ceballinus meeting with Philotas, told him the whole buſineſs, requeſting him to acquaint the King with it, which he promiſed to do, but yet did not.

Two dayes paſſed, and Philotas never brake with the King about the matter, but ſtill excuſed himſelf to Ceballinus, by the Kings want of leiſure. This his coldneſs bred ſuſpition, and cauſed Ceballinus to apply himſelf to one Metron, Keeper of the Kings Armory, who forthwith brought him to Alexanders preſence. Alexander finding by examination what had paſſed between Ceballinus and Philotas, fully perſwaded himſelf, that this concealment of the Treaſon argued Philotas to have a hand in it; When Dimnus therefore was brought before him, he asked him only this Queſtion; wherein have I ſo offended thee, that thou ſhouldſt think Philotas more worthy to be King than my ſelf? Dimnus, when he was firſt apprehended, perceiving how the matter was like to go, had ſo wounded himſelf, that he lived no longer than to give his laſt groan in the Kings preſence.

It's diſcovered to Alexander.

Then was Philotas ſent for, and charged with the ſuſpition which his ſilence might juſtly breed. His anſwer was, that when the Treaſon was revealed to him by Nicomachus, he judged it to be but frivolous, and therefore forbore to acquaint Alexander with it, till he could procure better information. This errour of his (if it were but an errour) though Alexander, for the notable ſervices done by his Father Parmenio, and his Brother Nicanor, lately dead, and by Philotas himſelf, had freely pardoned him, and given him his hand for aſſurance: Yet, by the inſtigation of Craterus, he falſified his Princely promiſe, and made the Enemies of Philotas his Judges. Craterus indeed perſwaded himſelf, that he could never find a better occaſion to oppreſs his private enemy, than by pretending Piety, and Duty to his Prince. Whence a Poet ſaith, Philotas accuſed.

See how theſe Great men cloath their private hate
In theſe fair colours of the publick good;
And to effect their ends, pretend the State,
As if the State by their affection ſtood:
And Arm'd with Power, and Princes Jealouſies,
Will put the leaſt conceit of diſcontent
Into the greateſt rank of Treacheries,
That no one action ſhall ſeem innocent.
Yea, Valour, Honour, Bounty ſhall be made
As acceſſaries unto ends unjuſt:
And even the ſervice of the State muſt lade
The needful'ſt undertaking with diſtruſt,
So that baſe vileneſs, idle Luxury,
Seem ſafer far than to do worthily.

Alexander's diſſimulation.

Now the King, following the advice of Craterus, had reſolved the next day to put Philotas to the Torment, yet in the very evening of the ſame night, in which he was apprehended, he called him to a Banquet, and diſcourſed as familiarly with him as at any other time. But, when in the dead of the night,

Phi-

Philotas was taken in his lodging, and that they which hated him, began to bind him, he cried out upon the King, in theſe words: O Alexander, the malice of mine enemies hath ſurmounted thy mercy, and their hatred is far more conſtant than the word of a King. Many circumſtances were urged againſt him by Alexander himſelf; and this was not the leaſt (not the leaſt offence indeed againſt the Kings humour, who deſired to be adored as a God) that when Alexander wrote unto him concerning the Title given him by Jupiter Hammon, he anſwered, That he could not but rejoyce that he was admitted into the Sacred fellowſhip of the Gods, and yet he could not but withall grieve for thoſe which ſhould live under ſuch a one as would exceed the nature of man. This, ſaid Alexander, aſſured me that his heart was eſtranged, and that he deſpiſed my Glory.

Philotas was brought before the multitude, to hear the Kings Oration againſt him. He was brought forth in vile Garments, and bound like a Thief, where he heard himſelf, and his abſent Father, the greateſt Captain in the World, accuſed, and alſo his two other Brothers, Hector and Nicanor, who had loſt their lives in theſe Wars; wherewith he was ſo overcome with grief, that, for a while, he could utter nothing for tears; and ſorrow had ſo waſted his Spirits, that he ſank between thoſe that led him. In the end, the King asked him, in what Language he would make his defence? He anſwered, In the ſame wherein it had pleaſed the King to accuſe him: which accordingly he did, to the end that the Perſians as well as the Macedonians might underſtand him. But hereof the King made this advantage, perſwading the Aſſembly, that he diſdained the Language of his own Countrey, and ſo withdrawing himſelf, he left him to his mercileſs enemies. Philotas accuſed by the King.

This proceeding of the Kings, Philotas greatly lamented, ſeeing the King, who had ſo ſharply inveighed againſt him, would not vouchſafe to hear his anſwer. For hereby his enemies were emboldned againſt him, and all the reſt, having diſcovered the Kings mind and reſolution, contended amongſt themſelves, which of them ſhould ſhew the greateſt hatred towards him. Amongſt many Arguments which he brought for his own defence, this was not the leaſt, that when Nicomachus deſired to know of Dimnus, of what quality and power his partners in the Conſpiracy were, ſeeming unwilling to adventure himſelf amongſt mean and baſe Companions, Dimnus named unto him Demetrius, of the Kings Bed-Chamber, Nicanor, Amyntas, and ſome others, but ſpake not a word of Philotas, who, being Maſter of the Horſe, would greatly have graced the cauſe, and encouraged Nicomachus. And to make it more clear that he knew nothing of their intents, there was not any one of the Conſpirators that in their torments would accuſe him. Yet at the laſt, himſelf being put to extream torments, by the device of his profeſſed enemies, Craterus, Cenus, Epheſtion, and others, Philotas accuſed himſelf, hoping that they would have ſlain him immediately: But he failed even in that miſerable hope, and ſuffering all that could be inflicted on fleſh and blood, he was forced to confeſs, not what was true, but what might beſt pleaſe them, who were far more mercileſs than Death it ſelf. Cruelty is not a humane vice: It is unworthy of man: It's even a boaſting rage to delight in blood and wounds, and caſting away the nature of man, to become a ſavage Monſter. Philotas condemned and tortured to death.

Now whilſt Alexanders hands were yet died in blood, he commanded that Lynceſtes, Son in Law to Antipater, who had been three years in Priſon, ſhould be ſlain. The ſame diſpatch had all thoſe that were accuſed by Nicomachus. But Parmenio was yet living. Parmenio, who had ſerved with great fidelity, as well Philip, the Kings Father, as himſelf. Parmenio that firſt opened Alexanders way into Aſia: That had caſt down Attalus the Alexanders cruelty.

Kings

Kings enemy: That had alwayes, and in all hazards, the leading of the Kings Vaunt-guard: That was no leſs prudent in Counſel, than ſucceſsful in all his enterprizes. A man, beloved of the men of War, and to ſay the truth, he that had purchaſed for the King the Empire of the Eaſt, and of all the Glory and Fame which he had attained to. That he might not therefore revenge the Death of his Son, though not upon the King (for it was unlikely that he would have ſtained his fidelity in his old age, having now lived ſeventy years) yet upon thoſe who by baſe Flattery had poſſeſſed themſelves of the Kings affection; It was reſolved that he ſhould dye alſo: and Polydamus was employed in this buſineſs, a man, whom of all others, Parmenio truſted moſt, and loved beſt. Who (to be ſhort) finding him in Media, and having Cleander, and other Murtherers with him, ſlew him as he was walking in his Garden, and reading the Kings letters. This was the end of Parmenio (ſaith Curtius) who had performed many notable things without the King; but the King without him did never effect any thing worthy of Praiſe.

Parmenio murthered.

Alexander marches forward.

These things being ended, Alexander marched on with his Army, and ſubdued the Araſpitans, and made Amenides (ſometime ſecretary to Darius) their Governour. Then he Conquered the Arachoſians, and left Menon to command over them. Here the Army (that was ſometime led by Parmenio) found him, which conſiſted of twelve thouſand Macedonians and Greeks, with whom (though with much difficulty) he paſſed through ſome cold Regions. At length, he came to the foot of the Mountain Taurus, towards the Eaſt, where he built a city, which he honoured with his own Name, and peopled it with ſeven thouſand of his old Macedonians, worn out with age, and the travels of War. The Arians, who ſince he left them, were revolted, he again ſubdued, by the induſtry and valour of Caranus and Erigius: and now he reſolved to find out the new King Beſſus in Bactria; who hearing of his coming, prepared to paſs over the great River of Oxus, which divides Bactria from Sogdiana. Beſſus having now abandoned Bactria, Alexander made Artabazus Governour of it, and himſelf marching forward with his Army, they ſuffered great want of water, inſomuch as when they came to the River Oxus, there died more of them by immoderate drinking, than Alexander had loſt in any one Battel againſt the Perſians. He found upon the Banks of this great River, no manner of Timber, or other materials wherewith to make Bridges, or Boats, or Rafts, but was forced to ſew together Hides that covered his Carriages, and ſtuffing them with ſtraw, he was ſix dayes in paſſing over his Army after that manner, which Beſſus might eaſily have diſtreſſed, if he had dared but to look the Macedonians in the face. He had formerly complained of Darius for neglecting to defend the Banks of Tigris, and other Paſſes; and yet now, when this Traiterous ſlave had ſtiled himſelf a King, he durſt not perform any thing worthy of a ſlave: and therefore they that were neareſt to him, and whom he moſt truſted, to wit, Spicamenes, Dataphernes, Cantanes, and others, the Commanders of his Army, moved, both by the care of their own ſafety, and the remembrance of Beſſus his Treaſon and cruelty againſt Darius, bound him, as he had done his Maſter, only his chain was cloſed about his neck, like a Maſtiff Dog, and ſo they dragged him along to preſent him to Alexander.

Builds a City.

Wants water.

Beſſus taken.

In the mean time, Alexander was arrived at a certain Town inhabited by Greeks of Miletum, brought thither by Xerxes, when long before he returned out of Greece, whoſe children had now almoſt forgotten their Countrey Language. Theſe entertained him with great joy: but he moſt cruelly put them all to the Sword, and deſtroyed their City. At this place he received Beſſus, and having rewarded Spitamenes, and his Aſſociates, he delivered the Traitor

Alexanders cruelty.

Traitor into the hands of Oxatre, Brother to Darius, to be tormented by him. Beſſus ſlain.

But now when he thought himſelf moſt ſecure, and out of danger, ſome twenty thouſand Mountainers aſſaulted his Camp, in repelling whom, he received a ſhot in his leg, the Arrow head ſticking in the fleſh, ſo that he was fain to be carried in a Horſe-Litter for ſome time after. He is wounded.

Shortly after he came unto Maracanda, judged by ſome to be the ſame with Samarcand, the Imperial City of the Great Tamerlain, which was in compaſs ſeventy furlongs. Here he received the Ambaſſadors of the Scythians (called Avians) who offered to ſerve him.

Preſently after, the Bactrians, with the Sogdians, were again ſtirred up to Rebellion, by the ſame Spitamenes, and Catanes, who had lately delivered Beſſus into Alexanders hands. Many Cities were ſtoutly defended againſt him, all which, after he had ſubdued them, he utterly defaced, killing all therein. At the Siege of one of theſe he received a blow in the neck, which ſtruck him to the ground, and diſabled him from action many dayes after: In the mean while, Spitamenes had recovered Samarcand, againſt whom he ſent Menedemus, with three thouſand Foot, and eight hundred Horſemen. He is wounded again.

In the heat of theſe affairs, Alexander marched to the River Jaxartes, that runs between Sogdiana and Scythia, which he paſſed over, while Menedemus was employed in the recovery of Samarcand. Upon the Banks of this River he built another Alexandria, ſixty furlongs in compaſs, which he beautified with Houſes ſeventeen dayes after the walls were built: But the Scythian King, perſwading himſelf that this City was built on purpoſe to keep him under, made ſome attempts to hinder the erection of this new City; but being naked of defenſive Arms, he was eaſily beaten away. Sixty of the Macedonians are ſaid to be ſlain in this conflict, and eleven hundred wounded, which might eaſily be done in paſſing a great River, defended againſt them by good Archers. Of the Scythian Horſes, eighteen hundred were brought into the Camp, and many Priſoners. He builds a City.

Whilſt Alexander was ſecuring himſelf againſt thoſe Scythians, bordering upon Jaxartes, he received the ill news that Menedemus was ſlain by Spitamenes, his Army broken, and moſt of them killed; to wit, two thouſand Foot, and three hundred Horſe. He therefore, intending revenge upon Spitamenes, made all the haſte he could, but Spitamenes fled into Bactria. Whereupon Alexander killed, burned, and laid waſte all before him, not ſparing the innocent Children, and ſo departed, leaving a new Governour in that Province. Menedemus ſlain.

To repair this loſs, he received a great ſupply of nineteen thouſand men out of Greece, Lycia, and Syria, with all which, and his old Army, he returned towards the South, and paſſed the River of Oxus on the South-ſide whereof he built ſix Towns, near each to other, for their mutual ſecurity. But he found a new upſtart Rebell, one Arimazes, (a Sogdian) who was followed by thirty thouſand Souldiers, that defended againſt him a ſtrong piece of ground on the top of an High and ſteep Hill. Alexander ſought (but in vain) to win him with fair words: wherefore he made choice of three hundred young men, and promiſed ten Talents to the firſt, nine to the ſecond, and ſo proportionably to the reſt, that could find a way to creep to the top thereof. This they performed with the loſs of thirty two of their number, and then made a ſign to Alexander that they had accompliſhed his Commandment. Hereupon he ſent one Cophes to perſwade Arimazes to yield up the place; who, being ſhewed by Cophes A Rebellion.

that the Macedonians were already gotten up, he yielded ſimply to Alexanders mercy, and was, with all his Kindred, ſcourged, and crucified: which puniſhment they well deſerved, for keeping no better a watch in ſo dangerous a time. For the place might have been defended againſt any power.

Clytus ſlain.

After theſe Sogdian and Scythian Wars, Alexander committed the Government of Samarcand, and the Country about it, to Clytus, whom yet he ſlew ſoon after, for preferring the Virtue of Philip the Father, before that of Alexander the Son; or rather, becauſe he objected to the King the Death of Parmenio, and derided the Oracle of Hammon: for therein he touched him to the quick; his Speech being in publick, and at a drunken Banquet. Clytus, indeed, had deſerved as much at the Kings hand as any man living, having ſaved his life; which the King well remembred, when he came to himſelf, and when it was too late to repent. As Clytus in his Cups, forgat whom he offended, ſo Alexander in his drunkenneſs forgat whom he ſlew; for grief whereof, he afterward tore his Face, and ſorrowed ſo inordinately, that had he not been over-perſwaded by Caliſthenes, he would have ſlain himſelf. Drunkenneſs both kindles and diſcovers every vice: It removes ſhame, which gives impediment to bad attempts. Where Wine gets the Maſtery, all the evil which before lay hidden, breaks out. Drunkenneſs indeed rather diſcovers vices than makes them.

The effect of Drunkenneſs.

Soon after this, Spitamenes, who ſlew Beſſus, and had lately revolted from Alexander, was murthered by his own Wife, and his Head was preſented to Alexander. Spitamenes being thus taken away, the Dahans alſo ſeized upon his fellow Conſpirator, Dataphernes, and delivered him up: So that Alexander being now freed from all thoſe petty Rebels, and diſpoſed of the Provinces that he had quieted, marched on with his Army into Gabaza, where it ſuffered ſo much Hunger, Cold, Lightning, Thunder, and ſuch Storms, that in one of them he loſt a thouſand men. From hence he invaded the Sacans, and deſtroyed their Country. Then came he into the Territories of Cohortanes, who ſubmitted himſelf to him, and preſented him with thirty beautiful Virgins; amongſt whom, Roxane, afterwards his Wife, was one; which, although all the Macedonians ſtomached, yet none of them durſt uſe any freedome of ſpeech after the death of Clytus. From hence he directed his courſe towards India, having ſo increaſed his numbers, as amounted to one hundred and twenty thouſand Armed men.

Dreadful ſtorms.

His Ambition. Caliſthenes ſpeaks againſt it.

In the mean while, he would needs be honoured as a God, whereunto, that he might allure his Macedonians, he implyed two of his Paraſites, Hagis and Cleo, whom Caliſthenes oppoſed. For amongſt many other honeſt Arguments which he uſed in the Aſſembly, he told Cleo, that he thought that Alexander would diſdain the Title of a God from his Vaſſals: That the opinion of Sanctity, though it did ſometimes follow the Death of thoſe, who in their Life-time had done the greateſt things, yet it never accompanied any one as yet living in the world: He ſaid, that neither Hercules, nor Bacchus, were Deified at a Banquet, and upon drink, (for this matter was propounded by Cleo at a carouſing Feaſt) but for the more than manly acts performed by them in their Life-time, for which they were in ſucceeding Ages numbred amongſt the Gods. Alexander ſtood behind a partition, and heard all that was ſpoken, waiting but for an opportunity to be revenged on Caliſthenes, who, being free of ſpeech, Honeſt, Learned, and a Lover of the Kings Honour, was yet ſhortly after tormented to Death. For upon occaſion of a Conſpiracy made againſt the King, by one Hermelaus, and others, who confeſſed it, he cauſed Caliſthenes, without confeſſion, accuſation, or tryal to be torn aſunder upon the Rack.

And is tormented to Death.

This

This deed, unworthy of a King, is thus cenſured by Seneca. Thus (ſaith he) is the eternal crime of Alexander, which no Virtue, or felicity of his in war, ſhall ever be able to blot out. For as often as any man ſhall ſay, He ſlew many thouſands of Perſians, it will be replied, He did ſo, and he ſlew Caliſthenes too. When it ſhall be ſaid that he won all as far as to the very Ocean, whereon alſo he adventured with unuſual Navies, and extended his Empire from a corner of Thrace, to the utmoſt bounds of the Eaſt; it ſhall be ſaid withall; But he killed Caliſthenes. Let him have out-gone all the ancient Examples of Captains and Kings, none of all his Acts make ſo much to his Glory, as the Death of Caliſthenes to his reproach.

With the Army before mentioned, of one hundred and twenty thouſand Foot and Horſe, Alexander entred into the borders of India, where, ſuch of the Princes as ſubmitted themſelves to him, he entertained lovingly, the others he enforced, killing man, woman, and child, where they reſiſted. He then came before Niſa, built by Bacchus, which, after a few dayes, was rendred to him. From thence he removed to a Hill at hand, which on the top had goodly Gardens, filled with delicate fruits and Vines, dedicated to Bacchus, to whom he made Feaſts for ten dayes together. And when he had drank his fill, went on to Dedula, and from thence to Acadera, Countries ſpoiled, and abandoned by the Inhabitants; by reaſon whereof, Victuals failing, he divided his Army. Ptolomy led one part, Cenon another, and himſelf the reſt. Theſe took in many Towns, whereof, that of greateſt fame was Muzage, which had in it three hundred thouſand men, but after ſome reſiſtance, it was yielded to him by Cleophe the Queen, to whom he again reſtored it. At the Siege of this City he received a wound in the leg.

He marches into India.

His Feaſts to Bacchus.

He conquers many Countries.

After this, Nola was taken by Poliſperchon; and a Rock of great ſtrength by Alexander himſelf: He won alſo a paſſage from one Eryx, who was ſlain by his own men, and his Head preſented to Alexander: This was the ſum of his Actions in thoſe parts, before he came to the great River Indus. And when he came thither, he found there Epheſtion, who (being ſent before) had prepared Boats for the tranſportation of his Army, and before Alexanders arrival, had prevailed with Omphis, King of that part of the Country, to ſubmit himſelf to this great Conquerour. And hereupon, ſoon after Alexanders coming, Omphis preſented himſelf, with all the ſtrength of his Country, and fifty ſix Elephants, unto him; offering him his ſervice and aſſiſtance: He told Alexander alſo, that he was an enemy to the two next great Kings of that part of India, named Abiaſares, and Porus; wherewith Alexander was not a little pleaſed, hoping by this their diſunion, to make his own Victory be the far more eaſie.

This Omphis alſo preſented Alexander with a Crown of Gold, the like did the reſt of his Commanders; and withall he gave him eight Talents of Silver, coined; which Alexander not only refuſed, but to ſhew that he coveted Glory, not Gold, he gave Omphis a thouſand Talents of his own Treaſure, beſides other Perſian rarities.

His Prodigality.

Abiaſares being informed that Alexander had received his enemy Omphis into his protection, he reſolved to make his own peace alſo. For, knowing that his own ſtrength did but equal that of Omphis, he thought it but an ill match, when Alexander, who had already ſubdued all the greateſt Princes of Aſia, ſhould make himſelf a party, and head of the quarrell. So then now Alexander had none to ſtand in his way, but Porus, to whom he ſent a command, that he ſhould attend him at the Borders of his Kingdom, there to do him Homage: But the gallant Porus returned him this manly anſwer: That he would ſatisfie him in the firſt demand, which was, to attend him on his Borders, and that well accompanied; but for any other acknowledgment, he was reſolved to take counſel of his Sword. To be ſhort, Alexander reſolved to paſs over the River of Hydaſpes, and to find out Porus at his own home: But Porus ſaved him that labour, attending him on the farther bank, with thirty thouſand Foot, ninety Elephants, and three hundred armed Chariots, and a great Troop of Horſe. The River was half a mile broad, and withal, deep and ſwift. It had in it many Iſlands, amongſt which there was one much overgrown with Wood, and of good capacity.

He ſends to Porus.

Alexander ſent Ptolomy, with a good part of the Army up the River, ſhrowding the reſt from the ſight of Porus under this Iſland, by this deviſe, Porus being drawn from the place of his firſt encamping, ſet himſelf down oppoſite to Ptolomy, ſuppoſing that the whole Army of Alexander was there, intending to force their paſſage: But in the mean while Alexander with his men, recovered the the farther ſhore without reſiſtance, and ordering his Troops, he advanced towards Porus, who at firſt imagined them to be Abiaſares his confederate, come over Hydaſpis to aſſiſt him: But finding it to be otherwiſe, he ſent his Brother Hagis with four thouſand Horſe, and a hundred armed Chariots to entertain him. Each Chariot had in it four to fight, and two to guide it: But they were at this time of little uſe, by reaſon that much rain having fallen, the fields were ſo foul that the Horſes could hardly trot.

A Battel.

In this fight the Scythians and Dahans had Alexanders Vantguard, who ſo galled the Indians with their Darts and Arrows, that the Horſes brake their reins, and overturned the Chariots, and thoſe that were in them. Perdiccas alſo charged the Indian Horſemen, who were by him forced to recoil. Then did Porus move forward with the Groſs of his Army, that his Vantguard, who were ſcattered, might retreat into his Rear. Alexander, being followed by Epheſtion, Ptolomy, and Perdiccas, charged the Indian Horſemen in the left wing, commanding Cenon to ſet upon the right. He directed alſo Antigonus and Leonatus to charge Porus his Battel of Foot, ſtrengthened with Elephants, Porus himſelf riding upon one of the biggeſt of them. By theſe Beaſts the Macedonian Foot received the greateſt dammage; but the Archers and Darters being well guarded with the long and ſtrong Pikes of the Macedonians, ſo galled them, that the Elephants being inraged, turned Head, and ran over their own Footmen that followed them. In the end, after a long and doubtful fight, by the advantage of weapons, and the skill and courage of the Macedonian Captains, the Victory fell to Alexander, who alſo far exceeded Porus in number of men. For, beſides the Macedonians, and other Eaſtern and Northern Nations, Alexander was aſſiſted by Porus his Confederates, and Country people: Yet, for his own perſon, he never gave ground, otherwiſe than with his Sword towards his enemies, till, being weakned by many wounds, and abandoned by his Army, he became a Priſoner to the Conquerour, from whom again he received his Kingdom, with a great enlargement.

Porus beaten.

He is reſtored to his Kingdom.

I forbear to mention other petty Victories which Alexander obtained after this, in his ſailing down the River of Indus. The deſcription of places about the Head, and branches thereof, are better known to us by reaſon of our late Navigations and Diſcoveries, than they were in former times. The magnificence and Rights of theſe Indian Kings, we could in no ſort be perſwaded to believe, till our own experience had taught us, that there are many ſtranger things in the world than we ſee in our own Countrey.

Alexander, having by this time over-wearied his Army, he diſcovered the reſt of India by Fame. The Indian Kings whom he had ſubdued, informed formed him, that a King called Aggramenes, ruled over many Nations beyond the River Ganges, who was able to bring into the Field two hundred thousand Foot, twenty thousand Horse, three thousand Elephants, and two thousand armed Chariots. With this report, though Alexander was more enflamed than ever, to proceed in his Discoveries and Conquests, yet all his Oratory could not prevail with his Souldiers to adventure over those waste Desarts beyond Indus and Ganges, which were more terrible to them, than the greatest Army that the East could gather. Yet at last they were overcome by many perswasions to follow him towards the South, to discover such parts of the Ocean as were nearer at hand, unto which the River Indus was their infallible guide.

His Policy.

Alexander seeing it would be no otherwise, devised a pretty trick, by which he hoped to beguile after-ages, and make himself seem greater than he was. For which end, he enlarged his Camp, made greater Trenches, greater Cabins for Souldiers, greater Horse-stalls, and higher Mangers than Horses could feed in. Yea, he caused all furniture both for Men and Horses, to be made larger than would serve for use, and scattered these Armours and Bridles about his Camp, to be kept as Reliques, and wondred at by those barbarous People. Proportionable unto these, he raised up twelve great Altars, to be Monuments of his Journeys end.

He builds two Cities.

This done, he returned again to the Banks of Asesines, and there determined to build his Fleet, where Ausines and Hydaspes meet; and to testifie by a surer Monument, how far he had passed towards the East, he built by those Rivers two Cities: the one he called Nicæa, and the other Bucephalon, after the name of his beloved Horse Bucephalus. Here again he received a new supply of six thousand Thracian Horse-men, seven thousand Foot, and from his Lieutenant of Babylon, twenty five thousand Armours, garnished with Silver and Gold, which he distributed amongst his Souldiers.

His Conquests.

About these Rivers he won many Towns, and committed great slaughter on those that resisted. It's said, that besieging a City of the Oxidracans, he leaped from the top of the wall into it, and fought long against all the Inhabitants, till his Souldiers, forcing a Gate, came in to his rescue. Finally, he passed down the River with his Fleet, at which time news was brought him of a Rebellion in Bactria, and then of the arrival of a hundred Ambassadours from a King in India, who submitted himself to him. These Ambassadours he Feasted upon a hundred Beds of Gold, with all the sumptuousness that could be devised; who, soon after their dispatch, returned again, and presented him with three hundred Horses, and one hundred and thirty Wagons, and in each of them four Horses, a thousand Targets, with many other things rare and rich.

He builds a City.

Then sailed Alexander towards the South, passing through many obscure Nations, which all yielded to him, either quietly, or by force: Amongst these, he built another Alexandria. Of the many places which he took in his passage, one was called Samus, the Inhabitants whereof fought against him with poysoned Swords; with one of which, Ptolomy (afterwards King of Egypt,) was wounded, and was cured by an Herb which Alexander dreamed he had seen in the mouth of a Serpent.

When he came near to the out-let of Indus, (being ignorant of the Tides of the Sea) his Gallies on a sudden were shuffled one against another, by the coming of the Flood, and in the Ebb, they were left on the dry ground, and on the Sandy banks in the River, wherewith the Macedonians were much amazed: But after he had a few dayes observed the course of the Sea, he passed out of the Rivers mouth some few miles, and then offering Sacrifice to Neptune, he returned; and the better to inform himself,

he

he ſent Nearchus and Oneſicritus to diſcover the Coaſt towards the mouth of Euphrates.

He wants food. Near the out-lets of this River, he ſpent ſome part of Winter, and from thence, in eighteen dayes march, he recovered Gredoſia, in which paſſage his Army ſuffered ſuch miſery through the want of food, that of one hundred and twenty thouſand Foot, and twelve thouſand Horſe, which he carried into India, not a fourth part returned alive.

His debauchedneſs. From Gredoſia, Alexander led his Army into Caramania, and ſo drawing near to Perſia, he gave himſelf wholly unto Feaſting and Drinking, imitating the Triumphs of Bacchus. And though this Swiniſh Vice be hateful enough in it ſelf; Yet it alwayes inflamed this King to cruelty. For (ſaith Curtius) the Hangman followed the Feaſt: For Haſpaſtes, one of his Provincial Governours, he commanded to be ſlain; ſo as, Neither did the exceſs of Voluptuouſneſs qualifie his Cruelty, nor his Cruelty at all hinder his Voluptuouſneſs.

While he refreſhed his Army in theſe parts, there came a new ſupply to him of five thouſand Foot, and a thouſand Horſe, which were conducted to him by Cleander and his Fellows, that had been employed in the murther of Parmenio.

He puniſhes his Officers. Againſt theſe murtherers great complaints were made by the Deputies of the Provinces, in which they had commanded; and their offences were proved to be ſo outragious, that Alexander was perſwaded, that, had they not altogether deſpaired of his return out of India, they durſt not have committed them. All men were glad of the occaſion, remembring the Virtue of him whom they had ſlain. The end was, that Cleander and the other chief, together with ſix hundred Souldiers, who had been the inſtruments of their ravages, were delivered over to the Hangman; every one rejoycing that the wrath of the King was at laſt poured out upon the Miniſters of his Anger.

Nearchus and Oneſicritus were now returned from ſearching the Coaſt, and made report of an Iſland they had diſcovered, rich in Gold, and of other ſtrange things; whereupon they were commanded to make ſome farther diſcovery, after which they ſhould come up Euphrates, and meet the King at Babylon.

He viſits the Sepulchre of Cyrus. Alexander drawing near to Babylon, went to viſit the Sepulchre of Cyrus in Peſagardes, where he was preſented with many rich Gifts by Orſanes, one of the Princes of Perſia, of the race of Cyrus. But becauſe Bagoas, an Eunuch, who was in ſpecial favour with the King, was neglected, he ſuborned ſome looſe fellows to accuſe Orſanes for robbing Cyrus his Tomb;

His cruelty. for which he was condemned to dye, and Bagoas aſſiſted the Hangman with his own hands to torment him. At this time alſo Alexander cauſed Phradites to be ſlain, ſuſpecting his greatneſs. Hence (ſaith Curtius) he began unreaſonably to ſhed blood, and to believe falſe reports. Indeed he took the way to make all men weary of him, and his Government, ſeeing Tyranny is more dreadful than all adventures that can be made againſt it.

Calanus burnt himſelf. About this time, Calanus the Philoſopher burnt himſelf, having lived ſeventy three years; and Hiſtorians ſay, that before his Death he foreſaw, and foreſhewed the Death of Alexander, promiſing to meet him ſhortly after at Babylon.

His Marriage and Feaſting. From Peſagardes, Alexander went to Suſa, where he married Statyra, the Eldeſt Daughter of Darius, giving her younger Siſter to his beloved Epheſtion, and eighty other Perſian Ladies to other of his Captains. To his Wedding Feaſt he invired ſix thouſand Gueſts, to each of which he gave a Cup of Gold.

Unto this place came to him three thouſand young Souldiers out of his Conquered Provinces, whereat the Macedonians greatly murmured. Harpalus, palus, his Treaſurer in Babylon, having laviſhly conſumed the money in his keeping, fled with five thouſand Talents, and ſix thouſand hired Souldiers; but when he came into Greece, he was there ſlain. Alexander much rejoyced at the fidelity of the Greeks, who would not be corrupted with Harpalus his Bribes: Yet he ſent a command to them, that they ſhould receive their baniſhed men again; whereunto they all for fear yielded, except the Athenians, though they ſaw that it was a manifeſt preparation to their bondage. Harpalus ſlain.

After this, there followed a marvellous diſcontent in his Army, becauſe he had reſolved to ſend into Macedonia all thoſe old Souldiers which could no longer endure the travell of the War, and to keep the reſt in Aſia. He made many Orations to ſatisfie them, but all his words were in vain, during the heigth of their fury; Yet, when their firſt paſſions were evaporated, they became more tractable. And with ſuch as were licenced to depart, he ſent Craterus, to whom he gave the Lieutenantſhip of Macedonia, Theſſaly, and Thrace, which Antipater had Governed from the time of Alexanders departure out of Europe, who (during that time) had ſubdued the rebellious Greeks, diſcharged the truſt committed to him with great fidelity, and ſent him from time to time ſo many ſtrong ſupplies into Aſia. His Army diſcontented. He ſends for Antipater.

Certainly, if Alexander had not taken counſel of his Cups, he would have caſt ſome better colour upon this alteration, and given Antipater ſome ſtronger reaſons of his remove, than to employ him in conducting a new ſupply of men to Babylon, the War being now at an end. For Antipater could make no other conſtruction of this remove, but that he had a purpoſe to ſend him after Parmenio, and the reſt. The truth is, the King, notwithſtanding his undauntedneſs, had no great mind to grapple with Antipater.

Alexander having thus ſent for Antipater, made a journey into Media, to ſettle things there, where Epheſtion, whom he loved and favoured above all others, died. The King greatly lamented his loſs, hanged the Phyſician that could not cure him, and built him a Monument that coſt twelve thouſand Talents. After which he returned to Babylon. Thither Antipater came not, but ſent, and that, not to excuſe, but to free himſelf; And if we may believe Curtius, he ſuborned his Sons, Caſſander, Philip, and Jolla, who were Alexanders Cup-bearers, to give him poyſon; Theſſalus (who was one of the conſpiracy) having invited him to a Drinking-Feaſt for that purpoſe. Others ſay, that by his inordinate drinking he fell into a Fever, whereof he died. Epheſtion dyes. Alexander dyes.

A little before his Death, his Friends about him asked him, to whom he would leave his Empire? He anſwered, To the moſt worthy man. Then asked they him, when they ſhould give him Divine Honours? He anſwered, When they themſelves were happy; which were the laſt words that he ſpake, and ſo he died, having lived not all out thirty three years, nor reigned thirteen. His Will.

As ſoon as he was Dead, his great Captains ſought to inrich themſelves by his Spoils, and whilſt they were ſharing the World amongſt themſelves, his dead Body lay many dayes in that hot Countrey unburied, ſtinking above ground: A notable emblem of the Vanity of all Earthly things. Beſides this, his vaſt Empire was divided amongſt his great Captains; To Ptolomaus Lagi was allotted Egypt and Africa; To Laomedon, Syria and Phœnicia; To Python, Media; To Eumenes, Paphlagonia and Cappadocia; To Antigonus, Pamphilia, Lycia, and Phrygia the Greater; To Caſſander, Caria; To Menander, Lydia; To Leonatus, Phrygia the leſs; To Lyſimachus, Thracia, with the neighbouring Countries; To Antipater, Macedonia, and the neighbouring Nations. But theſe men, not contented with their ſhares, fell out amongſt themſelves, The vanity of all earthly things. The confuſions after his death.

Gods Justice. ſelves, making War one upon another to their own deſtruction; For, Perdiccas, warring upon Egypt, was ſlain by his own Souldiers; Antipater died; Eumenes was betrayed by his own Souldiers, and ſlain by Antigonus; Olympias, the Mother of Alexander, was ſlain by Caſſander; Cleopatra, Siſter to Alexander, was ſlain by the treachery of Antigonus; Antigonus himſelf was ſlain in Battel by Caſſander and Lyſimachus; Roxane, the beloved Wife of Alexander, together with her Son Alexander, and Barſine, another of his Wives, which was Daughter to Darius, were all ſlain by Caſſander. And preſently after, the whole Family of Caſſander was rooted out; Ptolomy died in Egypt; Lyſimachus was ſlain by Seleuchus; and Seleuchus himſelf preſently after by Ptolomy. So that all the Family of Alexander, within a few years after his Death, was wholly extirpated; and all his Friends and great Captains, by their Ambition and mutual contentions, came moſt of them to untimely ends.

When the dead body of Alexander had lain ſeven dayes upon his Throne, at laſt the Chaldeans and Egyptians were commanded from thenceforth to take the care of it; But when they came about it, they durſt not at firſt approach to touch it: But anon after, ſaying their Prayers, that it might be no ſin unto them, being but mortals, to lay their hands upon ſo Divine a Body, they fell to work, and diſſected it; the Golden Throne whereon he lay, being all ſtuffed with Spices, and hung about with Pendants and Banners, and other Emblems of his high State and Honour.

The care of his Funeral, and of providing a Chariot wherein to carry his Body to the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, was committed to Aridæus, who ſpent two whole years in making proviſion for it; which made Olympias, his Mother, (ſeeing him lye ſo long unburied) in great grief of heart to cry out, and ſay, O my Son! Thou that wouldſt needs be accounted amongſt the Gods, and kepteſt ſuch adoe about it, canſt not now have that which every poor man hath, a little Earth, and Burial.

Long after, when Julius Cæſar had Conquered Pompey, and was idle in Egypt, Lucan tells us, that he viſited the Temples, and the Cave wherein the Body of Alexander the Great lay, In theſe Verſes;

—— Vultu ſemper celante timorem,
Intrepidus Superum ſedes, & Templa vetuſti Numinis, &c.

Then with a look ſtill hiding fear, goes he
The Stately Temple of th' old God to ſee,
Which ſpeaks the Ancient Macedonian greatneſs;
But there delighted with no Objects ſweetneſs,
Nor with their Gold, nor Gods Majeſtick dreſs,
Nor lofty City Walls; with greedineſs
Into the burying Vault goes Cæſar down,
Where Macedonian Philip's mad-brain'd Son,
The proſperous Thief, lies buried; Whom juſt Fate
Slew in the Worlds Revenge. ——

His character. Alexander was very Learned, and a great Lover of Learning, and Learned men, inſomuch as he rewarded his Maſter Ariſtotle with eighty Talents, for his Hiſtory of Living Creatures. He ſo prized Homers Iliads, that in all his Wars he carried it in his Pocket, and laid it under his Pillow a nights. He loved his Maſter Ariſtotle as if he had been his Father, and uſed to ſay, We have our being from our Parents, but our well-being from our School-Maſters.

His Mother Olympias was very ſevere and moroſe in her carriage; and once

Anti-

Antipater, his Vice-Roy in Europe, wrote large Letters of complaint to him, againſt her; to whom he returned this anſwer: Knowſt thou not that one little tear of my Mothers, will blot out a thouſand of thy Letters of complaint? When he heard the Philoſophers concluſion concerning the unity of the World, he wept, becauſe there were no more Worlds for him to Conquer but one. An evident note of his great Ambition: which alſo manifeſted it ſelf hereby; That when he came to the Tomb of Achilles, he fell a weeping, conſidering that Achilles had a Homer to ſing his Praiſes, and to perpetuate his memory, whereas he had no ſuch Poet to ſet forth his Commendations. Alſo he commanded, that no man ſhould draw his Picture, but Apelles, the moſt exquiſite Painter in the World, and that none ſhould make his Statue in Braſs but Lycippus, the moſt excellent Workman in that kind.

His love to his Mother.

His Ambition.

Alexander uſed to carry his Head on one ſide, inclining to the left, wherein his Court-Paraſites (to ingratiate themſelves with him) imitated him. One deſiring to ſee his Treaſures, and his Jewels, he bad his Servants ſhew him, not his Talents of Gold and Silver, and ſuch other precious things, but his Friends.

Flattery.

When he had overcome Darius, and gotten poſſeſſion of all his Dominions and Treaſures, he began to degenerate into the Aſian Luxury. His Chaſtity and Moderation were turned into Pride and Luſt. He judged his Country manners, and the Diſcipline of the former Macedonian Kings, too ſordid and mean for him. He imitated the Pride of the Perſian Kings, he made him a Crown, and Robes like unto Darius. He grew ſo proud and inſolent, that he ſuffered his Souldiers to fall down and worſhip him like a God. Yea, he commanded his Servants, and Slaves to do ſo. He cloathed his Captains and Horſe-men like unto the Perſians, which though they diſliked they durſt not refuſe. He gat him three hundred ſixty five Concubines, of the beautifulleſt Virgins that could be found in Aſia, after the manner of the Perſian Kings, one of which lay with him every night. He had his Troops of Eunuchs, with Muſicians, Jeſters, Singing women, &c. He ſpent whole days and nights in profuſe Feaſting, and Revelling. All which was very offenſive to his old Captains, and Souldiers.

He degenerated after his victories.

When he was a Boy, he took both his hands full of perfumes, and caſt them into the fire as he was Sacrificing, whereupon Leonidas, one of his School-Maſters ſaid to him: O Alexander, when thou haſt Conquered thoſe Countries wherein theſe odors grow, then thou maiſt be ſo liberal, but in the mean time be more ſparing. Afterwards, when he had conquered Arabia Fœlix, he ſent to Leonidas a hundred Tallents of Myrrhe, and five hundred of Frankincenſe, bidding him to be hereafter more liberal in his ſervice of the Gods.

He was of ſo bountiful a diſpoſition, that it was a greater trouble to him not to be asked than not to give. He wrote to Photian, that he would make uſe of his friendſhip no more if he refuſed his Gifts. Serapion, a young Boy that uſed to play at Ball with him, gat nothing becauſe he asked nothing; whereupon the next time he played, he threw the Ball to all but Alexander, the King marvelling at it, asked him why he threw not the Ball to him? Forſooth (ſaid Serapion) becauſe you asked it not. Alexander laughing at the jeſt, ſent him a liberal Gift.

His bounty.

As he was travelling through the Deſarts of Perſia, himſelf and his Army were in great ſtraits for want of water: One of his Souldiers having two Sons ready to dye of thirſt, ſought up and down, and at laſt found a little water, wherewith he filled a leather Bottel, and was running with it to his Sons: but meeting Alexander by the way, he filled it out into a diſh, and profered it to him. Alexander asked him, whither he was carrying it? the man told him that his two Sons were ready to die with thirſt: But (ſaid he) pray you Sir, do you drink it; For if my Sons die I can get more, but if you die we ſhall not have ſuch an other King. Alexander hearing this, gave him the water again, and bid him carry it to his Sons.

His Temperance. Alexander in his younger days was ſo moderate, and temperate, that he would often open his cheſts, and look upon his Garments, to ſee if his Mother had not provided him, either delicate or ſuperfluous Apparel.

Alſo when the Queen of Caria, to ſhew her great love to him, ſent him dayly variety of Diſhes and Dainties, and at laſt ſent her Cooks, and Bakers to him, he returned them back again, ſaying, That he had no need of their ſervice; for his Maſter Leonidas had provided him better Cooks, by teaching him to dine and ſup Frugally, and ſparingly. Alſo when he had any rare, and Dainty Fruits, or Fiſhes ſent him from the Sea, he uſed to diſtribute them amongſt his Friends, reſerving very little or none for his own uſe.

One craving a ſmall gift of him, he gave him a whole City, and when the Poor man ſaid, That it was too much for him to receive: Yea (ſaid Alexander) but not for me to give.

As he was advanceing to conquer a Kingdom in India, Taxilis, who was King thereof, came and met him, ſaying, O Alexander, What need we fight, if thou comeſt not to take away my food and water, for which its only fit for wiſe men to fight? If thou ſeekeſt after Riches, if I have more than thou, I will give thee part of mine: if thou haſt more than I, I will not refuſe part of thine. Alexander being much taken with his ſpeech, ſaid to him, Go to, I will contend with thee in bounty, and ſo they mutually gave and received many Gifts. At laſt Alexander gave him a thouſand Tallents, which much grieved his Friends, and rejoyced the Barbarian.

His Chaſtity. He ſhewed an admirable Example of his Chaſtity in the heat of his youth, when having taken the Mother, Wives, and Daughters of Darius, women of admirable beauty, yet, neither by word, nor deed did he profer them the leaſt indignity, thinking it a greater honour to overcome himſelf than his Adverſaries: And when he looked upon other Captive Ladies that excelled in ſtature and beauty, he merrily ſaid, Perſides oculorum dolores eſſe: That the Perſian women were a diſeaſe of the eyes, and yet he looked on them but as on ſo many Statues. When he was informed that two of his Captains under Permenio, had raviſhed two of the Perſian Ladies, he wrote to him to enquire after the matter, and if he found it true, he ſhould cut off their Heads, as of Beaſts born for the hurt of mankind. He alſo ſent him word, that himſelf was ſo far from contemplating the Beauty of Darius his Wife, that he would not ſo much as ſuffer her to be commended in his preſence; and that he was ſo careful of their Chaſtity, that they lived in his Camp, ſhut up in their Tent, as if they had been in a Temple.

At the Death of Epheſtion, his Favorite, he did not only clip the Haire of his Horſes, and Mules, but plucked down alſo the Battlements of the City walls, that they might ſeem to mourn for his Minions Death, ſhewing now deformity inſtead of their former Beauty.

Porus, an Indian King, fighting valiantly againſt him, receiving many wounds, and at laſt, being overcome, and falling into his enemies hands, they brought him to Alexander, who hearing of his coming, went forth, with ſome of his Friends, to meet him, and asked him what he would have him to do for him, Porus anſwered, My only deſire is, that thou uſe me like a King: Alexander, admiring his magnanimity, replyed, This I will will do for my own ſake: but what wouldeſt thou have me do for thine? Porus anſwered, That all was contained in his former demand of Kingly uſage: Alexander was ſo pleaſed with this, that he reſtored him to his Kingdom, and gave him another bigger than his own.

Alexander the Great (ſaith Plutarch) built ſeventy Cities. He brought many barbarous Nations to civility. He taught the People Hircani the uſe of Marriage: and the Arachoſians, Tillage and Husbandry: The Sogdians, that they ſhould nouriſh and cheriſh their aged Parents, and not kill them: The Perſians, to honour their Mothers, and not to uſe them for their Wives: The Scythians, that they ſhould not eat their Dead, but bury them in the Earth, &c.

His Clemency to thoſe whom he conquered, was very exemplary. The ſame day that he took, he reſtored again the Kingdom to Porus King of India. Darius his Mother he entertained honourably, as a Queen. Darius his Wife, and beautiful Daughters, he would not ſo much as ſee, as careful to preſerve their Chaſtity.

His Liberality and Magnificence exceeded all his other Virtues. He gave at one time three and twenty thouſand Talents among his Souldiers, to pay their Debts. At his Marriage, he invited ten thouſand Gueſts, and gave to every one of them a Cup of Gold. To one that asked ſomething of him, he gave a City; and when the Party would have refuſed it, as too great a Gift for him, Alexander ſaid, Non quæro quid te decet accipere, ſed quid me decet dare: I regard not what is meet for thee to take, but what is meet for me to give. Whereupon Plutarch ſaith, that thoſe Virtues for the which ſeverally ſundry worthy men have been commended, did all concur and meet in him: As the Valour of Achilles: the Chaſtity of Agamemnon: the Piety of Diomedes: the Courage of Cyrus: the Policy of Themiſtocles: the Boldneſs of Braſſida: And the Prudence of his Father Philip.

His Military Virtues were remarkable: As, his Courage, in that with thirty thouſand Footmen, and five thouſand Horſemen (for he had no more when he firſt paſſed over into Aſia) he durſt bid defiance to all the World. His Patience, in enduring Hunger and Thirſt, Heat and Cold. His dexterity, and celerity, in omitting no opportunity of advantage to his affairs, ſo that in ſeven years he accompliſhed all his great Conqueſts: And to theſe may be added, his ſingular ſucceſs; For he never beſieged any City, but he took it.

But after he had glutted himſelf with the Pleaſures of Aſia, the Vices that he fell into were not inferiour to his afore-named Virtues. Among the reſt, theſe four notable Vices were apparent in him. Firſt, Drunkenneſs: for he would drink ſo exceſſively, that he would lie two or three dayes ſenſeleſs, till he had ſlept out his Drink. Secondly, In his Drunkenneſs he was cruel and outragious: In one of thoſe fits he ſlew his dear Friend Clitus, whoſe loſs he greatly bewailed afterwards. Thirdly, He was much given to Wantonneſs, and Fleſhly Luſts. Fourthly, At length he grew ſo intolerably Proud, that he would needs be accounted the Son of Jupiter, and commanded Caliſthenes (one of his great Commanders,) to be ſlain, becauſe he would not worſhip him.

He accounted Achilles happy, becauſe he had ſuch a man as Homer to ſet forth his Praiſes: But himſelf had many worthy men to Regiſter his Acts; As Ptolomy, King of Egypt: Hecataeus: Ariſtobulus: Caliſthenes: Oneſicratus: Diodorus Siculus: Trogus Pompeius: Juſtin: Quintus Curtius: with divers others.

Lycippus the Painter, made Alexanders Picture looking up to Heaven, with this Motto, Jupiter, aſſerui Terram mihi, tu aſſere Cœlum.

O Jupiter, I have taken the Earth to my ſelf; Take thou Heaven: with which Alexander was ſo well pleaſed, that he publiſhed a Proclamation, that none ſhould draw his Picture but Lycippus.

Apelles drew Alexander's Picture with a Thunderbolt in his hand, to ſhew his admirable celerity, and unreſiſtableneſs in his Conqueſts.

This bloudy man lived not out half his Dayes, and not long after his Death all his Poſterity was rooted out.

His Poſterity and Kindred that he left behind him, were; his Mother Olympias; his Unkle Pyrrhus, King of Epirus: His Brother Arideus, and his Siſter Cleopatra: His two Wives, with their two Sons; Roxane with Alexander, and Burſines with Hercules. Olympias cauſed Arideus to be killed: Caſſander thereupon took occaſion to put Olympias to death, being almoſt fourſcore years old: and then he poyſoned both Alexanders Sons, [Alexander and Hercules] with Roxane Alexanders Wife. Cleopatra, Alexanders Siſter, the Governour of the Sardians, who was baſe Brother to Philip, Alexanders Father, procured her to be killed, therein thinking to gratifie Antigonus: And laſt of all, Pyrrhus was vanquiſhed by Antigonus, the Son of Demetrius, by whom his Head was cut off.

THE

THE LIFE and DEATH OF EPAMINONDAS, THE GREAT CAPTAIN OF THE THEBANS.

HE Father of Epaminondas was Polymnis, who was descended of one of the most ancient, and renowned Families amongst the Thebans, the most part of which Noble linage had upon their Bodies for a natural Birth-mark, the resemblance of a Snake. This Polymnis had two only Sons, Caphisias, and Epaminondas, whom he educated very carefully, ~~and had them very carefully~~, and had them very well instructed in all the liberal Arts, and honest Sciences: especially Epaminondas, who had the more stayed wit, and was most inclined to Virtue, desirous to learn, humble, obedient, and wonderful docible: and of one Dyonisius he learned to be very skilful in Singing, and Musick. And for Philosophy it happened well for him that he fell into an excellent Masters hands by this means.

His Parentage. Education.

His Parts.

The Colleges of the Pythagorian Phylosophers that were dispersed through the Cities of Italy, were banished by the faction of the Cylonians, yet such as still kept together, met in a Councel at Metapont to consider of their affairs: But some seditious Persons rose up against them, and set the House wherein they were on fire, and burnt them all; only Phylolaus and Lysis, being lusty young men, escaped through the fire. Phylolaus fled into the Country of the Lucanians, and resided there with his Friends: But Lysis got to Thebes, where Polymnis intertained him, intreating him to undertake the Tuition of his Son, Epaminondas, who, though he was but a young Boy, yet was he of good capacity, and of very good Hopes. This Phylosopher accord-accordingly applied himſelf to manure this noble and quick wit of Epaminondas, and in a ſhort time made him perfect in all Sciences and Virtue, ſo that it was hard to find a more wiſe, grave, and virtuous Perſon than he was.

He exerciſes and ſtudies.

When he was but fifteen years of age, he gave himſelf to all manner of exerciſes of the Body, as to run, wreſtle, uſe his Weapons, and all feats of Arms: and having quickly attained to skill in theſe, he applied himſelf to his Book. He was naturally ſilent, fearful to ſpeak, but never a weary to hear and learn; whereupon Spintharus, the Tarentine, being familiarly acquainted with him in Thebes, uſed to ſay, that he never knew any man that knew ſo much, and ſpake ſo little as Epaminondas. If he fell into any company that diſcourſed of Philoſophy, or of State matters, he would never leave them, till the matter propounded was at an end. He was of a pleaſant diſpoſition, and ſo witty that he could break a jeſt as well as any man.

His Diſcourſe with a Philoſopher.

Lyſis after he had lived long in Thebes, died, and was honourably buried by his Scholar Epaminondas. Not long after, Theanor, one of the Pythagorians in Sicily, was ſent to bring Lyſis thither, but when he came to Thebes, he found him dead and buried, therefore going to Epaminondas, after ſalutations, he told him that his Companions, who were rich, willed him to give Polymnis, and his Chidren, a good ſum of mony in recompence of that curteous entertainment which they had given to Lyſis: Epaminondas, after pleaſant excuſes made, told him that none could be received, ſaying further, Jaſon, a Captain of the Theſſalians thought that I gave him a rude and uncivil anſwer, when he, having earneſtly entreated me to receive a good ſum of Gold, I ſent him word that he did me wrong, and began to make War with me: for that he, aſpiring to make himſelf a Lord, would corrupt me with mony, who am a plain Citizen of a free Town, and living under the Law. But for thee Theanor, I commend thy good will, becauſe its honeſt and virtuous, but I tell thee thou bringeſt Phyſick to them that are not ſick. Admit that thou, hearing we had been in Wars, hadſt brought us Arms to defend us, and when on the contrary thou hadſt found us quiet, and at peace with all our neighbours, thou wouldſt not have thought fit to beſtow theſe Arms, and leave them with thoſe that had no need of them. Even ſo, thou art come to relieve our poverty as though it were a burden to us, whereas on the contrary, its an eaſie and pleaſant thing to us to carry, and we are glad we have it in our Houſes amongſt us, and therefore we have no need of Arms, or mony againſt that which doth us no hurt at all. But tell thy brethren that they uſe their goods very honeſtly: and alſo that they have Friends here which uſe their Poverty as well: and as for the intertainment, and burial of Lyſis, he hath himſelf fully recompenced us, having taught us, amongſt many other good leſſons, not to be afraid of Poverty, nor to be grieved to ſee it amongſt us. Theanor having made ſome reply about the good and evil of Riches, and told him that as Poverty was not evil in it ſelf, ſo neither was Riches to be had in contempt and diſpiſed: No truly (ſaid Epaminondas) yet conſidering with my ſelf that we have a World of covetous deſires, ſome natural that are born with us, and bred in our fleſh by the luſts pertaining to it: Others ſtrange to us, grounded upon vain opinions, which taking ſetling, and becoming an habit in us by tract of time, and long uſe through evil education, oftentimes do draw us down, and weigh our Souls with more force and violence, than thoſe that be connatural to us. For reaſon, through daily exerciſe of virtue, and practice thereof, is a means to free us from many of thoſe things that are born, and bred with us. Yet we muſt uſe continual force and oppoſition againſt our concupiſcences which are ſtrangers to us, to quench them, and by all poſſible means to repreſs, and ſubdue them in us.

to

And when this is done, there is alſo (ſaid he) an exerciſe of juſtice againſt greedy Covetouſneſs, and a deſire of getting, which is not, not to go rob our Neighbours Houſes, nor, not to rob men by the High Way, nor not to betray our Friends, or Country for Mony: for ſuch an one oppoſeth, not covetouſneſs, bnt poſſibility, its Law, or fear that bridleth his covetous deſire to offend: But that man that oftimes willingly abſtains from juſt gains, he it is that by exerciſe keeps himſelf far from unjuſt, and unlawful taking of mony. For it is impoſſible in great pleaſures that are wicked and dangerous, the Soul ſhould contain it ſelf from luſting after them, unleſs formerly, being oft at his choiſe to uſe them, he had contemned them. Its not eaſie to overcome them, nor to refuſe great Riches when they are offered, unleſs a man long before hath killed in him this covetous deſire of getting, the which, beſides many other habits and actions, is ſtill greedily bent ſhamefully to gain, pleaſing himſelf in the purſuit of Injuſtice, hardly forbearing to wrong an other ſo he may benefit himſelf. But that man that diſdaines to receive gifts from his Friends, and refuſeth Preſents offered him by Kings, and that hath rejected the bounty of Fortune, putting by all covetous deſires of gliſtering Treaſures laid before him, he ſhall never be tempted to do that which is unjuſt, nor ſhall his mind be troubled, but he will content himſelf quietly to do any thing that is honeſt, having an upright heart, finding nothing in it but that which is good and commendable. Yet was the Life of Epaminondas far more excellent than his diſcourſe, as will appear by that which follows.

Diomedon, the Cizicenian, at the requeſt of Artaxerxes, King of Perſia, promiſed to win Epaminondas to take the Perſians part. To effect this, he came to Thebes, and brought a great maſs of Gold with him, and with three Thouſand Crowns of it, he bribed a young man called Mycethus, who was greatly beloved by Epaminondas. This young man went to him and told him the occaſion of the other mans coming to Thebes: But Diomedon being preſent, Epaminondas ſaid to him, I have no need of mony: If the King of Perſia wiſh well to the Thebans, I am at his ſervice without taking one penny: If he hath any other meaning, he hath not Gold nor Silver enongh wherewith to corrupt me: For I will not ſell the love which I bear to my Country for all the Gold in the World: and as for thee that doſt now tempt me, not knowing me, but judging me like unto thy ſelf, I pardon thee for this time, but get thee quickly out of the City leſt thou corrupt others, having failed to prevail over me: and for thee Mycethus, deliver him his mony again, which if thou doſt not preſently, I will ſend thee before a Juſtice. His contempt of Riches.

Hereupon Diomedon beſought him that he would let him go away in ſafety, and carry that with him which he brought thither: Yea (ſaid Epaminondas) but it ſhall not be for thy ſake, but for my honour-ſake, leſt thy Gold and Silver being taken from thee, ſome man ſhould accuſe me that I had a ſhare in that privately which I had refuſed openly. Saying further, whither wouldſt thou that I ſhould cauſe thee to be conveyed? To Athens, ſaid Diomedon: This was done accordingly, and he had a ſtrong convoy ſent with him, and that he might not be troubled by the way, betwixt the Gates of Thebes and the Haven wherein he was to imbark himſelf, Epaminondas gave Chabrias the Athenian charge of him, that he ſhould ſee him ſafe at his journeys end.

Though Epaminondas was very Poor, yet would he never take any thing of his Citizens or Friends: and being ſo inured to poverty, he was enabled to bear it the more patiently by his ſtudy of Philoſophy. For on a time, His Poverty.

time, having the leading of an Army of the Thebans into the Country of Peloponneſus, he borrowed five Crowns of a Citizen for the defraying of his neceſſary charges in that Journey. Pelopidas being a man of great wealth and his very good Friend, could never poſſibly force upon him any part of his Goods, but he rather learned of him to love poverty. For Epaminondas taught him to think it an honour to go plainly in his Apparrel, to eat moderately, to take pains willingly, and in War to fight luſtily. Yet when he had occaſion to relieve others, he would make bold with his Friends goods, which in ſuch caſes were common to him. If any of his Citizens
His Charity. were taken Priſoners by the Enemy, or if any Friend of his had a Daughter to be married, and was not able to beſtow her, he uſed to call his Friends together, and to aſſeſs every one of them at a certain ſum, after which he brought him before them who was to receive the mony, and told him how much every one had beſtowed upon him, that he might return thanks to them all.

But once he went far beyond this: For he ſent a poor Friend of his to a Rich Citizen of Thebes to ask of him ſix hundred Crowns, and to tell him that Epaminondas deſired him to let him have them. The Citizen being amazed at his demand, went to Epaminondas to know what he meant to charge him ſo deeply, as to make him to give ſix hundred Crowns to the other? It is (ſaid Epaminondas) becauſe this man, being an honeſt man, is poor, and thou who haſt robbed the Commonwealth of much, art rich.

His Sobriety. He lived ſo ſoberly, and was ſuch an enemy to all ſuperfluity and exceſs, that being on a time invited to Supper to one of his Neighbours, when he ſaw great preparation of dainty meats, made diſhes, and perfumes, he ſaid unto him, I thought thou hadſt made a Sacrifice by this exceſs and ſuperfluity, and ſo immediatly went his way. The like alſo he ſpake of his own Table, ſaying, that ſuch an Ordinary, was never guilty of Traitors, and Treaſon. On a time being at a Feaſt with ſome of his Companions, he drank Vinegar, and when they asked him what he meant by it, and whether he drank it for his health or no? I know not (ſaid he) but this I am ſure of, it puts me in remembrance how I live at home. Now it was not that his ſtomach was an enemy to dainty meats, or that he lived ſo penuriouſly at home, for he was marvelous noble minded: But he did it, that by his ſtrict and unreprovable life, he might bridle and reſtrain many inſolencies and diſorders which then raigned amongſt the Thebans, and to reduce them to the former temperance of their Anceſtors.

Upon a time, a Cook giving up an account to him and his Fellows of their ordinary expences for certain days, he could find fault with nothing but the quantity of Oyl that was ſpent: which his Companions marvelling at; Tuſh (ſaid he) it is not the expence which offends me, but becauſe we have poured in ſo much Oyl into our Bodies. The City of Thebes upon an occaſion made a publick Feaſt, where they were very merry, and jolly: But on the contrary, Epaminondas went up and down without Oyl and perfumes, or decked with brave apparel, ſeeming very ſad: Some of his Familiar Friends meeting him in this Poſture, and wondering at him, asked him why he walked ſo alone, and ill apparelled through the City? Becauſe (ſaid His Vigilance. he) you may in the mean time freely and ſafely drink your ſelves drunk, and make merry, taking thought for nothing.

His Modeſty alſo was ſuch, that it would in no wiſe ſuffer him to ſeek advancement, but on the contrary he withdrew himſelf from Government, that he might with the more quiet apply himſelf to the ſtudy of Philoſophy. It happened upon a time that the Lacedemonians intreated aid of the the Thebans, who at that time were in League with them, and accordingly they ſent them certain Foot Companies: at which time Epaminondas being about thirty five years old, Armed himſelf and went along with them. At this time it was, that that intimate Friendſhip began betwixt Pelopidas and him, which continued even to the end of their lives. Theſe two being in a Battel the one by the other againſt the Arcatians, whom they had in front againſt them in the plains of Mantinea, it fell out that one of the points of the Battel of the Lacedemonians in which they were, retired, and many fled: But theſe two reſolved rather to die than flie, and accordingly they ſtood to it gallantly, till Pelopidas being wounded in ſeven places, fell down upon a heap of dead Bodies. Then did Epaminondas (though he took him for dead) ſtep reſolutely before him to defend his Body and Arms, he alone fighting againſt many, reſolving rather to die in the place than to leave Pelopidas amongſt the dead men, until that himſelf being thruſt into the Breaſt with a Pike, and wounde d in the Arm with a Sword, was ready to faint: at which time Providence ſo ordered it, that King Ageſipolis came on with the other point of the Battel, and ſaved them both. His Valour.

Not long after the Lacedemonians by a ſtratagem, won the ſtrong Caſtle of Thebes called Cadmæa, and put a ſtrong Garriſon into it, and gave the Government of Thebes unto Archias, Philippus, and Leontidas, authors of all the miſchief: whereupon, to avoid their Tyranny, Pelopidas, and many others were fain to ſave themſelves by flight, upon which they were baniſhed by ſound of Trumpet. But as for Epaminondas they as yet ſaid nothing to him, but let him alone in the City: for he was contemned as a man of no account, becauſe he was ſo much given to his Book: and if he ſhould have any mind to ſtir againſt them, yet they judged he could do nothing becauſe of his Poverty. Tyrants in Thebes.

Whileſt Pelopidas and his Companions were at Athens, they laid a plot to free Thebes from thoſe Tyrants: But Epaminondas not making a ſhew of any thing, had deviſed another way to effect it, by raiſing the hearts and courages of the young men of the City. For when they went out to play, and exerciſe themſelves, he always found out a way to make them wreſtle with the Lacedemonians; and when he ſaw the Lacedemonians throw them, and give them ſhrewd falls, they being the ſtronger, he would privately rebuke the Thebans and tell them, that it was a ſhame for them to ſuffer the Lacedemonians to ſet their Feet upon their Throats for want of courage, who yet were not half ſo ſtrong, and boiſterous as themſelves were. All this while Pelopidas and his followers went on in their Plot, and had ſuch good ſucceſs, that one Night they got privily into the City of Thebes and met at Charons Houſe about forty eight in number. Epaminondas knew all this well enough, and at Night ſome took him aſide and endeavoured to perſwade him to joyn with them in delivering their City from thoſe Tyrants, to whom he anſwered, that he had taken order with his Friends, and Gorgidas, to put themſelves into a readineſs upon any ſuch occaſion, but for his own part he would not have a hand in putting any of his Citizens to death, unleſs they were legally condemned: yet (ſaid he) if you will make an attempt for the delivery of the City ſo as that it be without murther or blood-ſhed, I vvill joyn with you vvith all my heart: But if you will perſevere in your former determination, pray you let me alone, pure, and not defiled vvith the blood of my Citizens, that being blameleſs I may take hold of another occaſion vvhich may tend more to the good of the commonwealth. For the murthers that vvill be committed in this vvay, cannot be contained vvithin any reaſonable bounds. I know indeed that Pherecides, and Pelopidas vvill eſpecially ſet upon the Authors of the Tyranny: but Enmolpidas, and Samiadas, being fierce and Cholerick men, taking the liberty His prudence.

of the Night, will never ſheath their Swords, till they have filled the whole City with Murther, and ſlain many of the chief Citizens. Beſides, its very convenient for the People of Thebes, that ſome be left free, and blameleſs of theſe Murthers, and guiltleſs of all that ſhould be done in the fury of this action.

The Tyrants ſlain.

Notwithſtanding all that vvas ſaid, the enterpriſe vvas executed, and the Tyrants put to death, the City vvas reſtored to her ancient liberty, the Caſtle of Cadmæa was rendred up by compoſition, and Lyſandradas, the Lacedemonian, and other Commanders that were in it, vvere ſuffered ſafely to depart, vvith their goods and Souldiers. This vvas the occaſion of the long Wars which followed between the Lacedemonians and Thebans, vvith vvhom the Athenians joyned in League.

His Modeſty.

Epaminondas ſtill applied himſelf to his Book: yet at laſt he vvas put forvvards by Pammenes, a chief man amongſt the Thebans, and he began to followv the Wars very eagerly, and in divers encounters gave good proof of his prudence, hardineſs, and valour, inſomuch as by degrees he attained to the higheſt charges of Government in the Commonvvealth: and his Citizens, vvho before made ſmall account of him till he vvas forty years old, after, vvhen they knevv him better, they truſted him vvith their Armies, and he ſaved the City of Thebes, that vvas like to be undone, yea, and freed all Greece from the ſervitude of the Lacedemonians, making his Virtue, as in a cleer light, to ſhine vvith Glory, ſhevving the effects vvhen time ſerved.

He is advanced to Honour.

Upon a time Ageſilaus, King of Lacedemon entered into Bœotia vvith an Army of tvventy thouſand Foot, and five thouſand Horſe, vvherewith he harraſed and ſpoiled all the plain Country, and preſented Battel to the Thebans in the open Fields, which yet they would not accept of, finding themſelves the weaker: Howbeit, they defended themſelves ſo well by the aſſiſtance of the Athenians, and the wiſe conduct of Epaminondas and Pelopidas, that they cauſed Ageſilaus to return home with his Army. But when he was gone, the Thebans went with their Companies before the City of Theſpies, which they ſurprized, and put to the Sword two hundred of the Garriſon, and afterwards returned back with their Army to Thebes; and Phœbidas, the Lacedemonian, who was then Governour of that City, ſallied out of the Town, and charged upon the Thebans in their retreat, who intertained him ſo hotly, that he loſt five hundred of his men, and himſelf was ſlain in the Fight.

The Spartans beaten.

Not long after, the Lacedemonians returned with their former Army to make War with the Thebans, who having ſeized upon certain ſtraights, and places of advantage, ſo blocked up the way, that they could not over run the Country, and ſpoil it as they had done before; yet did Ageſilaus ſo moleſt, and trouble them, that at laſt it came to a main Battel that held long, and was very cruel: and though at the firſt Ageſilaus had the better, yet the Thebans charged him ſo furiouſly, that at the length he himſelf was wounded and forced to retire, being well paid for teaching the Thebans Military Diſcipline. And this was the firſt time that the Thebans knew themſelves to be as ſtrong and luſty as the Lacedemonians, whereupon they Triumphed in ſign of Victory, and from that time forward, they grew more couragious to make head againſt the Enemy, and to preſent them battel. But that which moſt encouraged them, was, the preſence of Epaminondas, who counſelled, commanded, and executed very Wiſely, Valiantly, and with great ſucceſs.

A Battel,

At another time they went with a great number of choſen men before the City of Orchomene, where yet they prevailed not, becauſe there was a ſtrong Garriſon of the Lacedemonians that ſallied out upon them, and the

Fight

Fight was very ſharp between them: yet, though the Lacedemonians were far more in number, the Thebans gave them the overthrow, which never happened to them before. For all other Nations thought that they had done excellent well, if with a far greater number they had overcome a ſmall number of the Lacedemonians. But this Victory, and an other, which fell out ſhortly after under the conduct of Pelopidas, did ſo lift up and encourage the Thebans, that they became more famous than ever they were before. The Spartans beaten.

The year following, Artaxerxes King of Perſia, intending to make War againſt Ægypt, and therein to intertain diverſe ſtrangers, laboured to make Peace amongſt the Grecians, in hope that they, being at Peace amongſt themſelves would be the more willing to have Souldiers leavied amongſt them. For which end he ſent Ambaſſadours to all the Towns of Greece, to perſwade and intreat them to be at Peace amongſt themſelves. The Greeks were very willing to harken hereto, being wearied on all ſides with ſuch long Wars, and ſo were eaſily drawn to make Peace; wherein it was eſpecially agreed, and concluded, that all the Cities of Greece ſhould be free, and uſe their own Laws: and Commiſſioners were ſent abroad to withdraw all the Garriſons where any were kept. Unto this the Thebans only refuſed to agree, that every Town ſhould ſeverally capitulate for it, requeſting that the Towns in the Country of Bœotia ſhould be comprehended under the City of Thebes: but the Athenians mightily oppoſed themſelves againſt this, and Caliſtratus, one of their Orators, made a notable Oration about it before all the States of Greece. Epaminondas on the contrary, made an excellent and vehement ſpeech in defence of the right of the Thebans, inſomuch as this controverſie was left undecided, and the Treaty of Peace was univerſally agreed to amongſt all the other Grecians, the Thebans only excepted, who were not compriſed in it. Peace among the Greeks. The Thebans are excepted.

At this time the Athenians, and Lacedemonians, who had long contended amongſt themſelves about the Principality of Greece, now agreed, that the one ſhould command by Sea, and the other by Land: And therefore they could not endure that the Thebans ſhould aſpire to be chief, which made them ſeek to diſmember the other Towns of Bœotia from them, the rather, for that the Thebans, being ſtrong and luſty of Body, and much encouraged by their late Victories over the Lacedemonians, would now contend with them for their ſuperiority, having a wonderful confidence in the Wiſdom and Proweſs of their Captains, eſpecially of Epaminondas.

Matters reſting thus doubtful, the Citizens of Platæes, a Town of Bœotia, were deſirous to enter into League with the Athenians, promiſing that if they would ſend them Souldiers, they would put the Town into their hands: But the Governours of Bœotia having intelligence of it, and being deſirous to prevent the Athenians, brought a party of Souldiers againſt it, who came before Platæes before the Citizens heard any news of them, ſo that part of them were ſurpriſed in the Field by the Horſemen, and the reſt fled into the Town: where having no aid, they were faign to accept of ſuch tearms as it pleaſed the Thebans to grant them, which were preſently to depart the Town with bag and baggage, and never to return again into the Country of Bœotia. Then did they raze the City to the ground, and ſacked the Town of Theſpies which alſo was at enmity with them. Platæes deſtroyed.

The Ambaſſadours of Perſia again ſolicited the Greeks to a General Peace, and Commiſſioners from every Town were to meet at Sparta about it. Epaminondas was yet ſcarce known, having laboured to conceal himſelf, and in all his exploits of War, had ever preferred the advancement of his great Friend, and Companion in Arms, Pelopidas, before himſelf. He was now choſen by the Thebans to go to Sparta, where, finding that the other Commissioners did much comply with Agesilaus, he spake boldly, and plainly,

His Wisdom. not only in behalf of the Thebans, but for all Greece also: making it evident to all, that War still encreased the greatness of Sparta only, which kept all the other Towns of Greece under. He therefore advised them to establish a firm Peace, which would last the longer, when all comprized in it, should be equals.

Agesilaus perceiving all the Commissioners to be very attentive to and well pleased with this speech, he asked him a loud, if he thought it just, and e-
His Courage. qual, that all Bœotia should be set at liberty. Epaminondas presently, and boldly asked him, if he thought it not also just and reasonable that all Laconia should be set at liberty? Thereupon Agesilaus, in great anger, stood up, and commanded him to answer plainly, if they should not restore all the Towns in Bœotia to their Liberty? and Epaminondas answered him as before. This so displeased Agesilaus (who had an old grudg to the Thebans) that immediately he put their Name out of the List of those that should be comprized within the Treaty of Peace, and proclaimed open War against them, and now there was no remedy but the Thebans must bear the whole brunt alone, for there was no one Town that durst send them any aid, because they were all sworn to the Peace, insomuch as all judged them to be utterly undone. Friends pitied there estate, and there enemies rejoyced, verily believing that they could never stand before the Lacedemonians.

Then did the Lacedemonians send King Cleombrotus with an Army towards Thebes, who being come near to Chæronea with ten thousand Foot, and a thousand Horse, he pitched his Camp there staying for his Allies. The Thebans being informed of the approach of the enemy, chose Epaminondas to be their Captain General, giving him the charge of this War, with six other Counsellers to be assisting to him. Now there came Oracles to Thebes from all parts; some promising Victory, and others threatning their overthrow; and Epaminondas commanded them to set those on the right hand of the chair for Orations, that promised Victory, and the other on the left hand, which being so disposed of, he gat up into the chair, and said to his Citizens, If you
His Prudence. will be obedient to your Captains, and valiant against your enemies, these Oracles on the right hand belong to you: But if through faintness of heart, ye refuse dangers, those on the left hand shall be your Portion.

Then did he list the Names of all the Thebans which were able to bear Arms, and chose out of some parts of Bœotia, such as he thought fittest for the Wars. His Presence exceedingly cheered up his Army, and all the time that he was Captain, the Thebans never saw in their Camp any of those which they call sudden fears. He used to say, that there was no Death more honest and desirable than to die in the Wars, and that the body of a Souldier should Fat men cashi-red. be hardened to endure any labour or pains. He could not abide fat men, and therefore cashired a whole Company of them as unprofitable burdens in his Army. He had in all, but six thousand fighting men: and as they marched forwards, they met with some unlucky signs, as many esteemed them: but he valued them not, thinking that a resolution to fight in a good cause, ought to be much stronger, and of more force to raise in him good Hope, than these evil signs that appeared, to make him fear the worst.

As he was marching towards the Lacedemonians, they heard it Thunder, and they that were neer him, asked him what that meant. He answered, that it betokened that the Enemies brains were troubled, and beclouded, who, having places of advantage hard by them, yet encamped in the plaines. Indeed the Lacedemonians waited there for their Allies, who yet failed them. For all of them, having at leasure considered of the speech of Epaminondas at Sparta, began to distast the ambition of the Lacedemonians. Epaminondas seeſtraights by the City of Coronea, and encamped there: Cleombrotus underſtanding that the Thebans had poſſeſſed themſelves of that paſs, deſpairing to recover it, he made his Army to march a great compaſs about the Country of Phocide, going along the Sea Coaſt through a dangerous, and troubleſome way, and ſo at the laſt he entered into the Country of Bœotia: and as he went, he took in ſome little Towns, and certain Gallies that lay upon the Coaſt, and at the laſt arrived at Leuctres, and there ſat down to refreſh his men, who were overwearied with their tedious march. Then did Epaminondas preſently advance that way to meet them, and having paſſed over ſome little Mountains, he diſcovered them in the plain of Leuctres, where his men were much amazed to ſee ſo great an Army of their Enemies.
His Prudence. ing his advantage, caused his Army to march with speed, and wan the straights

The ſix Counſellers came together to conſider whether they ſhould go forward and fight, few againſt many, or elſe retreat, waiting for ſome better advantage. In this Councel, their opinions fell out to be equal. Three judged it beſt to retreat, the other, whereof Epaminondas was one, thought it beſt to fight, and with theſe three, Pelopidas, who was Captain of the Sacred Band, joyned, whereupon they all agreed to give them Battel. Epaminondas ſeeing his Souldiers ſomewhat affrighted at the former ill ſigns, to put courage into them, he ſuborned ſome that were newly come from Thebes, to ſcatter a report, that no man could tell at Thebes what was become of the Arms that hung up in the Temple of Hercules; but it was commonly ſaid, that the Demigods, their Anceſtors, had taken them away, to aid their poſterity, at this preſent time. He cauſed another alſo, who was newly come from Trophonius hole, to report; that the God which gives his Oracles therein, commanded him to tell the Bœotians that when they had overcome their enemies in the plain of Leuctres, they ſhould celebrate yearly Plays to the honour of Jupiter: and to gain the more credit to theſe devices, Leandridas, a Spartan, that was baniſhed out of his own Country, and now was aſſiſting the Bœotians, being brought before the Souldiers, he encouraged them to fight valiantly that Day: for he ſwore unto them, that the Lacedemonians had many Oracles, bidding them to beware of Leuctres. And Policy.

Epaminondas alſo, aſſembling his Army, encouraged them with ſtrong, and lively reaſons, to ſhew their valour, ſo that at laſt the Souldiers being freed from their ſuperſtitious fears, longed for nothing more than to come to blows. Epaminondas ever concluded his Orations to them with theſe Words: O worthy men, embrace ſacred Death: Advance your ſelves to a moſt honorable, and famous Fight for your Country, for the Tombs of your Anceſtors, and for your Holy things. Juſt at this very time there came to the Thebans an aid of five hundred Horſe, and fifteen hundred Foot, all Theſſalians, conducted by Jaſon. This Jaſon endeavored to have made peace with both parties, but could not prevail.

Alſo as Cleombrotus retired with his Army out of Bœotia, he met a great ſupply of Lacedemonians, and their Allies, brought to him by Archidamus, the Son of Ageſilaus. Theſe he ſent before, thinking to daunt the courage of the Thebans with the ſight of them, and himſelf with the reſt of his Army ſuddenly returned into the plain of Leuctres, being fully reſolved to fight: and the Bœotians for their part ſhrunk not an inch back, and ſo on both ſides they ſet their men in Battel array. Epaminondas ordered his Battel after a new faſhion never practiſed by any Captain: For having choſen out of his Army the beſt, and moſt valiant Souldiers, he placed them together in one of the Points of his Battel, where himſelf meant to fight in Perſon, ſeconded by Pelopidas, and his three hundred choſen men, called the Holy Band: In the other Point he placed his weaker men, commanding them expreſly not to abide the charge of their enemies that ſhould aſſail them in Front, but fair, and ſoftly retire when they ſaw them come near them: and it fell out as he wiſhed: and he hoped to determine the Battel by the Virtue, and proweſs of thoſe where he had placed all the flower, and choice of his Army.

hoped

A Battel. Now the ſign of Battel being given, the Lacedemonians advanced with the two Horns of their Battel, ordered in the form of a Creſcent. On the contrary, one of the wings of the Battel of the Bœotians began to give back, and the other with great fury ran to charge the enemy in the Flank, and ſoon they were come to the Swords point. At the firſt, becauſe either ſide fought deſperately, the Victory for a time ſtood doubtful, but at laſt Epaminondas his Troop brake in amongſt the Lacedemonians, and ſlew moſt of thoſe that were about Cleombrotus. Yet while the King was alive, he kept back the Thebans from the Victory, being accompanied with all the flower of his Army, who fought very valiantly about him: But after he fell dead to the ground, having received and given an infinite number of wounds, then thronged they together on all ſides, and there was a bloody and cruel fight about his Body, where were heaps of men ſlain one upon another, and though Epaminondas did all that poſſibly he could, yet the Lacedemonians made ſuch reſiſtance, that at laſt they forced the Thebans ſomewhat to give back, whereby they conveyed the Body of the King out of the preſs: But this continued not long: For Epaminondas both by his words and example, did ſo raiſe up and encourage the hearts of his men, that they fought like Lions, and gave ſo fierce a

The Spartans beaten. ſecond charge upon their enemies, that they wholly routed them and made them flie for life, and Epaminondas fiercely purſuing the flying enemy, made a great ſlaughter of them, and obtained the moſt glorious Victory that ever Captain won, having in a pitched Field overcome the moſt Noble, and warlike Nation of all Greece, and that with a far ſmaller number of men than his enemies had. He alſo rejoyced more in this, than in all his other Victories, becauſe it happened to him in his Fathers life-time: and he often uſed to ſay, that of all the honeſt and happy Fortunes that befel him, nothing joyed his heart more, than that he vanquiſhed the Lacedemonians at Leuctres, his Father and Mother living to ſee it: and indeed, he that day, did not only preſerve their lives, but of all his Citizens beſides, the Lacedemonians having fully reſolved utterly to deſtroy the Thebans.

His Humility. Epaminondas uſed at all other times to come abroad fine and neat, and with a pleaſant countenance: but the next day after this Battel, he came out very ſad, heavy, and penſive, and when his Friends asked him, whether he had heard any ill news which occaſioned this poſture, he ſaid, No: but (ſaid he) I perceive by my ſelf yeſterday, that being overjoyed with the Victory I obtained, my heart was more elvated than it ought, and therefore to day I correct that joy, which yeſterday exceeded its due bounds. He knowing that it was the manner of the Spartans, as much as poſſible, to conceal their loſſes, he ſuffered them not to carry away all their dead Bodies together, but every City one after another, by which it appeared that there were four thouſand of them ſlain: But of the Bœotians there were not found above three hundred dead. This Battel was fought in the beginning of the ſecond year of the hundred and ſecond Olympiade.

The Lacedemonians having by this overthrow loſt the greateſt part of their honour, which they had maintained ſo long, yet loſt not their courage; but to keep their youth ſtill in heart, and to take away all fear from ſuch as had eſcaped, they ſent Ageſilaus, with an Army into Arcadia, who was contented to take a few ſmall Towns of the Mantineans, and ſo to return home again. Some ſay that Lycomedes, Captain of the Arcadians, making an inrode neer to Orchomene, ſlew in an encounter, Politropus, Captain of the Lacedemonians, and two hundred Spartans with him, which provoked the Lacedemonians againſt them: and thereupon the Arcadians, finding themſelves too weak for them, they ſought alliance and aid from the Thebans. Sure it is that these two States were now at enmity, which occasioned the Arcadians and Thebans to joyn together, who, with their Allies being led by Epaminondas entred into Laconia, with an Army of forty thousand men, besides thirty thousand others that followed the Camp. At this time the Athenians sent Captain Iphecrates, with twelve thousand men, to aid the Lacedemonians: But before their coming, Epaminondas was entered into Laconia, and had sacked all the Country which had not been wasted by any enemy for six hundred years before. He plunders Laconia.

it

The Spartans seeing their Country thus plundred, and destroyed, were desirous to have gone out with such Forces as they had, but Agesilaus would not suffer them, telling them how dangerous it was for them to leave their City, and to set upon such a potent, and numerous enemy. This made them quiet, and Epaminondas in the mean time marched with his Army towards the River Eurotas, which at that time was risen very high, because of the Winter rains. He endeavoured all he could, to draw forth Agesilaus to a Battel, who beholding Epaminondas a great while, marching with his Army in Battel aray along the River side at the Head of his Troops, he wondered at his boldness, and Valour, but would by no means adventure out of his Fort: So that when this Army had plundred all Laconia, Epaminondas led them back again with a very rich Booty. And though Agesilaus was commended for preserving his City in safety; yet Epaminondas had by this inrode, and especially by his Victory at Leuctres, so impoverished the Country, that Sparta could never after recover that loss, nor grow into that reputation and power which it had before. Yea, notwithstanding the aid sent by the Athenians, and the skill and experience of Iphecrates, Epaminondas returned with his Army intire as he came. He braves the Spartans.

Epaminondas that he might keep the Lacedemonians still underfoot, and heap new troubles upon them, gave Counsel to the Arcadians, and their Allies, to reedifie, and repleniſh with People the City of Messina, which the Lacedemonians had long before destroyed, and when all the whole Councel had given their consents to it, he forthwith, by diligent enquiry sought out all that had been ancient Inhabitants in that City, and in the space of eighty five Days, having repaired the ruined Houses, he raised again one of the most Noble, and ancient Cities of Greece, and left there a strong Garrison for their security. This gat him as much, if not more love and honour than any other service which he had ever done. Messina reedified.

The Lacedemonians being freed from a great fear by his departure, made an agreement with the Athenians, leaving to them the chief command by Sea, and reserving to themselves that by Land. And afterwards, by the assistance of the Athenians and that aid which came to them out of Sicily, by little and little they recovered their Towns again.

The Arcadians, to stop their proceedings, assaulted the City of Pallene in Laconia, and taking it by storm, put all the Garrison therein to the Sword, and then razed the Town, and plundred all the Country there abouts. And expecting that the Lacedemonians would seek revenge, they sent for aid to the Thebans, who sent Epaminondas and the other Counsellers to assist them with six thousand Foot, and five hundred Horse. The Athenians having intelligence hereof, sent their Army under the conduct of Chabrias, who marched directly to Corinth, where he met with a good supply of Souldiers from the Megarians, Pallenians, and Corinthians, so that now he had a Brigade of ten thousand men. These intended to fortifie and stop all the passages and entrances into the Country of Peloponnesus. The Lacedemonians and their Allies joyning also with them, made up an Army of twenty thousand men: And accordingly, beginning at the City of Cencrees, unto the Haven of Lecheum, they blocked all the ways from Pallene destroyed. Peloponnesus fortified.

from one Sea to another with mighty great pieces of Timber laid acroſs, and with a marvellous deep Ditch: and this great work was followed with ſuch ſpeed, both by reaſon of the great multitude of labourers, as alſo through the frowardneſs of them that proſecuted it with ſuch earneſtneſs, that they had quite finiſhed it before the Bœotians could arrive there.

Epaminondas when he came thither, viewing this fortification, perceiving that the eaſieſt place to ſtorm it, was that which the Lacedemonians themſelves guarded, he ſent to give them defiance though they were thrice as many in number as he was, yet for all this they durſt not come out, but kept cloſe under their fortification: Notwithſtanding he aſſaulted them in it, and at laſt drave them out. In the heat of the fight every one doing his beſt, ſome aſſailing, others defending, Epaminondas choſe out the valianteſt men in all his Army, and bravely charging the Lacedemonians, he forced them to give back, and in diſpite of them, he entered into Peloponneſus, which of all other his Noble exploits, was the moſt wonderful and memorable action. From thence he marched to the Cities of Epidaure, and Trozen, and ſo pillaged all the Country: But he ſtayed not to take any of the Towns, becauſe they had ſtrong Garriſons in them: Yet he put Sicyone, Phuente, and ſome other Towns into ſuch fear, that they yielded themſelves to him.

He beats the Spartans.

This being done, he went to Corinth, and overcame the Corinthians in a ſet Battel, and beat them home, even to the Gates of their City: Yea ſome of his men were ſo unadviſed, truſting to their own Valour, that they entered the Gates of their City pel mel with thoſe that fled, which put the Corinthians into ſuch a terrible fear, that they ran with all ſpeed poſſible to ſhelter themſelves in their Houſes: But Chabrias making head, beat them out again, and ſlew ſome, whereupon he cauſed a token of Triumph to be ſet up, as if he had given the Thebans an overthrow, for which Epaminondas laughed him to ſcorn. The Bœotians brought their Army as neer unto Corinth as they could, and Chabrias with his Army encamped without the Walls in a very ſtrong Place of advantage, and there were many Skirmiſhes betwixt them, in which Chabrias behaved himſelf with ſuch Valour that he gained great reputation even of Epaminondas himſelf, who upon a time being asked, whom he thought to be the greateſt Captain, himſelf, Chabrias, or Iphecrates? Its hard (ſaid he) to judg whilſt we are all alive.

News was brought to him that the Athenians had again ſent an Army into Peloponneſus, furniſhed with new Armor: Indeed this Army conſiſted of ten thouſand Spaniards and Gauls, whom Dyoniſius the Tyrant, ſent out of Sicily to aid the Lacedemonians, having paid them for five months: they did ſome reaſonable ſervice in this War, and at the end of Summer returned home again.

It fell out in theſe laſt encounters that Epaminondas having forced the Lacedemonians that guarded the fortification before mentioned, had many of them in his power to have ſlain them: but he contented himſelf only with this Glory, that in diſpite of them, he had entered into Peloponneſus, ſeeking to do them no more hurt; which gave occaſion to thoſe that envied his Glory, to blame him, and to accuſe him of Treaſon, as having willingly ſpared the enemies, becauſe they ſhould in particular thank him only: But here it will not be improper to take notice how he behaved himſelf amongſt his Citizens, and how wiſely he defended his own Integrity.

His Clemency.

He is envied.

Amongſt all thoſe that envied his Glory and Virtue, there was one Meneclides, an Orator, and an eloquent man, but withall, moſt wicked, and very malicious. He finding that Epaminondas won ſo much honour

by

by the Wars, never left perſwading the Thebans to embrace Peace; and prefer it before War, and that becauſe hereby they ſhould not alwavs live under the obedience, and command of one man. But Epaminondas one day told him in the open Counſel: Thou wilt (ſaid he) deceive the Thebans whilſt thou adviſeſt them to leave the Wars: and highly commended eaſe and Peace, thou goeſt about to put iron bolts upon their Feet. For War begets Peace, which yet cannot hold long but amongſt them that know how to maintain it with the Sword. Then turning himſelf to the Citizens, he ſaid, If you will have the Principality and command of all Greece, you muſt ſhroud your ſelves in your Tents, and lie in your Pavillions in the open Fields, and not follow Sports and Paſtimes here at home. For he knew well enough that the Bœotians undid themſelves by eaſe and Idleneſs, which made him endeavour continually to keep them in exerciſe and War.

Upon a time when the Thebans were to chooſe Captains, they went about to chooſe Epaminondas, one of the ſix Counſellours: whereupon he ſaid to them: My Maſters, pray you conſider of it now you are at leaſure before you chooſe me: For I tell you plainly, If I be choſen your Captain, you muſt to the Wars. He uſed to call the Country of Bœotia, which was a plain, and Champion Country, the Stage of War, ſaying, that it was impoſſible to keep it, unleſs the Inhabitants had their Targets on their Arms, and their Swords in their hands: and this was not, becauſe he did not love Peace, and privacy to ſtudy Philoſophy, or that he was not more careful of them that were under his charge than he was of himſelf, uſing always to watch and forbear his meat, when the Thebans were at their Banquets, and Feaſts, giving themſelves over to their pleaſures: but becauſe he knew them well enough, and was never more careful of any thing than to keep his Army from Idleneſs.

Upon a time the Arcadians deſired him that ſome of his Companions might come into one of their Towns to lie dry and warm there, all the Winter, but he would by no means yield to it. For (ſaid he to his Souldiers) now they ſee you exerciſing your ſelves in Arms, they wonder at you as brave and valiant men; but if they ſhould ſee you at the Fire ſide parching of Beans, they would eſteem no better of you than of themſelves. Neither could he endure Covetouſneſs: for if at ſometimes he gave his men leave to go a free booting, his meaning was, that whatſoever they got, ſhould be beſtowed in furniſhing them with good Arms: and if any went about to fill his Purſe with money, he judged him unworthy to be a Souldier. Upon a time he underſtood that his Target-bearer had received a great ſum of money for the ranſom of a Priſoner, whereupon he ſaid to him: Give me my Target, and go thy ways home, and buy thee a Tavern wherein to ſpend the reſt of thy life: for I perceive thou wilt no more, like an honeſt man, put thy ſelf in danger in the Wars, as formerly thou haſt done, becauſe now thou art grown rich and wealthy.

Though Epaminondas was thus virtuous, and unblameable in his life, yet the aforementioned Meneclides would never ceaſe contending, and reproaching of him: and one day he went ſo far as to upbraid him becauſe he had no Children, and was not married, and that he magnified himſelf more than ever King Agamemnon had done. To this Epaminondas anſwered, Thou haſt nothing to do to counſel me to marry, and in this reſpect, there is never a man here whoſe adviſe I would leſs make uſe of than thine, (and this he ſpake becauſe the other was taken notice of to be an Adulterer,) And whereas thou thinkeſt that I envy the fame and renown of Agamemnon, thou art fouly deceived. Yet let me tell thee, that whereas he was ten Years in winning one City, I on the contrary, by putting His prudence.

the Lacedemonians to flight in one day, have delivered not only our own City, but all Greece from their ſlavery. But thanks be to you? My Lords Thebans (ſpeaking to all the Aſſembly) by your aſſiſtance I did it, and thereby overthrew the power and government of our inſulting enemies.

He is accuſed and abuſed.

Yet after all his brave deeds, both he and Pelopidas were ill rewarded for all their good ſervice, by their ingrateful Citizens: For at their return from Laconia, they, with ſome other of the ſix Counſellers, were accuſed, that after the time that their Government was expired, they retained their power four months after the time appointed by the Law. With much ado Pelopidas was quitted: But Epaminondas willed all his other Companions to lay the fault upon him, who by his Authority forced them to it; and inſtead of excuſing himſelf, he told them all the brave exploits which he had done at that time: Adding withal, that he was willing and ready to die, if they ſo pleaſed, Provided that they wrote upon his Tomb, that Epaminondas was put to death, becauſe he had compelled the Thebans againſt their wills to burn the Country of Laconia, which in five hundred years before had never been plundered. That he had repeopled the City of Meſſina with Inhabitants, two hundred and thirty years after it had been laid waſt by the Lacedemonians. That he had brought all the People and Towns of Arcadia to be as one Body, in League together, and had ſet all the Greeks at liberty: and all theſe things (ſaid he) we did in that Journey. The Judges when they heard this worthy and true defence, they all aroſe from their ſeats, and laughed heartily, and would not take up their Balls to Ballot againſt him.

But for the ſecond accuſation, to wit, that he had ſhewed favour to the Lacedemonians for his own particular honour, he would make no particular anſwer to it before the People, but riſing out of the Theater, he paſſed through the Aſſembly and went into the Park of Exerciſes. Upon this the People being incenſed againſt him, refuſed to chuſe him into Office as they had wont to do, though there was a great need of him, and created other Counſellers to go into Theſſaly: and the more (as they thought) to deſpite him, they commanded him to go that expedition as a private Souldier, which he refuſed not, but went very willingly.

Pelopidas imprisoned by a Tyrant.

Pelopidas being ſent a ſecond time into Theſſaly to make peace between the People and Alexander the Tyrant of Pheres, was by this Tyrant (not regarding that he was an Ambaſſadour, and a Theban) committed to Priſon, together with Iſmenias. Upon this, the Thebans being juſtly offended, ſent an Army of eight thouſand Foot and five hundred Horſe againſt him, howbeit under the conduct of unskilful Captains, who, wanting judgment to uſe their advantages, thought good to return home without doing any thing: But as they went back, Alexander, being ſtronger in Horſe than they, preſſed hard upon their Reer, killing ſome, and wounding others; ſo that the Thebans knowing neither how to go forward nor backward, were in great diſtreſs; and that which aggravated their miſery was, that their Victuals were almoſt ſpent. Being thus almoſt out of hope ever to get home in ſafety, Epaminondas being at that time a common Souldier among the Foot, both the Captains and Souldiers earneſtly intreated him to help to redreſs this diſorder. He thereupon choſe certain Footmen that were light armed, and all the Horſemen, and with theſe putting himſelf into the Rere of the Army, he ſo luſtily repulſed the Enemy, that the reſt of the Army afterwards marched in great ſafety, and ſtill making Head, as occaſion ſerved, and keeping his Troops in good order, he at laſt brought them all well home.

His Policy.

This brave Act Crowned him with new Glory, confounded his enemies, mies, and made him well ſpoken of every where, and by it he obtained the love and good will of the Citizens, who ſet great Fines upon the heads of thoſe Captains who had behaved themſelves ſo unworthily in that expedition. And now the People ſeeing that by ſo many worthy deeds he had ſtopped the ſlanderous mouths, and confuted the accuſations of his ill willers, they choſe him again their Captain General to conduct a new Army into Theſſaly: At his coming all the Country wonderfully rejoyced, only the Tyrant with his Captains, and Friends were exceedingly dejected, and poſſeſſed with fear, being Thunderſtruck with the fame of ſo Noble a Captain, and his Subjects had a good mind to riſe up againſt him, hoping that they ſhould ſhortly ſee the Tyrant fully recompenced for all the wicked and curſed deeds that he had done amongſt them.

Epaminondas when he came into Theſſaly, preferred the ſafety and deliverance of his Friend Pelopidas before his own Honour and Glory, and fearing leſt Alexander when he ſhould ſee himſelf and his State in danger to be overthrown, ſhould in his rage revenge himſelf upon Pelopidas, he therefore purpoſely drew this War out in length, marching often about him, but never ſetting upon him in good earneſt, often ſeeming to make preparations, and yet ſtill delaying: and this he did, to mollifie the heart of this Tyrant, and not to provoke (to the danger of his Friend) the inhumane and unbridled paſſion of this cruel Bloud-ſucker. Yet he being a Monſter compounded of cruelty, and cowardlineſs, was ſo afraid of the very name and reputation of Epaminondas, that he preſently ſent ſome to him to excuſe his fact, and to crave Peace. But Epaminondas was not willing that his Thebans ſhould make Peace and Alliance with ſo wicked a man, only he was content to grant him a Truce for thirty Days, upon the delivering to him Pelopidas and Iſmenias. His Prudence. Pelopidas releaſed.

So with them he returned back to Thebes, and always continued a faithful Friend to Pelopidas ſo long as they lived together: Yet would he never ſhare with him in his Riches, but did ſtill perſevere in his former ſtrict Poverty and Diſcipline. He was very bold, and yet it was mingled with a winning ſweetneſs, and a lively grace, as may appear in ſundry Examples. Beſides his bold ſpeech to Ageſilaus, mentioned before: At another time the Argians having made a League with the Thebans, the Athenians ſent their Ambaſſadors into Arcadia, to ſee if they could gain the Arcadians to be their Friends. And theſe Ambaſſadors began roundly and hotly to charge and accuſe both the one and the other, and Calliſtratus ſpeaking for them, reproached them with Oreſtes, and Oedipus: Epaminondas being preſent at that Aſſembly, ſtood up, and ſaid, My Lords, we confeſs that in times paſt we had a man that killed his Father, and in Argos, one that killed his Mother, but as for us now, we have baniſhed all ſuch wicked Murtherers out of our Country, and the Athenians have intertained them. His witty Speeches.

At another time when the Spartans had laid many great and grievous imputations to the charge of the Thebans, he ſaid, If they have done nothing elſe, my Lords of Sparta, yet at leaſt they have made you forget to ſpeak little. But that which was moſt excellent, and obſervable in Epaminondas, and which indeed did ſtop the mouth of envy it ſelf was his moderation, and temperance, knowing how to uſe any ſtate or condition, and never to rage either againſt himſelf or others, always bearing this mind, that howſoever they took him, and in what place ſoever they ſet him, he was well contented, ſo that he might but advance the good of his Country: As may appear by this Example: on a time his evil-willers, thinking to bring him into diſgrace, and meerly out of ſpite, made him ſuperintendant or overſeer of all the cuſtoms, whilſt others of his inferiors, unworthy to be compared with him, were placed in the moſt honourable Offices: Yet

His Humility. deſpiſed he not this mean Office, but diſcharged it very Faithfully: For (ſaid he) the Office or Authority ſhews not only what the man is, but alſo the man what the Office is.

Shortly after Epaminondas was returned out of Theſſaly, the Arcadians were overcome by Archidamus and the Lacedemonians, who in the fight loſt not a man, and therefore they called this journey the tearleſs Battel: and Epaminondas foreſeeing that the Arcadians would yet have another ſtorm, he gave them counſel to fortifie their Towns, which they did accordingly, and built that City which afterwards was called Megalopolis, ſituated in a very convenient place. Whilſt the Thebans made War with the Elians, their Neighbours, the mind of Epaminondas was always lifted up to high enterprizes for the good of his Country, wherefore in an Oration which he made to his Citizens, he perſwaded them to make themſelves ſtrong by Sea, and to endeavour to get the principality, and to make themſelves the Lords thereof. This Oration was full of lively reaſons, whereby he ſhewed and proved unto them, that the enterprize was both honourable, and profitable, which he made out by ſundry Arguments, telling them that it was an eaſie thing for them, who were now the ſtronger by Land, to make themſelves alſo the ſtronger by Sea: and the rather, for that the Athenians in the War againſt Xerxes, though they had armed and ſet forth two hundred Gallies, armed and well appointed with men, yet they willingly ſubmitted themſelves to the Lacedemonians. He alleadged many other reaſons, whereby he prevailed ſo far, that the Thebans were willing to undertake the enterprize, and thereupon gave preſent order to build an hundred Gallies, and an Arſenal with ſo many Rooms that they might lay them under covert in the Dock: They ordered alſo to ſend to them of Rhodes, and of Chio, and of Byzantium, to deſire their furtherance in this enterprize: for which end Epaminondas was ſent with an Army unto theſe Cities: In his Paſſage he met with Leches, a Captain of the Athenians, with a number of Ships in his Fleet, who was ſet on purpoſe to hinder this deſign of the Thebans: Yet Epaminondas ſo affrighted him, that he made him retire back again, and holding on his courſe he brought the aforenamed Cities to enter into League with the Thebans. Shortly after the Thebans fell out with the City of Orchomene, which had done them great hurt, and miſchief, and having won it by aſſault, ſlew all the men that were able to bear Arms, and made all the women and children Slaves.

Megalopolis built.

The Thebans build a Navy.

Some time after the death of Pelopidas, certain private Perſons of Mantinea, fearing to be called to an account for their bad behaviours, and robberies which they had committed, if the Arcadians and Elians ſhould agree, they ſo brought it about, that they raiſed a new quarrel in the Country, which was divided into two Factions, whereof the Mantineans were the chief on the one ſide, and the Tageates on the other. This quarrel went ſo far, that the Parties would needs try it by Arms. The Tageates ſent to requeſt aid of the Thebans, who accordingly choſe Epaminondas their Captain General, and ſent him with a good number of men of War to aid the Tageates. The Mantineans being terrified with this aid that came out of Bœotia to their enemies, and at the reputation of their Captain, they immediately ſent to the Athenians, and Lacedemonians, the greateſt enemies of the Bœotians, for their aſſiſtance, which both the Cities granted. Upon this there fell out many and great skirmiſhes in divers parts of Peloponneſus: and Epaminondas being not far off from Mantinea, underſtood by ſome of the Country men, that Ageſilaus, and his Lacedemonians, were come into the Field, and that they waſted all all the Territories of the Tageates; whereupon, judging that there were but few men left in the City of Sparta to defend it, he undertook a great exploit, and dangerous, and had certainly effected it, if the marvelous good Fortune of Sparta had not hindred it. His design was this: He departed from Tegea, by Night, the Mantineans knowing nothing of it, and taking a by way, he had certainly surprised Sparta without striking a stroak, had not a Post of Candia speedily carried word of it to Ageſilaus, who immediately dispatched away an Horse-man to give intelligence to them of Sparta to stand upon their guard, and he himself speedily hasted after, and arrived there a little before the coming of the Thebans, who being very near the City a little before day, they gave an assault to them that defended it. This made Ageſilaus to bestir himself wonderfully, even beyond the strength of so old a man: But his Son Archidamus, and Iſadas, the Son of Phœbidas fought valiantly on all parts. Epaminondas seeing how prepared the Spartans were to oppose him, began then to suspect that his design was discovered; yet notwithstanding he left not off to force them all he could, though he fought with great disadvantage, considering the places wherein he was: yea, he continued fighting courageously, till the Army of the Lacedemonians came on, and till the Night approached, whereupon he sounded a retreat. A notable attempt.

New Wars.

Then being informed that the Mantineans came on also with their Forces, he withdrew his Army somewhat farther off from the Town, and there Camped. After which he caused his men to refresh themselves with Victuals, and leaving certain Horsemen in the Camp, he commanded them to make fires in the morning, and in the mean time himself with the rest of his men, went to surprize Mantinea before any should discover that he was departed. Yet herein also he failed of his purpose, the prosperity of the Thebans being come to its height, and the course of Epaminondas his Life drawing neer to an end, whereby Greece was deprived of this Noble and Famous Captain, from whom was taken a most notable Victory, and that twice, by strange accidents. Another but frustrated.

For at the second time, when he was come neer to Mantinea that was left without guard and defence, just then, on the other side of the Town there arrived six thousand Athenians, conducted by their Captain Hegelecus, who having put sufficient force into the Town, ordered the rest of his Army in Battel array without the Walls, and immediately also came the Mantineans, and Lacedemonians together, who prepared to put all to the hazard of a Battel, and therefore sent for their Allies from all parts: and when they were come together they were in all twenty five thousand Foot, and two thousand Horse. The Arcadians, Bœotians, and their partakers were thirty thousand Foot, and three thousand Horse. When they came to the Battel, first the Horse charged with great Fury, and the Horsemen of the Athenians encountering with the Thebans, proved too weak for them, not because they were less valiant, or hardy than the other, but because they had not so good Chieftains, and had few Archers amongst their Troops. The Thebans on the other side were all excellently well appointed, and had Theſſalians amongst them, men very skilful in their Bows, who so plied the Athenians that they wholly brake them, and put them to the rout, yet in their flight they did not run amongst their Foot-men, which made them somewhat recover their Honour which they had lost by running away. On the contrary part, as they fled, they met with some Companies of Negropont, whom the Arcadians had sent to take in certain Hills hard by the plain A Battel.

plain where the Battel was fought, whom they put all to the Sword.

The men at Arms of the Thebans seeing them turn their backs, did not pursue them at all, but presently gave charge upon a great Battalion of Foot-men, forcing them all they could to break, and run through them. So the fight was very cruel and sharp, yet in the end the Athenians were forced to quit the place: whereupon a Collonel of Horsemen of the Elians, who stood as a reserve to guard the Rere, defended them, and encountering with the Bœotians, he resisted them, and made them give back, which reinforced the fault of the left point of their Army. But in the right point, after the Horse-men had charged one another, the fight was soon determined: For by reason of the great number of men at Armes of the Thebans, and Thessalians, the Mantineans and their partakers were soon put to rout, and having lost a great number of their men, they sheltered themselves under the Battalion of their Foot-men, and this was the issue of the fight between the Horse-men.

As for the infantry, after they came once to the Sword, it was a marvellous bloody, and cruel fight. For never before that time was there so many Greeks in the Field one against another, nor so great and expert Captains, nor such Valiant Souldiers as were now. The two Nations that at that time bare the Name to be the bravest Foot-men in all the World, to wit, the Thebans, and Lacedemonians, were now set in Front one against the other, and they began to charge, neither sparing Life nor Limb. The first charge they gave was with their Pikes, which being soon broken with the huge blows they gave each other, then they came to it with their Swords, and lustily laying about them, Body to Body, Death raged in every place, and there was a mighty carnage made: for neither part shrunk back, or gave over with wearinesse, but stood to it like undaunted men. And so continued this dangerous Fight for a long time, by reason of the valiantnesse of either party, the Victory stood doubtful for a great while, and it could not be judged which side was like to have the upper hand. For every one that fought, had this resolution in his heart, not to fear Death whatsoever befel them: But rather desiring to make proof of their utmost Valour, they willingly parted with their lives to lye in the Bed of Honour. By reason whereof, though the fight was sharp and cruel, yet the event remained for a long space so uncertain, that it could not be discerned to which side the Victory should fall.

But at last, Epaminondas seeing no other remedy, but that the issue of this doubtful Fight depended upon his own Virtue and Valour, he resolved with himself to adventure his life upon it: and presenty gathering about him all the best, and choisest men of his Army, and of them having compounded a Company of stout and resolute Blades, he ran with great fury into the thickest, and greatest press of all his enemies, marching himself the foremost man in all his Troop, with a Spear in his hand, with the which at the first blow he gave, he slew the Captain of the Lacedemonians, and straightway the rest of his Company began to assail their enemies. But Epaminondas laying about him like a lion, slew so many in the place where he stood with his own hands, that at last he opened the Battel of the Lacedemonians, whom he pursued and laid on them so lustily, that they being unable any longer to defend themselves against the irresistable fury of himself and his followers, were enforced to give back and leave the place to the Bœotians, who yet followed them at their heels, beating them down so eagerly, that in a short space ſpace the whole Field was covered with dead Bodies, lying on heaps one upon another.

But in the end, the Lacedomonians ſeeing that they could no way ſave themſelves, gathered courage out of deſpair, and a Company of them joyning together, all ſet upon Epaminondas throwing an infinite number of Darts at him, of which ſome he avoided, others he received upon his Target, but yet there were many that ſtuck in his Body which he pulled out, and fought with the ſame Weapons againſt thoſe that had thrown them at him. At laſt, when he had done more than a man, and beyond all humane ſtrength, thereby to win Honour to his Country by gaining them the Victory, a certain Laconian called Anticrates, thruſt him into the Breaſt with a Dart with ſuch force, as breaking the Wood, he left the Iron Head ſticking in his Body. Having received this deadly wound he fell immediately to the ground: But then was there a more cruel fight about him than ever there was before, which occaſioned great Slaughter on both ſides, till the Thebans by fine force made their enemies to flie for their lives, and when they had purſued them a while, they returned back to their Camp that they might keep the dead Bodies in their Power, which was a certain Sign that the Victory was theirs, and then they ſounded a retreat, and ſo the Battel ended. He is deadly wounded.

Both ſides challenged the Victory and made Triumphs for it. The Lacedemonians did it, becauſe the Athenians had ſlain thoſe of Negropont that were ſent to ſeize upon the Hills before mentioned, and kept their bodies in their power. The Thebans on the other ſide having overcome the Spartans, had the bodies of them that were ſlain in the Battel, in their power, which was by far the greater number, wherefore they ſaid, that they were the Victors. Thus both ſtanding upon their tearms, it was a good while before either would ſend a Trumpet or Herauld to the other for leave to bury their dead. Yet at laſt the Lacedemonians ſent firſt, and then they all betook themſelves to give the dead an Honourable Burial. And as for him that had killed Epaminondas, he was highly eſteemed and honoured for his Valiant Act, and the Lacedemonians gave him many rich Preſents, and made him and his Poſterity free from all publick Taxes and contributions in the Common-wealth. The Spartans beaten.

As for Epaminondas he was brought yet alive into his Tent; howbeit his Phyſitians, and Surgeons being called together to dreſs his Wounds: they all concluded that ſo ſoon as they plucked the Head of the Dart out of his body, he muſt needs die. And truly he made a moſt noble and worthy end. For firſt he called for his Target-bearer, who was always at his hand in the Battel, and asked him: Is my Target ſafe? He brought it ſtraight. Then he asked, who had the Victory? The Bœotians anſwered, the Target-bearer. Then he commanded them to bring to him Diophantus and Iolidas: they told him they were both dead: Upon this he adviſed his Citizens to make Peace with their enemies, for that they had not any Captain of skill to lead them to the Wars. And now (ſaid he) it is time for me to die, and therefore pluck the Dart Head out of my Body. At this word all his Friends that were about him fetched grievous ſighs, and even cryed out for ſorrow: and one of them weeping, ſaid unto him: Alas Epaminondas! Thou dieſt now and leaveſt no Children behind thee: Yea (ſaid he) that I do: For I leave two fair Daughters behind me, whereof the one is the Victory at Leuctres, and the other this of Mantinea. So they pulled out the Dart, and immediately he gave up the Ghoſt, without ſhewing any ſign that he was at all troubled at it. His advice to the Thebans. His Death.

He

His Character.

He uſed often to ſay, That War is the Bed of Honour, and that it is a ſweet Death to dye for ones Country. He was one of the braveſt Captains that ever we read of: For whereas others excelled in ſome one or two Virtues by which they made their Fame great and glorious, he excelled in all the Vertues and good Parts that could be deſired in a Grave, Politick and great Captain, to make him compleat in all things that could be expected in an Heathen. In his time he advanced his Country to the Principality of all Greece. But after his Death they ſoon loſt it: and not long after Alexander the Great, utterly brake them in pieces, made Slaves of thoſe that ſurvived, and razed their City to the very ground. As in his life time he had always deteſted covetouſneſs, ſo after his Death the Thebans were faign to bury him at the common charge of the City, becauſe they found no mony in his Houſe to defray the leaſt part of the Funeral expences.

His Poverty.

THE

THE

WICKED LIFE

AND WOFUL DEATH

OF

HEROD the GREAT,

In whoſe time

Our LORD CHRIST was Born.

HEROD, ſirnamed the Great, was the Son of Antipas, or Antipater, an Idumæan, a prime man, both for birth and wealth, amongſt them: His Mothers name was Cyprus, born at an eminent place amongſt the Arabians, ſo that when this Herod acquired the Kingdom of Judea, that Propheſie of old Jacob was fulfilled, Gen. 49. 10. The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, nor a Law-giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come. Herods Pedegree.

This Antipater, riding his circuit about the Province of Judea, whereof Julius Cæſar had made him Governour, repreſſed them who were deſirous of innovation, both by threats and counſel, telling them, that if they would be content with their Prince Hyrcanus, (whom Cæſar alſo had confirmed in the High-Prieſthood) they might live happily in their own poſſeſſions: but if they promiſed themſelves new hopes, and thought that they ſhould gain much by innovations, they ſhould have him a Maſter inſtead of a Governour, and Hyrcanus a Tyrant inſtead of a King: and Cæſar, and the Romans, bitter enemies inſtead of Princes; for that they would by no means ſuffer any thing to be altered from what they had ſetled. But Antipater perceiving Hyrcanus to be dull and idle, he ſettled the ſtate of the Province as himſelf pleaſed, making his elder Son, Phaſælus, Governour of Jeruſalem, and the Countries adjoyning; and to Herod his ſecond Son, being then a very young man, he committed the care of Galilee.

Herod being Præfect of Galilee, there was one Eſekias, a Jew, who, aſſociating Herod is made Governour of Galilee.

to himself many other lewd persons, exercised thievery, and used to make incursions into Syria in Troops: These Herod pursued, and having taken Esekias, he put him to Death; which fact of his, gat him much favour with the Syrians, which Province also was then under his Government.

He puts Esekias to death.

The violence, and bold nature of Herod, who was desirous of the Tyranny, much terrified the Princes of the Jews, wherefore they addressed themselves to Hyrcanus, and openly accused Antipater; but especially they complained of Herod, for that he had put to death Esekias, with many others, without any Commission from Hyrcanus, in contempt of their Laws, by which, no man ought to suffer, though never so wicked, unless he were first condemned by the Judges. The Mothers also of them that were killed, ceased not daily in the Temple to weary both the King and the people with their continual exclamations, desiring that Herod might be made to give an account of these his doings before the Sanhedrim: whereupon Hyrcanus, moved herewith, commanded Herod to be called before the Council, and to plead his own cause.

He is cited before the Sanhedrim.

Herod, having ordered the affairs of Galilee, as he thought best for his own advantage, being fore-warned by his Father, that he should not come into the Council as a Private Person, he took with him a moderate, but yet a sufficient Guard: not too great, lest he should terrifie Hyrcanus, nor too little, lest he should expose himself to danger from the Judgment. When Herod therefore presented himself before the Sanhedrim in his Royal Robes, and his Guard in Arms, they were all astonished, neither durst any one of them that accused him in his absence, now speak a word against him; but all of them kept silence, not knowing what to do. Then one of the Council, called Sameas, a just man, being not at all distracted with fear, rose up, and not only accused Herod of presumption and violence, but laid the fault upon the Judges, and King himself, who had granted him so great a liberty, and told them, that afterwards, by the just Judgment of God, they should be punished by Herod himself; and the event made him a true Prophet. For the Judges of that Council, and Hyrcanus himself, were afterwards put to death by Herod, when he came to be King. But Hyrcanus perceiving that the Judges were inclining to pass sentence of Death upon Herod, put off the business till the next day, and privately advised him to shift for himself; and so he departed to Damascus, as if he fled from the King, and presenting himself before Sextus Cæsar, and having secured his own affairs, he professed openly, that if he were again cited by the Judges, he would not appear; which they took in great disdain, and endeavoured to perswade Hyrcanus that all these things tended to his destruction.

Appears with his Guard.

Sameas his boldness.

A prediction.

Herod flyes.

Refused to appear when again cited.

Herod, to increase his power, gave a great sum of money to Sextus Cæsar, who thereupon made him Governour of Cæloſyria: He, being elated with this advancement, and taking it impatiently that he had been called before the Council, raised an Army, and went against Hyrcanus: But his Father Antipater, and Brother Phasælus meeting him, by their intreaties prevailed, that he should not go against Jerusalem, but be content to have affrighted them, adding that it would be dishonourable for him, if he should attempt any thing farther against him that had advanced him to his dignity; hereupon he desisted, judging it sufficient for his future hopes, that he had shewed to that Nation of what power he was.

Is made Governour of Cæloſyria.

Cassius and Marcus, two Roman Generals, coming into Syria, after the death of Julius Cæsar, confirmed Herod in his Government of Cæloſyria, and delivered to him great Forces both of Horse and Foot, and Ships at Sea, promising him also the Kingdom of Judea, after the War should be ended, which they were waging with M. Anthony and young Cæsar.

Is confirmed in it.

Not long after, Antipater (the Father of Herod) was feasted at Hyrcanus his his houſe, at which time, one Malichus, corrupting the Kings Butler, poyſoned Antipater, and preſently raiſing a band of Souldiers, ſeized upon the Government of the City of Jeruſalem. Phaſælus and Herod being grievouſly offended hereat, charged Malichus with their Fathers death, which he ſtifly denied: But Herod had a great mind preſently to revenge the murther, and to raiſe an Army for that purpoſe, had not Phaſælus interpoſed, who judged it more meet to circumvent Malichus by Policy, leſt they ſhould ſeem to be the beginners of a civil War, and accordingly Phaſælus made as though he accepted of Malichus his juſtification, and believed that he was not guilty of his Fathers Death, and ſo buſied himſelf in building a ſtately Monument for him. Antipater poyſoned.

In the mean while, Herod coming to Samaria, and finding it in a deſperate eſtate, by reaſon of their civil Diſſentions, he appeaſed the diſcords amongſt the Inhabitants, and reſtored it to peace: and not long after, the Feaſt of Pentecoſt approaching, he went to Jeruſalem, accompanied with ſome Souldiers, of whom Malichus being afraid, perſwaded Hyrcanus not to ſuffer him to enter; which Hyrcanus accordingly did, alledging that amongſt the holy People that came to the Feaſt, it was not lawful to bring in a mix'd multitude of prophane men. But Herod making ſmall account of the prohibition, entred the City by night, and thereby mightily terrified Malichus; who, thereupon, according to his wonted diſſimulations, openly bewailed with tears the death of Antipater, as of his dear Friend: And it was judged meet by Herods Friends, that he ſhould take no notice of this diſſimulation, but courteouſly again entertain Malichus. Herod goes to Jeruſalem.

Herod, by Letters, certified Caſſius of his Fathers death, who, very well knowing the temper of Malichus, wrote back unto Herod to revenge the ſame, and ſecretly alſo gave order to the Tribunes that were at Tyre, to be aiding to Herod in his ſo juſt undertaking. He is excited to revenge his Fathers death.

Caſſius afterward, having taken the City of Laodicea, Governours came from every place, bringing Crowns and Preſents to him: and here Herod, expecting that Malichus ſhould do the like, intended to have him puniſhed for the Murther of his Father: But Malichus had another deſign on foot, purpoſing, that whileſt Caſſius was buſie in proſecuting the war againſt M. Anthony, to ſtir up the Nation of the Jews to revolt from the Romans, and to depoſe Hyrcanus, and get the Kingdom to himſelf; But Herod being politick, and underſtanding of the treachery, invited him and Hyrcanus, with ſome other of their companions, to ſupper: At which time he ſent one of his Servants, under pretence of providing for the Banquet, whereas indeed he ſent him to the Tribunes, to deſire them to ſet upon Malichus with their weapons, who, being mindful of the commands of Caſſius, finding Malichus, they ran him through, and ſlew him; at which, Hyrcanus being aſtoniſhed, fell into a ſwoun, and being ſcarcely come to himſelf, he asked who had ſlain Malichus, and when one of the Tribunes anſwered, that it was done by the command of Caſſius, he ſaid, Truly Caſſius hath preſerved me and my Country, in killing him who was a Traitor to both; but whether herein he ſpake as he thought, or that through fear only he ſeemed to approve the fact, is uncertain. Malichus ſlain.

After Caſſius was gone out of Syria, there aroſe a Sedition at Jeruſalem. For Fælix, who was left there by Caſſius with Souldiers, in revenge of the death of Malichus, ſet upon Phaſælus, and the people betook themſelves to their Arms. At which time, Herod was with Fabius, the Governour of Damaſcus, and had a mind to help his Brother, but was hindred by a ſudden ſickneſs: Yet did Phaſælus get the better of Fælix, forcing him into the Town, and afterwards agreeing upon quarter, ſuffered him to go out: But he was very angry with Hyrcanus, that after the receipt of ſo many favours from him, he yet favoured Fælix, and ſuffered the Brother of Malichus to ſeize upon ſome Caſtles, and A ſedition at Jeruſalem.

amongſt the reſt, of the Caſtle of Maſſada, which was a moſt ſtrong piece.

Herod's valour. As ſoon as Herod was recovered, he went againſt the Brother of Malichus, and took from him all the Caſtles that he had ſeized upon, and Maſſada alſo, where he took him Priſoner, yet afterwards ſet him at liberty upon compoſition. He alſo recovered three Caſtles that were ſeized upon by Maſion, the Tyrant of the Tyrians in Galilee, but gave Quarter to all the Souldiers, and ſent them home well rewarded; by which means he procured the love of the Citizens, but the greater hatred of the Tyrant.

His Policy.

Shortly after, Antigonus, the Son of Ariſtobulus, Brother to Hyrcanus, invaded Judea, being aſſiſted by Ptolomei, the ſon of Menæus, and Fabius the Governour of Damaſcus, and Maſion, the Tyrant of the Tyrians, who adhered to him for the hatred that he bore to Herod, whom Herod meeting, when they had ſcarce entred the borders of Judea, overcame them in Battel, and drave them thence; whereupon Hyrcanus honoured him with Crowns, as ſoon as he returned to Jeruſalem: For he was already accounted as one of the Family of Hyrcanus, being to marry Mariamne, or Mary, the daughter of Alexander, the Son of Ariſtobulus, the Brother of Hyrcanus, and of Alexandra, the daughter of Hyrcanus.

He overcomes Antigonus.

M. Anthony having overcome Brutus and Caſſius, there met him Ambaſſies from all Nations in Bythinia, and amongſt the reſt, ſome of the Rulers of the Jews, to accuſe Phaſælus and Herod, alledging that Hyrcanus ruled only in ſhew, but in truth, all the power was in the two Brothers: Yet Anthony highly honoured Herod, who was come thither to wipe of all thoſe objections, whereby it came to paſs, that his Adverſaries were not ſo much as admitted to ſpeak with Anthony: and this Herod had obtained by his Bribes.

Herod accuſed to Anthony.

Yet not long after, there came an hundred of the moſt honourable amongſt the Jews, to Daphne, near Antioch, in Syria, to Anthony, to accuſe Phaſælus and Herod, having choſen out of their whole number the moſt Eloquent, to manage their buſineſs: But Meſſala undertook the defence of the two Brothers, with whom alſo Hyrcanus joyned, who had betrothed his Granddaughter to Herod. Both Parties being heard, Anthony asked Hyrcanus, whether of the two parties were fitteſt to Govern a Commonwealth? who, ſpeaking for the young men, Anthony that loved them for their Fathers ſake, his old Friend, he made them both Tetrarchs, leaving to them the Government of all Judea, writing his Letters to the ſame purpoſe, and clapped fifteen of their Adverſaries into Priſon, and would have put them to death, had not Herod intreated for them. But when the People did nothing but rail upon Herod, Anthony in diſpleaſure ſlew them all.

But acquitted.

War between Antigonus and Herod.

Antigonus the Son of Ariſtobulus hired the Parthians to tranſlate the Kingdom from Hyrcanus to himſelf and to kill Herod, who coming along with him, and ſome Jews alſo joyning themſelves to him, he came to Jeruſalem, and they ſet upon the Kings Houſe: But Phaſælus and Herod defended it againſt them; and in the Market place, overcoming them in a fight, forced them to fly into the Temple, where they ſhut them in, and placed ſixty men in ſome adjoyning houſes, to prevent their flight: but the people hating the two brethren, ſet fire on thoſe Houſes, and burnt the men in them, which ſo inraged Herod, that he ſlew many of the people: and each laying wait for the other, every day ſome were murdered.

Herod prevails.

The day of Pentecoſt being come, many thouſands of men, as well armed as unarmed, gathered together about the Temple, from all parts of the Country, and ſeized upon the Temple, and City, all but the Kings Houſe, which Herod kept with a few Souldiers, as Phaſælus did the walls. Theſe brothers aſſiſting each other, aſſaulted their enemies, in the Suburbs forced many thouſands ſands of them to flie, ſome into the City, and ſome into the Temple, and others into a rampire that was near the City.

Hereupon Antigonus deſired that Pacorus, the General of the Parthians might be admitted to make peace between them: which Phaſælus aſſented to, and Pacorus perſwaded him to go with him as an Ambaſſador to Barzapharnes (another General of the Parthians) laying an ambuſh for him by the way: Phaſælus aſſented, though much againſt the mind of his Brother Herod, and was willing to go with Pacorus, and took Hyrcanus along with him. Pacorus leaving two hundred Horſemen with Herod, and ten whom they called Eleutheri, went along with the Ambaſſadors. And as ſoon as they were come into Galile, Barzapharnes entertained them with a cheerful countenance, and beſtowed gifts upon them, but watched an opportunity to intrap them: and ſo Phaſælus was brought with his Company to a place near the Sea-ſide called Ecdippon; where Ophellus, a rich Syrian, underſtanding of the treachery intended againſt them, offered Phaſælus ſome Ships to carry him away: But he unwilling to leave Hyrcanus, and his Brother Herod in danger, expoſtulated with Barzapharnes about the injury offered to them who were Ambaſſadors, who ſwore that theſe things were not true, and preſently went to Pacorus. The Parthians falſhood.

No ſooner was he gon, but Hyrcanus and Phaſælus were clapped up in Priſon, much deteſting the perfidiouſneſs of the Parthians: and an Eunuch alſo was ſent to Herod with a command to ſurprize him if he could get him out of Jeruſalem. Herod having intelligence what had happened to his Brother, taking with him ſuch forces as he had in readineſs, and his Mother Cybele, his Siſter Salome, his Wife Mariamne, and his Wives Mother Alexandra, the Daughter of Hyrcanus, and his yougeſt Brother Pheroras, with their Servants, he privately by Night took his flight into Idumæa. Herod flies from Jeruſalem.

In their journey, his Mother, by the overthrow of her Coach, was in great danger of death, and Herod, fearing leaſt the enemies ſhould overtake them whileſt they ſtayed there, drew forth his Sword, thinking to kill himſelf: But being reſtrained by thoſe which ſtood by, he went towards Maſſada, a very ſtrong place, which is ſeated in Arabia, and Paleſtine, by the neareſt way that he could poſſible: The Parthians firſt, and alſo the Jews purſuing him by that he was ſixty furlongs from the City, but he repelled them both in fight. He would have killed himſelf,

The next day after Herod had fled from Jeruſalem, the Parthians plundered the City, and the Kings Houſe; only the Treaſure of Hyrcanus which was three hundred Talents, remained untouched. A great part alſo of Herods ſubſtance which he had not carried away with him, they ſiezed upon; and not ſatisfied therewith, they harrized all the Country alſo, and razed the rich City of Mariſſa. Jeruſalem plundered.

Antigonus being thus ſetled in Judæa by the Parthians, he received into his cuſtody Hyrcanus, and Phaſælus, who were Priſoners: yet he was much grieved that the Women were got away, whom he had intended to deliver to the Parthians, together with the money which he had promiſed to give them. Being afraid alſo leſt Hyrcanus ſhould again by the favour of the People be reſtored to his Kingdom and Prieſt-hood, he cut off his ears, thereby rendring him unfit for the Prieſt-hood, the Law forbidding that any one who wanted a member ſhould approach to the Altar. Lev. 21.17, &c. Antigonus made King of the Jews. Cuts off Hyrcanus ears.

Phaſælus knowing that his death was determined ſought to lay violent hands upon himſelf, but being hindred by reaſon of his chains, he daſhed out his brains againſt a ſtone: Yet before he was quite dead, hearing by a Woman that his Brother Herod was eſcaped, he greatly rejoyced that there was one left to revenge his death. The Parthians, though they miſſed of the Women, Phaſælus kills himſelf.

Women, which they moſt of all deſired, yet having ſetled all things at Jeruſalem with Antigonus, when they departed, took Hyrcanus along with them Priſoner into Parthia.

Herod flies to Malchus King of Arabia.

Herod not hearing of his Brother Phaſælus his death, went to Malchus, the King of the Arabians [Nabathæans] who were obliged to him by many favours he had done them, purpoſing ſo ſoon as poſſibly he could to redeem his Brother for three hundred Talents from the enemy: For which cauſe he carried along with him young Phaſælus, his Brothers Son, about ſeven years old, to leave him for a pledg with the Arabians: But there met him ſome that were ſent from Malchus, to command him to depart from the bounds of his Kingdom, for ſo the Parthians had required: Yet he pretended that he did it by the requeſt of his Noble men, purpoſing to cozen him of that great treaſure which his father Antipater had committed to his truſt. Herod taking this very heavily, turned aſide into a certain Temple, where he had left many of his followers: but the next day, when he came to Rhinocorura he heard of his Brothers death.

Is rejected by him.

Malchus, upon ſecond thoughts, repenting of his ingratitude, ſent in all haſt after to Herod: but the Meſſengers could not overtake him: for he was gon far on his journey towards Peluſium, where the Marriners that were ſailing to Alexandria, refuſed to take him in. There, by the Magiſtrates of the City he was honourably intertained, and brought to Cleopatra, the Queen, who could not prevail with him to ſtay at that time, becauſe he was haſtening to Rome, though the Sea was very tempeſtuous, and as then the affairs in Italy were in no very good condition. As he ſailed from Alexandria towards Pamphilia; he met with a very great ſtorm, which made him caſt overboard much of his ſubſtance, and ſcarcely got he to Rhodes.

Herod goes into Egypt.

From thence into Italy.

He comes to Rhodes.

At Rhodes two of his greateſt Friends met him, Sappinas, and Ptolomæus, and finding that the City had ſuffered much in the War againſt Caſſius, he could not be reſtrained, no not by his preſent poverty, but that he would do ſomething for it, even beyond his ability: After which he cauſed a Frigot to be built, and embarking himſelf with his Friends in it, he arrived at Brunduſium in Italy, and ſom thence went to Rome, declaring unto M. Anthony thoſe things that had happened to himſelf and his Family, and that thorough many tempeſts, and dangers he had retired unto him, as his only refuge, in whom all his hope lay.

So into Italy.

Anthony favours him.

This Narration moved compaſſion in Anthony, remembring alſo his Fathers friendſhip towards him, but that which prevailed moſt, was the promiſe of a great ſum ofmony if he would help him to the Kingdom: Anthony alſo hated Antigonus as a man of a turbulent Spirit, and an enemy to the Romans. Cæſar alſo partly for that Antipater [Herods Father] had been fellow Souldier with his Father in Ægypt, and for other curteſies which he had ſhewed him, and partly to gratifie Anthony, whom he ſaw to be well affected to Herod, was willing to promote his deſigns: whereupon the Senate being aſſembled, Meſſala, and Atpatinus, brought in Herod, and after they had praiſed him, reckoning up the love, and ſervices that both he, and his Father had done for the Romans, and accuſing Antigonus both for former crimes, and for that newly he had received the Kingdom of the Jews from the Parthians in contempt of the Romans: and when Anthony alſo had declared to the Senate how much conducing it was to the Parthian War, then in hand, that Herod ſhould be made King: Antigonus was declared an enemy, and the Kingly Title was devolved upon Herod by their general ſuffrage.

And Cæſar.

The Senate make him King.

Whileſt theſe things were tranſacting at Rome, Ventidius, the Roman General eaſily recovered Paleſtine, Antigonus, the King thereof, being much afraid of him, and he exacted great ſums of money from all men, but eſpecially from Antigonus, who in Herods abſence had beſieged his Family in Maſſada, which which place, though it abounded with all other kinds of proviſion, yet it wanted water, ſo that Joſeph, Herods Brother, who commanded in chief there, with two hundred of his Friends intented to flie to the Arabians; for that he heard that Malchus now repented him of his former ingratitude towards Herod: But the very Night a great ſhore of Rain falling filled their Ciſterns, which made him change his purpoſe, and the next morning, making a gallant ſalley forth, they killed many of Antigonus his men. A ſpecial providence.

Herods Family beſieged.

Ventidius encamped near to Jeruſalem, and drew from Antigonus a ſufficient ſum of money, and to the intent that his fraudulent dealing ſhould not be diſcovered, he left one Silo there, with part of his Forces under a pretence of helping Joſeph, who alſo was to be feed by Antigonus, leſt he ſhould raiſe him ſome new troubles; which Antigonus ſubmitted to, hoping that the Parthians would ſhortly come to his aid.

After the Senate was diſmiſſed, Anthony, and Cæſar went out, leading Herod between them, who was alſo accompanied with the Conſuls, and other Magiſtrates, and ſo they went all together up into the Capitol, to ſacrifice to the Gods, and to place there the Decree of the Senate: and the New King, the firſt day of his Reign, was Feaſted by Anthony, and within ſeven days after he was by Anthony diſmiſſed out of Italy, honoured with this unexpected felicity. He returns homeward.

Shortly after Anthony being to go to the Parthian War, had all his Acts, as well paſt as to come, confirmed by the Senate, whereupon he ſent to ſome Kings by his own authority to pay certain Tributes to him, and he made Herod King both of the Idumæans, and Samaritans. Herods Kingdom enlarged.

Herod being returned out of Italy to Ptolemais, quickly gathered ſtore of Souldiers, both of ſuch as he hired, as alſo of his own Countrymen, paſſing through Galile againſt Antigonus: being aided by Silo, and Ventidius, who were commanded by Anthony to conduct him into his Kingdom; and as he went on, his Forces daily increaſed, and all Galile, except a few, ſided with him.

As Herod was marching towards Maſſada, where he was neceſſarily to relieve his Kindred, Joppa would not let him paſs, wherefore he was to reduce it, leſt he ſhould leave ſo ſtrong a place behind him in his paſſage to Jeruſalem: which occaſion Silo taking hold on (for he was not yet come to Herod) diſlodged his Army from about Jeruſalem, whom the Jews purſued, but Herod meeting him with a ſmall party ſaved Silo, who fought very cowardly. Herod relieves Silo.

After he had taken Joppa, he haſted to Maſſada to raiſe the Siege, and his Army encreaſed daily, many of the Country people joyning with him: and having relieved his Friends in Maſſada, he haſted towards Jeruſalem; and though Antigonus had laid ambuſhments for him in divers places, yet he drew near to the City, Silo following, and the Jews being terrified with his power. When he had encamped on the Weſt ſide of the City, they upon the Walls ſhot at him with Darts and Arrows: others alſo ſallying out in Troops, beat up ſome of his quarters. Then did Herod by an Herald proclaim round about the Walls, that he came for the publick good, and to preſerve the City from ruin, and withal, he promiſed pardon for all former actings. On the other ſide Antigonus, directing his Speech to Silo, and the Romans, told them, that it was unjuſtly done of the Senate to give the Kingdom to Herod, a private man, and an Idumæan, and ſo but an half-Jew, whereas by cuſtom it was to be given to one of the High-Prieſts line. His men alſo ſhooting valiantly from the Towers, drave the enemy from the Walls: and Silo (who was beforehand bribed by Antigonus) ſuborned ſome of his Souldiers to demand of Herod more proviſions, and larger pay, and to be withdrawn into commodious Winter-quarters. The Army being thus troubled, and beginning to diſlodg, Herod intreated the Captains, and Souldiers of Silo's Army, that they would not now forſake him, he being ſent both by Anthony, Cæſar, and the Senate, to take poſſeſſion He takes Joppa. Beſieges Jeruſalem.

poſſeſſion of the Kingdom; and withal he ſent into all the Country, and brought in ſuch ſtore of proviſions, that there was no occaſion for Silo, and his Army to complain. He commanded his Friends alſo that inhabited about Samaria, that they ſhould bring to Jericho Corn, Wine, Oyl, Cattle, and other neceſſaries, that the Souldiers for the future might have plenty.

Antigonus having intelligence hereof, ſent forth ſome to intercept the Victualers: but Herod taking with him ſome Cohorts, viz. five of the Romans and as many of the Jews, with ſome forreign Souldiers, and a few Horſe mixed with them, flew out to Jericho, and found the City forſaken of the Inhabitants, and five hundred Families of them were fled to the tops of the Hills, whom he took, and diſmiſſed in ſafety: But the Romans entring the City, plundered it, where they found all ſorts of precious movables. Herod leaving a Garriſon there, returned to his Camp before Jeruſalem, and then diſmiſſed the Romans, ſending them into Winter-quarters in Idumæa, Samaria, and Galile, which Countries were lately ſurrendred to them: But Antigonus by bribes obtained of Silo, that part of the Roman Army ſhould be quartered in Lydda, currying thereby favour with Anthony: and thus the Romans lived in plenty, and without bearing Arms.

Herod takes Jericho.

His activity.

But Herod could not be idle: For ſending his Brother Joſeph into Idumæa, with a thouſand Foot, and four hundred Horſe, himſelf went into Samaria, and there ſetled his Mother, and the reſt of his kindred, whom he had drawn out of Maſſada: Then did he march into Galile, where he ſurprized ſome places which were yet held by Antigonus his Garriſons: and when he came to Sephorus in ſnowy weather, Antigonus his men fled away, and there he found great ſtore of neceſſaries. From thence he ſent a Troop of Horſe, and three Companies of Foot againſt ſome Thieves that dwelt in Caves, not far from the Village Arbela, by which means he kept them from doing miſchief. Then he marched with his whole Army, whom the enemy met, and encountred reſolutely, inſo much as Herods left wing began to waver, till himſelf coming on with the main body, encouraged his own men to ſtand their ground, and cauſed the enemy to flee, whom he followed as far as Jordan: by which Victory he brought all Galile into his ſubjection, except thoſe that dwelt in the Caves: and ſo giving to every one of his Souldiers a hundred and fifty Drachmes, and more to his Captains, he diſmiſſed them into their Winter-quarters.

He purſues the Thieves.

Subdues Galile.

There came Silo to him with his Captains who had wintered with Antigonus, and who now would maintain them no longer, commanding the Inhabitants thereabout to ſpoil the Country of all Victuals, and to retire to the mountains that the Romans might periſh through famine: But Herod committed the charge of proviſions to his Brother Pheroras, and withal, commanded him to rebuild Alexandrium, who in a ſhort time furniſhed the Souldiers with abundance of all neceſſaries, and built again Alexandrium that had formerly been diſmantled.

Alexandrium rebuilt.

Ventidius in Syria ſent for Silo to aſſiſt him againſt the Parthians, but commanded him firſt to aſſiſt Herod, and to bring Herod, and the reſt of the Auxiliaries of thoſe Provinces along with him: But Herod ſending Silo to him, went himſelf with his Souldiers againſt the Thieves that lived in Caves; and in the mean time made Ptolomy Governour of the Country, which fell out ill for him; for being ſet upon by thoſe who had formerly diſturbed the Country, he was ſlain by them, after which they retired into Fens, and inacceſſible places, infeſting with their inrodes, and robberies all the Country: But when Herod returned, he made them pay dear for their Thieveries: for ſome of them he killed, others flying to their fortified places he purſued, and having taken them, put them to death, and razed their ſtrong holds, and fined the Cities in an hundred Talents.

Ptolomy ſlain.

Herod beats the Thieves.

About this time Anthony commanded Ventidius to ſend Macharas to aid Herod with two Legions, and a thouſand Horſe; but when he came, being corrupted corrupted by Antigonus with money, he would needs go to him, againſt Herods mind, under a colour of obſerving his actions: but Antigonus ſuſpecting him, denied him admittance, and drave him away with ſlings, whereby he found that Herod had given him good counſel, and blamed himſelf for not following of it: whereupon he retired to Emmaus, and in his march killed all the Jews that came to hand, without diſtinction of Friend or Foe, being provoked by Antigonus his dealing: At which cruelty Herod was much grieved, intending to go to Anthony, and ſaying, that he needed other manner of men than thoſe who did him more hurt than his enemies, whereas of himſelf he was able to ſubdue Antigonus: but Macheras overtaking him, intreated him to ſtay, or if he was reſolved to go on, yet at leaſt that he would leave with him his Brother Joſeph, that with their united Forces they might make war upon Antigonus. Thus, after much intreaty, he was reconciled to Macheras, and ſo leaving his brother Joſeph with his Army, he commanded him in his abſence, that he ſhould not put all to the hazard of a Battel; but himſelf haſted to Anthony, whom he found beſieging Samoſata, a City near to the River Euphrates, and carried along with him ſome Auxiliaries both of Horſe and Foot. Anthony entertained him very honourably, and much praiſed him for his valour.

Macheras his cruelty.

Herod goes to Anthony.

Joſeph, unmindful of his Brothers command, taking with him his own Forces, and five Roman Cohorts that were given him by Macheras, went towards Jericho, purpoſing to reap the enemies Corn, now that it was ripe, and encamped in the mountains, becauſe the Roman Cohorts were raw Souldiers, moſt of them being lately taken up in Syria: yet there he was circumvented by the enemy, in the midſt of thoſe faſtneſſes, and having loſt ſix Cohorts, he himſelf valiantly fighting, was ſlain: Antigonus being in a rage, cauſed the dead body of Joſeph to be whipped, though Pheroras, his Brother, offered fifty Talents to have redeemed it: After this loſs, the Galileans revolting from their Governours, drowned thoſe that were of Herods party in the Lake: In Idumea alſo there were many innovations.

Joſeph is ſlain.

Anthony having made peace with his enemy, commanded Caius Soſius to aſſiſt Herod againſt Antigonus, with two Cohorts: When Herod came to Daphne, the Suburbs of Antioch, he heard of his Brother Joſephs death, which cauſed him to haſten his journey, and coming to Mount Libanus, he took thence with him eight hundred men, and one Cohort of the Romans, and ſo came to Ptolemais, from whence in the night he paſſed with his Army through Galilee: Here his enemies met him, whom he overcame in fight, and forced them into the Caſtle, from whence they had iſſued the day before: Them he aſſaulted, but was compelled to deſiſt, by reaſon of the extremity of the weather, and to retreat into ſome neighbouring Villages: but upon the coming of another Cohort from Anthony, they in the Caſtle were ſo affrighted, that they forſook the ſame by night: Herod then haſtned to Jericho, purpoſing to revenge his Brothers death: and being come thither, he feaſted his Nobles, and the feaſt being ended, and his gueſts diſmiſſed, he retired into his chamber, and preſently the room wherein they had ſupped, being now empty of company fell down without hurting any, which made many to think, that ſurely Herod was beloved of God, who had ſo miraculouſly preſerved him.

Herod overcomes his enemies.

A ſpecial providence.

The next day, ſix thouſand of the enemies came down from the Mountains to fight with him, and their forlorn-hope with darts and ſtones ſo terrified the Romans, and ſome of Herods Souldiers, that they fled, and Herod himſelf received a wound in his ſide.

Antigonus, deſiring to have his ſtrength ſeem greater than it was, ſent one of his Captains, named Pappus, with ſome forces into Samaria, whilſt himſelf went againſt Macheras. In the mean time Herod took in five Towns, and therein put two thouſand of the Garriſon Souldiers to the ſword; and ſetting the Towns on fire, he went againſt Pappus, and was ſtrengthened by many that came to him out of Jericho and Judea: yet was the enemy ſo confident, that he would joyn battel with him; but in fight, Herod overcame them; and being inflamed with a deſire to revenge his Brothers death, he purſued them that fled, ſlew many of them, and followed them into a Village, and there ſlew many more of them, who retreated into houſes, the reſt fled: After which Victory, Herod had preſently gone to Jeruſalem, and put an end to the war, had not the ſharpneſs of the Winter hindred him; for now Antigonus bethought himſelf to leave the City, and fly elſewhere for ſafety.

Herod beats his enemies.

A ſpecial providence.

Herod in the evening, when he had diſmiſſed his Friends to refreſh themſelves, as yet hot in his Armour, went into a chamber, attended with one only ſervant, to waſh himſelf, wherein ſome of his enemies armed, whom fear had forced thither, were hidden; and whilſt he was naked, and waſhing himſelf, firſt one, and then a ſecond, and a third, ran out armed with naked ſwords in their hands, ſo aſtoniſhed, that they were glad to ſave themſelves, without profering the leaſt hurt to the King. The next day, Herod, amongſt others, cut off Pappus his head, and ſent it by way of revenge for his Brothers death, to his Brother Pheroras; for it was Pappus that with his own hand had ſlain Joſeph.

Pappus ſlain.

Herod beſieges Jeruſalem.

Herod, in the beginning of the third year after he had been declared King at Rome, coming with an Army to Jeruſalem, encamped near the City, and from thence removing to that place where the Walls were fitteſt to be aſſaulted, he pitched his Tents before the Temple, intending to attempt them, as Pompey had done in times paſt: and having encompaſſed the place with three Bulworks, by the help of many workmen he raiſed his batteries; fetching materials from all places thereabouts, and appointing fit men to overſee the work; and then himſelf went to Samaria to ſolemnize his Marriage with Mariamne, the Daughter of Alexander, the Son of Ariſtobulus, who was formerly betrothed to him.

Marries Mariamne.

The Marriage ceremony being over, Soſius came with an Army of Horſe and Foot, being ſent by Anthony to the aid of Herod, and Herod alſo took a great party with him from Samaria to Jeruſalem; ſo that the whole Army being come together, conſiſted of eleven Legions of Foot, and ſix thouſand Horſe, beſides the Syrian Auxiliaries, which were very many, and ſo they pitched on the North-ſide of the City. Over this great Army were two Generals, Soſius and Herod, who purpoſed to diſplace Antigonus, as an enemy to the people of Rome, and to eſtabliſh Herod in the Kingdom, according to the Decree of the Senate.

Herods great Army.

The Jews being gathered together out of the whole Countrey, and ſhut up within the Walls, made a valiant reſiſtance, boaſting much of the Temple of the Lord, and ſaying, that the Lord would not forſake his people in the time of danger. By ſecret ſallies alſo they burnt up, and ſpoiled all proviſion without the City both for Man and Horſe, whereby the Beſiegers began to be pinched: but Herod provided againſt their excurſions, by placing ambuſhments in convenient places, and ſending parties to fetch in proviſion from afar off, ſo that in a ſhort time the Army was well furniſhed with all neceſſaries.

The Jews fight valiantly.

By reaſon of the multitude of Workmen, the three bulworks were ſoon finiſhed, it being Summer time, ſo that no untemperateneſs of weather hindred them: and with his Engines Herod often battered the Walls, and left nothing unaſſayed: but the beſieged fought valiantly, and were every way as active and ſubtile to make void his endeavours; often ſallying forth, and firing their Works, both thoſe that were finiſhed, and others that were but begun, and coming to handiſtrokes with the Romans, they were nothing inferiour to them, but only in Martial skill.

The

The Sabbatical year now coming, brought a Famine upon the beſieged Jews, notwithſtanding which, they built a new Wall within that which was beaten down by the battering Rams, and ſo countermined the Enemies mines, that many times they came to Handyſtrokes under ground, and making uſe of deſpair inſtead of courage, they held it out unto the laſt, though Pollio, the Phariſee, and Samias his Diſciple, adviſed them to receive Herod into the City, ſaying, that they could not avoid his being their King by reaſon of their ſins. A Famine in Jeruſalem.

They held out the ſiege for five moneths ſpace, though there was ſo great an Army before the City: but at length twenty of Herods choiceſt Souldiers got upon the Wall, and after them the Centurions of Soſius. So that the firſt Wall was taken on the forti'th day, and the ſecond on the fiftieth, and ſome Galleries about the Temple were burnt down, which Herod charged (though falſly) upon Antigonus, thereby to bring him into hatred with the people. When the outward part of the Temple was taken, and the lower City, the Jews fled into the inward part of the Temple, and the upper City: and fearing leſt they ſhould be hindred from offering their daily Sacrifices unto God, they ſent Ambaſſadours unto Herod, to deſire leave, that ſuch Beaſts only might be brought in which were to be ſacrificed: This requeſt Herod eaſily granted, hoping that by this means they would leave their obſtinacy, and ſubmit to him. But perceiving that this courteſie prevailed not, and that they were ſtill reſolute to continue the Sovereignty in Antigonus, he gave a general aſſault and won the City, on the Kalends of January, on the ſecond moneth, Ciſlu, being the day on which the Jews were wont to celebrate a Faſt in commemoration of the holy Rowl that was burnt by Jehoiakim. Jeruſalem taken by Herod.

The City being taken by aſſault, all places were filled with murthers: the Romans being incenſed againſt the Jews for holding out ſo long; and the Herodian Jews endeavouring to extirpate the contrary faction; ſo that there were continual ſlaughters in the Porches and Houſes; yea, the reverence of the Temple, not ſaving the ſuppliants: They ſpared neither age nor ſex, nor ſo much as the little children: and though the Conquerour Herod beſought, and intreated them to forbear, yet none would hear, or obey him, but as if they had been mad, they proceeded in their cruelty. Cruelty.

Antigonus coming down from the upper City, fell at Soſius his feet, who nothing pittying his miſerable condition, inſulting over him, calling him Madam Antigonuus, and withall caſt him into priſon, and ſet keepers about him. Antigonus impriſoned.

And whereas a multitude of Strangers, that Herod had hired, came ruſhing in, not into the Temple only, but even into the Sanctuary, ſome he thought to reſtrain by intreaty, others by threats, and ſome by force, judging his Victory worſe than if he had been overthrown, if any of thoſe things which were not lawful to be ſeen, were expoſed to the view of the prophane multitude. He reſtrained alſo the plundering of the City, as much as in him lay; intreating Soſius to do the like, asking, if the Romans would make him King of a Wilderneſs, the City being ſo waſted by rapines and murthers: Soſius anſwered, that the Souldiers deſired the plunder of the City, in regard of their hard ſervice in the ſiege: To which Herod replied, that he would recompence every man out of his own Treaſury; and making good his promiſe, he freed the City from further miſery: For he beſtowed gifts liberally upon the Souldiers, and proportionably upon the Commanders, and bountifully upon Soſius: whereupon, Soſius offering a Crown of Gold unto GOD, withdrew out of the City, leading Antigonus a Priſoner along with him to Anthony. Herod ſaves the City. Rewards the Romans.

Herod being thus ſetled in Jeruſalem, he advanced thoſe of his own faction, and daily put to death them of the contrary: Amongſt whom, he ſlew all Herod's cruelty.

thoſe of the Sanhedrim, who had accuſed him of a capital crime, before he was King, ſparing only Pollio the Phariſee, and Samias, his Diſciple, whom he highly honoured.

Then did he gather together all the Regal Ornaments, and much ſilver and gold, which he exacted from rich men, all which he gave to Anthony and his Souldiers. He put to death alſo forty and five of Antigonus his chief Noble men, ſetting watches at their doors, that none of them might be carried out under pretence of being dead: and what gold or ſilver ſoever was found, was all carried to Herod, ſo that there was no end of the peoples miſeries, the covetouſneſs of the needy Conquerours conſuming all their eſtates. The fields alſo lay untilled, becauſe it was the Sabbatical year, in which it was unlawful to ſow the ground.

Who were ſpectators of it,

Of theſe miſerable times, amongſt others, were ſpectators, Zacharias the Prieſt, with his Wife Elizabeth: Of the relicts of Davids ſtock, Hely and Joſeph: Anna alſo the Propheteſs of the Tribe of Aſer, and Simeon the juſt, who received an anſwer from the Holy Ghoſt, that he ſhould not ſee death, till he had ſeen the Lord Chriſt. Luk. 2.26.

Anthony being thus poſſeſſed of Antigonus, intended to keep him Priſoner to adorn his Triumph; but Herod feared, that if Antigonus was brought to Rome by Anthony, he might there contend with him before the Senate for the Kingdom: conſidering alſo how the Nation of the Jews hated him, and favoured Antigonus; he thereupon gave great ſums of money to Anthony, to cut off his head, which accordingly he did at Antioch: Antigonus being the firſt King that was thus put to death by the Romans: and in him ended the Principality of the Haſmonæans: It being from the Captainſhip of Judas Maccabæus to the death of Antigonus, an hundred twenty ſix years, and two or three moneths; and by this means, Herod, a ſtranger, got the Kingdom, and was totally freed from his fears.

Anthony ſlew Antigonus.

Hyrcanus, (as we heard before) being carried Priſoner to Phraates King of the Parthians; he intreated him courteouſly for the Nobility of his Deſcent, and after a time, freeing him from Priſon, he ſuffered him to live in Babylon, where were great ſtore of Jews, who honoured him no leſs than as their King and High-Prieſt: and not only they of Babylon, but all the reſt of the Nation of the Jews did the like; who in old time had been carried captive beyond the River Euphrates, by the Aſſyrians, of whom there were many millions. But Hyrcanus hearing that Herod was made King of the Jews, he began to caſt his hopes that wayes, expecting favour from Herod, whoſe life he had ſaved, when he was called in queſtion before the Sanhedrim. He conſulted therefore with the Jews that came to viſit him, about his return into Judea, who by all means diſſwaded him from it, yet could they not prevail with him. Beſides, Herod deſired by all means to get the poor old man into his clutches, and thereupon wrote to him to get leave of Phraates and the Jews, that he might return, and that they would not envy him the joynt rule with his Son in Law, the time being now come, wherein he could requite the favours that Hyrcanus had ſhewed him, in being his nouriſher and preſerver. He ſent alſo his Ambaſſadour to Phraates with great Preſents, intreating him that he would not hinder him from being thankful to him that had deſerved ſo well of him. Hyrcanus being forward of himſelf, diſmiſſed by the Parthians, and honourably furniſhed by the Jews for the expences of his journey, he came at laſt to Herod, who entertained him with all honour, gave him the upper hand in all Aſſemblies, and the more honourable place at all Feaſts, calling him Father, hereby to delude him, leſt he ſhould ſuſpect any treachery.

Hyrcanus honoured in Babylon.

Herods ſubtilty.

Herod providing that none of the Nobility ſhould be created High-Prieſt, ſent to Babylon for a Prieſt of baſe Parentage, whom formerly he had been acquainted with, of the race of thoſe Prieſts that had been carried away beyond Hananeel made High-Prieſt.

Eu-

Euphrates, whoſe name was Ananelius, or Hananeel, and to him he gave the High-Prieſthood.

This Alexandra the Daughter of Hyrcanus, the Wife of Alexander, the Son of Ariſtobulus, and Mother-in-Law of Herod, took in ill part; for that Ariſtobulus her Son, and Brother of Mariamne, was neglected, and another from a ſtrange place ſhould be made High-Prieſt: whereupon ſhe wrote to Cleopatra Queen of Egypt, and Anthonies darling, that ſhe would procure the High-Prieſthood of Anthony for her Son. Cleopatra neglected her requeſt; but ſhortly after, Dellius, a friend of Anthonies, coming into Iudea, perſwaded her to ſend the Pictures of her Son Ariſtobulus, and of her Daughter Mariamne to Anthony, who then would deny her nothing: This ſhe aſſented to, and ſent them by Dellius, who told Anthony, that they ſeemed rather to be of a Divine, than of a humane race. Alexandra takes it ill.

Anthony was much inflamed herewith, yet thought it undecent to ſend for a Lady that was married to Herod, ſhunning alſo the jealouſie of Cleopatra: whereupon he wrote to Alexandra, to ſend her Son to him, under ſome honeſt pretence: But theſe things coming to the ears of Herod, he thought it not ſafe that Ariſtobulus, now in the flower of his age, being but ſixteen, ſhould be ſent to Anthony, the moſt potent man amongſt the Romans, and very much given to his Luſts. Wherefore he wrote back, that if the youth did but ſtep out of the Kingdom, all the Country would be up in Arms; the Iews hoping for ſome innovations under a new King, and by this means he ſatisfied Anthony. Anthony ſends for Ariſtobulus.

Herod being continually moleſted with the intreaties of his Wife Mariamne, that he would give the High-Prieſthood to her Brother Ariſtobulus, it being his right, he called a Council of his Friends, to whom he inveighed againſt his Mother-in-Law Alexandra, as if ſhe had privately wrought Treaſon againſt his Kingdom, and had endeavoured by Cleopatra's means to tranſlate it to young Ariſtobulus; yet, leſt he ſhould ſeem to neglect both his piety to her, and the reſt of that Kindred, he told them, he would now reſtore the Prieſthood to her Son, which hitherto Ananelius had ſupplied, by reaſon of the young mans tender years: Alexandra being herewith overjoyed, and withall grieved that ſhe was ſuſpected, fell a weeping, clearing her ſelf of thoſe acculations, and gave him many thanks for her Sons honour, promiſing that hereafter ſhe would be moſt obedient unto him. And thus Herod, in the life-time of Ananelius, gave the High-Prieſthood to Ariſtobulus, being then but ſeventeen years old. Ariſtobulus made High-Prieſt.

Yet Herod, fearing leſt his Mother-in-Law Alexandra ſhould ſeek occaſion to raiſe new troubles, confined her to the Palace, and commanded her to do nothing by her own authority: yea, he ſet ſo ſtrict a guard over her, that nothing was concealed from him of all ſhe did, to the very expences of her Table. This ſhe took very heavily, and wrote to Cleopatra, complaining of her hard condition, and deſired her to yield her aſſiſtance: Cleopatra adviſed her with her Son to fly to her into Egypt, which ſhe liked, and therefore provided two Coffins, the one for her ſelf, the other for her Son, commanding her ſervants, that were privy to the plot, to carry them out by night, and to convey them to a ſhip that was ready prepared to carry them into Egypt. This buſineſs Æſopus, one of her ſervants, blabbed to Sabbation, a friend of Alexanders, ſuppoſing that he had known all before: which, as ſoon as Sabbation knew, though hitherto he was an enemy of Herods, as being ſuſpected to have been in the plot of poyſoning his Father Antipater, he took this occaſion of being reconciled to the King, by diſcovering the matter, Herod being thus informed of the plot, diſſembled the matter till it was in execution, and then ſurprized her in her flight, and brought her back: Yet did he pardon her fault, not indeed daring to puniſh her, leſt thereby he ſhould Alexandra confined. She complains to Cleopatra. She is ſurprized by Herod.

ſhould diſcontent Cleopatra, that was willing to take any occaſion againſt him: wherefore, under a colour of a magnanimous ſpirit, he made ſhew as if he pardoned her out of meer clemency.

The Feaſt of Tabernacles being now come, the new High-Prieſt Ariſtobulus, being juſt paſt ſeventeen years old, was to offer Sacrifice according to the Law, and being clad in his Pontifical attire, he came to the Altar, and performed the Ceremony with all Decency, whoſe excellent beauty and ſtature, being higher than was uſual for his age, and carrying in his countenance the honour of his Lineage, drew the eyes, and love of all the multitude upon him; every one calling to mind the worthy and memorable actions of his Grand-father Ariſtobulus; and therefore, as overcome with affections towards him, they were ſo over-joyed, that they could not contain themſelves, but openly prayed for him, and wiſhed him all joy, and that more freely than was meet in thoſe jealous times, under ſuch a King, proclaiming openly, both the memory, and thanks they owed to the Family, for all the benefits they had received from it.

Ariſtobulus highly honoured.

As ſoon as the Feaſt was ended, Ariſtobulus was entertained at a Banquet by his Mother Alexandra: Herod alſo pretended favour to him, and enticed him into a convenient place to ſport with him after the manner of young men, and when they were hot and weary, and left their ſport, they walked out to the Fiſh-ponds, which were near the Court, to take the freſh air, where alſo they beheld ſome of the ſervants that were ſwimming: At laſt, by the perſwaſion of Herod, Ariſtobulus undreſt himſelf, and went in amongſt them: Then they, who were ſuborned by Herod, as it were in ſport and jeſt, ducked him as he was ſwimming, holding him under water, and never left off till they had drowned him. This was the end of Ariſtobulus, in the eighteenth year of his age, and in the firſt year of his High-Prieſthood, which immediately returned to Ananelus.

He is drowned.

The report of theſe things coming to the Women, they were all on an uprore, and did nothing but weep, and howl over the body of the young man: Yea, ſorrow overſpread the whole City, every one bewailing the calamity, as if it had been his own: But Herod endeavoured by all means to make the people believe, as if it had faln out by chance, without his privity, not only feigning ſorrow, but tears and grief alſo: and that he might the more comfort the Women, he buried the body in a moſt magnificent manner, being liberal in prodigality, in adorning his Monument, and in perfumes, and other precious things.

Herods ſubtilty.

But his Mother Alexandra knowing the Treaſon, though ſhe was oft ready to lay violent hands upon her ſelf, yet repreſſed her paſſion, ſeeming not to be ſuſpicious, till an opportunity of revenge might offer it ſelf.

And ſhortly after, ſhe wrote to Cleopatra of the treachery of Herod, and of the lamentable death of her Son. Cleopatra pitying her misfortune, took a particular care of this buſineſs, as if it had been her own, and never reſted from perſwading Anthony to revenge the young mans death; telling him that it was an unpardonable crime, that he, who by his help, enjoyed a Kingdom that was anothers right, ſhould rage ſo inſolently againſt the Family of the lawful Kings. Anthony being prevailed with hereby, when he came to Laodicea in Syria, ſent for Herod to come before him, to anſwer what ſhould be objected againſt him about the death of Ariſtobulus.

Alexandra complains to Cleopatra.

Herod, during the time of his abſence, committed the care of his Kingdom to his Unkle Ioſeph, privately commanding him, that if Anthony ſhould do him any miſchief, he ſhould preſently put his Wife Mariamne to death; pretending that he ſo loved her, that he ſhould eſteem it a great wrong, if any but himſelf ſhould enjoy her beauty, yea, though it was after his Death.

Herod queſtioned by Anthony.

When

When Herod came to Anthony, he ſo appeaſed him with rich Preſents, that he brought on purpoſe with him from Ieruſalem, and by his frequent conferences with him, that afterwards Cleopatra's inſtigations prevailed little: For Anthony ſaid, that it was not fit that a King ſhould be accountable for his actions, otherwiſe he would ceaſe to be a King: For having once given him the honour, the free exerciſe of his Kingly power was to be admitted unto him. He told Cleopatra alſo, that it was not fit for her too much to meddle with other mens matters. But cleared by his Bribes.

During Herods abſence, Ioſeph Governing the Kingdom, he had occaſion many times to converſe with Mariamne, partly upon buſineſs, and partly to do her honour; and in their diſcourſes there was often mention made how much Herod loved her, which diſcourſe was laughed at by the Ladies, eſpecially by Alexandra; But he was carried on with ſuch a deſire of proving the Kings love to them, that he told them what private command the King had given him, ſuppoſing this was an infallible argument of his love, becauſe he could neither endure to live without her, nor in death to be disjoyned from her: but the Ladies were not of his mind, rather abhorring the Tyranny of Herod, who, though he were dead, yet would he ſeek their lives.

Preſently after, a rumour was ſpread about the City, that Anthony had put Herod to death, which much troubled all the Court, eſpecially the Ladies: whereupon Alexandra perſwaded Ioſeph, that, taking them along with him, he ſhould fly to the Roman Legions that lay before the City, under the command of the Tribune Iulius, ſo that if any trouble aroſe in the City, they might be ſecured by the Romans; adding, that ſhe hoped if Mariamne came but once to the ſight of Anthony, ſhe might obtain any thing of him, yea, even the Kingdom, with whatſoever belonged to the Royal Family.

Whilſt theſe things were under debate, there came Letters from Herod, which daſhed all, ſignifying how Anthony had honoured him, both in the publick Aſſemblies, and inviting him to his Feaſts, and that, during the accuſations of Cleopatra: ſo that he feared her not for the time to come, but hoped ſhortly to return to them, Anthony having given Cæloſyria unto Cleopatra inſtead of Iudea, upon condition that ſhe ſhould not hereafter demand Iudea, nor trouble him any further about that buſineſs.

As ſoon as theſe Letters were received, the ſpeech about flying to the Romans vaniſhed, but yet their debate about it was not hid: For as ſoon as Herod had brought Anthony part of his way againſt the Parthians, he returned into Iudea, and immediately his Siſter Salome, and his Mother Cyprus told him what Alexandra's counſel was; neither was ſhe herewith contented, but ſhe accuſed her Husband Ioſeph, as if he had been too familiar with Mariamne: and this ſhe did out of an old grudge, becauſe the Queen (a woman of an high ſpirit) in their womanly brabbles, had upbraided her with her obſcure birth. Herods return.

Mariamne by her Oath aſſured Herod of her chaſtity, who told her again, how much he loved her; but ſhe replied, that it was not the part of a lover, to command that if he died, ſhe ſhould be put to death alſo. Herod judging that this ſecret could never be known, except ſhe had committed adultery with Ioſeph, had much ado to refrain from killing her immediately: but love overcoming his paſſion, he refrained; yed did he command Ioſeph to be put to death, without ſuffering him to plead for himſelf, Alexandra alſo he caſt into priſon, as the cauſe of all theſe evils. Ioſeph put to death.

Cleopatra having brought Anthony part of his way towards Parthia, returned towards Egypt, and by the way, was entertained by Herod, who aſſured unto her that part of Arabia which was granted unto her by Anthony, to which he added the revenues of Iericho, where are great ſtore of the beſt Date Trees, and where Balſom grows, which being a precious Oyntment only grows there, in two Gardens, both which are the Kings, the one of twenty acres, the other of leſs. Gardens of Balſom.

By

By this means Herod grew into great familiarity with Cleopatra, who ſought to allure him to her Luſt, either through her great intemperance, or becauſe ſhe ſought by this means to betray him; but though ſhe pretended love to him, yet Herod refuſed, and held a conſultation with his Friends about killing her, who diſſwaded him from it, and therefore having appeaſed her by great Preſents, and all manner of obſequiouſneſs, he accompanied her as far as Peluſium: yet fearing both her, and the People of the Jews, he reſerved the Caſtle as a refuge for himſelf, laying in as many Arms there, as were ſufficient for ten thouſand men.

Herod payed duely to Cleopatra the Tributes of Judea and Arabia, which Anthony had given to her, not thinking it ſafe to give her any occaſion of diſguſt againſt him.

Herod being now free from troubles, and having taken Hyrcanium, a Town which hitherto a Siſter of Antigonus had kept, the Actian War brake forth, between Auguſtus Cæſar and Mark Anthony, whereupon Herod made great preparation for the aſſiſting of Anthony, but he freed him from the trouble, telling him that he needed them not, and ſo diſmiſſing him, Herod returned home with a well-furniſhed Army, wherewith he invaded Arabia, going as far as Dioſpolis, at which place the Arabians met him, and after a fierce conflict, the Jews got the Victory.

Herod prepares to aſſiſt Anthony.

After this, Herod made many inrodes into Arabia, in the ſeventh year of his Reign, after the death of Antigonus, at which time the Actian War being begun, Judea was ſhaken with ſuch an Earthquake as never was the like before, in which ten thouſand men were overwhelmed, by the ruins of the houſes, yet the Souldiers received no dammage, becauſe they lay in the open fields. This being much aggravated by report, ſo emboldened the Arabians, that they laid hold on the Ambaſſadours of the Iews, who, in this their affliction came to demand peace, and ſlew them, and preſently prepared for War with all earneſtneſs.

A great Earthquake.

Herod hearing hereof, encouraged his men, offered Sacrifice according to the cuſtome, and ſo in all haſte marched with his Army over Iordan, and having incamped at Philadelphia, there the fight began, about the taking of a Caſtle that lay between him and the Arabians, in which the Iews got the better, and after continual skirmiſhes, forced the Arabians to flight, who in their haſte, treading upon one another, they loſt in all five thouſand men: the reſt were beſieged in their Camp, and extreamly wanting water, they ſent Ambaſſadours to Herod, who would not admit of them, and was more eager upon them, for offering but fifty Talents for their freedom: They being parched with continual thirſt, came out of their Camp by great companies, offering themſelves to the Iews, by which means they took five thouſand of them in five dayes; and at laſt, the reſt in the Camp came out to fight; but deſpairing of any good ſucceſs, there fell of them in the firſt conflict about ſeven thouſand more. By this overthrow the courage of the Arabians was tamed, and Herod was declared Governour of that Nation, and ſo returned home with great Glory.

Herod overcomes the Arabians.

The Actian War being finiſhed, wherein Cæſar finally overthrew Anthony, Alexandra hoped that Herod ſhould be ſeverely puniſhed by Cæſar, for aſſiſting Anthony againſt him; whereupon ſhe ſollicited her Father Hyrcanus, not any longer to ſuffer the affliction of their Family, but rather to reſerve himſelf for better times: For which end ſhe adviſed him to ſeek for protection and entertainment of Malchus the King of Arabia. Theſe ſollicitations her Father at firſt repulſed, but at laſt being overcome by her Womaniſh importunity, he ſent Letters to Malchus, by one Doſitheus a Friend of his, deſiring him to ſend ſome Horſemen to convey him to the Lake Aſphaltitis, which is diſtant from Ieruſalem about three hundred furlongs. This Doſitheus was Kinſman Alexandra's reſtleſneſs.

to

to Joseph, whom Herod had put to death, yet, to curry favour with the King, he shewed him the Letters: Herod thanked him, and withal desired one curtesie more, that he would seal up the Letters, and give them to Malchus, and bring his answer to him. This he did, and the Arabian sent back word, that he was ready to entertain Hyrcanus and his Family, and all the Jews that were of his Party, and that he would send a band of Souldiers to conduct them in safety, who should be obedient to Hyrcanus in all things. Herod having received this answer, called Hyrcanus and asked him if he had any confederacy with Malchus? who denying it, he produced the Letters in the Councel of the Sanhedrim, and commaded him to be put to death.

Herod having thus dispatched Hyrcanus, resolved to post unto Cæsar, and expecting no good from him, because of his great Friendship to Anthony, he was very jealous of Alexandra, lest, taking this opportunity, she should stir up the people to rebel, and so fill the Kingdom with domestical seditions. Wherefore committing the care of his Kingdom to his Brother Pheroras, he left his Mother Cyprus, and his Sister Salome, and all his kindred in the strong Castle of Massada: And commanded his Brother, that if any thing befel him otherwise than well, he should retain the Government of the Kingdom in his own hands: and because his Wife Mariamne, by reason of some differences, could not live with his Mother, he placed her with her Mother Alexandra in Alexandrion, committing the custody of them to his Treasurer Joseph, and to Sohemus, an Iturian, under a colour of doing them honour, but yet he gave them this command, that if they should certainly know that any sinister hap befel him, they should presently put both the Ladies to death, and to the uttermost of their power, keep the Kingdom for his Children, and his Brother Pheroras.

Herod goes to Cæsar.

His cruel command.

Herod having thus setled his affairs at home, posted to Rhodes to meet with Cæsar there, whither when he was come, laying only his Crown aside, but retaining other his Princely Ornaments, he was admitted into Cæsars presence, where, with great constancy, and magnanimity of Spirit, he freely confessed the love he bore to Anthony, as also the supplies he had sent him of Corn, and Money: adding moreover that he was ready with the same Faith to keep Friendship with Cæsar. This Cæsar exhorted him to, and restoring his Crown to him, exceedingly honoured him. Thus beyond all expectation, is Herod again confirmed in his Kingdom, both by the free gift of Cæsar, and also by a Decree of the Senate, which Cæsar procured for him: and Herod gave great Presents both to Cæsar himself, and to all his Friends about him, even above his ability, to shew the greatness of his mind.

Cæsar honours him.

During his absence, his Wife Mariamne, and his Mother Alexandra, took it very ill that they were shut up in that Castle as in a Prison, so that they could neither enjoy their own, nor make use of other mens goods: especially when by their feminine flatteries they had fished out of Sohemus, what Herod had commanded concerning them: She then began to wish that he might never return home, supposing that she should live a most intollerable life with him: all which she afterwards dissembled not, but openly confessed what it was that did afflict her. For Herod returning beyond all expectation, and relating to Mariamne what successes he had, she seemed not to regard them, and at all the caresses that he made her, she would sigh, so that Herod plainly perceived the hatred of his Wife against him, insomuch that himself was wavering between love, and hatred towards her.

His Wife and Mother are full of discontents.

Not long after Cæsar passing through Syria towards Egypt, Herod intertained him with all Royal magnificence at Ptolemais, and shewed all hospitality Herods bounty to Cæsar, and his Army.

tality towards his Army, giving them plenty of all ſorts of Victuals, by which means he was counted one of Cæſars chiefeſt Friends, and uſed to ride about with him when he muſtred his Army. He preſented him alſo and his Friends with a hundred and fifty Men, all clad in moſt ſumptuous, and rich apparel, yea, he ſuffered them to want nothing in their march to Peluſium, through barren places, and ſuch as wanted water, yet did he provide plentifully for them, with which the Souldiers were much delighted. He alſo preſented Cæſar with eight hundred Talents: yea, he gave ſuch ſatisfaction to all, that they confeſſed that it was greater than the Kingdom could afford.

Herod is jealous of his Wife.

Herod wavering between love and hatred towards his Wife Mariamne, was continually incenſed againſt her by the falſe accuſations of his Siſter Salome, and his Mother Cypros, who laboured to kindle his hatred and jealouſie againſt her: whereupon, probably he had proceeded rigorouſly with her, but that news came ſeaſonably that Anthony and Cleopatra were both dead, and that Cæſar had won Egypt, and was coming back, whom in all haſt he went to meet, and ſo left his Family as it was. At his departure he commended Sohemus to Mariamne, profeſſing that he owed him much reſpect for the care he had had of her: and gave to him alſo the Government of a part of Iudea.

He meets Cæſar.

Cæſar enlarges his Government.

Herod meeting with Cæſar before he was come out of Egypt, in confidence of his Friendſhip, ſpake freely to him, and was highly honoured by him: For he beſtowed upon him the four hundred Galatians, who were formerly of Cleopatra's Guard, to be his Guard, and reſtored to him that part of his Country which Cleopatra had ſeized upon, and added to his Kingdom Gadara, and Hippon, and Samaria; and by the Sea-ſide, Gaza, and Anthedon, and Ioppa, and the Tower of Straton, which added much ſplendour to his Kingdom.

Herods ſuſpicions of his Wife are encreaſed.

In Cæſars return through Syria, Herod conducted him as far as Antioch. At his return, for the ſpace of a whole year, ſuſpicions increaſed daily between him and his Wife Mariamne, ſhe neglecting his caraſſes, and oft upbraiding him either with the death of her Grand-father Hyrcanus, or her Father Ariſtobulus, ſo that Herod could ſcarce refrain from ſtriking her, and Salome by the noiſe, perceiving that Herod was much moved, ſhe ſent in the Butler, whom long before ſhe had ſuborned for that end, who told Herod that he was ſolicited by Mariamne to deliver him a love potion, which he had by him, but what it was he knew not. Herod hereupon examined the moſt faithful ſervant of Mariamne by torture, being aſſured that ſhe would attempt nothing without his privity, who not enduring the torments, confeſſed that ſhe was offended for ſomething that Sohemus had declared unto her, which when the King heard, he cryed out, that Sohemus had declared unto her, which when the King heard, he cryed out, that Sohemus, who had ever been moſt faithful both to him, and the Kingdom, would never have ſpoken of theſe things, had there not been ſome more ſecret familiarity between them than was fitting; and thereupon he commanded Sohemus to be apprehended and put to death; and having called his Friends to Counſel, he accuſed his Wife for practiſing to poyſon him, which he ſo aggravated, that all that were preſent perceived that he had a mind that ſhe ſhould be condemned, which was accordingly done by the general conſent of them all: and whereas they thought that the execution ſhould not be over ſpeedy, but rather that ſhe ſhould be ſecured in ſome of the Kings Caſtles, Salome exceedingly urged the King that ſhe ſhould preſently be put to death, for fear leſt there ſhould be ſome commotion among the People ſhe being alive and in Priſon: and thus was Mariamne brought to her death.

Mariamne condemned to death.

When

When her Mother Alexandra ſaw her going to execution, and conſidered that ſhe muſt look for the ſame at Herods hands, that ſhe might not ſeem to be guilty of the ſame crime, ſhe began to upbraid her Daughter as being wicked and ingrateful towards her Husband, ſaying, that ſhe deſerved death who durſt attempt ſo hainous an act. Whilſt ſhe counterfeited theſe things, and made as if ſhe would have pulled her Daughter by the hair, they that were preſent condemned her hypocriſie; but ſhe that was led to death returned her no anſwer, but refelled the falſe accuſation, with a reſolute countenance, and mind, and underwent her death without fear.

Her Mothers Hypocriſie.

Mariamnes Death.

She being dead, Herod began to be more inflamed with love towards her, often calling upon her Name, and lamenting her death beyond decency; and although he ſought to divert his grief by pleaſures, feaſtings, and drinking, yet all availed nothing. Whereupon he caſt off the care of his Kingdom, and ſo far gave up himſelf to ſorrow, that he would bid his Servants call Mariamne, as though ſhe were yet living.

Herods exceſſive grief for her.

As Herod was thus tormenting himſelf, there came a great Plague, which ſwept away a great part both of the Nobility, and Commons, every one judging that this Plague was ſent by God for the unjuſt death of the Queen. The Kings diſcontents being increaſed hereby, he at laſt hid himſelf in a ſolitary Wilderneſs under a pretence of hunting; where ſtill afflicting himſelf, he fell into a great ſickneſs, which was accompanied with an inflammation and great pain in his Neck, ſo that he began to rave; neither could any applications eaſe him, but rather made the diſeaſe more painful, ſo that thoſe about him began to deſpair of his life: and his Phyſicians, partly becauſe of the ſtubborneſs of the diſeaſe, and partly becauſe in ſo great danger there was not any free election of diet, they gave him leave to eat whatſoever he would.

A great Plague follows.

Herods Melancholy and ſickneſs.

Herod lying thus ſick in Samaria, and Alexandra being at Jeruſalem, ſhe endeavoured to get the two Caſtles of the City into her hands, the one adjoyning to the Temple, the other ſituate in the City: For which end ſhe ſollicited the Governours of them to deliver them up unto her, and to the Children of her and Mariamne, leſt that Herod being dead, they ſhould be ſeized upon by others: But they who had ever been faithful to Herod, were now much more diligent in their Office, both out of an hatred of Alexandra, and becauſe they thought it a great offence to deſpair of the recovery of their Prince. Hereupon they preſently ſent Meſſengers to Herod, to acquaint him with Alexandra's attempt, who thereupon commanded her to be ſlain. At length overcoming his diſeaſe, he recovered his ſtrength both of body and mind, but grew ſo cruel, that upon the leaſt occaſion he was ready to put any one to Death.

Alexandra's Treaſon and Death.

Herod grows cruel.

Salome, Herods Siſter, having been married to Coſſaborus an Idumean, a difference now ariſing betwixt them, ſhe, contrary to the cuſtom of the Jews, ſent him a Bill of Divorce, and came away to her Brother Herod, telling him that ſhe preferred his love before her tye to her Husband: the reaſon which ſhe pretended was, that Coſſaborus had practiſed ſome innovations with Lyſimachus, Antipater, and Doſitheus, confirming it from this, becauſe he had privily kept in his Country the Children of Bebas, now for the ſpace of twelve years from Herods taking of Ieruſalem: As ſoon as Herod heard this, he ſent ſome to their hiding places, and killed them, with many others, to the intent that none ſhould remain of the kindred of Hyrcanus: He alſo took out of the way all ſuch as excelled in any dignity, that he might do whatſoever ſeemed him good, there being none to reſiſt him.

Salome leaves her Husband and comes to Herod.

Herods cruelty.

Herod by theſe practiſes growing more ſecure, he began to degenerate more and more from his Country faſhions, violating them by foreign inventions.

He instituted Games to the discontent of the Jews.

For first he instituted Wrestlings every fifth year in the honour of Cæsar, for the exhibiting of which, he began to build a Theatre in Ierusalem, and an Amphitheatre in the plain, both of them very sumptuous for the Workmanship, but clean contrary to the Iewish customs: Yea he would have this solemnity to be inrolled, and to be proclaimed in the neighbouring Countries, and to remoter Nations, and by propounding greater rewards, he invited, not only those those were skilful Wrestlers, but also excellent Musicians, and such as Played on several Instruments. Yet that which above all troubled the Iews, were the Trophees, which being covered with Armour, they thought to be Images, forbidden by their Law; but Herod to satisfie them, commanded the Armour to be taken off, and shewed them that they were meer stocks of Wood, whereupon all their anger was turned into laughter.

A conspiracy against Herod.

Herod having many ways provoked the Jews, ten Citizens of Jerusalem made a Conspiracy against him, amongst whom one was blind, who made one, not because he could do any thing, but to shew how ready he was to suffer with those that defended their Country rights: Herod had appointed secret spies to discover such plots; one of which had fished this matter out, and acquainted Herod with it, who caused them to be apprehended, and when they were brought before him, with undaunted countenances they drew out their Weapons from under their Garments, protesting, that, not out of any private respect, but in the behalf of the publick weal, they had undertaken this conspiracy. Then were they led away, and put to death with all manner of tortures. Not long after, their accuser being hated of all men, was slain by some, and being cut in pieces, was thrown to the Dogs. Yet were the authors hereof concealed, till after long, and wearisome inquisitions, it was by torture wrung out from some silly Women who were privy to it. When Herod had thus found out the Authors, he punished them with death, and their whole Families.

The Conspirators are put to Death.

Herods cruelty.

He fortified Samaria, and built a Temple there.

Herod the better to secure himself from the seditions of the tumultuous people, in the thirteenth year of his Reign, began to fortifie Samaria, which was a days journey from Jerusalem, and called it Sebaste (or Augusta,) The circuit of it was twenty furlongs, in the midst whereof he built a Temple of a furlong and an half, which he wonderfully adorned, and so ordered, that many of the Souldiers, and of the neighbouring Nations came and dwelt there.

He built several Castles.

Herod also built another Cidadel to be as a bridle to the whole Nation, namely the Tower of Straton: Also in the great plain he built a Castle, and chose of his Horsemen by lot, to keep it. Another he built in Galile, and one in Peræa: which Castles being so conveniently disposed in several parts of the Country, took away from the people all opportunity of rebellion.

Plague, and Famine.

About this time very grievous calamities befel the Nation of the Jews. First there was a long Drought, after which followed a Famine: After the Famine, by reason of their ill diet, there came divers Sicknesses, and the Plague; and Herod, having not wherewithal to supply the publick wants, was forced to melt the Gold and Silver that was in his Pallace, not sparing any thing for the curiosity of the Workmanship: no not so much as the Vessels which were for his own daily use. These being turned into money, he sent to buy provisions into Ægypt, where Petronius was Governour under Cæsar, who though he was pestered with multitudes that repaired to him upon the like necessity, yet being Herods Friend, he gave his Servants leave to export Corn, and was assisting to them, both in the buying, and carriage of it.

Herods care to provide for the People.

When the Corn was brought to Herod, he was very careful to see it divided, divided, firſt to ſuch as had moſt need, and then becauſe there were many who by reaſon of old age, or ſome other weakneſs, were unable to dreſs it themſelves, he appointed them certain Bakers to provide their food for them: By this means he procured the good will of the people, and the praiſe of a prudent and provident Prince.

He provided alſo for his Subjects againſt the ſharpneſs of the Winter, taking care that none ſhould want clothing, their Cattel being dead, and Wool, and other materials failing. And when he had made proviſion for his own People, he took care alſo for the neighbouring Cities of the Syrians, to whom he allowed Seed for ſowing of their ground: and the Caſtles, and Cities; and thoſe of the common People, who had great Families, coming to him for ſuccour, he found a remedy for them alſo: Inſomuch that he gave to thoſe that were not his Subjects ten thouſand Cores of Corn, each Core containing ten Athenian buſhels. His bounty to ſtrangers.

As ſoon as the Corn was ripe for harveſt, Herod diſmiſſed fifty thouſand Men, whom he had fed in the time of Famine, into their own Countries: by which diligence he reſtored the almoſt ruined eſtate of his own Subjects, and did not a little relieve his Neighbours, who groaned under the ſame calamities.

At the ſame time alſo he ſent aid to Cæſar, to wit, five hundred choſen Men of his own Guard, whom Ælius Gallus led into the Arabian Wars, where they did moſt excellent ſervice. He ſends aid to Cæſar.

Herod alſo built himſelf a Pallace in Sidon, in which he built two very large and ſtately Houſes, with which the Temple it ſelf could in no wiſe compare, and called one of them by the name of Cæſar, and the other by the name of Agrippa. He built himſelf a Pallace.

Herod having removed from the Prieſthood Jeſus the Son of Phales, made Simon (a Prieſt of Jeruſalem, the Son of Boethus of Alexandria) Prieſt in his room, and took alſo his Daughter Mariamne to Wife, that was the moſt beautiful Virgin of that age. He makes a new High Prieſt: and marries Mariamne.

The marriage ſolemnities being over, he began to build another new Pallace, unto which he adjoyned a Town, which he called Herodian, in a place diſtant from Jeruſalem, about ſixty furlongs towards Arabia, in the place where he had overcome the Jews when he was thruſt out by the Arms of Antigonus. He built another Pallace.

He built alſo Sebaſte, and having finiſhed that, he began to build another moſt magnificent City in a place by the Sea-ſide, where Straton ſtood, which he called Cæſaria, and added to it an Haven of admirable work, equal in bigneſs to the Haven Piræus: all which he finiſhed in twelve years ſpace, ſparing neither labour nor coſt about them. And Sebaſte, and a ſtately Haven.

Then did he ſend his two Sons, Alexander, and Ariſtobulus, (whom he had by Mariamne the Aſmonæan) to Rome to Cæſar, to be there educated under him, for whom Lodgings were prepared at the Houſe of Pollio, Herods great Friend: Cæſar intertained the young men very courteouſly, and gave Herod power to make which of his Sons he pleaſed the heir of his Kingdom: he added alſo to his Government Trachonitis, Batunæa, and Auranitis. He ſent his Sons to Cæſar. Cæſar enlarged his Kingdom.

When Herod had received Trachonitis, he took guides, and went to the Den of the Thieves, reſtraining their Villanies, whereby the people lived in quiet: But Zenodorus, the former Governour, being moved, partly thorough envy, and partly with the loſs of his Government, went to Rome, to accuſe Herod, but could effect nothing. He repreſented the Thieves.

About this time Herod went to Mytelene, to ſalute his chiefeſt Friend Agrippa, and ſo returned into Judæa: and preſently after ſome Citizens of Gadara went to Agrippa to accuſe Herod, whom he vouchſafed not ſo much as to hear, but ſent them bound to Herod: Yet did he ſpare them: for though he He went to Agrippa.

he was inexorable towards his own People, yet did he willingly contemn, and forgive injuries received from ſtrangers.

Zenodorus had ſolemnly ſworn to the Gadarens, that he would do his utmoſt with Cæſar to get them freed from the juriſdiction of Herod, and to be annexed to the Province of Cæſar: Many of themſelves alſo exclaimed againſt Herod, calling him cruel Tyrant, complaining to Cæſar of his violence and rapines, and for raſing, and robbing their Temple: Yet was Herod nothing herewith terrified, being ready to anſwer for himſelf: But Cæſar uſed him curteouſly, and was nothing alienated from him for all theſe tumultuous complaints: The Gadarens therefore perceiving the inclination of Cæſar and his Friends towards Herod, deſpairing of good ſucceſs, and fearing to be delivered into Herods hands, ſome of them cut their own Throats, others fearing torments brake their own Necks, or drowned themſelves in the River, and thus; ſeeming to forejudg themſelves; Cæſar abſolved Herod from all their accuſations.

accuſar.

Zenodorus alſo having his bowels burſt, through much blood that came from him, ended his life at Antioch in Syria; whereupon Auguſtus Cæſar gave his Tetrarchy to Herod: he made him alſo one of the Governours of Syria, commanding the reſt of the Governours of that Province, to do nothing without his advice.

Cæſar ſtill enlarged his Dominions.

Herod beſtowed upon his Brother Pheroras a hundred Talents out of the revenues of his Kingdom, and begged a Tetrarchy for him of Cæſar, to the intent that if himſelf ſhould happen to die, Pheroras eſtate might be ſecure, and not ſubject to Herods Children.

Cæſar coming into the Eaſt, having ſetled his affairs there, Herod conducted him to the Sea-ſide, and ſo returned into his own Kingdom, where he built a goodly Temple in honour of Cæſar, all of white Marble, near to Panion, at the foot of which mountain were the ſpring-heads of Jordan: He alſo remitted to his Subjects ſome part of their Tribute, under pretence that he would eaſe them after the great dearth, but indeed to appeaſe the minds of his Subjects, who were offended at his vaſt works, which ſeemed to tend to the deſtruction of Religion and good manners, as was commonly talked. As alſo to prevent theſe reports, he forbad all private meetings in the City, and to frequent Feaſtings: He had ſpies alſo who would mingle themſelves in all Companies, and mark what People ſaid: yea himſelf would go about in the Night in the habit of a private Perſon, and mingle himſelf in the company of People to hear what they thought of him: and ſuch as peremptorily diſliked his doings, he would puniſh without all mercy: the reſt of the multitude he bound to him by Oath, requiring that they ſhould not depart from their fidelity, and duty: Yea he required this Oath of many of the Phariſees, as of Pollio, and Sameas, &c. which though he could not get them to take, yet did he not puniſh them as he did others, in regard of that reſpect that he bore to Pollio: Neither did he impoſe it upon the Eſſeans, whom he much eſteemed for one Manaherus ſake, who was a Prophet, and when Herod was but a Boy, he ſaluted him King of the Jews, and foretold that he ſhould Reign above thirty years.

Herod built a Temple and eaſed his Subjects.

His jealouſies.

Herod in the eighteenth year of his Reign, propounded to the Jews his building the Temple at Jeruſalem, whom when he ſaw troubled leaſt, when he had pulled down the old, he ſhould not be able to finiſh a new one, he told them, that the old Temple ſhould remain whole as it was, till all the materials neceſſary for the new Fabrick, ſhould be fully prepared: neither did he deceive them for he provided a thouſand Wagons to carry ſtones, and he choſe out of all the Artificers ten thouſand

He rebuilt the Temple at Jeruſalem.

thouſand that were the moſt exquiſite Work-men, and a thouſand Prieſts, clothed in their Prieſtly Garments at his coſt, who were not altogether ignorant of the Maſons, and Carpenters Art, to overſee them.

All neceſſary materials for this ſtately work being provided in the ſpace of two years, Herod began to build the Temple at Jeruſalem, forty ſix years before the firſt Paſſover of the Miniſtry of Chriſt and therefore that Text, Joh. 11. 20. ſhould be thus tranſlated, This Temple hath been built forty ſix years hitherto: So the learned Primate of Ireland, and our Country-man Lydiat, read it.

Indeed the building of the Temple under Zorobabel began in the firſt year of the Monarchy of Cyrus, and after ſome interruptions, was finiſhed in twenty years ſpace, viz. in the ſixth year of Darius Hyſtaſpes: but the magnificent building of it, begun by Herod at this time was finiſhed in nine years ſpace and an half: and truly the riches of Herod alone, were not ſufficient to perfect ſo magnificent a ſtructure, but all the holy treaſures of many ages, that were ſent to them from all the parts of the World to Jeruſalem, were ſpent about it. Nine years it was in building.

Not long after Herod ſet ſail for Italy, to ſalute Cæſar, and to ſee his Children at Rome, and as he paſſed through Greece, he was, not only preſent at, but Judg of the Olympick exerciſes, where, obſerving that they did not anſwer the reſort that was to them, through the poverty of the Elienſes, he beſtowed towards them a yearly revenew, that ſo their Sacrifices might be made the more ſplendid, as alſo other things that tended to the gracing of ſo great a meeting: For which bounty he was declared perpetual Judg of thoſe exerciſes. He goes into Italy. His bounty.

When he came to Rome, Cæſar intertained him courteouſly, and delivered to him his Sons ſufficiently inſtructed in the Liberal Sciences, and ſo from thence he went into Galatia.

At Jeruſalem, by the diligence of the Prieſts, the building of the Temple properly ſo called, that contained the Holy, and the Holy of Holies, was finiſhed in a year and a half; during which time, it is reported that it never rained in the day time, but only in the Nights: and in the eight years following, the Porches, the Ranges, and the reſt of the buildings about the Temple were all finiſhed.

When Alexander, and Ariſtobulus were returned into Judea, and had gained all mens love, Salome the Siſter of Herod, and her Faction, fearing that at ſome time or other they would revenge their Mothers death, caſt out a rumour amongſt the people, that they hated their Father, becauſe he had cauſed their Mother to be ſlain: But Herod as yet ſuſpecting no ill, uſed them with all Honour, as they deſerved: and becauſe they were now grown to mens eſtate, he provided them Wives: for Alexander, Bernice, the Daughter of Salome, and for Ariſtobulus, Glaphira, the Daughter of Archelaus, the King of the Cappadocians. Herods Sons married.

Then Herod hearing that Agrippa was again come into Aſia, he went to him, and begged of him that he would come into his Kingdom as to his Friend, and Gueſt; and as he came, he entertained him in all the Cities that he had newly built, ſhewing him the publick buildings, and preſenting, both to himſelf and friends all kind of delights which might ſet forth his magnificence, at Sebaſte, and the Port of Cæſarea, and in the Caſtles of Alexandrion, Herodion, and Hyrcania. He brought him alſo into the City of Jeruſalem, where all the People met him in their beſt, and Feſtival attire, and with acclamations of joy: Agrippa alſo ſacrificed an Hecatombe to God, and feaſted the People; and though he would willingly have ſtayed longer there, yet, fearing ſtorms, the Winter now drawing Herod entertains Agrippa.

on,

on, he hasted to sail into Jonia, both he and his Friends having been honoured with great presents by Herod.

As soon as the Spring came, Herod hearing that Agrippa was going with an Army to Bosphorus, made hast to meet him, and taking his way by Rhodes, and Chios, he came to Lesbos, thinking there to find him: But Agrippa being driven back by contrary North-winds Herod stayed at Chios, to whom many came privately to salute him, upon whom he bestowed many princely gifts, and when he perceived that the Gate of the City that was thrown down in the War against Methridates, as yet lay buryed in its ruins, and that by reason of the poverty of the Inhabitants, it could not by them be restored to its former beauty and greatness, he bestowed upon them so much mony as would abundantly suffice to finish it, and exhorted them to hasten the restoring of their City to its former beauty, and grandure.

Herods great bounty.

As soon, as the wind served, he left Chios, and sailed to Mytilene, and from thence to Byzantium, and there understanding that Agrippa had already passed the Cyanian Rock, he followed him with all speed, and overtook him at Sinopi, a City in Pontus, where, beyond Agrippa's expectation, he arrived with his Navy: His coming was very grateful to him, and they embraced each other with singular affection, Agrippa looking upon it as an evident argument of his fidelity and friendship, that leaving his manifold occasions, he would come to him in so seasonable a time. Wherefore Herod still abode with him in the Army, was Companion with him in his labours, and partaker of his counsels: He was also present with him when he went to be merry, and was the only man that he used in difficult matters, for the love that he bore unto him.

His love to Agrippa.

Agrippa having forced the Bosphorans to lay down their Arms, in his whole journey thorough many Countries and Cities, he gratified Herod in many things, and at his intreaty, relieved the necessities of many: If any one needed an Intercessor to Agrippa, Herod was the only man, by whom he could obtain his suit, and assisted many in whatsoever they had need of.

Agrippa's love to him.

When they were come into Jonia, a great multitude of Jews that inhabited that Country, complained of the great injuries that they suffered from the Jonians, who would not permit them to live after their own Laws, but that upon their Festival days, they haled them before their Tribunals, and forbad them to send holy money to Jerusalem, which also they perverted to secular affairs, contrary to the priviledges granted them by the Romans: Herod took care that Agrippa should hear their complaints, and allowed them Nicholas Damascene, one of his Friends, to plead their cause, which when he had largely performed before Agrippa (many honourable Romans, and some Kings and Princes being present) the Grecians denyed the thing, excusing themselves that the Jews were troublesom to them: But they on the contrary proved that they were free-born Citizens, and that they lived according to their own Laws without injuring of any; wherefore Agrippa answered that both for his Friend Herod's sake, as also because that which they demanded was just, he would gratifie them therein: He ordered therefore that the priviledges which were formerly granted them, should remain inviolable, and that none should molest them for living after their Country Laws. Then Herod rose up, and gave him thanks in the name of them all: and so after mutual embraces, they took their leave each of other, and departed from Lesbos.

Herods favour to the Jews in Jonia.

Herod in a few days after, having a prosperous Gale, arrived at Cæsarea, and from thence went to Jerusalem, where, calling all the People together, he he gave them an account of his Journey, and told them what immunities he had procured for the Jews in Aſia; and to win them the more to his friendſhip, he profeſſed that he would remit to them the fourth part of his Tribute; with which bounty they being exceedingly taken, wiſhed him all happineſs, and departed with great joy. Herod ingratiates himſelf with the Jews.

Preſently after his return, he was greatly incenſed by the falſe accuſations and artifices of his Siſter Salome, and his Brother Pheroras, againſt his two Sons that he had by Mariamne, Alexander, and Ariſtobulus: whereupon to take down their ſpirits, he began to uſe them more hardly, and publickly he put hopes of the Kingdom into his Son Antipater, whom he begat when he was a private man, his Mother alſo being a woman of mean Parentage, whom formerly he had baniſhed the City in favour to his two other Sons, and writing often unto Cæſar for him privately, he gave him great commendations: and at the intreaties of Antipater, he recalled alſo his Mother Doris, whom he had put away when he married Mariamne. He is incenſed againſt his Sons.

Agrippa after his ten years Government in Aſia, being now to depart, Herod ſailed to ſalute him; taking with him of all his Sons only Antipater, whom he delivered to Agrippa with many gifts, to be carried to Rome, and to be brought into Cæſars favour. He viſits Agrippa.

Antipater was much honoured at Rome, being commended to all his Friends by his Fathers letters: and though he was abſent, yet deſiſted he not by writing to incenſe his Father againſt the Sons of Mariamne, pretending his great care of his Fathers ſafety, but in truth, to make way for his ſucceſſion in the Kingdom. About this time Agrippa died, and being brought into the Market-place of Rome, Auguſtus commended him in a Funeral Oration. Antipaters ſubtility.

Herod being now incenſed againſt his Sons, Alexander and Ariſtobulus, he ſailed with them to Rome to accuſe them before Auguſtus, and not finding him there, he followed him as far as Aquileia, before whom he accuſed them of treachery againſt him; but the young men ſatisfied all that were preſent by their Apology for themſelves mixed with prayers and tears, ſo that they were reconciled to their Father: After which, giving thanks unto Cæſar, they departed together, and with them Antipater alſo, who pretended much joy that they were received into favour again. Herod accuſeth his Sons.

A few days after Herod gave Cæſar three hundred Talents, and again Cæſar gave him half the revenues of the mettal Mines in Cyprus, and the other half alſo he committed to his overſight, and having honoured him with other gifts of Hoſpitality, he gave him leave to chooſe which of his Sons he pleaſed to be his ſucceſſor, or if he liked it better to divide his Kingdom amongſt them, which when he vvas about to do, Cæſar told him that he vvould not ſuffer but that he ſhould have his Kingdom during his life in his ovvn povver, as vvell as his Sons. Cæſars favours to Herod.

In Herods abſence there vvas a rumour ſpread in Judea that he vvas dead, vvhereupon the Trachonites revolting, fell to their old trade of Thieving; but by the diligence of his Captains that he had left in his Kingdom, they vvere ſubdued, and forty of the chief of them, being terrified by the puniſhment of thoſe that vvere taken, left their Country and fled into Arabia Nabathæa, vvhere they vvere entertained by Silæus (vvho vvas an enemy to Herod, becauſe he had denyed him his Siſter Salome to Wife) vvho gave them a place to dvvell in that vvas vvell fortified. Thieves ſubdued.

Herod and his Sons ſailing homvvard, arrived at Sebaſte in Cilicia, vvhere they met vvith Archelaus King of Cappadocia, vvho courteouſly entertained Herod, much rejoycing that his Sons vvere reconciled to him, and that Alexander had fairly anſvvered the crimes that vvere objected againſt him: and ſo giving royal gifts each to other they parted. Herod returns with his Sons.

Herod being returned into Iudea, called the people together, and told them what he had done in his Voyage, and declared to them, that his Sons ſhould Reign after him, firſt, Antipater, and then Alexander and Ariſtobulus, that he had by Mariamne.

Agrippa born. About this time, in the year of the world 3994, Agrippa, the firſt King of the Iews of that name, was born, who dyed when he was fifty four years old, being ſtruck by an Angel, Act. 12. 23. Alſo that lame man was now born, who being above forty years old, was healed by Peter, at the Beautiful Gate of the Temple, Act. 4. 22.

Herod having finiſhed Cæſarea Stratonis, in the twenty eighth year of his Reign, he dedicated it with great ſolemnity, and many ſports and paſtimes: Herods great buildings. After which, he began to build another Town in a field called Capharſala, which he called Antipatris, after his Fathers name; and a Caſtle alſo, which he called Cyprus, after his Mothers name. In honour alſo of his dead Brother, he built in Ieruſalem a very fair Tower, not inferiour to the Egyptian Pharos, and called it Phaſælus: and afterwards he built a Town of the ſame name in the Valley of Iericho, from whence the Countrey thereabouts is called Phaſælus.

Herod, having waſted his wealth by his great Prodigality, and now wanting mony, after the example of John Hyrcanus, in the night, without the knowledg of the people, he opened Davids Sepulchre, where, though he found no mo- He robs Davids Sepulchre. ney, yet he found great ſtore of precious things, and ornaments of gold, which he took away: for the expiation of which fact, he afterwards built a moſt ſumptuous Monument of white Marble at the entrance of the Sepulchre.

Antipaters ſubtilty. Antipater, ſuborning other men falſly to accuſe his Brethren, Alexander and Ariſtobulus, takes upon him their defence, that making a ſhew of good will to them, he might the eaſier oppreſs them: and by theſe ſubtilties he ſo wrought upon his Father, that he thought him to be his only preſerver. Hereupon Herod commended his Steward Ptolomy unto Antipater, and communicated all his Counſels with his Mother Doris, ſo that all things were done as they pleaſed, and ſtill the King was imbittered againſt thoſe, whom it was their profit that he ſhould be angry with.

About this time Pheroras (Herods Brother) fell ſo madly in love with his own ſervant, that he refuſed marriage with Cypros, the Kings Daughter, that was offered him by his Brother: He alſo accuſed Herod to his Son Alexander, as if he had been greatly in love with his Wife Glaphyra: for both which, Herod was highly diſpleaſed with him.

In the year of the world 3996, he began to be diſeaſed, who, lying at the Pool of Betheſda, was, after thirty eight years, reſtored to health by Chriſt, Joh. 5. 5.

Alexander reconciled to his Father. Alexander, by the ſubtilties of his adverſaries, being even driven to deſperation, was at this time reconciled to his Father, by Archelaus, King of the Cappadocians, who came to Ieruſalem to viſit Herod, and being accounted one of Herods chief Friends, received great gifts from him, and when he departed, Herod brought him as far as Antioch.

Herod goes again to Rome. Not long after, Herod went a third time to Rome to viſit Cæſar, in whoſe abſence thoſe Thieves of Trachonis, whom Syllæus had entertained, with their inrodes infeſted not only Judæa, but all Cœloſyria; Syllæus affording them both impunity and ſecurity.

He returns and dedicates the Temple. Herod being returned from Rome, celebrated the Dedication of the Temple, re-edified by him in the ſpace of nine years and a half, on the very Birth-day of his Kingdom, which he was wont to celebrate with great joy, at which time he Sacrificed unto God three hundred Oxen, and other of the people offered an innumerable company of Sacrifices, every one according to his ability.

He-

Herod finding that in his abſence his People had ſuſtained much dammage by thoſe Thieves of Trachonis, and ſeeing he could not ſubdue them, being under the protection of the Arabian, he therefore entred Trachonis, and deſtroyed their Families, which yet did but incenſe them the more; ſo that contemning all dangers, they moleſted Herods Countries with continual excurſions, driving, and carrying away the peoples Goods. Thieves do much miſchief.

Herod, hereupon ſent to the Preſidents of Syria, Saturninus and Volumnius, deſiring that he might have the puniſhing of the Thieves of Trachonis, who by their incurſions had often waſted his Country. They, when they heard hereof, being increaſed to the number of a thouſand, began to waſte both Fields and Villages, cutting the throats of all that fell into their hands; wherefore Herod demanded thoſe Thieves to be delivered over to him, and withall, required the ſixty Talents that he had lent Obodas, upon Syllæus his ſecurity, who had thruſt Obodas from the Government, and now ruled all himſelf: But Syllæus denied that the Thieves were in Arabia, and deferred alſo to pay the money; whereupon the buſineſs was debated before Saturninus and Volumnius, and in concluſion it was determined by them; that within thirty dayes ſpace, both the money ſhould be repaid, and the runawayes of both Countries ſhould be delivered up, and Syllæus ſwore by the Fortune of Cæſar, before the Preſidents of Syria, that he would perform what was enjoyned.

But when the time was expired, Syllæus being unwilling to ſtand to the agreement, went to Rome: and in the mean time Herod, by the permiſſion of Saturninus and Volumnius, to puniſh thoſe obſtinate people, raiſed an Army, entred Arabia, and marched as far in three dayes as they uſed to do in ſeven; and when he came to the Caſtle where the Thieves kept, he took it at the firſt aſſault, and demoliſhed a Fortreſs alſo called Raeptu: and when a Captain of the Arabians came to their aid, they joyned Battel, in which few of the Herodians were ſlain, but there dyed twenty five of the Arabians, together with their Captain, whereupon the reſt fled. Being thus revenged of the Thieves, he brought three thouſand Idumæans into Trachona, to reſtrain the Thieveries committed there, and certified the Roman Generals, that he had only uſed that power which they had granted, againſt thoſe obſtinate Arabians, which, upon enquiry, they found to be true. Herod deſtroys the Thieves.

There were Letters poſted away to Rome, to Syllæus, that related mattters far otherwiſe, aggravating every thing after their manner, by which Lyes Cæſar was ſo much incenſed againſt Herod, that he wrote threatning Letters to him, becauſe he had marched with an Army out of his own Kingdom without his leave: and he was ſo far provoked, that he would not hear his Ambaſſadours, but diſmiſſed them without an anſwer. Cæſar incenſed againſt him.

The Trachonites and Arabians taking hold of this occaſion, moleſted the Gariſon of the Idumæans, that Herod had ſet over them; but Herod being affrighted with Cæſars anger, was fain to connive at it.

About this time Obodas, King of Arabia Nabathæa, dyed, and one Æneas ſucceeded him, who changed his name into Aretas; which Syllæus hearing of at Rome, endeavoured by falſe accuſations to have him thruſt from the Kingdom, and to get it to himſelf, beſtowing much money upon the Courtiers, and promiſing great things unto Cæſar, whom he knew to be offended with Aretas, for aſſuming the Kingdom without his conſent. In the mean while, Aretas ſent Letters, and rich preſents unto Cæſar, and amongſt them, a Crown worth many Talents: But Cæſar would not hear his Ambaſſadours, and ſcorned his Preſents, and diſmiſſed them without any thing done.

Herod, being continually vexed with the inſolencies of the Arabians, ſent

Nicholas Damaſcene to Rome, to ſee, if by the mediation of his Friends, he could get Juſtice from Cæſar: But in the mean time the diſcord with his Sons that he had by Mariamne, was greatly heightned by the artifices of Eurichus a Lacedemonian, which occaſioned Herod, to find out their ſuppoſed Treachery, to put to death by various torments, many both of his own, and of his Sons Friends, yet could he find no other evil by them; but ſome too free complaints of improvident young men, concerning their Fathers immoderate cruelty, and his too eaſie hearkning to baſe pick-thanks, of the wicked deceits of their Brother Antipater, and of the faction that was combined againſt them, and that, to free themſelves from theſe miſchiefs, they were ſaid to think of flying to Archelaus, King of Cappadocia, which thing indeed they did not deny: Hereupon Herod caſt them into Priſon, as if they had been convicted of Treaſon againſt their Father, reſolving to puniſh them according as his affairs went at Rome: and concerning this buſineſs he ſent Letters to Cæſar by Volumnius the Roman General, and Olympius, his Friend.

Herod falls out with his Sons, and impriſons them.

At Rome, Nicholas Damaſcene joyned himſelf to the Arabians, that came to accuſe Syllæus, profeſſing that he was his accuſer alſo before Auguſtus, and not Herods defender, and this he did, leſt he ſhould be repulſed as others had been before him. When by this means he had gotten acceſs into Cæſars preſence, he indeed laid open many of Syllæus his crimes, and withall added, that Cæſar was circumvented with his lyes in the cauſe of Herod, which he confirmed by certain authentick records: This ſo prevailed with Cæſar, that he condemned Syllæus, and remanded him into the Province, that when he had ſatisfied the debt he might be puniſhed.

From this time Auguſtus was reconciled to Aretas, and Herod, and then received the Preſents that before he had ſo often rejected, and confirmed the Kingdom of the Arabians to Aretas. He adviſed Herod alſo by his Letters, to call a Council of his Friends at Berytus, and joyning the Preſidents of Syria with Archelaus the King of Cappadocia, by their joynt advice to determine of the buſineſs about his Sons.

Cæſar is reconciled to Herod.

About this time the Angel Gabriel (who long before had foretold to Daniel the coming of the Meſſias by a certain number of Weeks) appeared at the right ſide of the Altar of incenſe to Zachary the Prieſt, of the courſe of Abia, telling him, that there ſhould be born to him now in his old age, his Wife Elizabeth alſo being well ſtricken in years, and barren, a Son called John, a Nazarite, and the forerunner of the Lord, in the ſpirit and power of Elias: which he not believing, was made dumb, Luk. 1. 5. 22.

An Angel appears to Zachary.

Herod having received Auguſtus his Letters, rejoyced exceedingly, both becauſe he was returned into his favour, and for that he had granted him power to do what he would with his Sons, and hereupon he convened by meſſengers all thoſe that Cæſar had appointed, to Berythus, except only Archelaus, and kept his Sons not far from the place, in a City of the Sidonians: and the Caſe being opened, Saturninus, one that had been Conſul, delivered his opinion, but moderated with circumſtances, that Herods Sons were to be condemned, but not to be put to death: After him, his three Sons that were his Lieutenants, delivered their opinions to the ſame purpoſe: But Voluminus pronounced, that they were to be puniſhed with death, whoſe opinion the major part followed: and ſo the Council being ended, Herod took his Sons with him, and meeting with Nicholas Damaſcene at Tyrus, they went together to Cæſarea.

Herod procures his Sons to be condemned.

Here, whenas a certain old Souldier named Tyro, had ſmartly reprehended Herod for his wickedneſs determined againſt his Sons, and told him that three hundred more of his Captains were of the ſame opinion, Herod commanded him to be caſt into Priſon: Trypho the Kings Barber, taking this occaſion, accuſed Tyro for that he had often ſollicited him to cut the Kings throat with his Herods cruelty.

his razor, as he was trimming him, and immediatly both Tyro and his Son, and the Barber were tortured: and Herod bringing thoſe three hundred Captains, and Tyro and his Son, and the Barber, accuſed them before the People, againſt whom the people throwing any thing that came next to hand, ſlew them every one.

Then were Alexander and Ariſtobulus led to Sebaſte, and there ſtrangled by their Fathers command, and their bodies were buried in the Caſtle of Alexandrion, where Alexander, their Grandfather by the Mothers ſide, and many of their Progenitors had been buried. Herods Sons ſtrangled.

Antipater, when his Brethren were now dead, intended to remove his Father alſo out of the way: and knowing that he was hated by many in the Kingdom, he endeavoured by Bribes to get the good will of his Fathers Friends, both at Rome and in Judea; but eſpecially of Saturninus, the Preſident of Syria, and of Pheroras, and Salome, the Brother and Siſter of Herod. Antipaters Treaſon.

At this time Herod ſent home Glaphira, the Widow of his Son Alexander, to her Father Archelaus the King of Cappadocia, and gave her a Dowry out of his Treaſury, leſt ſome controverſie ſhould ariſe concerning it, and withall, he took great care of the young children of Alexander and Ariſtobulus, which Antipater took very heavily, fearing, leſt when they ſhould come to age, they would hinder his deſigns: he ſought therefore their deſtruction: and he ſo overcame Herod by his flatteries, that he ſuffered him to marry the daughter of Ariſtobulus, and his Son to marry the daughter of his Unkle Pheroras.

About this time Herod invited Zamaris, a Babylonian Jew, and gave him a Countrey in Trachonis to inhabit, and this he did, that he might be a guard to that Countrey againſt Thieves: and Zamaris coming with five hundred Horſe, and an hundred of his Kinſmen, erected Caſtles in divers places of that Country, by which means he ſecured the Jews that came from Babylon to the Feaſts at Jeruſalem, from the Thieves.

Antipater working Treaſon againſt his Father, drew in his Unkle Pheroras and ſome of the Kings women, that were moſt addicted to the Sect of the Phariſees, except Salome, who conſtantly adhered to her Brother Herod. Theſe Phariſees were a crafty people, arrogant, and enemies to Kings, and they only of the whole Nation of the Jews, refuſed to ſwear allegiance to Herod and Ceſar, and were about ſix thouſand. For which cauſe Herod fined them, and the Wife of Pheroras paid their fine for them, to whom, by way of requital, they foretold that the Kingdom ſhould be taken from Herod and his children, and be transferred upon her Husband, and Her, and their children: theſe things Salome made known to Herod, who, examining the buſineſs, put ſome of the Phariſees to death, and with them, the Eunuch Dagoras, and his darling Carus, who was commended to him for his handſomneſs; and beſides theſe, all the reſt of his Family whom he found to have conſpired with the Phariſees. Of the Phariſees, Herod ſlew ſome of them.

Herod having puniſhed the Phariſees, called a Council of his Friends, and before them began an accuſation againſt the Wife of his Brother Pheroras, and when Pheroras, though to gratifie his Brother, would not forſake her, he forbad Antipater Pheroras his company: and Antipater, that he might remove all ſuſpition from himſelf, procured by his Friends, that his Father ſhould ſend him immediately to Auguſtus: and accordingly Herod ſent him with great Preſents, and his will, in which he declared, that Antipater ſhould ſucceed him in the Kingdom: But if he died before him, then his Son that he had by Mariamne, the Daughter of Simon the High Prieſt. Herod ſends his Son to Ceſar.

In the ſixth moneth after John was conceived, the Angel Gabriel was ſent to The Angel appears to Mary.

to Nazareth in Galilee, to the bleſſed Virgin Mary betrothed to Joſeph, of the ſame Tribe with her: viz. of the ſtock of David, and declared to her that ſhe ſhould bring forth the Son of God, and call his name Jeſus, and ſhe being more fully taught of his admirable conception by the power of the Holy Ghoſt overſhadowing her, with great Faith, ſaid, Be it to the Handmaid of the Lord according to thy word, Luk. 1. 26, 38. and preſently after ſhe went into the Hill-Countrey, into a City of Judah, (viz. Hebron, a City of the Prieſts, ſcituated in the mountains of Judea, Joſh. 21. 10, 11.) where, when ſhe entred into the Houſe of Zachary, and ſaluted her Couſin Elizabeth, the Babe ſprang in her womb, and ſhe, being filled with the Holy Ghoſt, declared that Mary was bleſſed, &c. Luk. 1. 39, 56.

Herod baniſheth his Brother.

Herod baniſhed his Brother Pheroras into his Tetrarchy, becauſe he would not part with his Wife, who ſwore that he would never return till he heard of Herods death, ſo that a little after, Herod falling ſick, and often ſending for him to receive ſome private inſtructions, he refuſed to come for his Oaths-ſake.

John Baptiſt is born.

When Elizabeths time was come, ſhe brought forth a Son, who was called John, and Zacharies ſpeech being reſtored to him, he propheſied, ſaying, Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, &c. Luk. 1. 57, 58. and Joſeph finding his betrothed wife to be with child, thought of putting her away privily, but being warned by God in a dream, he took her to wife, Mat. 1. 24.

Pheroras dieth.

Pheroras falling ſick, and Herod, beyond expectation, being recovered, went to viſit him, and very kindly ſought help for him, but he died within a few dayes after, whoſe Body was brought to Jeruſalem, and interred by Herod, who honoured him with publick mourning.

At this time, two of Pheroras's freed men declared to Herod, how he was killed by poyſon, given him by Doris, the Mother of Antipater, which, whilſt Herod enquired into, by little and little he found out greater Villanies, and the manifeſt Treaſons of his Son Antipater; who, when he went to Rome, had delivered a deadly poyſon to Pheroras, that was ſent him out of Egypt from his Unkle Theodore, the Brother of Doris, wherewithall to make away his Father, that ſo the ſuſpition of the Parricide ſhould not lye upon him, being ſo far abſent.

Antipaters Treaſon.

Hereupon, Herod put Doris out of the Palace, and took from her Jewels that were worth many Talents: He alſo put from him his Wife Mariamne, the Daughter of the High Prieſt, as a Partner of all theſe ſecrets, and blotted her Son out of his will, and deprived her Father of the High Prieſthood, and ſubſtituted in his room Matthias, the Son of Theophilus, that was born at Jeruſalem.

Preſently after came Bathillus, Antipaters freed man, from Rome, who being tortured, confeſſed, that formerly he had brought poyſon, and given it to Doris and Pheroras, that if the firſt proved too weak, they ſhould be ſure to diſpatch Herod with the ſecond. There came alſo Letters from his Friends at Rome, to the King, written by the entreaty of Antipater, in which Archelaus and Philip, Herods Sons, were accuſed, for often complaining of the death of Alexander and Ariſtobulus, pitying the misfortune of their murthered Brethren: For theſe young men were ſtudying at Rome, and their Father had now commanded their return: whereupon Antipater by great gifts corrupted thoſe Friends, that by their Letters they might make the young men ſuſpected to their Father, who, if they lived, might be an hindrance to his hopes.

Antipaters Craft.

Chriſt is born.

About this time, Auguſtus taxing all the Roman world, our Lord Chriſt was born, Luk. 2. 4, 5.

Shortly after, there came Wiſe men from the Eaſt, the Star being their guide, to Herod at Jeruſalem, and there, being taught that the birth-place of Chriſt was Bethlehem of Judea, thither they went, and entring into the houſe, which which was ſhewed them by the Star that ſtood over it, they found the Child, and fell down and worſhipped him, &c. *Mat.*2.1.12.

After the Angel of the Lord appeared unto Joſeph in a dream, warning him to fly into Egypt, where he remained till the death of Herod, Mat. 2. 13, 14, 15. Joſeph flyes into Egypt.

Herod thinking that the Child was ſtill at Bethlehem, that he might deſtroy him amongſt the reſt, killed all the children which were in Bethlehem, and in all the Coaſts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time (of the Star firſt ſeen in the Eaſt) that he had enquired of the Wiſe men, Mat. 2. 16. Herod kills the children.

Herod receiving Letters from Antipater from Rome, in which he ſignified, that having diſpatched all his buſineſs according to his own mind, he would ſhortly return into his own Countrey; he wrote back to him again, diſſembling his anger, that he ſhould make haſte, leſt any thing ſhould befall him in his abſence, that he ſhould not like of; and alſo gently complaining of his Mother, he promiſed that he would remit all differences at his return. Herod ſends for his Son.

Antipater heard no news all this while either of the death of Pheroras, or of thoſe things that were on foot againſt him, though there were ſeven months ſpace between the wickedneſs proved againſt him, and his return. For in his journey, at Tarentum he met with a Letter of the death of Pheroras, and in Cilicia, thoſe Letters of his Father that called him back ſo haſtily; and when he came to Celenderis, a Town of Cilicia, he began to doubt of his return, hearing of, and being extream ſorrowful for the diſgrace of his Mother, yet ſailing forwards, he came to Sebaſte, a Port of Cæſarea, where, being ſaluted by none, he went to Jeruſalem. Antipaters return.

It happened that Quintilius Varus was the ſame time at Jeruſalem, being ſent as Succeſſor to Saturninus into Syria, and then called thither by Herod to aſſiſt him with his Counſel in thoſe his weighty affairs. As they were ſitting both together, in comes Antipater, not knowing any thing, and in his purple Garment that he uſed to wear, entring the Palace; but himſelf being entred, the Guards ſuffered none of his followers to come in with him: As he was coming near, his Father thruſt him from him, reproaching him with the murther of his Brethren, and his intention of poyſoning his Father, telling him that the next day Varus ſhould hear, and determine all things betwixt them; and accordingly the next day, Varus and the King ſitting in Judgment, his Father himſelf firſt began the accuſation, and left the proſecution and confirmation thereof, to his old Friend Nicholas Damaſcene, one that knew all the buſineſs; and when Antipater could not clear himſelf from the crimes objected againſt him, Varus commanded the poyſon that he had prepared for his Father to be brought forth, which being given to a condemned man, killed him immediately: after which, Varus roſe from the Council, and the next day went to Antiochia: but Herod caſt his Son into Priſon, and ſignified ſo much by Letters to Cæſar: ſending alſo meſſengers, who by word of mouth might acquaint him with the curſed Treaſon of Antipater. Antipater accuſed by his Father.

As theſe Meſſengers were poſting to Rome, Herod fell ſick, and made his will, leaving his Kingdom to his youngeſt Son, Herod Antipas, being exaſperated againſt his two elder Sons, Archelaus and Philip, by the falſe accuſations of Antipater. Herods ſickneſs.

Judas the Son of Sariphæus, and Matthias the Son of Margalothus, two of the moſt Learned of the Jews, and beſt Interpreters of the Law, knowing that the Kings ſickneſs was incurable, perſwaded ſome young men, that were their Scholars, to throw down the Golden Eagle that was ſet up by Herod, over the great gate of the Temple; who accordingly, going up at noon day, pulled, and hewed down with their axes, the Eagle, a great multitude being in the Temple, and beholding it: which, as ſoon as it was told the Captain, he came with The Golden Eagle hewn down.

with a ſtrong Band of Souldiers, and laid hold upon ſome forty of the young men, together with their Maſters, and brought them to Herod: Theſe conſtantly defending what they had done, Herod commanded them to be bound, and ſent them to Jericho: Then calling for the Rulers of the Jews, into whoſe Aſſembly he was brought in a Litter, by reaſon of his weakneſs, he complained to them, not ſo much of the injury done to himſelf, as to God (as he ſaid.) Theſe denying that it was done by their order, ſomewhat pacified him, only he took away the High-Prieſthood from Matthias, whom he ſuſpected not to be a ſtranger to that fact, and made his Succeſſor Jazer, the Brother of his Wife Mariamne, the Daughter of Simon the High Prieſt; but he burned alive the other Matthias, that was the author of this ſedition, and his companions.

Herod puts them to death.

His ſickneſs encreaſeth.

Herods diſeaſe began now to grow worſe: for he was burned with a ſlow fire, which was not perceived ſo much by the outward touch, as by the inward effects of it, which burnt up his very Bowels: He had alſo the diſeaſe called the Bulemia, or Dog-like appetite, which provoked him to a continual deſire of eating, and yet nothing would ſatisfie him: He was alſo continually tormented with ulcers in his Bowels, and pains of the Cholick: His feet ſwelled with a moiſt phlegm, and his thighs alſo: His members rotted, and were full of worms, which occaſioned an intolerable ſtink: He was no leſs troubled with a Priapiſme: and moreover was vexed with grievous convulſions, and difficulty of breathing.

All means of cure fail him.

And though he was ſo grievouſly tormented, that every one judged that he could not be able to endure it long, yet he hoped that he ſhould break through it, being very careful to ſend for the ableſt Phyſicians, and ſought medicines from every place: He went alſo beyond Jordan, to the Hot Baths at Callirhoe, which run into the Aſphaltite Lake, which, beſide the medicinal virtue, are pleaſant, and good to be drunk: There being, by the advice of his Phyſicians, ſet into a Bathing tub of oyl, he ſeemed to them to be giving up the Ghoſt, yet by the ſudden crying out, and lamentations of his Friends, he came to himſelf again, and now ſeeing no hope of recovery, he commanded fifty Drachmaes to be given to every Souldier, and having ſhewed much liberality to his Captains and Friends, he returned again to Iericho.

Auguſtus being told, that amongſt the Children which Herod had cauſed to be ſlain at Bethlehem, there was a Son alſo of his own ſlain, He ſaid, That it was better to be Herods Hog than his Son.

Herod by an Edict called together to Iericho all the moſt Noble of the Jews, and when they came, he ſhut them all up together in a place called the Hippodrome, giving command to his Siſter Salome, and her Husband Alexus, that as ſoon as He was dead, they ſhould cauſe his Souldiers to ſlay them all, that ſo the people might have cauſe of ſorrow, who otherwiſe (he feared) would rejoyce at his death.

His cruelty.

At this time Letters came from Rome, from the Ambaſſadours whom He had ſent to Cæſar, wherein they certified him, that the Emperour left Antipater to his Fathers pleaſure, either to baniſh, or to put him to death. Herod hearing this, was a little cheared: but preſently his torments returning, and being greedy of meat, He called for an apple, and a knife to pare it, intending with the knife to have ſtabbed himſelf, which alſo he attempted: but Archelaus, his Nephew, prevented him, and holding his right Hand, called for help. This accident cauſed much ſorrow, fear, and tumult through the whole Palace, as if Herod had been dead.

He attempts to murther himſelf.

Antipater perceiving the noiſe, thought verily that his Father was dead, and thereupon began to tamper with his Keeper about letting him out, promiſing him great Rewards, both for the preſent, and for the future, when it would lye in his power amply to reward him: This his practice the Keeper told told to the King, who, for indignation cryed, and though he was ſo near death yet did he raiſe up himſelf on his Bed, and commanded one of his Guard to go preſently and kill Antipater, and to bury him in the Caſtle of Hyrcanion, without any honour, which was done accordingly. Antipater ſlain.

Then did He make a new Teſtament: for Antipas, whom before he had made Succeſſor to his Kingdom, he made Tetrarch of Galilee and Petrea: To his Son Philip he aſſigned the Regions of Gaulanitis, Trachonitis, Batanæa and Pancada, the name of a Tetrarchy; but he gave the Kingdom to his Son Archelaus: To his Siſter Salome he gave Jamnia, Azotus, and Thaſelis, with five hundred thouſand Drachmaes: To the reſt of his Kindred he gave money and yearly Penſions. To Cæſar he gave ten Millions of Drachmaes of ſilver, and all his Plate, as well of Gold as of Silver, and a great quantity of precious moveables: and to Livia, Cæſars Wife, and ſome certain Friends, he gave five Millions of Drachmaes. Herods Will.

Having thus ordered theſe things, five dayes after Antipater was put to death, he dyed himſelf, having enjoyed the Kingdom 34 years after the death of Antigonus: but from the time that he was declared King by the Romans 37 years, about the 25th of our November, in the year of the world 4001, and after the Birth of Chriſt, about two years. His Death.

THE

LIFE and DEATH

OF HANNIBAL

THE

GREAT,

Hannibal chosen General.

HANNIBAL, the Son of Amilcar was about twenty six years old, when he was choſen General of the Carthaginian Forces in Spain. He was elected by the Army as ſoon as Aſdrubal (their late General) was dead, and the election was approved, and confirmed by the Senate of Carthage, wherewith Hanno, and his faction was nothing pleaſed. This was now the third of the Barchine Family (ſo called of Amilcar, whoſe ſurname was Barcas) that commanded in chief over the men of War. Hanno therefore and his Partizans, being neither able to tax the Virtue of their enemies, nor to perform the like ſervices to the Common-wealth, had nothing left whereby to value themſelves, excepting the general reprehenſions of War, and cautelous adviſe of not provoking the Romans: but they were little regarded. For the Carthaginians ſaw apparently, that the Oath of the Romans to the Articles of Peace, was like to hold no longer, than till the Romans could find ſome good advantage to renew the War. It was therefore rather deſired by the Carthaginians, that whilſt they were in a fit condition, the War ſhould begin, rather than in ſome unhappy time of Famine or Peſtilence, or after ſome great loſs in their Army or Fleet, they ſhould be driven to yield to the impudent demands of their inſulting enemies.

This diſpoſition of his Citizens Hannibal well enough underſtood. Neither was he ignorant that in making War with the Romans it was no ſmall advantage to get the ſtart of them. Could he but bring his Army into

Italy,

Italy, he hoped to find Friends and assistance, even from those People, that helped to encrease the Armies of the Romans. But his design must be carried privately, or else it would be prevented. He resolved therefore to lay Siege to Saguntum in Spain, where he now was with his Army, which might seem not greatly to concern the Romans, and would highly please the Carthaginians.

Having resolved hereupon, nevertheless he went orderly to work, beginning with those that lay next in his way. First therefore he entered into the Territory of the Olcades, and besieging Althæa, in a few days he became Master, not only of it, but of all the other Towns in their Country; and the Winter coming on, he rest his Army in New Carthage, or Carthagena, imparting liberally to his Souldiers of the Spoils that he had gotten in his late Conquests. He besieges, and takes many Towns.

In the Spring he made War upon the Vaccæi, and with little difficulty wan, first Salamanca, and after it Arbucala, though not without a long Siege and much difficulty: But in his return he was put to the height both of his Valour, and Prudence. For all such of the Vaccæi that could bear Arms, being made desperate by the spoil of their Country, with divers others that had escaped in the late overthrow, joyning with the Toletans, made up an Army of one hundred thousand able men, waiting for Hannibal on the Banks of the River Tagus. They knew that he was very adventurous, and had never turned his back upon any enemy, and therefore hoped, that having him at such an advantage, they should easily have foiled him. But at this time our Great Man of War, knew as well how to dissemble his Courage, as at other times to make good use of it. For he withdrew himself from the River side, as seeming fearful to pass over it, aiming thereby to draw over that great multitude from their Banks of advantage. The Spaniards, as Hannibal expected and desired, thinking that he retreated out of fear, thrust themselves in a disordered manner into the River, to pursue him. But when Hannibal saw them well near over, he turned back his Elephants to entertain them at their landing, and thrust his Horsemen, both above and beneath them into the River, who by the advantage of their Weapons slew almost all of those in the River without resistance, and then pursued the rest, who being amazed, fled, and so he made a very great slaughter of them. His Valour, and Policy. His Victory.

The Saguntines perceiving the storm drawing near to them, hastened their Ambassadours to Rome, who complained that they were like to be undone, only for their Friendship to the Romans. This so moved the Senate, that some would have War presently proclaimed, both by Sea, and Land, and the Consuls sent with Armies, one into Spain, the other into Africk: But others went more soberly to work (according to the Roman gravity) whereby it was concluded, that Ambassadours should be sent into Spain, to view the State of their Confederates.

These Ambassadours found Hannibal at Carthagena, where they had Conference with him, who carried himself so reservedly, that they departed, as doubtful as they came. But whilst they were passing to and fro, Hannibal prepared, not only his Forces, but some Roman pretences against Saguntum. For the Tudetani, who were Neighbours to the Saguntines, complained to him of sundry wrongs that they had received from them of Saguntum: Probably Hannibal himself had hatched some of them. Having therefore such an occasion, he sat down with his whole Army before Saguntum. The Romans were glad of the Quarrel, as hoping that Carthage, with all belonging thereto, would in short space become their own. Yet were they not hasty to threaten before they were ready to strike; but meant to temporize until they had an Army in readiness to be He besieges Saguntum.

ſent into Spain, where they intended to make Saguntum, the ſeat of War.

In the beginning of Hannibals Siege, his Carthaginians were much diſcouraged by reaſon of the brave Sallies which the Saguntines made upon them, in one of which Hannibal himſelf received a dangerous wound in the Thigh that made him unable to ſtir for many days. Yet in the mean time he was not unmindful of his buſineſs, but gave order to build certain movable Towers that might equal thoſe upon the City Walls, and to prepare to batter the Curtains, and to make a breach. Theſe being finiſhed and applied, had ſoon wrought their deſired effect. A large breach was made by the fall of ſome Towers, whereat a hot aſſault was given: But it was ſo gallantly defended by the beſieged, that the Carthaginians were not only beaten from the breach, and out of ſome ground within the City, which in the firſt fury they had wan, but they were purſued even to their own Trenches and Camp. Yet at length the Carthaginian Army (wherein were one hundred and fifty thouſand men) did ſo tire out the Townſmen by their continual Allarms, that at length it gat into the Town, and had been Maſters of it, but that they were hindred by ſome Counter-works which the beſieged had raiſed.

In this extremity there was one Alcon, that came out of the City to treat with Hannibal, who would give no other terms but theſe hard ones, That they ſhould deliver up to him all the Gold, Silver, and Plate, and other Riches which they had in the City; That the Citizens ſhould leave the City, and take up ſuch other habitations as he ſhould appoint them; neither ſhould they carry any more out with them, ſave the cloaths on their back. Theſe terms ſeemed ſo unreaſonable to Alcon, that he durſt not return into the City to propound them to the Citizens. Yet might they far better have ſubmitted thereto, how hard ſoever, becauſe thereby they might have ſaved their lives, and the honour of their Wives and Daughters, whereas, the City being ſhortly after taken by ſtorm, they ſaw their Wives and Daughters defloured before their Faces, and all put to the Sword that were above fourteen years of age. The Treaſures found in Saguntum, which were very great, Hannibal reſerved, therewith to pay his Army. The Slaves, and other booty, he divided amongſt his Souldiers, reſerving ſome choiſe things, wherewith to preſent his Friends at Carthage, to encourage them to the War.

Saguntum taken.

Roman Ambaſſadors ſent to Carthage.

This news exceedingly vexed the Romans, being angry at their own ſlowneſs to ſend help to Saguntum, which held out eight Months, looking ſtill for ſuccour but in vain. Then did the Romans ſend Ambaſſadors to Carthage, to demand whether this act were done by their conſents, or whether it were Hannibals preſumption alone? If they granted the former, they were to give them defiance. Anſwer was made them in the Senate of Carthage by one of the Senators, to this effect. That by this Meſſage the Commonwealth of Carthage, was urged to plead Guilty, or nor Guilty: That it belonged to them to call their own Commanders in queſtion, and to puniſh them according to their Faults; but to the Romans to challenge them if they had done any thing contrary to their late League and Covenant. Its true (ſaid this Speaker) that in our negotiations with Luctatius your Ambaſſador, the Allies of both Nations were comprehended, but the Saguntines were not then your Allies, and therefore no parties to the Peace then made: For of your Allies for the future, or of ours, there was no queſtion: As for the laſt agreement between you and Aſdrubal, wherein you will ſay that the Saguntines were comprehended, its you that have taught us how to anſwer that particular. For whatſoever you found in the Treaty between us and Luctatius, to your diſadvantage, you ſaid it was his preſumption, as promiſing thoſe things for which he had had not Commiſſion from your Senate : If then it be lawful for you to diſavow the Actions of your Ambaſſadors and Commanders, concluding any thing without preciſe Warrant from you ; the ſame liberty may we alſo aſſume, and hold our ſelves no way bound in honour to perform the contract that Aſdrubal made for us, without our Command, and Conſent.

The Carthaginians anſwer.

In concluſion, the Carthaginian Senate moved the Romane Ambaſſadors to tell them plainly the purpoſes of thoſe that ſent them? whereupon Q. Fabius, gathering up the skirt of his Gown, as if ſomething had been in the hallow thereof, made this ſhort reply, I have here in my Gown-skirt both Peace and War; Make you (my Maſters of the Senate) election which you will have. All anſwered, even which of them you have a fancy to offer us. Then (quoth Fabius) take War, and ſhare it amongſt you. Which all the Aſſembly willingly accepted. War denounced by the Romans.

War being thus proclaimed, Hannibal reſolved not to put up his Sword which he had drawn againſt the Saguntines, till he had therewith opened his paſſage to the Gates of Rome. So began the ſecond Punick War ; indeed ſecond to none that ever the People of Rome met with. Hannibal wintered at Carthagena, giving licenſe to his Spaniſh Souldiers to viſit their Friends, and refreſh themſelves againſt the Spring. In the mean while he gave Inſtructions to his Brother Aſdrubal for the Government of Spain in his abſence. He alſo took order to ſend many Troops of Spaniards into Africk, to ſupply the rooms of thoſe Africans which he had drawn into Spain, as alſo that the one Nation might remain as Pledges for the other. He ſelected alſo four thouſand Foot, all young Men, and Perſons of Quallity, out of the beſt Cities of Spain, which were to be Garriſoned in Carthage it ſelf, not ſo much to ſtrengthen it, as that they might ſerve for Hoſtages. He alſo left with his Brother, to guard the Coaſts, and Ports, fifty ſeven Gallies, whereof thirty ſeven were ready Armed. Of Africans and other Nations, Strangers, he left with him above twelve thouſand Foot, and two thouſand Horſe, beſides one and twenty Elephants. Hannibal prepares for Italy.

Having thus taken order for the defence of Spain and Africk, he ſent ſome to diſcover the Paſſages of the Pyrenaan Mountains that part Spain from France ; and of the Alps, that part France from Italy. He ſent Ambaſſadors to the Inhabitants of the Pyrenes, and to the Gauls to obtain a quiet paſſage, that he might bring his Army intire into Italy. Theſe being returned with good ſatisfaction : In the beginning of the Spring he paſſed over the River of Iberus with an Army of ninety thouſand Foot, and twelve thouſand Horſe.

All thoſe parts of Spain which had not before been entered, he now ſubdued ; and appointed one Hanno to Govern Spain on the eaſt ſide of Iberus, with whom he left ten thouſand Foot, and one thouſand Horſe. When he came to the borders of Spain, ſome of his Spaniſh Souldiers returned home without asking leave ; which, that others alſo might not attempt, he courteouſly diſmiſſed ſuch as were willing to be gone : Hereby the Journey ſeemed the leſs tedious to ſuch as accompanied him voluntarily. With the reſt of his Army, conſiſting now but of fifty thouſand Foot, and nine thouſand Horſe, he paſſed the Pyrenes, and entered into Gaul (now France:) But he found the Gauls bounding upon Spain ready in Arms, to forbid his entrance into their Country : but with gentle Speech, and rich Preſents, which he ſent to their Leaders, he wan them to favour his expedition. So without any other moleſtation, he came to the Banks of Rhodanus, where dwelt on each ſide of the River a People called Volcæ. Theſe being unacquainted with the cauſe of his coming, ſought to ſtop his paſſage over the Water : But he was greatly aſſiſted by thoſe of Vivarets, and Lionois : for though many of them had tranſported themſelves, He Conquers much of Spain. His paſſage through France.

and

and their goods into Daulphine, thinking to defend the Banks againſt him; yet ſuch as remained, being willing to free their Countrey from ſuch unwelcome Gueſts, they helped him to make Boats: informed him of a better paſſage higher up the River, and ſent him Guides.

He is oppoſed. When his Boats were ready, he ſent Hanno the Son of Bomilcar, up the River, to the Ford, and himſelf in the mean time made a ſhew of entring the Ford below, that Hanno charging the Gauls on their own ſide, and himſelf at the ſame time paſſing the River in their faces, might win the further Bank, which was done accordingly, though with ſome difficulty, and thereby the enemies were diſperſed.

His Victory in France. Having paſſed this firſt brunt, and overcome both the rage of the River, and thoſe that defended it, he was viſited by the Princes of the Ciſalpine-Gauls, that inhabited Piemont and Milan, who had lately revolted from the Romans.

Some Gauls incourage him. Theſe informed him that the paſſage over the Alps was not ſo difficult as report made it, and gave him Guides, with many other encouragements. Yet found he himſelf extremly incumbred by the Savoyards, and loſt more of his Carriages and Carthaginians than he could well ſpare. For he was twice ſtrongly aſſaulted by them before he could recover the Plains on the other ſide.

He paſſeth the Alps. He was fifteen dayes paſſing over the Alps, wherein, beſides the trouble of his enemies, he was much aſſaulted by foul weather, and Snow, it being now the beginning of Winter. But the fair and fertile plains which they now were entring into, with the aſſiſtance and encouragement of the Ciſalpine Gauls, gave them much comfort, having nothing elſe of difficulty remaining, but that which from the beginning they made account to overcome by their proper Valour and Reſolution, namely, the Roman Armies and reſiſtance.

The Roman Ambaſſadours who had denounced War at Carthage, in their return homewards, took Spain in their way, with a purpoſe to draw into their Alliance as many Cities and Princes as they could. The firſt that they attempted were the Volcians, from whom they received this anſwer: that they would never joyn with them who had forſaken the Saguntines in their greateſt need; and that themſelves had found the Carthaginians ſuch good Neighbours, that they meant ſtill to adhere to them. From Spain the Ambaſſadours paſſed through Gaul, perſwading them not to ſuffer Hannibal to paſs through their Countrey, and gloried much in their own ſtrength: But the Gauls laughed them to ſcorn, and had ſcarce patience to hear them ſpeak: telling them that they meant not to ſet their own Houſes on fire, to ſave the Romans from burning; that the Carthaginians had never offended them as the Romans had done, who had already forced ſome of them out of their habitations, and made others Tributaries, who were as free as themſelves.

With theſe unpleaſing anſwers the Ambaſſadours returned home; carrying no good news of Friends like to help them, but rather that the Gauls intended to take part with their enemies.

The Gauls riſe againſt the Romans. And accordingly when the Ciſalpine-Gauls heard that the Carthaginians had paſſed Iberus, and were marching towards Rome, the Boij, and Inſubrians roſe up againſt the Romans: Their quarrel was the late planting of Roman Colonies at Cremona, and Placentia, within their Territories. Relying therefore upon the Carthaginian ſuccour, which they thought to be at hand, laying aſide all regard of thoſe Hoſtages, that they had lately given to the Romans, they fell upon thoſe Colonies. The Towns they could not win, but they forced the Roman Commiſſioners which were abroad, to fly into Modena, where they beſieged them.

They beſiege Modena. But the Gauls, having little skill in beſieging Cities, grew weary, and were deſirous of Peace: This they did on purpoſe to draw on ſome meeting, that laying hands on the Roman Deputies, they might with them redeem their Hoſtages; and it fell out

out in part according to their wiſh: For Ambaſſadours coming to them from Rome to treat with them, they made them Priſoners. Manlius the Prætor hearing of this outrage, marched with his Army to relieve the Beſieged. But the Gauls laid an Ambuſh in his way, that falling upon him, utterly routed him, and ſlew moſt of his Army, except a few that eſcaped into a defenſible place upon the River Po. This being heard of at Rome, C. Atilius, the other Prætor, haſted with another Army to relieve the beſieged.

The Romans ſend an Army into Spain.

But as the Gauls were too haſty, ſo the Romans were too ſlow in the beginning of this War. For they could not believe that Carthage, which had almoſt ſervilely endured ſo many indignities from them in the late peace, durſt be ſo bold on a ſudden, as to attempt the Conqueſt of Italy it ſelf. Wherefore they appointed one of their Conſuls to make War in Spain, and the other in Africk. Titus Sempronius went into Africk with one hundred and ſixty Gallies of five to an Oar, which preparations ſeemed to threaten Carthage her ſelf. P. Cornelius Scipio, the other Conſul, haſted towards Spain, and by the way, touching at Maſſilia, he was there informed, that Hannibal had paſſed the River Rhodanus, whom he had thought to have found buſie in Spain. Hannibal alſo heard of the Conſuls arrival, with whom he meant to have nothing to do. Yet both ſent forth Scouts, Hannibal ſent out five hundred Numidians, and Scipio three hundred of his beſt Horſe. They met, and fought, and the Romans had the better of it. But when Scipio drew near, thinking to have met with the Carthaginians, he found that they were gone three dayes before, with an intent to ſee the Walls of Rome.

Scipio hereupon ſent his Brother Cn. Cornelius Scipio into Spain, with the greateſt part of the Army, againſt Aſdrubal, and himſelf with the choiceſt returned back, and landing at Piſa, he marched through Tuſcany and Lumbardy, where he drew together the broken Bands of Manlius and Atilius, who were lately beaten by the Gauls, intending therewith to oppoſe the enemy, thinking to find them tired with their long Journey.

Hannibals loſſes in his march.

Five moneths Hannibal had ſpent in that tedious march from Carthagena. When he had paſſed Rhodanus, he had in his Army but thirty eight thouſand Foot, and eight thouſand Horſe, the reſt having periſhed with Diſeaſes, Enemies, Rivers, and Mountains. Having newly paſſed the Alps, and ſcarce refreſhed his wearied Army in Piemont, he ſought the Friendſhip of the Taurini, who being at this time in War with the Inſubrians, (his good Friends) the Taurini refuſed it; whereupon he beſieged their chief Town, and in three dayes wan it, the ſpoil whereof did much encourage his Army, and the others Calamity terrified their Neighbours. Moſt of thoſe parts would willingly have joyned with Hannibal, but when the Conſul Scipio came amongſt them, they began to be better adviſed. This wavering affection amongſt the People, made the Generals to haſten to a Battel. Their meeting was at Ticinum [now Pavia] where each of them wondred at the others expedition.

The Senate at Rome were much amazed at Hannibals arrival in Italy: wherefore they ſent preſently to Sempronius and the other Conſul, now in Sicily, to give him notice of it, and to require him ſpeedily to return with his Army for the ſafeguard of Italy, which accordingly he did. Scipio and Hannibal were now ſo near, that fight they muſt e're they could part, and therefore each of them encouraged their Souldiers by the beſt Arguments they had: Hannibal aſſuring his men, that there was no mean betwixt Victory and Death.

Hannibal prepares to fight.

When the Armies approached near each to other, Scipio ſent forth his Horſemen of the Gauls to begin the fight, lining them with his Darters for their aſſiſtance; himſelf, with his men at Arms followed ſlowly in good order. The Gauls, being in their Generals ſight, behaved themſelves gallantly,

A Battel.

ly, and were as bravely oppoſed; but their Darters at the very firſt, ran cowardly away without caſting a Dart, for fear of being trodden down by the enemies Horſe. Yet did the Gauls maintain it ſtoutly, and did more hurt than they received: neither was Scipio unmindful to relieve them; wherefore he adventured himſelf ſo far, that he received a dangerous wound, and had there periſhed, if his Son (afterwards called Africanus) had not brought him off. Whilſt the Romans were buſie in helping their Conſul, an unexpected ſtorm aſſailed them at their backs: Hannibal had appointed his Numidian Horſemen to charge the Romans in their Flank, ſo and to compaſs them about, whilſt he, with his men at Arms, ſuſtained their charge, and met them in the face. The Numidians performed it well, cutting in pieces the ſcattered Foot that ran away at the firſt encounter, and then falling on the backs of thoſe that charged Hannibal, by this impreſſion the Romans were ſhuffled together, and routed, betaking themſelves to their heels, and leaving to their enemies the honour of the day.

The Romans beaten.

Scipio perceiving how things were like to go, almoſt ſtole the Retreat with moſt of his Footmen yet unbroken, and recovered the Bridge over Ticinus: but notwithſtanding his haſt, he loſt ſix hundred of his men which brought up his Rear, and ſhould have broken down the Bridge. It was two dayes after, e're Hannibal could paſs the River: Scipio in the mean time refreſhing his men, and eaſing himſelf of his wound in Placentia: But when Hannibal preſented them Battel again, and they durſt not accept of it; the Gauls which before aſſiſted the Romans out of fear, took courage, and left them; and thinking that now the time was come for the recovery of their Liberty, that night they fell upon the Roman Camp, wounded, and ſlew many, eſpecially of thoſe that kept the Guard, with whoſe Heads in their hands they fled over to the Carthaginians, and preſented their ſervice: Hannibal received them exceeding courteouſly, and ſent them to their own homes, that they might perſwade the reſt of the Nation to become his Confederates.

The Gauls forſake the Romans.

The ſame night the Conſul ſtole a retreat, as he had done before, but not with the like ſucceſs: For Hannibal had an eye upon him, and e're he was gone far, he ſent his Numidians after him, and himſelf followed with the Body of his Army. Then had the Romans received a great blow, but the Numidians, greedy of prey, fell to ranſacking their Camp, and thereby gave them liberty of eſcaping, only ſome in the Rear were either ſlain, or taken Priſoners. Scipio being unable to travel by reaſon of his wound, and judging it meet to ſtay for the coming of his fellow Conſul, intrenched himſelf ſtrongly upon the Banks of the River Trebia; which ſo diminiſhed his Reputation, that every day more of the Gauls fell to Hannibal; amongſt whom came in the Boij, that brought with them the Roman Commiſſioners: Hitherto they had kept them as Pledges, wherewith to recover their own Hoſtages; but now they delivered them to Hannibal as tokens of their affection to him. Hannibal being in great want of Victuals he attempted the taking of Claſtidium, wherein the Romans had laid all their Store and Ammunition, and a Brunduſian that had the keeping of it, ſurrendred it to him for a little money.

Hannibal beats the Conſul.

He wins Claſtidium.

The news of theſe diſaſters coming to Rome, filled the Senate and People with a deſire of revenge, their Foot wherein their greateſt ſtrength lay, being yet entire: they therefore haſted away Sempronius with his Army, who, by ſpeedy marches came to Scipio, upon the Banks of Trebia. The Conſuls took Counſel what was fitteſt to be done, now that their Armies were conjoyned: Sempronius was eager to fight before Scipio recovered of his wound, that he might get the whole glory of the Victory: He alſo feared the election of new Conſuls, his time being almoſt expired: But Scipio perſwaded the contrary, by many arguments: yet would not Sempronius be taken off, wherewith Hannibal was exceedingly pleaſed, who feared nothing ſo much as delays. To further the desire of Sempronius, the Gauls that inhabited near to Trebia, complained of injuries done to them by the Carthaginians. Indeed they neglected to supply Hannibal with necessaries, and therefore he was bold to be his own Carver. Hereupon Sempronius sent forth a thousand Horse, which coming unlooked for upon Hannibals Forragers, who were heavy laden, they cut many of them in pieces, and chased the rest even to their Camp. This indignity made the Carthaginians to sally out, who caused them to retire faster than they came: Sempronius relieved his own men, and Hannibal did the like: So that at length the Roman Army was drawn forth, and Battel offered, if the Carthaginians had not refused it. Hannibals Forrages beaten.

as

This Victory (for so the Consul would name it) made the Romans very desirous to try it out in open Field, notwithstanding Scipios diswasion from it. This Hannibal was informed of by the Gauls that were in the Roman Camp: therefore he resolved to secure the Victory by adding a Stratagem to his Forces. He found in a hallow place overgrown with Reeds, a fit Trench to cover an Ambush: Therein he cast his Brother Mago with a thousand choise Horse, and as many Foot. The rest of his Army, when he had well fed, and refreshed them, he led into the Field and marched towards the Consuls. Early in the morning he had sent over the River some Numidian Horsemen to brave the enemy, and draw him forth to a bad Dinner before he had broken his Fast. Sempronius readily embraced the opportunity of fighting, and forthwith sent over the River in a miserable cold day, his Footmen, who were almost to the Arm-holes, which together with the want of Food, did much enfeeble them: The Romans were strong in Foot, having in all thirty six thousand: The Mass of those were ranged in a gross Battalion, guarded on the Flanks with three thousand Horse, thrusting their light armed and Darters in loose Companies before the rest in the nature of a Vaunt-guard. The Carthaginians equalled them in Foot, and exceeded them in Horse: when therefore the Roman Horse were broken by the Numidians: when their Foot were charged, both in Front and Flank, by the Spaniards, Gauls, and Elephants, and when all were pressed in the Rear by Mago and his Men out of the Ambush, then fell the Romans by heaps under their Enemies Swords, and were beaten down as well fighting as flying, so that of thirty six thousand, there escaped no more than ten thousand of all sorts. Another Battel. The Romans beaten.

The remainder of this broken Army was collected by Scipio, who got therewith into Placentia, stealing away the same Night, which was very rainy. Sempronius escaped with great danger, and fled to Rome, where he did his Office in choosing new Consuls for the year following, and then returned to his Province with a fresh supply against Hannibal.

The Winter proved very sharp, and unfit for service, which well pleased the Romans, who lay warm in Placentia, and Cremona. Yet did not Hannibal suffer them to lie very quiet, but vexed them with continual Alarms, assaulting divers places, and taking some. He also wan the Lygurians to him, who, to testifie their faithful love, presented him with two Roman Questors, [Treasurers,] two Collonels, and five young Gentlemen, the Sons of Senators. These and all his other Prisoners, Hannibal held in streight places, loaden with Irons, and miserably fed. But there followers he intreated courteously, and sent them to their own Countries without ransome, protesting that he undertook the War in Italy to free them from the oppression of the Romans. By these means he drew many to his party, and assistance. But some of the Gauls, fearing that their Country should be made the seat of War, conspired against his Life: others discovered the danger to him, who yet, soon after, were ready to practice the same; which enforced Hannibal Hannibals Policy. Treacheries against him.

nibal to uſe Perukes and falſe Beards the better to conceal himſelf from them.

At length when Summer was come, he reſolved to leave theſe giddy Companions and ſo paſſed the Appenine Hills that he might approach nearer to Rome. So away he went having his Army much recruted with Ligurians and Gauls; and to prevent the obſtructions in the ordinary way, he choſe to travel through the Fennes of Tuſcany. In thoſe Marſhes and Bogs he loſt all his Elephants ſave one, with one of his own eyes, through the moiſtneſs of the Air, and by lodging on the cold Ground: Yet at laſt with much ado, he recovered the firm and fertile Plains, and Quartered about Arretium, where he ſomewhat refreſhed his weary Army, and heard news of the Roman Conſuls.

His dangerous march.

C. Flaminius and Cn. Servilius, were newly choſen Conſuls for this year: The firſt a tractable man, wholly governed by the Senate; the other a hot-headed man, who fearing ſome obſtruction, gat him out of the City before the day of Election, that he might, as ſoon as he was choſen, take poſſeſſion of his Office: fearing leſt he ſhould loſe his Honour, which he hoped to gain in the War. The Senators were ſo diſpleaſed at this, that they ſent for him back; but he neglected their Command, and haſted to meet with the Carthaginians, whom he found at Arretium.

Hannibal was well pleaſed with the fiery diſpoſition of this Conſul, and therefore provoked him by many indignities, hoping thereby to draw him to fight, ere Servilius came with the reſt of the Army. For which end he put to Fire and Sword all the Country round about him, even under the Conſuls Noſe. By this Flaminius thought his Honour to be much impaired, and therefore advanced towards the Enemy. Many adviſed him to ſtay for his Colleague, but he would not be perſwaded: Then he commanded the Army to march.

All the Territory of Cortona as far as to the Lake of Thraſymene was on a light Fire, which, whilſt Flaminius thought to quench with his enemies blood, he purſued Hannibal ſo unadviſedly, that he fell, with his whole Army into an Ambuſh: from thence he was charged unaware from all ſides, ſo that he knew not which way to turn, nor how to make reſiſtance. There was he ſlain in that place, accompanied with the Carcaſſes of fifteen thouſand of his Countrymen: About ſix thouſand of his Vantguard took courage out of deſparation, and breaking through their Enemies, they recovered the tops of the Mountains: but being diſcovered there, Maharbal was ſent after them, who overtook them by Night in a Village, and ſurrounded them with his Horſe, and ſo they yielded, rendring up their Arms upon promiſe of life and liberty. This accord Hannibal refuſed to confirm, and ſo made them all Priſoners.

The Romans beaten again.

At this time he had about fifteen thouſand Priſoners: all that were not Romans he ſet free without ranſome, ſtill proteſting, that for their ſakes he came into Italy: But the Romans he kept in ſtreight Priſon, and held them to hard meat.

Preſently after the Battel of Thraſymene, C. Sempronius, with four thouſand Horſe came neer to Hannibals Camp. He was ſent from Ariminum by Servilius, the other Conſul, to encreaſe the ſtrength of Flaminius, but coming too late, he only encreaſed the miſadventure. Hannibal ſent out Maharbal to intercept him, who finding them amazed at the ill news of the late loſs, charged, and brake them, killing almoſt half of them, and drew the reſt ſimply to yield to mercy. Servilius hearing of the overthrow and death of his Colleague, haſted to Rome for the defence of it.

The Romans beaten.

Great fear at Rome.

Greatly were the Romans amazed at theſe diſaſters, and their approaching ing danger. Wherefore they had recourſe to a remedy which had been long out of uſe, and that was, to chooſe a Dictator, whoſe power was above the Conſuls, and ſcarcely ſubject to the Control of the whole City: And now they choſe Q. Fabius Maximus, the beſt reputed Man of War in the City, and Fabius choſe M. Minutius Rufus, Maſter of the Horſe, who was as the Dictators Lieutenant. A Dictator choſen.

The firſt act of Fabius was the reformation of ſomewhat that was amiſs in matter of Religion: then were the Walls and Towers of Rome repaired, and fortified, the Bridges upon Rivers were broken down, and all care taken for the defence of Rome it ſelf. Four Legions the Dictator raiſed in haſt, and from Ariminum he received the Army which Servilius had conducted thither. With theſe he marched apace after Hannibal, not to fight, but to affront him. He always lodged upon high grounds, and of hard acceſs, knowing that the Roman Horſe were far inferiour to the Numidians. Fabius his warineſs. Hannibal in the mean while purſued his Victory, and ranged over all the Countries, uſing all manner of cruelty towards the Inhabitants, eſpecially thoſe of the Roman Nation, of whom he put all to the Sword that were able to bear Arms. Paſſing by Spoletum, and Ancona, he encamped upon the Adriatick ſhores, refreſhing his diſeaſed and over travelled Army: and armed his Africans, after the Roman manner, and made his diſpatches for Carthage, preſenting his Friends, (which were very many) with part of the Spoils that he had gotten.

Having refreſhed his Army, cured his wounded, and fed his Horſes, he followed the courſe of the Adriatick Shore towards Apulia, a Northern Province of the Kingdom of Naples, ſpoiling all that lay in his way. Yet took he not one City in all thoſe Countries. Indeed he aſſaied Spoletum, but finding it well defended, he preſently gave it over. All his care was to weaken the Romans in force and reputation; knowing that when he was abſolute Maſter of the Field, it would not be long before the walled Cities would open their Gates to him. To this end he preſented Fabius with Battel, and provoked him with all manner of bravado's; but Fabius would not bite: His deſign was to attend the Carthaginians ſo neer as to keep them from ſtraggling, and to preſerve the Country from utter ſpoil. Thus by degrees he inured his Men to dangers, and brought them firſt to look on the Lion afar off, that at length they might adventure to ſit on his tail. Hannibals Policy. Fabius his Wiſdom.

But Minutius had a contrary diſpoſition, and was as fiery as Flaminius, taxing Fabius with cowardlineſs and fear; yet nothing moved this wary Dictator: He ſuffered Hannibal to croſs the Apennine Mountains, and to fall upon the rich and pleaſant Territories of Campania: Fabius ſtill keeping upon the Hills, and faſt grounds. When Hannibal ſaw that he could by no means draw him to fight, and that the Winter drew on, he reſolved to reſt his Army that was loaden with ſpoil, in ſome ſafe and plentiful Country till the Spring came again. But before he could do this, he muſt paſs along by the Dictators Camp, that hung over his head: For there was no other way for him to get out of this fertile Country which he had already waſted. But by the errour of his Guide he was brought (as it were) into a pinfold. Now began the wiſdom of Fabius to be admired, and applauded, as if he had caught the Carthaginians in a trap. But Hannibal freed himſelf by a fine invention: He had gotten about two thouſand Kine, upon whoſe Horns he tyed dry Fagots, and in the dark Night ſetting them on fire, he cauſed them to be driven up the Hill. The ſight was ſtrange and terrible to the Romans, and Fabius himſelf thinking it to be a deviſe to circumvent him, kept within his Trenches. So Hannibal and his Army eſcaped the danger, and gat into a ſafe Country. Then did he make ſemblance of marching towards Rome, the Dictator coaſting him after the wonted manner; and keeping ſtill on the high Hannibals Stratagem.

grounds betwixt him and the City, whilſt the Carthaginians waſted all the plain Countries, and taking Geryon in Apulia, he turned it into Barns and Storehouſes for the Winter, and encamped under the broken Walls. Thus little was done till the Dictator was called home to Rome about ſome buſineſs of Religion; and when he went, he left the Army in charge with Minutius, the Maſter of the Horſe.

Minutius was glad of this opportunity to ſhew his ſufficiency. He was perſwaded that the Romans in plain Field would beat the Carthaginians, who had got the former Victories by ſubtilty, and ambuſhes. All the Army was of his opinion, and therefore they preferred his forwardneſs before the cold warineſs of Fabius: Hereupon he reſolved to Fight, though he had been peremtorily forbidden by the Dictator, and the breach of whoſe command was Death: But Minutius thought that the honour of the Victory, and love of the Army, would ſecure him. Hannibal on the other ſide was very glad that he ſhould play with a more adventurous Gamſter: therefore he drew neer, and provoked the Romans, ſending forth a third part of his Army to waſt the Country. There was a piece of high and advantageous Ground between the two Armies: Hannibal ſent two thouſand Horſe to ſeize upon it: But Minutius by fine force, won it from them, and encamped upon it, whereby he became a nearer Neighbour to Hannibal.

Minutius for many days not ſtirring, Hannibal ſent forth many of his men to fetch in Harveſt. This advantage Minutius wiſely eſpied, and therefore drawing forth his Army, preſented Battel to Hannibal, but he was not now in caſe to accept of it; whereſore Minutius ſent out ſome againſt the Forragers, who were ſcattered all over the Fields, and loaden with Booty, and ſo were eaſily overthrown. It angred Hannibal that he was not able to help them, but it angred him worſe when the Romans took heart to aſſault his Trenches. But in the heat of this buſineſs Aſdrubal came from Geryon with four thouſand Horſe, which emboldned Hannibal to iſſue forth againſt the Romans, to whom he did not ſo much hurt as he had received.

Hannibals Forragers beaten.

For this piece of ſervice Minutius was highly honoured by the Army, and more cryed up by the People at Rome, all judging him more worthy of Command than Fabius. But the Dictator was not ſo joyful of the news, as angry that Minutius had diſobeyed his command. He ſaid, that he knew his own place, and that he would teach the Maſter of the Horſe to know it alſo; and that he would make him give an account for what he had done in his abſence. The People much diſliked theſe his Speeches, and made an Act, that Minutius ſhould be joyned in equal authority with the Dictator.

Minutius made equal with Fabius.

Before this Buſineſs was effected, Fabius ſeeing how things were like to go, diſpatched the election of a new Conſul in the room of Flaminius, and having finiſhed his buſineſs, went out of the City towards his Army. But the news of Minutius his advancement was at the Camp as ſoon as he, ſo that his Lieutenant treated with him now as his Colleague, asking him how they ſhould divide their authority: Fabius briefly told him, that ſeeing the Citizens had made the Maſter of the Horſe equal with the Dictator, he would divide the Legions with him by Lot, according to the cuſtom: Minutius was ill pleaſed with this, for with half the Army he could not work ſuch wonders as he hoped for. Yet meant he to do his beſt: and ſo taking half the Army, he encamped about a mile and a half from Fabius.

It behoved the Maſter of the Horſe to make good the opinion which had thus advanced him; therefore he ſought good occaſion to fight, to which which Hannibal, was as forward as he. The Country between them was open and bare, yet Hannibal found means to lay an ambuſh in it: For the ſides of the Valley had many ſpacious Caves, and Hannibal in the Night, thruſt into them five hundred Horſe, and five thouſand Foot: and leaſt they ſhould be diſcovered, he made offer betimes in the Morning to ſeize upon a piece of ground that lay on the other ſide from the Caves, thereby turning all their eyes that way. Minutius hoping to increaſe his honour as he had gotten it, ſent firſt his light Armuture, then his Horſe, and at length he followed in Perſon with the Legions. He was ſoon caught, and ſo invironed on all hands, that he neither knew how to make reſiſtance, nor a ſafe retreat. In this dangerous caſe, whilſt the Romans defended themſelves, they loſt many of their beſt men. But Fabius drew neer in good order to relieve them, and doing therein the office of a good Citizen, regarding more the good of his Country, than the diſgrace which he had wrongfully ſuſtained.

A Battel.

The Romans beaten.

Upon Fabius his approach, Hannibal retired: Fearing (as he ſaid) to be well wet with the Cloud that had hung ſo long upon the Hill-tops. Minutius forthwith ſubmitted himſelf to Fabius, by whoſe favour he acknowledged, that his life was preſerved. Thence forward the War went on ſlowly whilſt Fabius his Dictatorſhip laſted, and the year following alſo when he had delivered up his charge to to the Conſuls, that followed his inſtructions.

With little pleaſure did they of the poorer ſort in Rome hear the great commendations which were given to Fabius by the principal Citizens, becauſe the War was not finiſhed, nor much done tending thereto: And this affection was very helpful to Terentius Varro in his ſuit for the Conſulſhip; and farther to help him, he had a kinſman, Bibius Herennius, Tribune of the People: He boldly affirmed that Hannibal was drawn into Italy, and ſuffered there to range at his pleaſure by the Noblemen; that without a Plebeian Conſul the War would never be ended, &c. By which perſwaſions the multitude were won to be wholly for Terentius, to the great vexation of the Nobles, who could not endure ſuch an upſtart: But nothing could hinder the choiſe of Terentius: Wherefore the Nobles, (to ballaſt this hot-headed man) ſet up L. Æmilius Paulus, a gallant man and a brave Captain, to ſtand for the other Conſuls place, and he eaſily carried it.

Theſe new Conſuls, Varro, and Paulus, omitted no diligence in preparing for the War, wherein, though Varro made the greateſt noiſe, boaſting what wonders he would do if he could but once ſee Hannibal, yet the care, and prudence of Paulus did tend much more towards the effecting of it. He wrote to the two old Conſuls to forbear fighting, and yet to ply the Carthaginians with daily Skirmiſhes, and ſo to weaken them by degrees, that when he and his Fellow Conſul came with the new Army, they might find the four old Legions well accuſtomed to the Enemy, and the Enemy well weakened. Theſe new Conſuls raiſed an Army of above eighty thouſand Foot, and ſix thouſand Horſe.

Hannibal all this while lay at Geryon, where all his proviſion, and ſtore was. The Romans, to be neer him, lodged about Canuſium, laying up moſt of their proviſions in the Caſtle of Cannæ. This place Hannibal wan, and thereby not only furniſhed himſelf, but compelled his Enemies to want many neceſſaries: Hereby he alſo enabled himſelf to ſtay in that open Country, fit for the ſervice of the Horſe. Of this miſhap when Servilius had informed the Senate, it then ſeemed needful to them to adventure a Battel with the Carthaginian, rather than to ſuffer him thus to root himſelf in Italy.

Cannæ Caſtle taken.

When

When all things vvere ready in the City, and the ſeaſon of the year commodious, the two Conſuls, with their Army ſet forward againſt Hannibal. This was done with great ſolemnity: Sacrifices and ſolemn Vows were made to Jupiter, and the other Gods, for good ſucceſs and Victory: and the Generals were accompanied with a great number that brought them out of the City, and diſmiſſed them with Friendly leave-taking, and good wiſhes.

Theſe new Generals arriving at the Camp, diſmiſſed M. Atilius, one of the laſt years Conſuls, becauſe of his age, and retained Servilius with them, as their aſſiſtant. Æmilius laboured to encourage his men, telling them, that the enemy had ſtole all the former Victories by his Ambuſhes; that otherwiſe the Romans were far beyond them in Valour &c. and therefore he exhorted them to play the men and do their beſt. This ſet them on fire to be dealing with the Carthaginians, and herein Varro concurred with them, longing for an opportunity to get the honour which he promiſed to himſelf, having now ſuch a numerous Army. By this means the Romans fell into a great inconvenience by the diſagreement of their Generals; Varro would fight, and Æmilius would not for the preſent, hoping for better advantage ere long, when the enemy ſhould be forced to diſlodg out of the plain Country. The Conſuls command in turns every day. Æmilius lodged ſix miles from Hannibal where the ground was uneven. Terentius the next day deſcended into the plains, his Colleague beſeeching him to ſtay, but could not prevail. He ſat down neer to the Carthaginian, who yet gave him but a rude vvelcome, and entertainment. The Carthaginian Horſe, and light Armature fell upon the Roman Vaunt-Courriers, and put the whole Army into a tumult, whilſt it was yet in its march; but the Carthaginians were beaten off; though not without loſs. The next day Æmilius, who could not ſecurely draw back the Army, encamped upon the River Auſidus, ſending part of his Forces over the River where they encamped themſelves, with the reſt he fortified and kept within his Trenches. Varro was perſwaded that it concerned him in honour to make good his word to the People of Rome. When therefore it was his turn to Command, at the break of Day he began to paſs the River, without ſtaying to bid his Colleague good morrow: But Paulus came to him, labouring by all means to diſſwade him. Terentius had norhing to anſwer but that his honour was engaged. Hannibal had twice or thrice braved them, which muſt not be endured. When Æmilius perceived that he could not prevail, he was careful that what muſt be done, might be done well. Ten thouſand Foot he cauſed to be left behind in the Camp, oppoſite to the Carthaginians, to the intent that Hannibal might be forced to do the like, or elſe when they were in fight, theſe might fall upon his Camp, and take it, with all the wealth therein, which would much diſtract the Carthaginians. This done the Conſuls drew forth their Army over the Water, and ranged them in order of Battel.

Varro makes haſt to fight.

They prepare to fight.

This Hannibal was very glad of, and therefore without any delay, paſſed over the River alſo, leaving in his own Camp enow to defend it, and no more. To encourage his men, he told them how fit the ground was wherein they were to fight; and that therefore they were to thank the Gods who had ſo infatuated the enemies as to chooſe ſuch a place where the ſtronger in Horſe was ſure to prevail. Beſides (ſaid he) Theſe are the men whom you have beaten as often as you have ſeen them: and now you are to fight for their Cities, and all the Riches that are in them, and ere many hours paſs ye ſhall be Lords of all that the Romans enjoy. This ſet his men abuſſe to be at it, and at the ſame time came his Brother Mago, whom he had ſent to view the countenance of the Enemy, to whom he ſaid, What news? What works are we like to have? Work enough, anſwered

Mago,

Mago, for they are a horrible Company; As horrible a many as they be, ſaid Hannibal, I tell thee that amongſt them all, there is not one man whoſe name is Mago, and therewith he fell a laughing, which all the Souldiers alſo took for a good Omen.

In this great day the Carthaginian excelled himſelf, expreſſing abundance of Military skill, and of greatneſs of ſpirit, and courage. He ſo marſhalled his Army, that all hands were brought to fight, where every one might do the beſt ſervice. His Darters, and Slingers he ſent before to encounter the Roman Velites: His Africans Armed after the Roman manner, made the two Wings, very deep in File. Between theſe he ranged the Gauls and Spaniards armed, the firſt vvith broad Swords, and the other vvith ſhort and vvell-pointed Blades. The Gauls vvere ſtrong of Body, and furious in giving the Charge, but ſoon vvearied, ſpending their violence at the firſt brunt. The Spaniards vvere leſs eager but more wary. Theſe Hannibal cauſed to advance, leaving void the place wherein they had ſtood, and into vvhich they might fall back, if they vvere overhardly preſſed. Between the left Batallion by the River ſide, vvere the Gauls and Spaniſh Horſe under Aſdrubal: On the right Wing vvas Maharbal vvith the Numidian Horſe. Hannibal himſelf vvith his Brother Mago, led the Rear. His Army this day vvas ten thouſand Horſe, and forty thouſand Foot: His Enemies had two to one againſt him in Foot, and he five to three againſt them in Horſe. The great Battel at Cannæ.

The Roman Army vvas marſhelled after their uſual manner. On the right hand vvere the Roman Horſemen under the Conſul Paulus: On the left Wing vvas Varro with the reſt of the Horſe vvich were of the Latines and other aſſociates, and Servilius had the leading of the Battel. The Sun was newly riſen, and offended neither part, the Carthaginians having their faces Northward, and the Romans Southward.

After ſome light Skirmiſhes betvveen the tvvo Forlorns, Aſdrubal brake in upon the Conſul Paulus, and after a rough charge, and much execution done, the Roman Horſe vvere overborn, and driven by plain force to a ſtaggering recoil. When the Battels came to joyning, the Roman Legionaries found vvork enough, and more than enough to break that Body upon vvhich at firſt they fell: yet at laſt Hannibals men vvere forced to a haſty retreat. But vvhilſt the Legions, followving their ſuppoſed Victory, ruſhed on upon thoſe that ſtood before them, and thereby engaged themſelves deeply vvithin the principal ſtrength of the Enemy, the tvvo African Battalions on either ſide, advanced ſo far, that getting beyond the Rear of them, they almoſt vvholly incloſed them. Aſdrubal having broken the Troops of the Roman Horſe, followved them along upon the River ſide, beating dovvn, and killing moſt of them vvithout regard of taking Priſoners. The Conſul Paulus left his Horſe, and caſt himſelf amongſt the Legions, as hoping by them to make good the day. But he failed of his expectation: Yet did he cheer up his men as vvell as he could both by Words, and Example, ſlaying many vvith his ovvn hands. The like did Hannibal amongſt his Carthaginians in the ſame part of the Battel, but vvith better ſucceſs. For the Conſul received a blovv from a Sling that vvounded him much, and though a Troop of Roman Gentlemen did their beſt to ſave him from further harm, yet vvas he ſo hardly laid at, that by vvounds and vveakneſs he vvas compelled to forſake his Horſe: vvhereupon all his Company alſo allighted.

Hannibal being near, and ſeeing this, ſaid, pleaſantly, I had rather he would have delivered them to me bound, hand and foot, meaning, that he had them almoſt as ſafe as if they had been ſo bound. All this vvhile Varro, vvith his aſſociates in the left Wing, vvas marvellouſly troubled with Maharbal, Maharbal, and his Numidians; who beating up and down upon the great Sandy plain, raiſed a foul duſt, which by a ſtrong South wind, was driven into the eyes and mouths of the Romans. Theſe uſing the advantage both of their number and lightneſs, wearied the Conſul and his followers exceedingly, neither giving nor ſuſtaining any charge, but continually making offers and then wheeling about. Yet at the firſt, they ſeemed to promiſe him a happy day of it. For when the Battels were even ready to joyn, five hundred of theſe Numidians came pricking away from their Fellows, with their Shields on their backs, as was the manner of thoſe which yielded, and throwing down their Arms, yielded themſelves, Varro had no leaſure then to examine them, but bad them to reſt quietly behind his Army till all was done. Theſe crafty Marchants did as he bad them for a while, till they had opportunity to put their deſign in execution. Under their Jackets they had ſhort Swords and Poniards, with which and other Weapons that they gathered up of thoſe that were ſlain, they flew upon the hindmoſt of the Romans, whilſt all eyes were bent another way, where they did much miſchief, and raiſed great terrour. Thus Hannibal in a plain ground found means to lay an Ambuſh at the back of his enemies.

Hannibals Policy. The Romans beaten.

The laſt blow that put an end to all, was given by the ſame hand that gave the firſt. Aſdrubal having routed and ſlain all the Roman Horſe, ſave the Company of Æmilius that joyned themſelves to the Foot, did not ſtay to charge upon the face of the Legions, but, fetching a compaſs, he came up to the Numidians with whom he joyned, and gave upon Terentius. This fearful Cloud prognoſticated a diſmal ſtorm; wherefore Terentius his followers, having wearied themſelves much in doing little, and ſeeing more work towards then they were like to ſuſtain, thought it their ſafeſt way to ſecure themſelves by preſent flight. The Conſul alſo was as careful to provide for his own ſecurity as were they. Now he found that it was one thing to talk of Hannibal at Rome, and another to encounter him. Cloſe at the heels of him and his flying Troops were Numidians, appointed by Aſdrubal to the purſute as fitteſt for that ſervice. Aſdrubal himſelf with his Gauls and Spaniſh Horſe, fetching a compaſs, fell upon the backs of the Romans, who were almoſt ſurrounded, and much diſtreſſed before. Here began a miſerable ſlaughter, the vanquiſhed multitude thronging each other, not finding which way to turn. Æmilius, who could not fit his Horſe before, whilſt the ſpaces were open by which he might have withdrawn himſelf, was now unable to fly, his way being ſtopt by a throng of his miſerable followers, and heaps of Bodies, that fell apace in that great Carnage.

In this terrible overthrow dyed all the Roman Foot, ſave two or three thouſand, who eſcaped into their leſſer Camp; and the Night following about four thouſand Foot and two hundred Horſe fled into Canuſium. The Camps were both yielded to Hannibal by thoſe who yet remained in them. Terentius the Conſul recovered Venuſia with ſeventy at moſt in his Company; the reſt of his Troops were ſcattered over the Fields, and gathered up by the Numidians and made Priſoners. There died in this great Battel of Cannæ, beſides the Conſul Paulus, two of the Roman Queſtors, twenty one Collonels, eighty Senators, or ſuch as had born Office; amongſt whom was Servilius, the laſt years Conſul, and Minutius, late Maſter of the Horſe, and about eight thouſand were taken Priſoners. Hannibal loſt about four thouſand Gauls: fifteen hundred Spaniards and Africans, and about two hundred Horſe. A loſs not ſenſible in the joy of ſo great a Victory; which if he had purſued, as Maharbal adviſed him, and forthwith marched againſt Rome, probably the War had preſently been at an end. But Hannibal knew how how to get, not how to uſe a Victory: and God had otherwiſe determined.

When Hannibal had ſacked the Roman Camps, and truſed up the ſpoils, he diſlodged and marched away to Samnium, finding a diſpoſition in many People thereabouts to forſake the Romans, and to make aliance with him. The firſt Town that opened their Gates to him, was Coſſag, where he laid up his Baggage; and leaving his Brother Mago to take in other places, he haſtened into Campania. He diſmiſſed all his Priſoners that were not Romans, without ranſom; whereby he won the affections of moſt of the Common People in Italy, to incline to him. He alſo gave leave to his Roman Priſoners to ſend to Rome to procure their ranſom, with whom he ſent Carthalo, the General of his Horſe, to ſee how Rome ſtood affected to peace. The Senate commanded Carthalo to depart out of their Territories, and refuſed to redeem their Priſoners; probably, becauſe they wanted Mony wherewithal to do it. Many Towns intertain Hannibal.

Campania is a moſt pleaſant and fruitful Country, and Capua, the chief City in it, rich and wealthy, the Citizens deſpiſed now the unfortunate virtue of the Romans, and ſent Ambaſſadours to Hannibal with whom theſe Articles were agreed upon: That the Campans ſhould be abſolutely free, and Governed by their own Laws: That no Citizens of theirs ſhould be ſubject to any Carthaginian Magiſtrate in War or Peace; and that Hannibal ſhould deliver to the Campans three hundred Roman Priſoners, ſuch as themſelves ſhould chooſe, whom they might exchange for their Gentlemen that were Hoſtages with the Romans. Then did Hannibal haſten towards Capua, leaving Naples that he had thought to take in by Scalado, but found the Walls too high, and himſelf not fully furniſhed for a Siege. At Capua he was intertained with great ſolemnity and Pomp; all the Town being ſo earneſtly in love with their new Gueſts that they murthered all the Romans that at preſent they could come by. Capua intertains him.

The ſame courſe with theſe of Capua, ran the other Cities thereabout, except Nola, Nuceria, Naples, Caſſiline, and Acenæ, which yet ſtood out for the Romans. Rome it ſelf was in great fear of Hannibals coming at the firſt report of the overthrow at Cannæ; and the grief of that loſs was ſo general, and immoderate, that it much hindred their proviſion againſt apparent danger. All the Senators found work enough to quiet the Peoples lamentations. Courriers were ſent forth to bring them certain tidings how things went, whereof when Letters from the Conſul Varro had fully informed them, they were ſo amazed, that they ran into Barbarous Superſtition, and by the advice of their Southſayers, they buried two Men, and two Women alive in the Ox-market. Ambaſſadours alſo were ſent to the Oracle at Delphi, to enquire with what Prayers and Supplications they might pacifie the Gods, and obtain an end of their calamities. The Romans mourn. Their Superſtition.

In the midſt of theſe extremities they called home their Conſul Terentius that he might name a Dictator, and all ſorts of people went forth to meet him, and welcome him home, which was done to hold up their reputation. M. Junius was choſen for the Dictator, and T. Sempronius Maſter of the Horſe. Theſe fell preſently to the muſtring of Forces, and raiſed four Legions and a thouſand Horſe, yet were they faign to take ſome that were very Boys, and they encreaſed their number by adding to them eight thouſand ſturdy Slaves, to whom liberty was promiſed if they would deſerve it by their manly ſervice: The Dictator alſo Proclaimed, that whoſoever were in debt and could not pay it, or that had committed any capital offence, ſhould be pardoned if they would ſerve in the War: and to Arm theſe they were faign to take down out of their Temples the ſpoils of their enemies that had been there hung up. A Dictator choſen.

The Dictator having diſpatched all needful buſineſſes in the City, took the Field with twenty five thouſand Men, with whom he marched into Campania, and did little more then to keep Hannibal from ſpoiling the Country. Marcellus, one of the Roman Prætors, lying at Oſtia with a Legion and fifteen hundred Souldiers newly taken up, with whom he ſhould have gone into Sicily, hearing of the overthrow at Cannæ, ſent his new levied men to Rome for the defence of it, and with his Legion marched to Nola to help the Citizens there: Hannibal had many Friends in Nola amongſt the common People, and therefore brought his Army thither; and on a day ſeeing the Walls unmanned, he bad his Souldiers bring the Ladders and ſcale them: But whilſt they did it, and were in confuſion. Marcellus with his men, iſſued out at three ſeveral Gates, and ſet upon the Carthaginians, expecting no ſuch thing, and did ſuch execution amongſt them, that this was accounted a Victory, and reputed the braveſt act in all thoſe Wars, from whence they concluded that Hannibal might be overcome.

Hannibal beaten.

From thence Hannibal went to Acerræ, where being refuſed entrance, he laid Siege to it on every ſide, wherewith the Citizens being terrified, before his works were finiſhed, they ſtole out by Night, and left the Town empty; which Hannibal ſackt and burnt, then hearing that the Dictator was about Caſſiline, thither vvent he, but found him not; only many Companies of the Roman Confederats vvere gotten into the Town, and kept it: The Citizens vvere affected to Hannibal, and vvould faign have been free from there Gueſts, vvho finding their intent, in a Night ſlew all the Citizens, and fortified a part of the City againſt the enemy. Hannibal gave divers aſſaults to it, but vvas ſtill repelled vvith loſs, and may ſallies they made vvith variable ſucceſs: Hannibal mined, and they countermined, ſo that he vvas driven to encloſe them, that he might vvin it by Famine. T. Sempronius Gracchus, Maſter of the Horſe lay up the River vvith the Roman Army, and vvould faign have relieved the Beſieged, but durſt not venture. Barrels of Corn he ſent floating down the River to relieve them, which, being diſcovered, came into Hannibals hands. Gracchus caſt abundance of Nuts into the ſtream, vvhich faintly ſuſtained the Beſieged. At length vvhen all their food vvas ſpent, and vvhatſoever green thing grevv under the Walls, the Carthaginians plovved up the ground, and the beſieged preſently ſovved it vvith Rape-ſeed. Hannibal admired their patience, and ſaid, That he meant not to ſtay there till the Rapes were grown, and therefore, vvhereas he had intended to have made them an example for their obſtinacy, he vvas novv content to grant them their lives upon an eaſie ranſom, and ſo quietly diſmiſſed them. The time of the year novv being come, Hannibal retired into Capua, vvhere he vvintered, and vvhere (as ſome ſay) his Army vvas corrupted vvith the pleaſures and plenty there, and made more effeminate than before.

Acerræ taken by Hannibal.

Caſſiline beſieged.

About this time Hannibal ſent his Brother Mago to Carthage vvith the joyful nevvs of this great Victory. He told the Carthaginian Senate, vvith hovv many Roman Generals his Brother had fought, hovv many Conſuls he had chaſed, vvounded, or ſlain. Hovv the Romans, vvho never uſed to ſhun a Battel, vvere novv grown ſo cold that they thought their Dictator Fabius the only good Captain. That not vvithout reaſon their ſpirits were thus abated, ſince Hannibal had ſlain above two hundred and ſix thouſand of them, and taken above fifty thouſand Priſoners. He told them how many States in Italy followed the Fortune of thoſe great Victories. He told them that the War was even at an end, if they vvould follovv it cloſe and give the Romans no time of breathing. He wiſhed them to conſider that the War was carried into an enemies Country, that ſo many Battels had diminiſhed his Brothers Army, that the Souldiers that had deſerved ſo well, ought ought to be well rewarded, and that it was not good to burden their new Italian Friends with exactions of Mony, Corn, &c. But that theſe muſt be ſent from Carthage. Laſtly he cauſed the Gold Rings, taken from the Fingers of the Roman Knights that were ſlain, to be powred out before them, which being meaſured, filled three Buſhels.

Mago ſent to Carthage.

This errand of Mago for the preſent found extraordinary good welcome; And large ſupplies vvere voted to be ſent to him: But his old enemy Hanno, obſtructed them, and the too much Parſimony, of the Citizens was the cauſe that there was very little done, and that which was done came too late. However, Mago brings the news of the great ſupply which was decreed to be ſent; which much rejoyced Hannibal and his new confederates. The Spring drew on vvhen the ſupply was expected, but there came no more than a few Elephants, and Hannibal was forced to reſt contented with them. Then did he take the Field, and ſought to make himſelf Maſter of ſome good Haven Town that might ſerve to intertain the Carthaginian Fleet when it ſhould arrive with the ſupplies. For this end he ſent Himilco, who by the help of his good Friends the Bruſians, won Petilia; he won alſo Concentia and Crotan, and the City of Locri, and many other places; only the Town of Rhegium, over againſt Sicily, held out againſt him.

Large ſupplies promiſed to Hannibal.

Divers Cities taken.

The Romans at this time were in ſuch a caſe, that Hannibal vvith a little help from Carthage, might have reduced them to great extremity. But his own Citizens ſuffered him to languiſh with expectation of their promiſed ſupplies, which being ſtill deferred from year to year, cauſed as great opportunities to be loſt, as a Conqueror could have deſired. But whatſoever Hannibal thought, he was faign to apply himſelf to his Italian Friends, and to feed them with Hopes, and to trifle way his time about Nola, Naples, Cumæ, &c. being loath to weaken his Army by a hard Siege; that was to be reſerved for a vvork of more importance. Many offers he made upon Nola, but always vvith bad ſucceſs. Once Marcellus fought a Battel with him there, under the Walls of the City, having the Citizens to aſſiſt him, vvherein Hannibal loſt a thouſand men; which was no great marvail; his forces being then divided, and imployed in ſundry parts of Italy at once.

The promiſed ſupplies come not.

At this time T. Sempronius Gracchus, and Q. Fabius Maximus, the late famous Dictator, were choſen Conſuls. But Fabius was detained at Rome about matters of Religion, or Superſtition rather, vvherewith the City vvas commonly, eſpecially in the times of danger, very much troubled, ſo Gracchus alone, vvith a Conſular Army, waited upon Hannibal amongſt the Campanes, not able to meet him in the Field, yet attentive to all occaſions that ſhould be preſented. The Slaves, that lately had been Armed, were a great part of his followers. Theſe and the reſt of his men Gracchus continnally trained, and had not a greater care to make his Army skilful in the exerciſes of War, than in keeping it from quarrels that might ariſe by their upbrading one another vvith their baſe condition.

Gracchus his Prudence.

Gracchus at this time had a bickering vvith the Capuans, upon whom he came at unawares, and ſlew above two thouſand of them, and took their Camp, but ſtaid not long to riffle it for fear of Hannibal, that lay not far off. By this his Providence he eſcaped a greater loſs, than he brought upon the Capuans: For vvhen Hannibal heard hovv things vvent, he preſently marched thither, hoping to find theſe young Souldiers and Slaves buſied in loading themſelves vvith the Booty: But they were all gotten ſafe into Cumæ, which ſo angred Hannibal, that at the earneſt requeſt of the Capuans, he aſſailed it the next day. Much labour, and vvith ill ſucceſs he ſpent about this Town. He raiſed a Woodden Tower, & brought it cloſe to the Walls thereby thereby to assault it, but they within built a higher Tower, whence they made resistance, and found means to set Hannibals Tower on fire, and whilst the Carthaginians were busie in quenching the fire, they issued out, charged them valiantly and drove them to their Trenches. The Consul wisely sounded a retreat in time, or Hannibal had requited them. The day following, Hannibal presented Battel to them, but Gracchus refused it: Seeing therefore no likelyhood to prevail, he raised his Siege and departed.

The Capuans beaten.

Cumæ beſieged.

The Siege raised.

About this time Fabius, the other Consul, took the Field, and recovered some small Towns that Hannibal had taken, and punished the Inhabitants severely for their revolt, the Carthaginians Army was too small to Garrison all the Towns that had yielded to them, and withall, to abide (as it must do) strong in the Field. Wherefore Hannibal, attending the supply from Carthage that would enable him to strike at Rome it self, was driven in the mean time to alter his course of War; and instead of making (as he had formerly done) a general invasion upon the whole Country, he was faign to wait upon occasions, that grew daily more commodious to the Enemy, than to him. When Hannibal was gone to Winter into Apulia, Marcellus wasted the Country of the Hirpines, and Samnites: the like did Fabius in Campania.

Hannibal delaies.

The People of Rome were very intentive upon the Work they had in hand, they continued Fabius in his Consulship, and joyned with him Cladius Marcellus. Of these two, Fabius was called the Shield, and Marcellus the Roman Sword. The great Name of these Consuls, and the great preparations which they made, put the Campans in fear that Capua it self should be besieged, wherefore at their earnest request Hannibal came from Arpi, and having comforted his Friends, on a sudden he fell upon Puteoli, a Sea-town of Campania, about which he spent three days in vain, there being six thousand in Garrison, wherefore he left it, and marched to Tarentum, wherein he had great intelligence.

In the mean time Hanno made a journy against Beneventum, where T. Gracchus met him. Hanno had with him about seventeen thousand Foot, Brutians, and Lucans, besides twelve hundred Horse, most of them Numidians and Moors. Four hours he held the Romans work ere it could be perceived to which side Victory would incline. But Gracchus his Souldiers, which were most of them Slaves, had received from him a peremptory denunciation, that this day or never they must purchase their Liberty, by bringing every man an Enemies Head. The sweet reward of Liberty was so desireable, that they feared no danger in earning it, though the cutting off their Enemies Heads troubled them exceedingly, which Gracchus perceiving, proclaimed that they should cast away the Heads, assuring them that they should have their liberty presently after the Battel, if they wan the day. This made them run headlong upon the Enemy, whom their desperate fury had soon overthrown, if the Roman Horse could have made their party good against the Numidians. But though Hanno did what he could, and pressed so hard upon the Roman Battel, that four thousand of the Slaves retired to a ground of strength, yet was he glad at length to save himself by flight with two thousand Horse, all the rest being either slain or taken. Gracchus performed his promise to the Slaves, making them free: only on those four thousand, that went aside in the Battel, he inflicted this slight punishment, that as long as they served in the Wars, they should eat standing, unless sickness forced them to break this order. So Gracchus with his Army returned into Beneventum, where the newly-enfranchised Souldiers, were Feasted in publike by the Townsmen, some sitting, some standing

A Battel.

The Carthaginians beaten.

ſtanding and all vvith their Heads covered, as the manner of ſuch was, vvith vvhite Caps. This vvas the firſt Battel vvorthy of note, that the Carthaginians loſt ſince the coming of Hannibal into Italy.

Thus the Romans by degrees began to get heart, and repair their breaches, only their Treaſury was very empty, vvhereupon the People vvere called together, and vvere plainly told, that in this exigent, there muſt be no taking of mony for Victuals, Weapons, Apparel, or other neceſſaries for the Souldiers, but that they muſt truſt the Common-vvealth with the loan of theſe things till the Wars vvere ended. This vvas vvillingly aſſented to, and the Armies vvere vvell ſupplyed both at home and abroad. The Romans poverty, how ſupplied.

In the mean time the Roman Generals omitted no part of induſtry in ſeeking to recover what had been loſt. Caſſiline was beſieged by Fabius, unto whoſe aſſiſtance Marcellus came; The Town was well defended by a Carthaginian Garriſon for a long time, but at length, the Inhabitants grew fearful, craved a Parlee, and agreed to deliver it up, ſo as all might have liberty to depart whither they pleaſed. This was conſented to, yet as they were iſſuing out, Marcellus ſeizing upon a Gate, entred with his Army and put all to the Sword: only about fifty that had gotten out, ran to Fabius, who ſaved them, and ſent them to Capua. Caſſiline taken by the Romans.

Hannibal was this while about Terentum, but after long expectation of having it delivered to him, he was faign to depart without it. So he went to Salapia, which he intended to make his wintring place, and began to Victual it.

The new Conſuls choſen at Rome, were Q. Fabius, the Son of the preſent Conſul, and T. Sempronius Gracchus the ſecond time. The old Fabius became Lieutenant to his Son; and on a time when the old man came to the Camp, his Son rode out to meet him. Eleven of the twelve Lictiors, let him paſs by on Horſe-back, which was againſt the cuſtom; but the Son perceiving this, bad the laſt of the Lictiors to take notice of it, who thereupon bad old Fabius alight, and come to the Conſul on Foot: the Father cheerfully did ſo, ſaying, It was my mind, Son, to make tryal, whether thou didſt underſtand thy Self to be Conſul. Altinius a wealthy Citizen of Arpi, came to Fabius and offered to deliver the Town into his hands. Hannibal hearing of it, was glad, and ſent for the Wife and Children of Altinius into his Camp, he examined them by torment, and being aſſured of the Treaſon, he commanded them to be burnt, and ſeized upon all Altinius his wealth. Fabius ſhortly after came to Arpi, which he took by Scalado in a ſtormy Night. Five thouſand of Hannibals Souldiers lay in the Town, and of the Arpines there were about three thouſand. Theſe were thruſt formeſt by the Carthaginian Garriſon, who ſuſpected them, and therefore thought it no wiſdom to truſt them at their backs. But after ſome little reſiſtance, the Arpines gave over the fight, and Parlied with the Romans, and the Arpine Pretor, going to the Roman Conſul, received his Faith for the ſecurity of the Town, wherefore they preſently made head againſt the Garriſon, yet did the Carthaginians make ſtout reſiſtance, till it was agreed that they ſhould paſs ſafely, and return to Hannibal. Arpi taken by the Romans.

About this time Cliternum was taken by Sempronius Tuditanus, one of the Roman Prætors. Alſo one hundred and twelve Gentlemen of Capua offered their ſervice to C. Fulvius, the other Prætor, only upon condition to have their goods reſtored to them: which ſhewed that their affections were turned from Hannibal to the Romans. The Conſentines alſo and the Thurines, which had yielded to Hannibal, when there was no appearance of thoſe great ſuccours which were promiſed from Carthage, returned to their old allegiance again. Others would have done the like, but that at this time Hanno met with, and ſlew L. Pomponius, and a great multitude that followed him. The Romans beaten.

Hannibal

Hannibal in the mean time had all his care about Tarentum, which if he could take, it would be very commodious for the Landing of the ſupplies, which he yet expected. Long he waited for an opportunity, and at laſt by the help of his Friends within it, he one night entered at the two Gates that were opened for him, and preſently made to the Market place; which the Governour perceiving, fled to the Port, and taking Boat, got into the Citadel that ſtood at the mouth of the Haven. Hannibal having gotten the ſpoil of the Roman Soldiers Goods, he addreſſed himſelf againſt the Citadel, which ſtood upon a Poninſula, and was joyned to the Town by a cauſway, which was fortified with a Wall and a Ditch. Againſt this Hannibal raiſed ſome works, hoping in a ſhort time to take it, but whilſt he was thus buſied, there came in a ſtrong ſupply by Sea to them, which made his attempt hopeleſs. The Tarentins Fleet lay in the Haven and could not go forth by reaſon of the Citadel, whereby the Citizens were likely in a ſhort time to ſuffer want: To help this, Hannibal cauſed their Ships to be drawn up, and carried through the ſtreets, which were long and plain, and lanched them into the Sea without; which done, they ſo cut off all ſupplies, that the Citadel began to ſuffer want.

Tarentum taken by Hannibal.

Now this while the Roman Forces grew ſtrong, and Q. Fulvius Flaccus, with Appius Claudius, the new Conſuls, prepared to beſiege the great City of Capua, having now armed twenty three Legions, though to fill them up, they had liſted many Boyes, and they made a Law for their encouragement, that their years ſhould go on from that time, as if they had been of lawful age.

Before the Roman Army drew near, the Capuans, through their own wretchleſneſs, began to feel want of Victuals, they ſent therefore to Hannibal, deſiring him to ſuccour them before they were cloſed up, and he ſent Hanno with an Army to ſupply their wants. Hanno appointed them a day to bring ſtore of carriages to convey in the proviſions which he ſhould make, but when the day came, they brought only fourty Waggons, with a few pack-Horſes. Hanno was much vexed at it, and appointed them another day when they ſhould come better provided: But in the mean while Q. Fulvius the Conſul, came privately to Beneventum, and having heard that Hanno was gone abroad a Forraging, he marched all night, and by the break a day, aſſaulted his Camp, which for a long time was gallantly defended, but at laſt, though with great loſs, he won it, in which ſix thouſand were ſlain, ſeven thouſand taken Priſoners, beſides a great Booty that Hanno had lately gotten from the Roman Confederates. This miſadventure, and the neer approach of the Roman Conſuls, made them of Capua to ſend a pitiful meſſage to Hannibal, intreating him to haſten to their relief, conſidering how faithful they had been to him. Hannibal anſwered them with fair promiſes, and ſent away two thouſand Horſe to keep their Lands from ſpoil, whilſt himſelf was intent about taking the Citadel, and ſome other Towns in thoſe parts.

The Carthagi-nians beaten.

Capua beſieged by the Conſuls.

The Conſuls, fortifying Beneventum, to ſecure their backs, addreſſed themſelves to the ſiege of Capua. Many diſaſters befell the Romans in the beginning of this great enterpriſe. Gracchus, a brave Souldier, and lately twice Conſul, was ſlain. He was honourably interred by Hannibal, ſome of whoſe ſtraglers had ſlain him, the Manumiſſed Slaves that ſerved under him, took this opportunity to go every man whither he pleaſed, ſo that it was long ere they could be got together again. Yet the Conſuls proceed in their work. Mago and the Citizens gave them but bad welcome, ſallying out, and ſlaying fifteen hundred of their men. Neither was it long ere Hannibal himſelf came, fought with them, and cauſed them to diſlodge. They removed by night and went ſeveral vvays: Fulvius, towards Canna, and Claudius into Lucania. Hannibal followed Claudius, but could not reach him.

The Siege raiſed by Hannibal.

Yet

Yet by the way he met with one Penula, a ſtout man that had the charge of neer ſixteen thouſand men, with him he fought, and ſlew him, and almoſt all his men, ſcarce a thouſand of them eſcaping. Then was Hannibal informed that Cneus Fulvius, a Roman Prætor, was in Apulia with about eighteen thouſand men. Coming to Fulvius, ſo forward he was, that needs he would have fought with him that night. Hannibal ſet Mago with three thouſand men in an Ambuſh, then offering Battel to Fulvius, he ſoon had him in the Trap, whence he was glad to eſcape himſelf, leaving all, ſave two thouſand of his men, dead behind him.

The Romans beaten.

Another Victory.

Theſe two great blows much aſtoniſhed the Romans. Yet when they had gathered the remainders of thoſe Armies, the Conſuls fell hard again to the Siege of Capua. At the firſt ſitting down of the Conſuls they proclaimed, that whoſoever would come out of Capua by ſuch a day, ſhould be pardoned, and enjoy his eſtate, if not, no grace was to be expected: the Capuans relying on their own ſtrength, and the aſſiſtance of Hannibal rejected this offer with ſcorn: And before they were wholly cloſed up, they ſent to Hannibal requeſting his help: He gave them good words, and diſmiſſed them. But he, thinking that they were well able to hold out for a long time, ſtaid to diſpatch his buſineſs, before he went, by which means the Conſuls had time enough to entrench and ſecure themſelves.

Capua beſieged again.

When the Conſulſhip of Claudius and Fulvius was expired, they were continued in their charge of the Army as Proconſuls, and their deſign was to take Capua by Famine. But Hannibal came before he was expected by the Romans, and took one of their Forts, and fell upon their Camp; the Capuans alſo at the ſame time ſallyed out but were beaten in again; Yet did Claudius in purſuing them, receive a wound, that ere long brought him to his Grave. Hannibal followed his buſineſs better and had almoſt taken the Camp, yet at length was repelled.

Hannibal comes to relieve them.

This extreamly angred Hannibal and made him entertain a haughty reſolution, even to ſet upon Rome, which accordingly he purſued, and becauſe that work muſt be done with celerity, he cauſed his men to provide victuals for ten days, and ſo marched forward. This news coming to Rome, they ſent to acquaint their Generals with it, wiſhing them to do what they judged beſt for the ſafety of the City. And thereupon Q. Fulvius took fifteen thouſand choiſe Foot, and a thouſand Horſe, and with them haſted towards Rome.

As Hannibal drew neer, making woful havock as he went, all the ſtreets and Temples in Rome were filled with women, crying, and praying, rubbing the Altars with their hair, the Senators were all in the Great market place, ready to give advice upon all emergencies. But Fulvius and Hannibal arrived at Rome neer together. The Conſuls and Fulvius encamped without the Gate of Rome, attending Hannibal, who coming within three miles of the City, advanced with two thouſand Horſe, and rode along a great way under the Walls, viewing, and conſidering how he might beſt approach them. Yet went he back without doing or receiving any hurt. Many tumults were at this time raiſed in the City, and the multitude were ſo affrighted, that they would have run out of the Gates if they could have done it with ſafety.

Hannibal intends for Rome and leaves it.

The day following Hannibal brought up his Army and preſented Battel to the Romans, who would have accepted it, had not a terrible ſhower of Rain cauſed both the Armies to return into their Camps; and this happened two days together, and the weather cleered up preſently after. But Hannibal, who had brought but ten days proviſion with him, could not ſtay any longer, he therefore made all the ſpoil he could in the Roman Territories, paſſing like a Tempeſt over the Country, and run towards the Eaſtern Sea ſo faſt, that he had had almoſt taken Regium before his arrival was ſuſpected. As for Capua he gave it for loſt, and curſed the faction of Hanno, which thus diſabled him to relieve that fair City.

Fulvius returned back to the Siege of Capua, which now began to ſuffer want. And faign they would have ſent again to Hannibal but that all ways were intercepted. The truth is, Hannibal had already done his beſt, and now began to faint under the burden of that War, wherein (as he afterwards proteſted) he was vanquiſhed by Hanno and his Partizans in the Senate of Carthage, rather than by any force of the Romans. Capua being novv brought to extremity, the multitude forced the Senators to conſult about the delivering of it up to the Romans: The braveſt of the Senators foreſavv what the iſſue vvould be, and therefore one of them invited the reſt home to Supper, telling them that vvhen they had Feaſted themſelves he vvould begin to them ſuch a health as ſhould for ever free them from the malice of their enemies, the Romans: Tvventy ſeven of the Senators imbraced the motion, and vvhen they had Supped, drank Poyſon, vvhereof they died: The reſt, hoping for mercy, yielded to diſcretion. So a Gate vvas opened vvhereat a Roman Legion entred, diſarmed the Citizens, and made the Carthaginians Priſoners; The Senators vvere laid in Irons; and preſently after, Fulvius cauſed all the Campane Priſoners to be bound to ſtakes, and ſcourged a good vvhile vvith Rods, after which he ſtruck off their heads. The like rigor Fulvius uſed to all the Towns of the Campanians: moſt of the Inhabitants, with their Wives and Children he ſold for Slaves, the reſt were baniſhed; after which the Glory of Hannibal began to ſhine more dim, and moſt of Italy by the terrible example of the Capuans, had a General inclination, upon good conditions, to return to the Roman ſide.

Capua taken.

The Conſuls cruelty.

Marcellus and Levinus being choſen Conſuls, Levinus went into Sicily, and Marcellus was to make War vvith Hannibal: They vvere buſy in raiſing Soldiers, but wanted mony extreamly; many ways were propoſed how to ſupply that want. At laſt the Conſuls ſaid, that no perſvvaſions would be ſo effectual with the People, as good examples; wherefore they propounded and it was preſently reſolved, that every one ſhould bring and put into the Treaſury all the mony, Jewels, and Plate that they had, and none reſerve more than one Salt, and a Bowle wherewith to make their offerings to the Gods: as alſo a Ring for himſelf: and ſome other ſmall Ornaments for his Wife and Children; and this was accordingly done by all, with much cheerfulneſs.

The publick wants ſupplied.

Then went forth Marcellus againſt Hannibal, whoſe Army was now greatly diminiſhed by long and hard ſervice. His credit alſo amongſt his Italian Friends was much weakned by the loſs of Capua: This put him upon pillaging thoſe Towns which he could not keep, thinking that the beſt way both to enrich himſelf, and to preſerve it from his enemies: but this farther alienated them from him, whereupon Salapia yielded to Marcellus, and betrayed to him a gallant Regiment of Numidians, the very beſt that Hannibal had. After this the Conſul took two Cities of the Samnites, wherein he ſlew above three thouſand of Hannibals men; which Hannibal could not prevent, the Romans being grown ſtronger in the Field than he. But now came news that Maſſaniſſa was at Carthage, with five thouſand Horſe, ready to ſet ſail for Spain, whither, when he came, he was to accompany Aſdrubal, the Brother of Hannibal into Italy. This did not more comfort Hannibal and his followers, than it terrified the Romans.

Salapia yielded to Marcellus.

At this time Hannibal was informed that Cn. Fulvius, a Roman Prætor, lay neer to Herdonea, to get the Town by practice: Hannibal made great marches thitherward, and when he came, offered Battel to Fulvius, who readily embraced it. The Roman Legions made good reſiſtance a vvhile, till they vvere compaſſed round vvith the Carthaginian Horſe: then fell they to rout, and a great great ſlaughter was made of them; Fulvius, with twelve Collonels, and about thirteen thouſand were ſlain, and Hannibal ſet Herdonea on fire becauſe it was appointed to be delivered up to the Romans.

The Romans beaten.

Marcellus hearing this, haſted thither: At Venuſia they met, and fought a Battel from Morning till the Night parted them, and ended with uncertain Victory. Many more skirmiſhes they had, but none of importance. A Battel.

Then Q. Fabius Maximus, and Q. Fulvius were again choſen Conſuls: and Fabius reſolved to beſiege Tarentum, which if he could win, like it was that ſcarce any one good City would remain true to Hannibal, and in the mean time he deſired Fulvius, and Marcellus, with their Army, to preſs Hannibal ſo hard that he might have no leiſure to help Tarentum. Marcellus was glad of this opportunity, judging that no Roman was ſo fit to deal with Hannibal as himſelf; He followed him therefore from place to place, deſiring ever to come to Battel, but upon unequal terms. Hannibal only entertained him with skirmiſhes, meaning to keep his Army intire, till Aſdrubal came to him. But Marcellus was ſo importunate, that he could not be rid of him, wherefore Hannibal had his men to beat ſoundly this hotſpur Roman Captain of whom he could not be rid till he had let him blood. Then followed a Battel wherein Hannibal had the Victory, took ſix Enſigns and ſlew about three thouſand of the Romans. Marcellus rated his men exceedingly, and called them cowards, which did ſo ſhame them, that they asked pardon, and deſired him to lead them forth again againſt the enemy. Hannibal was angry to ſee that nothing would make them quiet, and ſo they fought again, and though the Romans had the better of it, fighting very deſperately, yet they loſt ſo many men that they had little cauſe to boaſt of the Victory: Only this advantage they had, that hereby Fabius got time to proſecute his Siege at Tarentum without diſturbance. Fulvius the other Conſul this vvhile took in diverſe Towns of the Hirpines, Lucans, and Volſcentes, that vvillingly rendred themſelves and betrayed Hannibals Garriſons to him. A Battel. The Romans beaten.

Fabius, by the Treaſon of a Bruſian Captain in Tarentum had the Town delivered into his hands, and yet vvhen he vvas entered he put all to the Sword, Brutians as vvell as others, vvhereby his credit vvas much impaired. All the Riches of the Town he ſought out, vvhich vvas very great, and ſent it to the Treaſury at Rome vvhere there vvas much need of it. Hannibal having gotten cleer of Marcellus, fell upon thoſe that beſieged Caulonia, all vvhom he ſlew or took Priſoners, and then he haſted to relieve Tarentum; But vvhen he came vvithin five miles, he heard that it vvas loſt. This grieved him, yet he ſaid no more than this, The Romans have alſo their Hannibal: We have loſt Tarentum in like ſort as we got it. But leſt he ſhould ſeem to retreat out of fear, he encamped there four or five days, and thence departing to Metapont, he bethought himſelf how to take Fabius in a Trap. He cauſed the chief of Metapont to write to Fabius; offering to betray it into his hand. Theſe letters were ſent by two young men of the City, who did thir errand ſo well, that the Conſul wrote back, and appointed the day when they ſhould expect him. Hannibal being glad of this, at leaſure made ready his Ambuſhes for the wary Fabius; but ſomething hindred him from coming, and ſo all was fruſtrated. Tarentum taken. The Romans beaten.

M. Claudius Marcellus, and T. Quintus Criſpinus were choſen Conſuls, who had a ſtrong deſire to make War upon Hannibal, aſſuring themſelves of Victory. Criſpinus had alſo a deſire to make his Conſulſhip Famous by taking ſome good Town, as Fulvius and Fabius had done by taking of Capua, and Tarentum: wherefore he went and beſieged Locri, the beſt City in Italy that held for the Carthaginian, bringing all ſorts of En- Loory beſieged.

gins to promote the work. But Hannibal was not slow to relieve the City, at whose approach, Crispinus rose and retreated to his fellow Consul. Thither followed Hannibal, to whom the Consuls offered Battel: He refused it, yet dayly entertained them with Skirmishes, waiting for some advantage, and reserved his Army to a time of greater imployment when his Brother Asdrubal should come into Italy. Marcellus was not well pleased with this, and therefore sought to force him to fight; for which end he commanded a Navy by Sea, and the Garrison of Tarentum again to besiege Locri: But Hannibal had an eye behind him, and by the way, laid an Ambush for those of Tarentum, slew three thousand of them, and made the rest to fly back into Tarentum. As for the Consuls, Hannibals desire was to wast them by little, and little. Betwixt him and them was a little Hill, overgrown with Bushes, amongst them he hid some Numidians, willing them to attend every advantage. To this Hill the Consuls thought fit to remove their Camp; thither therefore they rode to view the place, taking with them the Son of Marcellus, a few Collonels, and other principal men, and about two hundred Horse. The Numidian Centinel gave warning of their approach, and the other discovered not themselves till they had surrounded the Consuls and their Company. The Consuls defended themselves hoping to be quickly relieved from the Camp that was neer at hand: But all their Horse save four, forsook them and fled. Marcellus was slain with a Lance; Crispinus had his deaths wound, and young Marcellus was wounded, yet got to the Camp, the rest were all slain. Hannibal gave an honourable Funeral to Marcellus, bestowing his ashes in a Silver pot, covered with a Crown of Gold, and sent it to his Son to be interred where he pleased.

The Romans beaten.

The Consuls slain.

Then Licinius the Roman Admiral laid hard Siege to Locri, wherefore Hannibal went thither again, but as soon as his Vant-couriers appeared, the Romans ran in confused heaps to their Ships, leaving all their Engins, and whatsoever was in their Camp to Hannibal.

The Romans beaten.

C. Claudius Nero, and M. Livius were chosen Consuls, at which time Asdrubal was already come into France, and was approaching towards Italy. Livius would not stir against him, but with a considerable Army, and those of the choicest men: and Claudius with another Army, was sent against Hannibal. By this time news came that Asdrubal was passing the Alps, and that the Ligurians, and those about Genoa were ready to joyn with him. When all was ordered according to the Consuls minds, they went forth of the City, each his several way. The Citizens were full of fears, there being another Son of Amilcar come into Italy, and one that in this expedition seemed to be of more sufficiency than Hannibal. For whereas in that long and dangerous march through so many Barbarous Nations, over great Rivers, and Mountains, Hannibal had lost a great part of his Army, Asdrubal in the same Journey had increased his, descended from the Alps like a rowling Snowball, far greater than when he came over the Pyrenes. This made the People wait upon their Consuls out a Town, like a pensive train of Mourners.

Great fear at Rome.

Asdrubal comes into Italy.

Asdrubal at his first coming into Italy set upon Placentia; but there he lost a great deal of time, and yet was faign at last to leave it, whereby he gave the Roman Consuls leasure to make ready for him, and caused his Brother Hannibal to make no hast to meet him, knowing that Placentia would not be taken in hast.

Nero made what speed he could to meet with Hannibal, and stop him from joyning with his Brother. He had with him fourty thousand Foot, besides Horse, with which he oft offered Hannibal Battel, and in diverse Skirmishes had the better of him. At Grumentum Hannibal fought with him, but was worsted, yet gat he off and marched away to Venusia, with Nero still at his heels. Thence he went to Canusium, and sat down there near the place where where he had obtained his moſt memorable Victory. There alſo Nero ſat down by him, thinking it enough to hinder him from joyning with his ſuccours. There was he advertiſed of Aſdrubals approach by Letters that were going to Hannibal which he intercepted: wherefore he reſolved that it was better to run ſome deſperate adventure than to ſuffer them to joyn together. He therefore took ſix thouſand Foot and a thouſand Horſe, all of his choiſeſt men, and away he poſted as faſt as he could to aſſiſt his Fellow Conſul. Livy at that time lay encamped neer to Serea Galliea, and Aſdrubal within half a Mile of him. In ſix days Nero finiſhed his journy thither, and by the way his company was encreaſed by ſome voluntaries. The next day after his coming, they conſulted together, and reſolved to fight the Enemy, Aſdrubal perceiving that both the Conſuls were now together, and thereupon feared that Hannibal was ſlain, and though before he was forward to fight, yet now he thought it no ſhame to retreat farther from them. So he diſlodged ſecretly by Night, intending to get over the River Metaurus: but being miſled by his Guides, he had not gone far before Nero was at his heels with all the Horſe, which hindred him from going any farther, and the other Conſuls followed with the Legions in order of Battel. Aſdrubal, ſeeing a neceſſity to fight, omitted no care, or circumſpection. His Gauls he placed in the left Wing upon a Hill, which the Enemy could not aſcend without much difficulty. In the right Wing he ſtood himſelf, with his Africans and Spaniards: His Lygurians he placed in the midſt, and his Elephants in the Front of the Battel. On the Romans ſide Nero had the right Wing, Livius the left, and Portius led the Battel, Livy and Portius found ſtrong oppoſition, and with great ſlaughter on both ſides, prevailed little or nothing. Nero laboured much in vain againſt the ſteep Hill, where the Gauls ſtood out of his reach: wherefore taking part of his Forces, he led them round behind Livy and Portius, and charged Aſdrubal in the Flank, which made the Victory incline to the Romans: For Nero ran all along the depth of Aſdrubals Battel, and put it to rout. Of the Spaniards and Africans the greateſt part were ſlain: the Ligurians and Gauls ſaved themſelves by flight: Of the Elephants only four were taken alive: the reſt were ſlain, moſt by their Riders, the Guide having in readineſs a mallet and a chiſſel wherewith he gave a ſtroak between the Ears in the joynt next the Head, wherewith he killed the Beaſt upon a ſudden.

A Battel.

Aſdrubal ſtrove with great Patience and againſt many difficulties, and performed all the duties of a worthy General, and ſtout Souldier, and when he ſaw the loſs irreparable, he rode manfully into the thickeſt of the Enemies, where fighting bravely, he was ſlain. The number of the ſlain on both ſides is variouſly reported, the Camp and all the Riches in it fell into the hands of the Romans.

Aſdrubal ſlain.

When it was known at Rome how Nero had left his Army, they were much amazed and full of fears: The People filled the Market place, the Women ran to the Temple with Vows and Prayers, and all were filled with melancholly: therefore the news of this Victory was intertained with exceeding joy, as if Hannibal were already driven out of Italy. Nero returning to his Camp, threw the Head of Aſdrubal before the Carthaginians and brought forth his African Priſoners bound, ſending two of them to give Hannibal notice what had happened.

Hannibal having in this unhappy fight, loſt, beſides his worthy Brother, all hope that had ſo long ſuſtained him in Italy, withdrew himſelf into the Country of the Bruſians, and thither he cauſed all the Lucans, his Friends, to remove, as likewiſe all that dwelt in Metapontum. For he wanted men to defend ſo many places as he held, lying ſo far aſunder. Wherefore he drew them all into a leſſer compaſs in the utmoſt corner of Italy, it being a Country of much much faſtneſs, and the People exceedingly devoted unto his Service. This was in the thirteenth year after his coming into Italy; and from thence to the eighteenth year wherein he departed, there was no memorable thing done. For Hannibal wanted ſtrength wherewith to make any great attempt, the Romans had little mind to provoke him, but thought it well that he was quiet. This commendation is given him by the Roman Hiſtorians themſelves. That making War upon a People, of all others the moſt Warlike, he obtained ſo many Victories by his own good conduct: And that leading an Army compounded of ſo many ſundry Nations Africans, Spaniards, Gauls, Carthaginians, Italians, and Greeks, which were neither in Language, Laws, Conditions, or any other thing, one like to another, yet he held them all in ſuch good order, that they never fell to ſedition amongſt themſelves, or againſt their General. And here we muſt leave him till he be drawn into Africk by Scipio.

Hannibal retires into Bruſia.

His Prudence.

Scipio comes from Spain.

P. Cornelius Scipio having conquered Spain, returned home to Rome, where he made ſuit for the Honour of a Triumph, which was denied him, becauſe he only had the place of a Proconſul: Yet to make him amends, they choſe him Conſul, together with P. Licinius Craſſus, who being high Prieſt alſo, might not go ar from the City, as being to attend the matters of their Superſtition: which made well for Scipio, who was deſirous to be ſent into Africk, to traſer the War thither. Some there were of the Senators, eſpecially Q. Fabius Maximus, that oppoſed him therein: yet at length he obtained to have the Iſle of Sicily for his Province, with leave to paſs into Africk if he found it expedient.

Is choſen Conſul.

The Treaſury at Rome being extremely exhauſted, no mony was given to Scipio, neither was he allowed to preſs Souldiers for his African Voyage: But the People made up the backwardneſs of the Senate with their forwardneſs: For beſides his Roman Souldiers, he had about ſeven thouſand Voluntaries that came to him from ſundry parts of Italy. Several Towns alſo furniſhed him, with Corn, Iron, Handmills, and all other neceſſaries, ſo that having his Navy in readineſs, he tranſported his Army into Sicily, where he found, beſides other Forces, two gallant Legions of old Souldiers that had ſerved at Cannæ. For encreaſing his number of Horſe, he preſſed three hundred young and rich Gentlemen of Sicily, and then diſcharged them again, upon condition that they ſhould deliver their Horſe and Arms to as many Roman Gentlemen whom he had brought along with him for the ſame purpoſe.

He goes into Sicily.

Then did Scipio imploy Lælius into Africk, rather to make diſcover than to do any thing, who yet took a great Booty, and ſtruck no little terrour into the Carthaginians, who ſaw their affairs now to be upon the terms of change. He alſo procured King Maſſaniſſa to revolt from the Carthaginians and to joyn with the Romans. Then did Scipio embark his Army for Africk, where he landed neer the Faire Promontory, and preſently after encamped before Utica.

Sends into Africk.

And goes himſelf.

The Carthaginians at this time had no Captain of note in their City, nor a better Army than of raw Souldiers that were levied in haſt. Aſdrubal the Son of Geſco, that was lately chaſed out of Spain by Scipio, was their beſt Man of War. But before he was ready to take the Field, Scipio had beaten the Troop of Carthaginian Horſe that were ſent to impead his landing, and ſlain Hanno their Captain; he had alſo ſacked one of their Towns, and taken eight thouſand Priſoners, and ſent them into Sicily. He took alſo Salva which he fortified. Then paſſed he to Utica and beſieged it forty days with all ſorts of Engines, but prevailed not. By this time Aſdrubal had gotten thirty thouſand Foot, and three thouſand Horſe, but all raw Souldiers, and King Syphax brought to their help fifty thou-

Utica beſieged.

ſand

ſand Foot and ten thouſand Horſe, with which they marched bravely towards Scipio, who thereupon left the Siege, and encamped upon the Shore in a place of advantage which he ſtrongly fortified, and Winter drawing on, Maſſaniſſa, brought in great ſtore of Corn, Cattel, and other Proviſions to him. Aſdrubal and Syphax encamped neer unto him: their Souldiers covered their Huts with Mats and Reeds, and dry Boughs, and being held in hand about a treaty of Peace, they grew remiſs, and careleſs in keeping their Guard, which Scipio being informed of, took his opportunity in the Night to ſet their Camps on fire, and in the confuſion ſlew, and took Priſoners moſt of them. The Carthaginians beaten.

Yet did the Carthaginians make ſhift to raiſe another Army of neer thirty thouſand, reckoning in Syphax, and his men, and four thouſand Spaniards, Mercenaries, that were lately come to them: Scipio went to meet them, and another Battel was fought, and the Victory eaſily obtained by Scipio againſt thoſe raw and untrained men. Thus Scipio became Maſter of the Field, and took in divers Cities, and ſent Maſſaniſſa and Lelius after Syphax into his Kingdom, whom they beat again, took him Priſoner, and partly by fair means, and partly by foul, beeame Maſters of moſt of his Kingdom, which Scipio beſtowed upon Maſſaniſſa. And this was the firſt time that the Romans took upon them to make Kings. And a ſecond time.

The Carthaginians were extremely diſmayed, when they heard this news, and for the calamity which had befaln their good Friend Syphax, and when they underſtood that Maſſaniſſa, their immortal Enemy, had gotten poſſeſſion of his Kingdom. This made them ſend forth Ambaſſadours to Scipio to make ſuit for Peace. When theſe came into Scipios preſence, they baſely proſtrated themſelves on the ground, and kiſſed his Feet, and made as unworthy a Speech, beſeeching him to paſs by their offences, and to grant them Peace. They ſue for Peace.

Scipio knew well in what a poor caſe Rome then was, and how unable to defray the charge of the War if it ſhould be continued, and therefore he was willing to grant them Peace upon theſe conditions: That they ſhould render up all the Priſoners, and all their Renigadoes, and Slaves; That they ſhould withdraw their Armies out of Italy and Gaul: That they ſhould not meddle with Spain, nor with any Iſlands betwixt Italy and Africk: That they ſhould deliver up all their Ships of War, ſave twenty: That they ſhould pay him a great ſum of Money, with ſome hundred thouſand Buſhels of Wheat and Barley: All theſe they aſſented to, whereupon he granted them a Truce that they might ſend their Ambaſſadors to the Senate of Rome. But the truth was, they deſired only to get time till Hannibal might come back, in whom they repoſed all their confidence: And therefore they took occaſion to pick new Quarrels with the Romans, which they were the rather encouraged to, hearing news that Hannibal was already landed in Africk, by whoſe means they hoped either to drive the Romans out of Africk, or to procure better tearms of Peace. They deale deceitfully.

Hannibal departed out of Italy no leſs paſſionate then men are wont to be, when they leave their own Countries to go into Exile: He looked back to the ſhore, accuſing both Gods and Men, and curſing his own dulneſs in that he had not led his Army from Canna, hot and bloodied as it was, to the Walls of Rome. Hannibal leaves Italy.

Arriving in Africk he diſembarked his Army at Leptis, almoſt one hundred Miles from Carthage. He was ill provided of Horſe, which he could not eaſily tranſport out of Italy. From thence he paſſed through the inland Country, gathering Friends by the way. Tychaus, a Numidian Prince that Comes into Africk.

that had the beſt Horſes, he allured to joyn with him: and one Maxetallus, another Prince brought him a thouſand Horſe. The Carthaginians in the mean time neglected to make thoſe preparations that would have ſecured the Victory, and yet they ſent to Hannibal, requiring him without delay to do what he could. Hannibal anſwered, that they were his Lords, and therefore might diſpoſe of him and his Army, but ſince he was General of their Forces, he deſired that he might have leave to make choiſe of his own time. Yet to pleaſe them, he made long marches to Zama, and there encamped.

From Zama he ſent forth his Scouts to learn where the Romans lay, and what they were doing. Some of theſe were taken and brought to Scipio, who ſhewed them all his Camp and ſo diſmiſſed them. Hannibal admired at his Generoſity, and had a very great deſire of an interview that he might talk with him: and this he ſignified by a Meſſenger. Scipio imbraced the motion and ſent him word when and where he might meet with him. Accordingly the two Generals rode forth, with each of them a Troop of Horſe till they met, and then their men were bid to ſtand off: Each of them had his Enterpreter, and when they met they ſtood ſilent for a while, viewing one the other with mutual admiration. Then began Hannibal to ſalute the Roman to this effect. That it had been better for Carthage and Rome, if they could have contained their ambition within the ſhoars of Africk and Italy: for that the Countries of Sicily and Spain, were no ſufficient recompence for ſo many Fleets as had been loſt, and ſo much blood as had been ſhed, in making thoſe coſtly purchaſes: But ſince what was paſt could not be recalled, he ſaid, That it was time for them at the length to put an end to thoſe contentions, and to Pray the Gods to endue them with more Wiſdom for hereafter. To which peaceable diſpoſition his own years, and long tryal of Fortune, both good and bad, made him inclinable: But he feared that Scipio, for want of ſuch experiences, would rather fix his mind upon uncertain hopes, than upon the contemplation of that mutability, whereunto all humane affairs are ſubject: Yet (ſaid he) my own example may peradventure teach thee moderation. For I am that ſame Hannibal that after my Victory at Cannæ, wan the greateſt part of Italy, and deviſed what I ſhould do with your City of Rome which I hoped verily to have taken. Once I brought my Army to your Walls, as thou haſt ſince brought thine to ours of Carthage: But ſee the change, I now ſtand here intreating thee for Peace. This may teach thee Fortunes inſtability. I fought with thy Father Scipio. He was the firſt Roman General I met with in the Field: I did then little think that the time would come when I ſhould have ſuch buſineſs with his Son: and thou maiſt have experience of the like in thy ſelf, who knows how ſoon? What ſaiſt thou? Canſt thou be content that we leave to you Spain, and all the Iſlands between Italy and Africk? By effecting this thou ſhalt have Glory enough, and the Romans may well be glad of ſuch a bargain: and we will be faithful in obſerving the Peace with you. If thou refuſeſt this, conſider what an hazzard thou muſt run to get a little more: If thou ſtayeſt but till to morrow Night, thou muſt take ſuch Fortune as the Gods ſhall allot. The iſſue of Battels is uncertain, and oft beguiles expectation. Let us therefore without more ado make Peace. Say not that ſome falſe-hearted Citizens of ours, dealt fraudulently of late in the like Treaty. Its I Hannibal that now deſire Peace, which I would never do but that I think it expedient for our Country: and judging it expedient I will always maintain it.

An interview of the Generals.

Hannibals Speech to Scipio replies.

To this Scipio anſwered, That he was not ignorant of the mutability of Fortune: That without any note of inſolence he might well refuſe the conditions offered: But (ſaid he) if thy Citizens can be contented, beſides what I propoſed and they formerly aſſented to, to make ſuch reparation for theſe late injuries as I ſhall require, then I will further adviſe what anſwer to give you, otherwiſe prepare for War, and expect the iſſue.

Here-

Hereupon they brake off, and each returned to his own Camp, bidding their Souldiers to prepare for Battel, wherein should be decided the quarrel between Rome and Carthage. The next Morning at break of Day they issued into the Field, each of them ordering their Men as they judged most convenient. After which Scipio rode up and down his Army, bidding them remember what they had atchieved since they came into Africk. He told them, that if they wan the Day, the War was at an end, and this Victory would make them Lords of all the World, for after this, none should be able to resist them: But if they were beaten, there was no possibility of escaping; they must either conquer or die, or be miserable Slaves under most merciless enemies. They prepare to fight.

Hannibal was far the weaker in Horse and a great part of his Army were raw Souldiers, yet his Lords of Carthage would brook no delay. He encouraged therefore his men as was most suitable to their qualities. To the Mercenaries he promised bountiful rewards. The Carthaginians he threatned with inevitable servitude if they lost the day: but especially he animated his old fellow Souldiers by the many Victories which they had gotten over those that far exceeded them in number. He bad them look on their Enemies and see whether they were not by far fewer than that huge Army they had slaughtered at Cannæ. He bad them remember that it was the Father of this Scipio whom they had made to run away, &c. Wherefore he intreated them, upon whose virtue he meant wholly to repose himself, that they would strive that day to make good their honour, and to purchase the fame of Men Invincible.

When the Armies drew neer, the Numidian Horse-men on both sides began to Skirmish: the Trumpets, and other Instruments sounded to Battel. Hannibals Elephants (which were always an uncertain kind of help) were to break upon the Romans: But some of them ran back upon their own Horse, which they so disordered, that Massanissa, taking the advantage, before they could re-ally, charged them, and drave them quite out of the Field. The rest of these Beasts, made a great spoil amongst the Roman Velites, but being wounded, they ran back upon the right point of their own Battel, and disordered the Carthaginian Horse that were in that Wing; which gave such advantage to the Roman Horse, that charging them when they were in disorder, they drave them away likewise. Then did the Battels of Foot advance, and ran one at the other, and the Mercenaries at the first seemed to have the better of the Romans: But at length the Roman Discipline prevailed against boisterous strength. And whereas the Romans, were seconded by their Friends, these Mercenaries received no help from those that should have seconded them. For the new raised Africans, when they saw the Mercenaries give back, they retired also, which made the hired Souldiers think themselves betrayed, whereupon they declined the fight. The Carthaginian Battel was herewith more terrified than before, so that refusing to give way to the Mercenaries they fell out amongst themselves, and forbore to make head against their Enemies. Thus were many of them beaten down and slain through their own indiscretion: And this gave the Romans such advantage that they made a great slaughter both of the Carthaginians and Mercenaries, who could neither fight nor easily flie. Such as could, ran towards Hannibal, who kept his ground and would not stir to help these run-aways. A Battel.

Then did Scipio advance against Hannibal who intertained him after another manner than ever he had been received in his Life before. All the former days work, seemed but a Pastime in comparison of this. The Romans were encouraged because they had prevailed all the day before; they were also far more in number: But Hannibals old Blades were fresh and the the better men. They fought with ſuch obſtinate reſolution that no man gave back one Foot, but rather choſe to die than to loſe their ground, ſo that for a long time the Victory was uncertain: But the return of Maſſaniſſa and Lælius with the Horſe from the purſute of the Enemies, was to the Romans moſt happy and in a needful time. Theſe upon a ſuddain, charging Hannibal upon the Reer, overbore them with meer violence and put them to rout.

Hannibal beaten.

He flies to Carthage, and perſwades them to ſeek Peace.

Hannibal, with a few Horſe ſaved himſelf by flight, and ſtaid not till he came to Carthage; where, coming into the Senate, he told them plainly, that there was no other way left but to make ſuch a Peace as could be procured. Amongſt other things it was agreed, that the Carthaginians ſhould pay to the Romans two hundred Talents a year for fifty years together. Which mony, when it came to be collected, there was pitious lamentation amonſt the People, the Roman Yoak beginning to pinch them already, that ſome of the Senators could not forbear Weeping; but Hannibal could not refrain from Laughter: For which Aſdrubal Hædus (one of Hanno's faction) checked him, ſaying, that it ill becommed him to laugh, ſince he had been the cauſe why all others did Weep. He anſwered, that Laughter did not always proceed from Joy, but ſometimes from indignation. Yet (ſaid he) My Laughter is more ſeaſonable, and leſs obſurd, than your Tears. For you ſhould have wept when you gave up your Ships and Elephants, and when you bound up your hands from uſe of Arms without the good leave of the Romans. This miſerable condition keeps us under, and holds us in aſſured ſervitude. But of theſe things you had no feeling: Now when a little mony is wrung from you, you are very ſenſible of that. God grant that the time come not, wherein you ſhall acknowledg, that it was the leaſt part of your miſery for which you have ſhed theſe Teares.

His Civil imployment.

Afterwards Hannibal in the Civil adminiſtration of the City, gave an overthrow or two, to the Judges which at that time bore all the ſway in Carthage, having all the lives, goods, and fame of the reſt in their power. Shortly after Hannibal was choſen Prætor, by virtue of which Office, he was ſuperiour to them for that year. He ſent upon an occaſion for one of the Treaſurers to come to him, but he proudly refuſed, whereupon Hannibal ſent a Purſevant for him, and brought him in Judgment before the People, accuſing not only him, but the reſt of the Judges for their inſolency, and unbridled Power, withall, propounding a Law that the Judges ſhould be choſen from Year to Year. He found alſo that they had robbed the Treaſury, which cauſed the Taxes to be laid upon the common People, whereof he made ſuch plain demonſtration, that they were compelled to reſtore with ſhame what they had gotten by Knavery. This ſo irritated his Enemies,

He is complained of to the Romans.

who were of the Roman Faction, that they complained to the Roman Senate that the Barchine Faction grew ſtrong again, and that Hannibal would ſhortly be in Arms: For he was like a Wild Beaſt that could never be tamed: that he held ſecret intelligence with King Antiochus, who was an enemy to the Romans, &c.

Hereupon the Senate ſent three Ambaſſadors to Carthage to demand Hannibal, but he kept ſuch good eſpial upon the Romans that he was informed of their intentions, againſt which he was never unprepared: And therefore when Night was come, he ſtole out of the City, accompanied with two Friends whom he could truſt, and having Horſes in a readineſs, he rode all Night, and came to a Tower of his own by the Sea ſide, and having provided a Ship in a readineſs, he bad Africk, farewel, lamenting the miſfortune of his Country more than his own, and ſhaped his courſe to Tyre which was the Mother City of Carthage: There he was intertained Royally,

He flies from Carthage to Tyre.

in

in whoſe worth and honour the Tyrians thought themſelves to have intereſt becauſe of the affinity between the Cities. Thence went he to Antiochus, who was exceeding glad of his coming, intending War againſt the Romans. He goes to Antiochus.

To him Hannibal gave excellent advice how he might carry on his War againſt the Romans, vvith beſt advantage; but Antiochus hearkned more to his Courtiers than to him, and ſo was ſhamefully beaten by the Romans: at vvhich time he admired Hannibal as a Wiſe Man, yea as a Prophet, who long before had foreſeen, and foretold him vvhat novv vvas come to paſs, and vvhen it vvas too late, wiſhed that he had followed his Counſel. To be brief, Antiochus vvas forced by the Romans to ſue for Peace, which at laſt the Romans yielded to: Provided amongſt other things, that Hannibal might be delivered into their hands. Hannibal getting an incling of this, fled to Gortina in Creet, vvhere he lived a long time very quietly, but at length he fell into the envy of many by reaſon of his great wealth, vvhereupon he filled certain great Cheſts vvith Lead, and depoſited them in the Temple of Diana there, as if he kept the Treaſure for a dead lift: and thereupon the People, having ſuch a Pledg as that of him, looked leſs after him: But he in the mean time ſtole avvay to Pruſias, King of Bythinia, having firſt molten his Gold, and povvered it into ſome hollovv Statues of Braſs, vvhich he carried avvay vvith him. His counſel neglected. He flies to Pruſias.

Shortly after there fell a War betvveen Pruſias, and Eumenes, King of Pergamus, Pruſias being encouraged to break his League and to make War upon him, by his confidence in Hannibal, whom he had their to manage his War for him. The War therefore grew hot betwixt them, both by Land and Sea. But Eumenes, by the aſſiſtance of the Romans, overpowred Pruſias in both: And whereas Pruſias was but weak of himſelf, Hannibal procured him the aſſiſtance of ſome other Kings and States, and thoſe of very Warlike Nations: and amongſt them the aid of Philip, King of Macedonia, who ſent him Philocles his General, with a very conſiderable Army to help him.

When Pruſias had received an overthrow from Eumenes by Land, he ſought to try his Fortune by Sea, wherein yet he was too weak for him: wherefore Hannibal adviſed him to try whether he could not do that by Policy, which by plain force he was not able to effect. He put therefore a multitude of all ſorts of Serpents into Earthen Pitchers, to be hurled aboard the Enemies Ships when they were in fight: giving order to the Souldiers and Sea-men to ſet all upon the Ship wherein Eumenes himſelf was, and to defend themſelves from the reſt as vvell as they could: and that he might the more certainly know in vvhich Ship Eumenes was, he ſent an Herauld beforehand with a Letter, containing nothing but a meer flout to Eumenes, and full of abuſes to his Perſon. Whenas therefore Pruſius his men came to it, they fought neither againſt great nor ſmall, but only againſt the Ship wherein Eumenes was, whereupon he was faign to ſeek his ſafety by flight; yet had he periſhed had he not truſt in upon the next ſhore, where he had placed, for a relief upon all occaſions, a company of his men.

As for Eumenes his other Ships, when they preſſed hard upon the Enemy, they let flie amongſt them their Earthern Pitchers full of Snakes, which at firſt ſeemed to them a ridiculous thing: but when the Pitchers, falling upon the Decks, brake in pieces, out flew the Snakes, ſo that they could ſtir no where in the Ships by reaſon of the Serpents, whereby they found themſelves no leſs annoied by their ſtings, than with the Arrows of their Enemies, which cauſed them to give over fighting, and to flie to their Camp which was upon the Shoar.

Thus Hannibal by this trick, got the better of Eumenes in that fight. Nor then only, but alſo in ſundry other encounters; and by one Stratagem or other, he ever put Eumenes to the worſt. And once when he adviſed Pruſias to fight, and he durſt not, becauſe the entrails of the Beaſt (ſaid he) forbid me. what (ſaid Hannibal) will you rely more upon a little piece of fleſh in a Calf, than upon the Judgment of an old experienced Captain in the Field?

Now as ſoon as news of theſe things came to the Senate at Rome, they ſent T. Quintius Flaminius Ambaſſador to Pruſias, not ſo much to withdraw him from proſecuting the War againſt Eumenes, as to intreat him to deliver to them Hannibal, the moſt ſpiteful Enemy they had in all the World.

Who betrays him.

Pruſias, to gratifie the Romans reſolved either to kill Hannibal, or to deliver him alive into the hands of Flaminius, for which end he ſent a Troop of Souldiers to inviron the lodging where Hannibal lay. But Hannibal having before found cauſe to ſuſpect the faith of Pruſias, had made ſome ſecret ſallies under ground to ſave himſelf from any Treaſonable, or ſudden aſſault. But finding now that all paſſages were ſhut up againſt him, he had recourſe to his laſt remedy, which he was conſtrained to put in practice as well to fruſtrate his Enemies from their Triumphing over him, as to ſave himſelf from their torture and mercileſs hands, who, as he well knew, would neither reſpect his famous enterpriſes, his Honour, nor his Age. When therefore he ſaw no other way of eſcaping he took the Poyſon, which he always had in readineſs for ſuch an exigent, and being ready to ſwallow it down, he uttered theſe Words. I will now (ſaid he) deliver the Romans from that fear which hath ſo long poſſeſſed them: that fear which makes them impatient of attending the Death of an Old Man. This Victory of Flaminius over me, which am diſarmed, and betrayed into his hands, ſhall never be numbred in the reſt of his Heroical deeds. No: it ſhall make it manifeſt to all the Nations of the world, how far the Antient Roman Virtue is degenerated, and corrupted. For ſuch was the Nobleneſs of their Fore-fathers, as when King Pyrrhus invaded them in Italy, and was ready to give them Battel at their own Doors, they gave him intelligence of the Treaſon intended againſt him by Poyſon: whenas theſe of a latter race, have imployed Flaminius, a Man who heretofore had been one of their Conſuls, to practice with Pruſias, contrary to the honour of a King, contrary to his Faith given for my ſafety, and contrary to the Laws of Hoſpitality, to ſlay, or deliver up his own Gueſt. Then drank he off that Poyſon, and died.

His laſt Speech.

He Poyſons himſelf.

P. Scipio Africanus in a diſcourſe which he had with Hannibal, asked him, which of all the famous Captains that ever lived, he judged moſt Worthy? Hannibal gave to Alexander the Great, the firſt place: to Pyrrhus the ſecond: and the third he challenged to himſelf. But Scipio, who thought his own Title better, than that it ought to be forgotten, asked yet further, what then wouldeſt thou have ſaid, Hannibal, if thou hadſt vanquiſhed me? The Carthaginian replied, Then would I not have given the firſt place to Alexander, but have claimed it as due unto my ſelf.

When the conditions of Peace granted by the Romans to the Carthaginians were reported to the Citizens, they were very unpleaſing, whereupon one Geſco, ſtood up to ſpeak againſt them, perſwading the People not to yield to ſuch intollerable demands: But Hannibal obſerving what favourable audience was given to this vain Orator, by the unquiet, yet unwarlike Multitude, he was bold to pull him him down from his ſtanding by plain force : Hereat all the People murmured, as if their common liberty were too much wronged by ſuch inſolence of this preſumptuous Captain : Which Hannibal perceiving, roſe up and ſpake unto them, ſaying; That they ought to pardon him if he had done otherwiſe than the cuſtoms of the City would allow, for as much as he had been thence abſent ever ſince he was a Boy of nine years old, until he was now a Man of five and forty. Having thus excuſed himſelf, he exhorted them to embrace the Peace, as wanting ability to defend themſelves, had the demands of the Enemy been yet more rigorous.

His Father Amilcar, at what time he did Sacrifice, being ready to take his journey into Spain, called his Son Hannibal, being than but nine years old, cauſed him to lay his hand upon the Altar, and to ſwear, that being come to mans eſtate, he ſhould purſue the Romans with immortal hatred, and that he ſhould work them all the miſchief that poſſible he could.

THE

LIFE and DEATH

OF

POMPEY

THE GREAT.

His Parentage.

Trabo, the Father of Pompey was much hated by the People of Rome, who feared his greatneſs obtained by Arms (for he was a Noble Captain) and to ſhew their diſtaſt, when he was ſlain by a Thunderbolt, as his Body was carrying to burial, the People ſeized upon it, and did great deſpite unto it: But on the contrary, never any other Roman, beſides Pompey, had the love of the People ſo ſoon, nor that continued conſtanter, both in proſperity, and adverſity, than it did to him: And that which procured their love, and good liking, was his temperance in life, aptneſs to Arms, Eloquence of Speech, Faithfulneſs of his Word, and Courteſie in his Behaviour. He gave without diſdain, and received with great Honour: Being but a Child, he had a certain grace in his look, that wan Mens good wills before he ſpake. His countenance was amiable mixed with gravity; and when he come to Mans eſtate, there appeared in his geſture, and behaviour, a grave, and Princely Majeſty. His hair ſtood a little upright, and the ſweet caſt, and motion of his eyes made him very graceful. He was ſober, and temperate in his Diet, contenting himſelf with common Meats; and when once in his ſickneſs, his Phyſicians adviſed him to eat a Thruſh, and none could be gotten, a Friend told him, that Lucullus (a certain great man) kept them all the year, where he ſhould be ſure not to fail; he replied, what then? If Lucullus were not, ſhould not Pompey live? and therewithall, letting his Phyſicians counſel alone, he bad them dreſs him ſuch meat as waseaſie to be had.

His towardlineſs.

His abſtinence.

Pompey

Pompey being a young man, and in the Field with his Father, who was in Arms againſt Cinna, there lay with him in his Tent a Companion of his, called Lucius Terentius, who being corrupted with money, promiſed Cinna to ſlay Pompey, and other of his Confederates had promiſed to ſet their Generals Tent on fire. This conſpiracy was diſcovered to Pompey as he ſat at Supper, which nothing amazed him, but he drank freely, and was merrier with Terentius than ordinary: But when it was bed-time, he ſtole out of his own Tent, and went into his Fathers. In the Night Terentius went into Pompey's Tent, and with his Sword gave many a thruſt into the Matteres: Preſently alſo the whole Camp was in an uprore, and the Souldiers, out of hatred to their General, would needs in all haſt have gone, and ſubmitted to the Enemy: and Strabo durſt not go out of his Tent to ſpeak to them, but Pompey ran amongſt theſe Mutineers, and with Tears in his Eyes beſought them not to betray their General: He went alſo and threw himſelf flat on the Ground athwart the Gate of the Camp, and told them that they ſhould march over him if they had ſuch a deſire to be gone: whereupon, the Souldiers being aſhamed of their treachery, returned to their Lodgings. His courage and prudence.

Preſently after his Fathers death, Pompey being his heir, he was accuſed for robbing the common Treaſury, and in particular for taking certain toils, and cords of Hunters nets: He confeſſed the having of them, and that his Father gave him them when the City of Aſculum was taken; but that he had ſince loſt them, when Cinna came to Rome with his Army, at which time the unruly Souldiers, breaking into his Houſe, plundered him of all that he had. This matter had many days of hearing before it was determined, in which time Pompey ſhewed ſo much courage, and prudence in managing of it, that he wan ſuch credit, and favour by it, that Antiſtius, vvho at that time was Prætor, and Judg of the cauſe, fell into ſuch a likeing of him, that ſecretly he offered him his Daughter in Marriage, and Pompey liked ſo well of the Match, that the Parties were privately made ſure each to other: And not long after, through the care, and pains of Antiſtius, when the Judges came to paſs Sentence, Pompey was cleered. He is accuſed. And cleered.

This buſineſs being over, Pompey married Antiſtia: after which going into Cinna's Camp, he was wrongfully accuſed of ſome miſdemeanours; whereupon, being afraid of the Tyrant, he ſecretly ſtole away; and when he could not be found in Cinna's Camp, there went a rumour abroad that Cinna had murthered him, which ſo irritated ſome, vvho of a long time had hated Cinna, that upon this occaſion, they roſe up againſt him: But he thinking to ſave himſelf by flight, was purſued by a Captain with a drawn Sword; Cinna ſeeing him, fell down on his knees to him, and profered him his Signet Ring, vvhich vvas of great price, to ſpare his life: Tuſh (ſaid the Captain) I come not to ſeal any Covenant, but to be revenged upon a Villain, and cruel Tyrant, and vvithall ran him through and ſlevv him. His marriage. Cinna ſlain.

Cinna being thus diſpatched, Carbo took upon him the Government, a more cruel Tyrant than the former: And after him, Sylla ſucceeded; and at this time the Romans, being grievouſly oppreſſed by one Tyrant after another, thought themſelves happy in the change of Governours. For their City vvas brought into ſuch miſery, as hoping no more to ſee Rome recover her loſt liberty, they deſired yet a more tollerable bondage. Carbo ſucceeds.

In Sylla's time, Pompey vvas at a place in Italy called Picenum, in the Marches of Anconæ, vvhere he had certain Lands, but much more the love and favour of the Citizens for his Fathers ſake. He ſeeing that the moſt Noble Men of Rome forſook their Houſes, and eſtates to repair to the Camp of Sylla, And Sylla.

as

as unto a place of ſafety, he alſo reſolved to go thither, yet not in a baſe manner, like a Fugitive, but purpoſed to raiſe an Army, and to go in an Honourable manner as one that could do Sylla good ſervice. So he made tryal of the good will of the Picentines, who readily joyned with him, and whereas there was amongſt them one Vindius, who oppoſed Pompey, ſaying, That a Boy that came from School but the other day, muſt now in haſt be a Captain, the reſt of the Citizens were ſo incenſed againſt him, that they ran upon him and ſlew him.

Thus Pompey being but twenty three years old, not tarrying for Commiſſion from any man, took upon himſelf Authority, and cauſing a Tribunal to be ſet up in the midſt of the Market place of Auximum, a great, and populous City, he commanded the two Brethren, called the Ventidians (the chiefeſt men of the City, but his Enemies) preſently to avoid the City: Then began he to leavy men to conſtitute Captains, Lieutenants, Sergeants, and ſuch other Officers as appertain to an Army. And from thence he went to the other neighbouring Cities, where he did the like, ſo that in a ſhort ſpace he had gotten three compleat Legions together, as alſo Ammunition, Carts, and all other neceſſaries for them.

Pompey raiſed an Army.

He goes towards Sylla.

In this ſort did Pompey advance towards Sylla; not in haſt, as a man that was afraid to be met with by the way, but by ſmall Journeys, lodging ſtill where he might have the beſt advantage againſt an Enemy, cauſing the Cities whereſoever he came to declare againſt Carbo, and for Sylla. Yet three Captains who adhered to Carbo, Carinna, Cælius, and Brutus, did in three ſeveral places compaſs him in on every ſide, thinking to have deſtroyed him.

His danger by the way.

Pompey was nothing amazed hereat; but marſhalling his Army, he firſt ſet upon Brutus, having placed his Horſemen (amongſt whom himſelf was in Perſon) before the Battel of his Footmen, and when the Men at Arms of his Enemy (who were Gauls) came to charge upon him, he ſingled out the chiefeſt amongſt them, and ran him through with his Spear, and ſlew him. The other Gauls ſeeing their Champion ſlain, turned their backs, and in their flight, over ran their own Footmen; ſo that at laſt they all fled for their lives.

His Victories.

Then the Cities round about, being terrified with this overthrow, came in and yielded themſelves to Pompey: Afterwards Scipio alſo the Conſul, coming againſt Pompey to fight him, when the Battels were ready to joyn, before they threw their Darts, Scipio's Souldiers ſaluted Pompey, and went over to his ſide, whereupon Scipio was faign to fly. And laſtly Carbo himſelf ſending divers Troops of Horſe againſt him by the Riuer Arſis, Pompey charged them ſo furiouſly, and drave them into ſuch a place of diſadvantage, that being neither able to fight nor fly, they delivered up themſelves with their Horſes, Arms, and all to his mercy.

Sylla all this while heard nothing of theſe overthrows which Pompey had given to his Enemies, but underſtanding his danger, being environed with ſo many Arms, fearing leſt he ſhould miſcarry, he made haſt, and marched to his relief.

Pompey being informed of Sylla's approach, commanded his Captains to Arm themſelves and to ſet their Army in good array, that their General Sylla might ſee how bravely they were appointed. For he expected that Sylla would do him great honour, as indeed he did, even beyond his expectation: For when Sylla ſaw him afar off, coming towards him, and his Army marſhelled in ſuch good order of Battel, and his men ſo bravely advancing themſelves, being elated with their late Victories, he allighted from his Horſe; and when Pompey came to do his duty to him, and called him Emperour, or Soveraign Prince, Sylla reſaluted him with the ſame Title, which made all that were preſent to wonder that he would give ſo honourable a name

He meets Sylla.

to

to ſo young a man as Pompey was, who as yet was not made a Senator: Conſidering alſo that Sylla himſelf did now contend for that Title, and Dignity with Marius, and Scipio. The intertainment alſo that Sylla gave him afterwards, was every way anſwerable to the firſt kindneſs that he ſhewed him. For when Pompey at any time came to him, he would riſe up, and put off his Cap to him, which he did not to any other Noble Man that was about him: Yet was not Pompey puffed up with all this, nor the prouder for it. Sylla honours him.

Shortly after Sylla would have ſent Pompey into Gaul (now France) becauſe that Metellus, the Roman General there, was thought to have done no exploit worthy of ſo great an Army as he had with him: But Pompey anſwered, that there was no reaſon to diſplace an ancient Captain that was of greater fame, and experience then himſelf, Yet (ſaid he) if Metellus himſelf be contented, and will deſire it of me, I will willingingly go, and help him to end this War. Metellus being informed hereof, wrote for him to come. His Modeſty.

Pompey then entering Gaul, did of himſelf wonderful exploits, and ſo revived the courage, and valour of old Metellus, that the War proſpered exceedingly in their Hands: But theſe were but Pompey's firſt beginnings, and were wholly obſcured by the luſter of thoſe many Wars, and great Battels which he fought afterwards. His acts in Gaul.

When Sylla had overcome all Italy, and was proclaimed Dictator, he rewarded all the great Captains, and Lieutenants that had taken his part, and advanced them to honourable places, and Dignities in the Commonwealth, freely granting whatſoever they requeſted of him; But for Pompey, highly eſteeming him for his Valour, and thinking that he would be a great ſupport to him in all his Wars, he ſought by ſome means to ally him to himſelf, Metella, his Wife being alſo of the ſame opinion, they both perſwaded him to put away his Wife Antiſtia, and to marry Æmilia, who was Daughter to Metella by a former Husband, though ſhe was married to another, and now with child by him. His ſecond marriage. Theſe marriages were wicked, and Tyrannical, fitter for Sylla's time, than agreeable to Pompey's nature, and condition. Tyrannical proceedings. And truly it was a ſhameful thing for Pompey to forſake his Wife Antiſtia, who for his ſake, a little before had loſt her Father, that was murthered in the very Senate Houſe upon ſuſpition that he took part with Sylla for his Son Pompey's ſake: and to take Æmilia from her lawful Husband, by whom ſhe was great vvith child, and to vvhom ſhe had been married not long before: vvhich alſo cauſed the Mother of Antiſtia to lay violent hands upon her ſelf, ſeeing her Daughter to receive ſuch open and notorious wrong. But God who hates ſuch injuſtice, and cruelty, followed Pompey vvith this Judgment, that his Wife Æmilia died miſerably preſently after in childbirth in his Houſe.

About this time news was brought to Sylla, that Perpenna was gotten into Sicily, and had brought all that Iſland into ſubjection to him, where he might ſafely intertain all Sylla's Enemies: That Carbo alſo kept the Seas thereabouts with a certain number of Ships: That Domitius was gone into Africk, to whom reſorted many other Noblemen who were eſcaped from the proſcriptions and outlaries of Sylla.

Againſt all theſe was Pompey ſent by his Father in Law with a great Army, who no ſooner was arrived in Sicily but Perpenna fled, and left the Iſland to him. He is ſent into Sicily. Then did Pompey deal friendly and favourably with all the Citizens vvhich before had endured great troubles and miſery, and ſet them again at liberty, the Mamertines only excepted, who dwelt in Meſſina: they deſpiſing his juriſdiction and Government, pleaded the ancient priviledges of the Romans which had been formerly granted unto them. But Pompey anſvvered them angerly, What do you prating to us of your Law that have our Swords by our ſides? He dealt alſo too cruelly And conquers it. His cruelty.

vvith

vvith Carbo in his miſery; for he might have killed him in hot blood when he firſt fell into his hands with leſs blame: But Pompey, when he was taken, cauſed him to be brought before him, though he had been thrice Conſul, and to be publickly examined, ſitting himſelf in his Tribunal, and condemned him to dye in the preſence of them all, to the great diſtaſt, and offence of all that were preſent: Yet he bad them take him away to execution, which was done accordingly.

Pompey dealt as cruelly alſo with Quintus Valerius, a man of rare parts, and excellent Learning, who being brought to Pompey, he took him aſide and walked a few turns with him, and when he had learned what he could of him, he commanded his Guard to take him away and diſpatch him. Pompey indeed was compelled to make away all Sylla's enemies that fell into his hands: But for the reſt, all that he could ſuffer ſecretly to ſteal away, he willingly conniv-ed at it, and would not take notice of it, yea, himſelf did help many to ſave themſelves by flight.

Pompey had determined to have taken ſharp revenge of the City of the Himerians, who had ſtoutly taken the enemies part: But Sthenes, one of the Governours of the City, craved audience of Pompey, told him boldly, that he ſhould do great injuſtice if he ſhould pardon him, who was the only offender, and deſtroyed them who were not guilty. Pompey then asking him who he was that durſt take upon himſelf the offence of them all? Sthenes anſwered, That it was himſelf who had perſwaded his Friends, and compelled his enemies to do what was done: Pompey being much pleaſed to hear the frank ſpeech, and boldneſs of the man, he forgave both him, and all the Citizens.

His Prudence. After this Pompey being informed that his Soldiers did kill divers in the high-ways, he cauſed all their Swords to be ſealed up, and whoſe ſeal ſoever was broken, he puniſhed them ſoundly for it.

Pompey being buſy about theſe matters in Sicily, he received inſtructions, and a Commiſſion from Sylla, and the Senate at Rome, to depart thence im-mediately into Africk, with all his power to make War againſt Domitius, who had a very great Army. Pompey accordingly ſpeedily prepared to take the Seas, leaving Memmius, his Siſters Husband, to Govern Sicily, and ſo imbarking in ſixſcore Gallies and eight hundred other Ships, wherein he tranſported his Victuals, Ammunition, Money, Engines for Battery, and all other his War-like proviſion, he hoiſed Sail, and Landed one part of his Army at Utica, and the other at Carthage, and preſently after his landing, there came to him ſe-ven thouſand Soldiers from his enemies to take his part, beſides ſeven whole Legions that he brought with him.

He paſſes into Africk.

Againſt him came Domitius with his Army in Battel array; but before him there was a Quagmire, that ran with a very ſwift ſtream, very hard to get over; Beſides, it had rained exceedingly all that morning, ſo that Domitius judging it impoſſible then to fight, bad his men truſs up and be gone. Pompey on the other ſide, ſpying this advantage, cauſed his men to advance, and coming upon the enemy, who was now out of order, had a cheap Victory over them, wherein he ſlew about ſeventeen thou-ſand of them, whereupon he was by his Souldiers ſaluted with the name Imperator, or Emperour, but he told them he would not accept of that honourable Title, ſo long as he ſaw his enemies Camp yet ſtanding, where-upon they ran preſently and aſſaulted it, and took it by force, and ſlew Domi-tius therein.

His great Victories there.

After this overthrow, all the Cities in that Country, came and ſubmit-ted to Pompey, and thoſe that refuſed were taken by force. They took alſo King Jarbas, who had ſided with Domitius, and gave his Kingdom to Heimpſal. But Pompey being deſirous further to imploy his Army, he went many days

Journey

Journey into the main Land, conquering all whereſoever he came, making the power of the Romans dreadful to thoſe Barbarous Nations, who before made ſmall account of them. He cauſed alſo the Wild Beaſts of Africk to feel his force, beſtowing ſome days in Hunting of Lyons, and Elephants: And in fourty days he conquered his enemies, ſubdued Africk, and ſetled the affaires of the Kings, and Kingdoms of that part of the Country, being then but twenty four years old.

He is commanded to diſband his Army.

Pompey being returned to Utica, he received Letters from Sylla, willing him to diſcharge his Army, and to retain only one Legion with himſelf till the coming of another Captain that was to ſucceed him in the Government of that Country. This grieved him not a little, though he made no ſhew of it at all: But the Souldiers were much offended at it, and when Pompey prayed them to depart, they gave out broad ſpeeches againſt Sylla, and told him directly that they were reſolved not to leave him whatſoever became of them, and that they would not leave him to truſt to a Tyrant. Pompey, ſeeing that he could not prevail with them, roſe out of his ſeat, and went into his Tent weeping: But the Souldiers followed him, and brought him again to his Chair of State, intreating him to remain there, and command them, and he deſired them to obey Sylla, and to leave their mutinies. In fine, he ſeeing they were reſolved to preſs him, ſwore that he would kill himſelf rather then they ſhould compel him, yet ſcarce did they leave him thus.

His Souldiers love to him.

Hereupon it was reported to Sylla that Pompey was rebelled againſt him; which when he heard, he ſaid to his Friends, well, I ſee then that it is my Deſtiny in my old age to fight with Children. This he ſaid, becauſe of Marius the younger, who had done him much miſchief, and had greatly endangered him. But afterwards, underſtanding the truth, and hearing that all generally in Rome would go to meet Pompey, and receive him with all the honour they could, he reſolved to go beyond them all in ſhew of good will: wherefore going out of his Houſe to meet him, he embraced him with great affection, and welcomed him home, calling him Magnus, that is Great, and commanded all that were preſent to give him that Name alſo.

His return into Italy.

Sylla honours him.

After this Pompey required the honour of a Triumph, which Sylla oppoſed, affirming that this honour ſhould be granted to none but to ſuch as had been Conſuls, or at leaſt Prætors: He told him alſo, that if he ſhould ſtand for it he would oppoſe him. Pompey was not diſcouraged herewith, but boldly told him, That all men did honour, not the ſetting, but the riſing Sun. Sylla heard not well what he ſaid, and therefore enquired, and when it was told him, he wondred at the confidence of ſo young a man, and cryed out twice, Let him then Triumph on Gods Name. Yet many were offended at it, but Pompey to anger them more, would be brought in his Triumphant Chariot drawn by four Elephants, many of which Beaſts he had taken from the Kings, and Princes whom he had ſubdued: Howbeit the City Gates being to narrow for them, he was faign to leave his Elephants, and to be drawn in with Horſes.

His firſt Triumph.

Now his Souldiers that had not all they looked for, nor that was promiſed to them, ſought to hinder his Triumph, which being reported to him, he ſaid. That he would rather loſe all his preparations, than be forced to flatter them: He might have been made a Senator if he had ſought after it, but in that he did not, being ſo young, it pleaſed the People exceedingly, eſpecially when after his Triumph they ſaw him ſtill amongſt the Roman Knights: On the other ſide Sylla was much vexed to ſee him come ſo faſt forward, and ſo ſoon to riſe to ſo great credit: yet being aſhamed to hinder him, he ſuppreſſed it, till Pompey, contrary to his mind, brought in Lepidus to be Conſul, through the good will of the People that furthered his deſire. Hereupon Sylla ſeeing

Sylla envies him.

The People love him.

Pompey returning croſs the Market place after the election, with a great train of followers, he ſaid to him, O young man! I ſee thou art glad of this Victory, and ſo thou haſt cauſe: for queſtionleſs its a brave thing that through the favour of the People thou haſt brought in Lepidus (the vileſt perſon of all other) to be Conſul, before Catulus the honeſteſt man in the City: But let me adviſe thee to look well to thy ſelf, for thou haſt advanced one that will be a dangerous enemy to thee.

Sylla alſo diſcovered his ill will to Pompey, in that when he made his Will, he gave Legacies to every one of his Friends, and left Pompey wholly out: yet did Pompey take it well enough, and whereas Lepidus, with ſome others, after Sylla's Death, would have kept his Body from being Buried in the Field of Mars, and from Funeral ſolemnities, Pompey prevailed to bury him honourably.

Sylla's Death.

Shortly after Sylla's Death, his Prophecy to Pompey concerning Lepidus proved true; For Lepidus openly uſurping the power which Sylla had, raiſed an Army of thoſe of Marius his faction, whom Sylla had hitherto ſuppreſſed, which put Pompey upon his beſt skill, and experience; For which end he preſently took part with the Nobility, and the honeſter part of the People, by whom he was imployed to raiſe an Army againſt Lepidus, who had already the greateſt part of Italy, and by the help of Brutus, kept Gaul on this ſide the Mountains: the reſt, Pompey eaſily ſubjected to himſelf, only he was ſomewhat long in beſieging Brutus in Modena. During which time, Lepidus brought his Army to the Gates of Rome, demanding his ſecond Conſulſhip, which much affrighted the People: But they were ſoon comforted by a Letter which Pompey ſent, wherein he informed them that he had ended his Wars without bloodſhed. For Brutus had yielded himſelf to Pompey who had ſlain him.

Pompey's Wars with Lepidus.

Shortly after, Lepidus was driven out of Italy into Sardinia, where he fell ſick, and died. At this time Sertorius was in Spain, who kept the Romans in great awe, being a valiant Captain, and one to whom all the Fugitives reſorted. He had already overthrown many inferiour Captains, and was now grapling with Metellus Pius, who in his youth had been a Noble Souldier, but now being old, and too wary, he neglected many opportunities, which Sertorius, by his dexterity took out of his hands.

Hereupon Pompey keeping his Army together, endeavoured, by the help of his Friends, to be ſent into Spain, as an aſſiſtant to Metellus: and at laſt, by the endeavour of Lucius Philippicus, he obtained the Government of that Country.

He goes into Spain.

When Pompey was arrived in Spain, Sertorius gave out bitter jeers againſt him, ſaying, That he would uſe no other weapons againſt the young Boy but Rods: and that, if he were not afraid of the old woman, meaning Metellus, much leſs was he afraid of him. Yet for all theſe brags, he ſtood better upon his guard, and went ſtronger to fight than he did before, being afraid of Pompey. In this War the ſucceſs was very various, yet nothing grieved Pompey more than Sertorius his winning the City Lauron. Yet ſhortly after in a ſet Battel, near the City of Valentia, he ſlew Herennius, and Perpena, both Gallant Souldiers, and Lieutenants to Sertorius, with ten thouſand of their men. This Victory ſo encouraged Pompey, that he haſted to fight with Sertorius himſelf before Metellus came to him, that he might have the ſole Glory of the Conqueſt. So they both met by the River of Sucron in the evening, both fearing the comming of Metellus, the one that he might fight alone, the other that he might fight with one alone. But when it came to trial, the Victory fell out doubtful, for either of their wings had the upper hand: Sertorius wan great honour in this Battel, bearing all before him whereſoever he went: and Pompey encountering a great man at Armes, cut off one of his hands

His Wars there.

hands, yet he escaped by turning up his Horse with very rich caparisons amongst Pompey's followers, and whilst they were contending about the Horse, he escaped.

The next morning very early, both the Generals brought their Armies again into the Field, to confirm the Victory, which either of them supposed that he had gotten: But Metellus, coming to Pompey at that present, Sertorius retreated, and dispersed his Army. Pompey going to meet Metellus; when they came near, he commanded his Sergeants, and Officers to put down their bundles of Rods, and Axes which they carried before him, to honour Metellus the more, being a better man than himself: But Metellus would not suffer it, but in every thing made Pompey his equal, only when they Camped together, Metellus gave the watch word to all the Army.

Sertorius with a running Army, cut them short of Victuals, spoiling the Country, and keeping the Sea-side, so that they were forced to divide themselves and to go into other places for Provision. Pompey in the mean time having spent most of his estate in this War, sent to Rome for mony to pay his Souldiers, threatning that if they would send him no money, he would return with his Army into Italy. Lucullus being now Consul, though he was Pompey's enemy, yet procured the money for him, that himself might the better prevail to be sent against King Methridates: For he feared that if Pompey returned into Italy, he would procure to have that imployment.

In the mean time Sertorius died, and Perpenna, who was the chiefest man about him, supplied his room. But though he had the same Army, the same means, and the same power, yet had he not the same wit, and skill to use it. Pompey therefore marching directly against him, quickly discovered his insufficiency, and laid a bait for him, sending ten Troops to prey in the Fields, commanding them to disperse themselves abroad, which accordingly they did, and Perpenna, took the opportunity, and charged upon them, and had them in chase, but Pompey tarrying for them at a Foord, was ready with his Army in good order, gave them Battel, and obtained the Victory, and thus ended all the War: For most of the Captains were slain, and Perpenna himself taken Prisoner, whom he presently put to Death. Perpenna shewed to Pompey Letters from the greatest Noblemen of Rome, who were desirous of change of Government, willing him to return into Italy. But Pompey fearing that they might occasion great commotions in Rome, put Perpenna presently to Death, and burned all the writings, not so much as reading any one of them.

His Victory.

His Prudence.

Pompey after this, remained in Spain till he had pacified all tumults, and then went with his Army back into Italy, and arrived just when the War of the Bondmen and Fencers, led by Spartacus, was in the greatest fury. Upon Pompey's coming, Crassus being sent General against them, made hast to give them Battel, wherein he overcame them and slew twelve thousand and three hundred of these fugitive Slaves. Yet Fortune intending to give Pompey some part of the honour, five thousand of these Bondmen, who escaped from the Battel, fell into his hands, whom he overcame, and wrote to the Senate at Rome, that Perpenna had overcome the Fencers in Battel, and that he had plucked up this War by the roots. The Romans receiving these Letters, were very glad of the news for the love which they bore to him. Yet for all the great honour and love they did bear to him, they suspected, and were afraid of him, because he did not disband his Army, fearing that he would follow Sylla's steps, and rule over them by force: Hereupon as many went forth to meet him out of fear, as out of good will. But when he told them, that he would disband his Army so soon as he had Triumphed, then his ill-willers could blame him for nothing, but that he inclined more to the People than to the

His return into Italy.

His Victory over the Fencers.

Nobles; and becauſe he deſired to reſtore the Tribuneſhip to the People, which Sylla had put down.

His favour with the People.

Indeed the common People at Rome never longed for any thing more than they did to ſee the Office of the Tribunes ſet up again: and Pompey was very glad that he had ſuch an opportunity, thereby to ingratiate himſelf with them, and to requite the love which they had ſhewed to him. This was the ſecond Triumph, and the firſt Conſulſhip which the Senate decreed to Pompey, which made him neither the greater, nor the better man. Yet was it ſuch an honour, as Craſſus (the richeſt, greateſt, and eloqueneſt man in Rome) durſt not demand before he had requeſted Pompey's good will therein: And truely Pompey was very glad of the requeſt, having of a long time ſought an opportunity whereby to gratifie him, and therefore he made earneſt ſuit to the People for him, aſſuring them that he would as much thank them for making Craſſus his fellow-conſul, and Colleage, as he would for making himſelf Conſul.

Yet when Pompey had obtained his requeſt, and they were both created Conſuls, they were in all things contrary one to the other, and never agreed in any one thing whilſt they ruled together: Craſſus had the more authority with the Senate, and Pompey with the People: for he reſtored to them the Office of Tribunes, and paſſed by Edict, that the Knights of Rome ſhould have power again to Judge in cauſes both civil and criminal. This wonderfully pleaſed the people, when himſelf came in Perſon to the Cenſors, and pray'd that he might be diſpenſed with for going into the Wars.

His Humility.

At this time Gellius and Lentulus were the Cenſors, who being honourably ſet in their Tribunal ſeats, taking a view of all the Roman Knights that muſtered before them, they marvelled when they ſaw Pompey comming, with all the Enſigns of a Conſul born before him, and himſelf (as other Knights did) leading his Horſe by the Bridle: and when he came near, he commanded the Sergeants that carried the Axes before him, to make room for him to paſs by the Barrs with his Horſe, where the Cenſors ſate. This made the People to flock about him, wondring and rejoycing with great ſilence: the Cenſors themſelves alſo were marvellous glad to ſee him ſo obedient to the Law, and did him great reverence. Then did the elder of the Cenſors examine him thus; Pompey the Great, I pray thee tell me, if thou didſt ſerve ſo long in the War as the Law doth appoint? Pompey anſwered aloud, Yes verily have I done, and that under no Captain but my ſelf. The People hearing this, ſhouted aloud for joy, and the Cenſors themſelves came down from their ſeats, and accompanied Pompey to his Houſe, to pleaſe the great multitude that followed him, clapping their hands for joy.

At the end of their Conſulſhip, grudges growing higher between Craſſus, and Pompey, there was one Gaius Aurelius, a Knight, who till then had never ſpoken in the publick Aſſembly: He getting up into the Pulpit for Orations, told the People openly, that that night Jupiter had appeared to him, and commanded him to tell both the Conſuls from him, that they ſhould not leave their Office before they were reconciled together: Yet for all this Pompey ſtirred not: But Craſſus took him by the hand, and ſpake thus before the People; My Lords! I think it no diſhonour to me to give place to Pompey, ſith you your ſelves have thought him worthy to be called the Great, befor he had any hair on his face, and to whom you granted the honour of two Triumphs before he came to be a Senator. Having thus ſpoken, they were reconciled together, and ſo gave up their Office.

His Pride.

Craſſus after this, retired to his former manner of life, and Pompey, as much as he could, avoided pleading mens cauſes in publick, and by degrees withdrew himſelf from frequenting the Market-place, and came ſeldom abroad, but when he did, he had always a great train following him. It was a rare thing thing to see him to be familiar with any one, or to come abroad but with a great company of attendants.

The power of the Pirats upon the Seas began in Cilicia, of which at first there was no great account made, till they grew bold and venturous in King Methridates Wars, being hired to serve him: and when the Romans engaged in Civil Wars at home, they neglected looking after them, which made them more audacious. For they did not only rob and spoil all Merchants by Sea, but plundred Islands, and Cities upon the Sea-coast, insomuch as men of great Nobility, and Wealth joyned with them, and they set up store-houses in divers places, and had Beacons to give warning by fire all along the Sea-coasts, which were well watched: they had also great Fleets of Ships well furnished, with excellent Galliots, skilful Pilots, and Marriners: their Ships were swift of Sail, and Pinnaces for discovery. All the Sea-coast over there was musick, singing, and rioting amongst them: Prizes were daily brought in, Persons of quality taken prisoners, and put to great ransom. Their Ships were a thousand in number, and they had taken four hundred Towns. They had spoiled and destroyed many Temples that had never been profained before. They had many strange Sacrifices and Ceremonies of Religion amongst them, and besides all other insolences and injuries which they did the Romans by Sea, they often went on Land, and plundred and destroyed their Country Houses; and once they took two Roman Prætors in their Purple Robes, with their Sergeants and Officers, and carried them quite away. At another time they surprised the Daughter of Antonius (a man that had the honour of a Triumph) as she was walking in the Fields, and put her to a great ransom. And further to dispite the Romans, when they had taken any of them, and they told them that they were Citizens of Rome, they would cloath them like Romans, and putting out the Ship-ladder they would bid them be gon to Rome, and if they refused they would throw them overboard, and drown them.

The power of the Pirats.

These Pirats had all the Mediterranean Seas at their command, that a Merchant durst scarce look out, or traffick any whether. This moved the Romans (fearing a famine by their means) to send Pompey to recover the Dominion of the Seas from them. The first man that moved that Pompey might not only be made Admiral at Sea, but have absolute power to command all Persons whatsoever without giving any account of his doings, was Gabinius, Pompey's Friend: which was done accordingly, and absolute authority was given unto him, not only of the Seas, but for the space of four hundred Furlongs from the Sea, within which compass were many great Nations, and mighty Kings. It gave him power also to choose out of the Senate fifteen Lieutenants, and to give to every one of them several Provinces in charge, and also to take mony out of the Treasury to defray the charges of a Fleet of two hundred Sail, with full power besides to leavy what men of War he thought good, and as many Galliots, and Marriners as he pleased.

Pompey sent against them.

His large Commission.

This Law was confirmed by the People. Yet the Nobility, and chief Senators thought that this authority did exceed, not only all envy, but that it gave them apparent cause of fear to give such unlimited power to a single Person: whereupon they were all against it but Cæsar, who promoted it, not so much to favour Pompey, as to ingratiate himself with the People. But the Noblemen fell out with Pompey, and one of the Consuls was very hot with him, told him that he sought to follow Romulus his steps, but peradventure he would come short of that end he made: This so provoked the People that they had thought to have killed him: But Catulus, a worthy man, spake also against this Edict, yet spake much in the praise of Pompey, and in conclusion, advised the People not to adventure a man of so great account in such dangerous Wars; For (said he) if you chance to lose him, whom have ye then to put in his place? The People cryed out, Your ſelf. After this, ſeeing how the People were bent, he ſpake no more.

his

Next after him Roſcius would have perſwaded them to have ſent another with Pompey as his Colleague, but the People made ſuch an outcry againſt him, that a Crow flying over the Market place fell to the ground. Upon the day when the Decree was to be fully paſſed, Pompey went forth of the City, and when he underſtood that it was confirmed, he returned the ſame Night privately, to avoid the envy they would have born him if the People ſhould have flocked in multitudes to have waited on him home.

His Policy.

The next morning he came abroad, and Sacrificed to the Gods, and audience being given him in a publick meeting, he ſo handled the matter that they much inlarged his power, almoſt doubling the preparations, which were at firſt Decreed to him. For it was ordained that he ſhould have five hundred Ships, one hundred and twenty thouſand Footmen, and five thouſand Horſemen. He choſe alſo twenty four Senators, all of them having been Generals of Armies, and two General Treaſurers. Whileſt theſe things were preparing, the price of Victuals fell, which rejoyced the People much, and they ſaid openly, that the very Name of Pompey had almoſt ended the War already.

Pompey divided all the Sea into thirteen Diviſions, and in each of them he appointed a certain number of Ships, and a Lieutenant over each of them: and by thus diſperſing his Navy all abroad, he brought all the Pirats Ships that were in a Fleet within his danger, and when he had taken them, he brought them all into an Harbour. But ſuch of them as could eſcape, fled into Cilicia, as the ſureſt place of retreat: Theſe Pompey would needs follow in his own Perſon with ſixty of his beſt Ships: Yet went he not till he had ſcowred the Tuſcan Seas, with the coaſt of Libia, Sardinia, Sicily, and Corſica, of all thoſe Thieves that had wont to keep thereabouts, and this he did within the ſpace of forty Days, taking infinite pains, both himſelf and his Lieutenants.

His Victories over the Pirats.

Piſo, one of the Conſuls, did all he could to hinder Pompey's preparations, and ſupplies of men, out of envy to his proſperity. Pompey being informed of it, ſent his Ships to Brunduſium, himſelf in the mean time paſſing through Tuſcany came to Rome; where ſo ſoon as his coming was known, the People ran out to meet him, as if he had been a long time abſent; and that which made them more joyful was, that now Victuals came in freely out of all parts, the Seas being cleared from Pirates. Pompey could have had Piſo put out of his Conſulſhip, but would not. So having ſetled all things in quiet according to his deſire, he haſted to his Navy at Brunduſium, and hoiſing Sail, paſſed to Athens, where he landed and Sacrificed to the Gods, and ſo returned to his Ships. At his going out of the City there were two Writings in his praiſe affixed to the Gate. That within was this,

He comes privately to Rome.

His return to his Navy.

The humbler that thou doſt thy ſelf as Man behave,
The more thou doſt deſerve the Name of God to have.

That on the outſide of the Gate was this,

We wiſht for thee, we wait for thee,
We worſhip thee, we wait on thee.

Now Pompey having taken many of theſe Pirots, upon their ſubmiſſion ſpared their lives, which ſo encouraged the reſt, that flying from his Captains, and Lieutenants, they came and delivered up themſelves with their Wives and Children into his hands. Pompey pardoned all that thus came to him,

His Clemency, and Wiſdom.

and

and by that means came to have knowledg of the reſt, whom he purſued, and in the end took. The moſt and richeſt of them had convaied their Wives, Children and goods into ſtrong Caſtles and Towns upon Mount Taurus, and they that were fit for ſervice, imbarked, and lay before a City of Coraſeſium, where they tarried for Pompey, and gave him Battel by Sea, and after endured a Siege by Land: Yet after a while, they beſought him to receive them to mercy, yielding themſelves, their Towns, and Iſlands, which they had ſtrongly fortified, into his hands. Thus was this War ended, and all the Pirats, within leſs than three Months ſpace, driven out of the Seas.

Pompey won alſo a great number of Ships, and ninety Gallies armed with Copper Spurs. As for thoſe whom he had taken (who were in number about twenty thouſand luſty Men and good Souldiers) he would not put them to Death, but planted them in inland Countries in certain ſmall Towns of the Cilicians, that were ſcarce inhabited, who were very glad of them and gave them Lands to maintain them: and whereas the City of the Solians had not long before been deſtroyed by Tygranes, King of Armenia, he repleniſhed it again by placing many of them there. He beſtowed others of them in the City of Dyma in the Country of Achaia, which lacked Inhabitants, and had great ſtore of good Land belonging to it, though many of his Enemies greatly blamed him for it.

Before Pompey was choſen General againſt the Pirats, young Metellus was ſent Prætor into Creet, who finding it to be a Den of theſe Thieves, he took many of them, and put them to Death: the reſt that eſcaped, being ſtraightly beſieged by him, ſent unto Pompey, craving pardon, and deſiring him to receive them to mercy: Pompey accordingly pardoned them, and wrote to Metellus, requiring him to give over that War, commanding the Cities alſo that they ſhould not obey Metellus. He ſent alſo Lucius Octavius, one of his Lieutenants, who entered into the Towns beſieged by Metellus, and fought againſt him in the behalf of the Pirats. This act of Pompey procured him much ill will, for that he fought for the common Enemies of the World, who had neither God nor Law, and that only to deprive a Roman Prætor of his Triumph, who had done ſuch good ſervice againſt them. Yet Metellus left not off his Wars for Pompey's Letters, but having taken the Pirats, he put them to Death. His Envy.

When the news came to Rome that the Piratick War was ended, and that Pompey had no more to do, but to go from City to City to viſit them, one Manlius a Tribune of the People, brought in another Law, that Pompey, taking the Army from Lucullus, and all the Provinces under his Government, with all Bythinia, which Glabrio kept, ſhould go and War upon Tygranes, and Methridates, and yet reſerve in his hands all his juriſdiction, and Army by Sea in as royal a manner as he had it before, which was to make him an abſolute Monarch over all the Roman Empire. The Senate ſtuck not ſo much at the injury offered to Lucullus, depriving him of the honour of his doings, and giving it to another, but that which moſt grived them was, to ſee Pompey's power eſtabliſhed into a plain Tyranny: Hereupon they encouraged one another to oppoſe it to the uttermoſt: yet when the day came for the paſſing of this Law, they all drew back for fear of angring the People, and none durſt oppoſe it: Only Catulus inveied againſt it a long time together: But ſay what he could, the Decree paſſed by the voices of the Tribes. And thus was Pompey in his abſence, made Lord of all that which Sylla, with much effuſion of blood had attained to with great difficulty. His Commiſſion much enlarged.

When Pompey by Letters from Rome was informed what Law the People had paſt in his behalf, he ſeemed to be much grieved that ſuch great Offices, and charges ſhould be laid upon him one in the neck of another, and clapping his his hands on his Thigh, he said, O Gods! shall I never see an end of these troubles? Had it not been better for me to have been a mean Man, and unknown, than thus continually to be ingaged in War? what! shall I never see the time, that breaking the neck of spite, and envy against me, I may yet once in my life live quietly at home in my Country with my Wife and Children. His Friends that were about him were much displeased with this his deep dissimulation, knowing that his ambitious desire to rule, made him glad at heart to be thus imployed, the rather because of the contention between him and Lucullus, which his deeds forthwith discovered.

His Dissimulation.

His Pride.

Hereupon he sent forth his Preceps into all quarters, requiring all Souldiers immediately to repare to him, and caused all the Kings, and Princes within his jurisdiction to attend him, and so, going through all the Countries, he changed all that Lucullus had before established. He also released the penalties that were imposed upon them, and took from them all the favours that Lucullus had granted them.

Lucullus finding himself so hardly dealt with, Friends on both sides mediated a meeting betwixt them, that they might talk together, and accordingly they met in Galatia, having their Sergeants, and Officers with Rods wreathed about with Lawrel carried before them, which shewed that Pompey came to take Lucullus's honour from him. Indeed Lucullus had been Consul before Pompey, and was the older man, yet Pompey exceeded him in dignity having Triumphed twice. At their first meeting they discoursed very courteously, each commending the others deeds, and each rejoycing at the others good success: but at parting they fell to hot words; Pompey upbraiding Lucullus's covetousness, and Lucullus Pompey's ambition, so that their Friends had much ado to part them.

He crosses Lucullus,

Lucullus when he was gone, divided the Lands in Galatia which he had conquered, and bestowed other gifts upon them. Pompey on the other side, camping hard by him, commanded the People every where not to obey him: He took his Souldiers also from him, leaving him only sixteen hundred, choosing out such as he thought would do him small service. He blemished his Glory also, telling every one that Lucullus had fought only with the shadow and pomp of those two Kings, and that he had left him to fight with all their force, and power. Lucullus on the other side said, that Pompey went only to fight with such as himself had subdued, and that he sought the honour of Triumph over Armenia and Pontus, as he had formerly practised to Triumph for overcoming a few Slaves and Fugitives.

His Wars with Methridates.

Lucullus being now gone, Pompey sent strong Garrisons into all the Sea coast from Phœnicia to the Bosphorus, and then marched towards Methridates, who had in his Camp thirty thousand Footmen, and two thousand Horsemen, yet durst he not fight, but encamped upon an high Mountain till he was forced to leave it for lack of Water. He was no sooner gone but Pompey seized upon the place, and setting his Souldiers to dig, he found Water enough for all his Army. Then he encamped round about Methridates besieging him in his own Camp: Methridates endured it forty five days, and then slaying all the sick and impotent in his Camp, with the choise of his Army he escaped by Night.

Another time Pompey found him by the River Euphrates, and lodged hard by him: Methridates prepared, suspecting that Pompey would that Night storm his Camp; but Pompey thought it not safe to fight in the dark, and therefore resolved rather to encompass him that he might not fly, and to fight him in the morning: but Pompey's old Captains would needs fight presently, which Pompey at last consented to, and the Romans ran upon them with great cries, which so affrighted their Enemies, that they presently turned their backs backs and fled, ſo that the Romans ſlew ten thouſand of them, and took their Camp. Methridates himſelf with eight hundred Horſe-men, made a Lane through the Romans and ſo eſcaped: Yet as ſoon as they were paſſed, his men diſperſed, ſome one way, ſome another, that himſelf was left but with three Perſons only, whereof Hypſicratea, a manlike woman was one, who never left him, but always looked to his Horſe, being armed after the Perſian manner, till he came to a ſtrong Caſtle called Inora, where was ſtore of Gold, and Silver, and the Kings chiefeſt Treaſure. Here Methridates divided all his richeſt Apparel amongſt his Friends, and to each of them a mortal Poyſon to carry about them, whereby they might prevent falling into their Enemies hands alive.

Pompey built a City in the place where he gained this Victory betwixt the Rivers of Euphrates, and Araxes, ſituate in Armenia the Leſs, which he called Nicopolis. This City he gave by the conſent of his Souldiers, to ſuch of them as were old, lame, ſick, wounded, or disbanded: to whom many of the Neighbours afterwards repairing, the Nicopolitans lived after the manner of the Cappadocians. He builds a City.

From hence Methridates had intended to have gone into Armenia, but King Tigranes prohibited it, and promiſed an hundred Tallents to him that could kill him: Paſſing therefore by the head of Euphrates, he fled through the Country of Colchide: In the mean time Pompey invaded Armenia, being ſolicited thereto by Tigranes the younger, who rebelled againſt his Father, and met Pompey at the River of Araxes, which falleth into the Caſpian Sea. Then did Pompey and he march forward, taking in ſuch Towns as yielded unto them. Tigranes, who had been much weakned by Lucullus, underſtanding that Pompey was of a mild and Gentle nature, he put his Souldiers into Garriſons, and himſelf with his Friends, and Kinſman went to meet Pompey. When he came near his Camp, being on Horſeback, there came two Sergeants to him commanding him to alight, which he did accordingly, and put off his Sword and gave it them, and when he came before Pompey he ſhamefully fell upon the ground, and imbraced his knees; but Pompey took him by the hand, raiſed him up, and made him ſit down by him on the one ſide, and his Son on the other, ſaying to them both, As for your former loſſes you may thank Lucullus for them, who hath taken from you Syria, Phœnicia, Cilicia, Galatia, and Sophena, but for what you have left till my coming, you ſhall enjoy it, paying to the Romans ſix thouſand Tallents, for the wrong you have done them: Provided alſo that your Son ſhall have Sophena for his part. Methridates flight. Baſe flattery.

Tigranes accepted of the conditions, whereupon the Romans ſaluted him King, and he gave great ſums of money amongſt the Army: But his Son was much diſcontented, and when Pompey ſent for him to come to Sup with him, he refuſed, wherefore Pompey impriſoned him, and kept him to be led in his Triumph at Rome.

Shortly after Phraates, King of Parthia, ſent Ambaſſadors to deſire this young Prince who was his Son in Law, and to tell Pompey that Euphrates muſt be the uttermoſt bounds of his Conqueſt. Pompey anſwered, that Tygranes had more right to his Son than Phraates, and as for limiting his borders, he would do it with Juſtice. So leaving Afranius to keep Armenia, he paſſed by other Nations that inhabited about the Mountain of Caucaſus, having Methridates in chaſe. Two of the chiefeſt of theſe Nations were the Iberians, and the Albanians, near to the Caſpian Sea. Theſe, upon his requeſt, ſuffered him to paſs through their Countries. But Winter haſting on apace, theſe Barbarous People raiſed an Army of fourty thouſand fighting men, and paſſed over the River of Cyrnus. Pompey could have hindred their paſſage, but yet let them come over, and then fought with them, and overcame them, and ſlew multitudes of them in the Field, whereupon they ſubmitted, and made peace with him. His War with the Albanians.

And Illyrians. Then Pompey went againſt the Iberians, who took part with Methridates. They were more and better Souldiers than the Albanians: they were never ſubject to the Medes, and Perſians, nor to Alexander the Great. Theſe Pompey overcame alſo in a bloody fight, and ſlew nine thouſand of them, and took ten thouſand Priſoners. From thence he went into the Country of Colchide, where Servilius met him by the River of Phaſis, with his Fleet with which he kept the Pontick Sea: He found it a hard work to purſue Methridates any further, who had hid himſelf amongſt a People that bordered upon the Lake of Mæotis. He heard alſo that the Albanians had rebelled, wherefore he went back to be revenged on them, paſſing over the River of Cyrnus again, yet with much difficulty, becauſe the Barbarous People had made a defence on the further ſide, by felling, and laying many Trees acroſs all along the Bank of the River: and when he was got over, he was to travel through a dry Country a great way before he came to any Water, whereupon he cauſed ten thouſand Goats skins to be filled with Water, and ſo marched over it. At the River Abas he met with his Enemies, who had now an Army of one hundred and twenty thouſand Footmen, and ten thouſand Horſemen, but Armed only in Beaſt skins. There General was Coſis, the Kings Brother. In the Battel this Coſis flew upon Pompey, and throwing a Dart at him, wounded him in the flank; but Pompey ran him through with a Lance and ſlew him. Some ſay that ſome Amazons aſſiſted this People againſt Pompey.

His Valour.

After this Battel Pompey going back to invade the Country of Hyrcania, as far as the Caſpian Sea, was forced to retreat by reaſon of an infinite number of deadly Serpents that he met withal, wherefore he went back into Armenia the leſs, to which place he had many rich preſents ſent him from the Kings of the Elymians, and the Medes, to whom he returned courteous anſwers. Yet he ſent Afranius with part of his Army, againſt the King of Parthia, who had much harraſed and plundred the Country of Tygranes, and he drave him out.

Serpents drive him back.

At this time the Concubines of Methridates were brought to him, but he would not touch any one of them, but ſent them all home again to their Parents, and Friends, being moſt of them the Daughters of Princes, and other Noble Captains, Only Stratonice whom Methridates loved above all the reſt, with whom he had left the cuſtody of his Caſtle where lay all his Treaſures of Gold and Silver, was but a Singers Daughter. She delivered the Caſtle into Pompey's hands, and beſides, offered him rich and goodly preſents, all which he refuſed, ſaving ſuch as might ſerve to adorn the Temples of the Gods, and that might beautifie his Triumph, leaving the reſt to Stratonice to diſpoſe of as ſhe pleaſed. The King alſo of the Iberians ſent him a Bedſtead, Table, and Chair, all of pure Gold, praying him to accept it as a token of his love, he delivered them into the Treaſurers hands to be accountable for them to the State.

His Chaſtity.

His ſelf-denyal.

From hence Pompey went to the City of Amiſus, where he did ſuch things as he had before condemned in Lucullus, taking upon him to eſtabliſh Laws, to give Gifts, and to diſtribute ſuch honours, as Victorious Generals uſed to do when they had ended all their Wars. And this he did to gratifie twelve Barbarous Kings, and Princes, and Captains that came to him thither. Writing alſo to the King of Parthia, he gave him not that Title which others uſed to do, who ſtiled him King of Kings. He had alſo a wonderful deſire to win Syria, and to paſs through Arabia even to the Red Sea, that he might enlarge his Victories every way, even to the Great Ocean. As he did when he conquered Lybia, and in Spain had enlarged the Roman Empire to the Atlantick Sea; and in purſuit of the Albanians he went almoſt to the Hyrcanian Sea.

His Ambition.

As he paſſed on towards the Red Sea, he commanded his Souldiers, with a ſufficient number of Ships to wait for the Merchants that ſailed to Boſphorus, and to ſeize upon the Victuals, and other Merchandize that they carried thither: and ſo paſſing on with the greateſt part of his Army, he came to the place where he found the Bodies of the Romans that were ſlain by Methridates under their Captain Trierius, which he cauſed to be honourably buried, which thing Lucullus had neglected to do, which made his Souldiers hate him. His Charity.

Pompey having now by Afranius conquered the Albanians dwelling about Mount Amanus, he marched into Syria, and conquered it, making it a Roman Province: He conquered alſo all Judea, where he took King Ariſtobulus: He built certain Cities there, and delivered others from bondage, ſharply puniſhing the Tyrants in them. He alſo ſpent much of his time there, in deciding controverſies, and in pacifying the contentions which fell out betwixt free Cities, Princes, and Kings. And truly if Pompey's fame, and renown was great, ſo was his Vertue, Juſtice, and Liberality, which covered many faults which his familiar Friends about him did commit. For he was of ſuch a gentle nature, that he could neither keep them from offending, nor puniſh them when they had offended. His acts in Syria, and Judea.

Whilſt Pompey was in Judea, being angry with Ariſtobulus, he marched againſt him, Hyrcanus (the Brother of Ariſtobulus, who contended with him for the Kingdom) provoking him thereunto. Pompey underſtanding that Ariſtobulus was fled into Alexandrion, a ſtrong and ſtately Caſtle, ſeated upon a high Hill, he ſent and ſummoned him to come unto him, and Ariſtobulus being adviſed not to make War againſt the Romans, he came to Pompey: and after he had debated his Title to the Kingdom, with his Brother Hyrcanus, by Pompey's permiſſion he retired into the Caſtle again. This he did two or three times, always flattering Pompey out of hope to prevail in his ſuit. Yet Pompey required that he ſhould deliver up his Caſtles into his hands, which he was fain to do, though he was much diſcontentedat it, and therefore he went to Jeruſalem with a purpoſe to prepare for War. Pompey's acts in Judea.

Pompey not thinking it fit to give him any time for preparation, followed him immediately, and firſt encamped at Jericho, where were moſt excellent Dates, and Balſom, the moſt precious of all other Ointments, and from thence he marched towards Jeruſalem. Ariſtobulus repenting what he had done, came and met him, promiſing him mony, and that he would yield up, both himſelf and the City in a peacable way. Pompey pardoned him, and ſent Gabinius with a party of Souldiers to receive the mony: Yet were they faign to return without it: for Ariſtobulus's Souldiers would not ſtand to what he had promiſed. Pompey being much provoked hereby committed Ariſtobulus into cuſtody, and preſently marched againſt Jeruſalem. He comes to Jericho. He marches to Jeruſalem.

The Citizens being at this time divided amongſt themſelves, they that ſtood for Hyrcanus were willing to open the Gates to Pompey: But the faction of Ariſtobulus refuſed, and prepared for War, becauſey Pompey kept their King Priſoner: and accordingly they ſeized upon the Temple, and cut down the Bridg which led into the City. Hyrcanus and his Friends, let in the Army, and delivered over to them, both the City, and the Kings Pallace, the cuſtody of both which, Pompey committed to Piſo, who fortified the Houſes and buildings that were neer the Temple, firſt offering to the Beſieged conditions of Peace, and when they refuſed, he prepared to give a General aſſault, being aſſiſted by Hyrcanus with all things needful.

On the North ſide of the City Pompey encamped, which was the eaſieſt to be aſſaulted: yet were there high Towers, and a deep Ditch made with hands, beſides a deep Valley which begirt the Temple, and towards the City, The Temple beſieged.

ty, the place was very ſteep when the Bridg was taken away. To overcome theſe difficulties, the Romans raiſed Mounts, cutting down Trees round about, and filling up the Trench with materials which the Souldies brought. This work proved very difficult, conſidering the vaſt depth of the Trench, and the reſiſtance of the Jews, made from above. But when Pompey obſerved that the Jews reſted every ſeventh Day (for though they would defend themſelves from an aſſailing Enemy, yet they held it unlawful on that day to hinder any work that the Enemy did) he choſe thoſe Days eſpecially wherein to carry on his work: So that in time the Trench was filled, and the Tower fitted upon the Mount, and the Engins planted, which ſhot huge Stones wherewith they battered the Temple, yet was it long before thoſe ſtrong and ſtately Towers yielded to the aſſaults of the Beſiegers.

The Romans being much tired, Pompey wondered at the obſtinacy of the Jews, eſpecially conſidering that all this while they never intermitted their daily Sacrifices, which the Prieſts every Morning and Evening offered upon the Altar, not omitting the ſame in their greateſt extremities. In the third month of the Siege, the greateſt Tower, being ſhaken by the battering Rams, at laſt fell, and brake down a great piece of the Wall, at which breach many of the Romans ruſhed into the Temple. Theſe running up and down, while ſome of the Jews ſought to hide themſelves, and others made ſmall reſiſtance, ſlew them all. Many of the Prieſts, though they ſaw the Enemies ruſhing in with their drawn Swords, yet being nothing at all diſmaied, continued their Sacrifices and were ſlain at the very Altar, preferring the duty which they owed to their Religion before their own lives.

The Temple taken.

All places were full of ſlaughters. Some of the Jews were ſlain by the Romans, others by their own Countrymen that were of the contrary faction. Many threw themſelves down headlong from the Rocks: others ſetting their Houſes on fire, burnt themſelves, not enduring to behold thoſe things that were done by the Enemy. Here fell twelve thouſand of the Jews, whereas of the Romans there were but few ſlain, though many wounded. Amongſt the Captives that were taken, was Abſolon, the Uncle and Father in Law of Ariſtobulus, the Son of John Hyrcanus.

The Jews ſlain.

Upon the ſame day and in the ſame month was the Temple taken by Pompey, as it had been taken by Nebuchadnezzar five hundred and forty three years before: and it fell out alſo to be on their Sabbath, about the twenty eight day of our December. Pompey, entered into the Temple, and many others with him, and there beheld thoſe things which were not lawful to be ſeen by any, but the High Prieſts only. And whereas there were in the Temple, the Table and Candleſticks with the Lamps, all Veſſels for Sacrifice, and the Cenſers all of pure Gold, and a huge heap of Spices, and in the Treaſuries of ſacred mony above two thouſand Talents, yet Pompey medled not with any of theſe, but the next day he commanded them which had the charge of the Temple, to purifie, and cleanſe it, and to offer their ſolemn Sacrifices unto God.

Note the time when the Temple was taken.

Pompey then reſtored the High Prieſthood to Hyrcanus, both becauſe he had ſhewed himſelf ſo forward all the time of the Siege, as alſo for that he hindred the Jews that were in all the Country from joyning with Ariſtobulus: and together with the Prieſthood he gave him the Principality alſo, only forbidding him to wear a Crown. Then did he put to death thoſe that were the chiefeſt cauſe of the War, and made the Jews Tributaries to the Romans, and the Cities which they had formerly conquered in Cæloſyria, he took from them, commanding them to obey their own Governours: and the whole Nation of the Jews, formerly advanced through proſperity, he contracted within their ancient bounds.

Hyrcanus made Prince and Prieſt.

The

The King of the Arabians that dwelt at the Caſtle of Petra, that never before made any account of the Romans, was now greatly afraid, and wrote to Pompey that he was at his devotion to do what he commanded. Pompey to try him, brought his Army before his Caſtle of Petra, and lodged them for that day, and fell to riding, and mannaging his Horſe up and down the Camp: In the mean time Poſts came riding from the Realm of Pontus with Letters of good news, as appeared by their Javelins wreathed about with Lawrel: the Souldiers ſeeing that, flocked about the place to hear the news, but Pompey would make an end of his riding before he would read the Letters, whereupon many cryed to him to alight, which he did: But then he wanted a high place to ſtand upon, and the Souldiers were ſo impatient to hear the news that they would not ſtay to make one, they heaped Saddles one upon another, and Pompey getting up upon them, told them, that Methridates was dead, having killed himſelf becauſe his Son Pharnaces rebelled againſt him, and had wan all which his Father poſſeſſed, writing to him that he kept it for himſelf and the Romans. Upon this news all the Camp rejoyced wonderfully, and Sacrificed to the Gods with great mirth. Methridates Death.

Pompey finding this troubleſome War to be ſo eaſily ended, preſently left Arabia, and by ſpeedy marches he came to the City of Amiſus. There he met with great Preſents which were ſent him from Pharnaces, and many dead Bodies of the Kings Kindred, and the Body of Methridates himſelf, who was known by certain ſcars in his Face. Pompey would by no means ſee him, but to avoid envy he ſent him away to the City of Sinope. He much wondered at his rich Apparel, and Weapons: The Scabbard of his Sword coſt four hundred Talents: His Hat alſo was of wondrous Workmanſhip. Pompey having here ordered all things according to his mind, he went homewards with great pomp and Glory. Coming to Mytylene, he eaſed the City of all Taxes for Theophanes his ſake, and was preſent at certain Plays, the ſubjects whereof were the great acts of Pompey. He ſo liked the Theater where theſe Plays were made, that he drew a moddle of it to make a ſtatelier than it in Rome. As he paſſed by the City of Rhodes, he heard the Rhetoricians diſpute, and gave each of them a Talent. The like he did at Athens unto the Philoſophers there, and towards the beautifying of the City he gave them fifty Talents. His Policy. His Liberality.

At his return into Italy he expected to have been received very honourably, and longed to ſee his Wife, and Children, thinking alſo that they longed as much to ſee him: But God ſo ordered it, that in his own Houſe he met with occaſion of ſorrow: For his Wife Mutia in his abſence had played the Harlot. Yet whilſt he was a far off, he made no account of the reports which were made to him of her: But when he drew neer to Italy, he was more attentive to them, whereupon he ſent her word he would own her no more for his Wife. There were alſo rumours ſpread abroad in Rome which much troubled him; it being given out that he would bring his Army ſtrait to Rome, and make himſelf abſolute Lord of the Empire. Craſſus hereupon, to give more credit to the report, and to procure the greater envy againſt Pompey, conveyed himſelf, Family, and Goods out of Rome. He returns into Italy. He divorceth his Wife.

But when Pompey came to Italy, calling his Souldiers together, he made an Oration to them as the time and occaſion required, and then commanded them to diſband, and every one to return to his own home, and to follow his buſineſs till the time of his Triumph. As he paſſed, ſuch was the love of the People to him, that multitudes of them accompanied him to Rome whether he would or no, and that with a greater power than he brought with him into Italy, ſo that if he had been diſpoſed to have made Innovation, he needed not the aſſiſtance of his Army therein. He diſbands his Army. The People honour him.

At

At this time there was a Law that no man ſhould enter into Rome before his Triumph, wherefore Pompey ſent to the Senate, requeſting them to defer the choiſe of Conſuls for a few days, that he might further Piſo, who ſued for the Conſulſhip that year: But through Catoes means they denyed his requeſt. Pompey marvelling to hear of his boldneſs and free Speech, was very deſirous to make him his Friend. So Cato having two Neeces, he deſired to marry one himſelf, and to have the other for his Son; but Cato flatly denied him, though his Wife, and Siſter were angry that he refuſed to make alliance with Pompey the Great.

He ſeeks to win Cato.

After this, Pompey being deſirous to prefer Afranius to be Conſul, he cauſed mony to be given to the Tribes of the People, which being reported abroad, made every man ſpeak evil of him, as having put the Conſulſhip to ſale for money, whereas himſelf had purchaſed it by his Noble and Valiant deeds.

The time for his Triumph being come, the ſtatelineſs, and magnificence was ſuch, that though he had two days to ſhew it, yet lacked he time to produce all. For there were many things prepared for the ſhew which were not ſeen, and would have ſet forth another Triumph. Firſt the Tables were carried wherein were written the Names of the Nations for which he Triumphed: as the Kingdoms of Pontus, Armenia, Cappadocia, Paphlagonia, Media, Colchis, Iberia, Albania, Syria, Cilicia, and Meſopotamia: As alſo the People that dwell in Phœnicia, Paleſtina, Judæa, and Arabia: And all the Pirats that he had overcome by Sea, and Land. In all theſe Countries he had taken a thouſand Caſtles, and neer nine hundred Towns, and Cities. Of Pirats Ships eight hundred. Moreover he had repleniſhed with Inhabitants thirty nine deſolate Towns. Theſe Tables alſo declared, that the Revenue of Rome, before theſe his conqueſts, aroſe but to five thouſand Myriads, but now he had improved them to eight thouſand, and five hundred Myriads. Beſides, he now brought into the Treaſury to the value of twenty thouſand Talents in Silver, Gold, Plate, and Jewels, beſides what had been diſtributed already among the Souldiers, of which he that had leaſt, had fifteen hundred Drachma's for his ſhare.

His ſecond Triumph.

The Priſoners that were led in this Triumph, were the Son of Tygranes, King of Armenia, with his Wife, and Daughter: The Wife of King Tygranes himſelf, called Zozime: Ariſtobulus King of Judæa. The Siſter of Methridates, with her five Sons: And ſome Ladies of Scythia. The Hoſtages of the Iberians and Albanians, as alſo the Kings of the Commagenians: Beſides a great number of Marks of Triumph which himſelf and his Lieutenants had won in ſeveral Battels. But the greateſt honour that ever he wan, and which no other of the Conſuls ever attained to, was, that his three Triumphs were of the three Parts of the World, to wit, his firſt of Africk: his ſecond of Europe: And his third Aſia; and all this before he was forty yeards old. But from this time forward Pompey began to decline, till (with his Life) he had loſt all his Honour.

Lucullus at his return out of Aſia, was well received by the Senate, and much more after Pompey was come to Rome. For the Senate encouraged him to deal in affairs of State, being of himſelf ſlow, and much given to his eaſe and pleaſure, becauſe of his great Riches. So when Pompey was come, he began to ſpeak againſt him, and through Catoes aſſiſtance, gat all things confirmed which he had done in Aſia, and which had been undone by Pompey. Pompey, having ſuch an afront put upon him by the Senate, had recourſe to the Tribunes of the People, the vileſt of whom was Clodius, who cloſed with him, and had Pompey ever at his Elbow, ready to ſecond what motion ſoever he had to make to the People: He alſo deſired Pompey to forſake Cicero, his ancient Friend, but Clodius his utter Enemy. By this means Cicero was brought into into danger, and when he required Pompey's aſſiſtance, he ſhut the door againſt him, and went out at a back-door; whereupon Cicero was forced to forſake Rome. Cicero leaves Rome.

At this time Julius Cæſar returning from his Prætorſhip out of Spain, laid ſuch a plot as quickly brought himſelf into favour, but tended to the ruin of Pompey. He was now to ſue for his firſt Conſulſhip, and conſidering the enmity between Pompey and Craſſus, he conſidered that if he joyned with one, he made the other his Enemy, he therefore made them Friends, which indeed undid the Commonwealth. For by this means Cæſar was choſen Conſul, who ſtrait fell to flattering of the People, and made Laws for their advantage, diſtributing to them Lands, which embaſed the Majeſty of the chief Majeſtrate, and made a Conſulſhip no better than the Tribuneſhip of the People. Bibulus, his Fellow Conſul, oppoſed him what he could, and Cato alſo, till Cæſar brought Pompey into the Pulpit for Orations, where he asked him whether he conſented to the Decree which he had ſet forth? Pompey anſwered That he did: and that he would defend it with the Sword. This gat him much ill will. Cæſars Policy. He flatters the People.

Not many days after, Pompey married Julia the Daughter of Cæſar, formerly betrothed to Servilius Cæpio: and to pacifie Cæpio, Pompey gave him his own Daughter in marriage, whom yet he had promiſed to Fauſtus, the Son of Sylla. Cæſar alſo married Calphurnia, the Daughter of Piſo. Afterwards Pompey filling Rome with Souldiers, carried all by force. For as Bibulus came to the Market place accompanied with Cato and Lucullus, they were baſely abuſed, and many were wounded, and when they were driven away, they paſſed the Act for dividing of the Lands as they pleaſed. The People being encouraged hereby, never ſtuck at any matter that Pompey and Cæſar would have done. And by this means all Pompey's former Acts were confirmed, though Lucullus oppoſed what he could. Cæſar alſo was appointed to the Government of both Gauls with four whole Legions. Pompey marries Cæſars Daughter.

Then were choſen Conſuls, Piſo, Father in Law to Cæſar, and Gabinius, Pompey's great flatterer. Pompey now ſo doted on his young Wife, that he ſuffered himſelf wholly to be ruled by her, and leaving all publick affairs, he went with her to Country Houſes, and places of pleaſure, which encouraged Clodius, a Tribune of the people to deſpiſe him, and to enter into ſeditious attempts. For when he had driven Cicero out of Rome, and ſent away Cato to make War in Cyprus, and Cæſar was occupied in Gaul, finding that the people were at his beck, becauſe he flattered them, he then attempted to undo ſome things that Pompey had eſtabliſhed. Amongſt others he took young Tygranes out of priſon, and carried him up and down with him, and continually picked quarrels againſt Pompey's Friends. Pompey coming abroad one day to hear how a matter of his was handled, this Clodius having gotten a company of deſperate Ruffians about him, gat up into a high place, and asked aloud, Who is the moſt licentious Captain in all the City? They anſwered, Pompey. And who (ſaid he) is he that ſcratched his head with one finger? They again anſwered, Pompey, clapping their hands with great ſcorn. This went to Pompey's heart, who never uſed to be thus abuſed, and he was yet more vexed, when he ſaw that the Senate was well pleaſed with this his diſgrace, becauſe he had forſaken, and betrayed Cicero. Upon this a great uprore was made in the Market place, and many were hurt, whereupon Pompey would come no more abroad whilſt Clodius was Tribune, but adviſed with his Friends how he might ingratiate himſelf with the Senate: they adviſed him to put away his Wife Julia, to renounce Cæſars Friendſhip, and to ſtick again to the Senate. Some of theſe things he diſliked, yet was content to call home Cicero, who was Clodius his mortal Enemy, and in great favour with the Senate. He dotes on his young Wife. Pompey diſgraced.

Here-

Hereupon Pompey brought Cicero's Brother into the Market place to move the matter to the People, with many men about him, and they fell to blows, so that many were slain, yet he overcome Clodius, and Cicero was called home by the Decree of the People, who also brought Pompey into favour with the Senate, and caused a Law to be made whereby to enable Pompey to bring Corn to Rome: and thus by Cicero's means Pompey had once again power given him both by Sea and Land over all the Roman Territories. For all the Havens, Marts, and Fairs, and all Store-houses, and Merchandizes, yea, and Tillage, came into his hand.

Cicero recalled.

For this Clodius accused him, saying, that the Senate had made this Law, not because of a dearth of Victuals, but that they made a dearth that so the Law might pass for restoring Pompey's power, which was almost come to nothing. Pompey having now full Authority to cause Corn to be brought to Rome, he sent his Friends, and Lieutenants abroad, and himself went into Sicily; and when he was ready to return again, there arose such a storm, that the Mariners feared to weigh their Anchors; but he commanded them to do it, saying, Its necessary that the People should have Corn, but its not necessary that I should live. Thus by his prudence and courage he filled all the Markets with Corn, and the Seas with Ships, and so great plenty of Provision was brought in, as fully furnished, not only Rome, but all Italy.

Pompey sent for Corn.

Note.

About this time Cæsars great conquests in Gaul wan him much credit. But whilst they thought him to be Warring afar off, he appeared in the midst of the People at Rome, and much opposed Pompey in the weightiest matter of the Commonwealth. For he had the power of an Army which he hardened with pains, and continual exercise, not only to fight against the Barbarous People, but to make himself invincible, and dreadful to the World. Moreover, by that infinite quantity of Gold, and Silver, and other Treasures that he gat from the Enemy, he purchased many Friends to himself, sending great Presents to Rome, to the Ædiles, Prætors, Consuls, and their Wives; therefore when he was come back over the Alps, and Wintered in the City of Luca, multitudes of the People, yea, two hundred of the Senate themselves, amongst whom were Crassus and Pompey, went out of Rome unto him. All these Cæsar returned back again, some with store of mony, others with good Words: But with Pompey and Crassus he agreed, that they two should sue to be Consuls, and that himself would send good store of voices upon the day of Election: and that if they were chosen they should get a Decree of the People, that they should have some new Provinces, and Armies assigned to them, and withal, that they should procure his Government to continue for five years longer. This Plot being discovered, and spread abroad, gave great distast to honest men, and many who had intended to sue for the Consulship, gave it over. Only Lucius Domitius, being encouraged by Cato, stood for it. For (said he) Thou doest not contend for the Consulship, but to defend the liberty of thy Country against two Tyrants. Pompey fearing Catoes faction, thought it not safe to let Domitius come into the Market place: He sent therefore armed men against him, who slew the Torch-bearer that came before him, and made all the rest to flie, amongst whom Cato was the last man that retired, who, whilst he defended Domitius, was wounded in the Elbow.

Cæsar comes privately to Rome.

He bribes the Officers.

Thus Pompey and Crassus came to be Consuls, wherein they carried themselves very dishonestly. For the People being about to choose Cato, Prætor: Pompey perceiving of it, brake up the Assembly, falsly alleadging that he had certain ill signs, and afterwards, corrupting the Tribes, they chose Antias, and Vatinias, Prætors, and then by Trebonius, a Tribune of the People, they published an Edict that Cæsar should hold his Government five years longer: Unto Crassus they appointed the Province of Syria, and to make War against the Parthians. Unto Pompey they allotted Africk and both the Spains, with four Pompey chosen Consul.

Provinces divided.

four whole Legions, of the which, at Cæsars request, he sent him two, to assist him in his Wars in Gaul.

Crassus, at the going out of his Consulship, departed into Syria, and Pompey remained in Rome to dedicate the Theater which he had built, where he caused many goodly Plays to be made, and caused Wild Beasts to be baited, and hunted, amongst which, five hundred Lions were killed: but the most terrible sight of all, was amongst his Elephants. This he did to gratifie the People, though to his very great cost, and he procured much love to himself thereby. But he got more envy from others by committing the Government of his Provinces, and Legions, unto his Lieutenants, whilst himself with his Wife took their pleasure up and down Italy. Pompey's Theater dedicated.

At an Election of the Ædiles, on a sudden there was a great hurly-burly, Swords were drawn and many were slain about Pompey, so that he was faign to send home his Garments that were sprinkled with their blood and to fetch others. His young Wife that was great with child, seeing his clothes bloody, was so frighted that she fell into a swound, that they had much ado to recover her. At another time, being with child again, she fell in labour, and died in childbirth: and as Pompey was carrying her into the Country to bury her neer unto the City of Alba at his Country House, the people took her corps, and carrying it into the Field of Mars, buried it there: and this they did more for Cæsar, than for Pompey's sake. Julia dieth.

This alliance between Pompey and Cæsar being thus broken, which rather covered than bridled their ambition to Rule, there arose a new stir in Rome, and every mans mouth was full of seditious words: About which time news came that Crassus was overcome and slain in Parthia, who was the only bar to hinder these two from civil War: for they both feared him, and therefore kept themselves quiet. Yet they thought the Empire of Rome was too little for them. Pompey thinking that Cæsar would not disband his Army, sought to strengthen himself against him by procuring Offices in the City: and when he could not procure them, the people being bribed by Cæsar, he left the City without a Magistrate, so that there were none to command, or whom the people might obey. Hereupon a rumour was spread that a Dictator must be chosen, and that Pompey must be the man: This Cato opposed with all his power: Bnt when Pompey's Friends excused him, saying, that he neither sought, nor would accept of it, then Cato highly commended him, and pray'd him to see good order kept in the Commonwealth, which accordingly he undertook. Pompey and Cæsar quarrel.

Then were Domitius and Massala chosen Consuls, but after a while one of them died, vvhereupon many vvere earnestly bent to have a Dictator, and Cato fearing great disorders, was willing that Pompey should have some Office to keep him from that vvhich was more Tyrannical. Bibulus a chief man in the Senate, and Pompey's Enemy, was the first man that moved that Pompey might be chosen Consul alone: For (said he) by this means the Commonvvealth shall be rid of present trouble, or it shall be in bondage to an honest man. It vvas expected that Cato vvould have opposed this motion; but rising up, he told them, that he vvould not first have made this motion, but seeing it vvas propounded by another, he thought it meet, and reasonable to be followved. For (said he) Its better to have an Officer to command, whatsoever he be, than to have none at all, and that there was none so fit to command in so troublesome a time as Pompey.

All the Senate consented hereto, and ordained that Pompey only should be Consul, and that if he savv it needful to have the assistance of an other, he might name whom he saw good, yet not till two months vvere past. Pompey being thus made Consul alone, he carried it very friendly unto Cato, and thanked him for the honour he had done him, intreating his assistance in the Pompey made Consul.

execution of his Office. Cato replied that he had no reaſon to thank him; for what he had done, he had not done it for his ſake, but out of his reſpect to the publick good: and that if he asked his counſel in any thing, he would give it him privately, if not, that he would openly ſpeak that which he thought beſt.

He marries Cornelia.

Pompey then married Cornelia, the Daughter of Metellus Scipio, the late Wife of young Publius Craſſus, ſlain with his Father in Parthia. This Lady was of excellent beauty, and gifts, well learned, skilful in Muſick, Geometry, and Philoſophy; ſhe was modeſt, and ſober, free from brawling, or fooliſh curioſity. Her Father was Noble both by Birth, and deportment. Yet many diſliked Pompey's marrying ſo young a Wife, and giving himſelf to Feaſting and Jollity, when he ſhould have looked to his Conſulſhip in ſo troubleſome a time.

His juſtice.

Pompey proceeded ſharply againſt thoſe that by Bribery, and indirect means came to their Offices. He made Laws, and Ordinances for the adminiſtration of Juſtice, and himſelf dealt uprightly in all things, and took order that Judgment ſhould be adminiſtred with ſilence, ſafety, and gravity. But when his Father in Law was accuſed, he ſent for three hundred and ſixty Judges home to his Houſe, praying them to help him, which the accuſer of Scipio underſtanding, let fall his ſuit. Plancus alſo being accuſed, Pompey (contrary to the Law) ſpake in his commendation; whereupon Cato, who was one of the Judges, ſtopped his Ears, ſaying, that he would not hear an offender praiſed, being contrary to the Law: Plancus was condemned by all the Judges to the great ſhame of Pompey. Yet otherwiſe he ſet all things in good order, and choſe his Father Scipio for his fellow Conſul for the five laſt Months. Then he cauſed the Government of his Provinces to be aſſigned to him for four years more, with commiſſion to take out of the Treaſury a thouſand Talents yearly, for to defray the charges of his Wars.

And injuſtice.

Cæſars Friends ſeeing this, moved that ſome conſideration might be had of him alſo, who made great Wars for the Commonvvealth, and by his good ſervice had deſerved either to be choſen Conſul again, or elſe that they ſhould prolong his charge, and Goverment, that no other ſucceſſor might reap the fruit of his labours; Much ſtir aroſe about this matter: But Pompey ſaid, that he had received Letters from Cæſar, by which he requeſted a ſucceſſor, and to be diſcharged of this War: adding that he thought it fit they ſhould grant him the priviledg to demand the ſecond Conſulſhip though he was abſent. This Cato ſtoutly withſtood, ſaying, that leaving his Army he muſt return home as a private man, and in his own Perſon crave recompence of his Country. Pompey replying nothing hereto, made many think he bore no great good vvill to Cæſar; the rather becauſe he had ſent to him for the two Legions which he had lent him under colour of his War againſt the Parthians. Though Cæſar ſmelt his deſign, yet he ſent his Souldiers, and rewarded them liberally.

He ſends to Cæſar for his two Legions.

His ſickneſs, and recovery.

About this time Pompey fell dangerouſly ſick at Naples, whereof he yet recovered again, and the Neapolitans ſacrificed to the Gods, for his recovery; the like alſo did their Neighbours round about, and it ran ſo generally through Italy, that there was no City or Town wherein they did not make open Feaſting, and rejoyced for many days together. The infinite number of People alſo which went to meet him out of all places was ſuch, that there was not room enough for them all, but the High-ways, Cities, Towns, and Ports were full of People, Feaſting and ſacrificing to the Gods for his recovery. Divers alſo went to meet him that were Crowned with Garlands, caſting Noſegays, and Flowers upon him. Yet ſome thought that this was the cauſe of the civil Wars that enſued. For hereupon he grew ſo proud to ſee himſelf thus honoured, that forgetting his former Government, he began to deſpiſe

The People honour him.

Pompey's Pride.

Cæſar,

Cæſar, thinking that he could eaſily overcome him when he pleaſed. Beſides, Appius that brought him his two Legions from Cæſar out of Gaul, reproached much his doings there, and gave out many foul words againſt Cæſar. For he ſaid that Pompey knew not his own ſtrength, who might overcome Cæſar with his own Legions, for that when they ſaw Pompey they would forſake Cæſar and turn to him.

Theſe flattering Speeches made Pompey ſo ſecure, that he laughed them to ſcorn who were afraid of War; and ſuch as ſaid that if Cæſar came to Rome, they knew not how his power could be reſiſted, he ſmilingly bad them take no thought, for if he did but ſtamp on the ground, he could fill Italy with Armies both of Horſe and Foot out of all places. In the mean time Cæſar increaſed his Army, and drew neer to Italy, and ſent ſome of his Souldiers daily to Rome to be preſent at the election of Magiſtrates, and many of thoſe that were in Office he wan with mony: amongſt whom was Paulus, one of the Conſuls, whom he drew to his ſide by giving him fifteen hundred Talents. The like he did to Curio, a Tribune of the People by paying his vaſt debts, and he gained thereby Mark Anthony, who was engaged for a great part of Curio's debt. A Captain alſo ſent from Cæſar, being at the Senate door, and underſtanding that they would not prolong Cæſars Government as he deſired, clapping his hand on his Sword, he ſaid, well! this ſhall give it him. Note. The miſeries of War.

Curio requeſted in the behalf of Cæſar, that they would either cauſe Pompey to disband his Army, or elſe licence Cæſar to have his Army as well as he. For (ſaid he) being private men they will either agree between themſelves, or both being of like ſtrength, neither will ſeek any alteration for fear of the other. But Marcellus the Conſul, oppoſed this hotly, calling Cæſar Thief, and ſaying that he would proclaim him an open Enemy to Rome if he did not diſperſe his Army. Yet Curio, Anthony, and Piſo procured that the Senate ſhould decide the matter, ſaying, All they that would have Cæſar disband his Army, and Pomey to keep his, let them go to the one ſide of the Houſe, and ſuch as would have them both to disband, let them ſtand on the other: by this means it was carried againſt Pompey. Curio much rejoyced at the Victory, and going into the Market place, he was there received by his faction with ſhouts of joy, and clapping of hands, and Noſegays of Flowers thrown upon him.

Pompey was not preſent to ſee the good will of the Senators to him: but Marcellus ſtood up and ſaid, that he would not ſtand trifling, and hearing Orations, when he knew that ten Legions were already paſſed over the Alps, intending to come in Arms againſt them, and that he would ſend a man that ſhould defend their Country well enough. And ſo going through the Market place unto Pompey, being followed by all the Senators, he ſaid openly: Pompey, I command thee to help thy Country with that Army thou haſt already, and alſo to leavy more to aid thee. Lentulus alſo uſed the ſame Speech to him, who was choſen for the year following. Pompey made General againſt Cæſar.

When Pompey went to leavy Souldiers in Rome, ſome would not obey him, and others went very unwillingly, the moſt part of them crying out Peace, Peace. Anthony alſo, againſt the Senators minds, read a Letter to the People ſent from Cæſar, vvherein he ſeemed to make reaſonable requeſts to draw the affections of the common People to him. For he moved that both Pompey and he ſhould reſign their Governments, and diſmiſs their Armies, referring themſelves wholly to the Judgments of the People, and to deliver up unto them an account of their doings. Cicero, vvho was lately returned from Cilicia, endeavoured to bring them to an agreement, propounding that Cæſar that ſhould leave the Goverment of Gaul, and his Army, reſerving only two Legions, and the Government of Illyria, attending his ſecond Conſulſhip. The fruits of diviſion.

Pompey liked not this motion, and ſo all treaty of Peace was cut off.

Wars between Pompey and Cæſar.

In the mean time news came to Rome that Cæſar had won Ariminum, a large and ſtrong City in Italy, and that he came directly to Rome with a great power: But the truth was he came but with three thouſand Horſe, and five thouſand Foot, and would not ſtay for the reſt of his Army that was not yet come over the Alps, but haſted rather to ſupriſe his Enemies on the ſudden, who were all in a hurly-burly, not expecting him ſo ſoon, than to ſtay till they were fully ready to fight with him. When he came to the River of Rubicon (which was the utmoſt bound of the Province which he had the charge of in Italy) he made an Alt, pondring with himſelf the great enterpriſe he took in hand: At laſt he cryed out to them that were by, Facta eſt alea, let the Die be caſt: Or let us put all to the hazard, and ſo paſſed on with his Army.

Cæſar paſſes Rubicon.

News hereof coming to Rome, never was there ſuch a conſternation and fear ſeen amongſt them. For all the Senate ran immediately to Pompey, together with all the reſt of the City Magiſtrates, and Tullus asked him, what power he had in readineſs to reſiſt Cæſar? He anſwered (but ſomething faulteringly) that he had his two Legions that came from Cæſar, and with thoſe that he had levied in haſt, he thought he ſhould make up thirty thouſand fighting men. Then Tullus cryed out, Ah! thou haſt mocked us Pompey; and thereupon ordered Ambaſſadours to be ſent to Cæſar. Phaonius alſo, a bold man, ſaid, Stamp now with thy Foot upon the Ground, Pompey, and make thoſe Armies come which thou haſt promiſed. Pompey patiently bore this mock. Then Cato thought good that they ſhould make Pompey Lieutenant General of Rome, with full and abſolute Power to command all, ſaying, They that knew how to do the greateſt miſchief, know beſt how to remedy the ſame. And ſo immediately he departed to his Government in Sicily. Alſo all the other Senators went to the Provinces whereunto they were appointed.

Pompey reproached.

Thus all Italy being in Arms, no man knew what was beſt to be done:

The confuſion in Italy.

For ſuch as were out of Rome came flying thither out of all parts, and ſuch as were in Rome, fled out as faſt, where all things were in diſorder. They which were willing to obey were very few, and they who by diſobedience did hurt, were too many, neither would they ſuffer Pompey to order things as he would, becauſe every one followed his own fancy, yea, in one day they were in divers minds. All this while Pompey could here no certainty of his Enemies, the reports being ſo various; and when he ſaw the tumult, and confuſion ſo great at Rome that there was no poſſibility of pacifying it, he commanded all the Senators to follow him, declaring all ſuch as ſtaid behind to be Cæſars Friends. The two Conſuls fled alſo without Sacrificing to the Gods, as their manner was when they went to make War: And Pompey in his greateſt danger and trouble had great cauſe to think himſelf happy, becauſe he had every mans good will.

Pompey leaves Rome.

Cæſar enters Rome.

Shortly after Pompey was gone out of the City, Cæſar came into it, who ſpake very friendly to all whom he found there, labouring to quiet their fears: Only he threatened Metellus, one of the Tribunes, becauſe he would not ſuffer him to take any of the Treaſure of the Commonwealth, ſaying, That it was not ſo hard a thing for him to kill him as to ſpeak it. Thus having put by Metellus, and taken what he pleaſed out of the Treaſury, he prepared to follow Pompey, intending to drive him out of Italy before his Army ſhould come to him, out of Spain.

Pompey at Brunduſium.

Pompey in the mean time took Brunduſium, and having gotten ſome Ships together, he cauſed the two Conſuls preſently to embark, with thirty Compays of Footmen, which he ſent before to Dyrrachium. He ſent alſo his Father in Law Scipio, and his Son Cneius Pompeyius into Syria to provide him Ships.

Ships. Then did he fortifie Brunduſium, and guarded the Walls with Souldiers, commanding the Citizens not to ſtir out of their Houſes. He caſt up Trenches alſo within the City at the end of all the ſtreets, ſaving thoſe two which led to the Haven, and filled thoſe Trenches with ſharp pointed ſtakes, and when at leaſure he had imbarked all the reſt of his Souldiers, he by a ſign, called off thoſe vvhich guarded the Walls, and having received them into his Ships, he hoiſted Sails and departed. He leaves Italy.

Cæſar finding the Walls of Brunduſium unguarded, preſently ſuſpected that Pompey was fled, and ruſhing into the City, he had certainly faln into the Pits, but that the Brunduſians gave him warning of them, whereupon he fetched a compaſs about to go to the Haven, and coming thither, he found all the Ships under ſail ſave two, vvherein were a few Souldiers. Some judged this departure of Pompeys the beſt Stratagem of War that ever he uſed: But Cæſar marvelled that being in ſo ſtrong a City, and expecting his Army out of Spain, and being Maſter of the Seas beſides, he vvould ſo eaſily forſake Italy. Thus Cæſar vvithin threeſcore days became Lord of all Italy vvithout bloodſhed. He was very deſirous ſpeedily to have followed Pompey, but having no Ships ready, he was forced to ſtay. Then did he haſten into Spain to joyn Pompey's Army with his own. Cæſar purſues him.

Pompey in the mean ſpace had gotten a marvellous great power together both by Sea, and Land. By Sea he had five hundred good Ships of War, beſides multitudes of Galliots, Foiſts, and Pinnaces. By Land he had all the flower of the Horſemen of Rome, and of all Italy to the number of ſeven thouſand Valiant men, and of great Houſes: But his Footmen were raw and untrained Souldiers, whom Pompey continually exerciſed at the City of Berœa, taking as much pains therein as if he had been in his youth. It was great encouragement to others to ſee Pompey, being fifty eight years old, fighting on foot compleatly Armed, and then ſpeedily to mount on Horſeback, and in his full Career to draw, and put up his Sword, to caſt his Dart, with as much agility and ſtrength, and point blank, that few young men could do the like. Pompey's Power by Sea. His induſtry and activity.

To Pompey there came divers Kings, Princes, and Lords of great Countries: and of Roman Captains, who had born Office, to the number of a vvhole Senate. Amongſt theſe, there came alſo Labienus, who formerly had been Cæſars great Friend, and an aſſiſtant to him in his Wars in Gaul. There came alſo to him Brutus, a very Valiant man, vvho had never before ſpoken unto Pompey, becauſe he thought him guilty of his Fathers Murther, but novv he vvillingly joyned with him as a defender of the Roman Liberties. Cicero himſelf alſo, vvho had Written, and given counſel for Peace, thought it a ſhame not to be amongſt the number of thoſe vvho would hazard their lives in the defence of their Country. There came alſo Didius Sextus, though he was an old man, and lame of one of his Legs, vvhom when Pompey ſavv coming (though others laughed him to ſcorn, yet) he roſe up and vvent to meet him, judging it a ſign of much love vvhen ſuch old men choſe rather to accompany him in danger, than to remain at home in ſafety. Many came to him.

The chief of Pompey's Army, ſitting in Counſel, decreed that no Citizen of Rome ſhould be put to death, but ſuch as fell in Battel: That no City ſubject to the Empire of Rome ſhould be ſackt, vvhich made Pompey's part liked the better: And moſt judged thoſe, Enemies both to the Gods, and Men, that did not vviſh him the Victory. Cæſar alſo ſhevved himſelf very courteous, and merciful; for having taken all Pompey's Army in Spain, he ſet all the Captains at liberty, and only reſerved the Souldiers to himſelf: Then coming over the Alps again, he paſſed through all Italy, and came to Brunduſium in the Winter time, and from thence, paſſing over the Sea he came to the Cæſars curteſie, and mildneſs.

the City of Oricum: and having Vibius, one of Pompey's familiar Friends with him, whom he had taken Priſoner, he ſent him to Pompey again to deſire that they might meet, and both of them disband their Armies within three days, and being reconciled, and having given their Faith each to other, to return into Italy like good Friends together. But Pompey durſt not truſt to theſe fair words, judging them but ſnares to entrap him. He therefore ſuddenly removed to the Sea coaſt, and took all the places of ſtrength neer to the Sea ſide, ſafely to lodg his Camp in, and all the Ports, Harbours, and Creeks, fit for Ships to lie in, ſo that whatſoever Wind blew, it ſerved his turn to bring him either men, victuals, or mony.

Cæſar wants Victuals.

Cæſar, on the other hand was ſo diſtreſſed both by Sea and Land, that he was driven to haſten to a Battel, and to aſſail Pompey even in his own ſtrength, to force him to fight with him, and for the moſt part he always had the better in moſt skirmiſhes, ſaving one, wherein he was in danger to have loſt all his Army. For Pompey had valiantly repulſed all his men, and made them flie, and had ſlain two thouſand of them in the Field, but he durſt not enter pell mell with them into their Camp when they fled: which made Cæſar ſay to his Friends, That his Enemy had won the Victory that day if he had known how to overcome. This Victory did ſo encourage Pompeys men, that they would needs hazard a Battel. But Pompey, though he wrote to many of his Friends and Confederates as if he had already beaten Cæſar, yet was he not willing to adventure all upon a Battel, thinking it better, by protracting time and cutting his Enemy ſhort of Victuals, to overcome him.

Cæſar beaten.

For this end Pompey perſwaded his men to be quiet, and not to ſtir: But when Cæſar, after this laſt bickering, being ſcanted of Victuals, raiſed his Camp, and departed to go into Theſſaly, through the Country of the Athamaneans, then he could no longer bridle their courage, who cryed out, Cæſar is fled, let us follow him: And others ſaid let us return home into Italy. And ſome ſent their Friends, and Servants to Rome to hire them Houſes near the Market place, intending at their return, to ſue for Offices. Some in a jollity would needs ſail to Leſbos, where Pompey had left his Wife Cornelia, to carry her the good news that the War was endeed.

Imprudence.

Pompey calling a Counſel, Affricanus thought it beſt to go into Italy, and to win that, as being the chiefeſt mark they ſhot at in this War: For whoſoever had that, was ſure of all Sicily, Sardinia, Corſica, Spain, and Gaul: He ſaid alſo, that it was a diſhonour to Pompey (who ſhould be very tender of his credit) to ſuffer their Country to be in ſuch bondage, and ſubjection to Slaves, and baſe flatterers of a Tyrant, when as it offered it ſelf as it were, into their hands. But Pompey thought it diſhonourable for him to flie from Cæſar, and to make him follow him, ſince he now had him in chaſe, nor lawful before the Gods now to forſake his Father in Law Scipio, and many others, who had been Conſuls, and who were diſperſed up and down Greece, and Theſſaly, who by this means would certainly fall into Cæſars hands, together with their Riches, and Armies. He ſaid alſo, that they had care enough for the City of Rome by drawing their Armies fartheſt from it, ſo as they remaing ſafe and quiet at home, not feeling the miſeries of War, might joyfully welcome him home that remained Conquerour.

With this determination he followed Cæſar, not intending to give him Battel, but to beſiege him and ſo to cut him ſhort of Victuals: But whilſt he purſued him fair and ſoftly, his men cryed out of him, that he intended not to War againſt Cæſar, but againſt his own Country, that he might ſtill keep the authority in his hand. Phaonius alſo mocked him, and went crying up and down, My Maſters, I give you notice that you are like to eat no Tuſculan eulan Figs this year. With theſe and many other ſuch lewd Speeches, they compelled Pompey to ſubmit to their raſh and giddy deſires, contrary to his more prudent purpoſe, and determination, which yet a General over ſo many Nations, and Armies, ſhould not have done. Theſe little conſidered that he with whom he was to fight, was Cæſar, who had taken a thouſand Towns, and Cities by aſſault, had ſubdued above three hundred ſeveral Nations, had won infinite Battels of the Germans and Gauls, and was never overcome: Had alſo taken a Million of men Priſoners, and had ſlain as many in divers Battels. Yet Pompeys men ſtill vexing him with their importunity, when they were come into the Fields of Pharſalia, cauſed him to call a Counſel. There Labienus the General of the Horſemen, ſwore before them all, that he would not return from the Battel till he had driven his Enemies out of the Field: and the like Oath did all the reſt of the Commanders take. Folly. Cæſars great Victories.

The Night before the fatal Battel there were heard ſudden and fearful Noiſes in Pompeys Camp, which awaked all the Souldiers. At the changing of the fourth Watch, there was ſeen a great light over Cæſars Camp, like unto a burning Torch which came and fell in Pompeys Camp. In the morning Cæſar intending to raiſe his Camp, and to remove to the City of Scotuſa, whilſt his Souldiers were buſy in ſending away their Bag, and Baggage, ſome brought Cæſar word that they ſaw much Armour, and many Weapons carryed too and fro in their Enemies Camp, and heard a great noiſe and buſtling, as of men that were preparing to fight. His Scouts alſo brought him word that Pompeys Van was already ſet in Battel array. Cæſar much rejoyced when he heard this, ſaying, Now the day is come that we ſhall no longer fight with hunger, and want, but with men, and thereupon gave order that they ſhould preſently put out the red coat of Arms upon his Tent, which was the ſign uſed amongſt the Romans when they were to fight. The Souldiers when they ſaw that, left their Tents, Carriages and all, and with great ſhouts of Joy, ran to arm themſelves, and ſo without noiſe or tumult they were by their Captains put into Battel array. Prodigies.

Pompey himſelf led the right Wing of his Battel againſt Anthony. The middle Battel he gave to Scipio his Father in Law which was right againſt Domitius Calvinus: His left Wing was led by Lucius Domitius Ænobarbus, which was guarded by the men at Arms; for all the Horſemen were placed there, to diſtreſs Cæſar if poſſibly they could, and to overthrow the tenth Legion, which contained the valianteſt Souldiers that Cæſar had; and amongſt whom himſelf always uſed to fight in Perſon. Cæſar ſeeing the left Wing of his Enemies ſo ſtrong with the guard of Horſemen, brought ſix Company's of Foot for a reſerve, and placed them behind the tenth Legion, commanding them to ſtand cloſe, that they might not be diſcovered by the Enemy: and commanded them when the Horſemen ſhould charge upon them, that they ſhould not throw their Darts ſtrait forward but upwards at their Faces: For (ſaid he) Theſe brave Fellows and fine Dancers, will not endure to have their Faces marred. The Battel of Pharſalia.

Pompey being on Horſe-back rode up and dovvn to obſerve hovv both Armies vvere marſhelled, and perceiving that his Enemies ſtood ſtill in their ranks, expecting the ſignal of Battel, and that his ovvn Battel vvaved up and dovvn diſorderly, as men unskilful in the Wars, he feared that they would flie before they were charged. Therefore he commanded his Van to ſtand ſteadily in their ranks, and to defend themſelves in a cloſe fight when the Enemy ſhould aſſault them. But Cæſar diſliked this deviſe: for thereby (ſaid he) the force of their blows was leſſened, and by with-holding them from giving the charge, that courage was taken away which the aſſailant carrieth with him when he comes on with fury, it made them alſo more fainthearted in receiving the Enemies charge. In Cæſars Army there were about about twenty two thouſand fighting men, and in Pompeys above twice ſo many.

When the ſignal of Battel was given on either ſide, and the Trumpets ſounded an Alarm, every man began to look to himſelf. But a few of the chiefeſt of the Romans, and ſome Grecians that were amongſt them, that yet were not entred into the Battel, perceiving the eminent danger, began to bethink themſelves to what a ſad paſs the ambition, and contention between theſe two great Perſons had brought the State of Rome unto, where were Kinſmen againſt Kinſmen, and Brethren againſt Brethren imbrewing their hands each in others blood. Whereas, if they could have been contented quietly to Govern what they had conquered, the Roman Empire was big enough for them both. Or if that could not have quenched their inſatiable deſires and thirſt after Glory, they had occaſion enough offered them againſt the Germans, and Parthians: Or elſe they might have proceeded to conquer Scythia, and India. For what Scythian Horſemen, or Parthian Arrows, or Indian Riches, could have withſtood the power of ſeventy thouſand Roman Souldiers, eſpecially being led by two ſuch Captains as were Pompey and Cæſar, whoſe Names were famous through the World.

Now when the Fields of Pharſalia, were covered over with Horſe and Men in Arms, after the Signal was given, the firſt man of Cæſars Army that advanced forward to give the charge, was Caius Craſſinius, a Captain of one hundred twenty and five men: and this he did to make good his promiſe to Cæſar, who having asked him that morning what he thought of the event of the Battel? he ſaid, Oh Cæſar! Thine is the Victory, and this day thou ſhalt commend me either alive or dead. Thereupon he brake out of his rank (many others alſo followed him) and ran into the midſt of his Enemies, making a great ſlaughter; but as he ſtill preſſed forward, one ran him through the neck and ſlew him.

Valour.

Pompey did not make his left Wing to advance over ſuddenly, but ſtaid to ſee what his Horſemen would do, who had already divided themſelves, intending to compaſs in Cæſar, and to force his Horſemen (who were fewer in number) to give back upon his ſquadron of Footmen, and thereby to diſorder them. But on the other ſide, Cæſars Horſemen gave back a little, and the ſix Companies of Footmen that he had placed ſecretly behind them (being three thouſand in number) ran ſuddenly to charge the Enemy in the Flank, and coming neer to Pompeys Horſemen, they threw their Darts (as Cæſar had appointed them) full in their Faces. The young Gentlemen, being raw Souldiers, and little expecting ſuch a manner of fight, had not the hearts to defend themſelves, nor could abide to be hurt in their Faces, but turning their Heads, and clapping their hands on their Faces, they fled ſhamefully. They being thus routed, Cæſars men made no account to follow them, but went preſently and charged his Infantry, and eſpecially where they had no guard of Horſemen, by which means they might be the eaſiler compaſſed about. Thus they being charged by theſe in the Flank and in the Van alſo by the tenth Legion, finding themſelves (contrary to their expectation) compaſſed about by their Enemies, whereas they thought to have environed them, they could no longer make reſiſtance, but were put to the rout alſo.

Pompey beaten.

When Pompey ſaw the duſt flying up in the air, and thereby conjectured the flight of his Horſemen, he was like a man amazed, and at his wits end, forgetting that he was Pompey the Great, and ſo retiring into his Camp, he ſat ſilent for a good while, till ſuch time as his Enemies entered pell mell into it, together with his men that fled: and then he ſaid no more, but, What! Into our Camp? And ſo riſing up, he put on a Gown fit for his ſad condition, and ſecretly ſtole out of the Camp: His other Legions alſo fled, and Cæſars men men made a huge ſlaughter of the Tent keepers, and of their Servants that guarded the Camp: there were ſlain about ſix thouſand. But at the taking of the Camp Cæſars Souldiers plainly ſaw the madneſs and folly of Pompeys men: For their Pavillions and Tents were full of Noſegays, and Garlands of Mirtle, and their Couches covered with Flowers, their Tables full of Bowls of Wine, as men prepared to ſacrifice for joy, rather than to arm themſelves to fight.

When Pompey was gone a little way from his Camp, he forſook his Horſe, having very few with him, and perceiving that none purſued him, he walked fair and ſoftly on Foot, having his head full of thoughts. For he, for thirty four years together uſed always to be Victorious, and therefore now it was ſtrange to him to flie: He now ſaw how in one hours ſpace, he had loſt all that Glory and Riches which he had purchaſed by ſo many great Victories. He, that not long before was followed and obeyed by ſo many thouſand men of War, by ſo many Nations, and Horſemen; by ſuch a great Fleet upon the Sea, was now faln into a low and poor eſtate, with ſo ſmall a train, that his very Enemies who ſought him, knew him not.

He flies.

Vanity of all earthly enjoyments.

When he had thus paſſed the City of Lariſſa, he came into the Valley of Tempe, where being a thirſt he fell down on his belly, and drank of the River, then riſing up, he went, and came to the Sea ſide, and lay all Night in a Fiſhers Cottage. The next Morning by break a day he went into a little Boat upon the River, having ſome Freemen with him, and as for his Slaves he diſmiſſed them, and bad them go boldly unto Cæſar, and not to be afraid. Thus rowing up and down the ſhore ſide in this little Boat, he eſpied a great Ship in the Sea lying at Anchor, which was ready to ſail away: The Maſter of the Ship was one Peticius, a Roman, who, though he was not acquainted with Pompey, yet he knew him well by ſight. Some of the Marriners told Peticius that they ſaw a little Boat coming towards them, wherein were ſome men that held up their hands, and made ſigns to them: Peticius looking, knew Pompey, and commanded his Marriners to let down the Boat, wherewith giving Pompey his hand, he received him into the Ship, and thoſe that were with him, and then hoiſed Sail. With Pompey their were both the Lentuli, and Faonius. Preſently after they eſpied King Dejotarus coming in a Boat towards them, and making ſigns to be taken in, which accordingly they did. At Supper time the Maſter made ready ſuch meat as he had aboard. And Faonius ſeeing Pompey for want of attendants, waſhing himſelf, he ran to him, and anointed him, and ever after waited upon him, doing ſuch Offices as Servants do to their Maſters, waſhing his Feet, and preparing his food for him.

Humility.

Pompey then paſſing by the City of Amphipolis, ſailed to the Iſle of Lesbos to fetch his Wife Cornelia, and his Son, who were at Mitilene, and having there caſt Anchor in the Rode, he ſent a Servant into the City to his Wife, whoſe Meſſage did not anſwer her expectation. For ſhe had ſtill been put in hope by Letters of her Husbands good ſucceſs, and that the War was well ended: The Meſſenger finding her thus confident, thought not fit to ſalute her, but rather by his Tears diſcovered the great misfortune of Pompey; and at laſt told her, that ſhe muſt diſpatch quickly if ſhe would ſee her Husband, with one Ship only, and that not his own, but borrowed: The young Lady hearing this, fell down in a ſwound before him, but after ſhe was come to her ſelf, remembring that it was now no time to weep and lament, ſhe went ſpeedily through the City to the Sea ſide. There Pompey meeting her, took her in his Arms and embraced her: But ſhe ſinking under him, fell down, and at laſt ſaid: Out alas? Wo worth my hard Fortune, not thine, good Husband, who now ſee thee with one poor Ship, who before thou marriedſt me the Unfortunate Cornelia, was wont to ſail in theſe Seas attended with five hundred.

Pompey goes to his Wife.

Their Speeches each to other.

Alas! Why art thou come to ſee me, and didſt not rather leave me to my accurſed deſtiny, ſeeing my ſelf am the cauſe of this thy evil? Alas! How happy had I been if I had died before I heard of the death of my firſt Husband Publius Craſſus, ſlain in the Parthian war? And how wiſe had I been if (according to my determination) I then had ſlain my ſelf, whereas I yet live to bring this misfortune upon Pompey the Great? To this Pompey anſwered: Peradventure (my Cornelia) thou haſt known a better fortune which hath alſo deceived thee, becauſe ſhe hath continued longer with me than her manner is. But ſince we are born men, we muſt patiently bear theſe troubles, and once more try what ſhe will do. For it is not impoſſible for us again to change this adverſity for proſperity, no more than it was to fall from our late proſperity into this Calamity.

When Cornelia heard him ſay ſo, ſhe ſent into the City for her houſhould ſtuff, and Family: The Metilenians alſo came to ſalute Pompey, praying him to come and refreſh himſelf in their City: But Pompey refuſed, and adviſed them to obey the Conquerour; for (ſaid he) Cæſar is of a juſt, and curteous Nature. Then Pompey turning to Cratippus the Philoſopher, who came amongſt the Citizens to viſit him, made his complaint to him, and reaſoned a little with him about Divine Providence. Then taking his Wife and Friends he hoiſed ſail and departed, ſtaying no where but to take in freſh proviſion and water.

He reaſons about Providence.

The firſt City that he touched at, was Atalia in the Country of Pamphilia. Thither came to him ſome Gallies out of Cilicia, and many of his Friends and Souldiers, inſomuch as he had now ſixty Senators in his Company. Then underſtanding that his Army by Sea was yet whole, and that Cato had gathered together a great number of his Souldiers after the overthrow, whom he had tranſported with him into Africk, he complained to his Friends for that they had compelled him to fight by Land, and not ſuffered him to make uſe of his Fleet, wherein he was the ſtronger, and that he kept not his Army neer to the Sea, that in caſe he miſcarried at Land, he might preſently have repaired to his Fleet at Sea, and thereby have reſiſted his Enemy.

Thus Pompey being driven to attempt ſomewhat according to his ſmall ability, to ſome Cities he ſent Ambaſſadours, to others he went himſelf to gather mony, wherewith he armed and manned ſome Ships. But fearing the ſudden approach of his Enemy, before he could be in readineſs to reſiſt him, he bethought himſelf to what place he might retire for his better ſafety, and reſolved that there was never a Province of the Romans that was able to ſecure him, and for other ſtrange Nations, he thought none ſafer for him to retire into than Parthia, which was able to aid and help him. Some adviſed him to go into Africk unto King Juba. But Theophanes the Lesbian ſaid, that it was great folly to decline Egypt that was but three days ſail from thence, and where Ptolomy was, who was lately come to mans eſtate, and was infinitely bound to Pompey for the late favours which he ſhewed to his Father, and not put himſelf into the hands of the Parthians, the moſt unfaithful Nation in the World. He thought it alſo an ill part for him to carry his young Wife of the Noble Family of Scipio, amongſt ſuch barbarous People, who care not how baſely they abuſe any ſtrangers. Ths Speech altered Pompeys mind, and made him reſolve to flie into Egypt: and ſo with his Wife Cornelia, he departed from Cyprus in a Galley of Seleucia. The reſt of his Train, imbarked alſo, ſome in Gallies, other in Merchant Ships, and ſo paſſed the Sea vvithout danger.

Pompey flies into Egypt.

When Pompey heard that King Ptolomy was in the City of Peluſium with his Army, vvarring againſt his Siſter, he ſteered that way, and ſent a Meſſenger before to the King, to certifie him of his arrival; and to entreat him to give him entertainment: King Ptolomy was at this time but a young man, and under him, the whole Realm was governed by one Photinus. He therefore aſſembled aſſembled a Councel of the chiefeſt, and wiſeſt of his Court, and when they were met, Photinus in the Kings name commanded every man to declare his Judgment about the reception of Pompey whether they ſhould intertain him or not; and truly it was a ſad thing that Photinus an Eunuch, and Theodotus of Chio, vvho was the Kings Schoolmaſter for Rhetorick, and Achillas an Egyptian, ſhould conſult amongſt themſelves what they ſhould do vvith Pompey the Great. A Councel about Pompey.

He ſends to King Ptolomy.

All this vvhile Pompey rode at Anchor near to the ſhore, expecting the reſolution of this Councel, amongſt vvhom their opinions vvere various, ſome were for, others againſt his reception; But Theodotus the Rhetorician, to ſhevv his eloquence, perſwaded them that neither the one, nor the other was to be done. For (ſaid he) if we receive him, we ſhall make Cæſar our Enemy, and Pompey our Lord: If we receive him not, Pompey will blame us, and Cæſar alſo for not keeping him. Our ſafeſt way therefore is to kill him: for thereby we ſhall win the good will of the one, and not fear the diſpleaſure of the other: Adding that Mortui non Mordent, A dead man bites not. This they all reſolved upon, and accordingly gave Achillas Commiſſion to do it. Baſe treachery and ingratitude.

This being concluded, Achillas took vvith him Septimius (vvho had ſometimes ſerved under Pompey) and Salvius a Centurion, and two or three other Souldiers, and ſo made towards Pompeys Galley, about vvhom there were at this time the chiefeſt of his Train to ſee vvhat vvould be the iſſue of this matter. But vvhen they ſavv vvhat intertainment he was like to have, and that they came not in that Princely manner, anſwerable to the hopes that Theophanes had put them in, ſeeing ſo few men coming tovvards him in a Fiſherboat, they began to miſtruſt the ſequel, and adviſed Pompey to turn back, and to launch again into the Sea, vvhilſt he was yet out of the reach of their Darts. In the mean time the Fiſherboat drevv near, and Septimius roſe up and ſaluted Pompey in the Roman Tongue by the name of Imperator, or Emperor. Achillas alſo ſpake to him in Greek, vviſhing him to come into his Boat, the ſhore being full of mud, and ſand banks, ſo that his Galley could not carry him to the ſhore.

At this time they ſaw afar off divers of the Kings Gallies which were arming vvith all ſpeed poſſible, and all the ſhore vvas full of Souldiers, ſo that though Pompey and his Friends vvould have altered their minds, yet they could not tell hovv to eſcape, and if they had diſcovered their miſtruſt of them, they had given the Murtherers a cloak for their cruelty. Pompey therefore taking his leave of his Wife Cornelia, vvho lamented his Death before his end, he commanded tvvo of his Centurions to go dovvn before him into the Boat, and took vvith him only Philip, one of his Slaves enfranchiſed, vvith another Slave called Scynes. When Achilles reaching out his hand to receive Pompey into his Boat, he turned him to his Wife, and Son, and repeated theſe Verſes of Sophocles: Pompey takes his leave of his Wife and Son.

The Man that into Court comes free,
Muſt there in ſtate of bondage be.

Theſe were the laſt Words which he ſpake to them. The Land being far off, when he ſaw never a man in the Boat ſpeak friendly to him, he ſaid unto Septimius, Methinks, my Friend, I ſhould know thee, for thou haſt ſerved under me heretofore: the other nodded with his head, but gave him no anſwer. Pompey obſerving theſe things, took a little Book into his hand, wherein he had written an Oration that he ment to make to King Ptolomy, and began to read it. As they approached to the ſhore, Cornelia, with her Friends about her, ſtood up in great fear, to ſee what would become of Pompey, and ſhe hoped well when ſhe ſaw many of the Kings People on the ſhore, coming towards Pompey, as it were to receive, and honour him at his landing. But even as Pompey took Philip by the hand to riſe more eaſily, Septimius came behind him, and thruſt him through with his Sword: Salvius, and Achillas alſo made at him with their Swords. Pompey did no more but took up his Gown, with which he covered his face, and took the wounds in a manly manner, only ſighing a little. Thus ended he is Life the very next day after his Birth, being fifty nine years old.

Pompey is ſlain.

They which rode at Anchor in their Ships, when they ſaw him thus Murthered, gave ſuch a fearful cry that it was heard to the ſhore: And weighing their Anchors with ſpeed, they hoiſed Sail and departed, having a luſty gale of Wind to help them. The Ægyptians had thought to purſue them, but when they ſaw they were paſt their reach, they let them go. Then ſtriking off Pompeys Head they threw his Body overboard, where it was a miſerable ſpectacle to all that deſired to behold it. Philip, his infranchiſed Bondman, ſtirred not from it till the Ægyptians had glutted themſelves with looking upon it. Then having vvaſhed it with Salt water, and wrapped it up in an old Shirt of his own, he ſought about the Sands, and at laſt found a piece of an old Fiſher-boat, ſcarce enough to burn all the Body: and as he was gathering the pieces of this Boat together, there came to him an old Roman, who in his Youth had ſerved under Pompey, ſaying, O Friend, what art thou that prepareſt the Funerals of Pompey the Great? Philip anſwered, that he was a Bondman of his infranchiſed. well (ſaid he) thou ſhalt not have all this honour alone, Pray thee let me accompany thee in this devout deed, that I may not altogether repent me that I have dwelt ſo long in a ſtrange Country, where I have endured much miſery; but to recompence me, let me have this good hap to touch Pompeys Body, and to help to bury this moſt famous Captain of the Romans.

The next day Lucius Lentulus, not knowing what had happened, coming out of Cyprus, ſailed by the ſhore ſide, and perceiving a Funeral fire, and Philip ſtanding by it, he asked him whoſe Funeral it was? But ſtraight fetching a great ſigh, alas (ſaid he) perhaps it is Pompeys the Great. Then he landed a little, and was preſently ſlain. This was the deplorable end of Pompey the Great.

Cæſar not long after came into Ægypt, where there were great Wars, at which time Pompeys Head was preſented to him, but he turned aſide and would not ſee it, abhorring him that brought it as a deteſtable Murtherer. Then looking on his Signet Ring whereon was engraven a Lion holding a Sword, he burſt out a weeeping. Achillas and Photinus he put to death. King Ptolomy being overthrown in Battel by the River Nilus, vaniſhed away and was never after heard of. Theodotus eſcaped Cæſars hands, and wondred up and down Ægypt in great miſery, diſpiſed of every man. And afterwards Marchus Brutus (who ſlew Cæſar) when he conquered Aſia, met with this Theodotus by chance, and putting him to all the torments he could poſſibly deviſe, he at laſt ſlew him. The Aſhes of Pompeys Body were afterwards brought to his Wife Cornelia, who buried them in a Town of hers near the City of Alba.

The Murtherers juſtly puniſhed.

His Burial.

THE

THE

LIFE and DEATH

OF

JULIUS CÆSAR

The First

FOUNDER

OF THE

ROMAN EMPIRE.

Julius Cæsar by the Fathers ſide was of a very Noble and ancient Family, and by the Mothers ſide he deſcended from the Kings of Rome, who were extracted from the Trojan Æneas. When he was a youg man, Sylla having gotten the Lordſhip of Rome, would have had him put away his Wife Cornelia, who was the Daughter of Cinna, the Dictator, but he could not prevail with him, either by promiſes or threats to do it, whereupon he took away her Joynter from him. Cæſars Parentage.

Sylla being very buſie in putting to Death many of his Enemies, yet paſſed by Cæſar whom he contemned for his youth. And Cæſar was not contented to retire in ſafety in thoſe ſtormy times, but came and made ſuit to the People for the Prieſthood which was then void, when he had ſcant any hair on his Face: but by Sylla's means he ſuffered a repulſe, who was ſo irritated hereby, that he determined to have killed him; and when ſome of Syllas Friends told him, that it was to no purpoſe to put ſo young a man to Death, he anſwered, That they did not conſider that there were many Marius's in that one Boy. His danger by Sylla.

Cæſar being informed of his danger, ſecretly fled from Rome, and hid him- His flight.

ſelf

ſelf a long time amongſt the Sabines, wandering from one place to another, yet at length he fell into the hands of a party of Syllas Souldiers who ſought for him, but he bribed their Captain with two Talents, and ſo eſcaped. Then went he unto the Sea ſide, and taking Ship, he paſſed into Bythinia unto King Nicomedes. And after a while, he took Sea again, and fell into the hands of ſome Pirates, who at that time kept all the Sea-coaſt, with a great Fleet. They asked him twenty Talents for his Ranſom, Cæſar laughed them to ſcorn, as not knowing what a man they had taken, and of himſelf promiſed them fifty Talents, and ſent ſome of his men to get him this mony, ſo that he was almoſt left alone amongſt theſe Thieves, which were the cruelleſt Butchers in the World, having only one of his Friends and two Slaves with him.

He is taken by Pirates.

Thus he continued thirty eight days amongſt them, not as a Priſoner, but rather waited upon as a Prince by them: For he boldly exerciſed himſelf amongſt them in their ſports: He would make Orations and call them together to hear them, and if they ſeemed not to underſtand or regard them, he would call them Blockheads and Beaſts, and laughing would threaten to hang them, and they took all in good part, thinking that it proceeded from his Boyiſh ſimplicity.

His boldneſs.

When his Ranſome was come, he paid it them and ſo was diſmiſſed; and preſently arming and manning ſome Ships out of the Haven of Miletum, he followed theſe Thieves, and finding them yet at Anchor, he took moſt of them, and got a great Booty, and carryed their Perſons to the City of Pergamus, and there impriſoned them, whilſt himſelf went to Junus, the Governour of Aſia, to whom the execution of theſe Pirats did belong. But he deſiring to get the mony, becauſe there was good ſtore of it, ſaid, that he would conſider of theſe Priſoners at better leaſure. Cæſar hereupon returned back to Pergamus, and there hung up all the Thieves openly upon the Croſs, as he often had threatened that he would do, when they thought that he was but in jeſt.

He is deliver-ed.

He crucifies the Pirates.

When Syllas power began to decay, Cæſars Friends wrote to him to return to Rome: But he firſt went to Rhodes to ſtudy there for a time, under the Tuition of Apollonius, an honeſt man and excellent Rhetorician, whoſe Schollar alſo Cicero had been. Cæſar had an excellent gift to ſpeak well naturally, which was much holpen by his Studies, ſo that he was very Eloquent, and might have been ſecond to none, but that he applied himſelf rather to follow the Wars, and to mannage great matters than to pleading of cauſes.

His ſtudies.

When he was returned again to Rome, he immediately wan the good will of the People by his Eloquence, and courteous ſpeaking to every man, being more ceremonious in his deportment than could be expected from one of his years. Beſides, he ever kept a good Table, and fared well, and was very liberal, which much encreaſed his eſtimation with the People. And his Enemies, preſuming that when he could not hold out that charge and expence, the favour of the People would quickly decay, they ſuffered him to go on, till by degree he was grown very great, and powerful. So that though ſome of them foreſaw that his power would at laſt turn to the deſtruction of the Commonwealth of Rome, yet now they knew not how to prevent it. Indeed Cicero was the firſt man, who miſtruſting his dealings, found out his ſubtilty and malice, which he cunningly cloaked under a ſhew of courteſie, and familiarity: Yet (ſaid he) when I conſider how finely he combeth his fair buſh of hair, and how ſmooth it lyeth, and that I ſee him ſcratch his Head with one finger, my mind gives me then, that ſuch a man ſhould not be ſo wicked as to deſign the ruin of the Commonwealth.

His return to Rome.

He grows popular.

And is feared.

The firſt time that he made proof of the good will of the People was, when he he ſtood in competition with Pompey to be choſen a Collonel of a thouſand Foot Souldiers, and carryed it againſt him; but a more manifeſt proof of it was at the Death of his Aunt Julia, the Wife of Marius the elder. For then he ſolemnly made an Oration in her commendations in the Market place, and at her Burial, did boldly ſhew forth the Images of Marius, which was the firſt time that they were ſeen after Syllas Victory over him, at which time Marius and all his partakers had been proclaimed Traytors and Enemies to the Commonwealth. And whereas ſome cryed out upon Cæſar for doing it, the People on the other ſide applauded and thanked him for it. And whereas there was an ancient cuſtom that the Romans uſed to make Funeral Orations in commendation of old Ladys, but not of young Women. Cæſar was the firſt that praiſed his own Wife in an Oration at her Funeral, which much engaged the People to him, ſeeing him of ſo kind, and loving a nature.

Shortly after he was made Treaſurer under Antiſtius Vetus, the Prætor, for which he ever after honoured him, ſo that when he himſelf came to be Prætor, he made his Son Treaſurer under him, and when he came out of that Office, he married his third Wife, whom was Pompeia and married his Daughter Cornelia which he had by his firſt Wife, to Pompey the Great. He further ingratiated himſelf with the People by diſburſing a great ſum of his own mony in mending the Appian way, vvhen he was made Overſeer thereof: as alſo for that, vvhen he was choſen an Ædile, he ſhewed the People the paſtime of three hundred and twenty couple of Sword Players, and exceeded all others in the ſumptuouſneſs of his Feaſts and ſports vvhich he made for the delight of the People, vvhich made them daily to give him new Offices by way of requital. His preferment.

Not long after the High Prieſt Metellus died, and Iſauricus and Catulus, two of the chiefeſt men, and of the greateſt authority in Rome, contended for the place: Cæſar alſo preſented himſelf to the People and ſued for it, and Catulus fearing the event, ſent a great ſum of money to Cæſar, to procure him to leave off his ſuit: Cæſar ſent him word, that he vvould diſburſe a greater ſum than that to maintain the ſuit againſt him: and vvhen the Day of Election came, his Mother bringing him to the Door, Cæſar vveeping kiſſed her, and ſaid, Mother, This day thou ſhalt ſee thy Son chief Biſhop of Rome, or baniſhed from Rome; and accordingly he carried it by the ſuffrages of the People, inſomuch as the Senate and Noble men vvere all affraid of him, judging that from henceforth he vvould make the People do vvhat he pleaſed. His ambition. He is made High Prieſt.

Afterwards Cæſar going into the Senate to cleer himſelf of ſome accuſations that vvere brought againſt him, the Senate keeping him ſomewhat longer than ordinary, the People come to the door and called for him, bidding them let him out. Whereupon Cato fearing an inſurrection of the poor and needy Perſons, who put all their hopes in Cæſar, moved, that a frank diſtribution of Corn for a month ſhould be made amongſt them, vvhich indeed put the Commonvvealth to the charge of fifty five hundred Myriads, but it quenched the preſent danger, and did haply ſcatter the beſt part of Cæſars ſtrength, and that at ſuch a time vvhen he was made Prætor, and had thereby opportunity of doing much miſchief. Yet all the the time of that Office, he never attempted to make alteration in the Commonvvealth. His Moderation.

About this time Clodius vvas ſuſpected of too much familiarity vvith Pompeia, vvherefore Cæſar put her avvay. The Government of Spain being faln unto Cæſar as he vvas Prætor, his Creditors came with great importunity calling for their debts: But he being unable to ſatisfie them, went to Craſſus, the richeſt man in Rome; who ſtood in need of Cæſars bloldneſs and courage to withſtand He puts away his Wife.

withſtand Pompeys greatneſs, who became his ſurety to his greadieſt Creditors, for eight hundred and Thirty Talents, whereupon he was ſuffered to depart to his Province.

As he paſſed over the Alps he came to a little poor Village, where his Friends that did accompany him, asked him merrily if there were any contending for Offices in that Town, and whether there were any ſtrife amongſt the Noble-men for honour? Cæſar anſwered, I cannot tell: but for my part, I had rather be the chiefeſt man here, than the ſecond perſon in Rome. Another time in Spain reading the Hiſtory of Alexander he was ſorrowful a good while after, and at laſt burſt out into weeping. His Friends marvelling at it, asked him what was the cauſe of his ſorrow? He anſwered, Do you not think that I have good cauſe to be ſorry, when Alexander (being no older than my ſelf) had conquered ſo many Nations and Countries, whereas hitherto I have done nothing worthy of my ſelf.

His ambition.

When he firſt came into Spain he followed his buſineſs cloſe, and in a ſhort time had joyned ten new Enſigns of Foot Souldiers, unto the other twenty which he had before. Then marching againſt the Gallicians, and Luſitanians, he conquered all before him as far as to the Atlantick Ocean, ſubduing thoſe People which before knew not the Romans for their Lords; and then did as wiſely take order for the eſtabliſhing of Peace. For he reconciled the Cities together, made them Friends: But eſpecially he pacified all ſuits of Law betwixt Debtors and Creditors which aroſe by uſury: Ordaining that the Creditors ſhould take yearly two parts of the revenew of their Debtors, till ſuch time as they had paid themſelves, and that the Debtors ſhould have the other third part to live upon. By this he won great eſtimation to himſelf, and returned from his Government very wealthy, his Souldiers alſo were full of rich ſpoils.

His Victories in Spain.

His Prudence.

The Romans had a cuſtom, that ſuch as deſired the honour of Triumph, ſhould ſtay without the City, whereas they that ſued for the Conſulſhip muſt of neceſſity be there in Perſon. Cæſar coming home juſt at that time when Conſuls were to be choſen, he ſent to requeſt the Senate that he might be permitted to ſue for the Conſulſhip by his Friends: Againſt this Cato at firſt did vehemently invey, alleadging that it was contrary to an expreſs Law. But when he perceived that many of the Senators (being Cæſars Friends) favoured his requeſt, he cunningly ſought all he could to prevent them: whereupon Cæſar reſolved rather to give over his ſuit, for the Triumph, than to loſe the Conſulſhip: So he came into the City, and outwitted all but Cato. His device was this. Pompey and Craſſus were the two greateſt Perſons in Rome, and at jar between themſelves: Cæſar affecting to make himſelf greater than either of them, ſought to make them Friends, and thereby to get the power of them both: For indeed, they both affected his Friendſhip, that by his help they might ſupplant one another. And in the end, by his endeavours, a peace was concluded betwixt them: yet being ſtill jealous one of another, and fearing to loſe Cæſar, they both ſought to gratifie him, and by this means he made himſelf equal to either of them: and that power which they two had formerly uſurped, was now divided between three, and in the end Cæſar hereby got the ſole command.

His Subtilty.

This League being made betwixt them, Cæſar demanded the Conſulſhip, being brought into the Aſſembly for the Election betwixt theſe two Noble Perſons and was there choſen Conſul, together with Calphurnius Bibulus, without the contradiction of any: And when he was entered into his Office, he began to put forth Laws meeter for a ſedicious Tribune than for a Conſul, becauſe by them he preferred the diviſion of Lands, and diſtributing Corn to every Citizen Gratis, and all to pleaſe the People: And when the Senators oppoſed it, he took the advantage, Proteſting

He is choſen Conſul.

that

that the Senate by their auſterity drave him againſt his will to cleave to the People, and thereupon he asked Craſſus and Pompey in the open Aſſembly, if they gave their conſents to his Laws? They anſwered, yea. Then he prayed them to ſtand by him againſt thoſe that threatned to oppoſe him with the Sword: Craſſus ſaid he would, and Pompey did the like, adding, that he would come with his Sword and Target both againſt ſuch; which gave great offence to the Senate, but the common People much rejoyced.

He Marries his Daughter to Pompey.

Cæſar to oblige Pompey more to him, gave him his Daughter Julia in Marriage, who was made ſure before to Servilius Cæpio, promiſing him in her ſtead Pompeys Daughter, who alſo was made ſure unto Fauſtus, the Son of Sylla. And ſhortly after Cæſar himſelf Married Calphurnia, the Daughter of Piſo, whom he cauſed to ſucceed him in the Conſulſhip. Cato then cryed out, and called the Gods to witneſs, that it was a ſhameful thing that they ſhould make ſuch havock in the Commonwealth by ſuch horribly Bawdy matches, hereby dividing amongſt themſelves the Government of Provinces, and great Armies. And Bibulus perceiving that he did but contend in vain, Cæſar being too potent for him, and that his Life was in danger for oppoſing theſe Laws, he kept his Houſe all the reſt of his Conſulſhip.

He is ſent into Gaul.

Pompey having married Julia, he filled the Market-place with Souldiers, and by open force authoriſed the Laws which Cæſar had made in favour of the People: He procured alſo that Cæſar had both the Gauls, and all Illyria, with four Legions, granted him for five years: and when Cato ſtood up to ſpeak againſt it, Cæſar bad his Officers to lay hold on him, and carry him to Priſon, thinking that he would have appealed to the Tribunes, but Cato ſaid no more, but went his way. And Cæſar ſeeing that not only the Nobility, but the Commons alſo were offended at it, out of reſpect to Cato's virtues, he ſecretly prayed one of the Tribunes that he would take Cato from his Officers, which was done accordingy. Many of the Senators refuſed to be preſent in the Senate under him, but left the City, becauſe they could not endure his doings; whereupon one Conſidius, an old man told him, that the Senators durſt not meet becauſe of his Souldiers. Why then (ſaid Cæſar) doſt not thou alſo keep home out of the ſame fear? Becauſe (ſaid he) My age takes away my fear from me, for having ſo ſhort a time to live, I care not to prolong it further.

He betrays Cicero.

Cæſar preferred Clodius, a baſe fellow, to be Tribune, who ſought the Office for no other end but to deſtroy Cicero, who had diſcovered his Villanies, and Cæſar would not go to his Province till he had ſet them two together by the ears, and driven Cicero out of Italy. Yet did he deſerve the name of as brave a General as any that went before him, if we conſider the hard Countries which he adjoyned to the Empire of Rome: The multitude and power of the Enemies whom he overcame: The rudeneſs and Valour of the men with whom he had to do, whoſe manners yet he mollified, and civilized: His courteſie, and clemency to thoſe whom he overcame: His great bounty and liberallity to thoſe that ſerved under him: As alſo if we conſider the number of Battels that he fought, and the multitude of Enemies that were ſlain by him. For in leſs then ten years, he took by aſſault above eight hundred Towns: He conquered three hundred Nations: and having at ſeveral times above thirty hundred thouſand Souldiers againſt him, he ſlew a Million of them, and took as many more Priſoners. He was ſo intirely loved of his Souldiers, that to do him ſervice, and to advance his honour, they were invincible: As appears by the example of Acilius, who in a Sea-fight before the City of Marſeiles, boarding one of the Enemies Ships, had his right hand cut off, and yet he ran upon his Enemies, thruſting them in their faces with his Target on his left hand, and ſo prevailed that he took their Ship.

His Valour and great ſucceſſes.

His Souldiers Valour.

One Caſſius Scæva alſo in a fight before the City of Dyrrhacium, having an eye put out with an Arrow, his ſhoulder ſtricken through with a Dart, and his thigh with another, having received thirty Arrows upon his Shield, called to his Enemies as if he would yield to them: but when two of them came running to him, he cut off one of their armes by the ſhoulder, and wounded the other in the face, and made them give back till he was fetched off by ſome of his fellows. In Brittain alſo when ſome of his Captains were driven into a bog full of mire and dirt, the Enemies fiercely aſſaulting them there, Cæſar viewing the Battel, he ſaw a private Souldier thruſt in amongſt the Captains, where he fought ſo valiantly that at length he forced the Barbarous People to fly, and thereby ſaved the Captains, who otherwiſe had periſhed there: And then this Souldier being the hindmoſt of all the Captains, marched through the bog, ſometimes ſwimming, and ſometimes on foot, till he gat to the farther ſide, only he loſt his Target. Cæſar wondring at his valour, ran and imbraced him: But the poor Souldier, hanging down his head, with tears in his eyes, fell at Cæſars feet, begging pardon for leaving his Target behind him. In Africk alſo, Scipio having taken one of Cæſars Ships, ſlew all that were in it, ſave Petronius, a Treaſurer, to whom he profered life: But Petronius anſwered him, that Cæſars Souldiers uſed to give others their lives, and not to have their lives given them, and thereupon ſlew himſelf with his own Sword.

Now Cæſar bred this courage in them by rewarding them bountifully, and honouring them. He alſo gave them a good example by adventuring himſelf upon manifeſt dangers, and putting his body to extream pains when there was occaſion, which filled them with admiration. As for his conſtitution he was lean, white, and ſoft skin'd, and often troubled with the Head-ach, and ſometimes with the falling ſickneſs, yet yielded he not to his ſickneſs, but rather took pains as a Medicine to cure it, travelling continually, living ſoberly, and commonly lying abroad in the Fields. Moſt nights he ſlept in his Coach, and in the days travelled up and down to ſee Cities, Caſtles, and ſtrong-holds. He had always a Secretary with him in his Coach, who writ as they went by the way, and a Souldier behind him that carryed his Sword. He made ſuch ſpeed when he had gotten his Office at Rome, that in eight days he came to the River of Rhone. He was an excellent Rider from his youth: for holding his hands behind him, he would run his Horſe upon the Spur.

His Temperance.

His activity.

In his Wars in Gaul, or France, he uſed to exerciſe himſelf in inditing Letters by the way, wherein he was ſo nimble that he imployed two Secretaries, or more at one time. He made very little account of his Diet, Supping one night in Millane with his Friend Valerius Leo, there was ſerved at Table ſome Sperage with ſome perfumed oyl inſtead of Sallet oyl, he eat it, and found no fault, blaming his Friends who were offended at the miſtake, ſaying, that if they liked it not they ſhould have let it alone, and that it was not good manners hereby to ſhame their Friend. At another time in his Journey he was forced by foul weather to ſhelter himſelf in a poor Cottage that had but one Cabbin, and that ſo narrow that one could ſcarce lye in it, whereupon he ſaid to his Friends, the greateſt rooms, are fitteſt for the greateſt men, and Beds for ſick perſons, and ſo cauſed Oppius that was ſick to lye there, and himſelf with the reſt of his Friends, lay without doors.

He overcomes the Swiſſers.

The firſt War that Cæſar made in Gaul, was againſt the Helvetians, or Swiſſers, and the Tigurines, who having ſet fire of their own Cities and Houſes, came to invade that part of Gaul which was ſubject to the Romans. Theſe were a very War-like and Valiant People, and in all they were three hundred thouſand ſouls, whereof there were one hundred and ninety thouſand fighting men: yet were they overthrown by Labienus, Cæſars Lieutenant at the River River Arax. And when the Helvetians afterwards came ſuddenly to ſet upon Cæſar, he made haſt to get into ſome place of ſtrength, and there ordered his Battel againſt them, and when one brought him his charging Horſe, he ſaid, when I have overcome mine enemies, then I will get upon him, to purſue them, and ſo marching againſt them on foot, he fiercely charged them: The Battel continued long before he could make them fly: yet had he more ado to take their Camp, and to break the ſtrength that they had made with their Carts. For not only thoſe that were fled into it, made head again, but their Wives and Children alſo fought ſtoutly for their lives, till they were all ſlain, and the Battel was ſcarce ended by midnight.

Preſently after, above one hundred thouſand of thoſe that had eſcaped from this Battel, were forced by Cæſar to return into their own Country again, and to the Towns which they had burnt; and this he did leſt the Germans ſhould come over the Rhine, and ſettle themſelves in that Country being void.

The next War that Cæſar made was in defence of the Gauls againſt the Germans, though himſelf had before admitted Arioviſtus their King to be received as a confederate of the Romans: Notwithſtanding which, they were grown very unquiet Neighbours, watching but an opportunity to poſſeſs themſelves of the reſt of Gaul. Cæſar perceiving that ſome of his Captains much feared them, eſpecially the young Gentlemen of Noble Families, who went along with him as to ſome Paſtimes, he commanded all that were afraid to return home, and not endanger themſelves againſt their wills. But for himſelf he ſaid, he would ſet upon thoſe Barbarous People, though he had left him but the tenth Legion only. Upon this the tenth Legion ſent their Officers to thank him for the good opinion he had of them: and all the other Legions blamed their Captains for their backwardneſs, and followed him cheerfully till they came within two hundred Furlongs of the Enemies Camp. And the Germans.

Arioviſtus his courage was well cooled when he ſaw Cæſar ſo near, whereas they thought that the Romans were afraid of them: His Army alſo was in a great amaze. But that which diſcouraged them moſt, was the Propheſies of ſome fooliſh women, who obſerving the terrible noiſe which the Water in the River made, adviſed the Germans by no means to fight, and they being poſſeſſed with a ſuperſtitious fear, ſought to avoid the fight: Yet Cæſar skirmiſhed with them every day and ſometime followed them to their Forts, and little Hills where they lay, whereby he ſo provoked them that at laſt they came down with great fury to fight. In this Battel he overcame them, and purſued them very eagerly, making a great ſlaughter of them even to the River of Rhine, filling all the Fields with dead Bodies, and ſpoiles. Arioviſtus himſelf flying ſpeedily got over the River, and eſcaped with ſome few of his men: At this Battel there were ſlain about eighty thouſand Germans. And the Gauls.

After this Battel Cæſar left his Army to winter amongſt the Sequanes, and himſelf thinking of the affairs of Rome, returned over the Alps to a place about the River Po: whilſt he lay there he laboured to make Friends at Rome: and when many came to viſit him there, he granted all their ſuits, and ſent them back, ſome with liberal rewards, and others with large promiſes, whereby he engaged them to him. His Policy.

During all the time of Cæſars great conqueſts in Gaul, Pompey did not conſider how Cæſar conquered the Gauls with the Roman weapons, and wan the Romans with the Riches of the Gauls. At this time Cæſar being informed that the Belgæ who were the moſt War-like Nation of all the Gauls, were all up in Arms and had raiſed a very great Power, he preſently made towards them with all poſſible ſpeed; and found them overrunning and plunder- He overcomes the Belgæ.

plundering the neighbour Countries and confederates of the Romans, wherefore he gave them Battel, and overthrew their chiefeſt Army, and ſlew ſo many of them that the Lakes and Rivers were died with their blood, and filled with their dead Bodies, that the Romans paſſed over on foot upon them: After this overthrow, ſuch of them as dwelt near the Sea yielded themſelves: and from thence he conducted his Army againſt the Nervians, the ſtouteſt Souldiers of all the Belgæ. Theſe dwelling in a Woody Country, had conveyed their Wives, Children and Goods into a very great Forreſt, remote from their Enemies, and being above eighty thouſand fighting men, they watching their opportunity, ſet upon Cæſar when his Army was out of order, and little expecting them. At the firſt charge they brake the Roman Horſemen, and encompaſſing the ſeventh and twelfth Legions, they ſlew all the Captains, and had not Cæſar himſelf with his Shield on his Arme, run amongſt them, making a lane as he went, and the tenth Legion, ſeeing him in that danger, followed him with all ſpeed, there had not a Roman eſcaped alive that day. But looking upon Cæſars Valour, his men fought deſperately, even beyond their abilities, and yet could they not make the Nervi fly, but they fought it out bravely till moſt of them were ſlain in the Field, five hundred only of them eſcaping. Yet was it a bloody Battel to the Romans, for that of four hundred Gentlemen, and Counſellers of Rome, there were but three ſaved.

A Battel.

The Senate of Rome made great ſigns of joy for theſe Victories, by ſacrificing to the Gods, Plays, &c. and as Cæſars fame was encreaſed hereby, ſo he wan upon the Peoples love: And always, when his affairs would permit, he uſed to Winter by the River Po, to give direction about his affairs at Rome. And truly not only ſuch as ſued for Offices at Rome, obtained them by Cæſars money, and therefore imployed all their power to promote his Intereſt, but the chiefeſt alſo of the Nobility, went to Luke unto him, inſomuch as at one time there have been ſeen before his Gates, one hundred and twenty Sergeants carrying Rods and Axes before the Magiſtrates that have waited upon him, and two hundred Senators beſides. Here they held a Councel, wherein it was agreed, that Pompey and Craſſus ſhould again be choſen Conſuls for the year following: and that Cæſar ſhould have more money delivered him to pay his Army, and that his Government ſhould be prorogued for five years longer.

His Policy.

Then Cæſar returning into Gaul to his Army, found there a great War begun: For two Potent Nations of the Germans, having paſſed over the River of Rhine to conquer new Lands, Cæſar fought with them, which himſelf thus diſcribeth: Theſe Barbarous People (ſaith he) after they had ſent Ambaſſadours to me to deſire peace, contrary to the Law of Armes, came and ſet upon me as I travelled by the way, inſomuch as eight hundred of their men overthrew five thouſand of my Horſe-men, who nothing at all expected their comming, and going on to deſcribe their farther proceedings, he ſaith, that they again ſent Ambaſſadours to him to mock him, whom he kept Priſoners, and then ſetting upon the Enemies, who were about four hundred thouſand Perſons, he ſlew moſt of them, ſaying a few that flying gat back over the River of Rhine and ſo eſcaped. Cæſar, taking this occaſion, and being ambitious to have the honour of being the firſt Roman that ever paſſed this River with an Army, he built a Bridg over it, though the River were very broad, and ran with a violent ſtream, and eſpecially there where he built the Bridg: and the Barbarians caſting great Trees into the River, they were carried down with ſuch violence that by their great blows they did ſore ſhake the Poſts of the Bridg, to prevent which, and to abate the fury of the ſtream, Cæſar cauſed a Pile to be made a good way above the Bridg, which was forcibly rammed into the bottom of the River, ſo that in ten days ſpace he

He overcomes the Germans.

he had finiſhed his Bridg of goodly Carpenters work: A very rare invention as could be poſſibly deviſed.

Then paſſing his Army over this Bridg, he found none that durſt fight with him: For the Suevians who were the moſt War-like People of the Germans, had retired themſelves and Goods into great Valleys, Bogs, Woods, and Forreſts. Cæſar therefore having burnt up the Enemies Country, and confirmed the League with the confederates of the Romans, he returned back into Gaul. About this time alſo he made a Journey into England, being the firſt that ſailed the Weſtern Ocean with an Army, and that paſſed through the Atlantick Sea to make War in this great and Famous Iſland, and was the firſt that enlarged the Roman Empire beyond the habitable Earth. For he twice paſſed the Seas out of France into England, where he fought many Battels with the Brittans, in which he did more hurt to the Enemies, than enrich his own men: therefore this War had not ſuch ſucceſs as he expected, which made him only to take pledges of the King and to impoſe a yearly Tribute upon him, and ſo returned back into Gaul.

He paſſes over the Rhine.

And went into England.

He was no ſooner landed there, but he met with Letters which advertiſed from Rome of the death of his Daughter, the Wife of Pompey, for which they both of them were very ſorrowful: and by this means the league betwixt Pompey and Cæſar was broken, to the great prejudice of the Commonwealth. Cæſars Army being very great, he ſent it into ſeveral Garriſons for their Winter Quarters, and returned into Italy, as he uſed to do. During which time all Gaul rebelled again, and had raiſed great Armies, who were led by one Ambiorix. Theſe did firſt ſet upon the Garriſons of Catta, and Titurius, whom they ſlew together with all their men. Then they went with ſixty thouſand men, and beſieged the Garriſon which Quintus Cicero had in charge, and had almoſt taken it by ſtorm, Ciceroes Souldiers being all wounded, yet they ſhewed ſuch valour that they did more than men in their own defence. This news comming to Cæſar, who was far off, he returned with all poſſible ſpeed, and levying ſeven thouſand Souldiers, he haſted to relieve Cicero that was in great diſtreſs. The Gauls that beſieged him, hearing of Cæſars comming, aroſe, and went to meet him, making little account of his ſmall number: Cæſar to entrap them, ſtill drew back, making as though he fled from them, but ſtill lodging in places of ſafety, and commanded his men that they ſhould not ſtir out to skirmiſh with them, but rather to raiſe the ramparts of his Camp, and to fortifie the Gates, as men affraid, that their Enemies might the leſs eſteem them: But at length, he took the opportunity when the Enemies came in a diſordered manner to aſſault his Camp, and then ſallying out, he routed, and ſlew a great number of them.

Julias death.

He beats the French.

This Act ſuppreſſed all the rebellions of the Gauls in thoſe parts: Himſelf alſo went in the midſt of Winter in thoſe places where they did Rebel: for now he had a new ſupply out of Italy of three whole Legions to fill up the rooms of thoſe that were ſlain, of which Pompey lent him two, and the other Legion was raiſed about the River Po. Shortly after there brake out the greateſt and moſt dangerous War that ever he had in Gaul, which had been long deſigned by the chiefeſt and moſt War-like People in all that Country, who had a very great Army, leavying multitudes of men, and much Treaſure to fortifie their ſtrong holds: The Country where they were was very hard to come into, eſpecially then in the Winter when the Rivers were high, and the Woods and Forreſts covered with Snow, the Meddows drowned with Floods, and the Snow ſo deep that no ways could be diſcerned, all which might have diſcouraged Cæſar from ſetting upon them; the rather, becauſe many Nations joyned in this conſpiracy, of whom the chief were the Vernians, and the Carnutes, who had choſed Vercingentorix for their Captain. He divided his Army into divers places, under divers Captains, and and drawn into his assistance all the Nations as far as to the Adriatick Sea: So that if he had tarried a little longer till Cæsar had been ingaged in his Wars with Pompey, he had put all Italy into great fear and danger.

The French rebel.

But Cæsar, who knew his advantages, and how to take the best opportunities, as soon as he heard of this Rebellion, he hasted towards them, intending to let them know, that they had to do with an Army that was invincible, and which they could not possibly withstand, seeing they had marched with such speed in so hard a Winter. This made them wonder when they saw him burning and destroying their Country, when they thought him far off. Such Towns and strong Forts as yielded to him, he received to mercy. But the Hedui, who used to be stiled the Brethren of the Romans, taking Arms against him, much discouraged his men: wherefore Cæsar went through the Country of the Lingones to enter into Burgundy, who were confederates with the Romans. Thither the Enemies followed him, endeavouring to compass him in on every side. Cæsar tarried their coming, and then fighting with them a long time, he at last overcame them. Of those which fled, most of them together with their King got into the City of Alexia, which Cæsar presently besieged, though it seemed inexpugnable, both in regard of the hight of the Walls, and the many hands to defend them. During this Siege Cæsar fell into a very great danger: For three hundred thousand of the best Souldiers amongst the Gauls came against him, besides those within the City, who were seventy thousand fighting men, so that finding himself to be shut in between two such mighty Armies, he was faign to fortifie himself with two Walls: One against those within Alexia, and the other against those without. And truly the Battel which he wan at this place, gat him more honour than any other that ever he fought before. For in this extream danger he shewed more Valour and Wisdom, and courage than in any other. And this was wonderful, that they within the City never heard of their Friends that came to assist them, till Cæsar had overcome them: Yea, Cæsars own men that guarded the Wall against the City, knew nothing of the Battel till they heard the cries and lamentations of those in the City, when they saw the Romans bring into their Camp such a number of Shields glistering with Gold and Silver, such store of bloody Corslets, and Armour, such a deal of Plate, and movables, and such a number of Tents, and Pavilions of the Gauls which the Romans had gotten of their spoils. Thus the greatest part of this huge Army were slain: and as for those within the City, when they had done and received much hurt, they at last yielded, and Vercingentorix, went out of the City richly Armed, and his Horse furnished with brave, and glittering Caparisons, and rode about Cæsar who sat in his Chair of State. Then allighting, he took off the Caparisons, and stript himself of his Armour, and prostrated himself on the Ground, and then went and sat down at Cæsars feet, speaking never a word. Cæsar after a while committed him to Prison to be led in his Triumph at Rome.

Cæsar overcomes them.

Non vult Cæsarve priorem, Pompeiusve parem.

Now Cæsar had long since projected the distruction of Pompey, as Pompey had done the like for him. Nothing kept Cæsar from being the Greatest Person but Pompey the Great, and nothing kept Pompey from being supream but Cæsar. Hitherto Pompey had set light by Cæsar, thinking that he could crush him when he pleased: But Cæsar went more cunningly to work: for to attain his end, he procured to be sent into Gaul, where he exercised and and hardened his Army, and by his valiant deeds purchased fame and honour: so that now he lacked nothing but an occasion to put his design in practice, which Pompey partly gave him, and the iniquity of the times much furthered it. For such as sued for honours and Offices, bought the voices of the People shamefully, who therefore came to the Market-place, not to give their voices, but with Bows, and Slings, and Swords: and the Assembly seldom brake up, but

but the Pulpit for Orations was beſprinkled with the blood of the ſlain, ſo that many Wiſe men believed, that there was no other cure of theſe evils but by putting the ſupream authority into one mans hand; and many wiſhed that Pompey were the man: But he ſeemed to decline it, though cunningly underhand he laboured to be choſen Dictator. Diſorders at Rome.

Cato ſmelling his drift, perſwaded the Senate rather to make him ſole Conſul, thereby to ſatisfy his ambition: This was done accordingly, and the time alſo for the Government of his Provinces was prorogued: they allowed him alſo a thouſand Talents yearly out of the publick Treaſury wherewith to pay his Souldiers. Hereupon Cæſar took occaſion to ſend his men to Rome, to ſue in his name for the Conſulſhip, and for the prolonging of his Government. This was too indiſcreetly oppoſed by Marcellus and Lentulus, and many things were ſpoken in his diſgrace. They took away alſo the freedom from the Collonies which Cæſar had granted them. And when Marcellus was Conſul, he cauſed one of thoſe Senators to be whipt, ſaying, that he gave him thoſe marks, that he might be known to be no Citizen of Rome; and bad him go and tell Cæſar of it. Pompey ſole Conſul.

Shortly after Cæſar opened his Treaſures which he had got in Gaul, and gave it freely among the Magiſtrates of Rome. He ſet Curio the Tribune, cleer out of debt: He gave to the Conſul Paul fifteen hundred Talents, wherewith he built a ſtately Theater. Pompey now beginning to fear, laboured to have a ſucceſſour ſent to Cæſar, and withal ſent for his two Legions, which Cæſar returned to him, bountifully rewarding every Souldier: and they which brought theſe Legions back, diſgraced Cæſar all they could, and told Pompey that if Cæſars Souldiers did but once ſee him, they would all forſake Cæſar and cleave to him. This made Pompey more ſecure, that neglected to prepare for War. One of Cæſars Captains coming to Rome, and moving the Senate to have his government prorogued, they delaying their anſwer, he laid his hand upon his Sword, and ſaid, Sith you will not grant it him, this ſhall give it him. Cæſar ſeeemed to be very reaſonable in what he requeſted, For he ſaid, that whilſt they required him to lay down Arms for fear of a Tyranny, and yet permitted Pompey to keep his, they went about to eſtabliſh a Tyranny. Pompey deluded.

Curio in the name of Cæſar moved before all the People, that both ſhould be commanded to lay down Arms, which motion was entertained with great joy and clapping of hands by the People, who threw Noſe-gays, and flowers upon him for it. Then Anthony one of the Tribunes, brought a Letter from Cæſar, and read it before the People in ſpite of the Conſuls, wherein he deſired that they would grant him Gaul on this ſide the Alps, and Illyria with two Legions only, and then he would deſire no more: But Scipio the Father in Law of Pompey, moved in the Senate, that if Cæſar did not diſmiſs his Army by a day appointed, that then he ſhould be proclaimed an Enemy to Rome, Marcellus alſo added, that they muſt uſe force of Arms and not Arguments againſt a Thief; whereupon the Senate roſe without determining any thing, and every one put on his mourning apparel as in the time of a common calamity. Cicero being newly come from his Government in Cilicia, took much pains to reconcile them together, and perſwaded Pompey all he could, who told him that he would yield to whatſoever he deſired, ſo he would let him alone with his Army: But Lentulus the Conſul ſhamefully drave Curio and Anthony out of the Senate, who were in ſuch danger that they were faign to flie out of Rome to Cæſar, diſguiſed in a Carriers coat. This gave Cæſar great advantage, and much incenſed his men, when they ſaw and heard how his Friends were abuſed. Factions in Rome.

Cæſar at this time had about him but five thouſand Foot, and three thousand Horse, having left the rest of his Army on the other side of the Alps, to be brought after him by his Lieutenants: Judging it better suddenly to steal upon them at Rome, then to assail them with his whole Army, which would require time, and give his Enemies opportunity to strengthen themselves against him. He therefore commanded his Captains to go before, and to take in the City of Ariminum (a great City on this side the Alps) with as little bloodshed as might be. Then committing the rest of those Souldiers which he had with him, to Hortensius, he spent a whole day in seeing the Sword Players exercise before him. At Night he went unto his lodging, where having bathed himself a little, he came into the Hall, and made merry with those whom he had bidden to Supper. Then rising from the Table, he prayed his Guests to be merry, and he would come again to them presently: howbeit he had secretly before directed his most trusty Friends to follow him: not all together, but some on way, and some another. Himself in the mean time took a Coach that he had hired, and pretending at first to go another way, he suddenly turned towards Ariminum.

ſand

Cæsar goes against Pompey.

But when he came to the River of Rubicorn, which divides the hither Gaul from Italy, he suddenly made a stop (for if he once passed that, there could be no hope of peace) considering with himself of what importance this passage was, and what miseries would ensue upon it. Some say that he spake thus to his Friends: Doubtless if I forbear to pass over this River, it will be the beginning of my ruin; if I pass it, the ruin will be general: Then turning towards the River. he said, It is yet in our power to turn back, but if we pass the River we must make our way with our weapons. Some say, that Cæsar standing thus doubtful, he was encouraged by the apparition of a man of very great stature, piping upon a Reed, whereupon many of the Souldiers and some Trumpeters went neer to hear him, and that he catching one of their Trumpets, leaped into the River, sounding to the Battel vvith a mighty blast, and so passed on to the farther side of the River: Whereupon Cæsar, with a furious resolution, cryed out, Let us go whether the Gods, and the injurious dealing of our Enemies do call us. The Dice are cast. I have set up my Rest, Come what will of it: After which he set spurs to his Horse, and passed the River his Army following him.

He passes Rubicon.

Cæsar having passed the River and drawn his Army together, he made an Oration to them, shedding some tears, and tearing his Garment down the Breast, laying before them the equity of his cause, and craving their assistance. To whom, having with a general applause and consent made answer; that they were ready to obey his will, he presently marched on and came the next day to Ariminum, upon which he seized. The like he did to all the Towns and Castles as he passed on, till he came to Corfinium which was held by Domitius, who in a factious tumult had been nominated for his successour in the Government of Gaul. This being taken, he pardoned the Souldiers, and Inhabitants, and used Domitius kindly, giving him leave to depart (who went straight to Pompey) by which clemency he purchased to himself much honour. These thirty Cohorts he kept with him.

Cæsars resolution being known at Rome, it troubled Pompey, amazed the Senate, and terrified the common People. Pompey now found himself deceived, who before could not believe that Cæsar would thrust himself into so great danger, or that he could be able to raise sufficient forces to resist him: but the success proved otherwise. For though Pompey had authority from the Consuls and Senate to leavy Souldiers, to call home his Legions, and to send Captains for the defence of those Cities in Italy by which Cæsar should pass, yet all this was not sufficient to resist his fury; and the power that he brought with him. The fame of Cæsars coming increasing daily, Pompey, with the whole Senate left Rome, going to Capua, and from thence to Brundusium, a Sea Town seated at the mouth of the Gulph of Venice, where he ordered the Consuls to pass to Dyrrhachium, (now Durazzo) a Sea Town of Macedonia, there to unite all their Forces, being out of hope to resist Cæsar in Italy, who had already taken Corfinium, where, having drawn Domitius's thirty Cohorts to serve him, he marched on, and hearing that Pompey and the Consuls were at Brundusium, he hasted towards them with his Legions with all possible speed. But Pompey, though he had fortified the Town sufficiently for his defence, yet when Cæsar began to invest the Town, he imbarked himself and his men in the night time, and so passed over to Dyrrachium, to the Consuls. Thus Cæsar injoyed Italy without opposition, yet was he doubtful what to resolve on: He would gladly have followed Pompey but wanted Shipping, and it being Winter, he knew that Ships could not be procured so soon as was requisite: and considering with all, that it was not safe to leave an Enemy behind him, which might cause an alteration in France, or Italy; he resolved first to go into Spain, which held for Pompey, and where he had his best Legions under the command of Petreius and Afranius, saying to his Friends, Let us go against an Army which wants a Captain, and afterwards we will go against a Captain that wants an Army. For Pompeys Souldiers in Spain were very valiant, and had been long exercised in Armes, but their Commanders were neither Politick, nor expert in War. But on the contrary, Pompey was a most Wise and Valiant Captain, but his Souldiers were newly levyed, and of small experience.

with

Pompey flies and the Senate.

Cæsar pursues him.

Cæsar returning from Brundusium, in sixty days space became Lord of all Italy, and when he came to Rome, the People were in great fear, remembring the miseries they had suffered under Sylla: But Cæsar using his accustomed clemency, hurt no man, high nor low: He called the Senators together which remained there, comforting them with mild and good words; and laying the whole fault upon Pompey, he sought to justifie his own cause, declaring how much he desired Peace, with all, requesting that Ambassadours might be sent to Pompey to procure the same: And causing himself present to be chosen Consul, he opened the Treasury, though Metellus, one of the Tribunes of the People, opposed him, and the Treasure which he took from thence, which was very great, he distributed amongst his Souldiers.

He is Lord of all Italy. And went to Rome,

Then was he desirous to go into Spain, first taking order for the civil Government: and making choice of the Legions which should go with him, he left the rest in Brundusium, and Otranto, and other strong places upon the Sea Coast, to keep Pompey from landing if he should attempt to return into Italy. He also made Hortensius, and Dolabella his Captains to provide Shipping to be brought into the Port of Brundusium, there to be in a readiness against his return from Spain: Quintus Valerius he sent with a Legion into Sardinia against Marcus Cotta which held the same for Pompey. To Sicily he sent Curius, and Marcus Cato, with direction that having taken the same, he should pass over into Africk. Lepidus he sent to Rome, as Prefect thereof, and Mark Anthony he made Governour of all Italy: And resolving to leave Lucinius Crassus in France, with his accustomed celerity he went on his Journey, finding no resistance, neither in Italy nor France, till he came to Marcelleis, which held for Pompey. This City he besieged, and to avoid loss of time, left Decius Brutus, and Caius Trebonius with sufficient Forces, who indured much in the siege: himself hasted into Spain, where, being expected, Afranius and Petreius attended him with four Roman Legions, and the aid of their Friends, between whom, and Cæsar the War continued for some while, chiefly about the City of Lerida.

He went into Spain.

At first Cæsar was in great danger and much distressed chiefly for want of Victuals, as alſo for that the Winter was come on, which troubled him with the ſwelling of Rivers, before and after which, there paſſed many great skirmiſhes between the two Armies. And Cæſar, watching his opportunities, at laſt brought his adverſaries to ſuch diſtreſs that they periſhed with hunger, and were forced to come to a compoſition, which was, that the Legions ſhould have liberty to go whither they pleaſed: and ſo part of them took pay of Cæſar, the reſt departed, and Petreius, and Afranius went to Pompey.

And conquered Pompeys men.

This War being ended, and the Spring come, Cæſar, that he might leave no Enemy behind him, marched into the Province of Betica (now Andaluzia) with part of his forces, commanding the reſt to march whither he had appointed, and there to ſtay for him, becauſe Marcus Varro held that Province for Pompey againſt Cæſar with one good Legion: But he, not daring to oppoſe Cæſar, delivered up the Legion to him, together with that Country, and all was pacified there. From thence Cæſar went to Cordova, where he called a Parliament of all the States of that Province, in which he highly commended them, and thoſe of Sivil for taking his part, and ſo marching forward, he came to the Iſle of Cadez, where having gotten Ships in readineſs, he left Quintus Caſſius with four Legions in that Province, and ſo embarking, he went to Taragona, commanding his Legions to march by Land thither, where having ſettled his affairs, he advanced with his Army towards Narbona, and from thence to Marcelleis, which now yielded to him, having endured many calamities during the Siege: Cæſar reſpecting the antiquity and fame of this City, would not deſtroy it, nor the Inhabitants, but leaving a ſtrong Garriſon in it, he ordered his Legions to march for Italy, and himſelf, with a ſufficient guard, and ſome of his Friends took paſſage by Sea to Rome.

And other places.

He takes Marcellis.

His Captains had ill ſucceſs.

Though all things ſucceeded thus well with Cæſar, yet ſome of his Captains had ill ſucceſs. For Caius Antonius, whom he left with Dolabella for to command his Navy, was overthrown and taken Priſoner in the Gulph of Venice by Octavius, Lieutenant to Pompey. In which overthrow this was very remarkable: Anthony was faign to put his men into long Boats for want of Ships, which were taken by a Strategem as in a toil, by the Pompeians, with Ropes under the Water. One of them which had in it a thouſand valiant young men, being thus enſnared, was aſſaulted by the Enemies whole Army, againſt which they defended themſelves bravely from morning till night, and in the end being oppreſſed with the multitude, by the perſwaſion of Valteius, their Collonel, they all ſlew one another, rather than they would fall into the Enemies hand. Dolabella was likewiſe overthrown near to the Iſland of Corcyra (now Corfu:) and Curius, who went with his two Legions into Africk, though at firſt he had good ſucceſs, yet afterwards he was overthrown, and moſt of his men ſlain by Juba, King of Mauritania, Pompeys Friend.

Cæſar being come to Rome and made Dictator, new Conſuls were choſen, whereof he being one, layed aſide his Dictatorſhip, and provided Prætors for the Provinces as himſelf pleaſed. He ſent Marcus Lepidus into Spain: Aulus Albinus into Sicily: Sextus Peduceius into Sardinia; and Decius Brutus into France; and taking ſuch further order as he thought good, he departed from Rome in December towards Brunduſium, whither he commanded all his Forces to march, there to take paſſage for Macedonia, where he knew that Pompey ſtaid with his Army: who all that whole year that Cæſar ſpent in his journey to Spain, buſied himſelf to provide a Navy wherein to return into Italy, and in gathering Treaſure, and levying Souldiers, having made an exceeding great proviſion of all things. For there came unto him, Ships, money, and men from ſundry Kingdoms and Provinces both of Aſia, and Greece: as from Pompey prepares for War.

Syria,

Syria, Pontus, Bithynia, Cilicia, Phœnicia, Cappadocia, Pomphilia, Armenia Minor, Ægypt, Greece, Theſſaly, Bœotia, Achaia, Epirus, Athens, Lacedemonia, the Iſles of Creet, and Rhodes, and from many other Countries. There came alſo to his aid King Deiotarus, and Aribarzanes, of all which together with thoſe which he brought with him from Italy, he compounded a very great Army by Land, and a very great Fleet of Ships and Gallies by Sea.

It being now the depth of Winter, Pompey preſuming it improbable, if not impoſſible for Cæſar to paſs the Seas to him; having alſo intelligence that Cæſar was in Rome, he diſpoſed of his Army to their Winter Quarters in Macedonia and Theſſaly; and himſelf retired farther from the Sea, commanding his Sea-Captains (of whom Marcus Bibulus was chief) to guard the Sea-coaſt. But Cæſar knowing that in the ſpeedy execution conſiſted his greateſt hopes of Victory, and that occaſion once loſt could hardly be recovered, he departed from Rome, and came to Brunduſium, though all his Legions were not as yet come to him. There he embarked ſeven of his beſt Legions in ſuch ſhips as were ready, ſending a Command to the reſt which were coming, to haſten to Brunduſium, whither he would ſend for them with all poſſible ſpeed. And ſo departing, he croſſed the Seas with a proſperous gale of Wind, and the third day after arrived upon the coaſt of Macedonia, before Pompey had any intelligence of his embarking. There he ſafely landing his men in diſpite of Pompeys Captains, and commanded his Ships and Gallies preſently to return to Brunduſium to fetch the reſt of his Army. Preſently after his firſt landing, he ſeized upon the Cities of Appallonia, and Erico, driving from thence Lucius Torquatus, and Lucius Straberius, who held them for Pompey.

Cæſar goes againſt him. Now Brindez.

Pompey hearing of Cæſars arrival, ſent for his Troops which were neereſt hand with all ſpeed poſſible, with whom he marched towards Dirrachium, where his Victuals, ammunition, and other proviſions for the War lay, leſt Cæſar ſhould go and ſurpriſe them, which indeed he attempted but in vain, the ſituation of the place making it inexpugnable.

Pompey being come, their Camps were lodged within a few furlongs each of other, where he paſſed many adventurous ſkirmiſhes, and alſo ſome Treaties of Peace, offered by Cæſar, but rejected by Pompey, ſo confident he was of his own power. In the interim Cæſar daily expected the coming of the other Legions, who ſtaying longer than he expected, he reſolved in Perſon, with three confident Servants, ſecretly to embark himſelf in a Brigandine, and to paſs that ſtreight of the Sea and to fetch them, hoping to perform the ſame without the knowledg of any. And accordingly, paſſing down the River to the Sea, he found it ſo troubleſome and tempeſtuous that the Maſter of his Brigandine (not knowing whom he carried) durſt not adventure forth, but would have returned. Then Cæſar diſcovering his face, ſaid, Perge avdactèr: Cæſarum enim fers, & fortunam Cæſaris: Bear up bravely, and boldly againſt the Winds and Waves: for thou carrieſt Cæſar, and all his Fortunes. The Maſter herewith encouraged, ſtrove all that poſſibly he could to proceed in his Voyage: but the force of the Tempeſt was ſo great, and the Wind ſo contrary, that do what poſſibly they could, they were driven back again.

Skirmiſhes betwixt them.

Cæſars raſhneſs.

When Cæſars Army heard of theſe paſſages, they much wondred, grieved and were troubled at it: Commending him more for his Valour, than for his Wiſdom: But within few days after M. Anthony arrived with four of thoſe Legions which were left behind in Italy, preſently returning the Ships back for the reſt. Anthony after ſome adventures, joyned with Cæſars Army near to Dirrachium where we lately left him. Frequent skirmiſhes ſtill continued between the two Armies, and many were ſlain on both ſides, and one day the skirmiſh was ſo hot, ſupplies being ſent from both ſides, that it almoſt came to a Cæſar is beaten. juſt Battel, wherein Cæſars men were ſo beaten, that they fled before the Enemies, and could not be made to ſtand by any intreaties, or menaces, till they were come into their Camp, which they had ſtrongly fortified: yet many durſt not truſt to that, but fled out of it: But Pompey either becauſe he imagined their flight to be faigned to draw him into an Ambuſh, or becauſe he thought there needed no more to be done, and that Cæſar could no more reſiſt him, he neglected to proſecute his Victory, cauſing a retreat to be ſounded without aſſaulting Cæſars Camp, which, probably, he might have taken, and made an end of the War that day. Whereupon Cæſar ſaid to his Friends: Truly this day had ended the War, if our Enemies had had a Captain that had known how to overcome.

At this time Cæſar loſt a great number of his men, amongſt whom were four hundred Roman Knights, ten Tribunes (or Collonels) and thirty two Centurions (or Captains) and his Enemies took from him thirty two Enſigns. Upon this Victory Pompey ſent news thereof to divers parts of the World, holding himſelf for an abſolute Conquerour. Cæſar much blamed ſome of his Captains and Enſign bearers for their cowardize, and his Army were ſo grieved and aſhamed, that they much importuned him to lead them forth again to Battel: But he thought it not fit ſo ſoon to lead them forth a-Cæſars policy. gainſt a Victorious Army. He therefore ſent his ſick and wounded men to the City of Apolonia, and departed by night with as great ſilence as could be from the place where he was, and marched towards Theſſaly, intending there to refreſh and encourage his Army, and to draw his Enemies farther from the Sea coaſt, where their chief ſtrength lay, and where their Camp was well fortified, and victualled, or at leaſt he intended to attempt the overthrow of Scipio, who (as he heard) was coming to joyn with Pompey.

Pompey finding Cæſar was departed, followed him for ſome few days; and Pompeys good reſolution. then taking Councel what to do, he reſolved to leave a ſufficient Navy to guard the Seas, and with the reſt to return into Italy, and to ſeize upon it, together with France and Spain, and afterwads to go againſt Cæſar: But the Roman Lords that were with him, and the importunity of his unskilful Captains and Souldiers, forced him to alter his determination, and preſently to purſue Cæſar, who made an Alt in the Fields of Pharſalia, which are in Theſſaly, making his retreat with ſo much prudence, and in ſo good order, that upon all occaſions that were offered he ever had the better; till at length ſeeing his men full of reſolution and courage, he reſolved no longer to defer the Fight. Concerning which Battel: the ordering, and event of Pompey beaten and ſlain. it: the flight of Pompey into Egypt, and how baſely, and barbarouſly he was murthered there, ſee it before in the Life of Pompey the Great.

Julius Cæſar having obtained this great and glorious Victory, uſed therein
Cæſars clemency. his accuſtomed Clemency, not ſuffering any Roman either to be ſlain or hurt after the Battel was ended, but pardoned all thoſe that were either taken in the Fight, or found in the Camp, amongſt whom was Marcus Tullius Cicero.
He purſues Pompey. After which, being informed which way Pompey was fled, he purſued him with the lighteſt, and ſwifteſt of his Army, and in the way ſubduing all the Cities, he at laſt came to the Sea ſide, where he gathered together all the Ships and Gallies that poſſibly he could, together with thoſe whom Caſſius had brought, he therein ſhipped as many of his men as they could contain, and paſſed into the leſſer Aſia, where, being advertiſed that Pompey had been in Cyprus, he preſumed that he was gone into Ægypt; wherefore he ſteered the ſame courſe, taking with him two Legions of old
He comes into Ægypt. Souldiers only. When he arrived at Alexandria, he underſtood that Pompey preſuming upon the many benefits, and good entertainment which

which the Father of this King Ptolomy had received in his Houſe, had ſent to this Ptolomy to harbour and aſſiſt him: which accordingly the King promiſed, and Pompey coming upon his ſafe conduct, in a ſmall Boat, was by the falſe Kings commandment baſely murthered, thinking thereby to win the favour of Cæſar. He underſtood likewiſe that Cornelia the Wife of Pompey, and his Son Sextus Pompeius were fled from thence in the ſame ſhip wherein they came.

Cæſar being landed, and received into the City, they brought him for a preſent the Head of the Great Pompey; but he turned away and would not ſee it, and when they brought him Pompeys Ring with his Seal of Arms, he wept, conſidering the end and ſucceſs of the great adventures and properties of Pompey, who with ſuch honour and fame had Triumphed three times, and been ſo many times Conſul in Rome: and had obtained ſo many Victories abroad. Vanity of vanities.

When Cæſar was landed in Ægypt, he found the Country imbroiled in Civil Wars: there being great diſcord between young King Ptolomy, and his Siſter Cleopatra, about the diviſion and Inheritance of that Kingdom, wherein Julius Cæſar (as being a Roman Conſul) took upon him to be an Arbitrator. For which cauſe, or becauſe their guilty conſciences accuſed them for the treacherous murther of Pompey, Fotinus the Eunuch, who had contrived the ſaid murther, and Achillas, who had been the actor of it, fearing that Cæſar inclined to favour Cleopatra, ſent for the Kings Army that lay near the City, conſiſting of twenty thouſand good Souldiers, purpoſing to do by Cæſar as they had done by Pompey, ſo that within a few days, there began between Cæſar and his ſmall Army, both in the City, and in the Harbour where the Ships and Gallies lay, the moſt cruel, and dangerous encounter that ever Cæſar met with: for he was often forced to fight in his own Perſon, both within the City (whereof the Enemies held the greater part) and alſo in the Harbour with his Ships, and was ſometimes in ſo great peril and danger, that he was forced to leap out of the Boat into the Water, and by ſwimming to get one of the Gallies; at which time he held his Commentaries in one hand above Water, and carry his Robe in his teeth, and to ſwim with the other hand. But when his other Forces were come to him from Aſia, and other parts, he at the end of nine months (for ſo long theſe Wars laſted) became Victorious, as in all other his enterpriſes he had been, and the young King Ptolomy was ſlain in fight. In this War Cæſar did ſuch exploits, and behaved himſelf ſo gallantly, that for the ſame only he well deſerved the fame and name of a brave Captain. His Wars in Ægypt. His danger. His Victory.

The Pride of the Ægyptians being thus tamed, Cæſar put to death the murtherers of Pompey, and eſtabliſhed the fair Cleopatra, the Queen and Governeſs of Ægypt, whom, during his ſtay there, he intertained for his Friend, and had a Son by her called Cæſarion. And when he had quitted and ſettled all things in Ægypt, he departed thence into Aſia, and travelled through Syria (now Soria) being informed, that during his troubles in Ægypt, King Pharnaces, the Son of that mighty King Methridates, thought it a fit time, whilſt the Romans were embroiled in Civil Wars, to recover what his Father had loſt: For which end having overthrown Domitius, whom Cæſar had ſent to govern thoſe parts, and having taken by force of Arms the Provinces of Bithynia, and Cappadocia, expelling thence King Ariobarzanes (a Friend and Subject of Rome) and beginning to do the like in Armenia the leſs, which King Deiotarus had ſubjected to the Romans: Cæſar (I ſay) being informed hereof, went with his Army ſooner than Pharnaces imagined, though he expected him, and had intelligence of his appproach; ſo that in few days they came to a Battel, in which the King He paſſes into Aſia.

Overcomes Pharnaces.

King was ſoon overthrown, and put to flight, with great ſlaughter of his People, yet himſelf eſcaped.

Cæſar was very joyful for this Victory, becauſe of his earneſt deſire to return to Rome; where he knew that many ſcandals were raiſed, and many inſolencies were committed for want of his preſence: He knew alſo that Pompeys eldeſt Son had ſeized upon a great part of Spain, and had raiſed great Forces of thoſe which Marcus Varro had left there, and of his Fathers Troops. He alſo underſtood, that in Africa many Principal Romans, who had eſcaped from the Battel of Pharſalia, were gathered together, whereof M. Cato (ſurnamed Uticenſis) was the chief, and Scipio, Pompeys Father in Law, and that theſe went thither with the greateſt part of the Ships and Galleys which belonged to Pompey, and with the greateſt power that they were able to leavy; and that joyning with Juba King of Mauritania, they had ſubdued all that Country, and had a great Army in a readineſs to oppoſe him, having choſen Scipio for their General, becauſe that Cato would not take that office upon him, and for that the Name of Scipio had been ſo fortunate in Africa.

Cæſar having intelligence of all theſe things, within the ſpace of a few days, with great celerity and diligence recovered all that Pharnaces had uſurped, and chaſing him out of Portus he regained all thoſe Countries: and ſo leaving Celius Minucius for General, with two Legions to guard that Province, pacifying the controverſies and contentions in the reſt, and rewarding the Kings, and Tetrarchs which continued firm in their Leagues and amity with the Romans, without any longer aboad, he departed out of Aſia, and in a

He comes to Rome.

ſhort ſpace arrived in Italy, and ſo paſſed to Rome, within little more than a year after he went thence, which was a very ſhort time for the performance of ſo great matters, and ſo long a Journey.

Preſently after his comming to Rome, he cauſed himſelf to be choſen Conſul the third time, and reforming (ſo much as the time and his leaſure would permit) all diſorders in Rome, being troubled and not able to endure that his Enemies ſhould poſſeſs Africk, with great expedition he prepared all things neceſſary, and from Rome took his way towards Africk, commanding his

He paſſes into Africk.

Army to follow him. Firſt he went into Italy, from whence taking Ship, he paſſed over into Africk, and though neither his Navy, nor his Army arrived with him, truſting to the valour of thoſe that he had with him, and his own good Fortune, he landed with ſmall Forces, near to the City of Adrumentum, and from thence marched to another City called Leptis, into which he was received, and after ſome conflicts that paſſed, his Legions being come to him, and certain other Troops of Horſe, and Companies of Foot, he began the War which continued four months. He firſt began with Petreius and Lubienus; and then with Scipio and King Juba, who brought to thoſe Wars eight thouſand men, the one half whereof were Horſe.

In this War were many encounters and Battels, in which Cæſar was in great danger: but at laſt (his good Fortune, ſtill attending him) he overcame them in a great Battel, wherein there were ſlain of the Enemies ten thouſand, and Cæſar remained Maſter of the Field, and in a ſhort time after, ſubjected all the Country to him. Scipio, and all the chief Captains, with him died ſundry deaths, and Juba eſcaping by flight from the Battel, finding no place of ſecurity, Afranius and he reſolved to dye fighting one againſt the other, in which combate, King Juba being the ſtronger man, ſlew Afranius, and then commanded one of his Slaves to kill him, and ſo he died deſperately.

He overcomes Scipio.

Cato kills himſelf.

Marcus Cato, who was in the City of Utica, hearing that Cæſar was marching thitherward, though he knew that he would not put him to death, but rather but rather had a deſire to pardon him and to do him honour; yet, reſolving neither to receive life nor honour from his Enemy, he ſlew himſelf: In whoſe death there paſſed many remarkable accidents recorded by Hiſtorians: Florus ſaith thus of it. Cato (ſaith he) hearing of the death of his Partners, he dallyed not at all, but joyfully haſtened his end: For after he had embraced his Son, and his Friends and bad them good night, and then reſted a while upon his bed, having firſt peruſed Plato's Book of the immortality of the Soul: then about the relieving of the firſt watch he got up, drew his Sword, and therewith thruſt himſelf through: after which the Phiſicians applied plaiſters to his wounds, which he indured whilſt they were in the room, but then he pulled them away, and the blood following abundantly, he left his dying hand even in the wound. Scipio, who had been General in this War, eſcaped alſo from the Battel by flight, entered into ſome Gallies, which being met with by Cæſars Navy, that he might not fall into his Enemies hand, after he had given himſelf ſome wounds, he threw himſelf into the Sea, and ſo vvas drowned.

Cæſar having obtained ſo great and abſolute a Victory, ſpent ſome few days in ſettling and ordering the Provinces of Africa, making the Kingdom of Juba a Province, and then marched to Utica, vvhere he imbarked June the third, and came to the Iſle of Sardinia, and after ſome ſhort ſtay there, he arrived at Rome the tvventy fifth day of July. At his comming thither there vvere granted unto him four Triumphs: Firſt for his conqueſts and Victories in France, in vvhich vvere carried the Portraictures of the Rivers of Rhodanus, and the Rhine vvrought in Gold. The ſecond Triumph vvas for the conqueſt of Ægypt, and of King Ptolomy, vvhere vvere ſet the River of Nilus, and the Pharus burning. The third vvas for the conqueſt of Pontus, and of King Pharnaces, vvherein, in regard of his ſpeedy Victory, vvas placed a vvriting vvith theſe vvords, Veni, Vidi, Vici: I came, I ſavv, I overcame. The fourth Triumph vvas for the Province of Africa, vvherein King Jubas Son vvas led Captive: and in this Triumph vvere given Jevvels, and Armes to Octavius, Cæſars Nephevv, vvho ſucceeded him in the Empire. As for the Battel vvherein he conquered Pompey, he vvould not Triumph, becauſe it vvas againſt a Citizen of Rome.

He returns to Rome.

His Triumphs.

Theſe Triumphs being ended, he gave great revvards to his Souldiers, and entertained the People vvith Feaſts, and bountiful gifts, and then cauſed himſelf to be choſen the fourth time, Conſul. And ſo, to the end that there ſhould be left no place wherein he would not be obeyed, he reſolved to go for Spain, hearing that Gneius Pompeius, the Son of Pompey, was retired with the reſt of the Army which had eſcaped out of Africk, to go to his Brother Sextus Pompeius, who was in poſſeſſion of a great part of Spain, as we heard before, together with the famous Cities of Sivil, and Cordova, and many others of thoſe parts: many Spaniards alſo comming to their aid.

Cæſar in this Journey carryed with him his moſt valiant, and moſt experienced Souldiers, and made ſo good ſpeed, that in few days ſpace he arrived in Spain, in which Journey his Nephew Octavius followed him. Entering into Spain he came to the Province of Betica (now Andaluzia) where were Sextus Pompeius, with his Brother Gneius, and ſuch Legions and Souldiers as they had gotten together; and there began betwixt Cæſar and them a moſt cruel and bloody War, the end whereof was, that neer to the City of Munda, Cæſar, and Gneius Pompeius (for Sextus was then at Cordova) joyned Battel, which was one of the moſt obſtinate, and moſt cruel fights that ever was in the World. For Cæſar being a moſt excellent Captain, and the Souldiers which he brought with him moſt brave and valiant men, and fleſhed with ſo many Victories, held it out with great reſolution; and on the other ſide, the bravery and courage of young Pompey and his men was ſuch, and they fought in ſuch manner,

He goes into Spain.

A cruel Battel.

as

as Cæsars Squadrons began to give ground, and were ready to forsake the Field, and at the very point to have been wholly overthrown: and the matter came to this issue, that Cæsar was about to have slain himself because he would not see himself overcome. Yet taking a Target from one of his Souldiers, he rushed into the midst of his Enemies, saying with a loud voice, If ye be not ashamed, leave me and deliver me into the hands of these Boyes; For this shall be the last day of my Life and of your Honour: with which words, and his example, his Souldiers took heart in such manner, that recovering the ground which they had lost, the Battel became equal, which lasted almost a whole day without any sign of Victory to either party, sometimes seeming to incline to the one, sometimes to the other side; until at the length Cæsar and his men did so great exploits, as that the evening being come, his Enemies began to faint, and fly, and the Victory was apparently Cæsars. There died of the Enemies above thirty thousand in this Battel, and Cæsar lost above a thousand men of account besides common Souldiers.

His Victory.

Cæsar esteemed so much of this Victory, and so gloried in the danger which he had escaped, that ever after he used to say, That in all other Battels he had fought for honour and Victory, and only that day he fought for his life. Young Pompey, after he had performed all the offices of a Prudent General and Valiant Souldier, was forced to fly, and wandering through many places, was at last taken and slain by some of Cæsars Friends, who carried his head to Cæsar. His other Brother Sextus Pompeius, fled from Cordova, and afterwards forsook Spain: Cæsar recovered Sivil, and Cordova, and all the rest of the Country; after which, ordering his affaires in Spain after his pleasure, he returned to Rome, and Triumphed for these Victories, which was his fifth and last Triumph.

He returns to Rome.

Cæsar now came to be the most mighty, the most redoubted, and the most highly esteemed man in the World, having conquered and subdued the greatest part thereof, in as little time, as it might seem that another man might be able to travel through those Countries by reasonable Journeys. He then made himself perpetual Dictator, and so without opposition, he finished the making of himself the Soveraign Lord, and Monarch of the Empire of Rome, within less than five years after he first attempted the same. And this was the Original and beginning of the Roman Emperours. For Julius Cæsar would not be called King (that Name being odious to the Romans above all things, ever since Kings were first driven from Rome) but contented himself to be called Perpetual Dictator, and Emperour, which Title was usually given to the Roman Generals upon their obtaining any signal Victory. But after Julius Cæsar, all his successors took that Title, glorying to be called Emperour, which hath ever since been held for the highest Title, and Dignity in the World.

His power.

Cæsar having now attained to that absolute power which he had so ambitiously sought after, he shewed in all his Deportment much clemency, and Magnanimity, honouring and rewarding his Friends, and easily forgiving, and very cheerfully pardoning all those that had been his Adversaries: Thus he pardoned Brutus, Cassius, Cicero, Marcellus, and many others: Yea, some of them he admitted to his company, and private familiarity, and to Offices and Dignities; and amongst the many virtues wherewith he was endued, his clemency and liberality were most glorious. But all this prevailed not with the Romans to quench their desires after the recovery of their lost liberty, neither to asswage the hatred and malice conceived against him by his adversaries, as afterwards appeared.

His clemency, and Magnanimity.

And notwithstanding many were discontented, yet some for love, others for fear, and out of dissimulation, both Senate and People, yea all in general gave him Names, preheminences and Titles of Honour, such as never had been Discontents arise.

been given to any other man before him, neither ought to have been accepted by him; and many were the more offended, because they knew that he affected and desired them. They gave him the name of Emperour, Father, Restorer, and Preserver of his Country. They made him perpetual Dictator, and Consul for ten years: and perpetual Censor of their manners. His Statue was erected and set up amongst the Kings of Rome: and a Chair, and Throne of Ivory was set up for him in the Temple, and in the Senate House, and an high Throne in the Theater, and in the place where the Senators did use to sit. His Pictures and Statues were set up in the Temples, and in all publick places. Some Titles they gave him, and he accepted of, which were peculiar to the Gods. The month formerly called Quintile, they called Julius after his name. They also built, and consecrated Temples to him, as they did to Jupiter and the other Gods, and gave him certain Honours which they held proper for their Gods, and did him many other honours exceeding all measure. Base flattery.

Julius Cæsar enjoying such honour and power, so that he had no equal, no second in the World with whom he might contend, it seemed that he would contend with himself, and attempt something wherein he might excel himself: For he was not contented with all the Victories which he had obtained, neither to have fought fifty several Battels, in all which he was Victorious, save in that one at Dyrrachium against Pompey: neither to have slain in the Wars and Battels which he fought a Million, ninety, and odd thousands of men, besides those that were slain in the civil Wars. But being of a most haughty mind, he sought to do greater matters, if greater could be. His great projects.

For first he resolved to pass into the East, there to conquer and subdue the fierce Nations of the Parthians, and to revenge the death of Marcus Crassus; and from thence to pass through Hyrcania, and other Countries till he should come to the Caspian Sea, and so through all the parts of Scithia, Asiatica; and passing the River Tanais, to return through Scithia into Europe, and in his retreat to come into Germany, and other Conntries bordering thereupon, conquering and subjecting all to the Roman Empire. For which end he presently caused to be levied in several places ten thousand Horsemen, and sixteen Legions of chosen Footmen, and appointing the time wherein he intended to begin his Journey, he commanded them to repair to their Rendevouz. He sought also not only to subdue all Nations, but to correct and reform even nature it self: For he purposed to have made an Island of Peloponnesus (now called Morea) by cutting the neck of land between the Egæan, and the Jonian Seas. He purposed also to have altered the courses of the River Tiber, and Anian, and to have made their new Channels, capable of bearing great Ships. He ordered the digging down and levelling many high Hills and Mountains, in Italy, and to dry up and drain great Lakes and Marishes therein. He corrected the computation of the year, reforming it according to the course of the Sun, and brought it into that order wherein it now is. He did the like about the course of the Moon, and her conjunctions and oppositions to the Sun: and this was attributed to him for Tyranny by those that hated him.

Many others things Cæsar did, which were very remarkable, in reforming the Laws, customs, and Offices. He re-edified the ruined City of Carthage, in Africk, and sent thither Colonies, and Roman Citizens to Inhabit it: the like he did by Corinth. But all these works with his high conceits and undertakings, were prevented, by his unexpected, and immature Death, which within a few Days after ensued. A few men, and those unarmed bereft him of his Life, whom no former forces could resist. For five months only he lived as Soveraign Lord in Peace; when those in whom he reposed greatest trust conspired his Death.

Some ſay that Cæſar was counſelled to have a Guard about him alwayes; to which he anſwered, that he would have none: for that he had rather die once, than live continually in fear. They which conſpired his death, were ſtirred up thereto, either out of hatred to his Perſon, or deſire of Liberty, accounting him for a Tyrant: or out of ſuſpition that he would have made himſelf a King, a thing in the higheſt degree hateful to the Romans: and laſtly, becauſe he began to contemn others: For he uſed to ſay, that the Commonwealth was but a Voice and Name without a Body, or Subſtance; and that Sylla was a Fool for reſigning his perpetual Dictatorſhip. All the whole Senate coming one Day to the Temple of Venus where he was, he ſat ſtill, and roſe not up as formerly he uſed to do. His Friends alſo and Favourites began to report, that in the Books of the Sybils (which in Rome were had in great Veneration) it was written, that the Parthians could never be overcome but by a man that ſhould have the Title of a King, and therefore he laboured that Cæſar ſhould take upon him that Title before his Parthian War; and though he ſeemed to be diſpleaſed at it, yet they ſuſpected the contrary; and their ſuſpition was encreaſed, for that, whereas the Tribunes of the People had cauſed a man to be impriſoned, who had ſet a Crown upon the Head of one of Cæſars Statues, he was ſo incenſed againſt the Tribunes that did it, that he depoſed them from their Office: And not long after, when Mark Anthony (who was his great favourite, and that year his fellow Conſul) being at ſome publick Games, came to Cæſar, and put a Crown upon his Head; though he threw it down, yet they all imagined, that Mark Anthony would not have preſumed to have done it without his good liking; and that he did it but to prove the People how they would like it; theſe, and ſuch like paſſages, gave them occaſion to deſire and deſign his Death.

His-Pride.

His diſſimulation.

They were alſo farther encouraged hereunto, for that in ſundry publick places, certain writings were ſet up, which did intice and animate them to conſpire againſt him: as upon the Statue of Brutus, who in ancient times did chaſe the Kings out of Rome, were written theſe words, Would to God thou wert now living, Brutus. And upon the Image of Marcus Brutus, who then was Prætor, and deſcended from the former Brutus, were theſe words: Thou ſleepeſt long, Brutus. Truly, thou art not Brutus. And again, Thou art dead, Brutus: Would to God thou wert living, Thou art unworthy of the ſucceſſion from the Brute. Surely thou art not deſcended from the good Brutus: and ſuch like other writings were ſet upon theſe Statues.

A Conſpiracy againſt him.

So as for theſe, and ſuch like reaſons, there were ſeventy of the moſt eminent men in Rome that conſpired to murther Cæſar: of which the principal were Decius, Marcus Brutus, Caius Caſſius, Gaius Caſca, Attilius Cimber, Servius Galba, Quintus Ligarius, Marcus Spurius, &c. who, after divers conſultations, concluded to kill him upon the Ides of March, which was the fifteenth day of that moneth, in the Temple where the Senators were to ſit that day: Yet Brutus was held to be Cæſars Son, and had received great honours, and many favours from him. This conſpiracy was kept ſo ſecret, notwithſtanding the great number of them, that there was not any one found that diſcovered the ſame. But there were ſo many ſignes and Prodigies, and to himſelf there happened ſo many fore-warnings, that (without knowing any cauſe) all men were of opinion that Cæſars Death was near at hand. Spurina alſo, who was his Southſayer, forewarned him, to look to himſelf till the Ides of March were paſt: for that his Life was in great danger. And Cæſars own Wife intreated him upon her knees, that he would not that day go to the Senate; For ſhe had dreamed that he lay dead in her lap. Theſe and ſuch like warnings prevailed ſo far with him, that he was about to ſend to Mark Anthony to make his excuſe,

His Death foretold.

and

and to put off the Senate to another day. But what God hath determined muſt come to paſs; and therefore Brutus being preſent, adviſed him by no means to diſcover any ſuch fear, and ſo he reſolved to go.

Cæſar made ſmall account of Death, and ſaid, That as for himſelf he had won power and fame, and glory enough, and that at no time he could die with greater honour. And ſome diſcourſing the night before he was ſlain, what Death was beſt, Even that (quoth he) which is ſudden, and leaſt prepenſed. The fifteenth of March being come, he went from his houſe in a Litter, towards the Senate; and as he paſſed along the ſtreet, there was a Petition delivered to him, wherein was ſet down in Writing all that was concluded in this conſpiracy; and he which gave it, prayed him to read it preſently, which he began to do: but there came ſo many to ſpeak to him, that he could make no farther progreſs, and this Paper was found in his hand when he was dead. As he paſſed on, he met with Spurina the Southſayer, and pleaſantly jeſting, he ſaid to him, Doſt thou not know Spurina, that the Ides of March are come? Yea (anſwered Spurina) and I know that they are not yet paſt.

When he came to the Temple where the Senators met, he alighted from his Litter and went in, and having firſt done Sacrifice (according to the cuſtome) which all that ſaw preſaged to be fatal and infortunate, He ſat him down in his Chair, and Brutus Albinus entertaining Mark Anthony at the door with diſcourſe, one of the Conſpirators, whoſe name was Celer, came to Cæſar, under a pretence to intreat him to releaſe a Brother of his from Baniſhment, and preſently all the reſt of the Conſpirators drew near to his Chair; which when Cæſar ſaw, thinking that they had all come for the ſame purpoſe, he ſaid unto them, What force is this? And at that inſtant one of them whoſe name was Caſca, beginning, they all drew their poyniards, and Swords which they had privately under their Gowns, and began to wound him. The firſt blow he received, Caſca gave him in the throat; at which Cæſar ſaid aloud, What doſt thou Traitor Caſca? and wreſting the Poyniard out of his hand, he aroſe and ſtabbed Caſca through the Arm, and being about to ſtrike him again, he was prevented by the many Wounds which the others gave him, whilſt with great force and courage he leaped from one ſide to the other to defend himſelf: But when he ſaw Marcus Brutus with his drawn Sword in his hand, wherewith he had already wounded him in the Thigh, he was much amazed, and ſaid in the Greek Tongue, Why how now Son Brutus? And thou alſo? And having ſo ſaid, ſeeing ſo many weapons bent againſt him, and that no body came to his reſcue, he remembred to keep the honour of his Perſon, with his right hand he covered his Head with part of his Robe, and with his left hand girt himſelf, and ſettled his clothes about him, and being ſo covered, he fell down to the ground, having received three and twenty Wounds; and it happened that his fall was at the foot of the ſeat on which Pompeys Statue ſtood. So in this manner died one of the moſt Mighty, Worthy, Valiant, Wiſe, and moſt ſucceſsful Princes and Captains that ever was in the World. For, his Excellencies, Abilities, Invincible Mind, Incomparable Courage, the Battels which he fought, and Victories which he obtained; the Provinces, Kings, and Nations which he ſubdued; His Counſels, Policies, and Stratagems, and bold attempts: His Magnanimity, Clemency, and Bounty, both to the Conquered and Conquerors; the great Deſigns which he propoſed to himſelf a little before he was ſlain, being all weighed and conſidered, it will plainly appear, that in none of thoſe things aforeſaid, nor in any other that may be ſaid of him, there hath been any Heathen King or Captain that ever excelled him. And ſetting apart his Ambition and deſire of Rule, he was onely noted, and blamed for being too much given to Women.

He is ſlain.

His Character.

Cæſar was thus ſlain in the fifty ſixth year of his Age, a little more than four years after the Death of Pompey, in the ſeven hundred and tenth year after the building of Rome, and about forty and two years before the Incarnation of our Bleſſed Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

Cæſar left behind him neither Son nor Daughter legitimate at that time of his Death: For though he had been four ſeveral times married, yet he had but one only Daughter, named Julia, that was married to Pompey, and died before him. Wherefore by his laſt Will, he adopted for his Son, and made his Heir in the Dodrant, that is, in nine parts of twelve of his goods, his Nephew Octavius Cæſar, afterwards called Octavianus Auguſtus, who was the Son of Acia, his Neece, and of Octavius Prætor of Macedonia, which Octavius at this time, was, by the commandment of his Uncle, in the City of Apollonia, in the Province of Epirus, where he applied himſelf to his ſtudies, ſtaying for him there, thence to go with him to the Parthian War, being now about ſeventeen years of age.

His Will.

Cæſar being thus ſlain, the news of it ran preſently all over the City, and the tumult therein was ſo great, that no man knew what to do or ſay. All Offices ceaſed, the Temples were all ſhut up, and every man was amazed. Cæſars Friends were afraid of thoſe that ſlew him, and they as much feared his Friends, Brutus, Caſſius, and the other Conſpirators, and others that joyned with them, ſeeing the great tumult, durſt not go to their Houſes, nor proſecute their other deſigns, for fear of Mark Anthony and Lepidus, whereof the one was Conſul, and the other General of the Horſemen, but preſently from thence they went to ſeize upon the Capitol, crying by the way as they went, Liberty, Liberty, and imploring the favour, and aſſiſtance of the People. The reſt of that day, and all next night, Mark Anthony, and Lepidus (who took Cæſars part) were in Arms, and there paſſed ſundry meſſages, and treaties between them and the Conſpirators: At laſt it was agreed that the Senate ſhould ſit, whither Brutus, and Caſſius came, M. Anthonies Sons (by the perſwaſion of Cicero, a great lover of Liberty) remaining as Hoſtages for them.

Peace concluded.

In the Senate they Treated of Peace and concord, and that all that was paſt ſhould be buried in perpetual oblivion; whereunto, Anthony who was Conſul, and the whole Senate agreed: and the Provinces being divided, there was a great likelihood of Peace. For the Senate approved, and commended the murther, and the People diſſembled their thoughts: For on the one ſide the authority of Brutus and Caſſius, and the name of Liberty, ſeemed to give them ſome content: and on the other ſide, the hainouſneſs of the fact, and the love they bare to Cæſar, did move, and excite them to hate the murtherers, and ſo all was quiet for the preſent. But Mark Anthony (who affected the Tyranny) took every opportunity to incenſe the People againſt them: and Cæſars Teſtament being opened, wherein (beſides the adopting of his Nephew Octavius, and making him his Heir) beſides other bequeſts, he bequeathed to the People of Rome, certain Gardens, and Lands near to the River of Tiber, and to every Citizen of Rome, certain Gardens, and Lands neer to the ſum of mony to be divided amongſt them, which being known, much encreaſed their love to Cæſar, and made his death more grievous to them.

Cæſars Funeral being agreed upon, his Body was burnt with great ſolemnity in the Field of Mars, and Mark Anthony made the Funeral Oration in his Praiſe, and took the Robe wherein Cæſar was ſlain, being all bloody, and ſhewed it to the People, uſing ſuch Speeches as provoked them both to wrath, and commiſeration, ſo as before the Funeral ſolemnity was fully finiſhed, they all depart in great fury, taking Brands in their hands from the fire wherein Cæſar was burned, and went to burn the Houſes of Brutus, and Caſſius, and if they could have found them, and the reſt of the Conſpirators, they would certainly certainly have ſlain them; and in their fury they unadviſedly ſlew Elius Cinna, by miſtaking him for Cornelius Cinna, who was one of the Conſpirators.

A tumult.

This tumult put Brutus, and Caſſius, and their confederates, into ſuch fear, that they all fled from Rome into ſeveral parts: and though the Senate (having appeaſed the tumult) inflicted puniſhment upon ſome of the ſeditious, and had already committed ſome of them to Priſon, yet Brutus, and Caſſius durſt not return to Rome, but after a while went into Greece, to Govern thoſe Provinces which Cæſar in his Life time had allotted unto them, which were, Macedonia to Brutus, and Syria to Caſſius. And truly this was very remarkable, that within the ſpace of three years all the Conſpirators died, and not one of them a natural death.

Cæſar in his fifth and laſt Conſulſhip made an Edict, that thanks ſhould be returned to Hyrcanus, the High-Prieſt and Prince of the Jews, and to the Nation of the Jews, for their affection to himſelf and the People of Rome. And decreed alſo, that the ſaid Hyrcanus, ſhould have the City of Jeruſalem, and repair the Walls of it which Pompey had beaten down, and ſhould Govern it as he pleaſed himſelf. He alſo granted to the Jews, that every ſecond year there ſhould an abatement be made out of their rents, and that they ſhould be free from Impoſitions, and Tributes. He favoured the Jews.

His Name of Cæſar was ſo honourable, that all his ſucceſſors to this preſent day, have aſſumed it into their Title, and eſteemed it an honour to be called Cæſars.

THE

THE

LIFE and DEATH

OF

OCTAVIANUS AUGUSTUS

In whose Raign our

LORD CHRIST

WAS BORN.

His Parentage.

Octavius Cæsar, who was afterwards called Octavianus Augustus, was by the Fathers side descended of the Antient Family of the Octavij, which was of great account in Rome even from the time of Tarquin their King: By the Mothers side he was descended from the Regal Line: His Mother was Accia the Daughter of Accius Balbus, and Julia, the Sister of Julius Cæsar, which Accia was married to the Father of Octavius. He was born in the year of the Consulship of Cicero, and Caius Antonius. He was but four years old when his Father dyed: and at twelve years old he made an Oration at the Funeral of his Grand-mother Julia.

His first imployment.

When his Uncle Julius Cæsar, was Warring in Spain against the Sons of Pompey, Octavius (though he was but young) followed him thither through many and great dangers: and when that War was ended, Julius Cæsar intending to take him with him to the Parthian War, sent him before to the City of Apollonia, where he plyed his Book very diligently; and on a time having a mind to see Theogenes, a learned Astronomer, he calculated his Nativity, and promised him great matters, which made Octavius conceive great hopes hopes of himself, and in memory thereof he caused certain Medals to be coined, and would often boast of what Theogenes had told him.

Octavius in the sixth month after he went to Apollonia, having intelligence from his Mother of the Death of his Uncle Julius Cæsar, he hasted out of Epirus to Brundusium, where he was received by the Army that went to meet him as the adopted Son of Cæsar, and without any further delay he assumed the name of Cæsar, and took upon him to be his Heir, and that so much the rather, because he had brought with him good store of mony, and great forces that were sent him by his Uncle: and so at Brundusium, adopting himself into the Julian Family, he called himself Caius Julius Cæsar Octavius. He comes into Italy.

To this very Name, as though he had been his true Son, there came great store of, partly of his Friends, partly of freed-men, slaves, and Souldiers, by whom being more strengthened and imboldned by the multitude of them that flocked to him, and by the authority of the Cæsarian name, which with the common People was in great reputation, he took his journey towards Rome with a great train, which daily increased like a Floud. Many resort to him.

On the fourteenth Kalends of May he entered into Naples, where he gave Cicero a visit. From thence as he was going to Rome there met him a vast company of his Friends, and as he entered the City, the Globe of the Sun seemed to compass his Head round like unto a Bow, as it were, putting a Crown upon his Head, who afterward was to be so great a man: and at night, calling together his Friends, he commanded them to be ready the next morning, with good store of followers, to meet him in the Market-place, which was done accordingly; and he going to Caius, the City Prætor, and Brother to Anthony, he told him that he did accept of the Adoption. For it was the Roman custom in Adoptions to interpose the authority of the Prætor: which acceptance being Registred by the Scribes, from thence he presently went to Mark Anthony the Consul, who behaved himself proudly towards him, and scarcely admitting him into Pompeys Gardens, gave him time to speak with him. He comes to Rome. M. Anthony's Pride.

Octavianus had a great mind to revenge the Death of Julius Cæsar; but by his Mother, and Philip his Father in Law he was advised to conceal his purpose for a time, both because the Senate had approved his Death, and because Mark Anthony, who was principally to assist him therein, did not shew himself very friendly to him. Octavianus understanding that Mark Anthony had in his custody all the Treasure that was left by Julius Cæsar, he desired him to command it to be delivered to him, therewith to pay his debts, and to distribute it as Cæsar had appointed in his Will: But Anthony with greater Pride than Octavianus could well bear, not only refused what he demanded, but reproved him for desiring it; whereupon discords presently arose betwixt them: and Octavianus strengthened himself with the Counsel of Cicero, a great Enemy to Anthony, and one whose authority at that time, by reason of his Wisdom and Eloquence, was very great.

Anthony being Overseer of those things which Cæsar had commanded to be done, what by corrupting the Notes, and changing them at his pleasure, did what himself listed, as if it had been the appointment of Cæsar; by this means, gratifying Cities and Governours, and heaping vast sums of money to himself, selling not only Fields and Tributes, but freedoms and immunities even of the City of Rome, and that not only to particular Persons, but to whole Provinces, and of these things there were Tables hung up all over the Capitol. And falshood.

Octavianus

Cæsar raises an Army.

Octavianus being nineteen years old, at his own charges gathered an Army, and sought the favour of the People, and prepared Forces against Anthony for his own and the Commonwealths safety. He also stirred up the old Souldiers, who by Julius Cæsar had been planted in Colonies: so that Anthony being afraid of him, by the mediation of Friends, had a conference with him in the Capitol, and they were for the present reconciled, but within a few days, through the whisperings of some, their enmity brake out again, and Anthony, not thinking himself strong enough, and knowing that the Legions of Macedonia were the best Souldiers, and six in number, with whom also were many Archers, light harnessed men, and Horsemen, these he sought to draw to himself, who, because of their neerness, might presently be brought into Italy: and thereupon he caused a rumour to be spread, that the Getæ wasted Macedonia by their inrodes; and upon that occasion he demanded an Army of the Senate, saying, that the Macedonian Army was raised by Cæsar against the Getæ, before he intended the Parthian War, whereupon he was chosen General of those Forces, and he obtained a Law for the change of Provinces, whereby his Brother Caius Anthony challenged Macedonia, which before by lot fell to Marcus Brutus.

Anthony leaves Rome.

On the seventh of the Ides of October Anthony went to Brundusium, there to meet four of the Macedonian Legions, whom he thought to draw to himself by money. Thither also Octavianus sent his Friends with money to hire these Souldiers for himself, and himself posted into Campania, to engage those Souldiers which were in Colonies to take his part; and first he drew to him the old Souldiers of Galatia, then those of Casilinum on both sides of Capua, giving to each man five hundred pence, by which means he gat together about ten thousand men, who marched with him under one Ensign as a guard.

In the mean while the four Legions of Macedonia, accusing Anthony for his delays in revenging Cæsars Death, without any acclamations conducted him to the Tribunal, as it were, to hear an account of this matter, and there continued silent. Anthony taking this ill, upbraded them with their Ingratitude, and complained that they had not brought to him some disturbers of the Peace, who were sent from that malapert young man (for so he called Octavian) and to ingratiate himself with them, he promised an hundred pence to each of them, which niggardly promise was intertained with laughter, which he took so ill, that being returned to his Quarters, in the presence of his most covetous, and most cruel Wife Fulvia, he put to death some Centurions out of the Martian Legion.

His Parsimony.

Cæsars Policy.

When those of Cæsars party, that were sent to corrupt the Souldiers, saw that they were more exasperated by this deed, they scattered Libels about the Army, wherein they disgraced Anthony, and extolled the liberality of Cæsar. And when some sided with Octavian, and others with Anthony, the Army, as if it had been set to sale at an outcry, addicted themselves to him that would give most. And because that Decius Brutus, who commanded Gallia Cisalpinea (now Lombardy) opposed Anthony, he went to besiege him in the City of Mutina (now Modena) which being known in Rome, Cicero his authority and credit in the Senate was such, that Mark Anthony was declared an Enemy to the State, and the new Consuls, Hircius and Pansa were sent against him, and with them was Octavian sent with Ensigns of a Consul, and Title of a Pro-prætor, having been first admitted into the Senate though so young, which was done by the procurement of Cicero, though he afterwards requited him ill for it.

Anthony declared an Enemy.

Octavian with the Consuls, drew neer to Mark Anthony, Cicero remaining to command in chief in all matters at Rome: and between the two Armies there passed many skirmishes and encounters, and at last they came to Battel, wherein the Consuls and Cæsar had the Victory, but Hircius was slain in the Battel, and Pansa was so wounded, that he died within few days after, and both the Armies of the slain Consuls obeyed Cæsar. By this means D. Brutus was freed from his siege, and Anthony was forced to forsake Italy by a dishonourable flight, leaving his baggage behind him. In this service Octavian made marvellous proof of himself, being but twenty years old, performing the Office, not only of a good Captain, but also of a stout Souldier: For seeing the Standard-bearer sore wounded and ready to fall, Octavian took from him the Eagle, and bare it a great while till he had lodged it in safety.

to

Cæsar overcomes him.

Mark Anthony after the Battel, gathering the remainders of his Army, passed the Alps and went into France, solliciting the Friendship of Lepidus, who was there with an Army ever since the Death of Julius Cæsar, whom after some treaties he made his Friend: and Octavian after the Victory obtained, presently sent to the Senate to require a Triumph for his Victory, as also the Consulship for the remainder of the year in the roome of the dead Consuls, with their succession in their charge, and command of the Army. But the answer of the Senate was not according to his desire: For the Friends and Kinsmen of those that had murthered Cæsar began to fear him, and to suspect his power, wherefore they prevailed to delay that which he required, and in the end they resolved to assign the Army to Decius Brutus, and temporizing with Octavian, they granted him a Triumph, but denied him the Consulship, whereat he was much discontented, and therefore secretly treated of friendship with Mark Anthony, and having drawn to himself the affection of the Army, he therewith marched towards Rome, and approaching near to the City, in dispite of the Senate, he caused himself to be chosen Consul being not fully twenty years old. Then did he cause accusations to be exhibited against Brutus, and Cassius, and the rest of the Conspirators; and in their absence, having none that durst defend their cause, they were condemned. After this was done he left the City, and with his Army marched toward Anthony, and Lepidus, who were already entred into Italy.

He flies into France.

Cæsar makes himself Consul.

Decius Brutus hearing of the Treaties and League that was made between Octavian, Lepidus and Mark Anthony, not daring to stay in that Country, departed with his Army, which soon forsook him, some going to Cæsar, others to Mark Anthony, whereupon he fled, but being at last taken, he was brought to Mark Anthony, who caused his Head to be cut off. The Armies of these Captains drawing near together, to whom Affinius Pollio, and Planeus, with their Legions were joyned, these three Octavian Cæsar, Mark Anthony, and Lepidus, meeting, after three days debate, they concluded their accursed Peace; and these fire-brands of sedition entered into a Triumvirate, with several intents and designs. Lepidus was covetous, and sought riches by troubling the State. Anthony was by nature an enemy to Peace, and to the Commonwealth, desiring an opportunity to be revenged of those who had declared him an Enemy to the State. And Octavian sought revenge upon Brutus, and Cassius, and those who had slain his adopted Father. And to bring these things to pass, Octavian put away his Wife who was Daughter to Servilius, and contracted himself to Claudia, Daughter in Law to Anthony by his Wife Fulvia, who was now a child, and from whom he was afterward divorced by reason of the discord that arose between Anthony and him.

A Triumvirate erected.

In this League which they made, besides dividing the Provinces amongst themselves, they agreed to Proscribe and kill each of them his Enemies, and the one delivered them into the others hands, having more respect to be revenged upon an Enemy than to save a Friend; and so there was made the Many proscribed.

moſt cruel and inhumane Proſcription, and Butchery that ever was before heard of, giving and exchanging Friends, and Kinſmen for Enemies. For Mark Anthony gave up his Fathers Brother: and Lepidus his own Brother, Lucius Paulus: and Octavian, M. T. Cicero, whom he called Father, and who had intreated and honoured him as a Son. And beſides theſe, they Proſcribed and condemned to die three hundred other Principal men of Rome, amongſt whom were about one hundred and fourty Senators, beſides two thouſand Romans of the order of Knighthood.

Ingratitude.

This agreement being made, they all three went to Rome, where they took upon them the Government of the Commonwealth by the name of Triumvirat, the time being limited to five years, though they never meant to leave the ſame. And preſently after, thoſe who were condemned and Proſcribed, were by their commandment put to death, being ſought out in all parts and places; their Houſes were ranſacked, and their goods confiſcated.

Cicero flies.

Cicero underſtanding that his name was in the Catalogue amongſt the Proſcripts, only becauſe he had been a lover of Roman Liberty, he fled to the Sea, where he embarked himſelf, but ſo hard was his hap, that by contrary winds he was driven back to the ſhore, whereupon, returning to ſome poſſeſſions of his near Capua, not far from the Sea, as he lay ſleeping there, he was awakened by ſome Crowes which with their bills pluckt his cloaths from his back. His ſervants being moved with this ill preſage, put him into his Litter, and again carried him towards the Sea: but being overtaken by the murtherers, he put his neck out of his Litter, and they cut off his Head, and his right hand, wherewith he had written his Orations againſt Mark Anthony called Philippicks: And thus was he ſlain by one whom he had defended, and delivered from death. Anthony joyfully received his Head, and cauſed it to be nailed up in the place where he was wont to plead, to which all the People repaired to behold ſo woful and miſerable a ſpectacle, of whom there was not any one but was heartily ſorry for the Death of ſo great a Perſonage, and ſo fervent a lover of his Country. Salvius Otho, a Tribune of the People, invited his Friends to his laſt Supper, and as they were ſitting, in came a Centurion, and in the preſence of them all, ſtrake off his Head.

And is ſlain.

Horrid cruelty.

Minutius the Prætor was ſlain, ſitting in his ſeat of Judgment. L. Villius Annalis, who had been Conſul, flying from the murtherers, hid himſelf in the Suburbs in a little Houſe of one of his clients, but his own Son betrayed him to the murtherers, who ſlew him there; but ſhortly after this Particle being drunken, quarrelling with the ſame Souldiers, was ſlain by them. C. Terentius alſo being betrayed by his own Son, was ſlain, who in a few days having conſumed his Patrimony, was condemned for Theft, and baniſhed into a place where he died miſerably.

Sons unnatural.

Quintus Cicero was hid by his Son, whom they could never make to confeſs by any torments where his Father was; but the old man, not being able any longer to endure that they ſhould torment ſo vertuous a Son, came and preſented himſelf to the Murtherers: whereupon the Son entreated them to kill him firſt, but they killed them both together. The Egnaces, the Father and Son, embracing one the other were both run through and ſlain. C. Hoſidius Geta, was put into a grave by his Son as dead, who ſuſtained and kept him till the danger was over. Aruntius, after he had comforted his Son, delivered up himſelf to the murtherers, but his Son for grief famiſhed himſelf. Some other Children carefully hid, and preſerved their Parents.

Sons dutiful and good.

Wives good.

Tanuſia was ſuch an importunate ſuitor to Cæſar for her Husband T. Junius that ſhe preſerved his life: He was in the interim hidden by Philopæmen, his bondmen enfranchiſed, whom Cæſar afterwards Knighted for his fidelity to his Maſter. Q. Ligurius having been concealed by his Wife, was diſcovered

by

by a slave, and killed, whereupon his Wife pined her self to death. Lucretius Vespilio, having passed many dangers whilst he sought to hide himself here and there, at last came to his Wife Shuria, who hid him between the Cieling and the top of the House, till she had begged his Life of the Triumvirs. Apuleius was saved by his Wife, who fled away with him. Antius his Wife wrapped him up in Coverlets, and caused him to be carried to the Sea side, as a pack of Stuff, where he embarked, and sailed into Sicily. Coponius was saved by his Wife, who lent her Body to Anthony for one night, to save him whom she preferred before her honour.

But the Wife of Septimius, having shamefully given her Body to one of Anthonies Familiars, caused her Husband to be put into the number of the Poscripts, that she might the more freely continue her Adulteries, and her Husband was slain by her means. Q. Vettius Salussus was hidden in a very secret place, but acquainting his Wife with it, she betrayed him to the Murtherers. Fulvius was discovered by one of his slaves and his Concubine, though he had made her free, and given her goods wherewithall to maintain her self. Wives bad.

P. Naso was betrayed by his slave enfranchised, with whom he had been too familiar, but he revenged himself upon his slave, whom he killed, and then held forth his neck to the cut throats. L. Lucceius had put into the hands of two of his Freed men, as much as would have relieved him in his Banishment, but they ran away with all; whereupon he delivered himself to the Murtherers. Haterius, who had hid himself in a very secret place, was sold and betrayed by his slave, and killed. Cassius Varus, who was betrayed by a slave made free, had his Head struck off. Caius Plotius was hidden by his slaves, but being given to Perfumes, the scent thereof discovered him; yet when the Souldiers could not find him, they cruelly tormented his Servants to make them confess where he was, which yet they would not do: But the Master pitying his faithful Servants, came out of his secret place, and delivered himself to the murtherers. Servants bad; Servants good;

Appius Claudius changed his Gown with his slave, who in that habit presented himself to the murtherers, and was slain by them instead of his Master. Another slave of Menius did the like: for he went into his Masters Litter, and offered his neck to the murtherers, who cut off his Head, and so his Master escaped into Sicily. The slave of Urbinus Panopio, hearing that the murtherers were coming to his Masters house, took off his Gown and his Ring, and gave him his own apparel, and put him out at a back door: then he went up and lay upon his Masters Bed, where he boldly attended them that killed him for Panopio. The slave of Antius Restio, though his Master had soundly beaten him a few dayes before for some knavish tricks, yet to save his Master, meeting an old man by the way, he struck off his Head, and shewing that, with his whippings to the murtherers, he made them believe that thus he had revenged himself of his Master, with whom he shortly after fled into Sicily. The slaves of Martius Censorinus kept their Master secretly, till he had opportunity to escape into Sicily, to Sextus Pompeius.

Q. Oppius, an honourable old man, being very near taking, was rescued by his Son, who conveying him out of Rome, carried him upon his shoulders, and sent him into Sicily, where all the poor distressed Romans were courteously entertained by S. Pompeius, who sent forth Ships and Galleys to lye upon the Coast of Italy, ready to receive all them that fled to him; doubly rewarding those that saved any that was proscribed: He gave also honourable Offices to all that had been Consuls, and comforting the rest with singular courtesie. Many others fled into Macedonia, to Brutus and Cassius: others into Africk to Cornificius, Statius Samnis, an honourable Senator, being A good Son.

ing about eighty years old, that thoſe Thieves might have no part of his Goods, he gave them for a prey to whomſoever would take them; then ſetting his Houſe on fire, he burnt himſelf in it. Aponius having been long concealed by his ſlave, grew weary of that confinement, came out into the Market-place, and yielded his neck to the murtherers. Ceſtius being in the like condition, cauſed his ſlaves to make a great fire, threw himſelf into it, and died: Sulpitus Rufus, who had been Conſul, was murthered, becauſe he would not ſell an Iſle of his to Fulvia: alſo Ampius Balbus was ſlain, becauſe he would not give her a pleaſant place of his.

A Jezabel.

Baſe Covetouſneſs.

M. Anthony put into the number of Proſcripts, a Senator called Nonius Struma, onely to get from him an Emerald eſteemed worth fifty thouſand Crowns: but Nonius found a means to eſcape with his Emerald, to the great grief of Anthony. Some valiantly defended themſelves, as Atteius Capito, who killed many Souldiers, who came rudely running upon him, but being at laſt oppreſſed with multitudes, he was ſlain. Vetulinus, aſſiſted by his Son, valiantly repulſed the murtherers, but at laſt was ſlain. Sicilias Coranas hoping to eſcape, put himſelf amongſt the Mourners that followed a dead Corps, but being diſcovered, was ſlain.

Valour.

The Triumviri cauſed the Goods of the Proſcripts to be ſold by the Drum, at ſuch prizes as the Souldiers pleaſed, yet moſt part of them was ſpoiled, and given away. They promiſed alſo to Widows their Joyntures, and to Sons, the tenth part of their Fathers Patrimony, and to Daughters the twentieth part; but few or none had any benefit by this promiſe: yea, on the contrary, they ſacked many of them that demanded theſe rights. They exacted great ſums of money in Rome, and all over Italy; and to encourage the Souldiers, they gave them unmeaſurable gifts, and granted them daily new pillage. The Legions they Wintered in the richeſt Cities upon free Quarter. To be ſhort, men by fear and cuſtome were ſo inured to ſlavery, that they became more ſlaves than the Tyrants would have had them.

Oppreſſion.

Theſe three men having done what they would in Rome, and knowing that Brutus and Caſſius had a very great Army in Greece, who called themſelves the Deliverers of their Countrey, ſaying, that they would go and ſet Rome at liberty from Oppreſſion: Caſſius having overthrown and ſlain Dolabella in Syria: and being informed, that by the aſſiſtance of their Friends, they had gotten together eighteen Legions; hereupon Mark Anthony and Octavian reſolved to go againſt them with the greateſt Army that they could poſſibly make, of old Souldiers, and that Lepidus ſhould ſtay to guard Rome: and accordingly they departed, and arrived in Greece, and marching on, they drew near to the place where Brutus and Caſſius were encamped, which was in Macedonia in the Philippick Fields.

They go againſt Brutus and Caſſius.

Before they came to joyn Battel, there were ſundry Prodigies: for Fowls of prey hovered about the Camp of Brutus, as if it had been their own already: and as they marched out to Battel, a Blackmoor met them, which they accounted an ill Omen. Brutus being alone in his Tent at night, a man ſad and gaſtly appeared to him, and being asked what he was, he anſwered, I am thy evil Genius, and ſo vaniſhed: But on the contrary, Birds and Beaſts promiſed good ſucceſs to Ceſar. Theſe Armies lying ſo near together, had frequent skirmiſhes, and at laſt came to a Battel, where the Victory was ſtrangely divided: For Brutus on the one ſide of the Field, did beat Octavian, and put his Battalion to rout, purſuing them into the Camp, where many of them were ſlain; and while Brutus was following his Victory, his partner Caſſius was overthrown by Mark Anthony, though he did all that was poſſible to encourage his men, and by reaſon of the clouds of Duſt, knew nothing of Brutus his Victory, whereupon, retiring to an high ground, he Prodigies.

A Spectrum.

Brutus beats Ceſar.

M. Anthony beats Caſſius.

he there pitched his Tent: and ſo ſtanding and looking about, he ſaw Brutus his Troops coming to his aid, and to relieve him; but he imagining that they came flying before their enemies, commanded a ſlave of his, whom he had made free, to kill him, who did it accordingly.

Octavians men that eſcaped by flight, retired to Mark Anthonies Camp, and had not Brutus his men buſied themſelves in ranſacking Octavians Camp, they had that day obtained an entire Victory: for they might in due time have reſcued, and relieved Caſſius, and both of them being joyned together, might eaſily have overthrown Mark Anthony: but God had otherwiſe determined. The Victory being thus divided, the Generals of either party gathered their Forces together, and of Brutus ſide were ſlain eight thouſand men, and of the Enemies ſide a far greater number. Brutus did his beſt to encourage and comfort his Souldiers, and the Gentlemen which followed Caſſius: and the next day, though both Armies were put in battel Array, yet they fought not; but a few dayes after, Brutus, by his Souldiers, was forced to come to another Battel, who was of himſelf willing rather to delay and prolong the War, knowing that his Enemies wanted Victuals, and many other neceſſaries, and becauſe he repoſed no great truſt in the Forces of Caſſius: for he found that they were fearful, and hard to be commanded, becauſe of their late overthrow. When they came to the ſecond encounter, Brutus did all the Offices of an able General, and of a Valiant Knight, yet in the end his men were broken, and overthrown by the Enemy. Brutus having gathered his ſcattered Troops together, found himſelf unable to make any farther reſiſtance, and being adviſed by ſome of his Friends to fly, he told them, That ſo he would, yet not with his feet, but with his hands; and thereupon, taking a Sword from a Servant of his called Stratus, he ſlew himſelf. Thus Octavian and Mark Anthony remained Victors, and Maſters of the Field, and all things ſucceeded according to Cæſars deſire, for whom, God in his ſecret Counſel had reſerved the Monarchy of the whole World, which for the preſent was divided between three.

Brutus beaten.

Kills himſelf.

Theſe Wars being ended, and the Legions of Brutus and Caſſius reduced to the obedience of the Conquerours, Octavian and Mark Anthony agreed, and reſolved, that Anthony ſhould remain to govern Greece, and Aſia, that Lepidus ſhould go into Africk, and that Octavian ſhould return to Rome: and accordingly Mark Anthony went into Aſia, where he gave himſelf up to ſenſuality and delights, with the fair, but wanton Cleopatra, Queen of Ægypt, and Octavian, though with ſome hindrances, by reaſon of his health, at laſt came to Rome.

Anthony with Cleopatra.

Not long after, there aroſe new Wars and troubles, for though Octavian was at peace with Lepidus, who was now in Africk, Octavian having under his command, Spain, France, part of Germany, Italy, and Illyricum, yet Lucius Antonius, who at this time was Conſul, being provoked thereto by his Siſter in Law Fulvia, Wife to Mark Anthony, began to oppoſe himſelf againſt Lepidus and Octavian, ſeeking to overthrow the Triumvirat; which contention brake out about the diviſion of Fields which Cæſar had made to the Souldiers which had ſerved him in his Wars. Some ſay that Fulvia made this ſtir, that ſhe might procure the return of Mark Anthony to her, of whom ſhe was jealous, hearing of his familiarity with Cleopatra. The diſcord in Rome grew to that height, that they came to Arms; and Lucius Antonius went from the City, and levied an Army againſt Octavian, who alſo marched towards him with his Forces. But Lucius not daring to joyn Battel, ſhut himſelf up in Perugia, where Cæſar immediately beſieged him, and Divorced himſelf from Claudia the Daughter of Fulvia, and was married to his third Wife Scribonia, by whom he had Troubles in Rome.

one

Cæsars Victory.

one onely Daughter. Octavian being about twenty three years old, ſo ſtrictly beſieged Perugia, that Lucius and his men were brought to ſuch ſtraits for want of Victuals, that he was forced to yield up himſelf to Octavian, who pardoned him, and uſed him kindly; and thus this War was ended without bloudſhed. And ſo Octavian returned to Rome, of which he was now ſole Lord: and from hence ſome reckon the beginning of his Empire, which was about four years after the Death of Julius Cæſar, and about thirty eight years before the Incarnation of our bleſſed Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

Anthony comes into Italy.

Cæſar being now in quiet, Fulvia, by Letters, and falſe Informations, ſought to ſtir up her Husband Mark Anthony againſt Octavian, with which reſolution ſhe left Italy, and went towards him; and at the ſame time Mark Anthony departed from Alexandria in Ægypt, and came to the Iſle of Rhodes, where he was informed of all that had happened to his Brother Lucius. From thence he went into Greece, and at Athens he found his Wife Fulvia ſick, yet vehemently inveighing againſt Octavian: wherefore leaving her there, he went with two hundred Gallies into Italy, and landed at Brunduſium, where the Wars began between him and the Forces of Octavian, who was yet at Rome. But news coming of Fulvia's death, ſome Friends interpoſed to reconcile them, and at laſt it was agreed, that Arbitrators ſhould be choſen to compoſe their differences. Octavian choſe Mecænas, and for Mark Anthony was Aſinius Pollio, and theſe brought it to this iſſue, that Mark Anthony ſhould have all the Eaſt from Italy, beginning from the Jonian Sea, which is the entry into the Venetian Gulph, unto the River of Euphrates, wherein were included all the Provinces of Græcia and Aſia, with all the Iſlands within theſe limits. To Octavian was allotted from the ſaid Jonian Sea to the Weſtern or Spaniſh Sea, wherein were contained Spain, France, Italy, Germany, and Britain. To Lepidus was confirmed Africa, where he then was, with all the Provinces thereof. And for the ſtrengthening of this League, Mark Anthony, now a Widower, was to marry with Octavia, the Siſter of Octavian by the Fathers ſide, formerly married to Marcus Marcellus, by whom ſhe had one Son, called alſo Marcellus, whom Octavian adopted. And this marriage was diſpenſed with by the Senate, becauſe in Rome Widows were not permitted to marry, till they had lived ten months in Widowhood, which ſhe had not done.

Peace made betwixt them.

Anthony marries Octavia.

This being concluded, Octavian and Mark Anthony went to Rome, where the Wedding was ſolemnized, and they were ſeemingly good Friends; but their Peace was diſquieted by the Neighbourhood of Sextus Pompeius, who commanded the Seas from Sicily where he lived, and with his Ships and Pyrates he diſquieted Cæſars Friends, who thereupon reſolved to ruine him: But at the requeſt of the Senate, and of Mark Anthony, he hearkened to Peace, and by the mediation of Friends, it was agreed, that all matters paſt ſhould be forgotten, and that they ſhould live like good Neighbours and Friends, and that Sextus Pompey ſhould enjoy Sicily, Sardinia, and Corſica, which he had in poſſeſſion, and that he ſhould clear the Seas from Pyrates, that Merchants and Paſſengers might paſs ſafely, and that he ſhould furniſh Rome yearly with a certain quantity of Corn. This being concluded, they agreed upon a meeting of all three upon the Sea ſide in the Straight of Meſſina, in a Fortreſs built for that purpoſe, which reached into the Water, whither Sextus Pompey might come with his Gálleys and be in ſafety: which accordingly was performed with great joy and ſolemnity; and Sextus Pompey feaſted them in his Galleys, and they likewiſe him by Land.

They are reconciled with Sextus Pompey.

From hence Sextus Pompey returned into Sicily, and Octavian and Mark Anthony to Rome, where for a while they remained in great Familiarity: and then Mark Anthony preparing for his journey into the Eaſt, ſent Venditius before him him with a great Army againſt the Parthians, wherein he had ſo good ſucceſs, that he overcame and defeated Pacorus, the Parthian Kings Son, and ſlew twenty thouſand of his men, and thereby ſufficiently revenged the Death of Marcus Craſſus, for which he afterwards Triumphed at Rome. The Parthians beaten.

Mark Anthony departed from Rome with his new Wife, and wintered with her in Athens. Octavian in the mean time in Rome growing mighty, and in high eſteem, was yet very penſive, being troubled at the Neighbourhood of Sextus Pompey in Sicily, attending an occaſion to War againſt him: for which purpoſe he prepared a great Fleet, pretending that Sextus with his Ships, and Gallies hindred the coming of Corn into Italy. Theſe Sicilian Wars continued for ſome years: in the beginning whereof Octavian had ill ſucceſs, yet more from ſtorms and tempeſts than from the force of his Enemies: and if Sextus Pompey had been as prudent and able to offend his Enemy as he was to defend himſelf: and as he was Valiant, if he had been as Wiſe and Politick, he might have greatly diſtreſſed Octavian in all matters concerning Italy: yet the matter was ſo handled, that at Octavians requeſt Mark Anthony came twice out of the Eaſt into Italy to aſſiſt him in theſe Wars. The firſt time he came to Brunduſium, where, not finding Octavian according to appointment, he returned without ſeeing him, upon ſome jealouſies which grew betwixt them. But Octavian having loſt moſt of his Fleet in a ſtorm, he ſent his intire Friend Mecenas to Mark Anthony, at whoſe intreaty he returned into Italy with three hundred Ships and Gallies, giving it out that he came to Cæſars aid. And though there were ſome difference between them, yet Octavia ſo laboured between her Husband and Brother, that ſhe reconciled them, and ſo they met in the mouth of the River near Tarentum, where Mark Anthony gave to Octavian one hundred and twenty of his Gallies for his Wars, and Octavian gave to him ſome of the Italian Souldiers, and they renewed their Triumvirat for other five years. Which done, Mark Anthony returned to the Eaſt to proſecute his Wars againſt the Parthians, his Wife Octavia and her Children remaining in Rome. Cæſar envies Sextus Pompey.

Anthony being gone, Octavian reſolving to proſecute the Wars againſt Sextus Pompey with all his Forces, armed two Navies, whereof Agrippa was the Admiral of the one, and himſelf of the other: He ſent alſo to Lepidus intreating his aid, who accordingly came and brought with him a thouſand Ships, little and great, and eighty Gallies, wherein he tranſported five thouſand Horſe, and twelve Legions of Foot Souldiers. Sextus Pompey hearing what great preparations were made againſt him, did ſtrongly fortifie all the Sea-coaſts of Sicily, and on the frontiers of Africk, near to Lilibæum, he placed Plinius, a good Captain with good Companies of Souldiers, and his whole Fleet by Sea he drew into the Port of Meſſina, purpoſing to mannage his Wars by Sea, having neither experience, nor power to do it by Land, and ſo he attended the coming of his Enemies. Wars againſt him.

Lepidus looſing with his whole Fleet from Africk, was encountered with a tempeſt, wherein with the loſs of a great part of his Navy, he, with the reſt landed at Lilybæum, and took in certain places thereabout, but having ſmall judgment, and experience in the Wars, he made a greater noiſe then did hurt to Pompey. Octavius alſo being at Sea in a tempeſt, loſt thirty of his Gallies, beſides ſmall Ships, and with much difficulty returned to Italy: and Taurus, who commanded the Gallies which Anthony left, landed at Tarentum, though with great loſs and danger. Octavian was ſo grieved at theſe loſſes, that he had thoughts of giving over the War for that year: but changing his mind, he repaired his Fleets, and ordered Agrippa, with one of them to paſs into Sicily, and there to make War both by Sea and land: and himſelf following with the other Fleet did the like.

About

Cæsar marries Livia.

About this time Octavian divorced himself from Scribonia, though he had a Daughter by her called Livia, and then he married Livia Druſilla, Wife to Tiberius Nero, by whom ſhe had a Son called alſo Tiberius; hereupon Tiberius was forced to leave her to pleaſe Octavian, though at this time ſhe was with Child of a Son. This Livia he loved dearly, and continued with her till his Death.

Pompey beaten.

Agrippa aſſaulted and took in ſome places in Sicily, which Pompey hearing of, departed from Meſſina with one hundred and ſeventy five Gallies, to relieve them, and Agrippa being advertiſed of his coming, prepared to meet him, his Gallies being almoſt equal in number, and ſo they joyned Battel, which for a time ſeemed to be equal, but at laſt Agrippa prevailed, and Pompey retreated in time, his Gallies and Foiſts withdrawing themſelves into ſome Rivers near at hand, whither Agrippa with his bigger Veſſels could not follow them. In this fight Pompey loſt thirty of his Gallies. Agrippa the next day went to a City called Tindaria, thinking to ſurpriſe it by reaſon of intelligence which he had with the Citizens: and Pompey in the Night gave ſecret order to his whole Fleet to retire to Meſſina.

Cæſar beaten.

Octavian in the mean time imbarked a great part of his Army, which he landed in Sicily, and ſet them on ſhore under the command of Cornificius, little thinking that Pompey had been ſo near, who if he had taken this opportunity, might have defeated Octavian. But looſing it, Octavian imbarking again, intended to determine the quarrel by a Battel at Sea, leaving Cornificius with his men fortified on the Land. Then did Pompey ſail out of Meſſina with his whole Fleet, and neither Parties refuſing it, they came to a Battel, in which Octavian was overcome, and all his great Fleet ſcattered and loſt, and himſelf driven to flie into Italy in a Brigandine, where through many dangers, he at laſt came to the Army, whereof Meſſalla was General, and being nothing diſcouraged with this loſs, he preſently took order for all that was needful. To Rome he ſent his intire Friend Mecenas, to take order that this news ſhould breed no alteration there, and then preſently ſent to Agrippa, the Admiral of his other Fleet, that he ſhould with all ſpeed ſuccour Cornificius and his Army in Sicily, and to Lepidus he ſent to deſire him to make his preſent repair to the Iſle of Lippari, which is between Sicily, and Calabria.

His diligence and good order about theſe affairs was ſuch, that in a ſhort time, by the help of Lepidus, and Agrippa, in diſpite of Pompey, he landed all his Forces in Sicily, and joyning with Lepidus, he encamped near to Meſſina, where began a moſt cruel War both by Sea, and Land, wherein the power and ſufficiency of Pompey did wonderfully appear, in that he was able to grapple with ſo potent adverſaries. Yet ſeeing himſelf oppreſſed, he ſent a challenge to Octavian, that to avoid the further effuſion of blood, he would try it out with him in a Naval fight, ſo many Ships and Gallies againſt ſo many. Octavian delayed him at the firſt, but afterwards they agreed that with three hundred Ships and Galleys on either ſide, they would meet in ſuch a place, and there fight it out, and accordingly they prepared for the Battel.

Pompey beaten.

Octavian leaving Lepidus with his Land Army, embarked himſelf in his Fleet, and Pompey did the like, and ſo they joyned Battel, which was one of the cruelleſt that ever was, conſidering the Commanders and the ſtrength on either ſide, where Pompey, after he had performed all the Offices of a good and Valiant Captain, and after the ſlaughter of multitudes on both ſides, was overcome by Octavian, and all his Fleet was burnt and ſunk, or taken, ſaving ſixteen ſail which eſcaped by flight, and he in one of them, and theſe entered into the Haven of Meſſina. And though the City was ſufficiently fortified, and Pompey knew that Plinius, his General was coming to his reſcue, yet in a dark night he imbarked, and with thoſe ſixteen Ships which had eſcaped, he fled into the East to Mark Anthony, hoping to find relief from him: But after much toil, and many accidents which happened to him, he was slain by one Titius at the command of Mark Anthony, and in him failed the House and memory of his Father Pompey the Great. And is slain.

And flies.

fled

In this War Octavian escaped many dangers. For having transported part of his Army into Sicily, and sailing back to fetch the rest, he was suddenly surprised by Demochares, and Apolaphanes, two of Pompeys Captains, from whom he escaped with much difficulty with one only Ship. Then travelling by Land to Rhegium, he saw some of Pompeys Gallies near to the Shore, and supposing them to be his own, he went down to the Sea side, where he had like to have been taken by them; and then seeking to escape by unknown passages, he met with a slave of Æmilius Paulus, who remembring that he had proscribed his Master Paulus, Father to this Æmilius, he attempted to kill him. Cæsars dangers.

Octavian having obtained this great Victory aforesaid, though with very great loss, he went to Land with the remainder of his Ships and Army, commanding Agrippa to joyn with Lepidus, and to go to Messina, whither Pliny, Pompeys General had retired himself. But not thinking good to stand upon his defence, now that his Master was fled, he yielded himself to Lepidus with all his Legions: This made Lepidus so proud, that affecting to have Sicily to himself, he contended with Octavian about it: and entering into the City of Messina, he placed a Garrison in it, to hold it for his own use: The like he did in many other places of the Island: and when Octavian came, he desired to speak with him, greatly complaining of his proceedings. He falls out with Lepidus.

But in Rule, and Dominion equallity is intollerable, whilst either of them coveted this Isle for himself they fell at variance, and Octavian made his Navy to draw neer to the shore: So that both Armies began to stand upon their guard, the one against the other, and many messages passed between them, yet could they not agree. But Octavian was far better beloved and esteemed by the men of War, for his many vertues, and Nobility, and for his Name-sake [Julius Cæsar,] then the other, and the Souldiers began to lay all the fault upon Lepidus.

Octavian understanding this, laboured secretly to corrupt Lepidus his Souldiers, to draw them to himself: and one day, with a great Troop of Horse, he rode neer to Lepidus his Camp, and parlying with his Souldiers, justified himself and laid all the fault upon Lepidus, insomuch that many of them began to come over to his side. Lepidus, being informed hereof, caused an Alarm to be given, and commanded his men to sally out against Octavian, but when they came forth, most of them joyned with him: so that Lepidus seeing himself in danger of being forsaken of his whole Army, yielded himself unto Cæsar, and putting off his Generals Robe, he went to his Tent, and submitted to him. Octavian received him as if he had never offended, very courteously, and honourably, but restored him neither to his State nor power, and sent him with a good company to Rome, without any Office but the High Priesthood, which he had held ever since the Death of Julius Cæsar: and so this difference was ended without bloodshed. Cæsars Policy. Lepidus overcome.

Octavian now retaining Sicily to himself, and having devested Lepidus of the Triumvirat, he appropriated to himself the Province of Africk, and remained General of the three Armies, to wit, of Lepidus, of Pompey, and of his own; wherein were forty five Legions of Footmen, and twenty five thousand Horse, all well armed, besides many other Numidians. He had also upon the Sea, six hundred Gallies and many Ships, and Brigandines. And now waited only for an opportunity to fall out with Mark Anthony that he might make himself Lord of all. Yet for the present he paid his Souldiers as well as he could, and gave Coronets, Honours, and Arms to those who had deserved well in these Wars. He then diſperſed his Armies, ſending them to their own homes, loaden with many fair promiſes. He alſo left, and ſent Prætors and Governours into Sicily and Africk, and ſo haſted towards Rome, where he was received with Ovation (which was little leſs than a Triumph) with incredible joy and honour: and was ſo exceedingly beloved, that in many places they erected Temples and Altars to him, as to their Gods: and he reformed ſuch things as by reaſon of the Wars were grown out of order.

Cæſar returns to Rome.

At this time Mark Anthony, who was in the Eaſt, though he had no great ſucceſs in his Parthian War, yet was he ſtill of great power, very Rich, and well obeyed in the Provinces of Greece, Aſia, and Ægypt, and in the reſt of his Governments. But he was ſo beſotted with the love, and company of Cleopatra, the Queen of Ægypt, that he thought of nothing but how to ſatisfie her humour, in the mean time neglecting, and forgetting his Wife Octavia, the Siſter of Octavian, who in beauty and Wiſdom was nothing inferiour to Cleopatra, and in virtue and goodneſs did far excel her.

Anthony beſotted with Cleopatra.

The Monarchy of the World being thus divided between theſe two, the one in the Eaſt, the other in the Weſt, yet, as though each of them had not enough, they ſtudied each of them to ſupplant, and deſtroy the other. Chiefly Octavian, who ſeeing that Anthony neglected his Siſter, and did not ſend for her, he continually adviſed, and urged her to go to her Husband, that he might have a fair occaſion to fall out with him if ſhe were not well intertained: But ſhe, not well underſtanding his deſign, that ſhe might prevent all controverſies between her Brother and her Husband, departed from Rome, carrying with her many Jewels, and Preſents which ſhe had gotten together therewith to preſent Mark Anthony. But he, having fixed his heart upon Cleopatra, wrote to her by the way that ſhe ſhould go into Greece, and ſtay at Athens, till he returned from the Parthian War, yet did he never go againſt them, Cleopatra hindering him. Notwithſtanding Octavia ſent all thoſe things which ſhe had brought, to her Husband, and all this not prevailing to procure her acceptance, ſhe went full of grief to Rome.

Cæſar ſeeks a quarrel with him.

Then did Octavian begin openly to complain of Mark Anthony, and to declare himſelf his Enemy, and Mark Anthony, entered into a League with the King of the Medes, the better to ſtrengthen himſelf, cauſing Cleopatra (beſides the Title of Ægypt) to be called Queen of Syria, Lybia, and Cyprus, and joyntly with her, a Son of hers called Cæſarion, of whom Julius Cæſar left her with Child when he was in Ægypt: and to two Sons which himſelf had by her, called Ptolomy, and Alexander, he gave the Title of Kings, to Alexander, of Armenia, and Parthia: and to Ptolomy, of Cilicia, and Phœnicia; hereupon the enmity between Octavian and him greatly encreaſed: yet was the War deferred becauſe of other Wars which Octavian had in Illyricum, and Dalmatia. The People of theſe Countries, ſeeing the Romans engaged in Civil Wars, rebelled, together with thoſe of Auſtria, Hungary, and Bavaria, who joyned with them. This War Octavian undertook in his own Perſon, which was very cruel and dangerous: wherein he was twice wounded, and gave great proof both of his Wiſdom and Valour: yet in the end, he not only ſubdued and tamed Illyricum, but both the Panonnia's, and all the neighbouring Nations with had joyned with them.

Cæſars new troubles.

Then did Octavian return Victorious to Rome, and though a Triumph was granted him, yet would he not Triumph as then, ſo great was his deſire to make War againſt Mark Anthony, who was no better affected towards him. For he levied Souldiers, procured Friends, and Armies againſt him, and promiſed Cleopatra to bring her Triumphing into Rome. Yea, ſhe requeſted of him, the Rule and Empire of Rome, and he promiſed it her.

Matters

Matters ſtanding upon theſe tearms, Mark Anthony ſent his Wife Octavia a Bill of Divorce, according to the cuſtom of thoſe times, commanding her to go out of his Houſe, wherein ſhe dwelt in Rome. This, and other indignities Octavian imparted to the Senate, complaining againſt Anthony, and in his Orations to the People, he accuſed him for that (the ſecond five years of his Triumvirat and League being expired) yet came he not to Rome, neither reſpecting the authority of the Senate, nor of the People, but held his place, and kept poſſeſſion of the Eaſt and of Greece: and by ſuch ſuggeſtions he incenſed the People againſt him. Quarrels betwixt them.

Mark Anthony, on the other ſide by Letters and Meſſengers, complained that Octavian had often broken the Peace, and had caſt Sextus Pmpey out of Sicily, retaining that, and other places which he held to himſelf: and that therein he had no reſpect of him, nor had given him any part thereof: and that he detained the Gallies which he had lent him for that War. As alſo that he had deprived Lepidus of his Government, and kept all thoſe Provinces, and all the Legions which were his, without imparting any ſhare thereof to him: and that he had divided all the Lands in Italy to his own Souldiers, not aſſigning any part thereof to his. Thus the one accuſed the othet, either pretending that they were forced to undertake the War; whereas the truth is, it was their Ambition, and inſatiable deſire to Rule that pricked them forward to it. Hereupon they called divers Nations to their aid, ſo as the whole World in a manner, either of one ſide or other, was in Arms. Thoſe in the Weſt for Octavian, and thoſe in the Eaſt for Anthony: at leaſt, the beſt and choiſeſt men of them all. Preparations for War.

Anthony was firſt in the Field, and came with a great Army to the famous City of Epheſus in Jonia, a Province of Aſia the leſs, whither he had ſent for his Navy to tranſport him into Europe. And he had in readineſs eight hundred Gallies and Ships of burthen: two hundred whereof Cleopatra gave him, together with all the Ammunition, and Victuals neceſſary for the Fleet: He alſo took her along with him, contrary to the adviſe of all thoſe which were of his Counſel. Then ſailed he to the Iſle of Samos, to which he had appointed all the Kings, Tetrarchs, and People which ſerved under him in this War, to come by a day prefixed. The Kings that met him there, were Tarcondemus, King of the upper Cilicia: Archalaus, of Cappadocia: Philodelphus, of Paphlagonia; Methridates, of Comagena, and others: Beſides thoſe which ſent there Forces, as Herod, King of Judæa: Amyntas, of Lycaonia: and the Kings of Arabia: Of the Medes: and Palemon, King of Pontus with ſome others. So that he had one hundred thouſand well trained Footmen, and twenty two thouſand Horſe, beſides his Navy by Sea, which conſiſted of five hundred Gallies, beſides Ships of burden which carried his Ammunition, and Victuals.

If Anthony, thus furniſhed, had preſently paſſed into Italy, he had put Octavian into great hazard: For then he had not ſufficient Forces to have withſtood him, nor other neceſſary Proviſion for the Wars. But Mark Anthony, delaying the time at Athens, let ſlip the opportunity, and gave Octavian leaſure to provide all things neceſſary from Italy, France, Spain, and all other his Provinces, from whence he levied eighty thouſand choiſe Souldiers, and above twenty thouſand good Horſe: and ſeeing that Anthony ſtayed ſo long, he ſent him word, that ſeeing he had Ships, and other fit proviſion, he ſhould come for Italy, where he ſtaid in the Field to give him Battel, promiſing to afford him good Ports and Havens, where he might ſafely land without interruption. To this Anthony anſwered, that it would be more honourable if he would determine this quarrel in Perſon againſt him, body to body, which he would willingly accept, though he was now old and crazed, and the other young and luſty: and if he liked not of this challenge, he would Anthonys imprudence. Cæſars meſſage. Anthonys anſwer.

ſtay for him with his Army in the Fields of Pharſalia, in the ſame place where Julius Cæſar fought with Cneius Pompey.

Theſe Meſſages paſſing between them without effect, Anthony drew his Army by Land, and his Navy by Sea towards Italy, and Octavian, imbarked his Legions at Brundusium, and croſſed the Sea to a place called Torma, in the Province of Epire (now called Romania) and after ſome notable exploits performed, the two Armies drew neer together, as alſo did the Navies. Octavians Navy conſiſted of two hundred and fifty Gallies, but better armed, and ſwifter than were Mark Anthonies, though his were more in number. And Mark Anthony, being perſwaded by Cleopatra (who in this alſo was the cauſe of his ruin, thereby to have the better means to fly if the Battel ſhould be loſt) would needs try his Fortune in a Sea fight, though his Army by Land had a great advantage over the other.

They meet.

They prepare to fight.

Anthony choſe twenty thouſand out of his Army and put them aboard his Fleet, and Octavian, who refuſed not the Sea-fight, made his proviſion alſo, and ſo ſhipping himſelf in his Gallies, he committed the charge of his Land Army to Taurus, and Anthony left his Land Forces with Canidius: and in the ſight of both the Armies, theſe two brave Captains, with the beſt Navies in the World, took the Seas where they fought, for no leſs than the Empire of the World. Yet was the Fight deferred for three days in diſpite of both Parties, the Seas riſing ſo high that they could not Govern their Veſſels. The fourth day they came to an encounter at a Cape called Accius, in Epire, not far from the place where their Land Armies ſtood.

A Battel.

The Battel was one of the moſt cruelleſt that ever was heard of, and laſted ten hours before Octavian obtained the Victory, though Mark Anthony ſtaid not ſo long in the fight. For Cleopatra in the greateſt fury of the Battel, fled away in her Galley, whom ſeventy of her other Galleys followed: and unfortunate Mark Anthony, who all his life time hitherto had been a valiant and brave Captain, ſeeing Cleopatra fly, on whom he had fixed his eyes and heart, ſhifting out of his own Galley into a lighter, followed her, without regard of his Armies either by Sea or Land, and overtaking her, went aboard her Galley, wherein he ſailed three days without either ſeeing or ſpeaking with her, being confounded with ſhame for ſhewing ſo much weekneſs, and at laſt they arrived in the Port of Alexandria in Ægypt.

Anthony flies.

His mens fidelity.

His Navy which he left fighting, though now Headleſs and without a Captain, yet continued to make gallant reſiſtance till five thouſand of them were ſlain: and at laſt they were overcome, rather for want of a Commander then through any force of an Enemy, though Octavians light and ſwift Galleys were a great help to him: and ſo he remained Conquerour, and granted life, and pardon to the conquered, getting into his hands three hundred of their Galleys. In Anthonys Army by Land there wanted neither courage nor conſtancy to their General, though he had ſo unworthily deſerted them: and therefore they continued ſeven days in their Camp, ready to give Battel, without accepting any compoſition from the Enemy, and they would have ſtaid longer, had not Canidius their Captain abuſed his truſt, flying ſecretly from the Camp to ſeek Anthony, whereupon, the Army being deſtitute of a General, yielded to the Enemy; who admitted them into his own Army, being nineteen Legions of Foot, and twelve thouſand Horſe. The Senators, Knights, and Noble men, that had ſerved Anthony, many of them he fined in great ſums of Money, many he put to death, and ſome he pardoned.

His Army yields to Cæſar.

Then did Cæſar ſail to Athens, and being pacified with the Greeks, he diſtributed the Corn that was left in the War, to the Cities that were afflicted with Famine, and that were diſpoiled of their Money, Servants, and Horſes. And Anthony being arrived in Ægypt, choſe out one good Ship of good burden, and fraught with ſtore of Treaſure, and rich Plate of Gold and Silver, and gave it to his Friends, intreating them to divide it amongst them and to shift for themselves, and he wrote to Theophilus, the Governour of Corinth, that he would provide them an hiding place till they might make their Peace with Cæsar. And Cæsar, of the spoils of the Enemy dedicated ten Ships to Apollo Actius.

and

Anthony being come into Africk went into a desart place, wandering up and down, only accompanied with two Friends; and after a while he sent to the General of the Army which he had formerly raised for the defence of Ægypt, but he slew his Messengers, and said that he would not obey Anthony, whereupon he had thought to have killed himself, but being hindered by his Friends, he went to Alexandria, and after a while he built him an House in the Sea by the Isle of Pharos, and there lived from the Company of all men, saying, That he would live the life of Timon the Man-hater, because he was abused by his Friends, and had experience of their ingratitude, and he called this House Timonion. Yet at length he left this place, and went to the Pallace, where he spent his time in Feasting and jollity. And Cleopatra got together divers sorts of deadly poysons of poysonsome Creatures, whereof she made tryal upon many condemned persons, and amongst all, she liked the biting of the Aspe best: for it brought a sleepiness without any contraction of the members, or groaning, only causing a gentle sweating of the face, and a languishing stupidity of the senses. Anthony lives privately.

At Rome many things were decreed in honour of Cæsar for this Victory at Sea: First a Triumph was granted him for Cleopatra: and a Triumphal Arch was erected at Brunduſium, and another at Rome. The base of the Julian Temple was adorned with the Beaks of the Ships he had taken: There were Plays decreed to be kept every fifth year in honour of him: Processions were always to be made on his Birth day, and on the day wherein the news of his Victory was first brought. That the vestal Virgins, the Senate, with their Wives and Children should go and meet him at his return: that all the Ornaments of Anthony should be demolished & cast down: that his Birth day should be accounted unlucky: and that none of his Family should ever have the forename of Marcus. Cæsar highly honoured.

About this time Anthony and Cleopatra sent Ambassadours to Cæsar into Asia. Cleopatra demanded the Kingdom of Ægypt for her Children, and without Anthonies knowledg, sent him a Scepter, Crown, and Chair, all of Gold, as it were, delivering her Kingdom over to him: and Anthony demanded that he might live a private life at Athens if he might not continue in Ægypt. Cæsar accepted of Cleopatra's gifts, accounting them as good Omens: but he would afford no answer to Anthony; and privately he promised impunity and her Kingdom to Cleopatra if she would kill Anthony. They sent also a second Ambassage to Cæsar, and Cleopatra promised him a huge mass of Money; and Anthony minded him of the former friendship and alliance that was between them, and what acts they had done together: he delivered also to him Terullius, a Senator, and one of Cæsars murtherers, whom he put to death: he proffered also to kill himself to obtain security for Cleopatra, yet Cæsar would give him no answer.

Anthony and Cleopatra hereupon prepare for War, and Cæsar at last marched against them, and sent Cornelius Gallus before with four Legions, who suddenly seized upon Paretonium, the prime City of Ægypt, toward Lybia. Anthony being informed hereof, marched towards Paretonium, hoping to draw Gallus his Souldiers to own him, but when on the contrary he had received great loss both by Sea and Land, he returned to Alexandria. Presently after Cæsar took Peluſium, by the Treachery of Cleopatra, who caused Selucus the Governour to deliver it up to him, hoping to draw his love to her, yet did she disown it to Anthony. Anthony prepares for War.

Cleopatra had Store-houses, and Monuments, admirable both for sumptuousness and highth, which she had built by the Temple of Isis, and thither thither ſhe had brought the moſt precious things of all her Royal Treaſure, as Gold, Silver, Emeralds. Pearls, Ebony, Ivory, and Cinnamon, as alſo ſtore of Lamps, and Flax: whereupon Cæſar fearing that ſhe would ſet fire of them, whereby he ſhould loſe ſuch Treaſures, he, to prevent deſpair, gave her hopes of favour, whilſt he marched towards the City, and ſhe privately forbad the Citizens of Alexandria to ſally out againſt him; whereas openly ſhe ſeemed to encourage them to oppoſe him.

Cæſar purſues him into Ægypt.

Cæſar being come before the City, Anthony ſallied out, and fought valiantly with him, and routed his Horſe, and drave them to the very Camp, of which, at his return, he boaſted to Cleopatra, and ſhe to reward him, gave him an Headpiece, and Armour all of Gold. The next day Anthony diſperſed tickets amongſt Cæſars Souldiers, promiſing them fifteen hundred Drachmaes a piece, if they would come over to him: Theſe Cæſar read to his Souldiers, rendring Anthony more hateful to them thereby, and they being exceeding angry that their fidelity was tempted, fought ſo valiantly at the next encounter, that Anthony was driven back out of the Field. After this, Anthony challenged Cæſar to a ſingle Duel, who anſwered, That Anthony had more wayes to die. He therefore conſidering that he could not die any way more honourably than in Battel, reſolved to ſet upon Cæſar both by Sea and Land.

Prodigies.

Many Prodigies fore-ran the bondage of Ægypt. In ſome places it rained bloud. Armies appeared in the Air. A huge Dragon was ſeen amongſt the Ægyptians, which hiſſed horribly. A Comet appeared, and the Images of the Dead. The Statues ſeemed to mourn: and Apis lowing heavily, ſhed ſome tears.

Cleopatras treachery.

On the Kalends of Auguſt, Anthony, early in the morning, went down to the Haven, to order his Fleet. But Cleopatra cauſed them to revolt from him, and to joyn with Cæſars Fleet: Whilſt Anthony beheld this, he was alſo forſaken by all his Horſemen, who revolted to Cæſar, and his Foot were beaten back into the City: whereupon he cryed out, that he was betrayed by Cleopatra. She fearing his anger, fled to her Monument, with one Eunuch, and two Maids, and ſent Anthony word that ſhe was dead: This he believing, deſired his faithful ſervant Erotes, according to his former promiſe, to kill him: Erotes drew out his Sword, as if he would do it, but Anthonies back being towards him, he ſlew himſelf; who falling at his feet, Anthony ſaid, Noble Erotes, thou haſt taught me what to do, but couldſt not endure to do it thy ſelf; So taking the Sword, he thruſt it into his Belly: yet after a while, the bloud ſtopping, he deſired thoſe about him to diſpatch him, but they all fled, which cauſed a great tumult.

Anthony kills himſelf.

Cleopatra from the top of the Monument perceiving it, (for the Gate was ſo made, that being ſhut it could not be again opened) ſhe ſent her Secretary to bring him into the Monument to her: Anthony was carried to the foot of the Monument, and being tyed in a Pulley, was with great pains drawn up by Cleopatra and her two Maids. It was a ſad ſight to ſee him thus drawn up, beſmeared with bloud, and ready to give up the Ghoſt. When he came to the top, he ſtretched forth his hands to Cleopatra, who receiving him in, laid him on a bed, tearing her head tire, breaſt and face with her own hands, ſo that ſhe was all gore bloud: He laboured to comfort her, and adviſed her to look to her affairs, and to ſave her life, if ſhe could do it without diſhonour, and that amongſt all Cæſars Friends, ſhe ſhould moſt truſt Proculeius, and ſo gave up the Ghoſt.

Cæſar bewails his Death.

In the mean time Dercetæus, one of Anthonies Guard, ſtole his bloudy Sword, and ran away with it to Cæſar, telling him what had happened: Cæſar then going into the inmoſt room of his Tent, much bewailed Anthony, his Kinſman, and Colleague, and who had been his companion in many Battels, and in the Government of the Empire. Then ſending for Proculeius, he com-commanded him, by all means, if it were possible, to save Cleopatra alive, fearing to lose her Treasures, and that she might adorn his Triumph. Proculeius, and one Epaphroditus, coming to the Monument, laboured to perswade Cleopatra to come forth: and at last by a wile, Proculeius seized upon her, yet granted her some dayes to embalm Anthonies Body, after which they brought her into the Palace, diminishing nothing either of her wonted train, or honour, that so she might do no mischief to her self.

Cæsar having conquered Alexandria, ascended into a Tribunal, and calling the Citizens before him, who for fear fell upon their knees, he told them that he freely pardoned them for their great God Serapis his sake. He also pardoned the rest of the Aegyptians, being unwilling to put so many men to death, which formerly had done so good service for the Romans. Of those that favoured Anthony, some he put to death, and others he pardoned, either of his own good will, or at the intercession of Friends. And whereas Anthony had with him many children of Kings, some as Hostages, others upon false accusations, some of them Cæsar sent home, others he joyned together in marriage, and some he kept by him. Coming to view the Tomb of Alexander the Great (which as Strabo reporteth, was of Glass) Cæsar put a Crown upon it, and strewed flowers over it, and worshipped it: and being asked whether he would see the Bodies of the Ptolomies? He answered, That he would see a King, not the dead. Neither would he go to see their God Apis, saying, that he used to worship Gods, not Oxen.

Cæsar pardons the Aegyptians.

Many great Kings and Captains desired to bury the Body of Anthony, but Cæsar would not take it from Cleopatra, who buried it splendidly and Magnificently, and Cæsar suffered her to take what Treasures she would for his Funerals. Cleopatra, through her much sorrow, fell into a Fever, and her Breast was troubled with inflammations and Ulcers, through the blowes which she had given her self, yet by the care of Cæsar, and the skill of her Physician, she was recovered: after which she delivered to Cæsar an Inventory of all her Treasures: and when Seleucus, one of her Treasurers, accused her for concealing some things, she leaped up, and taking him by the hair, she buffetted him soundly; at which Cæsar smiling, reproved her; to whom she answered, Is it not a great matter, O Cæsar, seeing thou pleasest to come and visit me in this condition that I am in, that I should be accused by my own Servant? If I have reserved some Jewels, not for my self, poor wretch, but that I might present Octavia, and thy Lyria, that by their intercessions I might find the more favour with thee, I hope it's no fault. Cæsar was glad at this, hoping that now she had a mind to live, but she deceived him.

Cleopatras Passion.

Shortly after she wrote a Letter, and sealing it up, she sent it by Epaphroditus to Cæsar, wherein she desired to be buried with Anthony: then adorning her self in her best apparel, she set an Asp to her left Arm, by the biting of which, she presently died, as in a slumber. As soon as Cæsar had read her Letter, he sent some in all haste to her to see what was done, who when they came, found Cleopatra dead upon a bed of Gold, in all her Royal Robes, and her two waiting Maids dead at her feet. Cæsar being informed hereof, admired, and pitied her, and grieved that he was deprived of the chief honour of his Triumph; and buried her in the same Sepulchre with Anthony, finishing the Tomb which she had begun: and her waiting Women by his command were buried honourably: She lived thirty nine years, and reigned twenty two.

She kills her self.

Cæsar having setled his affairs in Aegypt, passed through Syria into Asia, and from thence into Greece, and so to Rome, where he Triumphed three dayes, first for his Dalmatian, secondly, for his Accian, and thirdly, for his Aegyptian Victory, which was the most sumptuous, and set forth with the greatest preparations, wherein was carried in a Bed the Image of Cleopatra, and an Asp biting her Arm. After which, Cæsar enriched the Temple of his Father Cæsars Triumphs.

Julius

Julius with the Ægyptian ſpoyls: He alſo conſecrated many things to Jupiter Capitolinus, Juno, and Minerva: He brought into the Cell of Jupiter Capitolinus ſixteen thouſand pound weight of Gold, beſide Pearls and precious Stones, valued at fifty Millions of Seſterces, and Rome was ſo enriched with the Riches of Alexandria, that the prizes of every thing were doubled, and Intereſt fell from ten to four per Cent.

Thus Cæſar, in the ſpace of about ſixteen years, erected the Monarchy, which his Uncle Julius had begun, and though the means whereby he obtained it are not juſtifiable, yet afterwards he Governed it juſtly, and wiſely, and was one of the beſt Princes in the World: Gentle, Juſt, Merciful, Liberal, Valiant, and endued with many other Virtues; happy and ſucceſsful in his affairs, and much beloved of all: and the People and Senate of Rome gave him a new Name, which before that time was never heard of, calling him Cæſar Auguſtus, a Name which they held for holy, venerable, and of Great Majeſty, and which appertained to the Gods and their Temples, concerning which Ovid thus writes, Cæſars commendations.

Sed tamen humanis celebrantur honoribus omnes,
Hic ſocium ſummo cum Jove nomen habet, &c.

Faſtorum.

All common Perſons have their common Fame,
But He with Jove enjoyes an equal Name,
Of old moſt ſacred things Auguſta were:
Temples that Name, and hallowed things do bear:
Yea, Auguri depends upon this word,
And whatſoever more Jove doth afford:
Let it inlarge his rule and life, let all
Our Coaſt be guarded with a fenced Wall.

Flattery.

The Senate alſo by Oath approved all his acts, freed him from all tye of Laws, and that he ſhould have as abſolute power as the Laws, and that he might do all things, or not do them, according to his pleaſure. And now, becauſe the Books of the Sybils through age were worn out, Auguſtus gave charge to the Prieſts, with their own hands to write them out, and that no other ſhould read them.

Janus Temple ſhut up.

Cæſar Auguſtus (for ſo now we muſt call him) ſeeing himſelf in quiet, and without War, cauſed the Temple of Janus to be ſhut, whereas they religiouſly obſerved, that during the time of War it ſhould ſtand open: It had never before been ſhut ſince the foundation of Rome but twice: Once in the time of Numa Pompilius, the ſecond King thereof, and the other after the ſecond Punick War, when Titus Manlius was Conſul. Auguſtus ſhut this Temple three times, whereof this was the firſt: And now living in Peace and proſperity, he omitted no part of his care in the Government of the Roman Commonwealth, and the Provinces thereof: Sending thither Prætors, Pro-conſuls, and other Governours, which were excellent men, and fit for thoſe dignities: and himſelf gave direction, and was very diligent in all things touching Juſtice, Cuſtomes, Religion, and publick buildings, ſo as in all things his Reign was happy, peaceable, and quiet, during all his Life.

New troubles.

Yet in this ſo happy a time, ſome People and Nations ſtill affecting Liberty, laboured to ſhake off the Roman yoke, and thereby moleſted, and diſquieted the Empire, as the Spaniards, the Inhabitants of Illyricum, and the Pannonians. In Spain, the Cantabrians, the Aſturians, and part of Gallicia, paſſing their bounds, began a War againſt the Empire. Auguſtus being informed hereof, judging it to be a doubtful War, and of importance, commanded the Temple of Janus to be opened: and determined to go againſt them in Perſon, and to ſend other Captains to follow his other Wars. And accordingly Auguſtus went into Spain, and with three Armies made War againſt the People aforementioned, which proved very doubtful and deſperate, and laſted five years: and though he ſuppreſſed the Cantabrians, and Aſturians, and drave them to their Rocks and Mountains, yet before he could wholly ſubdue them, he was fain to bring a great Navy upon the Coaſt of France, to invade the Sea coaſts of Cantabria and Galizia, by which means he drave them to ſuch extremities by Land, that they were at laſt forced to ſubmit to his obedience.

of

Auguſtus his great favourite Agrippa ſerved him faithfully in this War, whom therefore he married to his Daughter Julia, who was the Widow of his Nephew Marcellus, the Son of his Siſter Octavia. And thus he brought all Spain into ſubjection to him, above two hundred years after the Romans began to make their firſt Wars there. So as no Province coſt Rome more Treaſure, more bloud, nor more time than Spain. Spain ſubdued.

This long and doubtful War being ſo happily finiſhed, Auguſtus was ſo pleaſed with it, that he gave commandment that the Temple of Janus ſhould again be ſhut, and came to Rome in great Triumph. But this Temple continued not long ſhut, for ſome Nations of the Germans rebelled, ſo that it was again opened. Theſe were the Inhabitants of Noricum (now Bavaria) and the Pannonia's, (now Auſtria and Hungary) and the two Miſſia's, (now Bulgary and Servia) as alſo Illyricum, (now Sclavonia) and the Province of Dacia, (now Tranſylvania and Walachia) and ſome others, though at ſeveral times.

Againſt theſe, Auguſtus ſent his Generals and Armies, amongſt which were his Sons in Law, the Sons of Livia, Tiberius Nero, who ſucceeded him in the Empire, and his Brother Druſus Nero, of whom Livia was with child when Octavian married her: and theſe two Brothers (though the War laſted ſomewhat long) vanquiſhed thoſe Nations, and obtained great Victories in Germany, and the confines thereof: eſpecially Tiberius, who in three years ſpace ſubdued the Pannonia's, Illyricum, and Dalmatia; for which Victories he afterwards entred into Rome in an Ovation Triumph with great Pomp and Honour. Marcus Craſſus alſo overcame and put to flight the Miſſians, a People who had never ſeen the Romans before. And when they were ready to give Battel, they ſaid, Tell us who you are that ſeek to moleſt and diſquiet us? We are (ſaid they) Romans, the Lords of Nations; whereupon they replied, It ſhall be ſo if you overcome us; which fell out accordingly.

But Auguſtus obtained not theſe Victories without ſome croſſes. For in theſe Wars died his Son in Law Druſus, who was highly eſteemed for his Noble acts, and great Victories; for the loſs of whom, both Auguſtus and Livia were much afflicted: But yet his grief was greater for the miſhap which befell Quintilius Varro, who was General of three Legions in Germany, and being careleſs, was ſurprized by the Almans, and himſelf, his Legions, and all his Auxiliaries were ſlain, and two Standards with the Imperial Eagles taken; for which he was ſo immoderately grieved, that he knocked his Head againſt the Wall, and cryed out unadviſedly, Quintilius Varro, Give me my Legions again: For certain months alſo, he ſuffered the hair of his Head and Beard to grow careleſly. And the very day of this unhappy accident, he did every year obſerve mournfully, with ſorrow and lamentation. Auguſtus his croſſes.

Of his Son in Law Druſus there remained two Sons, Germanicus and Claudius, which he had by Antonia, Auguſtus his Neece, and Daughter of his Siſter Octavia and Mark Anthony; of which Claudius was Emperour: And Germanicus married Agrippina the Daughter of Julia, Auguſtus his Daughter, by whom he had Caius Caligula, who alſo was afterwards Emperour. Auguſtus after many notable Victories, compelled his Enemies at length to ſue for Peace, whereupon again he commanded the Temple of Janus to be ſhut up, and from thenceforth all things ſucceeded proſperouſly with him.

Many Ambaſſadours come to him.

The Subjects of the Empire were now very obedient to him, and all other ſent their Ambaſſadours ſeeking his Favour and Friendſhip. The Indians in the remoteſt parts of the Eaſt, and the Scythians that inhabited the North: and the Parthians, an untamed People, ſent their Ambaſſadours to him, giving ſecurity to keep the Peace, and reſtoring to him the Standards and Eagles which were taken when Marcus Craſſus was ſlain. There came alſo Kings, who were Friends and Subjects to the Roman Empire, to do him Homage, laying aſide their Enſignes, and Royal Robes: and many of them built Cities to his Name, and for his Honour, calling them Ceſaria. So did Herod the Great in Paleſtine, King Juba in Mauritania, and others.

The World being thus at Peace and quietneſs, forty and two years being expired ſince that Auguſtus, after the Death of Julius Ceſar, came to Rome; In the time of this general Peace, was the Prince of Peace, our bleſſed Lord and Our Saviour Chriſt born.

Saviour Jeſus Chriſt born in Bethlem, of the Virgin Mary, Herod being King of Judea, placed there by the Romans, of whoſe bleſſed Life and bitter Death, as alſo of the order of his Miniſtry, and Miracles, ſee his Life, publiſhed by me, Anno Chriſti 1664. At which time there came forth a command from Ceſar Auguſtus, that all the Roman World ſhould be taxed, which taxing was firſt made, when Cyrenius was Governour of Syria, Luk. 2. 1. Out of which, a little Book was made by Auguſtus, in which all the publick riches were contained: as alſo how many Citizens, and Allies in Arms: what Navies: How many Kingdomes and Provinces: what Tribute and Cuſtomes there were: what neceſſary charges and Penſions went out. Shortly after, Auguſtus was called Lord by the People, but he did not only refuſe that Title, but forbad it by a publick Edict.

His Prudence and Juſtice.

Auguſtus enjoying ſo great proſperity, was yet nothing altered in his qualities and behaviour, as often it happens in other Princes; but rather became more mild, juſt, and affable, more courteous, liberal, and temperate. He eſtabliſhed very good Laws and Orders for the reformation and abuſes, and evil cuſtomes. He erected both within and without Rome many ſtately and ſumptuous Edifices, which made him to boaſt concerning Rome, Lateritiam inveni, Marmoream reliqui: I found it built with Brick, and left it built with Marble. He beſtowed great gifts and favours upon all ſorts of People. He delighted the People with Feaſts, and Playes of ſundry kinds, going himſelf in perſon to honour them: He ſent Colonies into ſundry parts and Provinces: He made excellent good Orders for the Governours and Government of the whole Empire: The like he did alſo for the Wars, and Martial Diſcipline. He ſhewed himſelf loving and ſociable to his Friends and Familiars, whom he honoured and loved much. Some conſpiracies againſt him which were diſcovered, he puniſhed without rigour, being more prone to pardon than to puniſh. Of murmurings and defamatory Libels, he never deſired to know the Authors; but anſwered them with gravity, giving ſatisfaction, and purging himſelf from thoſe things which were charged upon him. He was much addicted to, and affected with Learning, and himſelf was very Learned and Eloquent, and compiled ſome notable Books. He much honoured and rewarded Wiſe and Learned men: yet he eſcaped not the tainture of ſome

His Vices.

Vices, growing through humane frailty, and his great liberty: eſpecially he was much given to Women, though in his diet, apparel, and ornaments, he was very ſparing and modeſt. He gave himſelf alſo exceſſively to play at Dice, and other Games then in uſe.

His Croſſes.

Thus, though in many things he was very happy, yet, beſides his troubles and dangers, he was very unhappy in his Children and Succeſſours. For by his four Wives to whom he was married, he had only one Daughter called Julia,

by

by his third Wife Scribonia, and ſhe proved exceeding wanton, and unchaſte, yea, ſhe left nothing undone in Luxury and Luſt, that was poſſible for a Woman to do or ſuffer, accounting every thing lawful that pleaſed her. Yea, ſhe came to that height of laſciviouſneſs, that ſhe kept her Feaſting even in the Courts of Juſtice, abuſing thoſe very places with laſcivious acts, in which her Father had made Laws againſt Adulterers. Hereupon her Father was ſo enraged, that he could not contain his anger within his own Houſe, but publiſhed theſe things, yea, and communicated them to the Lords of the Senate. He kept himſelf alſo a long time from company, for very ſhame: He had thoughts of putting his Daughter to death; but at laſt he baniſhed her into Pandataria, an Iſland of Campania, her Mother Scribonia, of her own accord, accompanying her in her baniſhment. Julia being at this time thirty eight years old.

For want of Sons to ſucceed him, Auguſtus firſt adopted his Nephew Marcellus, the Son of his Siſter Octavia, to whom he firſt married his Daughter Julia: and Marcellus dying without Iſſue, he then married her to his Favourite Agrippa: who alſo left her a Widow, but yet he had by her three Sons, and two Daughters: Two of theſe Sons having been adopted by Auguſtus, died before him: whereupon he adopted the third, who bore his Fathers Name, Agrippa, the which adoption he afterwards revoked, for ſome diſpleaſure conceived againſt him: and laſtly, he adopted his Son in Law Tiberius Nero, and made him his Heir, whom alſo he married to his Daughter Julia, the Widow of Agrippa: yet this he did more through the importunity of his mother, than for any good liking that he had of him, being ſorry that ſuch an one ſhould ſucceed him.

Not long after, the firſt Letter of his Name, that was upon the Inſcription of his Statue that was ſet up in the Capitol, fell down, being ſtruck with a flaſh of Lightning; whereupon the Southſayers foretold that he ſhould live only one hundred dayes after, which was denoted by the Letter C. and that he ſhould be Canonized for a God, becauſe Æſar, which remained of his Name, in the Hetruſcan Tongue, ſignified a God. Hereupon he wrote a Catalogue of his doings, which he appointed to be engraven in Tables of Braſs, and to be ſet over his Tomb. A Prodigy.

Things being thus done, Cæſar Auguſtus being now ſeventy ſix years old, and odd dayes, having Reigned above fifty ſix, and being the beſt beloved, and the beſt obeyed Prince in the World, Death overtook him, which was occaſioned by a Flux, which held him for ſome dayes: and ſo Auguſtus died at Nolla in Campania, in the ſame Houſe and Chamber wherein his Father Octavius died, being the nineteenth day of Auguſt, upon which day he was firſt made Conſul: and in the fifteenth year after the birth of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. His Death.

He was generally lamented, and there was a univerſal ſorrow and heavineſs over the whole Empire for him. For he did wiſely and uprightly Govern that Monarchy which he had gotten by force and fraud. He was of a mean ſtature, of a very good ſhape and proportion of Body, of an exceeding fair face, mixed with modeſty and gravity: His eyes were very clear and bright: He was very adviſed in his ſpeeches, and loved to ſpeak quick, and briefly. His laſt Will and Teſtament was written a year and four moneths before he died, and left in the cuſtody of the Veſtal Virgins. His Character.

In his life-time he vvas very deſirous to reform abuſes in Rome, and in the firſt place he corrected ſome diſorders in the Senate, vvhom he reduced to the number of ſix hundred. He reformed vvhat vvas amiſs in their Playes and Games, in the Knights, and in their manner of ſuing for publick Offices. He ſet Fines upon their Heads that vvould not marry, and beſtovved much upon thoſe that had Wives and Children. He gave unto Hortenſius tvventy five thouſand Crovvns, to procure him to marry, that he might raiſe up iſſue to He was a Friend to marriage.

that Noble Family of the Hortenſes. He ordained that Maids ſhould be at leaſt twelve years old before they married: and ſuffered them to kill Adulterers, that were taken in the fact, and condemned the Sodomites without pardon. He gave order that none ſhould be put in nomination for Offices, but ſuch as were vertuous, and of good repute. He tied not himſelf to any certain hours for his meals, but uſed to eat when he was hungry, and that which he fed upon was neither dainty nor delicate, and he drank little Wine: Inſtead of a Looking-glaſs, he uſed to read or write whilſt his Barber was trimming him. He never ſpake to the Senate or people, or to his Souldiers, but what he had firſt written and premeditated, though he had words at command.

His temperance.

His Prudence. He delighted to read good Authors, but gathered nothing more than ſentences teaching good manners, and having written them out word for word, he gave Copies thereof to his familiar Friends, and ſent them about to the Governours of Provinces, and to the Magiſtrates of Rome. He was too much addicted to Divinations, and was marvellouſly afraid of Thunder and Lightning. Our Saviour Chriſt being born, all the Devils Oracles ceaſed, and the Oracle of Delphos was fain to confeſs it, and ever after remained Dumb: whereupon Auguſtus being aſtoniſhed, cauſed a great Altar to be ſet up in the Capitol, with an Inſcription, ſignifying, that it was the altar of the God firſt born. To prevent the great abuſe of Uſury, which undid many Families, he put into the Exchequer twenty five hundred thouſand Crowns, and ſuffered private men to take of it for three years, without Intereſt, putting in good ſecurity for the paying back of the principal: and condemned ſuch Uſurers as had taken more than the Law allowed, to pay four times as much to thoſe who had been oppreſſed by them.

The Devils Oracles dumb.

His Charity.

THE

THE

LIFE and DEATH

OF

TAMERLANE

THE

GREAT,

WHO

FLORISHED

ANNO CHRISTI 1400.

TAMERLANE was born at Samercand, the chief City of the Zagatajan Tartars; His Father was called Zain-Cham, or, as others will, Og, Prince of the Zagatajans, of the Country Sachithay (ſometimes part of the famous Kingdom of Parthia) third in deſcent from Zingis, the great and ſucceſsful Captain of the Tartars; which Og being a Prince of a peaceable nature (accounting it no leſs honour quietly to keep the Countries left him by his Father, than with much trouble and no leſs hazard to ſeek how to enlarge the ſame) long lived in moſt happy peace with his Subjects, no leſs happy therein than himſelf; not ſo much ſeeking after the hoarding up of Gold and Silver (things of that Nation not regarded nor valued) as contenting himſelf with the encreaſe and profit of his Sheep and herds of Cattel, then, and yet alſo the principal revenues of the Tartar Kings and Princes; which happily gave occaſion to ſome, ignorant of the manner and cuſtoms of thoſe Northern Nations and Countries

His Parentage.

His Fathers peaceable diſpoſition.

tries, to account them all for Shepherds and Herdſmen, and ſo alſo to have reported of this mighty Prince, as if he had been a Shepherds Son, or Herdſman himſelf, vainly meaſuring his Nobility by the homely courſe of life of his People and Subjects, and not by the honour of his Houſe, and Heroical Vertues, hardly to be paralelled by any Prince of that, or the former Ages.

He reſigns his Kingdom to his Son.

His peaceable Father now well ſtricken in years, and weary of the World, delivered up his Kingdom to this his Son (not yet paſt fifteen years old) joyning unto him two of his moſt faithful Councellours, Odmar and Ally, to aſſiſt him in the government of his State, whom Tamerlane dearly loved whilſt they lived, and much honoured the remembrance of them being dead.

Tamerlanes war againſt the Muſcovites.

His Victory.

The firſt proof of Tamerlanes Fortune and Valour, was againſt the great Duke of Moſco, or Emperour of Ruſſia, for ſpoiling of a City which had put it ſelf under his protection, and for entring his Country, and proclaiming War againſt him: whom he in a great Battel overthrew, having ſlain twenty ſeven thouſand of the Muſcovites Footmen, and between fifteen and ſixteen thouſand Horſemen, with the loſs of ſcarce eight thouſand Horſemen, and four thouſand Footmen of his own. After which Battel Tamerlane beholding ſo many thouſands of men lying dead upon the ground, was ſo far from rejoycing thereat, that turning himſelf to one of his familiar Friends, he lamented the condition of ſuch as command over great Armies, commending his Fathers quiet courſe of life, accounting him happy in ſeeking for reſt, and ſuch moſt unhappy, which by the deſtruction of their own kind, ſought to procure their own glory, proteſting himſelf even from his heart to be grieved to ſee ſuch ſad tokens of his Victory. Alhacen in his Arabick Hiſtory of Tamerlane, makes this Narrative of the Battel. The Muſcovites (ſaith he) had a great Army, which he had gathered together out of ſundry Nations: and Tamerlane intending not to put up ſuch wrongs and indignities, aſſembled all his Forces, and thoſe of his Allies. The Muſcovites forces were ſuch as had been well trained up in the Wars: For having lately concluded a Peace with the King of Poland, he had from thence ten thouſand very good Horſemen: There were alſo with him many Hungarian Gentlemen, under the conduct of one Uladiſlaus, who brought with him more than eight thouſand Horſe; ſo that he had in his Army about eighty thouſand Horſe, and one hundred thouſand Footmen. Tamerlane had in his Army about one hundred and twenty thouſand Horſe, and one hundred and fifty thouſand Foot, but not ſo good Souldiers as the Muſcovites; for his Subjects had been long trained up in peace under his peaceable Father; and though they had been ſometimes exerciſed, yet they wanted the practical part of War.

His merciful diſpoſition.

His Battel with the Muſcovites.

Tamerlanes order in his march was this, He cauſed all his Army to be divided into Squadrons, each conſiſting of ſix thouſand Horſe, ſave his own, which conſiſted of ten thouſand; ſo that he made eighteen Squadrons beſides his own. The Avantguard was conducted by Odmar, who led eight Squadrons which were flanked by forty thouſand Footmen, divided on the right and left ſides, who ſhot an infinite number of Arrows. The Battel was conducted by Tamerlane, who, with his own, led ten Squadrons, and fifty thouſand Footmen, the beſt and choiceſt Souldiers of his whole Army. The Prince of Thanais, his Kinſman, led the Arereward with ſix Squadrons of Horſe, and forty thouſand Foot; his forlorn Hope conſiſted of ſome three thouſand Horſe, adventurers. The Muſcovites fought by double Ranks with Lances, and they ſeemed to be a greater number than Tamerlanes, making a great noiſe: but Tamerlanes skill and multitude at length overcame the force and valour of the Muſcovites, the Victory bending to the Parthians ſide, which they purſued hotly. In this Battel Tamerlane was hurt on the ſide of the left Eye, and had two Horſes ſlain under him: and indeed that day Odmar was the ſafe-

His Victory.

He is wounded in the Battel.

guard.

guard of the Prince, but he loſt Ally, who was ſlain with an Arrow. The Battle being ended, Tamerlane returned thanks to God publickly for his Victory, and the next day reviewing his Army, he found that he had loſt between ſeven and eight thouſand Horſemen, and between three and four thouſand Footmen. The Muſcovites loſt about twenty ſeven thouſand Foot, and fifteen or ſixteen thouſand Horſe. Ally ſlain. Tamerlanes Piety.

The Prince ſlacked no time after ſo great a Victory, but marching on, came into the borders of the Muſcovites, whom he enforced this agreement. That they ſhould become his Tributaries, paying yearly one hundred thouſand Duckats: That the great Duke ſhould defray all the charges of the Wars, amounting to three hundred thouſand Duckats: That he ſhould withdraw his Army, and ſend back all the Priſoners: and that for the performance hereof, he ſhould give pledges; which ſhould be changed every year: All which being agreed to, he returned with great content and glory to his Father. The Articles of Peace.

Shortly after, the great Cham of Tartary (his Fathers Brother) being grown old, and out of hope of having any more Children; moved with the Fame of his Nephew after this Victory, ſent him divers preſents; and withal, offering him his only Daughter in Marriage, ſent him word that he would proclaim him Heir apparent to his Empire, as indeed in right he was, being his Brothers Son, and the Daughters not uſing to ſucceed in thoſe Empires: Which ſo great an offer Tamerlane gladly accepted, and ſo the marriage was afterwards with great Triumph at the old Emperours Court ſolemnized, and conſummated, and our Tamerlane according to his Uncles promiſe, and his own right was proclaimed Heir apparent of that great Empire. His marriage to the great Chams Daughter.

Thus was Tamerlane made Great, being ever after this marriage, by the old Emperour his Uncle and now his Father in Law, ſo long as he lived, notably ſupported, and after his death he ſucceeded him in that ſo vaſt, and mighty an Empire. Before his marriage Tamerlane would needs be crowned, to the intent that none ſhould think that the Crown came to him by the right of his Wife, but by his own right; and during his abode in the City of Quavicai, where the old Emperour was, he was entertained with all kind of Triumphs, wherein he always carried away the Bell, whether in ſhooting in the Bow, in changing of Horſes in the middeſt of their courſes, in Tiltings, and in all other exerciſes which required agility or ſtrength; and ſo after two Months he returned with his Wife to Samercand; in which City he delighted exceedingly to remain, becauſe the ſituation thereof was fair, and being watered with a great River, was a place of great Traffick, whereby it was made richer than any other in that Country: And whenſoever he received intelligence from the Emperour his Uncle, he ſtill imparted the ſame to Odmar, whom he uſed at his right hand in all his great affairs: There was alſo in his Court a Chriſtian whom he loved much, and every one greatly reſpected, called Axalla, a Genovois by Birth, brought up from his youth about his Perſon, for he countenanced all that worſhipped one only God that was the Creator of all things. And about this time the old Emperour ſent to him to ſtir him up to War againſt the great King of China, who ſtiled himſelf, Lord of the World, and Son of the Sun, who had exceeded his bounds, and incroached upon the Tartarian Empire: This was no ſmall enterpriſe, and therefore before he would begin the ſame, he ſent Ambaſſadours to the King of China to demand reſtitution of his Lands, and the paſſages of a River called Tachii, which were within the Tartarian Border, and on this ſide that ſtupendious Wall builded on purpoſe by the Kings of China for the defence of their Country againſt the incurſions of the Tartars: and whilſt he attended for the return of his Ambaſſadours, expecting a Negative anſwer, he cauſed his forces to be aſſembled together from all parts, appointing their rendezvous to be in the His Prudence. His agility and ſtrength. His Piety. His Juſtice. His preparations againſt the King of China.

Horda

Horda of Baſchir: The old Emperour alſo aſſembled for his aid, two hundred thouſand fighting men, wherein were all the brave men of his Court that were accuſtomed to the Wars: For this Emperour had greatly encreaſed his limits, and conquered a great Country, ſo as all theſe men were well trained up in the Wars, and had been accuſtomed to travel and pains. Theſe were to joyn with Tamerlanes Army in the Deſarts of Ergimul at a certain day. In the mean time Ambaſſadours which were ſent, return and inform the Prince that this proud King of China wondering how any durſt denounce War against him, making this lofty anſwer: That Tamerlane ſhould content himſelf with that which he had left him, which alſo he might have taken from him, &c.

The King of China's Pride.

This anſwer being heard, our Prince marched directly to his Army, gave orders for conveiance of Victuals from all parts, ſent to haſten forwards his Confederates, imparted the anſwer to the old Emperour, cauſed the inſolence of the King of China to be publiſhed, that all the world might know the juſtneſs of his cauſe; yet before his departure, he went to take leave of his own Father, who endued with a ſingular and Fatherly affection, kiſſed him a thouſand times, made ſolemn Prayers for his proſperity, drew off his Imperial Ring, and gave it him, telling him that he ſhould never ſee him again, for that he was haſting to his laſt reſt; and calling Odmar, bad him farewel, requiring his faithfulneſs to his Son.

His Piety towards his Father.

The Prince having performed this duty, returned to Samercand, where the Empreſs his Wife remained, whom he took along with him in this journey, as the manner of that Country is, and ſo preſently departed, committing the charge and care of his Kingdom in his abſence to one Samay, a man well practiſed in State affairs, who alſo had had the charge of our Prince in his youth. Theſe things being diſpatched, he marched forwards in the middeſt of his Army, which conſiſted of fifty thouſand Horſe, and a hundred thouſand Footmen, relying principally on the Forces of the great Cham his Uncle: yet he left order that the reſt of his Forces ſhould be ready to advance upon the firſt command, as ſoon as he ſhould be joyned with his Uncles Army. In his march he was ſtayed by the way in regard of ſome diſtemper of his body, contracted by reaſon of his change of the air, yet the Forces which Catiles, Captain of the Army of the great Cham conducted, went daily forwards. Now the news of his diſtemperature was bruted abroad in all places, yet did he not neglect to ſend to the great Cham, and often to advertiſe him of the ſtate of his health, to the end that the ſame ſhould not cauſe any alteration which might ariſe in that great Empire whereunto he was lately advanced: For he was very ſuſpicious of a great Lord, named Calix, who was diſcontented with his advancement, and had not yet acknowledged him, as all other his Subjects had: and indeed it was not without cauſe that he ſuſpected him, for Calix being informed that the Forces of the great Cham were advanced beyond the Mountains, having paſſed the River of Meau, and were encamped at Bouprou, and that Tamerlane was ſick, he thought it a fit time for his enterprize, and thereupon aſſembling the greateſt part of his moſt faithful followers, he told them that now was the time for them to ſhake off the yoak of the Parthians, who otherwiſe would enſlave them; and ſeeing that now their Prince was ſo badly minded as to tranſlate the Empire to Tamerlane of his own mind, without calling them to Council which had intereſt in the election, that this was the only means to aſſure their liberty, which otherwiſe was like to be loſt: He cauſed alſo a rumour to be ſpread, that Tamerlane was very ſick, the Emperour old and crazy, and that his Forces were far ſeparated from him; yet like cunning Traytors, they diſpatched away a Meſſenger to the great Cham, to aſſure him that they bended not their Forces againſt him, but were his faithful and obedient Subjects; and they only armed themſelves

His ſickneſs.

His Policy.

The Rebellion of Calix.

The Rebels ſubtilty.

becauſe

becauſe they would not be governed by the Parthians, their ancient Enemies.

As ſoon as our Prince was advertiſed of the pretences of Calix, he marched one days journey forward, to the end that he might approach unto Calibes, who, what face ſoever he ſet on the matter, yet hearkened what would become of Calix, that he might likewiſe make ſome commotion. This Calibes was by Tamerlane made Commander of his Avantguard, which conſiſted of Parthians, yet he had joyned with him the Prince of Thanais, without whom he could not do any thing. Tamerlane alſo gave ſpecial commandment, that the paſſages (which were not many) ſhould be diligently guarded, to the end that the King of China ſhould not be advertiſed of theſe tumults: and ſo giving to Odmar the leading of his Avantguard, he haſted forwards; And ſurely it was high time for him ſo to do, or elſe all had been revolted: for Calix having aſſembled a hundred thouſand fighting men, preſented himſelf before the great City of Cambalu, chief of the Province of Cathai, the Inhabitants whereof came out to meet him, receiving him with all the joy that might be.

Tamerlanes Prudence.

His march againſt Calix.

Tamerlane in his March went to Caindu, and from thence to Calatia, where he expected to meet with the forces of his native Country of Sachetai, yet did he not neglect to ſend forward his Army towards Cambalu, which cauſed the Inhabitants, to their great terrour, to think that all his forces were already on their neck. Calix perceiving that the Citizens began already to repent his entertainment, thought it not ſafe to remain amongſt them, and therefore, withdrawing himſelf, he ſent for his forces from all parts, reſolving to meet Tamerlane in the Field, and to put all upon the event and hazard of a Battel. He drew out of Cambalu fifty thouſand men, whereof twenty thouſand were Citizens, the other thirty thouſand were the Garriſon-Souldiers, placed there by the old Emperour, Calix having corrupted their Leaders, and ſo procured them to joyn with him in this revolt. In ſhort, having aſſembled all his forces, his Army conſiſted of fourſcore thouſand Horſe, and one hundred thouſand Footmen, which he gathered from all parts.

Calix leaves Cambalu.

The number of Calix Army.

In the mean time Tamerlanes Army marching forward, his Scouts, which were two thouſand Horſe, had news of the Army of Calix, which came forward directly towards them, of which they ſpeedily advertiſed the Emperour, who thereupon preſently ſent two thouſand Horſe more, to the end that they ſhould keep the paſſages of a certain River called Brore, by which River Victuals were conveyed to his Army: as alſo to win time, the Prince well knowing that the motions of a Civil War are furious at the beginning, and that therefore it's beſt to reſiſt ſlowly, always drawing them out at length, if it be poſſible. For when means, money, and victuals fail, the people uſe to be ſenſible of their faults, and to return home.

Tamerlanes Prudence.

The old Emperour ſent to him to adventure all upon a Battel, delivering up into his hands the ſafety of his life and eſtate, that thereby he might end his days in peace: By this means forces came to Tamerlane on all hands, whoſe Army daily encreaſed; whereas on the contrary the Enemies Army was then in its chiefeſt force, and began to feel the want of Victuals.

Calix was about forty years old, a Captain renowned with the great Cham, and one of the chiefeſt in dignity and place about him, ſo that many of the Tartars had always reſpected him as a Perſon moſt worthy of the Empire, if the glory of Tamerlane and his reputation had not ſo far exceeded.

Tne Armies began to be in view one of another about eight a clock in the morning, and many skirmiſhes began betwixt them before they came to the main Battel, The place wherein they met at that time, was a great Plain, with like advantage on either part. Odmar led the Avantguard, wherein were forty thouſand Horſe, and eighty thouſand Foot, which he divided into three Squadrons; the firſt whereof he ſent before him to begin the Battel. Tamerlane marched in the ſame order, but his Squadrons were much ſtronger. The Footmen of both made the right and left Wings. Tamerlane had drawn out ſix thouſand Parthian Horſemen, and two thouſand Tartarians for his Arearguard, which he committed to his faithful Servant Axalla; a man of great judgment, quick of conceit, and in great eſteem amongſt the Souldiers, although, he being a Chriſtian, worſhipped God in another manner than they did; and he had many other Chriſtians with him, whom he had drawn from the Georgians, and the Euxine Sea, who fought with great agility.

The Battel between Tamerlane and Calix.

Calix on the other ſide, who was a well ſpoken man, was exhorting and encouraging his Souldiers to fight for his Fortune, and the Liberty of their Nation; He divided his Army into three main Battels, himſelf remaining in the midſt, encompaſſed with his Footmen, and ſo the Battels joyned, where, after a terrible fight, Calix fell into Axalla's hands, being taken fighting valiantly, which Axalla cauſed to be preſently proclaimed through the Army, to the overthrow of the courage of all the Adverſaries, who hereupon immediately fled. Calix was kept till the next day, and then by a Council of War was adjudged to death; whereupon Tamerlane cauſed his head to be ſtricken off, the which he ſent as a preſent to the Inhabitants of Cambalu: The like he cauſed to be done to all the chief Leaders, not out of a cruel diſpoſition, but enforced thereto by neceſſity, knowing very well that the way to cut off the foot of Civil War, is to puniſh the Heads of the ſame, which, as Hydra's, grow up too faſt.

Calix beaten and taken priſoner.

Calix condemned and executed.

After this, Tamerlane with his Army marched into the Kingdom of Cathay, a Country rich in graſs, and all kind of paſtures, abounding with great quantity of beaſts and people, which knew not what War meant, and the Prince gave command that they ſhould not be uſed as Enemies, but as his good Subjects; and whereas divers Cities had adhered to Calix, they came now and humbled themſelves before him, craving pardon, which he gave them, enjoyning them only to provide victuals for his Army, which alſo they willingly did. This example of Lenity of was no ſmall importance for the appeaſing of others, which had put all their hope in extremity, reſolving to ſell their lives dear, and eſpecially the Inhabitants of Cambalu had taken this reſolution, but being informed of the Emperours clemency, they changed their purpoſe: Yet as the Army daily approached nearer, their fears encreaſed, but Tamerlane was daily informed by his Friends in the City, that the Inhabitants reſolved to obey the Conquerour, and therefore leaving his Army at Gonſa, he only ſent thirty thouſand to the City, which was the ordinary Garriſon, and within two hours after, entred the City himſelf, where he was received with great magnificence: yet would he not pronounce their pardon, but referred all to the old Emperour, and to the ordinary courſe of Juſtice: For which end he ſent one of his Favourites to the old Emperour, to certifie him of his Victory, of the death of Calix, and that the chief of his Faction remained Priſoners with him; as alſo to know what Juſtice he would appoint to be inflicted upon thoſe Citizens which were the authors of the revolt of this City, and ſo after eight days he departed, and not many days after, he had intelligence that the great Cham, his Uncle, had cauſed juſtice to be done on the chief movers of ſedition in Cambalu, ſo that the People complained of the old Emperours cruelty, but commended the mercy of Tamerlane.

Tamerlanes march into Cathay.

Cambalu yielded to him.

His departure from Cambalu.

His Policy.

When he came back to his Army, he was received of all his Souldiers with loud acclamations, calling him, Moſt Great Emperour, and moſt Victorious. Amongſt his Captains he diſcourſed of the beauty and greatneſs of the City of Cambalu, and afterwards asked Odmars adviſe whether it were not beſt best for him to visit the old Emperour, and with his Empereſs to ſpend the Winter with him at Quinſay? Odmar, remembring the honour which he had received there, eaſily perceived his inclination to that journy, yet by all means diſſwaded him from it: To which Tamerlane anſwered, that he had always found his fidelity and love to him, which he was ſorry that he could not recompence to the full; But (ſaith he) whereas I had thought to give my ſelf ſome eaſe: I perceive that inſtead of the delicacies, and pleaſures of Quinſay, I muſt make the deſarts of Cipribit my reſting place after my travels in this new Victory: yet a rumour being ſpread that the Prince intended to viſit the Emperour, every man began to deſire to return into his own Country, hoping to enjoy the ſweetneſs of his native ſoil: which Tamerlane being informed of, calling his Army to a Rendevouz, he thus ſpake unto them, we have (my faithful Souldiers) begun an enterpriſe againſt the King of China, who hath of late repulſed even beyond the Mountains, the Tartarian name, but were hindred to our great grief by the fooliſh raſhneſs of Calix, and were driven to turn the bridle to puniſh him, wherein you have all aſſiſted me. It grieves me that I cannot as well boaſt of the freſh ſpoils of a ſtranger, as I may (by the means of your weapons) of thoſe of our unfaithful Subjects, and as in times paſt of the fierce Muſcovites, againſt whom, with your aſſiſtance, I made trial of my firſt Arms: but for this laſt Victory being againſt our own Subjects, I cannot ſpeak of it without ſhedding tears, deſiring to bury ſuch Victories in oblivion, together with all the glory and honour gotten thereby. Neither do I recount theſe things to you, but to ſhew that I forget not your faithfulneſs, and the great travel you have endured for my ſake: we muſt not therefore be weary, but muſt turn our weapons againſt thoſe which imagine us to be full of troubles, whereas we are indeed Victorious: Our companions, and all our amunition is advanced near to our Enemy already, we muſt in that place (my Souldiers, and friendly Followers) paſs over the reſt of Winter; Our Companions look for us; our Enemies are ſecure, and look not for us at this ſeaſon of the year, and know that our Army that is already there, is not ſufficient for offence, but only for defence. You ſhall receive double pay, the better to furniſh you againſt the injury of cold; and as we ſhall be apparelled with double garments, ſo I hope we ſhall be cloathed with double glory.

Odmars good Counſel.

Tamerlanes Speech to his Army.

Having thus ſpoken, his Souldiers all cryed, One God in Heaven, and one Emperour on Earth, ſhewing their willingneſs to obey his commands.

The Prince after this, remained there eight days longer, ſending back Zamai with twenty five thouſand Horſe, and fifty thouſand Foot to Sachethay, for the ſafety of his eſtate in thoſe parts: and ſo after ſolemn and publick Prayers, the Army began to march forwards: He forgat not likewiſe to diſpatch away a Meſſenger to the Great Cham, to acquaint him with all his purpoſes, which he approved very well of: By the ſame Meſſenger he alſo beſeeched him in the Spring to ſend him fifty thouſand men to recruit his Army, and ſome moneys for the payment of his Souldiers, which alſo he granted; ſending alſo good ſtore of warlike munition, and plenty of Victuals, knowing how much the ſucceſs of the War would advance the Tartarian greatneſs and profit.

His Piety.

The Army being upon their March, in thirty eight days came to Cipribit, yet met with many inconveniences by the way. There they had news of Calibes, who was glad to hear how buſineſſes had paſſed, and came to viſit the Prince, who entertained him very courteouſly, acquainting him with his purpoſe, and alſo underſtood by him how all things paſſed in the Kingdom of China. The next day the Prince came to Pazanfou, where Calibes Forces were, who had often fought with, and tried the valour of the Chinois, but found it much inferiour to their own: There the Prince took a general Muſter of all his Army, cauſed them to be paid, took notice of their countenances, whilſt they all cryed out, God ſave the victorious and invincible Emperour, according to their cuſtom.

His march towards China.

The Prince of Thanais, who commanded the Army with Calibes, had diligently viewed the Wall, and the ways by which he might forcibly enter into China, and had ſent many Spies by certain ways through the Mountains into that Country, by whom he was advertiſed of all their proceedings: He had alſo gained by his courteſie, a Lord of thoſe Mountains, called the Lord of Vaucheſu, that commanded over a great Countrey, who being deſirous of a new Maſter, and to ſubmit to Tamerlane, had told the Prince of Thanais, that he was able to do the Emperour good ſervice, and to help him much in his Wars againſt the Chinois: This the Prince of Thanais diſcovered to Tamerlane, who was very deſirous to ſpeak with this Lord; whereupon a day was appointed, and Tamerlane without moving of his Army, went to the Tents of the Prince of Thanais, where this aforeſaid Lord met him; and the Emperour having heaped upon him many gifts of fair Horſes, and rich Furs, and other rare things; this Lord ſpake thus unto him, Know, my Lord, that it is but loſt labour for you to think that with your Armies you ſhall be able to force this Wall, made by the Chinois to hinder the incurſion of your Subjects: the Defendants have too much advantage therein; I doubt not of your Souldiers valour and courage, I know you have conquered many Nations with them, and that whatſoever you command them, they will effect it, or die in the enterpriſe: I know that you have great and wiſe Captains with you, and that you, of all Perſons in the World, are moſt worthy to command them: But all this will be but in vain againſt the Wall of the Chinois, where, I aſſure you, are fifty thouſand men to keep it; neither can you ſtay there ſo ſhort a time, but there will come fifty thouſand more to aſſiſt them, led by one Xianxi, who had already received ſuch a commandment: The King of China will himſelf follow, who will give you Battel with two hundred thouſand Horſemen, and as many Foot; and though happily your Fortune, and valour may carry away the Victory, yet I believe it will coſt you dear: But to ſhew you how much the reputation and courteſies of your Servants have prevailed with me, I will direct you in a way whereby fifty thouſand of your men may go into China, whom I my ſelf will conduct, and they ſhall come upon thoſe which guard the Wall, in a manner before they are diſcovered. In the mean time you ſhall lead your Army to a place which I will direct you to, where you may win eaſily a Mountain which will give you great advantage againſt the Chinois. For I aſſure my ſelf, that when they ſhall perceive your men to be paſſed; they will loſe their courage, ſo that you may eaſily win the paſſage to aſſiſt your Army, which ſhall be led by me amongſt them; and to aſſure you of my fidelity, I will deliver into your hands my Wife, my only Son, and two little Daughters. I have alſo one Brother, who, I aſſure my ſelf, will follow me to do you ſervice.

A Chinois Lord comes to Tamerlane.

His Speech to Tamerlane.

The Emperour having heard this, much rejoyced at it, hoping that his affairs would ſucceed happily, and kept this very ſecret, not revealing it to the Prince of Thanais himſelf, none being preſent at the diſcourſe but the Lord and his Interpreter, and ſo heaping new favours upon him, he was conducted back by the Prince of Thanais with all the honour that might be.

Then the Emperour returned to his Quarters, and the next day imparted the whole matter unto Odmar; and then calling Calibes, he asked what he had learn'd concerning China during his abode there: To which Calibes made this Anſwer, Know, my Lord, that I am your ſlave to obey you; but ſeeing you command me to give you an account of all I know concerning the Kingdom of China, for that I have remained theſe ſix moneths upon the borders; I can aſſure you, that the King of China who now reigneth, is of great reputation, and hath encreaſed the Limits of his Kingdom more than any of his Predeceſſors: His ſtrength conſiſteth in this Wall, oppoſed againſt us, which he hath made to prevent the inrodes of our Nation: I believe there are above fifty thouſand to defend it, and that of his beſt trained trained Souldiers, and I know no good means to force this Wall without much hazard, and great loss of your men.

Calibes ſpeech to Tamerlane.

To this Tamerlane answered, I hope that the great God, whose honour I will defend against those Idolaters, will find out means to effect it; and so dismissing Calibes, he appointed his Army to remove to a certain place, where he meant to chuse out fifty thousand men, whom he would deliver to the Prince of Thanais, and Axalla; which accordingly he did, and directed them to follow this Chinois Lord, who was now again come to him, and to do as they should be directed by him: In the mean time himself, with all the rest of the Army approached the Wall directly over against Quaguifou. Tamerlanes confidence of success.

The Army, led by the Prince of Thanais, having marched ten Leagues by the conduct of the Chinois Lord, entred without resistance, and after a short repast, they marched directly towards those that guarded the Wall, who suspected no such matter, but only had an eye to those which came to force the Wall. But it fell out far otherwise, for just as Tamerlane with his Army came to the Wall, they saw Axalla with twenty thousand, being followed by the Prince of Thanais, with thirty thousand choice Souldiers more, who, without any words, fell upon the Chinois; and Odmar, who gave the first assault upon the Wall, easily in that distraction brake through, and so the Chinois were cut off between the two Armies: and Axalla, before the Prince of Thanais came up to him, had routed them; Great riches were gotten that day, and the King of China's Cozen was taken Prisoner; much Gold was found, as well on their Arms, as on their Horses Furniture, but they shewed no great valour. Forces sent into China. The wall forced. His first victory in China.

The news of this overthrow being carried to the King of China, who was now at Quantifou; it brought great astonishment to him, for that he judged it impossible to have been effected, so that every one was filled with tears, fears, and lamentations for their friends. Yet the King gathers forces from all parts, calling also the Priests, and such as had the charge of his unholy holies, to come unto him, commanding them to offer sacrifices to their gods, whereof the Sun is principal, requiring the same to be observed through all the Cities; and then that every one that was able to bear Arms, should mount on horseback, and speedily repair to the King at Paguinfou, whither he suspected that Tamerlane would march, for that it was one of the Cities neerest to the borders. In the mean time Tamerlane beat down the Wall, the better to assure his return, as also the Fortresses upon all the passages, all which, upon his Victory, were easily surrendred to him. He shewed himself very courteous to the people upon the Mountains, and gave to the Lord that had conducted his Army, a Country which bordered upon his, wherein were seven or eight good Towns, who came and delivered the Keyes to him: He gave him also the Government of the Frontier-Province of Xianxi, shewing himself to be a Prince of his word, and reserved the rewarding of his Brother till he had farther opportunity. The King of China's fear. The King of China's superstition. The wall beaten down. Tamerlanes courtesie. His gratitude.

Whilst he was thus employed, news was brought him, that the King of China had assembled his Forces, and was marching forward, himself being there in person; as also that he had strengthened the Garrisons in all his Cities, which of themselves were well fortified. Upon his intelligence, Tamerlane called a Council of War, and having heard the opinions of all his Captains, he resolved to take in some famous City, that thereby his Army might be better provided for, and then to give the King of China battel in the field. For the effecting of the first, he resolved to assault Paguinfou, which was a great City, strongly fortified, and well replenished with people; and for this end, he sent Odmar with forty thousand Horse to summon it, and to prevent the farther victualling of it, and to hinder the driving away of the cattel out of the Champion-countrey about it, which might nourish his Army: He also caused the Lord Axalla (whom now he had made Lieutenant General of all his His Policy. He besieges Paguinfou.

his Foot) to follow Odmar vvith all his Foot, which vvere near a hundred and fifty thouſand men, well trained, and expert in War, himſelf marching immediately after vvith all his Horſemen, Artillery, Engines, and other Ammunitions belonging to the War, directly to Paguinfou.

Odmar made ſuch haſte that he arrived unexpected by the Citizens, vvho rather looked for their King than for an Enemy: and having taken much cattel, vvherevvith that Countrey abounded, he pitched his tents on the farther ſide of the City: There he continued two or three dayes, giving the City many Alarms, till the Infantry, led by that brave Chriſtian Genuois, ſhewed themſelves in the Plain of Paguinfou: Then was the City ſummoned, but they returnd anſvver, That they were reſolved to live and die in the ſervice of their Prince. By the way you muſt underſtand, that about forty years before, the Father of this preſent King of China had conquered this City and Countrey from the Tartars, and had ſo planted the ſame with new Colonies, that but few of the Tartarians remained, except only in the flat Countrey, and ſome ſmall walled Towns, who all came with their Keys, and willingly ſubmitted to Tamerlane, whereby he had great plenty of victuals in his Army, which made him hope for good ſucceſs; there being nothing that doth ſooner overthrow great Armies, than the want thereof.

Formerly taken from the Tartars.

Thus was Paguinfou beſieged round, the footmen lying within a flight-ſhoot of the Walls, the Citizens and Souldiers uſing their beſt endeavour for their defence, and Tamerlane doing the like for their offence.

Axalla having viewed a great Suburb, which was in length almoſt half a League, ſuppoſed that the Citizens kept no watch there, and therefore acquainting the Emperour with his purpoſe, in the firſt watch of the night, his men being all ready with ſcaling Ladders, he aſſaulted the ſame in ſundry places, and after a great fight entred, and cut in pieces at leaſt eight thouſand men, which were within the ſame; yet on one ſide, where they expected to be aſſaulted, he loſt many of his men. The taking of this Suburb did greatly aſtoniſh the Citizens, who obſerving the valour of the Tartarians, began to ſuſpect their own ſafety: By this Suburb there ran a River, which being now under the command of Axalla, he ſtopt all proviſion from going to the City.

A Suburb taken by ſtorm.

In the mean time the King of China's Army approached, which was very great; whereupon the Emperour determined to go in perſon, and meet him, with the greateſt part of his Horſemen, but to leave moſt of his Foot to continue the ſiege, being very deſirous to take the City; for the accelerating whereof, he cauſed his Engines for battery to approach, as Rams, and ſuch like; ſo that the City was aſſaulted on two ſides very couragiouſly, and in the end, through the valour of Axalla, who gave an aſſault with twenty thouſand of his beſt Souldiers, he won the Wall, and at the command of the Emperour lodged there, who deſired rather to have the City by Treaty than ſtorm, the City being great and rich, and the Enemy but thirty Leagues from thence, and therefore he feared leſt his Army ſhould be found in diſorder, and knowing alſo that rich Souldiers never fight well. Beſides, he intended to draw out of that wealthy City ſuch things as he ſtood in need of, and to make it his Magazine for the time to come. Yet though the Wall was won, the Enemies wanted not heart to defend themſelves valiantly, hearing that their King was coming for their relief: but it ſo happened, that an Engine ſhooting a bullet, ſlew the Governour; whereupon the Citizens were ſo diſcouraged, that they reſolved to yield, ſaving their lives, and the Souldiers to march away with Horſe and Arms. The conditions were admitted, and there came out of the City eighteen thouſand Souldiers, almoſt all the Inhabitants remaining behind: This ſiege had laſted two months, and the City had in it at firſt, thirty thouſand Souldiers. Axalla had the honour

The wall won.

Tamerlanes Prudence.

The City ſurrendred.

honour of winning this City, and therefore was made Governour of it, and all the Country belonging to it, but he beſeeched the Emperour to beſtow it upon ſome other Perſon, reſerving for himſelf the hope of his Maſter, in whoſe fortune he would take part: This gave great content to Tamerlane, who much deſired the ſervice of Axalla; and upon his refuſal, the charge was conferred upon the Prince of Thanais, with the Title of Vice-Roy: Then did Tamerlane give notice of his affairs to the old Emperour, and having paid his Souldiers, and ſetled all things in the beſt manner he could, he marched forward; and taking a general Muſter of his whole Army, Horſe and Foot, he found them to be diminiſhed ten thouſand men only. And ſo with his Army he ſpent one whole day in Prayer, calling upon the immortal, inviſible, invincible, and incomprehenſible God, and then went directly to meet the Enemy, who was at Sintehu with all his own and the forces of his Allies, and as ſoon as he received news that Tamerlanes Army was advanced over the River of Chulifu, the King of China marched directly towards them with great magnificence: There was nothing to be ſeen in his Army, but Gold and precious Stones: He himſelf uſually rode in a Chariot whereof every part ſhone with Gold, Pearls, Rubies, and Diamonds. He was of the age of about three and thirty, and had been brought up in pleaſures, and not under the bloody Enſigns of Mars: So that he was very inſolent in threatnings, bravadoes, and defying to the Battel: He often accuſed Tamerlane for ſurprizing him before he was ready, not giving him warning, &c.

Axalla modeſty.

Tamerlanes Piety.

The riches of the Chinois.

The rumours of his riches ſo fired the ſpirits of the Tartarians, that they longed to be at the Battel: and ſo both ſides haſted forwards, and in the way, there was a City, called Tunichevoy, ſurrendred to Tamerlane, which afforded him much refreſhing for his Army: And thus the two Armies drawing near together, Tamerlane made choice of a place in his judgment moſt advantageous for the Battel; and having ſet down to Odmar the Order which he would have to be obſerved, he longed to ſee his Enemy; Then did he ſend before him five or ſix thouſand Horſe, as Scouts, under Calibes, and himſelf went with them, and having viewed the great confuſed Army of his Enemies, which came continually forward, he commanded Calibes to retire himſelf ſo ſoon as they drew near to him. And bring (ſaith he) this great cloud to me, which I hope ſoon to diſperſe: and ſo retiring to his Army, he encouraged them, aſſuring them of the Victory. He placed all his Foot-men, which were about a hundred and twenty thouſand, along a Mountain, planting great ſtore of Artillery for their guard; Many of his Foot-Souldiers were armed after the Chriſtian manner, who were all commanded by Axalla: His Horſemen were in a Battalia in a great plain, who upon any diſadvantage could retire to the aſſiſtance of the Footmen: the Horſemen were eighty thouſand; Calibes with the Scythians were in the Avantguard, being thirty thouſand Horſe, who were to receive Odmar when he ſhould retreat from the Enemy, as he was commanded; thirty thouſand more were appointed for Odmar, and Tamerlane himſelf remained in the Arrear at one of the Wings of his Footmen: His purpoſe was to let that ſixty five thouſand Horſe under two ſuch Gallant Captains, to break the force of the Enemy, hoping after them to have a good market, cauſing his Foot to march forward, and reſerving with himſelf twenty thouſand of his beſt Horſe, who of themſelves were able to make a new Battel if any miſchance ſhould befal the former: For he underſtood that it was the cuſtom of the Kings of China to encloſe themſelves in the midſt of their Chariots with their Footmen, and not to hazard their Perſons, but upon extremity.

Tamerlane prepares for the Battel.

The Chinois failed not to march directly unto Calibes, the whole Army following and ſetting upon him: Calibes with his ſix thouſand Scythian Horſe, after their uſual manner, in retreating gave many charges, giving and receiving hurt. The King of China marched with much gallantry with his Army, which which seemed to be twice so big as that of Tamerlanes: He had very many armed Chariots, wherein he put his principal trust; they had much Gold and Silver, as well in the trappings of their Horses, as on their Armour, which glistred exceedingly against the Sun, to the Admiration of the Tartars. Tamerlane, who with a Troop of Horse beheld the Chinois marching after Calibes, commended greatly the drawing forth of their men to compel Calibes to fight, endeavouring to discover and note with his eye the place whereabouts the Kings person was, having by him the Chinois Lord to instruct him, who knew well the manner of their fight. They had no Avantguard, but were all in a gross, commanded by the King, inclosed within his Chariots, which being shewed to Tamerlane by this Lord, he turned to those Captains that were near him; and said, Yet must we disperse this guilded cloud, and the King of China and my self must make a partition thereof.

The Battel begins.

Thus having sufficiently viewed the Enemy, and observed their manner of marching, he thought it not convenient to suffer them to take breath, nor to rally, being something disordered in their march, whereupon he sent to Calibes to will him to begin the fight; and when those that were with him should be weary, to retreat to him: But assoon as his Scythians heard this word Fight, they required the first charge, with a young Lord that commanded over them called Ziochabanes, making it to appear to the Chinois, to what end their former flight was, charging very furiously upon the formost of the Enemies, which occasioned the first beginning of the Battel: And indeed there could not be seen a more Gallant onset, wherein the Scythians desired to manifest the valour of their Nation, and to procure honour to their Prince. This fight endured a long hour before they had overthrown Calibes: Tamerlane beheld all patiently, saying, that the great multitude (how disorderly soever they were) would at length carry it away from the order and valour of his Souldiers; yet could there not be discerned any alteration of his countenance, adversity and prosperity being both alike so indifferent to him.

The Scythians charge the Chinois:

Tamerlanes Constancy.

Calibes being wounded, retired himself near to the Emperour, having with him two thousand Horse that were rallied again, many more flocking to him: The Emperour viewed his wound, causing him to be conducted behind his Footmen, and care to be taken for the dressing of his wound, and of such others as were wounded with him. Calibes with his thirty thousand Scythians was not able to charge through the Chinois, but when they retreated, Odmar with his Parthian Horsemen advanced forward, and used them more roughly, for he ran clean through them, and returned by the right wing of the Army, where he fought most valiantly, and having beaten them within the Kings Chariots, he thought he should not do wisely to attempt the breaking of such Forces.

Calibes wounded retreats.

The Parthians charge thorow.

The King of China coming forwards, and the Horsemen that had been broken by Odmar, joyning themselves to him, Odmar sent to Tamerlane, desiring him that the Footmen and Artillery might advance forward, sending him word that he might assure himself of the Victory. Hereupon Tamerlane commanded Axalla to advance with fifty thousand Foot, and part of the Artillery, requiring him to set upon the Chariots, and to make an entrance. The Artillery marching in the first place did greatly astonish the enemy; for the Governours of the Horses belonging to the Kings Chariots could not rule them; it made also a great spoil. Axalla perceiving the disorder, hasted forwards till they came to hand-blows. The King of China had yet about his Person a hundred and fifty thousand men: Yet Axalla, full of courage, fought so valiantly, that they never beheld any man to do more bravely. During this fight, Odmar again charged the Horsemen that were retired to the Kings aid, and put them to flight. Then did Tamerlane himself march forward with the rest of the Footmen for the aid of Axalla, and brake through,

The Foot charge.

Axallas valour.

Tamerlane chargeth.

even

even to the Perſon of the King of China, who as yet was encloſed within a ſecond rank of Chariots, with about thirty or forty thouſand men, and after he had fought two or three hours, the Horſe aſſiſting the Foot, and they principally whom the Prince had kept as a reſerve, the King at length remained wounded, in the power of Tamerlane: The battel being won, and the enemies Camp forced: The fight endured eight hours, and the night coming on, ſaved the lives of many of the Chinois. There were ſlain two Kings, Allies to the King of China. Ineſtimable riches were gotten in golden Veſſels, precious ſtones, and as fair and rich Chariots as could poſſibly be ſeen.

The King of China beaten.

The Emperour would not ſee the captive King till the next day: but being mounted on horſeback, he rode about the field to ſtay the ſlaughter, and to rally his men, that the accuſtomed watch might be kept, whereof he gave the charge unto Axalla, commanding him alſo to keep the King of China in the midſt of his Souldiers, who was dreſſed of the wound which he had received in his right arm. It was a ſtrange ſight to ſee the diverſity of the Enemies Weapons, and the variety of their Streamers and Enſigns, which ſeemed afar off as beautiful, as the diverſity of colours plentiful. The King of China's Army was very great, conſiſting of a hundred and fifty thouſand Horſe, and two hundred thouſand Footmen: but the greateſt part of them were rude and barbarous people, far inferiour to Tamerlane's in Valour, who ſuffered themſelves to be ſlain one upon another, not marking their advantages, and having little skill in warlike affairs.

Tamerlane continued on horſeback till about two a clock in the morning, when as they brought him a Tart, and his Water, for he never drank Wine, and then lying down upon a Carpet, he paſſed the reſt of the night until morning. After this ſo great a Victory, there was never the leaſt boaſting or vaunting heard to proceed out of his mouth. The next day, after the burial of the dead, he publickly gave thanks to God for his Victory. Then cauſed he the wounded to be cured, and amongſt others, Calibes, who, more through the diſtemperature of the air, than from the danger of the wound, found himſelf very ill, yet would he not omit his duty in commanding the Van, which was very grateful to Tamerlane, for that he being a Scythian, was greatly beloved of his Nation.

Tamerlanes temperance.

His humility and modeſty.

His Piety.

Theſe things being diſpatched, he ſent unto Axalla to bring forth his priſoner, the King of China; and when he approached, the Emperour iſſued out of his Tent, and went to receive him. This King came with a very proud and haughty countenance, and approaching near to the Emperour, he, by his Interpreter, asked of Axalla, which was he? and being ſhewed him, he ſpake in an haughty language after this manner; The gods whom I worſhip, being provoked againſt my Nation and People, have conſpired againſt my good fortune, and made me this day thy priſoner: But foraſmuch as it is reported over all the world, that Tamerlane maketh war for the honour of his Nation, thou ſhouldſt be content with this thy glory, that the Lord of the world and child of the Sun, is in thy power, to receive ſuch Laws as thou pleaſeſt to ſubſcribe unto him. This he ſpake in a brave manner, without any other humbling of himſelf: The Emperour on the other ſide ſaluting him very courteouſly, led him into his Tent.

The King of China brought before him.

The King of China's proud ſpeech.

Tamerlane's Courteſie.

This King of China was a great Prince, having two hundred famous Cities within his Kingdom; which alſo is a fruitful and plentiful Countrey, wherein are Mines of Gold and Silver, much Musk and Rhubarb: It abounds in Fiſh and Fowl, and hath much Silk and Porclane, with Cotton and Linnen, &c.

The riches of China.

Then did Tamerlane aſſemble his Captains to conſult about the diſpoſal of the King, and how the Victory ſhould be beſt improved. At the ſame time he received news by Odmar, that the Kings Brother, who eſcaped out of the battel, was at Quantou, which he had ſtrongly fortified, and that great ſtore of forces began to adjoyn themſelves to him: Hereupon he commanded two thouſand Parthian horſe to convey the King to Paguinſou, and from thence to Burda, where he was to be kept carefully. Then did he reſolve upon the beſieging of Quanton, and if it were poſſible to ſhut up the Kings Brother therein, it being one of the principal ſeats that belonged to the King of China. It was forty Leagues from the place where the battel was fought. Thither therefore he ſent a good party of his Army under Odmar, who pitched his Tents about the City: But the Kings Brother was gone. The Emperour in the mean time ſummoned, and took in many leſſer Cities, which yielded wholly to his mercy, making great lamentation for their captive King, yet the gentleneſs of the Conquerour made them to take all their loſſes with patience, and the rather, becauſe they heard that he uſed their King courteouſly. The Kings brother alſo ſent Ambaſſadours to Tamerlane, craving leave to ſee the King, and to know of his health, which the Emperour willingly aſſented to.

Quanton beſieged.

Now the Kings brother hearing of the eſtate of the beſieged in Quanton, he reſolved either to relieve it, or to fight a battel, for which end, he advanced ſtrait unto Porchio, making a bridge of Boats to paſs over the River: But Odmar being informed that about fifty thouſand of his men were come over, he ſuddenly ſet upon them, being out of order, and not informed of their enemies approach; alſo to prevent the coming over of the reſt to their aſſiſtance, he ſent a fire-boat down the ſtream, againſt their bridge of Boats, which brake it in ſunder, and where it was reſiſted, ſet all on fire; and ſo in a great battel overthrew them; The King of Cauchin-China, who was amongſt them, fighting valiantly, was ſlain. The Kings Brother, who was on the other ſide of the River (not yet come over) ſaw his men ſlain and drowned, and could not relieve them. This ſecond overthrow was of no ſmall importance, though it was but the third part of the Kings brothers Army. For the Citizens of Quanton hearing of it, and deſpairing of relief, ſent out ſome Propoſals for their ſurrender.

Odmars policy.

The King of China's brother overthrown.

Axalla which received them, preſently diſpatched away a faithful meſſenger to the Emperour to know his pleaſure therein: This was more welcome news to him, than the overthrow of his Enemies; wherefore he referred all to the ſufficiency and fidelity of Axalla: So that upon Treaty, the City was ſurrendred to Axalla, who cauſed the Garriſon to come out, and received the inhabitants into the Emperours protection, and all that would might continue in it unarmed: afterwards he entred into it, and was received with great ſigns of joy by the Inhabitants, who reſolved to entertain the Emperour with all the ſolemnity that might be. Axalla put thirty thouſand men into it for a Garriſon, injoyning the Citizens to pay the Emperours Army four hundred and fifty thouſand Crowns: Preſently after he received a command from the Emperour to ſtay in the City himſelf, and to ſend all the reſt of his Footmen unto him, which he commanded the rather, becauſe he underſtood that Ambaſſadours were coming to him from the Kings Brother to treat of Peace, and he preſumed the ſight of all his Army together ready to march, would ſtrike ſuch a terrour into them, as would cauſe them the readilier to aſſent to good terms.

Quanton ſurrendred.

Tamerlanes Policy.

The Ambaſſadours ſent by the Kings Brother, were of their chiefeſt men, whom Tamerlane entertained with all humanity, cauſing his greatneſs to appear to them, as alſo the activity of his Horſemen, whereby they might diſcern that it would tend to the deſtruction of their Country if they agreed not with him: Then did the Ambaſſadours deliver their meſſage, which conſiſted of two branches: One was for the delivery of their King, the other, for the preſervation of their Countrey: The Emperour anſwered, that they ſhould deliver their meſſage in writing, and he would give a ſpeedy anſwer: Their Propoſitions were, that they would leave Paguinſou, and all the Country beyond

The Ambaſſadours propoſals.

yond it, with all the Fortreſſes of the mountains in Tamerlanes poſſeſſion: That they would pay all the charges of his Army from that day forward: And that they would give two millions of gold for the ranſome of their King. To this the Emperour anſwered, that he would keep that which he had conquered within the Countrey, being his own, as taken by his arms: That he would have the River by which his Army was now encamped, and ſo along to the Sea, to be his Frontiers: That the King of China ſhould pay him yearly two hundred thouſand Crowns, which ſhould be delivered at Paguinfou, for acknowledgment of his ſubmiſſion to his Empire: That he ſhould pay five hundred thouſand Crowns in ready money for the charge of his Army: That the King of China ſhould be delivered, and that all the other Chinois priſoners ſhould pay ranſomes to particular men that took them, except thoſe which carried the names of Kings, who ſhould pay ten thouſand Crowns for their liberty and peace: And that no Chinois ſhould be kept for a ſlave, nor ſold for ſuch hereafter, being under the Emperours obedience: That Traffick and intercourſe of Merchants ſhould be free between both the Nations: That the King of China ſhould deliver his Brother, and two other called Kings, with twelve principal men of the Countrey, for Hoſtages to ſecure the Peace: Theſe conditions, after they had conſulted together, were accepted of, hoping that time would reſtore again their ancient liberty, and in the mean time they muſt bear the yoke of the Conquerour. Then did Tamerlane ſend two thouſand Horſe to fetch the King of China, that being at liberty, he might ſolemnly ſwear to the Peace; which accordingly he did, delivered the Hoſtages, and ſo went into his Kingdom to perform the other Articles, where he was almoſt worſhipped as a God, and received with all the joy that might be.

Tamerlane's propoſals.

Peace concluded.

The King of China delivered.

Thus Tamerlane, having ſetled his affairs, and provided for the aſſurance of his new Conqueſt, left Odmar to govern the ſame, leaving with him thirty thouſand Horſe, and fifty thouſand Foot, to furniſh all the Fortreſſes and ſtrong places, giving him in charge to make his chief reſidence at Quantifou, to fortifie well the paſſages, and to build a new Fort at Dermio, the better to ſtrengthen his borders: He alſo left him all neceſſaries, and commended to him the Lord of the mountains, who had been ſo ſerviceable to him; His Brother he took with him, giving him large preferment in Zachethay: He alſo carried along with him many of the new conquered people, to plant them in his own Country, ſending other Colonies in their ſtead, which he did, becauſe he found them a light people, and ſuch as affected novelty.

Odmar made Governour.

Tamerlane's gratitude.

His Prudence.

Tamerlane ſent to acquaint the old Emperour with all theſe things, having two of the greateſt and faireſt Cities in all China in his poſſeſſion, and an hundred Leagues of Land, extending his borders to a River, by which he might go to the Enemy, but they could not come to him without paſſing over the ſame: He deſired alſo above all things, that all the Idols which were within his Conqueſt ſhould be beaten down, and commanded the worſhipping of one God.

His poſſeſſions in China.

Then did his Army, wherein was much ſickneſs, begin to march, and Tamerlane hearing of more Forces that were coming towards him out of Tartary, he ſent to ſtop them, commanding them to march to Cambalu, whither himſelf alſo was going, hearing that the old Emperour intended to meet him, and to entertain him with great magnificence in that City.

His return into Tartary.

Odmar being thus ſevered from Tamerlane's ſide, all his favour was turned to Axalla, of whoſe Prudence, Valour, and Fidelity, he had ſuch large experience in theſe Wars, ſo as the report of his Valour did fly through all the Empire. In the retreat Calibes led the Avantguard, and Axalla was in the Battel near to the Emperour, who beſtowed upon him two hundred thouſand Crowns

His liberality.

Crowns yearly, to maintain his ordinary expences. And thus, after certain dayes journey, news was brought of the old Emperours arrival at Cambalu: wherefore Tamerlane, leaving his Army to Winter in a fair and fertile Countrey, and diſmiſſing many of his Souldiers, he haſted thitherwards, and when he was arrived within four Leagues of Cambalu, all the Princes of the Emperours Court came to receive him there, together with all the chiefeſt Citizens, to congratulate his admirable ſucceſs: The Prince received every one according to his wonted courteſie, yet retaining convenient Majeſty, and was beheld by all with great contentment: He had with him the Empreſs his Wife, who had not left him in all his journey: And the next day the old Emperour honoured him ſo much as to come to meet him, with all the magnificence that might be. Tamerlane preſented him with all the richeſt Chariots, and faireſt Horſes that he had won: and the old Emperour being very deſirous to ſee his Daughter, her Chariot was uncovered, and he cauſed her to enter into his own: But the Prince remained on horſeback, whom the eyes of all the people could not be ſatisfied with admiring. Tamerlane alſo preſented Calibes to the Emperour, making a recital of all his faithfulneſs; whereupon the Emperour gave him an hundred thouſand Crowns for the increaſe of his penſion: He alſo preſented Axalla to the Emperour, who being informed of his Valour, gave unto him a hundred thouſand Tartarines of Gold in a Principality, that he might declare how much he eſteemed his fidelity.

His entertainment at Cambalu.

His preſents to the old Emperour.

During Tamerlane's abode at Cambalu this Winter, complaints came to him that Bajazet the Great Turk had attempted to joyn the Empire of Greece to his own, reſolving alſo upon the ſiege of Conſtantinople, whereupon the Emperour of Greece ſent to him to crave his aid. Axalla, who was of kin to this Emperour, Paleologus, being deſirous to maintain the Chriſtian Religion in Greece, ſtirred him up much to this War: Whereupon he ſent Ambaſſadours to Bajazet, to warn him in his name, not to moleſt the Greek Emperour, who was his Confederate: But Bajazet anſwered them very proudly, asking them what their Maſter had to do therewith: and that he ſhould content himſelf with injoyning Laws to his own Subjects, and not to meddle with him who was none of them.

He is ſtirred up againſt Bajazet.

He ſends Ambaſſadors.

Bajazets proud anſwer.

This anſwer being returned, by Axalla's means, was very ill taken, ſo that Tamerlane reſolved to hinder this enterprize of the Ottomans: for which end, he obtained of the Emperour his Uncle, an hundred thouſand Footmen, and eighty thouſand Horſemen, hoping to have as many from his own Countrey of Sachetai, beſides the Lords who would accompany him to win glory, from whom he made account of fifty thouſand men more that they would bring along with them. Thus he departed from Cambalu, taking his leave of the old Emperour, his Father in Law, and of the Princeſs his Wife, (then left behind him for the comfort of her aged Father) and departed towards Samercand, the place of his Birth, and ſeat of his Empire, leaving the Forces granted him by the Emperour, to come after him to Ozara, where he had appointed the general rendezvouz of his Army. This his departure was very grievous to the old Emperour, but more grievous on the Princes part towards his Wife, who had never left him ſince they were firſt married: But nothing could withhold this brave Prince, where honour was to be purchaſed, or where he might be profitable to his oppreſſed Friends; For he would often ſay, That he was born to this end, and that all his other employments were but by the By, God having appointed and called him to puniſh the pride of Tyrants.

Tamerlanes preparations againſt him.

Tamerlanes ſpeech.

He was accompanied with Calibes, and made the Prince of Thanais Collonel of all his Footmen, which place Axalla had left, whom now he made Lieutenant General of all his Army, with command to lead his Avantguard, and Calibes the Arearward. Forces came to him from all parts; and the Chinois Lord, being licenſed by Odmar, marched towards him with twenty thouſand ſand men of his Subjects newly conquered, being deſirous to ſhew his forwardneſs to the Emperour, as alſo to learn the manners and faſhions of ſtrange Countries. When Tamerlane came near Samercand, Zamay went to meet him, and near a million of people, bleſſing and praiſing him with all manner of Songs: There he remained about a month; In which ſpace Axalla had rendezvouzed his Army at Ozara, from whence alſo he advertiſed Tamerlane of the proceedings of Bajazet. Then did Tamerlane ſend for him to Samercand, to confer with him about the ſetting forward of his Army. For although he was ſtill accompanied with renowned Princes, and famous Captains; yet were they no body in compariſon of Axalla, whoſe ſound Judgment and Counſel had won him ſuch credit with his Lord and Maſter, as by his advice he did all things, and without him nothing, which his ſo great Authority and Favour with his Prince wanted not the envy of the Court; but that his great Vertues, and rare-found Courteſie (in ſo great fortune) together with ſo many great ſervices as he had done, ſupported him againſt the malice of the ſame. He upon this command from Tamerlane, leaving the charge of the Army at Ozara with the Prince of Thanais, came to Samercand, and there diſcourſed with him at large concerning the eſtate and order of his Army; and ſo, ſhortly after, they all departed to Ozara, where a new conſultation was held, by which way he ſhould conduct his Army: as whether it was better to lead them by the coaſt of the Muſcovite, directly towards Capha, or on the other ſide of the Caſpian Sea, by the skirts of Perſia; and after much diſcourſe and ſundry opinions, with their reaſons delivered, it was reſolved, (although the way were the longer) to paſs by the Muſcovite, ſo to come to the Georgians, and to Trepizond, and from thence to enter into the Ottamans Kingdom.

His entertainment at Samercand.

Envy attends vertue.

This being reſolved on, they marched forward, till at length they came to Maranis, where he ſtayed three dayes, looking for the China Forces, whereof they received news; There alſo Tamerlane muſtered, and paid his Army; He had alſo news of fifteen thouſand Horſemen ſent him by the Muſcovite, with a ſum of money, with leave for him to paſs through ſo much of his Territories as ſhould be neceſſary, being glad that he ſet upon others, rather than on himſelf; and that ſuch great preparations ſhould fall upon them, whoſe greatneſs was as dreadful and dangerous to him as any other.

His march towards Bajazet.

His Auxiliaries.

Tamerlane cauſed a great quantity of Victuals, and moſt part of the furniture of his Army to be ſent along the Caſpian Sea, which was a great eaſe and commodity to his men, which, marching by Land, was of neceſſity to paſs ſome twenty Leagues through places deſtitute both of Victuals and Water; Himſelf all the way coaſting along the Sea-ſhore, paſſed his time in Hunting and Hawking, to make the journey leſs tedious, his Army not coming near him by ten Leagues, which was ſo great, that it extended it ſelf full twenty Leagues.

His Prudence.

Coming to the River Edel, he ſtayed at Zarazich, whilſt his Army paſſed the River at Mechet, and over two other Bridges that he had cauſed to be made of boats for that purpoſe. Now the Circaſſians and Georgians hearing of the approach of Tamerlane with his huge Army, by their Ambaſſadors offered him all the help and aſſiſtance they could afford him in his Journey, as he paſſed that way. Theſe Georgians were, and yet are Chriſtians, a great and Warlike people, of long time tributaries to the Greek Emperours; and afterwards ſometime tributaries, and ſometimes confederates to the Perſians; but alvvayes enemies to the Turks, and therefore glad they were of Tamerlanes coming againſt them. Of theſe Warlike people Axalla drew great numbers to the ſervice of his Prince, who not a little eſteemed of them, being all tall men, very beautiful, of great ſtrength and courage, and withall, moſt expert ſouldiers,

The Georgians aſſiſt him.

as having many times resisted the power of the Ottoman Kings, by reason of the advantage of their Country, which was rough, mountainous, and hard to come to. These people every where kindly entertained Tamerlane, and plentifully relieved his Army with all necessaries. In passing through which, and other Countries, he took such order with his Souldiers, that none of the people by whom they passed were any whit injured by them, insomuch that if a souldier had taken but an Apple or any other trifle, he died for it. And one of his souldiers having taken a little milk from a Countrey-woman, and she thereof complaining, he caused him presently to be hanged, and his stomack to be ript, where the milk that he had lately drank being found, he payed the woman for it, who had otherwise without mercy died for her false accusation: Which his great severity was indeed the preservation of his Army, being so great, as that it was thought impossible to provide it with Victuals, whereof yet there was no want, nor of any other thing necessary for the relief of man: his Camp being still as a most populous and well-governed City, stored with all manner of things, whereunto both Artificers and Merchants resorted from far Countries with their Commodities, as to some famous Mart: and the Country people from every place, without fear, brought in their Country-commodities, for which they received present money, and so departed in peace.

His strict Discipline.

So marching on, he at length came to Bachichich, where he stayed to refresh his Army eight dayes, and there again took a general muster of them, finding, as some write, four hundred thousand Horse, and six hundred thousand Foot; but others that were present with him, say, three hundred thousand Horse, and five hundred thousand Footmen of all Nations: There also he generally payed them, and as his manner was, made an oration to them, informing them of such Orders as he would have observed, with much other Military Discipline, whereof he was very curious with his Captains.

His huge Army.

In the mean time, Bajazet would not believe that Tamerlane durst once look towards him, yea, so exceeding barbarous was he, that he would not so much as suffer any man to speak of him, or his Army to him, by reason of his pride: He also strictly forbad all the bordering people to make any Vows or Prayers for Tamerlanes prosperity: But he was soon after awakened out of this Lethargy, as we shall presently hear. Indeed Tamerlane could hardly be perswaded, that Bajazet, having subdued the greatest part of Grecia, and much distressed the Greek Emperour, and having so great means to recover whatsoever he should lose in Asia, would be so adventurous as to come over the streights out of Europe, to try the fortune of a battel with him: but rather warily to protract the time, to weary him with wants, that in a strange Country, drew such a world of people after him: wherein yet he found himself much deceived; for when he had passed the Georgian Country, and was come to Buisabuich, Axalla (whom he had not seen in eight dayes before, because he commanded the Avantguard of the Army) came to him with such news as he knew would be most grateful to him: Which was, that Bajazet had raised his siege before Constantinople, to come and defend his new Conquests in Asia, and that he was certainly resolved to come to a pitched Battel with him, not so much trusting to the multitude of his men, as to the experience and valour of his souldiers, being long trained up in the Wars. At which unexpected news Tamerlane greatly rejoyced, yet without insolency and vaunting, but rather with the countenance of such an one as judged the event of Battels to be alwayes doubtful; saying sometimes, That a small number well conducted, did carry away the victory from the confused multitude. Three dayes after he stayed at Buisabuich, causing his souldiers continually to march forward, who, at two places, passed over the River Euphrates, which he did the rather to maintain his Army upon the spoil of the Enemies countrey, chusing rather there

Bajazets Pride.

Bajazet advanced towards him.

Tamerlanes moderation.

He passeth the River Euphrates.

there to attend Bajazets coming, then amongſt his friends and allies. All the Cities that yielded to him in the way as he marched, he favourably received; the other that refuſed to ſubmit themſelves to his obedience, he uſed with all extremity, eſpecially the great and ſtrong City of Sebaſtia, where certain of the forerunners of his Army, were by the Turks that kept Garriſon in it, cut off and ſlain, and to deſpite him the more, the City gates were ſet open in contempt of him: Whereupon being juſtly offended, he ſent out certain Tartarian Horſemen, charging them upon pain of his diſpleaſure ſo to behave themſelves againſt their Enemies, that at his coming up to them he might find either the City taken, or at leaſt the Gates ſhut up againſt him: And he had his men at ſo great command; that no danger was unto them more dreadful than his diſpleaſure; neither did he puniſh any thing ſo ſeverely as cowardize. Now the Turks in Sebaſtia ſeeing theſe Tartarian Horſemen marching towards the City, making little account of them, becauſe their number was not great, iſſued out to meet them, where they were ſo furiouſly charged by theſe few Horſemen, that they were glad to retire, and for haſt to ſhut the Gates againſt ſome of their own men, leſt the Enemy ſhould have entered pell mell with them, which Turks were there ſlain at the Gates of the City. Shortly after came Tamerlane with all the reſt of his Army, and ſat down before the City, where he lay ſtill ſeven days not making any ſhew of violence at all. The defendants, becauſe the City was of great ſtrength, thought that his purpoſe was by a long Siege to diſtreſs the ſame: But about the eighth day, the Towers, and Walls being undermined in ſundry places, ſuddenly fell down, leaving large breaches for the Enemy to enter; wherewith the Turks being diſmayed ſurrendred the City to Tamerlane in hope ſo to have ſaved their lives, but he cauſed them all to be buried quick, and the City utterly to be razed: and then calling the Governour, whoſe life he had ſpared for that end, he bade him go and tell his Maſter what had happened to his ſtrong City of Sebaſtia, and what himſelf had ſeen there; of which Tragical action, when the Governour had made report to Bajazet, he demanded of him whether of the two Armies he thought bigger or ſtronger; for he had now aſſembled a mighty Army of three hundred thouſand Horſe, and two hundred thouſand Footmen; whereunto the Governour, having firſt craved pardon, anſwered: That it could not be in reaſon, but that Tamerlane had the greater Army, for that he commanded over far greater Countries: wherewith proud Bajazet being offended, replied in great Choller; Out of doubt the ſight of the Tartarian hath ſo affrighted this coward, that he thinks every Enemy to be two. As Bajazet marched forward he heard a Country Shepherd merrily pleaſing himſelf with his homely Pipe as he ſate on the ſide of a Mountain feeding his ſmall flock, whereupon he ſtood ſtill, and liſtned to him to the admiration of many, and at laſt brake forth into theſe words, O happy Shepherd, which hadſt no Sebaſtia to loſe! bewraying therein his own diſcontentment, and yet withal, ſhewing that worldly bliſs conſiſted not ſo much in poſſeſſing of much, ſubject unto danger, as in enjoying content in a little, devoid of fears.

Turkiſh Pride.

Turks beaten.

Sebaſtia taken.

Bajazets arrogance.

Note.

The reſt of the Cities as Tamerlane marched forwards, warned by the deſtruction of Sebaſtia, yielded to him, the Citizens whereof he uſed courteouſly, eſpecially the Chriſtians, whom he ſet at liberty for the Greek Emperours ſake, whom he ſought therein to gratifie.

Tamerlanes favour to the Chriſtians.

But Tamerlane had not gone far into the Turks dominions before he was certainly informed that Bajazet was coming againſt him with a mighty Army, and was now within thirty Leagues of him, which cauſed him from thence forward to march with his Army more cloſe together. Axalla leading the Van, ſent forth Chianſon, Prince of Ciarchan, with four thouſand Parthian Horſemen, to get knowledg of the Turkiſh Army, and where Bajazet lay, as alſo what manner of Countrey it was beyond Sennas, and if he could learn any Bajazets approach.

any thing thereof, to make relation of it to him. This Prince of Ciarchan was Tamerlanes near Kinſman, a man of great reputation, and next to Axalla, in whoſe abſence he had the command of the Avantguard, who alſo ſent before him another Parthian Captain with five hundred Horſemen: who having advanced about ten Leagues and ſurprized Sennas, was certainly informed there of the ſtate of Bajazets Army, which was now at Tataia, and ſo marching forward; which Tamerlane being informed of, commanded him not to retire from that place till he ſaw the arrival of the enemy, and thereof to give him advertiſement every hour, reſolving himſelf to paſs on no further, being encamped in a fair large plain, which was very advantageous for him, his Army being bigger then Bajazets, which made him make choiſe of thoſe large plains. His Army alſo being compounded of ſundry Nations, he conſidered that he was not to fight againſt the Chinois, a ſoft effeminate people, as of late; but againſt the Turks, a moſt warlike Nation and well acquainted with all manner of fights and warlike ſtratagems, and therefore he judged it neceſſary to proceed warily againſt them. Upon this conſideration he preſently ſent for Axalla, with him to view the ſaid place, and to have his opinion whether it would be advantageous for him to ſtay there or no? Axalla not miſliking his choice of the place, yet withal adviſed him to keep Sennas as long as poſſible he could: and accordingly he ſent word to them at Sennas, that when they could keep the place no longer, they ſhould ſet fire on it, and ſo retreat, and this he did, that the Enemy ſhould have no deſire to encamp there, but to march forward to thoſe plains where Tamerlane deſired to fight, the rather becauſe he was ſtronger in Horſe than Bajazet.

Sennas ſurprized by Tamerlane.

His Policy.

Accordingly the Prince of Ciarchan ſent out a hundred Horſe toward the Turks; then divided he the reſt of his Forces into two parts, commanding the former, that as ſoon as they perceived the Enemy to purſue the hundred Horſe, whom he had commanded to fly diſorderly before them, that they ſhould receive them into their Squadrons, and ſo retire altogether: He in the mean time with the other part ſtood cloſe in a Valley near unto a Wood-ſide, wholly unſeen; where having ſuffered two thouſand of the Enemies Horſe (the Vant-curriers of the Turks Army) to paſs by him, he following them in the tail, charged them home, the other alſo which before retired, now turned again upon them; ſo that the Turks ſeeing themſelves thus beſet and hardly laid to both before and behind, as men diſcouraged, fled: but in their flight were moſt of them ſlain, the reſt of them were taken Priſoners. This was the firſt encounter between the Turks and the Parthians. All the Priſoners taken were by the Prince ſent as a Preſent to Tamerlane, and amongſt the reſt, the Baſſa of Natolia, who led thoſe Troops; of whom Tamerlane earneſtly demanded what cauſed his Maſter Bajazet ſo little to eſteem him, as to ſhew ſo great a contempt of his Army: which (ſaith he) he ſhall find ſtrong enough to abate his Pride? To this the Baſſa anſwered: That his Lord was the Sun upon Earth, which could not endure any corrival: And that he rather was aſtoniſhed to ſee how he, from ſo far a Country, had undertaken ſo dangerous a journey to hinder the fortune of his Lord, in whoſe favour the heavens (as he ſaid) did bend themſelves to further his greatneſs, and unto whom all the world ſubjected it ſelf; and that he commited great folly in going about to reſiſt the ſame. Unto this proud Speech Tamerlane replied, That he was ſent from heaven to puniſh his inſolency, and to teach him that the proud are hated of God, whoſe promiſe is to pull down the mighty, and to advance the lowly. As for thy ſelf (ſaid he) thou haſt already felt (though I pity thy miſhap) what the valour of my Parthian Horſe is againſt thy Turkiſh: and I have already cauſed thy Maſter to raiſe his Siege before Conſtantinople, and to look to his affairs here in Aſia. He alſo asked him whether his Maſter did come reſolved to give him Battel? Aſſure your ſelf (ſaid he) that there is nothing that he more deſireth, and would to God that I might acknowledg your

An Ambuſh,

Two thouſand Turks overthrown.

The Baſſa of Natolia taken.

His Speech to Tamerlane

Tamerlanes reply.

your greatneſs in giving me leave to aſſiſt my Lord in that Battel? Good leave have thou (ſaid Tamerlane) go thy ways, and tell thy Lord that thou haſt ſeen me, and that in the Battel he ſhall find me on Horſe-back, there where he ſhall ſee a green Enſign diſplayed. The Baſſa thanked him, and ſwore that next unto his Lord, he vowed unto him his ſervice. And ſo returning, he related unto Bajazet how he had ſeen Tamerlane, and reported to him truly all that he had willed him to ſay, not forgetting above all, to praiſe his courteſie and bounty: who beſides that he had frankly ſet him at liberty, had alſo given him a very fair Horſe, well furniſhed, although he well knew that he was to ſerve againſt himſelf: To this Bajazet anſwered no more, but that he would ſhortly make trial of him, and that he doubted not but before he had done with him, he ſhould make him acknowledg his folly.

His releaſe.

He commends Tamerlane.

The next day the two Armies drew neer together, and encamped within a league the one of the other; where all the night long you might have heard a noiſe of Horſes which filled the heavens with their neighings, and the air with ſounds; and every man thought the night long that they might come to the trial of their valours, and the gaining of their deſires. The Scythians (a people no leſs greedy, than needy) talked of nothing but the ſpoil; the proud Parthians of attaining honour; the poor Chriſtians of their deliverance from an inſulting adverſary; all which was to be gained by the next days Victory. Every man, during the night-time, ſpeaking according to his humour. All which Tamerlane (walking privately up and down in the Camp) heard, and much rejoyced to ſee the hope which his Souldiers had already conceived of the Victory: and ſo after the ſecond watch, returning into his Pavilion, and there caſting himſelf upon a Carpet, he purpoſed to ſleep a while; but his cares not ſuffering him ſo to do, he then (as his manner was) called for a Book, wherein was contained the Lives of his Fathers and Anceſtors, and of other valiant Worthies, which he uſed ordinarily to read in, as then alſo he did: not vainly to deceive the time, but to make uſe of it, by imitating that which by them was worthily done, and declinining ſuch dangers as they by their raſhneſs, or overſight fell into. After which, having ſlumbred a little, he commanded Axalla to be ſent for to him, who preſently came, accompanied with divers other Great Lords and Captains of the Army, with whom after he had conſulted a while about the order of the Battel, himſelf preſently mounted on Horſeback, and ſent each of them to their charge to ſee their orders put in execution: At which very inſtant he received intelligence that the Enemy was marching forwards, and come to chuſe his Ground for the Battel, whoſe order of marching Tamerlane was very deſirous to ſee, that ſo he might marſhal his own Army accordingly. For (ſaid he) I do not ſo much truſt to the Lions skin wherein I wrap mine arm, but that withall I will make uſe of the Foxes, therein to wrap my head, which my Grandfather neglected to his overthrow in a Battel againſt the Perſians: For being in a place of advantage, he went out of it to ſeek his Enemy that was lodged ſtrongly, contrary to the adviſe of all his Captains, which proved his ruin.

Preparations for the Battel.

Tamerlanes prudent practice.

His prudent Speech.

Then did he cauſe three thouſand Horſemen to advance forward, with charge to begin the skirmiſh, himſelf following after to lodg every part of his Forces in ſuch places as he had foreſeen to be fitteſt for his advantage: And ſeeing the Turkiſh Janizaries marching in a ſquare Battel in the midſt of the Army, and upon the two Frons, two great ſquadrons of Horſemen, which ſeemed to be about thirty thouſand, and another which advanced before, and covered the Battalion of the Janizaries, he thought this their order to be very good, and hard to be broken, and therefore turning himſelf to Axalla, he ſaid, I had thought this day to have fought on foot, but I ſee that it behooves me now to fight on Horſeback, to encourage my Souldiers to open that great Battalion of the Enemies. And my will is that my men come forwards to me

His direction for the Battel.

ſo ſoon as may be; for I will advance forward with a hundred thouſand Footmen, fifty thouſand upon each of my two wings, and in the midſt of them, forty thouſand of my beſt Horſemen: and my pleaſure is, that, after I have tried the force of theſe men, they come back unto my Avantguard, of whom I will diſpoſe, and fifty thouſand Horſemen more in three bodies, whom thou ſhalt command, which I will aſſiſt with eighty thouſand Horſe, wherein ſhall be mine own perſon, having an hundred thouſand Footmen behind me, who ſhall march in two Squadrons: and for my Arearward I appoint forty thouſand Horſe, and fifty thouſand Footmen, who ſhall not march but to my aid: And I will make choiſe of ten thouſand of my beſt Horſe, whom I will ſend into every place where I ſhall think needful within my Army, for to impart my commands.

Over the firſt forty thouſand Horſe, the Prince of Ciarchan commanded, over the formoſt Footmen was the Lord Synopes, a Genovois, Kinſman to Axalla and his Lieutenant over the Footmen, a Captain of great eſtimation: The Prince Axalla's charge conſiſted of five Squadrons of Horſemen: Bajazet's Army alſo being fair and great, came bravely ſtill on forwards towards their Enemies, who ſtirred not a whit from the place which they had choſen for the Battel, except certain light-Horſemen, Scythians, Parthians, and Muſcovites, who being ſent out as looſe men, hotly skirmiſhed between the two Armies. Tamerlane was informed by a ſpie, that Bajazet was on foot in the midſt of thirty thouſand Janizaries, his principal men of War, and greateſt ſtrength, amongſt whom he ment that day to fight, and in whom he had repoſed his greateſt hope. His Battel of Horſe was very fair, amounting to the number of one hundred and forty thouſand, all old Souldiers: the Sultan of Egypt alſo had ſent to his aid thirty thouſand Mamelukes, all excellent good Horſemen, with thirty thouſand Footmen; ſo that his Army marching all in a front, in the form of a half Moon, ſeemed almoſt as great as Tamerlanes: Theſe Turks, with infinite number of horrible cries, ſtill advanced forwards, Tamerlanes Souldiers all the while ſtanding ſtill with great ſilence. Never was there a more furious charge than the Turks gave upon the Prince of Ciarchan, who was commanded not to fight till the Enemy came unto him, neither could there have been choſen a fairer Plain, and where the skilful choice of the place, gave leſs advantage either to the one or to other only Tamerlane had a River on the left ſide of his Army, ſerving him to ſome ſmall advantage. Now this young Prince of Ciarchan, with his forty thouſand Horſe, was in the firſt encounter almoſt wholly overthrown; yet having fought right valiantly, and entred even in the midſt of the Janizaries (where the Perſon of Bajazet was) putting them into diſorder, he was himſelf there ſlain. About which time Axalla ſet upon them with his ſquadrons, but not with the like danger: for having overthrown one of the Enemies Wings, and cut it all to pieces, and his Footmen coming to joyn with him, as was appointed, he faced the Battalion of the Janizaries, who right valiantly behaved themſelves for the ſafety of their Prince. This furious fight continued an hour, and yet you could not have ſeen any ſcattered, but the one ſtill reſolutely fighting againſt the other. You might there have ſeen the Horſemen like mountains ruſhing together, and infinite numbers of men dying, crying, lamenting, and threatning all at the ſame inſtant.

The Battel begins.

Bajazets great Army.

The Prince of Ciarchan ſlain.

A furious Battel.

Tamerlane had patience all this while to ſee the event of this ſo mortal a fight: but perceiving his men at laſt to be begin to give ground, he ſent ten thouſand of his Horſe to joyn with the ten thouſand appointed for the Rereward, commanding them to aſſiſt him when they ſaw that he had need, and ſo himſelf gave a furious Charge, and made them to give him room, cauſing the Footmen alſo to charge, over whom the Prince of Thanais commanded, who gave a gallant charge upon the Battalion of Janizaries, wherein was yet the Perſon of Bajazet, who before had ſuſtained a great burden. Now Bajazet had Tamerlane himſelf chargeth.

in

in his Army a great number of Mercinary Tartars, called Deſtenſes, with many thouſands of other Souldiers taken up in the Countries of the poor exiled Mahometan Princes, in whoſe juſt quarrel, and the Greek Emperours, Tamerlane had chiefly undertaken that War. Theſe Tartarians and other Souldiers, ſeeing, ſome their friends, and other ſome their natural and loving Princes in Tamerlanes Army, ſtricken with the terrour of diſloyalty, and abhorring the cruelty of the proud Tyrant, in the heat of the Battel, revolted from Bajazet to their own Princes, which much weakned Bajazets Forces: who nevertheleſs with his own men of War, eſpecially the Janizaries, and the help of the Chriſtian Souldiers brought to his aid from Servia, and other places of Europe, with great courage maintained the fight: But the multitude rather than true valour prevailed; for as much as might be done by valiant and couragious men, was by the Janizaries, the Mamelukes, and the reſt performed, both for the preſervation of their Prince, and for gaining the Victory: But in the end the Horſemen with whom Tamerlane himſelf was, giving a freſh charge, and his Avant-guard being rallied and joyning with him, he with much ado obtained the Victory.

Many revolt to Tamerlane.

The Turks overthrow.

Bajazet himſelf being wounded, when he ſaw all deſperate, mounted on Horſeback, thinking to have eſcaped: but falling into Axalla's hands, he yielded himſelf to him, ſuppoſing him to have been Tamerlane, neither did Axalla for a while know him, but took him for ſome great Commander in the Turks Army. Muſa, ſirnamed Zelabi, or the Noble, one of Bajazets Sons, with divers other of his great Captains were there taken alſo; and amongſt the reſt, George, Deſpot of Servia, who, notwithſtanding his misfortune had that day by his valour gained the reputation of a great and valiant Captain, inſomuch as Tamerlane in the very heat of the Battel marvelled to ſee him and his Servians, and the other Chriſtians that he had brought to the aid of Bajazet, to fight ſo valianty; whereupon turning to ſome of his Captains that were near him, he ſaid, See how valiantly theſe Religious fight, ſuppoſing them by their ſtrange attire to have been ſome of the Turks ſuperſtitious Votaries. But the Deſpot being now taken, and afterwards brought to Tamerlane, he was by him courteouſly entertained; yet withal reproved, for that he had aſſiſted Bajazet againſt him, who was come in favour to the Chriſtian Emperour, and the other poor oppreſſed Princes, ſuch as the Deſpot himſelf was: who thereupon boldly anſwered, That indeed it was not according to his profeſſion, but according to the proſperity of Bajazet, unto whom it ſeemed that all the world ſhould bend, and that he did it for his own ſafety: Whereupon Tamerlane excuſed him, and without any more ado, gave him liberty at his own pleaſure to depart.

Bajazet wounded.

Bajazet taken.

The valour of the Chriſtians.

The Deſpot of Servia Speech.

Tamerlane releaſeth him.

Bajazet himſelf Being afterwards brought to Tamerlane as a Priſoner, was by him courteouſly entertained, who never ſhewed any token of ſubmiſſion at all, but according to his proud nature, without reſpect of his preſent ſtate, anſwered him preſumptuouſly to whatever he demanded of him: Wherewith Tamerlane being ſomewhat moved, told him that it was in his power to take his life from him; whereto he anſwered no more, but Do it, for that loſs will be my greateſt happineſs: Then Tamerlane demanded of him, what made him ſo proud as to enterprize to bring ſo noble a Prince as the Greek Emperour into his ſubjection? He anſwered, Even the ſame cauſe which moved thee to invade me, namely the deſire of glory and ſovereignity. But wherefore then (ſaid Tamerlane) doſt thou uſe ſuch cruelty towards them whom thou overcomeſt, without reſpect of Age or Sex? That did I (ſaid he) to ſtrike the greater terrour into mine Enemies.

Bajazets proud behaviour.

Then did Tamerlane ask him if he had ever given thanks to God for making him ſo great an Emperour? No (ſaid he) I never ſo much as thought upon any ſuch thing. Then ſaid Tamerlane, Its no wonder that ſo ungrateful a man ſhould be made a ſpectacle of miſery. For you (ſaith he) being blind of an Eye, Leoncla. in edit. Annal. Turk. Note.

Eye, and I lame of a Leg, was there any worth in us, that God ſhould ſet us over two ſuch great Empires, to command ſo many men far more worthy than our ſelves? But, ſaid Tamerlane, what would thou have done with me if it had been my lot to have fallen into thy hands, as thou art now in mine? I would (ſaid Bajazet) have encloſed thee in a Cage of Iron, and ſo have carried thee up and down in Triumph through my Kingdom. Even ſo (ſaid Tamerlane) ſhalt thou be ſerved: And ſo cauſing him to be taken out of his preſence, turning to his followers, he ſaid, Behold a proud and cruel man, who deſerves to be chaſtiſed accordingly, and to be made an example to all the proud and cruel of the World, of the juſt wrath of God againſt them. I acknowledg that God this day hath delivered into my hands a great Enemy, to whom therefore we muſt return thanks, which he alſo cauſed publickly to be performed the ſame day; for the Battel was ended about four a clock, and there were divers hours yet of day-light. The next day he cauſed the dead to be buried, where amongſt the reſt was found the body of the Prince of Ciarchan dead in the midſt of the Janizaries, where he lay encloſed with their dead bodies, ſhewing that he died not unrevenged, whoſe untimely death Tamerlane much lamented, cauſing his dead body to be Embalmed, and with two thouſand Horſe, and divers Turkiſh Priſoners chained together, to be conveyed to Samercand until his coming thither. All other dead bodies were, with all honour that might be, buried at Sennas.

Lex Talionis.

Tamerlanes Piety.

The dead buried.

This great bloody Battel was fought in the year of our Lord, 1397. not far from Mount Stella (where formerly the great King Methridates was by Pompey the Great, in a great Battel overthrown.) It continued from ſeven a clock in the morning till four in the afternoon; victory as it were all the while hovering with doubtful Wings over both Armies, as uncertain where to light, until at length the fortune of Tamerlane prevailed: whoſe wiſdom, next unto God, gave him the days Victory; for that the politick tiring of the ſtrong Forces of Bajazet, was the ſafeguard of his own: whereas if he had gone unto the Battel in one front, aſſuredly the multitude finding ſuch ſtrong oppoſition, had put it ſelf into confuſion; but this ſucceſſive manner of aiding his men, made them all unto him profitable. The number of the ſlain is variouſly reported. The Turks themſelves ſay, that Bajazet loſt there his noble Son Muſtapha, with two hundred thouſand of his men, and Tamerlane not many fewer: Others ſay, that the Turks loſt about ſixty thouſand, and Tamerlane not paſt twenty thouſand. But likely it is, that the carnage was very great in ſo long a fight between two ſuch Armies as probably never before met in a field together.

Tamerlanes Policy.

The number of the ſlain.

By this days event is plainly ſeen the uncertainty of worldly things, and what ſmall aſſurance even the greateſt have in them. Behold, Bajazet the terrour of the World, and (as he thought) ſuperiour to fortune, in an inſtant by the event of one Battel thrown into the bottom of miſery and deſpair, and that at ſuch a time as he thought leaſt of it, even in the midſt of his greateſt ſtrength. It was three days before he could be pacified, but as a deſperate man ſtill ſought after death, and called for it. Neither did Tamerlane after he had once ſpoken with him, at all afterwards uſe him courteouſly, but as of a proud and inſolent man, made ſmall account of him. And to manifeſt that he knew how to curb the haughty, he made him to be ſhackled in fetters and chains of Gold, and ſo to be ſhut up in an Iron Cage, made like a grate, that he might be ſeen on every ſide, and ſo carried him up and down as he paſſed thorow Aſia, to be made a ſcorn and deriſion to his own people, over whom he had before Tyrannized. And to his further diſgrace, upon Feſtival days he uſed him for a footſtool to tread upon when he mounted on Horſeback, and at other times ſcornfully fed him, like a Dog with fragments that fell from his Table. A rare example of the uncertainty of worldly

The uncertainty of worldly greatneſs.

Bajazet kept in a Cage.

worldly honours and greatneſs, that he, unto whoſe ambitious mind Aſia and Europe, two great parts of the World, were too little, ſhould now be carried up and down, cooped up in a little Iron cage, like a dangerous wild beaſt: How might he have taken up that ſpeech of Hecuba in Seneca? Quicunque Regno fidit, & magna potens dominatur in aula, me videat. ------Non unquam tulit Documenta Fors majora quàm fragili loco ſtarent ſuperbi.

Tamerlane uſed this ſeverity, not ſo much out of hatred to the man, as to manifeſt the juſt Judgment of God againſt the arrogant folly of the proud. And when on a time he was requeſted by one of his Nobles to remit ſome part of this rigour to ſo great a man, he anſwered, I do not uſe this rigour againſt him as a King, but rather to puniſh him as a proud ambitious Tyrant, polluted with the bloud of his own brother, and many other innocents. Pride goeth before deſtruction.

This ſo great an overthrow brought ſuch a fear upon all the Countries poſſeſſed by Bajazet in Aſia, that Axalla being ſent before Tamerlane with Forty thouſand Horſe, and a hundred thouſand Foot, without carriages, to proſecute the Victory, came without reſiſtance to Pruſa, whither all the remainder of Bajazets Army was retired with Baſſa Muſtapha; all places as he marched along ſtill yielding to him: Yea, the great Baſſa, with the reſt, hearing of his coming, and not thinking themſelves in ſafety in Aſia, fled over the ſtreight of Helleſpont to Callipolis, and ſo Hadrianople. Tamerlane proſecutes his Victory. The Turks fly.

Axalla coming to Pruſa, had the City without reſiſtance yielded to him, which by his Army was plundered, and there, with other of Bajazet's Wives and concubines, he took priſoner the fair Deſpina, Bajazet's beſt beloved Wife, to the doubling of his grief. Pruſa taken.

Emanuel Paleologus now hearing of Tamerlane's coming to Pruſa, ſent honourable Ambaſſadours thither before to Axalla, by whom they were entertained till the coming of Tamerlane, who received them with all the honour that might be, ſhewing them all his magnificence, and the order of his Camp, to their great admiration: For it reſembled a moſt populous and well governed City, by reaſon of the order that was therein, which brought it plenty of victuals, and of all manner of merchandiſe, as well for delight as neceſſity. The Greek Emperour ſends Ambaſſadours.

By theſe Ambaſſadours the Greek Emperour yielded his Empire, together with his Perſon, unto Tamerlane, as his moſt faithful Subject and Vaſſal: Which (as he ſaid) he was bound to do, for that he was by him delivered from the moſt cruel Tyrant of the World; as alſo for the long journey he had undertaken for his ſake, and the diſcommodities he had endured, with the hazard of his Perſon, and loſs of his Subjects, which could not be otherwiſe compenſated, but with the offer of his own, and his Subjects lives to him, which for ever he therefore dedicated to his ſervice, with all the fidelity and loyalty that ſo great a benefit might deſerve: beſides, that his ſo many virtues, and rare endowments, which made him famous through the world, did oblige him the more hereunto, and that therefore he would attend him in his chief City, to deliver it into his hands, as his own, together with all the Empire of Greece. The Greek Empire yielded to Tamerlane.

Now theſe Ambaſſadours expected no leſs than to fall into the bondage of Tamerlane, judging that which they offered to be ſo great and delicate a morſel, as that it would not be refuſed, eſpecially of ſuch a Victorious Prince as was Tamerlane; and that the acceptance thereof in kindneſs and Friendſhip was the beſt bargain they could make therein. But they received an anſwer from this Worthy Prince far beyond their expectation: For he with a mild countenance beholding them, anſwered thus; That he was not come from ſo far a countrey, nor undertook ſuch pains for the enlargement of his Dominions, big enough already (too baſe a thing for him to put himſelf into ſo great danger and hazard for) but rather to win honour, and to make his name famous to future Poſterities: And that he would make it appear to the World, that he It's refuſed by him.

came

came to assist their Master as his Friend and Ally at his request: and that his upright intentions therein were the greatest cause that God from above had favoured him, and made him instrumental to bruise the head of the greatest and fiercest enemy of mankind that was under heaven; and therefore to get him an immortal name, his purpose was to make free so great and flourishing a City as was Constantinople, governed by so noble and ancient a House as the Emperours. That he had alwayes joyned Faith to his Courage, which should never suffer him to make so great a breach into his reputation, as that it should be reported of him, that in the colour of a Friend, he should come to invade the Dominions of his Ally. That he desired no more, but that the service he had done for the Greek Emperour, might remain for ever engraven in the memory of his posterity, to the end they might for ever wish well to him and his Successors, by the remembring the good he had done for them: That he wished, that long might the noble Emperour live, happily to govern his estate, and that before his return, he would so well consider of the establishing of the same, as that he should not lightly fall into the same jeopardy.

Tamerlane's fidelity.

Easie it is to judge what joy the Ambassadours did conceive upon hearing this so gracious an answer from the mouth of Tamerlane, who, rather than he would break his Faith, refused an Empire offered him, together with one of the statelieſt and magnificenteſt Cities in the World. After the testification of their joy and thankfulness, these Ambassadours were by the command of Tamerlane, royally feasted by Axalla, having all the honour done to them that might be. And one of them being sent back to carry this unexpected news to the Emperour, filled both him and all the City of Constantinople with exceeding joy and gladness, which both he, and all his subjects testified, by making of Bonefires, and other signs of joy and pleasure. And the Emperour, the more to shew his gratitude, by the advice of his Counsellours, passed over the streight into Asia, to see Tamerlane in Prusa, and in person himself to give him thanks; who hearing of his coming, and being glad thereof, presently sent Prince Axalla to meet him, and to certifie him of the joy he conceived to have the good hap to see him, as also to conduct him to Prusa, where those two great Princes with the greatest magnificence that might be, met, and so spent one whole day in conversing together; and the Greek Emperor the next day taking his leave, was by Tamerlane with much honour conducted out of the City.

The Ambassadours dismissed.

The Greek Emperour comes to him.

Now had Tamerlane himself conceived a great desire to see the famous City of Constantinople, from which he was not now far, yet would he not go thither as a Conquerour, but as a private person: which by the means of Axalla was accomplished, and he thereinto by the Greek Emperour privately received, and with all familiarity possible entertained: the Emperour shewing unto him all the rare and excellent things that were contained therein; and the other Greek Princes devising all the means they could to do him pleasure, and them that were with him, who were all in a manner cloathed after the Greek fashion. The Greek Emperour was curious to shew him all the beautiful Gardens along the Sea-coast, and so privately conducting him about, spent five or six dayes with all the mirth that might be; Tamerlane by the way often saying, that he had never seen a fairer City; and that of all others, considering the scituation of it, it was right worthy to command all the World. He wondred at the costly buildings of the Temples, the fair engraven Pillars, the high Piramides, and the excellent Gardens; afterwards saying often, that it nothing repented him to have undertaken so long and dangerous a journey, if it had been only to preserve so notable a City from fire and sword. In the Greek Emperour he greatly commended his mild nature and courtesie, who knowing that above all things he took pleasure in fair serviceable Horses, gave unto him thirty of the faireſt, strongeſt, and readieſt that were possibly to be gotten, all most richly furnished: He sent likewise great Presents to all the Tamerlane goes to Constantinople.

He highly commended it.

Princes,

Princes, and great Commanders of the Army, and bountifully cauſed to be delivered to them all things which he thought neceſſary for the Army: So after theſe great kindneſſes, and a ſtrict bond of Friendſhip made, and by ſolemn Oath confirmed by theſe two great Princes, Tamerlane with great contentment took leave of the Emperour, and returned to his Army at Pruſa, wherewith now at pleaſure he ſpoiled and waſted all the dominions of Bajazet in Aſia, no man daring to make head againſt him.

The Winter now drawing on, Tamerlane diſperſed his Army into divers Provinces of the leſſer Aſia, expecting daily when ſome of Bajazet's ſons or great Friends, ſhould make ſuit to him for his deliverance; but none came, moſt fearing the fierce nature of Bajazet, who, if he had been delivered, was like enough to have taken ſevere revenge upon all that forſook him in the battel, and therefore they never interceeded for him. Whereupon Tamerlane one day paſſing by him, ſaid, I marvel that none of thy ſons nor friends either come to ſee thee, or to intreat for thee; it muſt needs be that thou haſt evil deſerved of them, as thou haſt of others. But what thinkeſt thou, if I ſhould ſet thee at liberty, would they receive thee again as their Lord and Sovereign, or not? To whom Bajazet ſtoutly anſwered, Were I at liberty, thou ſhouldeſt quickly ſee that I want neither courage nor means to revenge all my wrongs, and to make the diſobedient to know their duties better. This proud anſwer made Tamerlane to keep a ſtricter hand over him.

He ſends his Army to their Winter-quarters.

Bajazets Pride.

In this great War, the Sultan of Egypt (as we ſaid before) had aided Bajazet, which Tamerlane took in ſo evil part, that he reſolved revenge: For as to his Friends he was moſt kind and courteous, ſo to his Enemies moſt terrible and dreadful. Yet before his departure he reſtored to the poor Mahometan Princes that had fled to him for refuge, all their ancient Inheritances, with ſomething more out of bounty; as alſo he did divers Cities and Countreys of Natolia, to the Greek Emperour, for the yearly Tribute of four hundred thouſand Ducats of Gold, and eight hundred thouſand Franks of Silver. And thus having enriched his Army with the ſpoils of the Ottoman Empire, he turned his Forces againſt the Egyptian Sultan, and ſo paſſing through Caramania, he entred into Syria, then part of the Sultans Kingdom; where near unto Aleppo (before yielded to him) there was fought between them a great and mortal battel, the Sultan having in his Army a hundred thouſand Foot, and ſeventy four thouſand Horſe; whereof there were thirty thouſand Mamelukes, accounted the beſt Horſemen in the World. In which Battel Axalla, with the Avantguard of Tamerlane's Army, was hardly diſtreſſed, and Axalla himſelf taken, but preſently reſcued by Tamerlane, who, had he not by his coming on with freſh Forces ſpeedily reſtored the battel, that day was like enough to have put a period to his Fortunes: But Victory, after a long and cruel fight (wherein were eighty thouſand of both ſides ſlain) inclining to Tamerlane, the Sultan fled, Tamerlane purſuing him for the ſpace of three Leagues. After this Victory, Tamerlane dividing his Army, ſent Axalla with forty thouſand Horſe and fifty thouſand Foot to purſue the Sultan along the Sea-coaſt of Arabia; The Sultan made divers Alts with four thouſand Horſe to have ſtopped Axalla, who having the ſmalleſt Forces, followed him the neareſt, whilſt Tamerlane with ſixty thouſand Horſe, and two hundred thouſand Foot, marched along thoſe Coaſts, having all the Cities as he went ſurrendred to him: only the ſtrong City of Damaſco refuſed to receive him, whereinto the Sultan had put the Prince Zamudzen, with a ſtrong Garriſon, who did what might be done to defend the ſame, but all in vain: For Tamerlane having by battery overthrown a great part of the Wall, took the City by ſtorm, only the Caſtle yet remained, which was accounted impreg-Tamerlane's Juſtice.

He marches towards Egypt.

His battel with the Sultan.

The Sultan beaten, flyeth.

Damaſco taken by ſtorm.

impregnable: but at the taking of the City, ſuch a multitude preſſed into it, as that it was not poſſible for them long to ſubſiſt; therefore within a ſhort time, being pinched with hunger, and many already dead, the reſt, upon promiſe of their lives, offered to yield; But Tamerlane would not receive them to mercy, to make them ſenſible what it was to hold out againſt him: So that moſt of them dying of famine, the reſt yielded at pleaſure, and were moſt of them put to the Sword for their obſtinacy; which ſeverity of his, cauſed all the Cities within the ſpace of thirty Leagues to bring their Keyes to him in token of their ſubmiſſion, whom he no way moleſted, otherwiſe than in contributing to the charge of his Army.

Tamerlane goes to Jeruſalem,

From thence he turned directly towards Jeruſalem; at which time they of the City had turned out the Sultans Garriſon, as had almoſt all they of Judea, ſubmitting themſelves unto Tamerlane: at Chorazin was a Garriſon of ſix thouſand, who at firſt pretended to defend the place: but when they perceived that Tamerlane was reſolved to have it, they ſubmitted, and found mercy. There Tamerlane left a Garriſon of his own to repreſs the Mamelukes, who with frequent incurſions troubled his Army. Himſelf with ſome of his Horſemen rode to Jeruſalem, to viſit the Sepulchre ſo much reverenced of all Nations: By the Inhabitants he was joyfully received, and having ſought out all the antiquities of that ancient City, he would be conducted to all the places where Chriſt had preached; and coming to the Sepulchre, he gave there many rich gifts, to the great content of all, only the Jews much blamed him for ſo doing, but he regarded them not, calling them the accurſed of God: There had he news, that the Sultan, having gathered together all his Forces, was fortifying his Cities in Egypt, eſpecially Alexandria, and the Grand Caier; whereupon Tamerlane commanded his Army to march towards Egypt to Damietta, which ſtrong City he thought not good to leave behind him, though by ſome he was perſwaded ſo to do, for that it was thought impregnable, both by reaſon of the ſtrong Caſtle, and great Garriſon placed therein by the Sultan: But he, whoſe Fortune nothing could hinder, would needs go thither: And having commanded Axalla to attempt it, followed himſelf after with the reſt of his Army.

His Piety.

He marcheth into Egypt.

Now Axalla, having ſummoned the City, declared to the Inhabitants (who were moſt of them Chriſtians) the mildneſs, and courteſie of Tamerlane, as alſo who himſelf, and of what Religion he was; cauſing many of his Greek Captains to ſpeak to them, and to tell them, what miſery they endured under the Moors and Mameluks, which ſo far prevailed with them, that they reſolved to adventure their lives to put the Mameluks out of the City; and the night after, taking Arms, made themſelves Maſters of one quarter of the City, opening one of the Gates to Axalla, whereby he entring, put all the Mameluks to the Sword, or took them priſoners; and ſo became Maſter of that ſtrong City: Whereof Tamerlane hearing, hoped by ſo proſperous a beginning, to find an happy end of his Wars in Egypt. For he knew that the Haven of Damietta might furniſh him with Victuals out of all parts of Greece, as the Emperour Emmanuel had promiſed him, and wherein he nothing failed him. Then did Tamerlane enter the City, leaving therein a Garriſon of two thouſand of the Emperour of Greece his Souldiers, with a Governour, of whom he took an Oath for their obedience. And having ſtaid a while at Damietta, he cauſed his Avantguard to march towards Alexandria, and having paſſed over the River, he ſuddenly turned directly towards Grand Caire, to the great aſtoniſhment of the Sultan, who provided for the defence of Alexandria, as neareſt to the Enemy: But underſtanding this news, uſed ſuch diligence, that he entred into Caire, with forty thouſand Horſe and ſixty thouſand Foot, even as Tamerlane's Army approached to it. By this unexpected coming of the Sultan, the great City, that before was ready to have revolted, was again confirmed confirmed in his obedience, to the great prejudice of Tamerlanes affairs: For to remain long before it was impoſſible, through want of Victuals for ſo great an Army in an Enemies Countrey. Yet this diſcouraged not Tamerlane from approaching to it, and with all his Army to encamp near unto the ſame, having cauſed a great Trench to be made for the ſecurity of his Horſemen, and therein to lodge his Army more ſafely: during which time, he cauſed divers attempts to be made, as well to try the enemies confidence, as to ſee how the people of the City, eſpecially the ſlaves (which in that populous City are in great numbers) were affected towards him, who indeed were glad to ſee the ſtate of his Army, and the proud Mamelukes ſtill put to the worſt, but farther ſtirred not. During this ſiege, he thought good one day to draw forth his Army before the City, to try whether the enemy had any mind to come to a battel; as alſo to view his own Forces, and ſo indeed to ſeek occaſion to fight, hoping that if the Sultan ſhould come forth with his Army, ſome revolt might happen at the ſame time in the City, as well by the ſlaves, unto whom by ſecret Spies, he had promiſed liberty, as by the Citizens themſelves, who were much diſcontented with the inſolency of the Mamelukes, and by whom Tamerlane by the ſame Spies had made it known that he came not to hurt them, but to deliver them from the tyranny of his, and their enemies: But ſtanding thus in Battel array, none ſtirred out of the City, neither was there any tumult raiſed within, according as he expected: For the Sultan being plentifully provided with all things in that rich City, reſolved to weary out Tamerlane by lying ſtill, and not to put all to the hazard of a battel. Tamerlane perceiving his Deſign, yet reſolved not to depart till he was Victorious; whereupon he thought fit alſo to attempt him in his greateſt ſtrength, and in the heart of his greateſt City, though it could not be done without great hazard, ſuch confidence had he in the Valour, and Multitude of his Army. Now his purpoſe was firſt to take one of the Cities (for Caire is divided into three) and therein encamping himſelf, by little and little to advance forwards, as he could find opportunity. Upon this reſolution, he commanded a ſtrong aſſault to be given, and having conducted his Footmen to the place choſen by him for the onſet (for the City was not Walled, but only fortified with Ditches and Trenches) he commanded the Prince of Thanais, with fifty thouſand men, to begin the Aſſault, even in the face of the Enemy, which he moſt valiantly performed, which occaſioned a great and terrible fight. Axalla in the mean time deeming (as the truth was) that the Sultan had drawn the greateſt part of his Forces to that place, fetched a compaſs about, and in another part of the City, with ſmall reſiſtance paſſed the Trenches, where he preſently left thirty thouſand men to fill up the Ditches, thereby to make way for the Horſemens entrance, himſelf with the reſt, advancing forwards againſt twenty thouſand ſent by the Sultan to oppoſe his farther paſſage, the Prince of Thanais being at the ſame time almoſt beaten back by the Mamelukes: But the Ditches being preſently levelled, ten thouſand Horſemen entred, who charged upon the backs of the Mamelukes, where the Sultan himſelf was; there were likewiſe ſeconded by ten thouſand more, ſent in by Tamerlane, himſelf following after with all his power: Hereupon the Sultan retreated into a ſecond ſtrength which he had made in the next City.

Damietta taken.

Tamerlane marched to Cair.

Caire beſieged.

Tamerlanes policy.

Caire ſtormed.

Axalla enters.

Caire taken.

This fight continued full ſeven hours, wherein were ſlain of the Sultans men, above ſixteen thouſand, and of Tamerlane's between ſeven and eight thouſand. Tamerlane being well contented that he had diſlodged his enemy, and gained one of the Cities, cauſed a retreat to be ſounded, hoping the next day to win all the reſt, as indeed he did. For the next morning the Prince of Thanais ſtorming the Trenches in one part, as Axalla did in another, the Sultan after a great fight, finding himſelf hardly preſſed by the obſti-

The Sultan flyeth.

obſtinate Enemy, and unable longer to hold out, retreated, abandoning the City, and encamping himſelf along the River Nilus, reſolving to retire to the City of Alexandria his ſecond ſtrength, and only refuge, which Tamerlane ſuſpecting, followed after him with his Horſemen, (who only were in order) and ſome few Foot hardly drawn from the City, which their fellows were in plundering, Tamerlane promiſing them both to regard, and reward their good ſervice. Againſt theſe, the Sultan, upon a narrow cawſeway, had oppoſed twelve or fifteen thouſand men, to favour his paſſage, who being of his beſt Souldiers, maintained their ground ſtoutly, the place being much for their advantage; yet at length their enemies ſtill increaſing, and preſſing hard upon them, they were forced to caſt themſelves into the great River, and made a moſt honourable retreat, every man having his Weapon in one hand, and ſwimming with the other hand to the farther Bank. The Sultan flying with about eighteen thouſand Horſe, (the reſt being either drowned or diſperſed) is ſaid to have comforted his flying men, by telling them, they were not men, but gods that had vanquiſhed them.

Tamerlane purſueth.

A brave retreat of the Mamelukes.

Divers of the Mamelukes that were taken Priſoners, being brought before Tamerlane, were by him courteouſly uſed, and asked if they would be content to ſerve him, ſeeing their Maſter was fled and gone? This they all utterly refuſed, whom notwithſtanding for their fidelity, Tamerlane ſet at liberty to go again to their Maſter, being no leſs deſirous to be admired by his Enemies for his Goodneſs and Bounty, than to be feared for his Force and Valour.

Fidelity rewarded.

Caire plundered.

The wonderful wealth of this ſo great and famous a City, became a prey to his Souldiers, who for the ſpace of twenty four hours, had the ſpoil thereof: At the end of which time, every man was ſtraitly charged by open Proclamation, to retire to his Quarters. Tamerlane would not ſuffer any of the Citizens to be taken Priſoners. and ſuch as were, he releaſed, and ſo leaving ten thouſand good Souldiers, with many others that followed his Camp, for the Guard of the City, and taking with him all ſuch perſons as he thought might hurt him, he cauſed his Army to paſs over the River, and to follow the Sultan to Alexandria, that ſo his Victory might be compleated.

Tamerlane goes to Alexandria.

Axalla haſted before with the Avantguard, to hinder the Sultan from gathering up his Forces together: The reſt of the Army was conducted by the Prince of Thanais. Tamerlane himſelf, with an infinite number of Boats, and many Souldiers to attend him, went by Water, greatly delighting to behold that fair River of Nilus, ſometimes running with a ſwift courſe, other ſometimes very calm, and ſcarce moved. The Citizens of Alexandria hearing of his coming, and fearing the iſſue, beſought the Sultan to compaſſionate their condition, and to withdraw himſelf into Lybia; whither Tamerlane could not follow him, by reaſon of the barrenneſs of the Countrey: Reſolving for their parts to ſubmit to Fortune, and to do as the time required; yet promiſing in heart to remain his, and to make the ſame to appear to him, ſo ſoon as occaſion ſhould be offered. Hereupon the Sultan, ſeeing all things deſperate, determined to retire, yet hoping that time might bring a change, for that Tamerlanes numerous Army could not long remain there: And ſo departing out of Alexandria, with Tears ſtanding in his eyes, he often ſaid, that God was angry with him and his People, ſo that he muſt of neceſſity ſuffer the fatal Overthrow of his Eſtate; yet, for his own part, he had done as much as in him lay, according the Duty of his Place, and to ſatisfie the expectation that the World had of him, for the upholding of the ſame. Notwithſtanding he hoped to return again, and to deliver his People from that bondage, which for the preſent they were neceſſitated to ſubmitto

The Sultan flyes.

Tamerlane coming to Alexandria (before yielded to Axalla) ſtayed there a great while, ſending Axalla to purſue the Sultan, being much grieved that he could not get him into his hands, and therefore he ſtill feared that ſome Innovation would be raiſed by him after his departure, which made him to deal the more hardly with them whom he ſuſpected to favour him. Now the bruit of theſe Victories, having, with Axalla, paſſed into Lybia, brought ſuch a fear, not only upon the Countries adjoyning to theſe Conqueſts, but alſo upon all Africa, ſuppoſing (that Tamerlane followed with the reſt of his Army) that twenty two of the Mooriſh Kings ſent their Ambaſſadours to offer their ſubjection, and obedience to him: Of the neareſt of which Kings Tamerlane took Hoſtages, but for ſuch as were more remote, he contented himſelf with their faith given, and with other Teſtimonies of their good wills. Axalla having long followed the Sultan, who like a man forſaken of Fortune, ſtill fled before him, ſeeing all his labour loſt, returned to Alexandria. And Tamerlane, after his long travel and pains taken, was now more deſirous than ever to return into his own Countrey: The rather being moved thereunto by the earneſt requeſt of his Wife, much longing for his return: He had news alſo of the ſickneſs of the old Emperour of Tartary, his Father in Law; and beſides, Age it ſelf began to bring unto him a deſire of reſt. With his did the deſires of the Souldiers well agree, who were now weary of running ſo many and divers Adventures. His only ſtay was, that he expected the coming of Calibes, an old and faithful ſervant of his, whom for his good deſert he made choice of to govern all theſe his new Conqueſts in Egypt and Syria: A great honour indeed it was, but not too great for him that had ſo well deſerved. And indeed Tamerlane was alwayes ſo mindful of the good deſerts of his faithful ſervants, that he needed not by others to be put in remembrance of them, were they never ſo far off, as now was Calibes, who at this time was, with a third part of the Army, making way for him along the River Euphrates, for the Conqueſt of Meſopotamia and Perſia, whoſe coming was longed for with great devotion by the whole Army, which was now very deſirous to return; but this expectation of theirs was not long delayed, for Calibes being ſent for, came ſpeedily to Alexandria, where the whole Army was by Tamerlane's command now rendezvouzed.

Axalla purſues him.

Many Kings ſubmit to Tamerlane.

Tamerlane deſires to return home.

He ſecures his new conqueſts.

Upon the coming of Calibes, Tamerlane made the Prince of Zamalzan (a man of great reputation) Governour of that place, as Lieutenant General under Calibes, whom Tamerlane (as was ſaid before) had made his Vice-Roy over all Egypt and Syria, together with the Countries newly conquered in Lybia and Barbary: He gave him alſo ſix thouſand Horſe, and ten thouſand Foot to aſſiſt him therein: And ſo leaving Alexandria, he took Calibes along with him to the great City of Caire, there taking the beſt order he could for the ſecuring of his new Conqueſts: He left with him forty thouſand Horſe, and fifty thouſand Foot: And having ſufficiently inſtructed him how he would have thoſe Kingdoms governed, diſmiſſed him, not like a ſervant, but a companion, being very ſorry to leave him deſtitute of his preſence: So ſetting forwards with his Army, conducted by the Prince of Thanais, Tamerlane with a few of his Train, turned again aſide to Jeruſalem, where he daily viſited the Sepulchre of Chriſt, (whom he called the God of the Chriſtians) viewing the ruines of Solomon's Temple, which he much admired, and at Jeruſalem, the Seat of David's Kingdom, and that of great Solomon, grieving that he could not ſee them in their former beauty; And to ſhew his Devotion and favour to this City, he commanded it to be free from all Garriſons and Subſidies, and ſo giving great gifts to the Monaſteries, he departed from thence to Damaſco; which great City, for that it was infected with the Opinions of Jezides, (accounted an Arch-Heretick among the Muſſulmen) as alſo evil-affected to his Proceedings, he cauſed it to be razed, and the bones of Jezides the Falſe Pro-

Calibes made Governour.

Tamerlane goes to Jeruſalem.

phet to be digged up, and burnt, and his Sepulchre (which before by his Diſciples was much honoured, to be filled with dung; and ſo marching on, and blaſting the World before him, being victorious which way ſoever he turned, he at laſt paſſed over the River Euphrates, where he conquered Meſopotamia, with the great City of Babylon, and all the Kingdom of Perſia, and ſo at laſt laden with the ſpoiles of the World, and eternized for ever in his Fame, he returned to Samercand, the famous place of his Birth, and Glorious Seat of his Empire.

Now had Bajazet (a little before one of the greateſt Princes on earth, and now the Scorn of Fortune, and by-word to the World) with great impatiency lain two years in moſt miſerable thraldom, for the moſt part ſhut up in an iron Cage, like a dangerous wild beaſt: and having no better means to end his loathed life, violently daſhed out his brains againſt the bars of the iron Grate wherein he was encloſed, and ſo died about the year of our Lord 1399. His dead body, at the requeſt of his Son Mahomet, was by Tamerlane ſent to Aſtrapolis, from which it was conveyed to Pruſa, and there lieth buried in a Chappel built for the purpoſe without the City Eaſtward: where alſo are interred the bodies of his beſt beloved Wife Deſpina, and of his eldeſt ſon Erthogrul, and in another little Chappel hard by, lieth buried his brother Jacup, whom he had murdered in the beginning of his Reign. This Bajazet had ſome Vertues, which were much obſcured by his cholerick and wayward nature, which made him to exceed in cruelty and Pride: He was alſo very covetous; which qualities made him indeed much feared, but little beloved of his Souldiers and men of War, by whom therefore in his greateſt need he was forſaken. He uſed commonly to ſay, That his Treaſures were his Childrens meat, and not his Souldiers Pay; which, by way of reproach, was by a common Souldier caſt in his Teeth, when he raged to ſee himſelf by them forſaken in that great battel againſt Tamerlane, telling him as he fled, That he run not away, but went to ſeek his Pay, wherewith to provide his children bread.

Bajazet's Character.

Tamerlane, as we ſaid before, having conquered Perſia, uſed his Victory ſo mildly, that as long as he lived, the people of that Countrey were alwayes much affected to him; which ſerved him greatly, as well for the keeping of Syria, as the Sultan of Egypts Empire: In his own Countrey he was received with all Triumphs, and expreſſions of joy that might be; the chiefeſt priſoners marching before him, and whereſoever he paſſed, the people aſſembled themſelves by thouſands, praiſing and ſinging his Victories. The Emperour having ſpent a month or two in Feaſts and Triumphs, according to his accuſtomed Devotion, he vowed a Church and Hoſpital unto God, the moſt magnificent that might be deviſed: and to beautifie his City of Samercand, he ſearched out all ſorts of Handicrafts-men, intending to make it as large again as it was, and one of the ſtatelieſt Cities in the World: he peopled it alſo with ſo many ſeveral Nations as he had brought along with him, unto whom he gave liberty to build houſes, diſtributing money unto them to do the ſame, giving them alſo all kind of Priviledges and Immunities for their encouragement therein: He cauſed alſo the ſtreets to be plotted out, and in one corner of it he built his Church and Hoſpital. His next care was to preſerve the good will and love of his famous Souldiers, whoſe names he cauſed to be Regiſtred in a general Muſter-Roll, which he kept by him, and daily conferred honours and rewards upon them (they not thinking of it) in recompence of their former good ſervices; thinking that day loſt wherein he did not ſome good. Then did he declare the death of the old Emperour to his Council, (of which he had received private intelligence) and forgat no Ceremony due unto his honour, publickly expreſſing the grief he had conceived for his death. Then did he, with his ordinary Court, conſiſting of forty thouſand Horſe, and ſixty thouſand Foot, ſet forward towards Quinſay, where his Empreſs was. And when Tamerlanes Devotion.

He enlargeth Samercand.

His love to his Souldiers.

He goeth towards Quinſay.

when he came to Cambalu, he had intelligence of a battel fought by Odmar againſt the King of China's Captain General, and how he had purſued his Victory, having taken three or four great and rich Cities, and that the Chineis did again deſire Peace. Hereupon he ſent them theſe Articles; That the King of China ſhould pay all the Arrears of his Tribute; That he ſhould come in perſon to do his homage, acknowledging himſelf a Vaſſal of his Empire; That he ſhould deliver up to him all his Cities ſaving three, ſuch as the Emperour ſhould nominate; That he ſhould pay all the charges of the War, becauſe he had broken the Peace; which performed, things ſhould be reſtored to the ſame ſtate they were in before the War. And to gratifie Odmar, he ſent to him with all Magnificence, one of his Siſters to be his Wife.

Odmar's Victory in China.

Tamerlane gives him his ſiſter in marriage.

When he firſt entred into Cambalu, he was received with all the expreſſions of joy that might be, whereupon he reſtored to them their Priviledges which he had taken from them, for their Rebellion with Calix. The Empreſs being informed of his being there (leaving Prince Axalla to govern at Quinſay) came to him: So that he remained there near two moneths, giving order for all his affairs; the rather, becauſe it was near to Mount Althay, where the Scythian Emperours uſe to be buried; And ſo cauſing the body of the old Emperour to be brought thither, himſelf conducted it with all Pomp, honouring not only the Body, but all that he had loved in the World; and though it was not the cuſtom for Women to aſſiſt at Funerals, yet he took his Empreſs along with him, who went near unto the Corps, till they came to the place where it was interred amongſt his Predeceſſors. After theſe Ceremonies finiſhed, he returned to Cambalu, where he ſpent the Winter in Tilts, Turnaments, Hunting, and ſuch like Recreations: The rather, becauſe this place was near to China, whereby he had the fitter opportunity to hear how affairs paſſed there, purpoſing to go thither in perſon the next Winter, if Odmar that Summer did not make an end of the Wars; and if the King of China did not ſubmit himſelf to his Obedience. The Mark he ſhot at now being only to keep that which by his Valour he had won, deſiring to ſpend the reſt of his life in reaping the fruits of his hard Travels, and former labours.

The old Emperour buried.

Now Prince Axalla governed at Quinſay, as well to the great contentment of the Souldiery, as of the Inhabitants, who, out of their abundant love to the Emperour, requeſted Prince Axalla to write importunately to him, that his Son might be brought up amongſt them, which at Axalla's requeſt he conſented to, making him in the abſence of his Son, the Governour of Quinſay, from Cambalu even to the Sea, which Countrey contained in it about three hundred Cities, beſides an infinite number of Villages: all which was formerly under the Government of the old Empetour: He delivered alſo into his charge the Government of his Son.

His Son brought up at Quinſay.

Shortly after, the King of China came to his Court, according to the Covenants offered to him, where he once again ſwore obedience to the Emperour, who ſhewed him his greatneſs, the more to make him ſtand in awe: for he knew that this Barbarian would keep no promiſe longer than it ſhould ſtand with his own intereſt. This King of China was aſtoniſhed to behold ſo many Souldiers, and the Countrey ſo well repleniſhed with People: and above all, that they uſed ſo little curioſity and riches in their apparel, eſpecially wondring that the Emperour himſelf was apparelled in mean cloth of one colour, without curioſity.

The King of China comes to him.

Tamerlane's plain apparel.

Shortly after, Tamerlane went to Quinſay, and by the way was met by Prince Axalla, and all the chief Lords and Citizens, who entertained him with all the Magnificence that might be. This City of Quinſay was the faireſt, and one of the richeſt in the World, and of the moſt wonderful ſcituation, being divided by many channels of Water, upon which are framed wonderful and ſtately buildings, having alſo an infinite number of Bridges:

Quinſay deſcribed. It was one hundred miles in compaſs.

It

It abounds with all kind of Spices, and Merchandizes in great quantity. The Citizens presented the Emperour with many rare things, judged to be worth two Millions in Gold, with great variety of strange and excellent things. Then did the Emperour call for his Son that was there educated, who was now seven years old. He forbade that thenceforward they should suffer him to wear any thing on his Head, and hung a Bow about his neck, saying, That they which from their birth were called to Sovereignty, should be used both to Cold and Heat, and should be exercised to Arms betimes, and not be brought up idly and delicately: reprehending those which brought him up, for using him so tenderly, asking them, if they meant to make a Woman of his Son? They replying, that he was tender. If he be not born (said he) to be strong and valiant, he will not be worthy to succeed me; for he must not be an effeminate Prince that must preserve the Parthian Empire. About this time his Empress was brought to bed of another Son at Samercand, for joy whereof, he made Feasts, with Tiltings and Pastimes fifteen dayes together. Then did he visit all the Sea-Towns near to Quinsay, hunting all manner of Games: yet often saying, That the Recreations which he used, were only helps to ease him in the pains of his publick affairs which God had called him to. And when Prince Axalla told him, that that City was a fit place for his abode; O my friend (said he) it is not so: For it's a Maxime, that the Lord of this great City must not come to it above once in ten years, and when he is here, he must temper his Actions as if he were upon a stage, with Gravity, and a good grace before the people, who are apt to receive good or evil impressions according as their Prince deporteth himself.

His directions about the breeding of his Son.

His second Son born.

Recreations rightly used.

His Prudence.

Having setled his affairs in that part of his Empire, he returned to Samercand, where three times a Week he administred Justice publickly unto the meanest of his Subjects, as well as to the greatest; which made him much beloved of all over whom he did command. On other dayes he gave secret audience, and disposed of the affairs of his estate, which were concluded daily in his presence. In his Council he used such severity that none durst deal untruly, or passionately in his presence. Yet shewed he such courteousness in his conversation, that he was both beloved and feared of his people. He never changed his Servants, except they committed some great faults against him. All the servants of the late Emperour his Uncle, he never changed one of them, but increased their Pensions, making them sensible of his liberality in that change: The like bounty he used to strangers, thereby to oblige them to him. He drew great store of money yearly from the Muscovite, by way of Tribute, which yet he distributed in the same Country to maintain his authority there, winning those to him, who otherwise might have hurt him. He had great care of his Revenues, wherein he was so expedite, that in one hours space he could see his Estate from three months to three months, together with his ordinary and extraordinary expences; they were presented to him so well digested.

His return to Samercand.

His Justice.

His love to his servants.

His bounty.

His frugality.

But after all his publick affairs so well managed, and his private businesses so well ordered, Sickness arrested, and Death conquered this Great Conquerour, leaving his Empire to Sautochio his Eldest Son, now nineteen years old, who was proclaimed Emperour within two hours after his Fathers death.

His Death.

Tamerlane, from his childhood, was well instructed in the Arabian learning, wherein he was very studious, insomuch as when they thought him to be in the Baths, wherein they are very curious in that Contrey, being their chiefest delight, he was retired to the contemplation and study of Heavenly things. He had within his eyes such a Divine beauty, and radiancy full of Majesty, that one could hardly endure the sight of them without closing of his eyes, so that some that talked with him, and beheld him, were stricken dumb dumb for the preſent, which cauſed him with a comely modeſty to abſtain from looking upon them that talked with him. All the reſt of his Viſage was courteous, and well-proportioned: He wore his hair long and curled, contrary to the cuſtome of his Countrey-men, who uſed to ſhave their Heads: He went almoſt alwayes bare-headed, ſaying, that his Mother came of the Race of Sampſon, who therefore adviſed him to honour long hair. His hair was of a dusky colour, inclining ſomewhat to a Violet, the moſt beautiful that any eye could behold. His ſtature was of a middle ſort, ſomewhat narrow in his ſhoulders: He had a fair and ſtrong leg; his bodily ſtrength and agility was ſuch, as none did ſurpaſs, and often on Feſtival dayes, he made trial of them with the ſtrongeſt; yet did he it with ſuch a Grace mixt with Humanity, that he whom he overcame held himſelf therein moſt happy, though it was a great diſgrace amongſt the Tartarians to be thrown to the ground in wreſtling.

His Character

In the time of his Wars againſt the Turks, a Souldier of his found buried in the ground a great Pot of Gold, which he brought to Tamerlane, who asked him if it had his Fathers ſtamp upon it; But when he ſaw that it had the ſtamp of the Romans, he would not own, nor meddle with it. Note.

THE

THE

LIFE and DEATH

OF

CHARLES the GREAT,

King of FRANCE,

And Emperour of GERMANY.

Pepins Children.

PEPIN, ſirnamed The ſhort, the twenty third King of France, (a wiſe and valiant Prince) had two Sons, Charles and Caroloman, and five Daughters: Birthe, who was married to Milon Earl of Mans, by whom ſhe had great Rowland: Hiltrude, married to Rene Earl of Genes, by whom ſhe had the renowned Oliver; Rohard, Adeline, Idubergue, Ode, and Alix.

Pepin being toiled out with great Wars, much broken with the care of publick affairs, and now grown Old, that he might imploy his laſt days in the maintenance of Juſtice and Peace, the burden of War he laid upon his Eldeſt Son Charles, a wiſe and valiant young Prince, of whoſe modeſty and obedience he was well aſſured: And then retiring to Paris, he was not long after ſurpriſed with ſickneſs, in which he recommended his two Sons to the Eſtates of France, to give them portions at their pleaſures, and ſo ended his days Anno Chriſti 768.

Pepins Death.

His Character.

He was a Religious Prince, wiſe, moderate, valiant, loving to his Subjects and beloved of them, happy in his Father, and his Children, and in his Government; An excellent Pattern for other Princes, who by his Example, ample, hold it for an undoubted Maxim, That the ſtrongeſt Fortreſs, and beſt ſecurity for a Prince, is the love of his Subjects, and the ſureſt bond of his Authority, a reſpect gotten, and preſerved by virtue.

Pepin being dead, the Eſtates of France aſſembled together, and by their joynt conſents, divide the Kingdom betwixt his two Sons Charles, and Caroloman, by equal portions. Brothers theſe were of divers humours, who had certainly ruined each other by this equality of power, had not the death of Caroloman, within three years after, divolved the Government of the whole Realm upon Charles. Charles made King.

Charles was endowed with ſingular gifts both of Body and Mind, which were much improved by the ſedulous care of his Prudent Father, manifeſted in the virtuous education of him: For which end he procured Paul of Piſa, a learned man, to inſtruct him in the Greek and Latin Tongues, and one Aymon to read to him Philoſophy, and the Mathematicks: Himſelf alſo trained him up in Feates of Arms, and Warlike exerciſes. But above all, and as the ground of all virtues, he was careful to have him trained up, and well inſtructed in Religion, which all his life after he loved, and honoured with great Reverence the Church and Paſtors thereof. He called the ſtudy of Humane Sciences his Paſtimes, and the companions of his Sword, and did ſometimes recreate himſelf therein. He loved Learning and learned men by Nature. He delighted in Poeſy, as ſome of his Writings do ſhew; but eſpecially in Hiſtory, wherein he was exceeding well read. Charity, Temperance, Equity, care of Juſtice to relieve his Subjects, to keep his Faith and promiſe, both to Friend and Foe, and to uſe a Victory modeſtly, were the notable effects of his excellent knowledg, as remarkable in him as in any Prince that ever lived. The Univerſities of Paris, and Piſa (either Founded, or endowed by him) witneſs the great love and honour that he did bear to learning. His Educatiſon.

During the Life of his Father Pepin, he ſhewed how much he had profited in Arms under ſo good a Schoolmaſter, having great Commands under him, which he diſcharged with notable reputation; and the improvement of his skill and ability after he came to his Kingdom, ſhew plainly, that there was never any Souldier that carried Sword with more valour, nor great Captain that commanded with more obedience, or that performed Noble Actions with greater ſucceſs, or that uſed his Victories with more mildneſs, and judgment. Neither did ever King or Prince rule with more authority, nor was more reverently obeyed by his Subjects and Souldiers than our Charles; who therefore well deſerved the name of Charlemagne, or Charles the Great, by reaſon of his great virtues. He was of a lively diſpoſition, quick, active, and vehement: Quicquid egit, valdè egit: Yet modeſty, and wiſdom did ſo ſeaſon, and moderate his vivacity, and vehemency, as gave a great luſtre to both, and kept them within their due bounds: And this mixture of divers humours ſo tempered with moderation, made him as admirable for his Judgment, as venerable in his Perſon and countenance. His Valour and other vertues.

There appeared in him a grave, ſweet Majeſty in a goodly Perſonage: His Body was large and ſtrong: He was very patient of labour: Had a quick ſpirit, was cleer and ſound, both in apprehenſion, memory, and judgment: Reſolution never failed him in difficulties, nor a Reply in Diſcourſes. Terrible he was to ſome, Amiable to others, according to the Cauſe, Perſons, and Occurrents: which virtues purchaſed him ſuch great eſteem, as that he was beloved, reſpected, and reverenced of all men, which effects the ſtory of his raign will ſhew: For having received a great Kingdom from his Father, he enlarged it with wonderful ſucceſs; God having raiſed him up to be a Bulwork to Chriſtians againſt the inundation and rage of Barbarous Nations in the decay and ruin of the Empire. And in proſecuting the Narrative hereof, His Endowments.

I ſhall firſt ſet down his actions during the Life of his Brother Caroloman, then what he did from the the time of his death, till he was made Emperour, and laſtly what his Deportment was from thence to his Death.

Caromans Envy. Caroloman, being Crowned King at Soiſſons, as Charles was at Wormes, began to be extream jealous of his Brothers greatneſs, whom, with grief, he ſaw to be beloved, honoured, and obeyed by all the French, and that deſervedly for his ſingular virtues and endowments both of Body and mind. This jealouſie (too ordinary a concomitant of Princes) made him ſeek by all means to undermine, and overthrow the affairs of Charlemagne, whoſe Eyes were fixed upon Italy, as the fitteſt, and moſt glorious Theatre wherein to exerciſe his valour, and to maintain his authority and power amongſt Chriſtians; and Caroloman did all that poſſibly he could to croſs his deſigns therein. But before I bring him upon that ſtage, give me leave to ſhew you what at this time was the State of Italy, and Rome.

The State of Rome. Rome (ſometimes the Head of the World) was of late become the Chios of all confuſion, the Randevouz of all Barbarous Nations, as if they had vowed the ruin thereof by turns, having already ſackt it three times. For under the Empire of Honorious, Anno Chriſti 414. The Goths, under their King Alaricus, after two years ſiege, took it, and ſackt it, but did not diſmantle it. Forty five years after, during the Empire of Martian, Anno Chriſti 459. the Vandales, under the conduct of Genſerick their King, took it again, ſackt it, ſpoiled and diſgraced it, leading the Widow of the Emperour Valentinian the third, away in Triumph. And in the time of Juſtinian the Emperour, the Goths, under the command of Totila, having weakned it by a long ſiege, took it, ſackt, and diſmantled it. Thus Rome was no more Rome, but a ſpectacle of horrid confuſion; after ſo many devaſtations retaining nothing of her antient beauty, but only the traces of her old buildings, and the puniſhment of her Idolatry and Tyranny; Afterwards the Longobards, or Lombards held Italy, for the ſpace of two hundred years, till by our Charlemagne they were ſubdued, and expelled.

Preſently after the Death of Pepin, the Church of Rome fell into great confuſions by the pactices of Didier King of Lombardy, who having corrupted ſome of the Clergy, cauſed Conſtantine, Brother to Toton, Duke of Nepezo, Several Popes choſen. to be choſen Pope, which he perſecuted with ſuch violence, that he procured Philippicus, who ws already Canonically choſen, to be depoſed: But the better party, ſeeing themſelves contemned by the Lombards, aſſembled together, and by common conſent, choſe Steven the third (a Sicilian by birth) Pope; who being conſcious to his own weakneſs, reſolved to call in the King of France, and to oppoſe him againſt his too-powerful enemies.

Charles being thus ſollicited by the Pope, ſent twelve Prelates ſpeedily to Rome, that he might ſtrengthen the Popes party againſt the other, intending in a greater need to apply a greater remedy; and the matter ſucceeded according to his deſire. For a Counſel being aſſembled at Lateran, they confirm-

Steven confirmed. ed Steven, lawfully choſen, and depoſed Conſtantine, who was ſet up by diſorder and violence. But Didier would not reſt ſatisfied with this affront, and ſeeing that force had ſucceeded no better, he reſolved to try Policy, intending to undermine Steven with fair pretences; For which end he ſent to congra-

Didiers Policy. tulate his Election, purged himſelf in reference to the Anti-Pope Conſtantine, now degraded: accuſed both him and his Brother Toton of ambition, and proteſted to live with Steven in amity; and to manifeſt this his good meaning, he deſired him to be pleaſed with his repair to Rome, that there he might confer with him in private. The Pope (who never ſeeks to the French but in caſe of neceſſity) was eaſily perſwaded by Didier, who came to Rome, conferred with the Pope, and made great Proteſtations of his Obedience to him. But theſe his fair ſhews continued not long.

There

There was at this time at Rome a Governour for the Eastern Emperour, called Paul Epihialte, him Didier corrupted, and the administration of Justice being in his hands, he made use of him so cunningly, as that in the presence of Pope Steven, he caused him to seize upon two of his chief Secretaries, Christopher, and Sergius (whom Didier accused of some pretended crimes) and presently to hang them in an infamous manner. Their greatest offence was, because they favoured the French. Neither did he rest here, but caused all the principal Citizens to be banished, whom he observed to be of the French faction, that so, having removed all hinderances, he might be Master of Rome in despite of the Pope. The Popes Secretaries hanged.

Steven was not so dull but he discovered the Lombards practice exceedingly to tend to his prejudice: whereupon he sent to Charlemagne, beseeching him to prepare an Army against Didiers force. This Charlemagne easily assented to, and fully resolved upon: But Didier had provided a divertisement in France by the means of Caroloman, to stop Charles his passage into Italy, making work for him in Guienne, where there arose a perilous War upon this occasion. The Pope sends for King Charles.

Though the Country of Guienne depended upon the Crown of France, yet were there many Tumults raised by the practices of some Noblemen of the Country, who frequently stirred up the people (mutinous enough of themselves) to Rebellion. The cause of these Troubles, was the abuse of the former Kings Clemency and Bounty, who suffered such people as he conquered, to enjoy their priviledges and liberties. Eudon (a Nobleman of Guienne) began first under Martel, Jeffery and Hunalt his Children, and heirs of his discontent, had continued it under Pepin; and Jeffery being now dead, Hunalt succeeded him with the like hatred, which Caroloman fomented, that he might imploy him against his Brother Charles. Troubles in Guienne.

Guienne was a part of Charles his portion: But Hunalts design was, to withdraw that Country wholly from the Crown of France, and for that end he pretended a Title to the Dukedom thereof, labouring to procure the people to Elect him, having the promise, and assistance of Caroloman to further him therein. Indeed the countenance of Caroloman could do much; but the wisdom and courage of Charlemagne prevailed more: For being advertised of Hunalts practice, and of his Brothers secret designs, he armed with such speed, as that he surprised the Towns of Poictiers, Xante, and Angoulesme, and all the Country adjoyning, Hunalt (who had reckoned without Charles) finding himself thus prevented, fled to a Noble man of that Country called Loup, whom he held, not only to be firm to his faction, but also his trusty and affectionate friend. Charles subdues Hunalt.

Charlemagne being informed hereof, sent presently to Loup, requiring him to deliver Hunalt into his hands, who was guilty of high Treason; and in the mean time he built a Fort in the midst of the Country, where the Rivers of Dordonne, and Liste do joyn, which he called Fronsac, the better to secure his Country against such Invaders. Loup, not daring to refuse, delivered up Hunalt, and all his Family into the hands of Charles, who pardoned Loup, and all that obeyed him; thus ending a dangerous War without blows: And to Hunalt he granted life, and liberty, and the enjoyment of his goods; leaving a memorable example to all Princes how to carry themselves in a Civil War, preventing a mischief by prudence, and diligence, and not to thrust their vanquished Subjects into despair by rigour. Charles his Policy and Clemency.

Caroloman seeing his practices against his Brother to succeed so ill, undertook a journy to Rome, with an intent to cause some alterations there, which yet he covered with a pretence of devotion. He also took his Mother Berthe along with him, and in their passage, they were hourably entertained by Didier King of the Lombards, where Berthe treated, and concluded a marriage between her Son Charlemagne, and Theodora, Sister, or Daughter to this Didier, who was one of the greatest enemies to her Sons good fortune. Yet

Charles his marriage.

Charlemagne (to pleaſe his Mother) received his Wife, but ſoon after, put her away, as neither ſuiting with his affects, or affairs, and ſo, that which was intended as a cauſe of love, bred a greater hatred betwixt theſe two Princes. Caroloman having affected nothing at Rome anſwerable to his deſire, but only diſcovered his fooliſh, and malicious jealouſie, too apparent under his feigned devotion, returned into France, and there ſoon after died. Anno Chriſti 770. Leaving the intire Kingdom to his Brother, who had now no Corrival.

Carolomans death.

Charles his ſecond marriage.

Charlemagne having put away his Wife Theadora upon ſuſpition of incontinency, he married Hildegard, or Ildegrade, Daughter to the Duke of Sueve, his Vaſſal, by whom he had Charles, Pepin, and Lewis, and three Daughters, Rotrude, Berthe, and Gille, who were the Nurſery of his Noble Family. But Carolomans jealouſie died not with him, but ſurvived in his Wife Berthe, who (being impatient of her preſent condition, and thruſt headlong with a ſpirit of revenge againſt her Brother in Law, Charles) retired with her two Sons to Didier, King of Lombardy, as to the moſt bitter, and irreconcilable enemy of her Brother Charles. Didier intertained her and her Children very courteouſly, hoping by them to promote his deſign: But it proved the leaven of his own deſtruction. His practice (together with the Widows) was to procure the preſent Pope, who (Steven being dead) was one Adrian, a Roman Gentleman, to Crown, and confirm the Sons of Caroloman for Kings of France, wherein the Lombard had two deſigns. Firſt, by this means to bring the Pope in diſgrace with Charlemagne, that he might the eaſilier ſuppreſs him, being deſtitute of the French aides, whereon he chiefly relyed; and Secondly to ſet France in a flame, by ſetting up new Kings in it. Didier therefore earneſtly beſought the Pope to grant this favour to the Sons of Caroloman for his ſake: But Adrian (well acquainted with the Lombards humour) was ſo reſolute in denying his requeſt, as that they fell into open hatred. And Didier being much diſpleaſed with this repulſe, took Arms, and with his Forces entred into the Exarchy, being a Signory under the Popes juriſdiction, and beſieged Ravenna, the chief City of the Exarchy: Whereupon the Pope ſent his Nuncio to him, to expoſtulate the cauſe of this ſo ſudden War againſt his Subjects; deſiring him to reſtore what he had taken, and not to proceed in this Hoſtile manner without any reaſonable cauſe, and that upon the pain of Excommunication.

Pope Adrian.

Didiers Policy.

He makes War againſt the Pope.

Hunalts ingratitude.

At the ſame time there fell out a great occaſion to encreaſe the hatred between Charlemagne and Didier: For that Hunalt (who had been before vanquiſhed in Guienne, and to whom Charles had ſhew'd ſo much favour) very ingratefully retired himſelf to Didier, who did not only receive him courteouſly, but honoured him by making him General of his Army which he had raiſed againſt the Pope. And Didier ſuffered himſelf to be ſo far abuſed by the inſinuations, and perſwaſions of Hunalt, touching the means to attempt ſomething againſt the Eſtates of Charlemagne, that holding Italy undoubtedly for his own, he plotted a War, and aſſured himſelf of a certain Victory in France. Thus Ambition and Covetouſneſs haſtens mens ruin. The Pope having no other defence to ſecure his Eſtate but his Excommunication, which againſt Didier proved but Brutum fulmen, a meer ſcare-crow, he was forced to have recourſe to Charlemagne, as to his Sacred Anchor, or laſt Hope, intreating ſpeedy aid from him in this his great neceſſity. Charlemagne had great reaſon to Arm againſt Didier, who had always croſſed his affairs; fed and fomented his Brothers jealouſies, entertained his Widow, and Children, and laboured to have them choſen Kings of France, and all to trouble or ruin his eſtate. He had alſo received his rebellious Subjects, and with their aid, practice to make a War againſt him.

The Pope ſends to Charles for aid.

The ſollicitation, and requeſt alſo of the Roman Church was a great incentive tive to induce him to Arm, againſt him, who profeſſed himſelf to be an open Enemy to the Chriſtian Religion, whereof the former Kings of France had ſhewed themſelves Protectors, and Guardians. But that he might not attempt any thing raſhly, he firſt ſent his Ambaſſadours to the Pope, to aſſure him of his good will, and promiſing not to be wanting to him in his neceſſity: Yet withal, to tell him, that he thought it beſt, firſt to uſe mildneſs, before he attempted force againſt the Lombard. He therefore ſent alſo his Ambaſſadours to Didier to ſummon him to reſtore what he had taken from the Pope, and to ſuffer him to live in Peace. Didier (who relied much upon his Policy) gave good words to the Ambaſſadours, promiſing them to perform all that Charles required, but in effect, he would have the Pope to accept of conditions of Peace from him, and that the Children of Caroloman ſhould be declared Kings of France.

Charles Arms againſt Didier.

Theſe demands were judged ſo unreaſonable, that the Treaty was broken, and the French Ambaſſadours returned home: And Didier proſecutes his War againſt the Church more eagerly than he did before; and having ſpoiled all the Territories of Ravenna, he took Faenza, Ferrara, Comachia, Campagnia, and Romandiola, Towns of the ſix Goyernments, or Hexarchy. Charlemagnes Ambaſſadours, upon their return, inform their Maſter, that the War with the Lombard could not be avoided: and they found Charles in a Poſture fit to invade Italy: For he had Levyed a goodly Army to ſuppreſs the rebellious Saxons, who (impatient of the French yoke) revolted daily from his Obedience, which Army was now ready to be imployed againſt the Lombard.

Didier proſpers in his Wars.

Yet was not Charlemagne willing to attempt any thing in a matter of ſuch importance without the adviſe of his Eſtates, and therefore he preſently ſummoned a Parliament, and (being loath to loſe time) in the mean ſeaſon he cauſed his Army to march, and to make their Rendevouz at Geneva, (a Town under his Obedinece, and in the way to Italy) and having divided his Army into two Parts, he ſeized upon the Paſſages of Mount-Cenis, and St. Bernard, which are the two entrances from France into Italy.

Charles calls a Parliament.

The Eſtates at their meeting having found the Cauſes of War againſt Didier, King of Lombardy, to be juſt, Charlemagne cauſed his Army to advance with all ſpeed, and to adjoyn near to Verceil. There Didier attended him and gave him Battel: But at the firſt encounter he was vanquiſhed by Charlemagne. After which, the Lombard rallying, and re-enforcing his Army, fights him again, and was again beaten, and ſo ſhattered were his Troops, that he was enforced to ſuffer his Enemy to be Maſter of the Field; which proved an infallible Harbinger to his total ruin. Thus having tumultuouſly truſſed up what he could in ſuch haſte, he ſent his Son Aldegiſe to Verona, with the Widow and Children of Caroloman: and caſt himſelf into Pavia, which he had diligently Fortified, as the Fortreſs, or Dungeon rather of his laſt Fortune.

Enters Italy, and beats Didier.

Charlemagne purſues him at the heels, and with all his Forces beſieged him in Pavia, reſolving to have it at what price ſoever. And to make his reſolution the more manifeſt, he ſent for his Wife and Children into Italy, to the end that the Italians (who hitherto were doubtful to whom to adhere) might know his mind, and without attending any new occurrents, might reſolve to obey the Victor.

Charles beſieges Pavia, and Verona.

Having thus cooped up Didier in Pavia, and ſeiſed upon all the avenues, he reſolved to attempt Verona alſo, which they held to be the ſtrongeſt place in all Lombardy. So leaving his Uncle Bernard to continue the ſiege of Pavia, he marched with part of his Army to Verona.

His beginnings being ſo ſucceſsful, and this Check given to Didier, (who was now, as it were, ſhut up in Priſon,) gave a great alteration to the affairs of of either party amongſt theſe people of divers humours. The Spoletines, and Reatines, and thoſe of Ancona, of Fermo, and of Oſſino (ſtriving as it were, which ſhould be firſt) yielded to Charlemagne, and deteſted the wretched, and forelorn eſtate of Didier, as a worthy reward of his Treachery, Injuſtice, and Violence. The Venetians (who were Neuters, and Spectators of this Tragedy, and had never dealt in any ſort with Didier) offered amity and ſuccours to Charlemagne, who deſired them to keep the Seas quiet, leſt the Emperour of Conſtantinople ſhould eſpouſe Didiers quarrel, and cauſe any new diſturbance.

The Italians ſubmit to him.

Charlemagne ſtaid not long about Verona before the City began to think of yielding: and Berthe, the Widow of Caroloman, was the chief Inſtrument to draw them to a ſurrender, the French Forces being (as ſhe ſaid) very formidable. Aldegiſe, the Son of Didier, ſeeing the Citizens ſo unanimous in their reſolutions to open their Gate to the Conquerour, and being unable to relieve his Father, he ſecretly ſtole away, and fled to the Emperour of Conſtantinople. Then did Verona yield to Charlemagne upon compoſition, who received both the Inhabitants, and Berthe to mercy, keeping his agreement punctually with them; upon Berthe and her Children, he inflicted no puniſhment; but only blamed them for their uncivil raſhneſs, and enjoyned them to return into France, there to do better, and to live more honourably. This being about Eaſter, Charlemagne took the opportunity to go to Rome, where yet he ſtayed only eight days to viſit the moſt remarkable places, and to confer with Pope Adrian. The Pope made Charles a Patrician of Rome, which was a ſtep to mount him to the Empire. From thence he haſted, and came to Pavia, which had now been beſieged for the ſpace of ten months: and being preſſed by War without, and by the Famine, and Peſtilence within, it at laſt yielded upon compoſition: and Didier (who had hated Charles without cauſe, and attempted War raſhly) fell into his enemies hands, who yet ſhewed himſelf Prudent in undertaking the War, and mild and modeſt in his uſe of the Victory.

Verona taken.

And Pavia.

Thus Charlemagne having begun the War juſtly, and ended it happily, ruined the Kingdom of the Lombards in Italy, carrying Didier Priſoner with him to Lions, or to Leeg; for Authors agree not of the certain place. This was Anno Chriſti 776. A notable date to preſent the Tragical end of ſo great a Kingdom, which had continued in Italy for the ſpace of two hundred and four years under Princes of divers diſpoſitions. But Pride, Injuſtice and Tyranny, had provoked the wrath of God againſt them, ſo as whilſt they thought to take from another, they loſt their own; To uſurp the liberties of others, they fell into ignominious ſlavery themſelves; and their ſubtilty proved the occaſion, and haſtener of their ruin. An excellent Pattern for Princes and great States not to atttempt an unjuſt and unneceſſary War, nor to uſurp upon any other mans right, thinking to prevail over a good cauſe by Craft and Policy.

Didier taken Priſoner.

Charlemagne (as was ſaid before) uſed his Victory with great moderation towards the conquered Nation, which gave great content to all the Italians, who held it a gain to have loſt their old Maſter, and to be rightly made free by being ſubject to ſo wiſe a Lord. For he left unto them their ancient liberties, and to particular Princes (ſuch as were Vaſſals to Didier) their Signiories. To Aragiſe, Son in Law to Didier, he left the Marquiſat of Beneventum. He placed French Governours in conquered Lombardy, whom he ordered to treat theſe his new Subjects with the like mildneſs, as he ſhewed to thoſe of his antient Patrimony left unto him by his Predeceſſors.

Charles his moderation.

During the ſiege of Pavia, Pope Adrian held a Councel at Rome, in favour to Charlemagne, to give him honours anſwerable to his merits of the Church, wherein wherein it was declared, that the right to give all Benefices throughout all Chriſtendom did belong to him.

A Counſel at Rome.

No ſooner was Charlemagne returned into France, but Aldegiſe (the Son of Didier) ſought to diſquiet Italy, being aſſiſted by Conſtantine, the Emperour of Conſtantinople, and the practices of Rogand, to whom Charlemagne had given Friul, who now revolted from his Obedience. But the vigilancy, and care of the Governours whom Charlemagne had ſet over his new-conquered Subjects, ſoon put an end to theſe Rebellions: and Rogand being taken, ſuffered according to his demerits, being beheaded by the Kings commandment. Thus Italy remaining quiet to him, and his, (as conquered by a juſt War) it was afterwards incorporated into the French Monarchy in his poſterity, being given in Partage to the Children of France, whilſt the good Government of the French Kings maintained the dignity of the Crown.

New troubles in Italy.

But ſuppreſſed.

But the end of this War proved the beginning of another in Germany, whereof the Saxons were the chief promoters, drawing other People of Germany into their aſſiſtance. This War continued the ſpace of thirty yesrs, yet not without ſome intermiſſions: The Saxons having ſtill a mind to oppoſe and Croſs Charlemagne in his proceedings, eſpecially when he was buſied in other affairs of great conſequence.

Charles his Wars with the Saxons.

Theſe Saxons were ſubject to the Crown of France, eſpecially under Martel, and Pepin his Son. The motives of this War were divers: The impatiency of a People deſiring their antient liberty, and not able to bear ſubjection to a forreigner: the hatred and jealouſie of a Potent Neighbour, threatning them with ſervitude: A controverſie about the limits and bounds of their Lands: But the greateſt, and moſt important cauſe was, the diverſity of Religion: For the Saxons were obſtinate in retaining and cleaving to their Pagan ſuperſtition, which they had received from their Forefathers, and Charlemagne urged them to forſake their Paganiſm, and Idolatry, and to make open profeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith; being moved with Zeal to the general advancement of the Truth, and the private Duty of a Prince to his Subjects, to provide for their ſouls Health. Upon this controverſie about Religion the Saxons fought eight times with Charlemagne: eſpecially taking advantage when they found him buſied elſewhere, watching their opportunities either to croſs him in his deſigns, or to fruſtrate his attempts. At ſuch time as he was in Italy againſt Didier, they played Rex, not only in rejecting the French command, but alſo in making War againſt thoſe Cities in Germany which obeyed Charlemagne. They had taken Eresbourg from the Crown of France even upon his return, and beſieged Sigisbourg, robbing, and ſpoiling all the Country round about.

The cauſe of it.

Charlemagne (who would never undertake any weighty matter without good adviſe) aſſembled a Parliament at Wormes, and by their Counſel and aſſiſtance, levied a great Army, to charge the Saxons in divers places at once. This reſolution ſucceeded happily: For having vanquiſhed the Saxons twice in one month in a pitched Field, he ſoon reduced them to their ancient obedience: Uſing his Victories with much modeſty and diſcretion; deſiring rather to ſhew them the power of his authority, then the rigour of his Force. The chief amongſt the Saxons was Widichind, and as Religion was the chief motive of their frequent Rebellions; ſo Charlemagne, ſeeking the eſtabliſhment of the Chriſtian Religion in Saxony with great Zeal, after much reluctance, happily effected it. For having vanquiſhed this Widichind, by reaſon and humanity, he brought him to the knowledg of the Truth; and by his grave and prudent converſation, he perſwaded him without any Violence, to leave and forſake his Pagan ſuperſtition, which force of Armes could never have effected in him, nor in the

Charles calls a Parliament,

The Saxons overcome.

And converted.

the Saxons. For mens ſouls are not to be compelled with force of Arms, but with reaſon. And by the means and endeavours of this Widichine, the greateſt part of the Saxons were brought to the knowledg of the true God, and the obedience of the French Monarch: And the moſt obſtinate were forced, either to ſubmit, or to abandon their Country. And indeed great numbers of Saxons retired themſelves into divers ſtrange Countrys.

Thus the War with the Saxons was happily ended (which had been long and dangerous) and the Conquered, by the Truth were the true Conquerours, by attaining to the knowledg of the true God. Charlemagne was very careful to have them well inſtructed in the Truth: For which end he appointed godly and learned men in all places, and gave them honourable maintenance, whereby he ſhewed that his Piety was not inferiour to his Valour, and happy ſucceſs; and for a preſident to Princes to make Religion the Soveraign end of their Arms and Authorities.

This Widichine was very eminent, both for Wiſdom, Valour, and Authority in his Country; and from him are deſcended many famous Families: as the two Henries, the one called the Fowler, and the other of Bamberg; and the two Othos, all of them Emperours: as alſo the Dukes of Saxony, the Marqueſſes of Miſnia, the Dukes of Savoy, and the famous race of Hugh Capet in France.

From this War of Saxony did ſpring up many others in the Northern parts, of which we ſhall hear afterwards; but becauſe in the Interim their fell out great Wars in Spain againſt the Sarazins, which (like a Deluge) threatned to over-run all Chriſtendom, I ſhall intermit the former, till I have ſpoken ſomething of this latter, that I may proceed with the more clearneſs in the remainder of this Hiſtory.

Charles his Wars in Spain.

The motive of the Spaniſh War, was more upon pleaſure than neceſſity: But Zeal of Religion gave a colour and ſhew of neceſſity to the Heroical deſigns of Charlemagne, who ſought to enlarge the limits of the French Monarchy by his Arms. But this his Spaniſh War, as it was undertaken upon lighter grounds, ſo was it more painful, more dangerous, and leſs ſucceſsful then that of Italy, whereunto neceſſity and duty had drawn Charlemagne; yet did his wiſe and wary proceeding in the action, warrant him from all blame. The occaſions which moved him to bend his Forces againſt the Sarazins in Spain were, the aſſurance of good ſucceſs, the quiet and peace of his Realm, that he might have opportunity to imploy his Souldiery, the hate of the Spaniards againſt the Sarazins, and the general fear of all Chriſtians, leaſt theſe Caterpillars ſhould creep further into Europe.

This was the eſtate of Spain at this time. The Sarazins had conquered a great part of it, and were divided under divers Commands which had the Title of Kingdoms. Yet theſe divers Kings (being apprehenſive of their common danger) reſolved to unite their forces againſt Charlemagne, their common enemy; and foreſeeing the Tempeſt, they ſought to prevent it, and to croſs the deſigns of Charlemagne: For which end, they ſuborned King Idnabala, a Sarazin, being a very ſubtile, and crafty man, to inſinuate himſelf into the acquaintance, and familiarity of Charlemagne, which ſtratagem prevailed more then all their power and forces.

Charles circumvented.

Charlemagne was much quickned to this War by Alphonſo, ſurnamed the Chaſt, King of Navar, and by the Aſturians, and Galliſians (Chriſtian People of Spain) who ſuggeſted to him that the War would be eaſie, profitable, and honourable, and therefore moſt worthy the Valour, and Fortune of Charlemagne. This Idnabala alſo (under a ſhew of friendſhip) laboured to haſten him to the execution of this enterpriſe, from which he knew well he could not divert him, that he might the better betray him by diſcovering his Counſels to the Sarazins.

Charle-

Charlemagne being well-affected of himſelf, and thus excited by others, aſſembled a Parliament at Noyon, and there concluded a War againſt the Sarazins in Spain. The Army which he employed in this action was very great, both for number of men, and Valour of Commanders, and Chieftains, being the moſt choice and Worthy Captains in all Chriſtendome: amongſt whom, theſe were of the chiefeſt note, Milon Earl of Angers: Rowland the Son of Milon, and Berthe, Siſter to Charlemagne, Renald of Montaubon. The four Sons of Aymon: Oger the Dane: Oliver Earl of Geneva: Arnold of Belland: Brabin, and many others. The Valour of which Perſons, hath been fabulouſly related by the Writers of thoſe dark times (who for the moſt part were Friars, concerning whom the Proverb was, A Friar, a Lyar) with the addition of a thouſand ridiculous tales, ſo that the truth is hardly picked out from the midſt of ſo much errour: Yet, what is moſt probable, and can be gathered out of the moſt authentick Authors, ſhall here be ſet down. They ſay that Charlemagne, to make this undertaking more honourable in ſhew, did at this time inſtitute the Order of the twelve Peers of France.

Charles calls a Parliament.

His great preparations.

Charlemagne being entred into Spain with his brave Army, found no object for them whereon to exerciſe their Valour: For the Sarazins, reſolving to make a defenſive, rather than an offenſive War, had withdrawn themſelves into their Cities, which they had fortified ſtrongly. The moſt renowned of the Sarazin Kings at this time, were Aigoland, Bellingan, Deniſes, Marſile, and Idnabala: But this laſt, as was ſaid before, made ſhew of much Friendſhip to Charlemagne, and of open hatred againſt the other Sarazin Kings; with whom notwithſtanding he held ſecret and ſtrict intelligence to betray Charlemagne unto them.

His entry into Spain.

The firſt City that the French attempted, was Pampelune, in the Kingdom of Navarr, the which they took by force, but with much pains, danger, and loſs. Having ſackt this City, and put all the Sarazins in it to the Sword, they marched to Saragoce, which yielded to them upon compoſition, as did alſo many other ſmall Towns, being terrified with the example of Pampelune. This proſperous beginning encouraged Charlemagne to advance forward, relying on his wonted Fortune, and good ſucceſs: But as he paſſed through the Provinces of Spain, like a Victorious Prince, without any oppoſition, he divided his Army, and gave part of it to be conducted by Milon of Angers, his Brother in Law, who in his march near unto Bayon, was ſet upon by Aigoland, the Sarazin King, who in this common danger had thruſt an Army into the Field, and now aſſaulted Milon, and his Troops, little expecting any Enemy, and took him at ſuch an advantage, as he defeated him.

Pampelune taken.

Milon defeated.

This loſs was very great; For Writers ſay, that forty thouſand of the French here loſt their lives; Milon himſelf being alſo ſlain, for a confirmation of the Sarazins Victory. Charlemagne was at this time afar off, and ſo not able by any diligence to prevent the loſs. Yet he ſuppreſſed his grief and trouble, leaſt he ſhould diſcourage the whole Army: and ſo haſtening thitherward, he gathered up the remainder of thoſe broken, and diſperſed Troops, withall, keeping the conquered Cities, and ſuch as were Friends, in their due Obedience: But after this, there fell out another accident.

Aigoland being puffed up with Pride through his late Victory, marched with his Army into Gaſcoine, and beſieged Agen, to divert Charlemagne from his purſuit, and to draw him home to defend his own Country. So as Charlemagne, fearing leaſt his own abſence, and the Sarazins late Victory ſhould cauſe any alteration in the minds of them of Guienne, being then Subjects of whom he had no great aſſurance, he returned into France.

Aigoland entred France.

Charles returns.

Aigoland had now continued ſome moneths at the ſiege of Agen, yet had prevailed little, but only in over-running the Country, which he did freely (without any conſiderable reſiſtance) even unto Xaintonge; the Country-men in the mean time retiring into the Walled Towns, expected the return of Charlemagne their King: Aigolands Army was very great, and puffed up with the remembrance of their late Victory: So as Charlemagne returning with his Forces from Spain well tired, he maintained his Countries more through his authority, than by preſent force; yet did he give life to the courage of his Subjects with his preſence, and bridled the proud Sarazin, who could not be ignorant with whom he had to deal, nor where he was, being environed with the enemies on all ſides, and in an enemies Country.

Aigoland's Policy. Hereupon Aigoland, pretending an inclination to Peace, gave Charlemagne to underſtand that he had been the firſt Invader, and that his own comming into France was only to draw his Enemy out of Spain, and to cauſe him to leave to the Sarazins their conquered Countries free: and therefore (ſaid he) the Treaty of an accord is eaſie, ſeeing all the queſtion is only to leave to every man his own, and to ſuffer him to enjoy it quietly, the World being wide enough for us all. But to the end this Treaty might take good effect, after many meſſages to and fro, they reſolve to come to a Parlee: and upon Charlemagne's Faith given, Aigoland came to his Camp.

Charlemagne, either really moved with a zeal for Religion, or at leaſt, making it the colour of his Actions, gave the Sarazin to underſtand, that he ſhould have his Friendſhip if he would leave his Pagan Superſtition, be Baptized, and make open profeſſion of Chriſtianity. The Sarazin, although he had a goodly Army, yet not willing to hazard any thing, and content with his former revenge upon Charlemagne, deſired nothing more than to return quietly into Spain. And being now in the midſt of his Enemies Camp, to maintain his reputation, he made no ſhew at all of fear, but talking to his own advantage (as if no Force, but only reaſon ſhould move him) he entred into a ſerious and cunning diſcourſe with Charlemagne, ſhewing, That unneceſſary Wars were the ruin of Mankind, and that he was grieved to ſee ſo much Blood ſpilt: That he had not begun, but followed, being urged by neceſſity to defend himſelf and his Countrey againſt the Forces of Charlemagne: That he was not yet ſo dejected, nor his Forces ſo weak as to refuſe the Battel: But for that it would be an infinite loſs to hazard the lives of ſo many men, he deſired rather to make tryal of the right by ſome Troops, and they that vanquiſhed, ſhould be deemed to have the right, and true Religion on their ſide: Proteſting to yield to that Religion, which ſhould appear to be the beſt upon this tryal. This Propoſal and condition was accepted by Charlemagne: The combate was fought, the proof made, and the Chriſtian Troop vanquiſhed that of the Sarazin.

Aigolands diſſimulation. Then did Aigoland proteſt openly, that he would become a Chriſtian, but in heart he had no ſuch meaning, and therefore took this opportunity to fly from his promiſe. He gives Charlemagne a viſit, and finds him at the Table, well accompanied with his chief followers, (for then it was the cuſtome of Kings not to ſit and eat alone) but, caſting his eye aſide, he ſaw twelve poor men, ill apparelled, ſitting upon the ground, near to the Table of the Noblemen, and demanded what thoſe poor, miſerable creatures were, which did there feed apart? One anſwered, That they were the ſervants of God: He then replied, Surely your God is of ſmall account, whoſe ſervants are ſo miſerable and contemptible: And thereupon takes an occaſion to retire himſelf, having loſt nothing, but made great advantage by this Treaty: Having hereby qualified the force of Charlemagne, magne, viewed his Army, made ſhew of his own courage and dexterity, and all without an Ambaſſadour.

Charlemagne on the other ſide, ſeeing himſelf thus deluded and affronted, was reſolved to take revenge for ſo notable a loſs of men, and ſo bold an attempt of the Sarazin, ſo that with all ſpeed he raiſed an Army of a hundred and thirty thouſand men, and being thus fraught with Choler and indignation, he returned into Spain. His firſt entry was proſperous: For in the encounter he defeated Aigolands Army near to Pampelune, and for a Seal of his Victory, he carried away the head of Aigoland his Enemy, who was ſlain by the hand of Arnold of Belange, a Noble and Valiant Knight: But the ſequel was not anſwerable to the beginning: For notwithſtanding the overthrow of the Sarazin Troops, all the reſt in Spain were not vanquiſhed, where there were more Kings, and more men of War, who kept correſpondence with Amurath King of Babylon, which place was their Nurſery and Store-houſe.

Charles returns into Spain.

Aigoland overthrown and ſlain.

Marſile and Belingand, two Brethren, were the chief of the remainder of the Sarazin Army, wherein there was a great Babylonian Gyant, called Ferragat, of an exceeding ſtature, him did Rowland ſlay, who was Nephew to Charlemagne; after which, the Sarazins gathered together the relicts of their broken Troops, and made a ſhew of reſolute men, vowing to ſell their lives at a dear rate to Charlemagne, being favoured by many great and good Towns in the Countrey. Charlemagne makes a ſudden ſtop, and purſues not his Victory, God reſerving to himſelf a Sovereign power over all mens deſignes, yea, over the greateſt, and in matters of greateſt conſequence, to the end that all may learn to ask Counſel and ſucceſs of him, and it was his will and pleaſure that the French Forces ſhould not conquer and poſſeſs Spain, the which he had reſerved as a portion for another Nation.

The Sarazins rally.

A Gyant ſlain.

Thus Charles, who ſhould have proſecuted his late Victory vigorouſly, grew remiſs, which encouraged Idnabala the Sarazin (who had free acceſs into the Camp) to make a motion of Peace. He was a good Secretary of his own Companions minds, what ſhew ſoever he made of ſpeaking of himſelf. Charlemagne (finding by his late experience, that the event of War is uncertain and doubtful, and that this War tended to the loſs of his Subjects, who imployed both their lives and goods for the purchaſe of an uncertain Victory, and ſeeing himſelf overburdened with great affairs in his other Eſtates, to the preſervation whereof, reaſon did ſummon him rather than to ſeek for new) he ſeemed not unwilling to hearken to the motion of Idnabala, who aſſured him, that he found the Sarazins affairs to be ſo deſperate, that they would be glad to embrace his friendſhip at whatſoever rate they purchaſed it. The Treaty hereupon began, and the chief Article was propounded, which was, that they ſhould embrace the Chriſtian Religion, and this Charlemagne ſeemed to urge with great vehemency: but finding the Sarazins obſtinate in their refuſal, he was content to grant them peace, paying him ſome great ſums of money, as a token that they had been vanquiſhed by him.

A Treaty of Peace.

And accordingly he ſent a Noble man of his Court, named Ganes, to treat with them, who (being by bribes corrupted by Marſile and Belingand) undertook ſo to order buſineſſes, that Charlemagne ſhould return into France, and by the way, ſhould receive a notable diſgrace: yet they ſeemed to make ſuch a compoſition and agreement, which in ſhew, was very honourable for Charlemagne: to whom they promiſed to pay (as an Homage, and acknowledgment for the Peace he ſhould grant them)

A Traytor.

what ſums of money he would appoint, and that thereupon he ſhould retire with his Army into France; yet leaving ſuch Forces in Spain as he pleaſed, to ſee the condition which ſhould be agreed upon, performed. But Ganes had diſcovered to them, that Charlemagne upon other accounts was neceſſitated to return, and therefore deſired to leave the ſmalleſt Forces that he could in Spain.

Charles returns into France.

The Agreement being thus concluded, Charlemagne departed with his Army, attending a better opportunity to effect what he had deſigned: and he left his Nephew Rowland only with twenty thouſand men, to ſee the conditions performed. And to make his paſſage into France the more eaſie, he commanded him to lodge in a place of advantage in the Pyrenean mountains, called Roncevaux: and ſo the French Army marched backwards to France, under the conduct of Charlemagne, who little dreamed of ſuch an affront as he ſhortly after met with.

Whilſt the French Army were upon their retreat, Marſile and Bellingand ſlept not, but gathering together all the Forces they could, they lodged them ſecretly in the hollow Caves of thoſe Mountains, being places inacceſſible, and wholly unknown but only to the Inhabitants of thoſe Countries. They had intelligence given them by Ganes, what number of men Charlemagne had left in Spain, under the command of Rowland, to whom the reputation of his Uncle, and the good will of the People of Spain in the chiefeſt Towns, was of more uſe than his twenty thouſand men, although they were the choice of all the Army. Rowland had no fear of an Enemy, whenas returning to his Garriſon, he was ſuddenly ſet upon by the Sarazins, who were far more in number than the French, who ſeeing themſelves thus treacherouſly aſſaulted, and compaſſed in, defended themſelves valiantly againſt thoſe miſcreants: But ſtill freſh Troops of Sarazins iſſued forth of theſe Caves, on every ſide, in ſo great numbers, as that in the end, the French (tired and ſpent in ſo long and painful a conflict) were oppreſſed by the multitudes, rather than overcome by the Valour of their Enemies.

Rowland aſſaulted.

His Valour.

Rowland in ſo great and extream a danger (gathering together the pieces of his ſhipwrack) performed both the Duty of a good Commander, and of a valiant and reſolute Souldier, fighting gallantly, and having beaten down a great number where the Enemies were thickeſt, he at length came where King Marſile was, whom he ſlew with his own hands. But Belingand, holding the Victory abſolutely his own, purſued the French with great violence; inſomuch as Rowland (not able to hold out any longer) retired himſelf apart; and finding his Death approaching, he endeavoured to break his good Sword Durandall, but his ſtrength failing him, he died of Thirſt, through ſo long and difficult a combate in that hot Country: and with him died Oliver, Oger the Dane, Renald of Montaubon, Arnald of Belland, and other Noble Perſonages, who are the ſubject of many fabulous ſtories: Yet the Fame of their ſingular Virtues and Proweſs, is engraven in the Original of true Hiſtories, where it ſhall never be blotted out.

His Death.

Charles overcomes the Sarazins.

Charlemagne having intelligence brought him of this great and unexpected loſs, returned ſuddenly, to take his revenge upon the Sarazins, of whom he killed an infinite number in ſeveral places: and being informed of the Treaſon of Ganes, he cauſed him to be drawn in pieces by four Horſes, as the only author of this miſerable defeat. And being tranſported with a juſt diſdain and indignation for this ſo baſe an affront, he had purpoſed to have paſſed on in Spain to take further revenge. But the great and weighty affairs of his other eſtates called him back into France, to attend upon them.

them. And ſo ended his Spaniſh Wars, with ſmall ſucceſs, having troubled Charlemagne at divers times, for the ſpace of fourteen years. For God had appointed the limits of his deſigns, as reſerving to himſelf a Sovereign power over all mens enterprizes, even of the greateſt. Returns into France.

Charlemagne made a Tomb for his Nephew Rowland, and honoured the memory of thoſe other worthy Warriers (who died in the Bed of Honour) with Monuments: after which he was neceſſitated to undertake divers other Wars, both in Italy and Germany, in all which it pleaſed God to give him better ſucceſs. Italy (during Charles his troubles in Spain) had rebelled, being provoked thereto by Adalgiſe Duke of Beneventum, who endeavoured to repoſſeſs the Race of Didier: but that attempt was ſoon ſuppreſſed by Charlemagne, to the coſt of the Lombard Rebells: Yet ſhortly after enſued another War in Germany. A Rebellion in Italy.

The like occaſion alſo bred a War in Bavaria: For the King Taſſillon, who was Son in Law to Didier King of Lombardy, (being eagerly preſſed by his Wife, and wonderfully diſcontented with Charlemagne) ſhaked off the yoke of ſubjection, and betook himſelf to Arms: But Charlemagne ſurprized him with ſuch celerity, that Taſſillon was forced to ſue for Peace; which Charlemagne granted upon condition of his ſubjection and loyalty: But again Taſſillon, not able to contain himſelf, raiſed a new War in another place, as when we ſtop one breach, it finds vent by another. He ſtirred up the Huns and Avars (a neighbouring People to Auſtria, which was one of the Eſtates of the French Monarchy) againſt Charlemagne, who yet ſuppreſſed them with happy ſucceſs; and Taſſillon himſelf being again vanquiſhed by Charlemagne, and found guilty of Rebellion and Treaſon, was condemned to loſe his Eſtate, according to the Salique Law: and with him, the Kingdom of Bavaria ended, being now wholly incorporated into the Crown of France. His Wars in Bavaria.

The Huns and Avars (of whoſe names joyned together, the word Hungary hath been made) were alſo puniſhed by Charlemagne, and brought under the yoke of the French Monarchy. They had formerly attempted by War to diſquiet the Country of Auſtria, whom Charlemagne had at divers times oppoſed by his Forces, ſo that the War, at times, had continued for the ſpace of eight years, and the final iſſue was, that all the Countrey obeyed him: The Danes alſo, the Sorabes, and Abrodites, and the Weſtphalians, (who had all joyned in this War of Hungary) were alſo brought under the obedience of Charlemagne. The limits of the Northern Kingdom, called Auſtraſia, were ſo enlarged, that it was divided into two Kingdoms, and the Realm of Auſtria which joyns upon France, was called weſtriech, that is to ſay, the Realm of the Weſt; and that which is towards Danubius, was called Oſtriech, that is, the Kingdom of the Eaſt, Auſtria being then of a greater command than at this day. For it contained all Hungary, Valachia, Bohemia, Tranſylvania, Denmark and Poland: Then was the French Monarchy of a vaſt extent. But all theſe Nations have ſince, either returned to their firſt beginning, or new Lords have ſeized upon them. His Victories.

Thus the French Monarchy was greatly enlarged by the Proweſs and Valour of Charlemagne: and his children were grown up, as in age, ſo in knowledge and experience, through the careful education which their prudent Father gave them; who framed them to the management of affairs, intending them to provide, that they might firſt ſucceed him in his Virtues, and afterwards in his Kingdoms. But man purpoſeth, and God diſpoſeth, France, Italy, Germany, Spain, and Hungary, made the Roman Empire in the Weſt, and Charlemagne, being Maſter of theſe goodly Provinces, was in effect an Emperour, but only wanted the Title, and the ſolemn Declaration of this dignity. His education of his children.

dignity. And ſhortly after, the Providence of God that gave him the former, miniſtred opportunity to him for the enjoyment of the latter, which came thus to paſs.

A Sedition in Rome.

Leo was at this time Pope of Rome, againſt whom there was ſtrange Sedition raiſed by Sylveſter and Campul, men of great credit in the Court of Rome. Theſe men (with their adherents) upon a ſolemn day of Proceſſion, ſeized upon Leo before St. Lawrence Church, whom they ſtripped of his Pontifical Robes, caſt him unto the ground, trod him under their feet, and bruiſed his face with their fiſts, and having dragged him ignominiouſly through the dirt, they caſt him into Priſon, where yet he ſtayed not long, being freed by a Groom of his chamber called Albin: and ſo having recovered St. Peters Church, he ſent to Vingiſe Duke of Spoleto, intreating him to deliver him from this miſerable Captivity. Vingiſe failed him not, but came to Rome, and carried the Pope along with him to Spoleto; where yet he ſtayed not long, but from thence went to Charlemagne, into France, whom he found full of troubles. He complained that many of the Romans ſought to uſurp his Power into their hands, and adviſed the King to exact an Oath of Fidelity of them. Paſchalis was there ſoon after him, and accuſed the Pope of Adultery, and other groſs crimes. Charlemagne diſmiſſed them both, and promiſed to be at Rome within a few months, and accordingly prepared for his Journey.

The Pope freed out of Priſon. Flies to Charles.

Charles goes to Rome.

In December, Anno Chriſti 800. Charlemagne was received in Rome with all ſhews of Honour, and within eight dayes he went into St. Peters Church, and in the preſence of all the People and Clergy, he asked, who had any thing to ſay againſt Pope Leo? Paſchalis, or Paſchaſires, and Campalus had publiſhed the Popes crimes by Writ: but knowing how Charlemagne ſtood affected towards both parties, they appeared not; ſo none proſecuting theſe crimes againſt him, the Pope was abſolved upon his Oath; wherein he ſwore by God and the four Evangeliſts, that all theſe things were falſe which they layed to his charge: Whereupon the King declared him innocent, and condemned his accuſers, and within few dayes three hundred of them were beheaded in the Lateran Field for their preſumption, and affectation of liberty, on the eighteenth of December; and ſhortly after, Charles was choſen Emperour: But before I ſpeak of that, I muſt repreſent you with a brief view of the preſent eſtate and condition of the Emperour of Conſtantinople.

Clears the Pope upon his Oath.

The State of the Eaſtern Empire.

The ſeat of the Roman Empire, ſince the time of Conſtantine the great, remained at Conſtantinople, a City of Thrace, ſituated in a convenient place for the Guard of the Eaſtern Provinces: After which, all the Weſt being full of new Gueſts, who had expelled the Romans, the name, authority and power of the Empire remained in the Eaſt, where now the State was in a ſtrange confuſion, the Mother being banded againſt her Son, and the People amongſt themſelves.

Conſtantine the Son of Leo the Fourth, was Emperour at this time, who from his Infancy was governed (together with the Empire) by his Mother Irene: But being now come to the age of twenty years, he aſſumed the Government into his own hands. There was then a great diviſion in the Eaſt, which had been continued from Father to Son for fourſcore years together, about bringing Images into the Churches. The Biſhops would needs bring them in: But the Emperours, together with the greateſt part of the People, oppoſed themſelves againſt them. This contention had its beginning under Philip Bardanes, was continued under Leo Iſaurus, and from him was derived to his Son Conſtantine, ſirnamed Copronimus, and to Leo the Fourth, Son to the ſaid Conſtantine. This filled all the Eaſt with infinite ſcandals.

Contention about Images.

The

The ſame fire of contention continued in the minority of our Conſtantine, who was yet governed by his Mother, a Woman of a violent ſpirit, who had undertaken the protection of Images, and held a Counſel of many Biſhops for the defence thereof: But the people growing into a mutiny, by force expelled them from Conſtantinople, where there Aſſemhly was held. But Irene, being reſolved to carry on her deſign, aſſembled another Counſel at Nicea, City of Bithinia, honoured for having entertained the firſt general Councel under Conſtantine the Great, the firſt of that name: where it was Decreed, that Images ſhould be placed in Churches for devotion. But Charlemagne did not allow of this Decree, and either himſelf, or ſome other by his Command, did write a ſmall Treatiſe againſt this Councel, the which bears this Title, A Treatiſe of Charlemagne, touching Images, againſt the Greek Synode.

A Counſel from them.

Charles againſt Images.

This crafty Woman made choiſe of the City of Nicea, that the name of the ancient firſt Council held there, might honour this new invention with the pretext of Antiquity: For there are ſome that confound the firſt Council of Nicea with the ſecond, and Conſtantine the fourth with the firſt.

Conſtantine continued in the hereditary hatred of his Father, and Grandfather againſt Images, ſo as being of age, and in abſolute poſſeſſion of his Empire, he diſannulled all theſe new decrees, and cauſed the Images to be beaten down in all places: Yet did he make all ſhews of reſpect to his Mother, yielding unto her a good part of his authority and command: which reſpect was the cauſe of an horrible Tragedy. For this Woman being tranſported for two cauſes (both by reaſon of her new opinion, and for deſpight that ſhe had not the whole Government in her own power) grew ſo unnatural, that ſhe reſolved to diſpoſſeſs her Son of the Empire, and to ſeize upon it herſelf: And indeed the authority which her Son had left her, and the free acceſs which ſhe had unto his Perſon, gave her opportunity for the execution of her deſign. For having corrupted ſuch as had the chief Forces of the Empire at their command, and won them to her with her Sons Treaſure, ſhe ſeized on his Perſon, put out his eyes, and ſent him into Exile (where, ſhortly after, he died of grief) and took poſſeſſion of the Empire.

An unnatural Mother.

Theſe unnatural and Tragick furies were practiſed in the Eaſt, whiles that Charlemagne, by his great Valour built an Empire in the Weſt. Irene, in her Son Conſtantines life time would have married him with the eldeſt Daughter of Charlemagne: but this accident croſſed that deſign.

After the Death of Conſtantine, Irene ſent to Charlemagne to excuſe her ſelf of the murther, diſavowing it, and laying the blame upon ſuch as had done it (as ſhe pretended) without her command. And to win the good liking of Charlemagne, ſhe cauſed him to be dealt withall about marriage (for at that time Feſtrude was dead) with promiſe to conſent that he ſhould be declared Emperour of the Weſt, and that ſhe alſo would reſign unto him the Empire of the Eaſt: But Charlemagne would not accept of her profers. The Nobility and People of the Greek Empire did ſo hate Irene, as having ſuffered her the ſpace of three years, in the end, they reſolved to diſpoſſeſs her.

Irene treats with Charles.

Irene hated and depoſed.

This Woman, the unnatural murthereſs of her own Child, being thus publickly hated and deteſted, Nicephorus, a great and Noble man of Greece, aſſiſted by the chiefeſt in the Court, and with the good liking, and conſent of the People, ſeized upon the Empire, and took Irene, whom yet he only baniſhed, to give her opportunity and means to live better than ſhe had done: And afterward he treated, and agreed with Charlemagne, that the Empire

Nicephorus ſucceeds her.

pire of the East continuing under his command, the other of the West should remain to Charles.

He treats with Charles.

By this Transaction of Nicephorus, and the consent of the Greeks, the possession of the Empire was ratified and confirmed to Charlemagne, and now began the Division of the Empire into the East and West. That of the West began in Charlemagne, and continued in his Posterity, whilest they were Inheritors of their Fathers virtues: But afterwards it was translated to the Princes of Germany, who yet acknowledg Charlemagne to have risen from a German stock, being born at Wormes, Crowned at Spire, and interred at Aix, all Cities of Germany. Hitherto we have represented, what Charlemagne did whilest he was King of France only: Now we are come to consider what hapned to him, worthy of Memory, whilst he was Emperour.

The deeds of Charlemagne after he came to the Empire.

The Romanists do boast that the Pope gave the Empire of the West unto Charlemagne: But the truth is, the Popes had not yet come to that hight as to pretend to a power of disposing of Empires and Kingdoms at their own pleasure: But the right of Charles came another way. For before he came to Rome Anno Christi 800. he had all France under his Government, together with Franconia, and Austrasia; He had subdued a great part of Spain unto the River Iberus, from the Sarazins: As also Saxony, Westphalia, Dacia, Hungary, Istria, Dalmatia. He had likewise subdued all Italy, except Magna Græcia, and therefore he was entitled, Charles by the Grace of God King of the Frenches, Emperour of the Lombards, and Patricius of Rome: So he stiles himself in his Epistle to Alcwin: and Alcwin in an Epistle to him, stiles him, The Glorious Emperour [Gallicarum] of France, and Rector & Defensor Ecclesiæ: Both which Epistles are in the second Part of Alcwins Works. His Coronation was by the Decree and Prayers of the Romane People. Sigisbert in his Chronicon, shews the time, and cause, saying: The Romanes, who in heart were long before faln from the Emperours of Constantinople: Taking the opportunity that Irene had picked out the eyes of her own Son the Emperour, with one General consent they resolved to proclaim King Charles for their Emperour, and to Crown him by the hands of the Pope: So on Decemb. 25. Anno Christi 800. they Crowned him by the hands of Pope Leo, as the Emperours were wont to be Crowned by the Bishops of Constantinople; and the People cryed thrice, Carolo Augusto, à Deo Coronato, Magno & Pacifico Imperatori, Vita & Victoria, And the Pope anointed him: As also his Son Pepin, whom Charlemagne, by a solemn Decree had made King of Italy. And the Pope knowing the dangers which had oft befaln himself and his Predecessors, intreated the Emperour that he would be Protector of the Church of Rome.

His large Dominions.

His Title to the Empire.

Naucler.

Thus Charlemagne, the King of France, was advanced to the Empire, partly by Inheritance, partly by the Sword, by dedition, and the Title was given him by the People, and the Bishop of Rome: yet nothing was proper to the Bishop, but the Coronation and other Ceremonies, which he performed in the name of the People, according to the custom at Constantinople. At the same time also it was agreed, that all the chief men of the City, as well Ecclesiastical, as Secular, should give their Oath of Fidelity unto the Emperour. Secondly, That the Emperours Missus should reside in the Pallace of St. Peter to decide Pleas amongst the People: and that there should be allotted for his maintenance, a part of the former Emperours Patrimony. Thirdly, That if any mans cause was perverted by the ordinary Judges, and the wronged Person should implore the aid of the Missus

An Agreement betwixt Charles and the Pope.

ſus, or Emperours Commiſſioner, for Juſtice; and the Miſſus ſhould adjure the Judges, ſaying, By the Faith you owe unto my Lord the Emperour, I require you to do this man Juſtice: Then none ſhould dare to decline, either to the right hand or to the left, although the wrong were done by any of the Popes Kinſmen. Fourthly, That the Mulcts which ſhould be impoſed upon any guilty perſon, ſhould be equally divided between the Emperours Miſſus, and the Popes Miſſus. Fifthly, That if any goods fell under Eſcheat, they ſhould appertain to the Church, without an expreſs gift of the Emperour. Continu. Eutrop. Catal. Teſt. Verit.

Yet all this right was not ſufficient for Charlemagne, nor did he enjoy the Empire without contradiction. For he was forced to overcome the envy of this aſſumed Title with great ſums of money; Eſpecially the Emperour of Conſtantinople envyed it: but Charlemagne by his magnanimity prevailed againſt their contumacy, wherein he excelled the Greeks: and he ſent many Ambaſſadours unto them: eſpecially unto Irene, not only to treat for Peace, but about her marriage, that thereby he might the better confirm his Title: But before his Ambaſſadours came the ſecond time to Conſtantinople (Irene being ſick) the People had Crowned Nicephorus on the firſt of November Anno Chriſti 802. Charles is envied.

Yet did Nicephorus renew the League with Charlemagne, which Irene had before made with him: but (as Sigonius ſaith) with expreſs condition, that Venice ſhould be free betwixt the two Empires. In the mean time Nicephorus was moleſted by the Sarazins, and was forced to agree with them upon hard conditions: He was alſo moleſted by the Bulgarians, over whom he obtained one great Victory; but when he refuſed all conditions of Peace, they aſſembled together again to fight for their Lives and Land, in which Battel they overthrew, and killed Nicephorus, and his Son Stauracius was wounded in the fight, and fled to Adrianople, where he was afterward declared Emperour. But after three Months Michael Rangabis, his Brother in Law, ſhut him up in a Monaſtery. Then were mutual Ambaſſadours ſent between the two Emperours, and a perpetual Peace was concluded betwixt them. Zonar. Nicephorus is ſlain.

Charles the Great was Crowned Emperour in the thirty third year of his Raign, upon the the 25th of December, and in the fifty eighth year of his Age. He fought many Battels, and was always victorious. He had (as was ſaid before) Wars with the Heatheniſh Saxons, which, by times, laſted thirty years: He oft-times overcame them, and granted them liberty, upon condition that they would imbrace the Chriſtian Faith; but upon every opportunity their Duke Wedekin, ſhaken off both Loyalty, and Chriſtianity. At ſeveral times when Charlemagne had obtained a Victory, his manner was to erect a new Biſhoprick: So that he erected ſeven Biſhopricks in that province, to which he annexed Princely Power, knowing well, that ſuch fierce People might ſooner be tamed by Religion then by Armes. The places where theſe were erected, were, Breme, Verda, Minda, Paterborne, Oſnaburgi, Hildeſem, and Halberſtad. But though he gave the Biſhops power of Governing, yet the Nobles did not altogether looſe the power of adminiſtring in Publick affairs. At laſt, becauſe the Saxons revolted again, he removed ten thouſand of them, with their Wives and Children, into Brabant, and Flanders, and ſent ſome French to inhabit their rooms. The Saxons oft rebell. Charles his Prudence. Cranz. in Saxon. Biſhopricks erected.

Charlemagne lived fifteen years after that he had united the Roman Empire to the French Monarchy; yet not without many troubles. For Grimoald, Duke of Beneventum ſought to diſturb Italy in the behalf of the Lombards: but Charles prevented it betimes, imploying againſt him his Son Pepin, a worthy and valiant Prince: and Grimoald being vanquiſhed, Troubles in Italy.

was entreated with all mildneſs, and being reſtored to his Eſtate, he became afterwards a very affectionate, and obedient Servant to Charlemagne, who was a prudent Conquerour, that knew as well how to uſe, as how to get a Victory.

War with the Venetians.

After this it followed, that for ſome attempts made by the Venetians againſt the Empire of Charlemagne, in the behalf of the Emperour of Conſtantinople: or (as others ſay) upon the falſe information of Fortunatus, Patriarch of Grado, that Charlemagne commanded his Son Pepin, King of Italy, to make Wars againſt them: which he acordingly began with great reſolution, and took the Cities and Fortreſſes which the Venetians held within the main land, and at length beſieged the City of Venice it ſelf, both by Sea and by Land, to the relief whereof the Greek Emperour ſent a Fleet: about which Authors agree not; for ſome ſay that Pepin wholly took Venice: Others ſay, that he only took ſome Iſlands thereof, and that the place wich is called Rivalto defended it ſelf: How ever it was, this War continued long, Obeliers, and Becur, two great Perſonages, being the chief Commanders for the Venetians. At laſt Peace was concluded betwix them, and the Venetians had liberty to live after their own Laws and cuſtoms, and the Venetians won great reputation for being able to defend themſelves againſt ſo potent and victorious an Enemy. Charlemagne would have the Country which he had conquered from the Lombards, to be called Lombardy, that by retaining their Name, he might ſomewhat ſweeten their ſervile condition, in the ruin of their eſtate.

Charles makes his Will.

But now Charlemagne, finding himſelf old and broken, and his Children Valiant, Wiſe, and Obedient, he reſolved to make his laſt Will and Teſtament, wherein he divided his Kingdoms between his three legitimate Sons, to wit, Charles his Eldeſt, Pepin and Lewis: In which he made his eldeſt Son Charles King of the greateſt, and beſt parts of France, and Germany. To Pepin he gave the Kingdom of Italy, and Bavaria, with ſome other Provinces. And to Lewis he bequeathed Provence, and that part of France which bordereth upon Spain, together with ſome other Provinces. But all ſucceeded after another manner than he attended, God the Soveraign diſpoſer of Kingdoms, having decreed otherwiſe to diſpoſe thereof. He endeavoured alſo to reduce all his Kingdoms under one Law, making choiſe of the Roman Laws above all others, both for the dignity of the Empire, and becauſe they ſeemed to him, to be moſt juſt and equal: But the French, being loath to alter any thing in their cuſtomary Laws, deſired, and obtained of him that they might be governed by the ſame: So as Gaul, Narbonne, (which comprehends Daulphine, Languedoc, and Provence) do uſe the written Laws (as the ancient Provinces of the Romans) and the reſt of France obſerve their cuſtomary Laws.

He gives Laws to his Subjects.

It afterwards happened that a great Fleet of Infidels which inhabited Spain, with the aid, and aſſiſtance of ſome Africans, invaded the Iſles of Sardinia, and Corſica in the Mediterranean Sea, for the defence whereof, the Emperour Charlemagne ſent commandment to his Son Pepin that he ſhould ſend thither againſt them a valiant Captain whoſe name was Burcredus, who took ſo good order as that he drove thoſe Infidels out of thoſe Iſlands, and ſlew five thouſand of them in one Battel. And with no leſs good ſucceſs, the Emperour undertook another War againſt the Dukes of the Bohemians, and Polanders, which is a part of the ancient Sarmatia, who infeſted the Countries under his Dominions, againſt whom he ſent his Son Charles with great Forces of Burgonians, Saxons, and Germans: And this young Charles, imitating his Father, Warred valiantly, and with diſcretion againſt them, and coming firſt to a Battel with the Bohemians, led by Leo their Duke, he overcame them, as he did alſo at other times, and at laſt he ſlew Leo Infidels beaten.

And the Bohemians and Polanders.

their

their Duke; the like ſucceſs he had alſo againſt the Polanders, ſo as at length they all became his Fathers Subjects. And for theſe Victories of Charlemagne he was ſo much feared, and renowned through the World, that a great King of the Eaſt; and Amurath, the greateſt of all the Mahomatiſts, ſent their Ambaſſadours, with rich Preſents unto him, deſiring peace, and friendſhip: and the like did all Chriſtian Kings.

His War with the King of Denmark.

Charlemagne thus living with honour, and in tranquillity, Godfrey King of Denmark (which was a dependance of the Realm of Germany, and part of Charles his Portion, as was hinted before) made War againſt him. This Godfrey was a mighty Prince, and commanded over a large mighty Dominion, and with great Forces came into Frieſland and Saxony, where he did great harm. Againſt whom, the Emperour addreſſing himſelf (though he was now Old, and unweildy) ſpeedily departed with a great Army: but by the way news was brought him that King Godfrey was dead, and that his Army was returned into their own Country. And upon the ſame day news came alſo, that his Son Pepin (who had raigned in Italy in great proſperity) was dead in the City of Millan, which was an occaſion of great grief to the old Emperour. Then did he return to the City of Aken, or Aix, unto which place Ambaſſadours came to him from Hermigius, who ſucceeded Godfrey in the Kingdom of Denmark, humbly deſiring Peace. The like came alſo to him from the Emperour of Conſtantinople, and others alſo from Ambulat, a King of the Moors, who raigned in a great part of Spain; to all which he returned gracious anſwers, and granted their Petitions: withall, giving hearty thanks to God for that he was generally ſo well eſteemed of. But after this Sunſhine, another ſtorm returned, as the Clouds return after the rain: For it pleaſed God to take away another of his Sons, called Charles, who lay on the borders of Germany for the defence thereof; ſo as now his whole hope reſted in his third Son Lewis.

Pepin dies.

And Charles.

Thus man purpoſeth and God diſpoſeth. Thus the Sons die before the Father. Thus we ſee the greateſt cannot free themſelves from the common calamities of mankind. Thus both great Kings, and great Kingdoms have their Period.

Crowns have their compaſs; Kingdoms have their date:
Fortune her frowns: Felicity her fate.

Thus Charlemagne loſt his Children, and his great Empire her beſt ſupport under God: For theſe two Princes (like Stars of the greater magnitude) did ſhine bright by inheriting their Fathers virtues, and Valour, leaving behind them Lewis their Brother, with large Territories, and few vertues, to Govern ſo great an Eſtate.

New enemies riſe up.

After the Death of theſe two great Princes, many enemies roſe up againſt old Charlemagne, who ſeemed (as it were) to have loſt his two Arms: as the Sarazins in Spain, the Sclavonians, and the Normans in the Northern Regions: But he vanquiſhed them all, and brought them into his obedience and ſubjection, old and broken as he was.

His love to the Church.

Charlemagne all his Life time held the Church in great reverence, and had imployed his Authority to beautify it, and bountifully beſtowed his Treaſure to enrich it: But this great plenty, joyned with ſo long and happy a Peace, made the Church-men to live loſely.

He called five Councels.

Charlemagne (being himſelf well inſtructed in Religion) knowing of what great importance it was, to have ſuch as ſhould inſtruct others to be ſound in the Faith, and holy and exemplary in their lives, he at ſundry times, called five Councels in ſundry Places of his Dominions (For as yet the Popes had not challenged that power to belong to them) for the Reformation and good Government of the Church: As at Mentz: at Rheimes: at Tours: at Chaalons: and at Arles: and by the adviſe of theſe Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, he made and publiſhed many Orders for the good of the Church which were gathered together in a Book called, Capitula Caroli Magni. A worthy Preſident for Princes who ſeek true Honour by virtue, whereof the care of Piety is the chiefeſt Foundation.

His Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions.

In the Preface to this Book, he thus ſaith, that he had appointed theſe conſtitutions with the Advice of his Presbyters, and Counſellers: and that herein he had followed the Example of King Joſias, who endeavoured to bring the Kingdom which God had given him, to the worſhip of the true God: Some of his conſtitutions are theſe. He commanded to look to, and to try the learning and converſation of ſuch as were admitted into the Miniſtry. He forbad private Maſſes, Alſo the confuſion of Dioceſſes, requiring that no Biſhop ſhould meddle in anothers Dioceſs. He forbad that any Books ſhould be read publickly, but ſuch as were approved by the Councel of Calcedon. He forbad the worſhipping of Saints. He commanded Biſhops not to ſuffer Presbyters to teach the People other things then what are contained in, or according to the holy Scriptures. And lib. 2. ch. 3. he ſaith, Although the Authority of the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſtry may ſeem to ſtand in our Perſon: Yet by the Authority of God, and Ordinance of man, its known to be ſo divided, that every one of you, in his own place and order, hath his own power and Miniſtry: Hence its manifeſt that I ſhould admoniſh you all; and you all ſhould further and help us. He admoniſhed Biſhops eſpecially, to teach both by Life and Doctrine, both by themſelves, and the Miniſters that were under them, as they would anſwer the contrary in their accounts at the Great Day. He Ordained that the Biſhop of the firſt See ſhould not be called the Prince of Prieſts, or the higheſt Prieſt, or have any ſuch Title, but only ſhould be called, The Biſhop of the firſt See. That none can lay another foundation, then that which is laid, which is Chriſt Jeſus, and that they which lay Chriſt for their foundation, its to be hoped that they will be careful to ſhew their Faith, by bringing forth good Works.

A Counſel at Frankfort.

He held alſo a great Councel in the City of Frankfort, of the Biſhops of France, Germany, and Italy, which himſelf honoured with his own preſence; where, by general conſent the falſe Synod of the Greeks (they are the words of the Original) untruly called the ſeventh, was condemned, and rejected by all the Biſhops, who ſubſcribed to the condemnation of it. This was that Counſel (ſpoken of before) called by Irene at Nice, wherein the bringing of Images into Churches for devotion, was eſtabliſhed. In a Word, if Charlemagnes medling with Italy, and his advancing the Pope, for confirming that which he had taken, could be excuſed, he was unto all Princes a pattern of magnificence, of Zeal in Religion, of learning, eloquence, temperance, prudence, moderation, &c. Alcwin ſaith of him, Charles was a Catholick in his Faith, a King in power, a High Prieſt in preaching, a Judg in his equity, a Philoſopher in liberal Studies, famous in manners, and excellent in all honeſty. He was ſo temperate, that notwithſtanding his great revenues, he was never ſerved at the Table with above four Diſhes at a Meal, and thoſe of ſuch Meat as beſt pleaſed his taſte, which he uſed to the ſame end for which God created them, which was for ſuſtenance, and to ſupport his Body, not for ſhew and pomp.

His Temperance.

His Exerciſes.

His ordinary exerciſe was hunting when he was at leiſure, in time of War: and in times of Peace, he attended to ſuch as read Hiſtories to him, and ſometimes he heard Muſick, with which he was much delighted, having good skill therein himſelf: He was very charitable, and a bountiful Almsgiver, giver, and ſo careful to provide for the poor Criſtians, that in Syria, in Africa, and in Ægypt, and in other Provinces of the Infidels, where Chriſtians lived, he found means to have Almes-houſes and Hoſpitals erected, and endowed for thoſe thar were Poor. His Charity.

But there fell out a new accident, which drew out Great Charles again to Arms in his old Age, and that was this; Alphonſo, King of Navarr, ſurnamed the Chaſt, by reaſon of his ſingular, and ſignal temperance in that kind, did inform, and advertiſe him, that there was now a very fit opportunity, and means offered for him utterly to ſubdue the Sarazins in Spain. Charlemagne (who infinitely deſired to finiſh this work, which he had ſo often attempted with no great ſucceſs) gave ear to the information and advice, whereupon he raiſes an Army, and marches into Spain, relying on the Spaniards favour, and aſſiſtance, they being Chriſtians. Indeed Alphonſo meant plainly, and ſincerely, but ſo did not his Courtiers, and Nobles, nor Aſſociates, who feared Charles his forces no leſs than they did the Sarazins, and if Charles prevailed, the moſt confident of Alphonſo's Servants and Officers doubted to be diſpoſſeſſed of their places, and Governments by a new Maſter: and therefore they laboured to croſs Alphonſo, and to countermand Charles; but the Lot was caſt, his Army was in the Field, and he was reſolved to paſs on: But when he was entred into Spain, he encountered with ſo many difficulties, that being diſcouraged, he returned back into France, and ſo concluded, and put a period to all his Warly enterpriſes; embracing again the care of the Church, and of Religion, as a fit ſubject for the remainder of his days. His laſt Wars.

Charlemagne was threeſcore and eight years old when he left the Wars, after which he ſpent three whole years in his ſtudy, to prepare himſelf for Death, in which time, he read much in the Bible, and read over alſo St. Auguſtines Works, whom he loved and preferred before all the other Doctors of the Church: He reſided alſo at Paris, that he might have opportunity of conferring with learned men. There he erected a goodly Univerſity, which he furniſhed with as learned men as thoſe times could afford, and endowed it with great priviledges: For he had an exceeding great care to make it a Nurcery for the holy Miniſtry, that from thence the Church might be ſupplied with able Teachers, whence alſo grew ſo many Colleges of Cannons, with ſufficient revenues annexed thereunto. His preparation for Death.

Thus Charlemagne ſpent three years happily in the only care of his Soul, leaving an illuſtrious example to all Princes, to moderate, and ennoble their greatneſs with Piety, and ſo to enjoy their Temporal eſtates, as in the mean time not to neglect their eternal concernments, and to think of their departure out of this Life in time.

Foreſeeing his Death (whereunto he prepared himſelf by theſe exerciſes) he made his laſt will and Teſtament, leaving his Son Lewis the ſole Heir unto his great Kingdoms, and bequeathed to the Church much Treaſure. But all things and Perſons in this World have an end: His Teſtament was but the Harbinger to his Death; for preſently after, he was taken with a pain in his ſide, or Pluriſie, and lay ſick but eight days, and ſo yielded up his Spirit unto God that gave it, Anno Chriſti 814. and of his Age ſeventy one, and of his Reign forty ſeven, including fifteen years of his Empire: His Body was interred in a ſumptuous Church which he had cauſed to be built in the City of Aquiſgrave, or Aix la Capelle, where he was born, and his memory was honoured with a goodly Epitaph. He makes his Will.

He was one of the greateſt Princes that ever lived: His virtues are a pattern to other Monarchs, and his great ſucceſſes the ſubject of their wiſhes. The greatneſs of his Monarchy indeed was admirable: For he quietly enjoyed all France, Germany, the greateſt part of Hungary, all Italy, and His virtues. His large Dominions.

and a good part of Spain. At the time of his Death he was in peace with the other Kings of Spain, as alſo with the Kings of England, Denmark, Bulgary, with the Emperour Leo of Conſtantinople, and with all the Princes of that time.

His Character. This Noble Prince was endued with ſo many excellent Virtues, that we read of very few in antient Hiſtories that excelled him, ſo that he may be juſtly compared with the beſt of them: For in Martial Diſcipline, in Valour, in Dexterity, in Feats of Arms, there are none that exceeded him. He obtained as many Victories, fought as many Battels, and ſubdued as many fierce and Warlike Nations, as any one we read of, and that both before, and after that he was Emperour. He was tall of Stature, very well proportioned in all his members, paſſing ſtrong: of a fair and grave countenance, valiant, mild, merciful, a lover of Juſtice, liberal, very affable, pleaſant, well read in Hiſtory, a great Friend of Arts and Sciences, and ſufficiently ſeen into them, and a man who above all, loved and rewarded Learned men. He was very charitable in his Kingdoms, yea, in his very Court, he harboured and relieved many Strangers and Pilgrims. In matters of Faith and Religion he

His Zeal. was very zealous; and moſt of the Wars which he made, were to propagate and enlarge the Chriſtian Faith.

He (being miſled by the darkneſs of the times wherein he lived) ſuperſtitiouſly honoured and obeyed the Church of Rome, and the Pope that was Biſhop thereof, together with other Biſhops and Prelates, commanding his Subjects alſo to do the like. He was alſo very devout, and ſpent much of his time in Prayer, Hearing and Reading. In his Diet he was very temperate, and a great enemy to riot and exceſs; and though he was Rich and Mighty, yet fed he his Body with what was neceſſary and wholeſome, not rare, coſtly, and ſtrange.

His blemiſhes. And yet his Virtues were not without their blemiſhes (as the greateſt commonly are not without ſome notable Vices) For in his younger dayes he was much given to Women, adding Concubines to his lawful Wives, by whom he had divers children: but this was in the time of his Youth: For afterwards he contented himſelf with his Wife, and for a remedy of this imperfection, though he was three or four times a Widower, yet he ever married again the Daughter of ſome great Prince or other.

To conclude all, he was an excellent Emperour, that loved and feared God, and died when he was very Old, and full of Honour, leaving Lewis (the weakeſt of his Sons) the ſole heir of his great Empire, but not of his Virtues: So that this great building ſoon declined in his poſterity.

He had engraven upon his Sword, Pro Deo & Religione, For God and Religion: He uſed to ſet his Crown upon the Bible, as our Canutus ſometime put his Crown upon the Rood, both of them thereby intimating, that as all honour was due to God, ſo true Religion was the beſt Baſis of Government, and that Piety was the beſt Policy.

The Epitaph which I ſpake of, was this;

His Epitaph. Sub hoc conditorio ſitum eſt Corpus Caroli Magni, atque Orthodoxi Imperatoriqui Regnum Francorum nobiliter ampliavit, & per annos Quadraginta ſeptem fæliciter tenuit. Deceſſit Septuagenarius, Anno Domini 814. Indicti, one 7. Quinto Calend. Febr.

The time of his Death. Under this Tomb lieth the Body of Charles the Great, and Catholick Emperour, who moſt Nobly enlarged the Kingdom of the French, and moſt happily ruled it for the ſpace of forty and ſeven years. He died in the ſeventy and one year of his Age; In the year of our Lord eight hundred and fourteen, the ſeventh Indiction, on the fifth Calend of February.

He

He had five Wives: the first was called Galcena, the Daughter of the King of Galistria, by whom he had no Children. The second was Theodora, the Sister, (or as others say) the Daughter of Didier King of Lombardy; whom he kept not long, but repudiated her for sundry reasons. The third was Hildebranda, Daughter of the Duke of Suevia, whom he loved exceedingly, and had by her three Sons, viz. Charles his Eldest, whom he made King of the greatest, and best part of France and Germany: Pepin his Second, whom he made King of Italy, Bavaria, &c. Lewis his Youngest, to whom he left the Empire intire, his Brothers being both dead in their Fathers Life time. This Lewis was sirnamed Debonaire, or the Courteous. He had also three Daughters; the Eldest was called Rothruda; the Second Birtha; and the Youngest Giselia, who would never marry. His fourth Wife he had out of Germany, called Fastrada: And his fifth and last was also a German Lady, called Luithgranda, of the Suevian Race, by whom he had no Children. His Wives and Children.

He shewed his love to Religion, by having one, during his Meal-times, that either read to him some part of the Holy Scriptures, or else some part of Saint Augustines Books, especially that De Civitate Dei: or some History. He was also a great Friend to Learning, and therefore erected three Universities: One was at Padua in Italy; another was at Boulognia; the third was that in Paris, whereunto he was excited by our Countryman Alcwin, who was his Tutor. His Devotion.

His Sons he caused to be trained up in the Study of Liberal Arts; and his Daughters to learn to sow, and practice good Huswifry. He alwayes wore a short Sword at his Girdle, in the Pummel whereof was engraven his Coat of Arms, with which he sealed all his Laws, &c. And used to say, Behold the Sword which shall defend my Laws, and that shall be drawn and imployed against those that break them. In the year eight hundred and four, the King of the Scots entred into the first League which was between the two Kingdoms of France and Scotland, which was confirmed by succeeding Kings, which occasioned one of them to add unto their Coat of Arms a double streak of Gules, with Flower de Lisses round their Escutcheon, to shew that their Alliance with France conduced much to the support of their Kingdom. His care of his Children. His League with Scotland.

FINIS.

ERRATA in the Lives of the Magni.

PAge 3. Line 43. read Daniel for David. p. 171. l. 6. r. being for before. p. 57. l. 50. r. unto for and. p. 77. l. 7. put out and had them very carefully. p. 111. l. 13. r. praying for provoking. p. 119. l. the laſt, r. now for not. p. 174 l. 32. r. of for Our. p. 220. l. 44. 45. r. a certain ſum of money to be divided among them. p. 242. l. 31. r. of for and. p. 247. l. 18. put in from. p. 282. l. 15. r. Chaos for Chios. l. 34. r. proſecuted for purſued. p. 284. l. 2. r. affections for affects.